7. Cutting away Buoys, &c.
8. Destroying Wrecks.

1. Burning ships.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 42, Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to, cast away, or in anywise destroy any ship or vessel, whether the same be complete or in an unfinished state, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

2. Burning ships with intent to prejudice the underwriters.] By sect. 43, Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously set fire to, or cast away, or in anywise destroy any ship or vessel, with intent thereby to prejudice any owner or part owner of such ship or vessel, or of any goods on board the same, or any person that has underwritten or shall underwrite any policy of insurance upon such ship or vessel, or on the freight thereof, or upon any goods on board the same, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour and solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

¹ R. v. Clark, 1 Lew. C. C. 229.

² R. v. Chalkley, Russ. & Ry. 258.

3. Attempting to set fire to a vessel.] By sect. 44, Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously, by any overt act, attempt to set fire to, cast away, or destroy any ship or vessel, under such circumstances that if the ship or vessel were thereby set fire to, cast away, or destroyed, the offender would be guilty of felony, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour and solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

4. Gunpowder.] By sect. 45, Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously place or throw in, into, upon, against, or near any ship or vessel any gunpowder, or other explosive substance, with intent to destroy or damage any ship or vessel, or any machinery, working tools, goods, or chattels, shall, whether or not any explosion take place, and whether or not any injury be effected, be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

5. Damage otherwise than by fire.] By sect. 46, Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously damage, otherwise than by fire, gunpowder, or other explosive substance, any ship or vessel, whether complete or in an unfinished state, with intent to destroy the same or render the same useless, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

6. False signals.] By sect. 47, Whosoever shall unlawfully mask, alter, or remove any light or signal, or unlawfully exhibit any false light or signal, with intent to bring any ship, vessel, or boat into danger, or shall unlawfully and maliciously do anything tending to the immediate loss or destruction of any ship, vessel, or boat, and for which no punishment is hereinbefore provided, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life, or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

7. Cutting away buoys, &c.] By sect. 48, Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cut away, cast adrift, remove, alter, deface, sink, or destroy, or shall unlawfully and maliciously do any act with intent to cut away, cast adrift, remove, alter, deface, sink, or destroy, or shall in any other manner unlawfully and maliciously injure or conceal any boat, buoy, buoy rope, perch, or mark used or intended for the guidance of seamen or for the purpose of navigation, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven years nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour and solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

8. Destroying wrecks.] And by sect. 49, Whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously destroy any part of any ship or vessel which shall be in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or any goods, merchandise, or articles of any kind belonging to such ship or vessel, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

It was, upon one occasion, attempted to be argued under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 9, (the clause which answers to 1 Vict. c. 89, ss. 4, 5, and the present,) that it was no offence for an owner or part owner to set fire to his own ship, and the objection was rested upon the common law principle that arson was burning the property of another, and that the statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 4, had not, in its terms, introduced any alteration, and it was alleged, that in the old Acts the owners were expressly pointed out as persons who might be offenders against the statute in question. But it was replied, that the words of the statute were general, and that the term “part owner” was, for the first time, inserted in the Act of Geo. 4. So that, if it were possible to entertain a doubt as to the words, “owner or owners,” in the prior Act, the new word must of necessity include the prisoner. “Neither could it be said that the prisoner could not have intended to prejudice his co-partners, because, whatever injury might be done to them, he must himself share with them. Every man must be supposed to intend the necessary consequence of his own act.”¹ And the judges held that the intent to prejudice was implied by the act, and they affirmed the conviction.² This decision also disposed of another objection, which was, that the prisoner could not have acted from malice, and that the proof of malice was essential. The prisoner had been acquitted upon the counts for defrauding the insurance, and it was said that he could not be presumed to have intended an injury to himself, by an act which, in effect, must have been injurious to himself, if the acquittal were taken into consideration. But upon this point also the judges were against the accused.¹

¹ 1 Moo. C. C. 273.

² R. v. Philp, Id. 263.

Indictment.] In drawing an indictment under this statute, care should be taken to notice those sections where the intent is mentioned, where it is necessary to lay the act as having been done with intent to prejudice some one, or to do a particular mischief. Thus, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 9, it has been held essential to state that the offence of firing a vessel was committed with intent to prejudice the owner.² However, if there be a statement as to the manner of doing the mischief charged, it is not necessary to say that it happened otherwise than by fire.³

Whether a barge shall be said to be a vessel within 1 Vict. c. 89, is a question which does not seem to have been decided. The judges have occasionally adverted to the point under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, which resembles the 1 Vict. c. 89, but it has not come directly in question, and therefore no determination has been had. However, a pleasure boat eighteen feet long seems to have been considered to be within 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30.⁴

The indictment for damaging otherwise than by fire will state the nature of the damage done; but it is not necessary to use the words "damage otherwise than by fire," if the particular damage be fully set out.⁵

The law as to principal and accessory upon the subject of this section, has been discussed on several occasions. The case of Pow, who was discharged from a conviction for a felonious shipwreck under 4 Geo. 1, c. 12, and 11 Geo. 1, c. 29,⁶ no longer applies, because the more recent statutes fully embrace accessories. Accessories, again, before the fact, on shore, to the destruction of a ship on the high seas, were not amenable to the admiralty jurisdiction under 11 Geo. 1, c. 29.⁷ But this defect has long since been remedied. The question of principal and accessory came to be seriously canvassed in a much later case than those above mentioned. Two persons were tried at the Central Criminal Court in 1841 upon a charge of being accessories before the fact to a felony committed by E. L. as principal, the principal not having been previously convicted, and upon the evidence at the trial appearing not to be amenable to justice. The indictment was for "casting away and destroying a ship, with intent to prejudice," &c., and it charged, that the prisoners incited, moved, &c., the principal felon to do the same. And it was objected that the in-

¹ S. C. And see 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 25.

² R. v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 569. R. v. Bowyer, Id. 559.

³ R. v. Bowyer, 4 C. & P. 559, under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 7.

⁴ See 4 C. & P. 500, per Patteson, J.; Id. 570, note, per Alderson, B.

⁵ R. v. Smith, ut supra.

⁶ Leach, 45; East, P. C. 1099.

⁷ R. v. Easterby and another, Leach, 947; Russ. & Ry. 37.

dictment was not properly framed as an indictment for a substantive offence within the meaning of 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 9, but as an indictment at common law against the principal and accessory before the fact, and that as the principal felon had not been convicted, the accessory before the fact could not be convicted upon it. It was secondly objected, that upon the proper construction of the statutes, the Central Criminal Court had no jurisdiction to try the offence of an accessory before the fact in cases of felonies committed upon the high seas, unless where the principal felon himself has been committed to or detained in prison by that court for the offence. But the judges were of opinion, first, that the description of the offence had not been altered by the statute; it might have been put in a different shape, but every allegation in the indictment before them would have been included in any other. As to the second objection, they thought that the statute 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 22, concerning the Central Criminal Court, must be taken distributively, as to the commission of oyer and terminer and of gaol delivery. There was a general power to hear and determine all offences committed on the high seas, though the gaol delivery commission only extended to all prisoners committed or detained, and the conviction was held right.¹

It has been held, that the underwriters on a policy of goods were within the protection of 1 Vict. c. 89, s. 6 (to which this section answers), although, evidently, no goods were put on board the ship in question. The words in the statute are merely a description of a policy on goods.²

Dockyard, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 115, s. 30, every person subject to this Act who shall unlawfully set fire to any dockyard, victualling yard, or steam factory yard, arsenal, magazine, building, stores, or to any ship, vessel, hoy, barge, boat, or other craft, or furniture thereunto belonging, not being the property of an enemy, pirate, or rebel, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.³

Indictment, Sect. 42.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously, upon the high seas, did set fire to a certain ship called —, the property of one B., against the form, &c.; or a certain ship called —, the property of one B., the same being then in an unfinished state, against the form, &c.

Indictment, Sect. 43.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did, upon the high seas, set fire to a certain ship called —, the property of one B., with intent thereby then to prejudice the said B., then being the owner of the said ship as aforesaid, against the form, &c.

¹ R. v. Wallace, 1 Moo. C. C. 200; Car. & M. 200. son, Russ. & Ry. 138. R. v. Philp, 1 Moo. C. C. 263.

² R. v. Wallace and Wallace, 2 Moo. C. C. 200; and see R. v. Gib- ³ See 22 Geo. 3, c. 33, Act 25 of the navy.

Indictment, Sect. 44.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did attempt to set fire to a certain ship called —, on the high seas, the property of one B., with intent then [state a felonious intent], against the form, &c.

Indictment, Sect. 45.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did place and throw a certain quantity, to wit, — pounds weight, of gunpowder in and upon and into a certain vessel called —, then being —, with intent to destroy and damage the said vessel, against the form, &c.

Indictment, Sect. 46.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did damage a certain ship called —, the property of one B., the same being then on the high seas (or in an unfinished state), with intent to destroy the same and render it useless, against the form, &c.

Indictment, Sect. 47.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully and feloniously did exhibit a false light and signal at a certain place within the parish of —, in the county of —, with intent thereby then to bring into danger a certain ship, the property of some person or persons to the jurors unknown, then sailing upon the high seas, near unto the said parish, against the form, &c.

Casting away buoys, &c.] It seems that the statute 19 Geo. 2, c. 22, which gives a summary jurisdiction of justices in cases of unloading rubbish, sinking old hulks, &c., to the damage of sewers, roads, channels, and navigable rivers, is still in existence.¹

Indictment, Sect. 48.] That A. on, &c., wilfully and feloniously did cast adrift [remove, &c.] a certain buoy (on the high seas), or at the parish of —, in the county of —, with intent to cut away, sink, and destroy the same, against the form, &c.

Indictment, Sect. 49.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did destroy a certain part of a certain ship called —, the property of some person or persons to the jurors unknown, then in distress, wrecked, and stranded, against the form, &c.

¹ See Woolrych on Waters, 2nd ed. p. 201.

CHAPTER XIV.

SENDING LETTERS THREATENING TO BURN OR DESTROY.

Sending letters threatening to burn or destroy.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 50, Whosoever shall send, deliver, or utter, or directly or indirectly cause to be received, knowing the contents thereof, any letter or writing threatening to burn or destroy any house, barn, or other building, or any rick or stack of grain, hay, or straw, or other agricultural produce, or any grain, hay, or straw, or other agricultural produce in or under any building, or any ship or vessel, or to kill, maim, or wound any cattle, shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding ten and not less than three years, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

CHAPTER XV.

OF INJURIES NOT OTHERWISE PROVIDED FOR.

Injuries not otherwise provided for.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 51, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously commit any damage, injury, or spoil to or upon any real or personal property whatsoever, either of a public or private nature, for which no punishment is hereinbefore provided, the damage, injury, or spoil being to an amount exceeding 5*l.*, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and in case any such offence shall be committed between the hours of nine of the clock in the evening and six of the clock in the next morning, shall be liable to be kept in penal servitude not exceeding five nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

By sect. 52, whosoever shall wilfully or maliciously commit any damage, injury, or spoil to or upon any real or personal property whatsoever, either of a public or private nature, for which no punishment is hereinbefore provided, shall, on conviction thereof before a justice, be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, for any term not exceeding two months, or else shall forfeit and pay such sum, not exceeding 5*l.*, as to the justice shall seem meet, and also such further sum of money as shall appear to the justice to be a reasonable compensation for the damage, injury, or spoil so committed, not exceeding the sum of 5*l.*; which last-mentioned sum shall, in the case of private property, be paid to the party aggrieved; and in the case of property of a public nature, or wherein any public right is concerned, the money shall be applied in the same manner as every penalty imposed by a justice of the peace under this Act; and if such sums of money, together with costs (if ordered), shall not be paid either immediately after the conviction, or within such period as the justice shall at the time of the conviction appoint, the justice may commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, as the justice shall think fit, for any term not exceeding two months, unless such sums and costs be sooner paid. Provided that nothing herein contained shall extend to any case where the party acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of, nor to any trespass, not being wilful and malicious, committed in hunting, fishing, or in the pursuit of game, but that every such trespass shall be punishable in the same manner as if this Act had not passed.

By sect. 53, the provisions in the last preceding section contained shall extend to any person who shall wilfully or maliciously commit any injury to any tree, sapling, shrub, or underwood, for which no punishment is hereinbefore provided.¹

CHAPTER XVI.

GUNPOWDER.

Making gunpowder to commit offences, and searching for the same.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 54, whosoever shall make or manufacture, or knowingly have in his possession, any gunpowder or other explosive substance, or any dangerous or noxious thing, or any machine, engine, instrument, or thing, with intent thereby or by means thereof to commit, or for the purpose of enabling any other person to commit, any of the felonies in this Act mentioned, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, and, if a male under the age of sixteen, with or without whipping.

By sect. 55, any justice of the peace of any county or place in which any machine, engine, implement, or thing, or any gunpowder, or other explosive, dangerous, or noxious substance, is suspected to be made, kept, or carried for the purpose of being used in committing any of the felonies in this Act mentioned, upon reasonable cause assigned upon oath by any person, may issue a warrant under his hand and seal for searching in the daytime any house, mill, magazine, storehouse, warehouse, shop, cellar, yard, wharf, or other place, or any carriage, waggon, cart, ship, boat, or vessel, in which the same is suspected to be made, kept, or carried for such purpose as hereinbefore mentioned; and every person acting in the execution of any such warrant shall have, for seizing, removing to proper places, and detaining every such machine, engine, implement, and thing, and all such gunpowder, explosive, dangerous, or noxious substances found upon such search, which he shall have good cause to suspect to be intended to be used in committing any such offence, and the barrels, packages, cases, and other receptacles in which the same shall be, the same powers and protections which are given to persons searching for unlawful quantities of gunpowder under the warrant of a justice, under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 139.

¹ Therefore, a damage done to trees under the value of 1s. will suffice.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF OTHER MATTERS.—24 & 25 VICT. c. 97.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 56, in the case of every felony punishable under this Act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this Act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this Act shall be liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement; and every person who shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any misdemeanor punishable under this Act shall be liable to be proceeded against, indicted and punished as a principal offender.

Loiterers at night punishable.] By sect. 57, any constable or peace officer may take into custody, without warrant, any person whom he shall find lying or loitering in any highway, yard, or other place during the night, and whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony against this Act, and shall take such person as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law.

Malice unnecessary.] By sect. 58, every punishment and forfeiture by this Act imposed on any person maliciously committing any offence, whether the same be punishable upon indictment or upon summary conviction, shall equally apply and be enforced, whether the offence shall be committed from malice conceived against the owner of the property in respect of which it shall be committed or otherwise.

Possession by defendant.] By sect. 59, every provision of this Act not hereinbefore so applied shall apply to every person who, with intent to injure or defraud any other person, shall do any of the acts hereinbefore made penal, although the offender shall be in possession of the property against or in respect of which such act shall be done.

No statement to defraud particular persons.] By sect. 60, it shall be sufficient in any indictment for any offence against this Act, where it shall be necessary to allege an intent to injure or defraud, to allege that the party accused did the act with intent to injure or defraud (as the case may be), without alleging an intent to injure or defraud any particular person; and on the trial of any such offence it shall not be necessary to prove an intent to injure or defraud any particular person, but it shall be sufficient to prove that the party accused did the act charged with an intent to injure or defraud (as the case may be).

No warrant.] By sect. 61, any person found committing any offence against this Act, whether the same be punishable upon indictment or upon summary conviction, may be immediately apprehended, without a warrant, by any peace officer, or the owner of the property injured, or his servant, or any person authorized by him, and forthwith taken before some neighbouring justice of the peace, to be dealt with according to law.

Compelling appearance.] By sect. 62, where any person shall be charged on the oath of a credible witness before any justice of the peace with any offence punishable on summary conviction under this Act, the justice may summon the person charged to appear at a time and place to be named in such summons; and if he shall not appear accordingly, then (upon proof of the due service of the summons upon such person by delivering the same to him personally, or by leaving the same at his usual place of abode,) the justice may either proceed to hear and determine the case ex parte, or issue his warrant for apprehending such person and bringing him before himself or some other justice of the peace; or the justice before whom the charge shall be made may (if he shall so think fit), without any previous summons (unless where otherwise specially directed), issue such warrant; and the justice before whom the person charged shall appear or be brought shall proceed to hear and determine the case.

Abettors—Summary conviction.] By sect. 63, whosoever shall aid, abet, counsel, or procure the commission of any offence which is by this Act punishable on summary conviction, either for every time of its commission, or for the first and second time only, or for the first time only, shall, on conviction before a justice of the peace, be liable, for every first, second, or subsequent offence of aiding, abetting, counselling, or procuring, to the same forfeiture and punishment to which a person guilty of a first, second, or subsequent offence as a principal offender is by this Act made liable.

Application of forfeitures.] By sect. 64, every sum of money which shall be forfeited for the amount of any injury done shall be assessed in each case by the convicting justice, and shall be paid to the party aggrieved, except where he is unknown, and in that case such sum shall be applied in the same manner as a penalty; and every sum which shall be imposed as a penalty by any justice of the peace, whether in addition to such amount or otherwise, shall be paid and applied in the same manner as other penalties recoverable before justices of the peace are to be paid and applied in cases where the statute imposing the same contains no directions for the payment thereof to any person. Provided that where several persons shall join in the commission of the same offence, and shall, upon conviction thereof, each be adjudged to forfeit a sum equivalent to the amount of the injury done, in every such case no further sum shall be paid to the party aggrieved than such value or amount; and the remaining sum or sums forfeited shall be applied in the same manner as any penalty imposed by a justice of the peace is hereinbefore directed to be applied.

Committal.] By sect. 65, in every case of a summary conviction under this Act, where the sum which shall be forfeited for the amount of the injury done, or which shall be imposed as a penalty by the justice, shall not be paid, either immediately after the conviction, or within such period as the justice shall, at the time of the conviction, appoint, the convicting justice (unless where otherwise specially directed) may commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned only, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, according to the discretion of the justice, for any term not exceeding two months, where the amount of the sum forfeited, or of the penalty imposed, or of both, (as the case may be,) together with the costs, shall not exceed five pounds; and for any term not exceeding four months where the amount, with costs, shall not exceed ten pounds; and for any term not exceeding six months in any other case; the commitment to be determinable in each of the cases aforesaid upon payment of the amount and costs.

First conviction.] By sect. 66, where any person shall be summarily convicted before a justice of the peace of any offence against this Act, and it shall be a first conviction, the justice may, if he shall so think fit, discharge the offender from his conviction upon his making such satisfaction to the party aggrieved for damages and costs, or either of them, as shall be ascertained by the justice.

Summary conviction a bar.] By sect. 67, when any person convicted of any offence punishable upon summary conviction by virtue of this Act shall have paid the sum adjudged to be paid, together with costs, under such conviction, or shall have received a remission thereof from the crown, or the lord lieutenant or other chief governor of Ireland, or shall have suffered the imprisonment awarded for nonpayment thereof, or the imprisonment awarded in the first instance, or shall have been so discharged from his conviction by any justice as aforesaid, he shall be released from all further or other proceedings for the same cause.

The 68th section gives the right of appeal, where the sum payable on summary conviction exceeds 5*l*.

The 69th section takes away the writ of certiorari.

By sect. 70, the convictions are to be returned to the quarter sessions.

By sect. 73, whenever any person shall be convicted of any indictable misdemeanor punishable under this Act, the court may, if it shall think fit, in addition to or in lieu of any of the punishments by this Act authorized, fine the offender, and require him to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour; and in case of any felony punishable under this Act, the court may, if it shall think fit, require the offender to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace, in addition to any punishment by this Act authorized. Provided that no person shall be imprisoned under this clause for not finding sureties for any period exceeding one year.

By sect. 74, whenever imprisonment, with or without hard labour, may be awarded for any indictable offence under this Act, the court may sentence the offender to be imprisoned, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction.

By sect. 75, whenever solitary confinement may be awarded for any indictable offence under this Act, the court may direct the offender to be kept in solitary confinement for any portion or portions of his imprisonment, or of his imprisonment with hard labour, not exceeding one month at any one time, and not exceeding three months in any one year; and whenever whipping may be awarded for any indictable offence under this Act, the court may sentence the offender to be once privately whipped; and the number of strokes, and the instrument with which they shall be inflicted, shall be specified by the court in the sentence.

By sect. 76, every offence hereby made punishable on summary conviction may be prosecuted in England in the manner directed by the 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, so far as no provision is hereby made for any matter or thing which may be required to be done in the course of such prosecution, and may be prosecuted in Ireland before two or more justices of the peace, or one metropolitan or stipendiary magistrate, in the manner directed by the Act of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93, or in such other manner as may be directed by any Act that may be passed for like purposes, and all provisions contained in the said Acts shall be applicable to such prosecutions in the same manner as if they were incorporated in this Act. Provided that nothing in this Act contained shall in any manner alter or affect any enactment relating to procedure in the case of any offence punishable on summary conviction within the city of London or the metropolitan police district, or the recovery or application of any penalty or forfeiture for any such offence.

By sect. 77, the court before which any indictable misdemeanor against this Act shall be prosecuted or tried may allow the costs of the prosecution in the same manner as in cases of felony; and every order for the payment of such costs shall be made out, and the sum of money mentioned therein paid and repaid, upon the same terms and in the same manner in all respects as in cases of felony.

PART V.

Of Cheats, Frauds, and Forgery.

CHAPTER I.

OF CHEATS AND FRAUDS.

THE offences we propose to treat of in this class are those which consist in obtaining property through fraud; and they are occasionally accompanied by a species of force, which, although short of robbery, operates so powerfully upon the mind, as to induce an individual to part with his property rather than encounter the consequences of a refusal. The offence of extortion very particularly applies to offences of this nature. Extortion considered as a misdemeanor, is but an artifice of a violent character successfully practised upon the mind.

The principle which pervades all crimes of this class seems to be, that the party plundered, whether the transaction be of a public or private nature, should appear, nominally at least, to assent to the imposition which effects the transit of property from the one hand to the other. Even in extortion, this apparent acquiescence forms a part of the transaction, although it is wrung from the victim under the influence of mental terror. And to take the other extreme, where false accounts are rendered, or false entries made in books of account for purposes of fraud, it is plain, that the trick is so carried on as primâ facie to exhibit an assent, either express or implied, on the part of those whose money is thus tampered with.

The machinery of cheating, in cases independent of extortion, seems to be so worked as more or less to lull the suspicions of the other party. Whether the offence be an intrigue to defraud the government or an individual, a specious and false appearance is put forward in various ways, and with different degrees of art, greater or less according to the likelihood of discovery, or the awakening of apprehension.

Unless it be a matter relating to the public welfare the law will not recognize a bare lie as a misdemeanor, nor such a trick as the commonest caution can detect and guard against.¹ But as soon as the semblance becomes more deceitful, so that care and vigilance are less liable to be called into action, the law will punish the transgression thus attempted or accomplished as a cheat and a fraud. Very frequently, in addition to the art which the rogue adopts in order to attain his ends, he uses a false token of some kind, either with reference to himself or a third person, so as to invest the proceeding with greater credit than if he had contented himself with a simple act of knavery. This is a false pretence, punishable both at common law and by statute. In order to make the purpose in view more attainable, the dishonest individual sometimes throws a still deeper shade over his plan, more calculated to silence suspicion, and advance credit, and tenders with this idea a counterfeit writing. This act is in very many instances deemed forgery both at common law and by statute. And if in order to gain more completely the unlawful booty which is hoped for, the party calls another person or more than one other to his councils, in order to perpetrate one common design of fraud, both, or all, as the case may be, may be indicted for a conspiracy. And where the property is, indeed, acquired through the medium of terror, but, at the same time, where the transaction, although apparently free from deceit upon the surface, is nevertheless bottomed in fraud and falsehood, it is said to be extorsively gained.

Cheats at common law.] An early case concerning frauds affecting the community was where the defendant pretended that he had a power to discharge soldiers. A soldier being deluded by his representation paid him money for a discharge, and the court held the indictment well enough.² Joseph Jones, an apprentice, who had not served his term, enlisted himself as a soldier, and received a sum as bounty money. Being discharged, he was indicted for the fraud, his master having it in his power to reclaim his servant, and no objection was made to the subject matter of the indictment, although the conviction was subsequently set aside for want of due proof of the indenture.³

Again, the sellers of unwholesome victuals,⁴ or bad wine,⁵ or dealers who use false weights,⁶ are liable to be punished for ¹ Much less a letter written for the purpose of drawing a man to a certain town, where no mischief was done nor intended. R. v. Emerton, 2 Show. 20. Information for deceit. But the court were divided; Wylde and Jones, JJ. for arresting the judgment, Scroggs, C. J., and Twisden, J., contra. No judgment was given.

² R. v. Serlested, Latch, 202.

³ R. v. Jones, Leach, 174. S. C. East, P. C. 822.

⁴ East, P. C. 822; 4 M. & S. 220, by Lord Ellenborough.

⁵ By Lord Ellenborough, 6 East, 133, commenting upon the Queen v. M'Carty and another, 2 Lord Raym. 1179.

⁶ But the quantity of the article so sold must appear in the indictment, although the name of the party to whom it was sold need not be alleged. R. v. Gibbs, Str. 497.

those respective misdemeanors. The case of furnishing bad provisions to the French prisoners, is one which caused some discussion at the time. The charge against the defendant, a contractor, consisted in supplying 500 lbs. of unwholesome and insufficient bread, the bread being composed of bad and filthy materials, whereby the health of the French prisoners became endangered. The defendant was convicted, but it was moved to arrest the judgment, because it did not appear that the act done was in breach of any contract with the public, or of any moral or civil duty, and the case was submitted to the judges. But the conviction was held right,¹ and it is added, that it was not stated in the indictment that the defendant was a contractor, and, moreover, that such an allegation was not by any means necessary by reason of the enormity of the offence which, under any circumstances, would have been indictable.² So, where the baker of the Royal Military Asylum at Chelsea introduced alum into his bread in such quantities as strongly to impregnate the food, and thus to make it pernicious, it was held, that he was indictable for a misdemeanor, and that his defence of dissolving the alum, and mixing it with the yeast, so that it might be equally divided over the batch, was not to be admitted.³ For, by Lord Ellenborough, "if a baker will introduce such a substance into his bread, he must do it at his own hazard, and he must take especial care that the benefit he proposes to himself does not produce mischief to others."⁴ A new trial was, however, moved for upon the ground, that the proportion of alum used was not only innoxious but wholesome; and it was moved to arrest the judgment, because the indictment had failed to set out the noxious materials, so that the defendant could not ascertain the nature of the case he had to defend himself against; and secondly, because, although it alleged that he delivered the loaves for the use and supply of the children of the asylum, it omitted to add that he intended to injure the health of the children, or that he intended the children should eat the bread, and, consequently, the malus animus did not appear, as it might have done, upon the record. But the court was against the defendant upon all these points. The new trial was refused upon the ground taken at the trial by Lord Ellenborough, and the first point in arrest of judgment was repelled, because a party may allege generally what is within the knowledge of the other party; and the second ground was deemed untenable, for the intention is an inference of law resulting from the act done, and if the loaves were for the use and supply of the children, they must have been delivered with an intention that the children should eat them.⁵

By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 84, s. 1, the first offence of selling adulterated food or drink is punishable at petty sessions by a penalty not exceeding 5*l.*, and a second, &c., in like manner, and the

¹ R. v. Treeve, East, P. C. 821.

² Id. 822.

³ R. v. Dixon, 4 Campb. 12.

⁴ R. v. Dixon, 4 Campb. 14.

⁵ R. v. Dixon, 3 M. & S. 11.

justices may cause the name, place of abode, and the offence of the person to be published in a newspaper at his expense.

The same rule as to cheats prevails with respect to false weights and measures, for these are instruments calculated for deceit, and as the public may be imposed upon by them without any imputation of folly or negligence,¹ the matter becomes one which concerns the community at large, and not the mere interests of private men. Thus, cases are cited where cloth was sold with the counterfeited seal of the alnager or public officer;² and, again, with the seal of the trade fabricated upon the cloth for the purpose of fraud.³ These were false tokens superadded to the deceit, or false representation that the cloth was genuine. So, if a man produce a measure, or a bushel, and fraudulently fill it with some other material than that which is the subject of the bargain, he is indictable.⁴ So, the selling of coals by a false measure, is a subject for indictment.⁵ And the delivery of bread deficient in weight.⁶ So the selling of ale in black pots not marked.⁷ So if the owner of a soke mill, where the inhabitants of the vicinage were compellable to grind their corn, were to make his privilege a colour for practising fraud, he might probably be indicted.⁸ So, again, independently of the question of forgery, the use of false stamps or marks upon plate is indictable.⁹ And on the other hand, the fraudulent affix of public and authentic marks on goods of a value inferior to such tokens is in itself a cheat at common law.¹⁰ As when Fabian put too much alloy into plate, and then corrupted one of the assay master's servants to help him to the proper marks,—he was convicted and sentenced as at common law.¹¹ So is the sale of a picture with the painter's name imitated upon it. This is a cheat by a false token at common law, but it is not forgery.¹²

The use of false dice is ranged by writers under the same head.¹³ And one Leeser was called by the court a common cozenor of the king's people, because he had been detected in such practices, and he was punished at common law.¹⁴

Moreover, false news, which are likely to be detrimental to the public, are deemed to be cheats. Therefore, the writers of such

¹ R. v. Farmer, East, P. C. 820; Trem. 109.

² Id. R. v. Edwards, citing 1 Trem. P. C. 103.

³ Id. citing R. v. Worrell, Trem. P. C. 106. Also R. v. Allen, Id. 109.

⁴ See Id.

⁵ Cowp. 324, by Aston, J.

⁶ 2 Ch. Crim. L. 559. See also 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 52, s. 8, penalty for not obliterating labels under the paper duties, probably repealed by 2 & 3 Vict. c. 23, s. 67.

⁷ R. v. Burgen, 1 Vent. 13. R. v. Marsh, 2 Keb. 539.

⁸ By Lord Ellenborough, 4 M. & S. 220.

⁹ East, P. C. 820.

¹⁰ Id. 194.

¹¹ R. v. Fabian, Kel. 39. East, P. C. 194.

¹² R. v. Closs, 27 L. J. M. C. 54; Dears. & B. 460.

¹³ East, P. C. 820.

¹⁴ R. v. Leeser, Cro. Jac. 497. R. v. Maddocke, 2 Ro. Rep. 107.

fabricated intelligence have been deemed by all the judges worthy of punishment, and the subjects of a criminal proceeding.¹

And Hawkins observes, that if a person maim himself in order to have a more specious pretence for asking charity, or preventing his being impressed as a sailor, or enlisted as a soldier, he may be fined or imprisoned.²

Public officers.] There is no point more plain than that public officers are liable to be called to account for malversations, falsities of accounts, or other fraudulent conduct in the course of their employment; and it makes no difference whether they may happen to be connected with the government, or whether they are engaged in other employments of a public nature. Two parties were charged with enabling persons to pass their accounts with the pay office, so as to defraud the government, and it was objected that this was only a private matter of account, and so not indictable, but the court held otherwise, as the matter related to the public revenue.³

So again, the major commandant of a battalion of volunteers was convicted of charging and receiving pay from government for a greater number of men than had mustered in his corps, within certain periods mentioned in his returns to the War Office.⁴

So proceedings were taken without objection against a commissary of stores abroad under 42 Geo. 3, c. 85, for misconduct.⁵ So an overseer of the poor who omitted to give credit in his account with the parish for a sum paid by the putative father of a bastard child, although liable to the father, was yet held likewise indictable for a fraud, by reason of his false account.⁶ So where the minister and churchwardens of a parish returned a smaller sum on the back of a brief for relieving sufferers by fire than they had received, the court referred the prosecutors to their remedy by indictment.⁷

So it seems, that an indictment at common law will lie against an overseer for not accounting, or refusing to account.⁸ And the act

¹ 1 Russ. C. M. 234, n., citing Stark. on Libel, ed. 1, 546.

² 1 Hawk. c. 55, s. 4. An indictment for bringing a bastard child privately into a parish, with intent to burden the parish, was quashed only because the bastard being settled where born, could not become so chargeable. R. v. Warne, 1 Str. 644.

³ R. v. Bembridge and another, 6 East, 136.

⁴ R. v. Gardner, 2 Campb. 513. Prosecuted by information.

⁵ R. v. Jones, 8 East, 31.

⁶ R. v. Martin, 2 Campb. 268.

⁷ R. v. The Minister, &c., of St.

Botolph, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 443. The court refused an information, although it appeared that some of the money collected had been spent at tavern entertainments.

⁸ See R. v. Hummings, Comb. 374; S. C. nom. R. v. Commings and another, 5 Mod. 179; nom. R. v. Hemmings and another, 3 Salk. 187. The court doubted because another remedy had been given by statute. And the court declined to quash an indictment against overseers for not paying money over to their successors. R. v. King, 2 Str. 1268.

of procuring a man to marry a single woman, for the sake of getting the child to follow the husband's settlement, has always been deemed fraudulent.¹

It must, however, be carefully set out in the indictment, that the individual in question was a public officer when he committed the breach of duty imputed to him. Where the defendants, collectors of the property tax, were charged with having taken from A. P., a person not named in the commissioner's assessment, the sum of 5*l.* 5*s.*, under colour and pretence of their being collectors, and it appeared that, in fact, they had been appointed collectors, though in an informal manner, the court made the rule absolute for a new trial; for it is not competent to the commissioners to prosecute men whom they had in reality appointed, under a statement of their having acted as such by colour and pretence.² And it was likewise questioned in this case, whether as the statute 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 19, had ordained, that no collector should be liable to any punishment or penalty in respect of the execution of that Act, excepting that which was prescribed by the Act and by one other Act, the common law remedy by indictment was not taken away.³ The decision of the court upon the other point made it unnecessary to determine the latter point.⁴

So where the defendant was prosecuted under 49 Geo. 3, c. 123, s. 35, for receiving prize money from seamen without a licence, and it appeared that he had been licensed by the treasurer of the navy, but that his licence had expired and had not been renewed, Lord Ellenborough interposed, and directed an acquittal. The defendant advanced money upon the orders, and although he had received the prize money before the expiration of his licence, still he bore the character of a licensed prize agent, and the learned chief justice said, it could not be intended that those orders should become nullities at the expiration of the licence, and that receiving payment of them afterwards should be an indictable offence.⁵

It was made a question upon one occasion, upon an indictment

¹ R. v. Compton and others, Cald. 246. R. v. Tarrant, 4 Burr. 2106. R. v. Herbert and others, East, P. C. 461. In this case, proof of the consent of the parties was equivalent to an acquittal; for some violence, threat, or contrivance was necessary in order to constitute the offence. R. v. Fowler and others, East, P. C. 461. But it was deemed sufficient to allege the threat or menace, without adding that the marriage was against the will or consent of the parties, although evidence to that effect was indispensable. R. v. Parkhouse and another, Id. 462; see also R. v. Edwards and others, 8 Mod. 320. The new Act for the amendment of the laws relating to the poor has, in a great measure, put an end to the temptation on the part of overseers to carry out this species of fraud, see 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 1. See also R. v. Slaughter, Cald. 246, n.

² R. v. Dobson and another, 7 East, 218. By information for a misdemeanor at common law, filed by the attorney-general.

³ S. C.

⁴ Collectors, however, who have jointly received money contrary to law, may be indicted jointly. R. v. Atkinson and others, 11 Mod. 79.

⁵ R. v. Davis, 4 Campb. 48.

against a public officer, whether the counsel for the crown could avail themselves of two counts, so as to give evidence of part of the sums which the defendant had illegally obtained, under one count, and of the residue, under another. And by Lord Ellenborough, "In point of law there is no objection to a man being tried on one indictment for several offences of the same sort. It is usual in felonies for the judge, in his discretion, to call upon the counsel for the prosecution to select one felony, and to confine themselves to that; but this practice has never been extended to misdemeanors. It is the daily usage to receive evidence of several libels, and of several assaults upon the same indictment; and here I see not the slightest objection to evidence of various acts of fraud committed by the defendant in his office of commissary-general, though ranged under different counts as distinct and substantive misdemeanors."¹

Private cheats and frauds.] We now proceed to the consideration of private cheating. The defendant came to a person, and said he had been commissioned by B. to receive 20*l.* due from that person to B., and he received it. Being indicted, the court said, that, unless there were a false token, the case was not punishable, and the party was left to his action.² So where a rogue persuaded a woman to give him several sums of money upon the plea of his having sold part of a ship to her husband, the same doctrine obtained.³ The defendant delivered so many bushels less than he had contracted for, and the prosecutor was left to his action.⁴ Pinkney sold a sack of corn at Ripon, and falsely affirmed that the measure was a Winchester bushel, but the court quashed the indictment upon motion.⁵ Driffeld delivered a quantity of coals, purporting to be two bushels, but there were only one bushel and three pecks; and the rule for quashing the indictment was made absolute.⁶ So it was where the defendant delivered a deficient quantity of beer.⁷ The offence of selling by false measure must be made out before the indictment can be maintained.⁸ The cases on the subject were much considered where a

¹ R. v. Jones, 2 Camp. 132.

² The Queen v. Hannon, 6 Mod. 311. But this is a false pretence within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96.

³ R. v. Jones, 1 Salk. 379. See also 7 Mod. 317. (Lord Hale had laid down a contrary doctrine, 1 Hale, 506.) To the same effect, R. v. Holt, 354; R. v. Glanvill, 11 Mod. 222; R. v. Grantham, Semble, S. C. But this would be a false pretence within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, if there were, in reality, a debt due to B., and the money were paid to the defendant.

⁴ R. v. Nicholson, East, P. C. 818, n. (a.)

⁵ R. v. Pinkney, 2 Burr. 1129; cited by Wilmot, J. On the other hand, it must not be understood, that where the court has refused, on these occasions, to quash the indictment, they have necessarily considered that the charge was well founded. East, P. C. 818, n. (b.)

⁶ R. v. Driffeld, Say. Rep. 106.

⁷ R. v. Combrune, 1 Wils. 301.

⁸ R. v. Osborn, 3 Burr. 1967, a case of coals. See also as to false pretences, R. v. Reed, 7 C. & P. 248.

brewer had been convicted for delivering sixteen gallons instead of eighteen, and fraudulently receiving the difference. It was insisted that all the old cases were decided before verdict, whereas the jury having found the defendant guilty, it might be presumed that he had sold by false measure.¹ But the court arrested the judgment, and Denison, J., mentioned to the court the case of one Wilders, who was indicted for sending so many vessels of ale marked as containing a certain measure, and writing a letter assuring the buyer that they did contain that measure, and yet the indictment was quashed, after argument, upon motion,² "a stronger case than the present."³ A parish contractor agreed to supply so much bread for the poor at 3½ lbs. per loaf. If he broke the contract, inter alia, by a deficiency in weight, the guardians might employ another, and have their remedy against the contractor. There was a deficiency, scienter, and the jury found fraud. The case was argued before the fifteen judges, and the conviction was affirmed.⁴

In all these cases, the prosecutor might have detected the cheat by investigating the circumstances at the time; at all events, he might have had his action. And now by various statutes penalties are ordained against persons who sell goods below the due measure.

The law is the same if a tradesman be requested to send goods by the hands of the defendant, who falsely pretends that he has been directed by another person to give the order.⁵ And, on the other hand, if the tradesman should sell goods of an inferior quality, affirming them to be the best, it is a mere lie, and not a cheat at common law.⁶ So where a servant sold a gold chain for his master to a customer, affirming that the chain was of real gold, whereas it was under the standard, and not marked, the defendant, a pawnbroker, was held not to be indictable for a misdemeanor.⁷ The case of an unsound horse sold upon a false warranty, is governed by the same rule.

So again, the fraudulent deposit of goods in pawn under false representations of their value is a mere lie, as far as an indictment at common law is concerned. As where Lewis, in consideration of an advance of money, deposited some gum with the lender, which he pretended to be gum seneca, and which he subsequently sold to the prosecutor for 7*l.*, whereas it was worth but 3*l.*⁸ And a breach of ¹ An indictment for using false weights and measures, should state that they were used in trade. 1 Freem. 524.

² R. v. Wheatley, 2 Burr. 1125; R. v. Dunnage, 2 Burr. 1130; R. v. Wilders, Id. 1128. To the same effect, R. v. Botwright, Say. Rep. 147.

³ By Lord Mansfield in giving judgment upon R. v. Wheatley.

⁴ R. v. Eagleton, Dears. 376; 24 L. J. M. C. 158.

⁵ R. v. Bryan, 2 Str. 866; R.

v. Wood, 5 Mod. 18. But if the goods are obtained, these are false pretences.

⁶ The Queen v. Dixon, 6 Mod. 61.

⁷ R. v. Bower, Cowp. 323.

⁸ R. v. Lewis, Say. Rep. 205. However, in a case for selling goat's hair instead of human hair, the defendant had judgment against him, but it was subsequently arrested because of a want of venue. R. v. Mayor, Com. Rep. 94.

promise with reference to a pawn is within the same construction. A woman was sufficiently foolish to lend 600*l.* upon the faith of a pledge that the defendant would send her fine cloth and gold dust. The defendant sent her neither, but only some coarse cloth worth little or nothing. And the court granted a certiorari, observing, that it was the prosecutor's fault to repose such a confidence in the defendant.¹

An indictment was once preferred against a person for taking and detaining wheat. He was the keeper of a common grist mill, and kept back 42*lbs.* weight of the wheat, but as there was neither any allegation of actual force, nor of taking, as for unreasonable toll, it was held, that no indictment would lie, and the prosecutor was left to his action of trover.² So where a miller received good barley to grind, and delivered in return a musty and unwholesome mixture of barley meal, there being no allegation that the bad material was for the food of man, the judgment at quarter sessions against the miller was reversed upon error brought. The indictment was likewise held bad for want of stating a place where the defendant received the barley, and likewise for uncertainty in not stating to which of two separate parcels of four bushels alleged to have been received, the three bushels of mixed oat and barley meal (the subject of the charge) applied.³

After these numerous instances of moral offences, which the common law of misdemeanor could not reach, it might almost be questioned whether any common cheat could be said to be at all punishable, or whether every deceit might not be qualified as a bare lie, and so escape retribution upon the plea of due want of caution. However, we have seen, that in public matters this distinction is not admitted, and, in private transactions, as soon as a false token is introduced, a new feature is immediately communicated to the ¹ R. v. Nehuff, 1 Salk. 151. Whether a pawnbroker could be properly convicted of fraud, for refusing to deliver up pledged goods upon a tender of the money, seems to have been doubtful. Holt, C. J., and Eyre, J. were in favour of the affirmative upon one occasion. Anon. 2 Salk. 522. But at another time, the court quashed an indictment for refusing to deliver up gold rings under such circumstances, R. v. Bainham, 1 Salk. 379.

² R. v. Channell, 2 Str. 793.

³ R. v. Haynes, 4 M. & S. 214. In R. v. Wood, 1 Sess. Ca. 217, the court were unanimous not to quash an indictment against a miller for changing corn, apparently on the ground that as it was a cheat in the way of trade, it concerned the public; but unless the mill were a soke mill, R. v. Haynes is an authority against this decision, if put upon the footing of public interest. If it were intended to put the defendant to demur, in order that the matter might be further considered, or by reason of the enormity of the offence, the case would be different. It was once held that the tearing by the defendant of a settled account, of which he had contrived to get possession by fraudulent insinuations, was an indictable offence, but as it is now understood that an indictment will not lie for a mere trespass, that case cannot be considered of much authority. R. v. Crisp, 6 Mod. 175. The prisoners in another case used force in taking away a horse, which the prosecutor said in a passion was not worth more than 5*l.* The prisoners had just asked him what offence.¹ Govers, intending to cheat the prosecutor, falsely assumed to himself the character of a merchant, and affirmed that he was such a trader, and that he had received commissions from Spain. If he had stopped there, his subsequent conduct would have been no offence at common law. But he produced several paper writings which he declared to be letters from Spain, containing commissions for goods to a large amount, and thus obtained two watches from the prosecutor. And by reason of the tendering of these paper writings, the court refused to arrest the judgment,² for here were the counterfeit tokens superadded to the falsehoods. So, before the uttering of a forged instrument was made felony, one who produced a promissory note with a counterfeit indorsement was held to have obtained the money which formed the subject of the charge, by a false token, and Pengelly, C. B., directed the jury to convict.³ So where the defendant brought a bill of exchange to the prosecutors, and showing the indorsement, declared that he was the payee, it seems, although he was not convicted of the bare cheat, but of a conspiracy, that he might have been charged with the misdemeanor first mentioned, by reason of the false token, had it been necessary.⁴ But the defendant's own cheque upon a banker with whom he had no effects when he drew it, is not such a fraudulent token as will support an indictment at common law, although it is a false pretence under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96.⁵ The defendant had a note given upon condition. He brought an action upon it, and tore off the condition, and an information was granted against him for the fraud.⁶ One Lara obtained some lottery tickets by a fictitious order, and Lord Kenyon in pronouncing his opinion that the judgment should be arrested, observed, that it would be ridiculous to call the cheque a false token, "that left the defendant's credit just where it was before." Grose, J., said that the offer of the false draft was "only adding another lie." And Lawrence, J., cited Nehuff's case,⁷ where the court he would take for the horse, and upon his answer, tendered him the money. The prosecutor then said the horse was borrowed, and that he could not sell it, but not being able to get it back, he charged the prisoners with horse-stealing. The jury upon being told that the indictment could not be supported, were inclined to find a verdict "guilty of fraud," but Lord Ellenborough expressed his opinion, that had there been an indictment for fraud it could not have succeeded, and of course an acquittal was directed in respect of the felony. R. v. Alexander and another, 3 Ch. Burn. 338. For other cases, see R. v. Parris and others, 1 Sid. 431. Obtaining goods upon the pretence of a treaty of marriage, Anon. Lofft. 146. See 1 Barnard, 87.

¹ See 1 East, 185, by Lord Kenyon.

² R. v. Govers, Say. Rep. 206.

³ R. v. Hales, East, P. C. 825, citing 9 St. Tr. 75. See 1 Barnard, 112.

⁴ R. v. Hevey, Leach, 229, 332; East, P. C. 1010.

⁵ R. v. Jackson and another, 3 Campb. 370; 1 Moo. C. C. 223.

⁶ 1 Barnard, 126.

⁷ Ante, p. 615.

found fault with the prosecutor for reposing confidence improperly in the defendant.¹ Where the defendants had made a person drunk in order to induce him to sign a note for 20*l.*, the court considered the matter as one belonging to civil rights, and refused an information.²

Indictment.] With respect to the form of the indictment, it may be remarked, that the false token must be set out, and, consequently, that a general allegation of cheating by false tokens is insufficient.³ If no fraudulent means of obtaining money are set forth, the indictment will fail. The attempt to defraud is not a misdemeanor, unless the obtaining of the money would be such; therefore the means must appear. The indictment must also state to whom the money intended to be obtained belonged.⁴ But it does not appear necessary to describe the means more particularly than they were shown or described to the party at the time, and in consequence of which he was imposed upon.⁵ Several may be joined in the same indictment with reference to the same cheat, as if they were present and concurring with those who employed the false tokens.⁶

An objection was once taken to a count which described the false pretence as having been made to J. S., but alleged that the cheat and fraud were practised upon another person, thus making the pretence which was used to deceive one man operate to the prejudice of another. But the defendant was convicted notwithstanding this objection; although the judgment was ultimately arrested upon another ground.⁷

Trial.] The trial may be either where the cheat is performed, or where it comes into fraudulent operation. As where one Munton, a government storekeeper in Antigua, was indicted for transmitting false vouchers to his agent in London, which were delivered by the agent at the Custom House in London. He was tried and convicted in Middlesex.⁸

Judgment.] The judgment for a cheat or fraud at common law, is fine and imprisonment.⁹

¹ R. v. Lara, 6 T. R. 565; Leach, 647. There are many other instances of private frauds which, although not indictable as simple misdemeanors, become the subjects of a criminal proceeding as soon as they are attempted, through the medium of a conspiracy. See East, 823.

² R. v. Roo and another, 1 Barnard, 87.

³ East, P. C. 837. R. v. Hannon, 6 Mod. 311.

⁴ R. v. Marsh and another, 19 L. J., M. C. 12; Den. 505.

⁵ East, P. C. 837.

⁶ East, 838. See also R. v. Wood, Sty. 145, and East, P. C. 517.

⁷ R. v. Lara, Leach, 652.

⁸ R. v. Munton, cited, 6 East, 590. R. v. Munton, 1 Esp. 62.

⁹ East, P. C. 838. The power of restitution does not extend to the offence of cheating at common law.

Witchcraft.] There is still an Act in force respecting witchcraft. By 9 Geo. 2, c. 5, s. 4, if any person shall pretend to exercise, or use any kind of witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment or conjuration, or undertake to tell fortunes, or pretend from his or her skill or knowledge in any occult or crafty science, to discover where or in what manner any goods or chattels supposed to have been stolen or lost, may be found, every such offender shall suffer imprisonment by the space of one whole year, without bail or mainprise; and also shall, if the court shall think fit, be obliged to give sureties for his or her good behaviour, in such sum, and for such time, as the said court shall judge proper, and in such case shall be further imprisoned until such sureties be given. And an information at common law will lie for imposture.¹

False pleading.] False pleas may be called cheats. As to plead any manner of recovery in bar of a popular action, such recovery having been obtained by covin.²

Games and wagers.] Cheating at games has likewise attracted the attention of the legislature.³ By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, every person who shall, by any fraud or unlawful device in playing at cards, dice, tables, or other game, or in bearing a part in the stakes, wagers, or in adventures, or betting on the sides or hands of them that do play, or in wagering on the event of any game, sport, pastime, or exercise, win from any other person to himself or any other, any money or valuable thing, shall be deemed guilty of obtaining such money, &c. by a false pretence, with intent to cheat and defraud such person, and shall be punished accordingly.

Upon an indictment under this statute it was held unnecessary to state whose the money was which the defendant had won by fraud in playing.⁴

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 4, to certify or declare anything which shall be untrue in any certificate or declaration made to the committee of the corporation of orphan girls, the settlement of whose parents cannot be found, or in any certificate, &c., which any three or more of such committee may require previously to the admission of a girl, is a misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, for not less than six months, nor more than two years, at the discretion of the court.

By 50 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 2, any officer, collector, or receiver, intrusted with the receipt, custody, or management of any part of the public revenues, who knowingly furnishes false statements or returns of the sums of money collected by him or intrusted to his care, or of the balances of money in his hands or under his control, shall be punished by fine and imprisonment, and become incapable of holding any office under the crown.

¹ R. v. Hathaway, 12 Mod. 556.

³ The Act 9 Anne, c. 14, is repealed.

² 4 Hen. 7, c. 20; 20 Hen. 3, c. 1.

⁴ R. v. Moss, 26 L. J. M. C. 9.

So in the case of assessed taxes, false declarations are punishable, by 50 Geo. 3, c. 105, s. 9, with six months' imprisonment, and a fine not exceeding treble the amount of duty with which the officer may have been charged, as the court shall think fit.

By 32 Geo. 3, c. 56, if any person shall falsely personate any master or mistress, executor, administrator, wife, relation, house-keeper, agent, steward, or servant of a master or mistress, and either personally, or in writing, give a false character to a servant, or pretend, or falsely assert in writing, that a servant had been hired for a period of time, or in a station, or was discharged at any other time, or had not been hired in any previous service, contrary to truth; and if any person shall offer as a servant, with a pretence of service contrary to truth, or a false, or altered certificate of character; and if any person having been before in service, shall pretend not to have been in any previous service, on conviction before two justices, these respective offenders shall forfeit 20*l*.

But assuming the name of another person who had been a servant in the same place with the offender, is not within the provisions of the Act.¹

Excise.] By 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 44, if any collector or other officer of excise, shall neglect to keep distinct accounts, and according to the form prescribed, of all duties, &c., and penalties received by him, and of all balances of money in his hand, or shall knowingly render false accounts thereof, he shall be punished upon conviction by fine and imprisonment.²

Officer of excise fraudulently delivering out false permits.] By 2 Will. 4, c. 16, s. 15, it is enacted, that every officer of excise who shall deliver out, or suffer to be delivered out any paper, prepared or provided, or appointed by the commissioners of excise, to be used for permits in blank, or before such permit shall be filled up and issued, agreeably to and in conformity with a request note; and every officer who shall knowingly give or grant any permit to any person not entitled to receive the same, or shall knowingly give or grant any false or untrue permit, or shall make any false or untrue entry in the counterpart of any permit given or granted by him, or shall knowingly or willingly receive or take any goods or commodities into the stock of any person or persons, brought in with any false or untrue or fraudulent permit, or shall knowingly or willingly grant any permit for the removal of any goods or commodities out of or from the stock of any person or persons who shall have received or retained such goods or commodities, or any of them, under or by virtue or pretext of any false, untrue, forged, or fraudulent permit, or shall knowingly or willingly give any false credit in the stock of any person or per-

¹ 2 Russ. C. M. 316, n., citing,
8 Ev. St. 909.

² A portion of this Act is repealed, but, it is believed, not this part.

sons, beyond the credit to which such stock is justly and truly entitled, so as to enable such person or persons falsely and fraudulently to obtain a permit or permits; or if any such officer shall knowingly or willingly suffer the same to be done directly or indirectly; every officer so offending in any of the cases aforesaid, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall suffer such punishment by fine and imprisonment, or fine or imprisonment, as the court shall award; and every officer so convicted, shall from thenceforth be incapable of holding any office or place in or relating to any of the revenues of the United Kingdom.

Ecclesiastical leases, false recitals, &c.] By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 20, s. 3, to execute an ecclesiastical lease knowingly with false recitals therein, or wilfully to introduce any such false recitals therein, or aid in so doing, or to prepare and engross, or cause to be prepared, &c., any such lease or counterpart containing such false recitals, is a misdemeanor.¹

Chelsea Hospital certificate.] By 7 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 25, to obtain, or endeavour to obtain, any pension or allowance from Chelsea Hospital, by means of a false or altered certificate, is punishable by fine and imprisonment as a common law misdemeanor.

By 11 Geo. 4, c. 20, s. 89, any petty officer or seaman, non-commissioned officer of marines or marine obtaining or attempting to obtain pay, by means of a false or forged certificate, purporting to be a certificate of discharge, shall incur the penalties of perjury.²

The numerous statutes upon this subject, repealed or unrepealed, cause some difficulty. But it would appear that the statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 25, and the 11 Geo. 4, c. 20, s. 89, are not repealed, and that they are the Acts alluded to in 9 & 10 Vict. c. 10, and 19 & 20 Vict. c. 20, as governing the punishment of frauds. The 9 & 10 Vict. c. 10, is repealed. But by 19 & 20 Vict. c. 20, s. 5, any person guilty of fraudulently receiving, or endeavouring to receive, pension money, or money in the nature of pension, from the secretary of war, &c., shall be subject to the same pains and penalties as in the case of frauds upon the commissioners of Chelsea Hospital, the lord high admiral, or commissioners of the admiralty, the treasurer of the navy, and the paymaster-general; and these punishments seem to be fine and imprisonment for misdemeanor under 7 Geo. 4, c. 16, and for perjury under 11 Geo. 4, c. 20.³

¹ And the offender shall be punished by a fine of 500*l.*, in addition to any other punishment for misdemeanor, or, at his option, he may, in lieu of the penalty of 500*l.*, forfeit five years' improved annual value of the hereditaments comprised in such lease.

² Neither of these sections seem to be repealed.

³ See Lonsdale, 279.

Metropolis Police Act.] By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 28, any constable may take into custody every person who for the purpose of preventing the seizure or discovery of any materials, furniture, stores, or merchandize belonging to or having been part of the cargo of a ship, boat, or vessel lying in the Thames, or in the docks or creeks adjacent, or of any other articles unlawfully obtained from any such ship or vessel, shall wilfully let fall or throw into the river, or in any other manner convey away from any ship, &c., wharf, quay, or landing place, any such article, or who shall be accessory to any such offence, and also may seize and detain any boat in which such person shall be found, or out of which any article shall be so let fall, &c., and every such person shall be deemed to be guilty of a misdemeanor.

By sect. 29, every person who for the purpose of protecting or preventing anything whatsoever from being seized within the metropolitan police district, on suspicion of its being stolen or otherwise unlawfully obtained, or of preventing the same from being produced or made to serve as evidence concerning any felony or misdemeanor committed or supposed to be committed within the metropolitan police district, shall frame or cause to be framed any bill of parcels, containing any false statement in regard of the name or abode of any alleged vendor, the quantity or quality of any such thing; the place whence, or the conveyance by which the same was furnished, the price agreed upon or charged for the same, or any other particular, knowing such statement to be false, or who shall fraudulently produce such bills of parcels, knowing the same to have been fraudulently framed, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

By sect. 30, every person who shall be found within the metropolitan police district, in or upon any canal, dock, warehouse, wharf, quay, or bank, or on board any ship or vessel, having in his or her possession any tub or other instrument for the purpose of unlawfully obtaining any wine, spirits, or other liquors, or having in his or her possession any skin, bladder, or other material or utensil, for the purpose of unlawfully secreting or carrying away any such wine, spirit, or other liquors, and any person who shall attempt unlawfully to obtain any such wine, &c. shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

By sect. 31, every person within the metropolitan police district, who shall bore, pierce, break, cut open, or otherwise injure any cask, box, or package, containing wine, spirits, or other liquors, on board any ship, boat, or vessel, or in or upon any warehouse, wharf, quay, or bank, with intent feloniously to steal, or otherwise unlawfully obtain any part of the contents thereof; or shall unlawfully drink, or wilfully spill, or allow to run to waste any part of the contents thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

And by sect. 32, every person who shall within the metropolitan police district, wilfully cause to be broken, pierced, started, cut, torn, or otherwise injured any cask, chest, bag, or other package, containing or prepared for containing any goods while on board of any barge, lighter, or other craft, lying in the said river, or any dock, creek, quay, wharf, or landing place adjacent to the same, or in the way to or from any warehouse, with intent that the contents of such package or any part thereof, may be spilled or dropped from such package, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.¹

Fraudulent assignments.] By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 51, s. 8, fraudulent assignments and claims under the Act for regulating the assignments of pensions by soldiers and sailors, are punishable as misdemeanors.²

Law of Evidence Amendment Act.] By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 15, certifying a false document under that Act is a misdemeanor, and punishable with imprisonment not exceeding eighteen months.

Pharmaceutical chemists.] By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 56, s. 15, every registrar making a falsification under the Act relating to any register or certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor; and by sect. 16, wilfully to procure by false or fraudulent means any certificate of registration under the Act, or fraudulently to exhibit a certificate purporting to be a certificate of membership of the Pharmaceutical Society, is a misdemeanor.

Woods, forests, &c.] By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 62, s. 8, if any officer shall certify as true, any copy or extract of document in the office of land revenue records, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable with imprisonment not exceeding eighteen months.

Patent Law Amendment.] By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 83, s. 37, to make any false entry in the register of proprietors, or to forge any writing purporting to be a copy of any entry, or produce, or tender, &c. any such writing, is a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine and imprisonment.³

Fraudulent conveyances.] Covinous and fraudulent feoffments, gifts, conveyances, &c. are forbidden by 13 El. c. 6, s. 1. By sect. 2, such are declared void. By sect. 3, all parties to them, and those who alien any lands, &c. so covinously conveyed, shall be punished by the loss of one year's value of the lands, &c., and of the whole value of the goods, and of the money contained in a covinous bond, half to belong to the Queen, half to the party grieved. The recovery is to be by action of debt, &c. or by information, and upon conviction the punishment is imprisonment for half-a-year, without bail or

¹ See sects. 33, 34.

² It is believed that this section was not repealed by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 10.

³ "And" in this place must be read "Or."

mainprise.¹ Similar provisions with respect to lands, tenements, and hereditaments, were enacted by 27 El. c. 4.²

Joint Stock Companies.] By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, s. 114, whosoever shall alter, mutilate, or falsify the books, papers, &c. of joint stock companies shall be liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years. So to insert a false advertisement in a newspaper under the Railway Companies' Dissolution Act, is, under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 28, s. 16, a misdemeanor.

Of frauds by bankrupts.] Certain frauds by dishonest bankrupts are provided against and declared to be misdemeanors.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 221, from and after the commencement of this Act, any bankrupt who shall do any of the acts or things following, with intent to defraud or defeat the rights of his creditors, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable, at the discretion of the court before which he shall be convicted, to punishment by imprisonment for not more than three years, or to any greater punishment attached to the offence by any existing statute:

1. If he shall not upon the day limited for his surrender, and before three of the clock of such day, or at the hour and upon the day allowed him for finishing his examination, after notice thereof in writing, to be served upon him personally or left at his usual or last known place of abode or business, and after the notice herein directed in the "London Gazette," surrender himself to the court (having no lawful impediment allowed by the court), and sign or subscribe such surrender, and submit to be examined before such court from time to time:
2. If he shall not upon his examination fully and truly discover, to the best of his knowledge and belief, all his property, real and personal, inclusive of his rights and credits, and how and to whom, and for what consideration, and when he disposed of, assigned, or transferred any part thereof, except such part as has been really and bonâ fide before sold or disposed of in the way of his trade or business, if any, or laid out in the ordinary expense of his family, or shall not deliver up to the court, or dispose as the court directs of all such part thereof as is in his possession, custody, or power, except the necessary wearing apparel of himself, his wife and children; and deliver up to the court all books, papers, and writings in his possession, custody, or power relating to his property or affairs:³

¹ Common recognizances are saved by sect. 4.

² The criminal procedure under these Acts is obsolete, but they are extensively resorted to in the civil courts. The Court of Chancery is frequently appealed to, and both statutes have many decisions pronounced upon them up to this day.

³ A plea of aut. acq. could not be maintained by an insolvent debtor charged under the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 39 (repealed), with omitting goods in his schedule, which were not specified in the indictment upon which he was acquitted, but Patteson, J., observed, that such a course ought not to be taken, except under very peculiar circumstances. R. v. Champneys, 2 Moo. & Rob. 26.

3. If he shall, after adjudication, or within sixty days prior to adjudication, with intent to defraud his creditors, remove, conceal, or embezzle any part of his property to the value of 10*l*. or upwards :
4. If, in case of any person having to his knowledge or belief proved a false debt under his bankruptcy, he shall fail to disclose the same to his assignees within one month after coming to the knowledge or belief thereof :
5. If he shall, with intent to defraud, wilfully and fraudulently omit from his schedule any effects or property whatsoever :
6. If he shall, after the filing of the petition for adjudication, with intent to conceal the state of his affairs, or to defeat the object of the law of bankruptcy, conceal, prevent, or withhold the production of any book, deed, paper, or writing relating to his property, dealings, or affairs :
7. If he shall, after the filing of the petition for adjudication, or within three months next before adjudication, with intent to conceal the state of his affairs, or to defeat the objects of the law of bankruptcy, part with, conceal, destroy, alter, mutilate, or falsify, or cause to be concealed, destroyed, altered, mutilated, or falsified, any book, paper, writing, or security, or document relating to his property, trade, dealings, or affairs, or make or be privy to the making of any false or fraudulent entry or statement in or omission from any book, paper, document, or writing relating thereto :
8. If, within the like time, he shall, knowing that he is at the time unable to meet his engagements, fraudulently and with intent to diminish the sum to be divided amongst the general body of his creditors, have made away with, mortgaged, encumbered, or charged any part of his property, of what kind soever, or if after adjudication he shall conceal from the court or his assignee any debt due to or from him :
9. If, being a trader, he shall, under his bankruptcy, or at any meeting of his creditors within three months next preceding the filing of the petition for adjudication, have attempted to account for any of his property by fictitious losses or expenses :
10. If, being a trader, he shall, within three months next before the filing of the petition for adjudication, under the false colour and pretence of carrying on business and dealing in the ordinary course of trade, have obtained on credit from any person any goods or chattels with intent to defraud :

11. If, being a trader, he shall, with intent to defraud his creditors, within three months next before the filing of the petition for adjudication, pawn, pledge, or dispose of, otherwise than by bonâ fide transactions in the ordinary way of his trade, any of his goods or chattels which have been obtained on credit and remain unpaid for.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 159, if, upon the hearing of an application for discharge, the court should think that the bankrupt ought to be charged with a misdemeanor under the Act, they may appoint a day for trying the bankrupt, with his consent, and may summon a jury if the bankrupt should require it. And, if upon the trial the bankrupt should be convicted, the commissioner may, in addition to any other punishment, either refuse or suspend the order of discharge at his discretion. Still, the court may, if they see right, direct a prosecution instead in one of the ordinary courts of criminal justice.

Under the old law, and after notice in the "London Gazette" of the issuing of the fiat, or filing of the petition, &c., the omission, of course, was wilful. The summons to appear needs not to contain a statement, that the person summoned has been adjudicated a bankrupt.¹ The bankrupt must also be, in like manner, and before that time, prepared to sign and subscribe the surrender, and submit to be examined before the court from time to time, under the same clause.

Great indulgence has always been shown to bankrupts with respect to the surrender. The Court of Chancery will not lend its aid to a prosecution by ordering the clerk to the commission to attend the trial and produce the proceedings.² On the contrary, that court has superseded commissions in order to prevent a prosecution for not surrendering, in the absence of fraud in the bankrupt, or where his absence arose from ignorance or accident.³ And great exactness is required in commitments by commissioners, for if the bankrupt be committed as a criminal, it must be until he shall be delivered by due course of law.⁴ Where the prisoner put his refusal to answer or conform upon a resolution on his part to dispute the commission, the judges held, that, as he had submitted and surrendered, a subsequent non-submission was not within the Act, (5 Geo. 2, c. 30,) and that the submitting was confined to the time of the surrender; and that, although the jury had found that the refusal had proceeded from a fraudulent intention.⁵ And a bankrupt's balance delivered upon oath under his commission is not receivable against him in a criminal charge.⁶ Moreover, al-

¹ R. v. Dealtry, Den. C. C. 287. By the judges, 2 Car. & K. 521.

² 1 Hawk. c. 49, s. 7.

³ Ex parte Wood, 1 Atk. 222; Ex parte Shiles, 1 Madd. 248.

⁴ 1 Salk. 348, note (a).

⁵ R. v. Page, Russ. & Ry. 392;

1 Br. & Bing. 308, 317. There was another question as to the act of bankruptcy. See Russ. & Ry. 396, 397.

⁶ R. v. Britton, 1 Moo. & Rob. 297.

though the bankrupt's imprisonment be collusive, it has been held, that he need not give notice to the commissioners of his being in prison, nor make an application to be brought up to surrender, nor apply to enlarge the term for such surrender.¹ Nor can he be convicted for not delivering up his books until his last examination has been passed. Till then he has a locus pœnitentiæ.² The following decisions were arrived at in the case of Cosmo Gordon.³ 1. That the presumption is against any alteration of an affidavit, and therefore the court will admit it notwithstanding erasures. 2. C. Lane, W. Lane, of Middlesex. In the Gazette it was W. Lane, of Essex; held, immaterial. 3. Petition allotted to Commissioner G., notice signed by Commissioner H., sufficient. 4. Notice to surrender on one of two days, one was past. But the last was the day limited by the statute for surrender, sufficient. 5. Search at the counting-house, giving the bankrupt notice to produce, sufficient to warrant secondary evidence of the documents left at the counting-house. 6. Not material, that the prisoner had no knowledge of his having been made a bankrupt, if the notice, &c., were duly served. 7. A separate notice to surrender should have been left for each bankrupt at his last place of business. Two objections rose out of the above, and were repelled. Conviction quashed on No. 7.⁴ Where that notice at the last abode appears, the petition is sufficient.⁵ The prisoner was again indicted with one Davison under the same section, (12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 251,) for embezzling part of their personal estate to the value of 10*l*. The adjudication took place on June 21st. The bankrupts, four days previously (on the 17th) received several bank notes, and on the same day they went to Belgium, where they remained for a considerable time. Some of these identical notes were received by mercantile houses in London from places in Belgium, to which the bankrupts were traced, but there was no evidence as to how, or when the notes were dealt with by them. A memorandum book of their expenditure in Belgium was found upon them, the items being stated in foreign coin. When they returned to England, they were arrested, and gave no aid before the Bankruptcy Court as to the disposal of the notes. It was held—1. That there was no evidence of any offence committed within this realm, for the disposal, if any here, must have taken place on the 17th of June, before the adjudication; and, if disposed of abroad, that was a complete offence there. 2. Although a subsequent non-accounting was evidence of a fraudulent appropriation, it was no part of the crime of embezzlement. 3. Although the bankrupts

¹ R. v. Mitchell, 4 C. & P. 251.

² R. v. Walters, 5 C. & P. 138.

³ 25 L. J. M. C. 19; 7 Cox, 19.

⁴ Diss.—Jervis, C. J.; Erle, J.; Platt, B.; Willes, J.

Affir.—Lord Campbell; Parke, B.; Alderson, B.; Wightman, J.;

Cresswell, J.; Williams, J.; Crompton, J. Seven to four.

Absent.—Pollock, C.B.; Coleridge, J.; Crowder, J.; Martin, B.

⁵ R. v. Hughes, 1 Fost. & F. 726.

And it is not necessary to give notice to produce the notices of the adjudication.

refused to answer before the commissioners, lest they should criminate themselves, no unfavourable conclusion ought thereby to be drawn. 4. The word "money" in the indictment must mean English money, not foreign coin. 5. The description of the money, though laid under a videlicet, was material, and therefore not amendable, and by Alderson, B., the embezzlement of 10/. must be as one sum. The disposal of several smaller sums at different times was not within the statute.¹

Indictment and evidence.] The chief points, however, upon this subject will be found upon a consideration of the indictment and evidence applicable to each particular head. It is manifest that the substance of the bankruptcy must appear upon the record; although, indeed, in one case the prisoner was convicted on two counts, one of which did not set out this fact. The point was saved, but the judges held the conviction wrong, upon another ground.² So again, it has been held insufficient to allege a concealment by the bankrupt without also averring the bankruptcy.³ The adjudication not being proved to have been in the Gazette is insufficient.⁴ So where under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, s. 32, the indictment charged the bankrupt with not discovering when he disposed of his estate, but failed to aver that he had disposed of it, the judgment was arrested.⁵

It is necessary that the indictment should in this, as well as in other cases, pursue, as far as may be, the words of the statute; and therefore, where the indictment used the word "awarded" instead of "issued," it was held bad.⁶ And it is a good form to say that the bankrupt was requested to surrender himself to the commissioners in the said commission named,⁷ for a general description of the commissioners would be deemed too loose and uncertain.⁸ The summons to appear was before the commissioner in the district court at Manchester, and was signed "W. T. J., Commissioner." But there was another commissioner, and, although the bankrupt had not surrendered himself to Mr. W. T. J., nor to the district commissioner, it was urged for him, that he might have surrendered elsewhere to Mr. S., the other commissioner. This objection was overruled, and the judges held the conviction right.⁹ The notice also must be truly set out, with an averment of the service.¹⁰

¹ 25 L. J. and 7 Cox, ut supra.

² R. v. Evani, 1 Moo. C. C. 70, 75, 76.

³ R. v. Jones, 4 B. & Adol. 345; 1 Nev. & M. 78.

⁴ R. v. Lands, 25 L. J. M. C. 14. Misdemeanor under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 253; R. v. Hilton, 2 Cox, 318.

⁵ R. v. Harris, 19 L. J. M. C. 11 Den. 461. The words "at the time of his said examination" were not equivalent to "upon such examination," which are the words of the statute. 13 Jur. 990. Whether the absence of an averment that the bankrupt had been examined vitiated the indictment, qu.?

⁶ R. v. Frith, Leach, 10.

⁷ Stark. Cr. P. 571.

⁸ R. v. Frith, Leach, 11.

⁹ R. v. Dealtry, Den. 287; 2 Car. & K. 521.

¹⁰ R. v. Kenrick, 1 Cox, 146.

Where the indictment averred that the notice was according to 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, and it turned out to be according to 49 Geo. 3, c. 121, the variance was fatal.¹ So again, it must appear in evidence that the party was a bankrupt. For want of this proof, "all falls to the ground" in a criminal proceeding,² and, therefore, an infant was acquitted, because an infant cannot be a bankrupt.³ Likewise, if the words "with intent to defraud," be omitted, there is an end of the case.⁴ Parole evidence of what the bankrupt said at his last examination cannot be received, although no part of it was committed to writing.⁵ Some discussion has taken place as to whether the bankrupt's forced examination can be admitted in evidence. The prisoner was charged with mutilating one of his trade books. The principal evidence against him was his own examination before the court, got from him under a threat of committal. Willes, J., received it after objection made, and the conviction was affirmed.⁶ This subject underwent further considerable discussion. An indictment was framed on 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, s. 6, which provides that no agent shall be convicted by any evidence, if, previously to the indictment, he shall have disclosed the same before the commissioners of bankruptcy. The defendants before the indictment had been taken by their creditors, and disclosed the whole of their fraudulent conduct, in having transformed a bill of lading intrusted to them for their own benefit. They pleaded Not guilty, and under that plea offered their examination before the commissioners as a defence. The case was reserved. The point in question was, what could be called a disclosure? Nine judges⁷ held, that what was known before could not be called a disclosure. Four⁸ were of opinion that the facts came out at a compulsory examination, instituted bonâ fide by creditors, and that the defendant was entitled to protection. The conviction was affirmed.⁹

Very strict proof is required for these indictments. The petitioning creditor's debt was laid to have been due to A. B., C. D., and E. F., surviving executors of the last will and testament of G. H. Evidence was given that the prisoner had made an acknowledgment that he was indebted in a sum not exceeding 100*l.* to

¹ R. v. Burraston, Gow. 210.

² 3 Campb. 97, by Lord Ellenborough.

³ R. v. Cole, 1 Lord Raym. 443; 12 Mod. 243; Holt's Ca. 360.

⁴ R. v. Hill, 1 Car. & K. 168.

⁵ 5 C. & P. 138.

⁶ R. v. Scott, 25 L. J. M. C. 128. The court consisted of Lord Campbell; Alderson, B.; Coleridge, J.; Willes, J.; Bramwell, B. But Coleridge, J., delivered a long, learned and constitutional argument against the decision. Id. 133.

And see R. v. Slogett, 25 L. J. M. C. 93. S. P. To abide R. v. Scott. R. v. Cross and another, Dears. & B. 68.

⁷ Lord Campbell, C.J.; Pollock, C.B.; Wightman, J.; Willes, J.; Hill, J.; Martin, B.; Watson, B.; Bramwell, B.; Channell, B.

⁸ Williams, J.; Crompton, J.; Crowder, J.; Byles, J.

⁹ R. v. Sheen and another, Bell, 97; 28 L. J. M. C. 91. So was R. v. Strahan.

the executors of G. H. for work done, but it was not shown that the third executor had ever acted in the management of the business, although the two others had done so. And by Le Blanc, J., "It is not to be presumed that the three petitioning creditors had assented to carry on the business as trustees under the will, and the defect in evidence cannot be supplied by the admission tendered. It would be going too far to infer that he meant to include all three." An acquittal was directed.¹ Again, the prosecutor gave evidence that the prisoner had stated on his last examination the fact of his having given in a book containing an account of all his effects, but the book was not produced, nor was any reason assigned for its non-production. And the judges held the conviction wrong, for it could not be known whether the effects had been concealed or not, unless the book were brought forward.² It was also held in this case, that although the indictment had mentioned twenty or thirty creditors by name, it was sufficient to prove that five or six were actually creditors, for this case, said the learned judge, differed from forgery or uttering base coin: there the intent being to defraud particular persons, the parties must be proved to have been defrauded, seriatim as laid; whereas here, the intention being to defraud creditors generally, a single person might be shown to be a creditor, and the indictment would be supported. But in order to prove that twenty persons were creditors, the proceedings under the commission were deemed inadmissible.³ Various other objections were urged. It was said that there ought to have been an averment that the commissioners had taken the oaths, and that the adjournments ought to have been set out; that no statement was made of the objects of the commission, nor of the authority of the commissioners; that although the prisoner was said to have been declared a bankrupt, it was not added that he was so declared by the commissioners. And to one of the counts it was objected, that it did not even speak of the prisoner as a person subject to the bankrupt laws, or that he became indebted to any creditors, or became bankrupt.⁴ The judges, however, considered the difficulty respecting the book to be fatal, and it does not appear that they disposed of the other points.⁵ Another case will show the strictness which governs these proceedings. The indictment against the prisoner sufficiently specified certain portions of the property which were alleged to have been concealed, but went on to the mention of "one hundred other articles of household furniture," and "a certain debt due from one A. B. to the said prisoner," without entering into more particulars either of the debt or furniture. It was held, upon a case reserved, that the judgment should be arrested, for the property was not wholly specified, and no distinct value had been put upon the articles enumerated.⁶ Another objection was taken at the trial, that the

¹ R. v. Barnes, 1 Stark. 243.

⁴ Id. 75, 76.

² R. v. Evans, 1 Moo. C. C.

⁵ 1 Moo. C. C. 76.

70.

³ 1 Moo. C. C. 75.

⁶ R. v. Forsyth, Russ. & Ry.

274.

nature of the act of bankruptcy had not been set forth, and it was said that facts, from which the legal effect of bankruptcy might ensue, should have been alleged.¹ And it was, moreover, objected, that no venue, nor time, had been laid with respect to the averment of putting the notice in the "London Gazette."² The judges, however, decided upon the objection which we have first mentioned. Evidence of a prior secret act of bankruptcy cannot be received to invalidate the commission upon which the criminal proceeding is founded.³ It was also held in this case, that the statement of a commission under the Great Seal of Great Britain, was satisfied by proof of such a commission under the seal of Great Britain and Ireland, and that a commission of bankruptcy was not liable to stamp duty imposed by 44 Geo. 3, c. 98.⁴ By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, ss. 252, 253, (now repealed,)⁵ if the bankrupt made a false book with a view to deceive his creditors as to the mode of his expenditure, but not with a view to defraud them, he was not guilty of making a false and fraudulent entry under the 252nd section. The jury having negatived the intent to defraud, the conviction was holden wrong.⁶ The following proof was deemed insufficient, it being distinctly laid down that evidence of bankruptcy, not of adjudication merely, must be produced to satisfy the statute 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 253. A petition was filed in the Insolvent Court. A copy of the petition, certified to be a true copy by the proper officer, was made evidence by sect. 239 of the same Act. There was, however, no date of the filing of the petition, although on the back there was an indorsement purporting to state when the petition was filed. It was no part of the petition, and the conviction was quashed.⁷ An indictment alleged that the prisoner was possessed of real estate, and then went on to charge him with feloniously making default in discovering to whom he had assigned. This inconsistency was held fatal to the count.⁸ But an overt act, as a wilful absence from creditors, is enough without proving the intent to defraud.⁹ Proof, likewise, that the bankrupt received goods from a seller, who urgently got him to take them, is not sufficient.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Forsyth, Russ. & Ry. 275.

² As to the proof of the Gazette itself, which was made the foundation of a fourth objection. Id.

³ R. v. Bullock, Leach, 996; 1 Taunt. 71.

⁴ Leach, 1006; 1 Taunt. 82. See also 5 C. & P. 140; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

⁵ See sect. 255.

⁶ R. v. Ingham, 29 L. J. M. C. 18; Bell, 181. The case might be presented to the commissioners under sect. 256, when the question of certificate should arise. See R. v. Marner, Car. & M. 628.

⁷ R. v. Lands, 25 L. J. M. C. 14; 7 Cox, 89.

⁸ R. v. Harris, 3 Cox, 565. The indictment did not even state that he had been examined as to his estate.

⁹ R. v. Hughes, 1 Fost. & F. 726. The bankrupt left before the adjudication. On sect. 251 of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, Verdict, Guilty. It was likewise held in this case, that as the bankrupt had acted in procuring loans and lending money, he was liable as a "scrivener," and that proof of one instance would throw the onus on him.

¹⁰ R. v. Boyd, 5 Cox, 502.

Trial.] It seems that the trial may take place wherever the offence or respective offences charged in the indictment have been committed. As if the bankrupt's fraudulent refusal to answer were to occur at the examination before commissioners; in this case the indictment would probably be preferred in London. Again, if a concealment were to be the subject of the indictment, the prisoner would be tried in the county where such concealment took place; and it is no objection to say that the trial ought to be in London where the last examination took place, if it be in the power of the prosecutor to show a concealment in some other county, as, for instance, in Middlesex.¹ The venue under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, should be either in the county where the defendant was a trader, or where he committed the act of bankruptcy. Where a bankrupt committed felony by not surrendering to a fiat, the place where the district court is situate should be adopted for the venue.² Moreover, the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, enumerates offences against the laws relating to bankrupts and insolvents, amongst those which cannot be tried by the courts of quarter session, nor by the recorders of boroughs.³ By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 272, knowingly to insert a false advertisement under the Act in the "London Gazette," is a misdemeanor.

¹ R. v. Evani, 1 Moo. C. C. 72. 33 Geo. 3, c. 5. And see 39 Geo. 3,

² R. v. Milner, 2 Car. & K. 310. c. 50.

³ See 32 Geo. 2, c. 28, s. 17;

CHAPTER II.

OF FORGERY AT COMMON LAW.

Forgery is the false making of any written instrument for the purpose of fraud and deceit. It is punishable, according to its various forms, both at common law and by statute.

It relates both to public and private instruments, and in order to make the discussion of it more complete, we must treat of uttering forged instruments with a guilty knowledge.

Forgery at common law consists in the fraudulent design of cheating another. As soon as private advantage begins to operate by means of the forgery, or a prejudice begins to work to the detriment of a third person, the common law deems the defendant to be guilty, and there are cases where a mere erasure was not held to be forgery, because of the absence of any intent to defraud, whether for the sake of private benefit or mischief towards another individual.¹

The act of putting wax to writs, without sealing, has been deemed a high misdemeanor, and next to counterfeiting the seal.

The counterfeiting of matters of record is one of the offences under this head best known to the common law. It is, consequently said, that the public are deeply interested in the integrity of such matters, and that it cannot but be very mischievous that they should be either forged or falsified.² As, if the name of a person, against whom the coroner's jury had not found a verdict, should be inserted in an indictment founded upon the inquest.³ The coroner in such a case was found guilty upon an information for forgery.⁴ But many other public instruments may be enumerated. Hawkins mentions a privy seal, a licence from the barons of the exchequer to compound a debt, a certificate of holy orders, or a protection from a parliament man,⁵ and there is a case in Keble for forging patents.⁶ So where a person who was committed for contempt, counterfeited a discharge as from his creditors to the sheriff and gaoler, it was held by a majority of the judges that he might have been indicted for forgery at common law, but all

¹ See East, P. C. 854, whether, if no fraud result, the uttering of a forged instrument with a fraudulent intent be forgery, qu.? R. v. Withers, 4 Cox, 17.

² 1 Hawk. c. 70, s. 8.

³ R. v. Marsh and others, 3 Mod. 66.

⁴ R. v. Marsh, 3 Salk. 172.

⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 70, s. 9.

⁶ R. v. Winter and others, 2 Keb. 74.

held it to be a misdemeanor, and the conviction consequently right.¹ It is felony for a soldier to counterfeit the warrant of his captain.² In another case of a public nature it was objected, that as the writing,³ if genuine, must have been a nullity, the offence could not be of a higher nature than a cheat, but as the sessions had improperly adjudicated upon it as a case of forgery, which was not within their jurisdiction, no opinion was given.⁴ And, in a recent case where the prisoner forged an order from a magistrate to a gaoler for the discharge of a prisoner, the judges held the conviction right.⁵ And the better opinion seems to be, that at common law, the alteration of any written instrument is as much a forgery as the making of it,⁶ provided the alteration were material, and done for the ultimate advantage of the forger.⁷

Forgery at common law must be of some document or writing. Hence painting an artist's name in the corner of a copy of a picture, in order to pass it off as the original, is not forgery.⁸ So, forging and uttering wrappers with "Borwick's Baking Powders" on them, is not a forgery of a document at common law. It was an imitation, but no forgery. The fraud consisted in putting powder within the wrappers which was not genuine.⁹

Private instruments.] Several private writings are also mentioned as the subjects of forgery. And there was a suspicion at one time that some of these, as wills, making a false order for the payment of rent, and other writings of an inferior nature, were not such forgeries as the common law would recognize.¹⁰ But, at length, a defendant forged an order from the Duke of Buckingham, addressed to J. W. the defendant, to charge so much alum to the duke's account, and out of the money arising from the sale to pay J. W. and another so much per ton. And, upon conviction, it was urged, that this was but a cheat, and no forgery, and the more so as the fraud did not succeed. But it was held to be a forgery, and a distinction was made between cheats at common law, and upon the statute 33 Hen. 8, where the party received a prejudice in a case like the present, where it was not necessary that any damage at all should accrue to the person intended to be defrauded.¹¹ So that the rule became settled that the counterfeiting of any writing with a fraudulent intent, whereby another party might be prejudiced, was forgery at common law.

¹ R. v. Fawcett, East, P. C. 862.

² 2 Ro. Rep. 266.

³ The initials of the name of a clerk to commissioners of appeal.

⁴ R. v. Gibbs, 1 East, 173; East, P. C. 864.

⁵ R. v. Harris, 1 Moo. C. C. 393.

⁶ R. v. Kinder, 1 Hawk. c. 70, s. 2; East, P. C. 855.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 70, s. 4.

⁸ R. v. Closs, Dears. & B. 460.

⁹ R. v. Smith, Dears. & B. 566;

27 L. J. M. C. 225.

¹⁰ See 1 Hawk. c. 70, s. 11; East, P. C. 859, 860.

¹¹ R. v. Ward, 2 Ld. Raym. 1461; Str. 747. S. P. R. v. Deakins, 1 Sid. 142.

Although a distinction had been made between false deeds and other writings, it being necessary to show in the former case that some person was prejudiced by the forgery.¹ Still, if no one can by possibility be prejudiced by the act, it is not a forgery.² And thus when the defendant was acquitted of forging a railway pass, but convicted of uttering it, the judgment was arrested, no fraud having been perpetrated.³ But R. v. Boulton is overruled, for some one might have been prejudiced, and, therefore, when a person forged the certificate of a clergyman, testifying to the prisoner's merits as a schoolmaster, he was, although acquitted of the forgery, held rightly convicted of uttering the document, although the fraud failed.⁴ However, when an indictment charged the defendant with forging a diploma of the College of Surgeons, in order to represent himself as a member, he was held to have been wrongly convicted of forgery, because no one was defrauded by it. Had the charge been for uttering, the case might have been different.⁵ But it was never doubted that making a false deed concerning a private writing was punishable at common law.⁶ Or antedating a deed with a fraudulent view.⁷ And although it was held that the omission of matters out of a will was not forgery, as a legacy which the testator had ordered,⁸ yet if one were directed to give land for life with a remainder in fee, and the estate for life were wilfully omitted, it was said, that this would be forgery.⁹ And the wilful insertion of a legacy without authority is held to have been forgery,¹⁰ although Sir John Marvin's case seems to militate against this position.¹¹ But the statute law upon the subject of wills has made such an alteration as to render any further inquiry upon these points immaterial.

It was also held, that if the instrument were genuine upon the face of it, it did not matter whether it were of validity or not, if in truth it were such as it was counterfeited for. So that the forgery of a protection in the name of A. was deemed as much a crime as if A. had really been a member of parliament.¹² And herein consists the difference between cases where the instrument is good in itself, and where it is informal.¹³

¹ R. v. Goate, 1 Ld. Raym. 737.

² R. v. Knight, 1 Salk. 375; 1 Ld. Raym. 527.

³ R. v. Boulton, 2 Car. & K. 604.

⁴ R. v. Sharman, Dears. 285; 23 L. J. M. C. 51. See R. v. Smythies, 19 L. J. M. C. 31; Den. 498.

⁵ R. v. Hodgson, 25 L. J. M. C. 78; Dears. & B. 3. One name had been substituted for another, and the date had been changed, but the intent to defraud was absent, and that must have been proved.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 70, s. 11.

⁷ Puckering v. Fisher, 1 And. 100. See also 1 Hawk. c. 70, s. 2.

⁸ R. v. Combe, Mo. 759.

⁹ R. v. Combe, Noy. 101.

¹⁰ East, P. C. 856.

¹¹ Dy. 288.

¹² R. v. Deakin, 1 Sid. 142.

¹³ See R. v. Burke, Russ. & Ry. 496, where an instrument was described in the indictment as a promissory note, and being produced, turned out not to be payable to bearer on demand, nor payable in

Other private writings are, a bill of lading¹, a power of attorney,² letters of credit to gather money,³ an acquittance,⁴ a marriage register,⁵ a bill of exchange,⁶ a promissory note,⁷ or indorsement, (all these being instruments not under seal), and, as it seems, a county court summons.⁸ An affidavit to obtain money.⁹ A certificate of good conduct as an able seaman.¹⁰ A station-master's account of the collection and delivery of parcels.¹¹ A false letter of recommendation for the place of police constable, forged and uttered.¹² The alteration of letter M. in a seaman's character, signifying middling, and the insertion of G., for good, uttered.¹³

Indictment.] It may be observed that the indictment should set out the forged record or public instrument, or private writing,¹⁴ with the accuracy which would be required upon an indictment for stealing it, but no copy or fac-simile need be placed upon the record.¹⁵ And the indictment then goes on to state, that the defendant did falsely¹⁶ make, forge,¹⁷ and counterfeit the same; or in the case of uttering, did, unlawfully and fraudulently, utter it with intent to defraud.¹⁸ But it is not sufficient to state the writing to be a certain instrument partly printed, partly written, in the words and figures following, that is to say, &c. The judges in this case were of opinion, that the indictment was bad for want of stating what the instrument was, in respect of which money, but only promissory, on the part of the maker, that it should be taken in payment in part for a two-pound note. And the judge held that the judgment should be arrested, and independently of the question concerning the promissory note, it was disputed at the trial whether the instrument itself was not a mere nullity, and so not the subject of forgery at common law.

¹ R. v. Stocker, 1 Salk. 342; 5 Mod. 137.

² R. v. Farr, T. Raym. 84.

³ R. v. Savage, Sty. 12.

⁴ R. v. Ferrers, 1 Sid. 287.

⁵ R. v. Dudley, 2 Sid. 71; S. C. 3 Leon. 170.

⁶ R. v. Sheldon, Str. 748, cited.

⁷ R. v. Ward, cited, Id.; see also East, P. C. 862, note (g); 2 Str. 1144.

⁸ R. v. Collier, 5 C. & P. 160, semble, by Patteson, J.

⁹ R. v. O'Brian, 7 Mod. 378.

¹⁰ R. v. Toshack, Den. 492. With intent to defraud the examiners, or the Trinity House. At all events if uttered.

¹¹ R. v. Griffiths, Dears. & B. 548; 27 L. J. M. C. 205.

¹² R. v. Moah, Dears. B. 550; 27 L. J. M. C. 204.

¹³ R. v. Wilson, Dears. & B. 558; 27 L. J. M. C. 230.

¹⁴ Before the repeal of 5 Eliz. it had been held, that an indictment for an offence, cognizable by that statute, might be laid equally well at common law. Str. 1144, R. v. O'Brian.

¹⁵ 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 41.

¹⁶ The word "counterfeit" implies falsity. R. v. Savage, Sty. 12.

¹⁷ To say "forge or cause to be forged," is bad for uncertainty. R. v. Stocker, 1 Salk. 342; S. C. 5 Mod. 137; S. P. R. v. Walcot, Ca. Temp. Holt, 345. R. v. Flint, Ca. T. H. 370. See also R. v. Morley, 1 Y. & Jer. 221.

¹⁸ The intent to cheat or defraud must be alleged, R. v. Rushworth, Russ. & Ry. 317, though not any particular person.

the forgery was alleged to have been committed, and also because it did not appear that the party signing it had the authority for that purpose. The defendant having previously been bound over to appear at the next assizes to receive sentence, the judgment was arrested.¹

Trial.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 41, the trial may be either in the county where the offence was committed, or where the offender has been apprehended, and is in custody.² Although the prisoner be not in court when the trial begins, he still is indicted in custody. The jurisdiction appears sufficiently by the caption. A verdict "guilty of forgery, but there is no evidence of its having been done within the jurisdiction of the court," amounts to a conviction.³ And any accessory, before or after the fact, may be dealt with in the same manner as the principal offender.⁴

Judgment.] The judgment is, that the offender be fined and imprisoned.⁵ The same judgment may be passed upon principals in the second degree, and accessories before the fact, for in forgery at common law all are principals,⁶ and accessories after the fact are also punishable in like manner. The offence itself is said to rest in misdemeanor,⁷ and in other cases where the act in question is not a cheat, it is alleged to be indictable as for misdemeanor.

¹ R. v. Wilcox, Russ. & Ry. 50.

² But not at the quarter sessions, either at common law, R. v. Gibbs, 1 East, 173, or by statute.

³ R. v. Smythies, 19 L. J. M. C. 31. Den. 498; on the authority of R. v. Whiley, 1 Car. & K. 150; 2 Moo. C. C. 186; incorrectly reported. Lord Denman alone held the conviction wrong. Littledale, J., doubted. 19 L. J. M. C. 32, Parke, B.

⁴ See 3 Campb. 78; Russ. & Ry. 214; Id. 428.

⁵ East, P. C. 1003; 1 Hawk. c. 70, s. 1.

⁶ East, P. C. 973; 2 Russ. C. M. 31; Leach, 1096, n. See likewise R. v. Bothe, Mo. 663.

⁷ East, P. C. 100.

CHAPTER III.

OF FORGING OR COUNTERFEITING THE SEALS.

The forgery of the Queen's seals is now reduced from high treason to forgery.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 1,¹ Whosoever shall forge or counterfeit, or shall utter, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited, the great seal of the United Kingdom, Her Majesty's privy seal, any private signet of Her Majesty, Her Majesty's royal sign manual, any of Her Majesty's seals appointed by the twenty-fourth article of the Union between England and Scotland to be kept, used, and continued in Scotland, the great seal of Ireland, or the privy seal of Ireland, or shall forge or counterfeit the stamp or impression of any of the seals aforesaid, or shall utter any document or instrument whatsoever, having thereon or affixed thereto the stamp or impression of any such forged or counterfeited seal, knowing the same to be the stamp or impression of such forged or counterfeited seal, or any forged or counterfeited stamp or impression made or apparently intended to resemble the stamp or impression of any of the seals aforesaid, knowing the same to be forged or counterfeited, or shall forge or alter, or utter knowing the same to be forged or altered, any document or instrument having any of the said stamps or impressions thereon or affixed thereto, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

It was formerly holden, that, besides these seals, other regal seals might be the subjects of treason, especially before the 25 Ed. 3,² although, after that statute, the better opinion is, that to counterfeit such seals was only felony.³ However, it is now agreed that the forgery of other seals than those mentioned in the 2nd section of the Act of 1 Will. 4, c. 66, would be a high misdemeanor only.⁴ Instances of such other seals are—those appertaining to courts of justice, the seals of statutes and recognizances, and the seal of the docket.⁵ And it is observable, that the great seal does not become valueless upon a demise of the crown, but continues to be the great seal of England until another be delivered.⁶ And so it is with respect to the other seals, and by Lord

¹ The commencement of this Act is Nov. 1, 1861. [Sect. 56.] It is not to extend to Scotland. [Sect. 55.] The interpretation of criminal possession. [Sect. 45.]

² Cap. 2, s. 5.

³ See 1 Hale, P. C. 179.

⁴ East, P. C. 84.

⁵ Id.

⁶ Id. 85.

Hale, even after the breaking of the old seal. If a counterfeit of such were to be applied to an instrument of the date wherein the old seal stood, or to an instrument without date, it would be high treason.¹ Although if one were to counterfeit the seal of one prince to a patent supposed to be granted in the time of another, or to a supposed patent of the same prince after a new seal made and delivered, the case would be different, on the ground of there being no such seal.² There is this difference between the offence of counterfeiting these seals and forgery—that in the case of forgery, the crime consists in the falsification of the instrument, but in the former the offence is created by the falsification of the seal, with reference in particular to the instrument. And hence it follows, that a person cannot be convicted under this Act for affixing a true seal to a false instrument. This offence, indeed, i. e. of affixing a true seal to a false instrument, was once deemed high treason,³ but it subsequently came to be considered a great misprision only.⁴ L., a clerk in chancery, joined two clean parchments, fit for letters patent, by means of glue, so close together, that they might have been taken for one. The upper one was very thin. The prisoner then put one label through both, and wrote a true patent upon the thin piece, which was brought to the lord chancellor, and sealed with the great seal. The label and seal were then annexed to both the parchments, one of which was written, and the other blank. The prisoner then cut off the glued skirts, and taking off the parchment from the labels, wrote another patent on the blank parchment, and published it, and this was considered a very great misprision by a majority of the judges.⁵ Upon the same principle, should the lord chancellor or lord keeper put the great seal to any instrument without warrant, it is only a misprision.⁶ But if the least alteration be made in the seal itself, the higher offence attaches forthwith, as if the seal were split, and then closed again to a false patent.⁷ And, as in cases of perjury, if the counterfeiting be such as to deceive an ordinary beholder, it is no defence to allege that there is a slight variance. As, where one Robinson urged that the crown had been left out in the fabricated signet which he was charged with uttering, and that certain usual words in the style were omitted, and certain new words inserted.⁸

The question of counterfeit or not is particularly for the consideration of the jury.⁹

It may be added, that the mere intent to use a false seal is in-

¹ 1 Hale, P. C. 177 : see 1 Taunt. 71. R. v. Badcock, Leach, 996.

² 1 Hale, P. C. 178 ; East, P. C. 86.

³ See 1 Hale, P. C. 181. R. v. Peytenyn, cited, 2 Ro. Rep. 51, by Sir Henry Yelverton, att.-gen. R. v. Winter, 2 Keb. 74. See East, P. C. 85.

⁴ 3 Inst. 15 ; East, P. C. 85.

⁵ R. v. Leek, 3 Inst. 15 ; 12 Rep. 15 ; Kel. C. C. 80.

⁶ See 3 Inst. 15 ; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 51 ; East, P. C. 85.

⁷ East, P. C. 86.

⁸ R. v. Robinson, 2 Ro. Rep. 50.

⁹ East, P. C. 87.

sufficient to create this offence, as if one should have such a seal in possession without employing it.¹

Indictment.] That A., on, &c., feloniously did forge the great seal of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and the same did affix to a certain parchment, &c., he the said A. well knowing that the said seal was forged, against the form of the statute, &c.

CHAPTER IV.

OF FORGERY AND PERSONATION, TRANSFER OF STOCK, &c.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 2, Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any transfer² of any share or interest of or in any stock, annuity, or other public fund which now is or hereafter may be transferable at the Bank of England or at the Bank of Ireland, or of or in the capital stock of any body corporate, company, or society which now is or hereafter may be established by charter, or by, under, or by virtue of any Act, or shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any power of attorney or other authority to transfer any share or interest of or in any such stock, annuity, public fund, or capital stock, or to receive any dividend or money payable in respect of any such share or interest, or shall demand or endeavour to have any such share or interest transferred, or to receive any dividend or money payable in respect thereof, by virtue of any such forged or altered power of attorney or other authority, knowing the same to be forged or altered, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 3, whosoever shall falsely and deceitfully personate any owner of any share or interest of or in any stock, annuity, or other public fund which now is or hereafter may be transferable at the Bank of England, or at the Bank of Ireland, or any owner of any share or interest of or in the capital stock of any body corporate, company, or society which now is or hereafter may be established by charter, or by, under, or by virtue of any Act, or any owner of any dividend or money payable in respect of any such share or interest, and shall thereby transfer or endeavour to transfer any share or interest belonging to any such owner, or thereby receive or endeavour to receive any money due to any such owner, as if such offender were the true and lawful owner, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

¹ 1 East, P. C. 85; 1 Hawk. against forgers of transfers of stock, c. 27, s. 50. was repealed by 24 & 25 Vict.

² The Act 33 Geo. 3, c. 39, c. 101.

By sect. 4, whosoever shall forge any name, handwriting, or signature purporting to be the name, handwriting, or signature of a witness attesting the execution of any power of attorney or other authority to transfer any share or interest of or in any such stock, annuity, public fund, or capital stock as is in either of the last two preceding sections mentioned, or to receive any dividend or money payable in respect of any such share or interest, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any such power of attorney or other authority, with any such forged name, handwriting, or signature thereon, knowing the same to be forged, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 5, whosoever shall wilfully make any false entry in, or wilfully alter any word or figure in, any of the books of account of the Bank of England or the Bank of Ireland, in which books the accounts of the owners of any stock, &c., shall be kept, or shall in any manner wilfully falsify any of the accounts of any of such owners, with intent to defraud, or shall wilfully make any transfer of any share or interest of or in any stock, &c. in the name of any person not being the true and lawful owner of such share or interest, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

And by sect. 6, whosoever, being a clerk, officer, or servant of or other person employed or intrusted by the governor and company of the Bank of England or the governor and company of the Bank of Ireland, shall knowingly make out or deliver any dividend warrant, or warrant for payment of any annuity, interest, or money payable at the bank of England or Ireland, for a greater or less amount than the person on whose behalf such warrant shall be made out is entitled to, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

The authorities connected with these sections are not numerous. In the case of Fauntleroy, some of the counts charged him with forging a letter of attorney to transfer and assign certain stock belonging to F. Young, and others called this power of attorney a deed. The prisoner was acquitted upon the counts which mentioned the letter of attorney, and was convicted upon those which alleged that he had forged "a certain false and counterfeit deed," and the question raised was, whether this power was "a deed." The judges, however, entertained no doubt, and the prisoner was executed.¹ In another case, it was objected that the party whose name was forged, and who was a mere trustee, could not be a competent witness to prove the forgery. But it appearing that he had disavowed the power of attorney, and that the attestation had not been made according to the rules of the bank, the judges held that he had been rightly admitted a witness, and the prisoner was executed.² And even if the rules of the bank are not always strictly followed, the offender will not be allowed to escape under all circumstances. As where the prisoner forged a transfer of stock which was not witnessed according to the orders of the bank, an objection was raised to the conviction upon that ground; but the judges held that the offence was completed without the attestation, that being no part of the instrument, but only added ex abundanti cautela by the bank for their own protection. In the same case, much stress was laid upon the want of acceptance by the proprietor of the stock in question, and as the Act of parliament expressly provided that no transfer should be valued unless accepted, it was earnestly contended that the transfer was incomplete; and that being so, it would follow that no transfer could be made, nor forgery committed. But the judges held, that the transfer was complete notwithstanding this want of acceptance, for the mere act of transferring stock would cause it, in case of death, to pass into the hands of the transferee's executors; and, moreover, they were of opinion, that had no stock at all been standing in the name of the party whose name was forged, the transfer would have been equally complete for the purposes of forgery, and the prisoner was executed.³

By 5 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 22, to forge any certificate, &c., used in the mutual transfer of capital under that Act, was made felony. So also to alter any number, figure, or word therein, or alter or publish any such counterfeit or altered instrument.

*Indictment.*⁴] That A., by the name and description of —,

¹ R. v. Fauntleroy, 1 Moo. C. C. 52; 2 Bing. 413. R. v. Waite, Russ. & Ry. 505; 1 Bing. 121.

² R. v. Gade, Leach, 732.

³ By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42, in any indictment for forging, altering, uttering, disposing, or putting off any instrument it shall be sufficient to describe such instrument by any name or designation by which the same may be usually known, or by the purport thereof, without setting out any copy or fac-simile thereof, or otherwise describing the same or the value thereof.

⁴ By sect. 44, it shall be sufficient, in any indictment for forging, altering, uttering, offering, disposing of, or putting off any instrument whatsoever, where it shall be necessary to allege an intent to defraud, to allege that the party accused did the act with intent to defraud, without alleging to defraud any particular person; and on the trial of any such offence it shall not be necessary to prove an intent to defraud any particular person, but it shall be sufficient to prove that the party accused did the act charged with an intent to defraud.

on, &c., was possessed of and entitled to a certain interest and share, to wit, £—, interest and share of and in —, and that B. well knowing the premises, but unlawfully devising and intending to defraud, heretofore and whilst the said A. was so possessed and entitled as aforesaid unto the said interest and share of and in, &c., to wit, on, &c., feloniously did make a certain transfer of the said — from the said A. to one C., with intent to defraud, against the form, &c. 2nd count, uttering; 3rd count, making a false entry in the books of account; 4th count, forging a transfer.

The prisoner bought twenty shares of a broker. They stood in the name of B., and were of the C. company. The prisoner owed the broker money, and therefore the latter would not let the prisoner have the deed of transfer. The prisoner then got a boy to forge a transfer in B.'s name, and it was held, that the intent might be laid to defraud the C. company and B.¹

It is not necessary that the money due upon a dividend warrant should be actually received in order to bring the case within the 6th section. For where, under the old statute 31 Geo. 2, c. 22, s. 77, the prisoner succeeded in his personation of one Hart, and had thereby obtained the dividend warrant in the usual way, but was apprehended before he applied for the money, the judges held, that the offence was complete by obtaining and indorsing the warrant, and the prisoner was executed.²

CHAPTER V.

OF FORGERY OF EAST INDIA BONDS.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 7, whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any East India bond, or any East India bond debenture, or security, or any indorsement on or assignment of any such bond, &c., with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.³

¹ R. v. Hoatson, 2 Car. & K. 777. But the general intent is now sufficient.

² R. v. Parr, Leach, 434.

³ And the same punishments are awarded against the forgery of East Indian debentures issued under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 25, of that Act, sect. 13.

Indictment.] That A. on, &c., feloniously did forge a certain East India bond, [debenture,] [security,] with intent to defraud, against the form, &c.

Second count, uttering.

CHAPTER VI.

OF FORGERY OF EXCHEQUER BILLS, BONDS, &c.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 8, whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any exchequer bill, bond, or debenture, or any indorsement on or assignment of any exchequer bill, &c., or any receipt or certificate for interest accruing thereon, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment for not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.¹

By sect. 9, whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall make or cause, &c. or aid or assist in making, or shall knowingly have in his custody or possession, any frame, mould, or instrument having therein any words, letters, figures, marks, lines, or devices peculiar to and appearing in the substance of any paper provided or used for exchequer bills, bonds or debentures, or any machinery for working any threads into the substance of any paper, or any such thread, and intended to imitate such words, &c., or any plate peculiarly employed for printing such exchequer bills, &c., or any die or seal peculiarly used for preparing any such plate, or for sealing such exchequer bills, &c., or any plate, die, or seal intended to imitate any such plate, die, or seal, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 10, the like punishments are awarded against such as make paper in imitation of that used for exchequer bills, &c.

And by sect. 11, having in possession any paper to be used for exchequer bills, &c. before it is stamped, signed, and issued for public use, is a misdemeanor, and punishable with imprisonment not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour.¹

¹ The stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 23, ss. 17, 18, 19, is virtually dispensed with, although not repealed.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 5, s. 13, if any person shall forge, &c. any exchequer bill or coupon for interest, or any indorsement, or tender the same in payment, or demand to have such bill, or exchequer bill with a counterfeit indorsement, exchanged for money or another bill, with a guilty knowledge, with intent to defraud the Queen, or the persons appointed to pay the same, &c., he shall be adjudged a felon, and suffer accordingly.²

Indictment—Exchequer bills.] That A. on, &c., feloniously did forge a certain paper writing commonly called an exchequer bill, [bond,] with intent to defraud. Second count, uttering.

With reference to the description of instruments in indictments for engraving, the 43rd section of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, enacts, in any indictment for engraving or making the whole or any part of any instrument, matter, or thing whatsoever, or for using or having the unlawful custody or possession of any plate or other material upon which the whole or any part of any instrument, matter, or thing whatsoever shall have been engraved or made, or for having the unlawful custody or possession of any paper upon which the whole or any part of any instrument, matter, or thing whatsoever shall have been made or printed, it shall be sufficient to describe such instrument, matter, or thing by any name or designation by which the same may be usually known, without setting out any copy or fac-simile of the whole or any part of such instrument, matter, or thing.

And as to criminal possession, the interpretation of that offence is as follows:—Under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 45, where the having any matter in the custody or possession of any person is in this Act expressed to be an offence, if any person shall have any such matter in his personal custody or possession, or shall knowingly and wilfully have any such matter in the actual custody or possession of any other person, or shall knowingly and wilfully have any such matter in any dwelling house or other building, lodging, apartment, field, or other place, open or inclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether such matter shall be so had for his own use or for the use or benefit of another, every such person shall be deemed and taken to have such matter in his custody or possession within the meaning of this Act.

¹ See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 5, s. 19, a similar clause, but the words "not less than six months" are omitted here, and hard labour is substituted.

² "Felon and suffer accordingly." The statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, punishes the forgery of an exchequer bill, or the fraudulent indorsement on or assignment of it, or any receipt or certificate for interest thereon, with penal servitude for life, &c. Therefore, the only way to interpret this clause must be to refer to the 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 8, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, for the punishment of such felonies under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 5, s. 13, as are not mentioned in 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 8.

CHAPTER VII.

OF FORGERY OF BANK OR OTHER NOTES, AND OTHER INCIDENTS RELATING TO THEM.

The forgery of bank notes, with the kindred offences belonging to those instruments, is the next subject for our notice.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 12, Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any note or bill of exchange of the governor and company of the Bank of England or of the governor and company of the Bank of Ireland, or of any other body corporate, company, or person carrying on the business of bankers, commonly called a bank note, a bank bill of exchange, or a bank post bill, or any indorsement on or assignment of any bank note, &c. with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to be imprisoned not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour and solitary confinement.

By sect. 13, Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall purchase or receive, or have in his possession, any forged bank note, bank bill of exchange, or bank post bill, or blank bank note, blank bank bill of exchange, or blank bank post bill, knowing the same to be forged, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen years nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

By sect. 14, as to making and engraving plates, &c. for bank notes, &c.,—Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall make or have any frame, &c., for making paper with the words "Bank of England," &c. upon it, or shall sell such paper, shall be liable to the like punishments.

By sect. 15, Nothing in the last preceding section contained shall prevent any person from issuing any bill of exchange or promissory note having the amount thereof expressed in guineas, or in a numerical figure or figures denoting the amount thereof in pounds sterling, appearing visible in the substance of the paper upon which the same shall be written or printed, nor shall prevent any person from making, using, or selling any paper having waving or curved lines or any other devices in the nature of watermarks visible in the substance of the paper, not being bar lines or laying wire lines, provided the same are not so contrived as to form the groundwork or texture of the paper, or to resemble the waving or curved laying wire lines or bar lines or the watermarks of the paper used by the governor and company of the banks of England and Ireland respectively.

By sect. 16, the like punishments, again, are awarded against such as engrave or have any plate, &c., for making notes of Bank of England or Ireland, or other banks, or who have such plate, &c., or utter or have paper upon which a blank bank note, &c. shall be printed.

Or by sect. 17, who shall engrave on a plate, &c. any word, number, or device resembling part of a bank note or bill, or use or have any such plate, &c., or utter or have any paper on which any such word, &c. is impressed.

So, by sect. 18, for making or having mould for making paper with the name of any banker, or making or having such paper, the same punishments are ordained.

And by sect. 19 the same punishments are enacted for engraving plates for foreign bills or notes, or using or having such plates, or uttering paper on which any part of any such bill or note is printed.

Search for paper, &c. in forgery, and for forged instruments.]
By sect. 46, if it shall be made to appear, by information on oath or affirmation before a justice, that there is reasonable cause to believe that any person has in his custody or possession, without lawful authority or excuse, any note or bill of the governor and company of the bank of England or Ireland, or of any body corporate, company, or person carrying on the business of bankers, or any frame, mould, or implement for making paper in imitation of the paper used for such notes or bills, or any such paper, or any plate, wood, stone, or other material having thereon any words, forms, devices, or characters capable of producing or intended to produce the impression of any such note or bill, or any part thereof, or any tool, implement, or material used or employed or intended to be used or employed in or about any of the operations aforesaid, or any forged security, document, or instrument whatsoever, or any machinery, frame, mould, plate, die, seal, paper, or other matter or thing used or employed or intended to be used or employed in the forgery of any security, document or instrument whatsoever, such justice may, if he think fit, grant a warrant to search for the same; and if the same shall be found upon such search, it shall be lawful to seize and carry the same before some justice of the county or place, to be by him disposed of according to law; and all such matters and things so seized as aforesaid shall by order of the court where any such offender shall be tried, or in case there shall be no such trial, then by order of some justice, be defaced and destroyed or otherwise disposed of as such court or justice shall direct.

The questions which have arisen concerning the forgery of bank notes, apply chiefly to alterations of the instrument and to uttering. In a recent case, it was held that the uttering of a forged note in England, payable in Ireland only, was within the statutes in existence concerning forgery before the passing of 1 Will. 4, c. 66.¹ The omission of the word "alter" in an indictment, will not occasion an acquittal if the word "forge" be used, because an alteration is a forgery.² Where a person expunged a receipt upon the face of a blank bill, it was urged that he could not be convicted of rasing an indorsement, but the judges held that the writing in question was of the same effect with an indorsement, that it had been always accepted and taken as such, and consequently, that the conviction was right.³ The alteration must be in a material part of the instrument, and the place of payment of the note has been considered such a material part. As where the prisoner covered the names of W. & Co., the London correspondents who had stopped payment, with those of B. & Co., solvent persons, and then exchanged a country bank note. The judges, with the exception of Lawrence, J., who considered the drawer liable notwithstanding the alteration, held the conviction right. Some said that in declaring upon the note, the place where it is payable must appear,⁴ and another⁵ observed, that it did not depend upon that circumstance, but that it was material to the credit of the note to be made payable at a solvent house.⁶ So where the prisoner altered a figure in a bank note from 2 to 5, it was held to be a forgery.⁷ Again, the prisoner altered a note for the payment of 1*l*. by substituting the word "ten," so that the note appeared to be for the payment of 10*l*.; but this was held not to be such an omission as would shelter the prisoner from the consequences of his fraudulent purpose, and his conviction was held right.⁸

There is no difference between uttering, and disposing and putting away. Where the prisoner P. gave some notes to his confederate H. for the purpose of being put off, and the confederate did so in the absence of the other prisoner P., the majority of the judges held that a conviction for disposing and putting away was correct, though H. was acquitted. P. was also convicted upon the count for uttering and publishing.⁹ It is, indeed, immaterial whether the party receiving the forged bank note be cognizant of its fabrication or not, and thus there is no distinction between an accomplice and an innocent agent on a count for disposing and putting away. So that a conviction of this nature was held right where the jury found that the person who uttered the note was not aware

¹ R. v. Kirkwood, 1 Moo. C. C. 311.

² R. v. Elsworth, East, P. C. 986.

³ R. v. Bigg, East, P. C. 882.

⁴ Macdonald, C. B.; Thomson, B.

⁵ Mansfield, C. J.

⁶ R. v. Treble, Russ. & Ry. 164; Leach, 1040; 1 Taunt. 328.

And to show that the alteration was not made by the country bank, the drawer was allowed to be called as a witness to prove that he had never received a parcel containing this amongst other notes. And upon this point also the conviction was affirmed by a majority of the judges.

⁷ R. v. Dawson, East, P. C. 978.

⁸ R. v. Post, Russ. & Ry. 101.

⁹ R. v. Palmer and another, Leach, 978; 1 New Rep. 96. R. v. Soares and another, Russ. & Ry. 25.

of its being forged, but where the judges, on the contrary, when they considered the case, came to the conclusion, upon referring to the evidence, that he had that knowledge;¹ nor is it any objection that the party to whom the notes have been offered is an agent of the bank employed for the purpose of detecting utterers.² But it is not an offence of uttering, nor of disposing, nor putting away to exhibit a forged note to a person for the purpose of gaining a false reputation for substance, nor to leave it sealed up with that person, if, in fact, the forged instrument be not parted with, nor tendered, nor offered, nor used in any way to get money or credit upon it.³ But, on the contrary, if the object be to obtain money, either on the instrument, or, which is far more common, by means of it, the offence of uttering is completed. As where in order to induce the prosecutor to advance money to A., the prisoner placed a forged receipt for poor rates in the hands of the prosecutor, merely for the purpose of inspection as far as the property of the receipt was concerned, but, in reality, to gain an advance of money. Here, the jury having found an intent to defraud the prosecutor, the judges after two arguments held that the conviction was right for uttering the forged receipt.⁴ In Shukard's case the instrument was in this form:⁵ "I promise to pay, &c., five hundred pens, for the governor and company," &c. The judges, however, entertained no doubt upon this point, the rule being, that however ill an instrument may be executed, if it be calculated to deceive the person to whom it is tendered, the offence is complete, and thus a note which promised to pay to J. C., or bearer, the sum of fifty —, was considered sufficiently fabricated for the purposes of fraud, and especially as in the margin the word fifty appeared, although an experienced person might have detected the cheat.⁶ It was also objected in the last case that there was no watermark on the note, but it was answered, that upon the count charging the instrument to be a note for the payment of money, such an objection could not be available, and the case of one Vaughan was cited.⁷ So where a person from the bank declared that he could not have been imposed upon by the counterfeit notes, the court were of the same opinion, since others had been deluded by them.⁸ And so it was again where the evidence went to show that the note was likely to have imposed upon all persons who were not inspectors.⁹ And although the number be only put at the end of the note, it would nevertheless be a good bank note.¹⁰ But if a man with the most ordinary caution could not be deceived, the case would not be within the statute, although

¹ R. v. Giles, 1 Moo. C. C. 166.

² R. v. Holden and others, Russ. & Ry. 154; 2 Taunt. 334; Leach, 1019.

³ R. v. Shukard, Russ. & Ry. 200.

⁴ R. v. Ion, Den. & P. 475; 21 L. J. M. C. 166.

⁵ Russ. & Ry. 200.

⁶ R. v. Elliott, Leach, 175.

⁷ Id. 178.

⁸ R. v. Hoost, East, P. C. 950.

⁹ R. v. Mazagora, Russ. & Ry. 291.

¹⁰ By Buller, J., Leach, 748.

the offence would be a fraud at common law. As, "No. 946, I promise to pay to John Wilson, Esq., or bearer, ten pounds. London, March 4th, 1776, for self and company of my Bank of England 10*l.* entered. J. Jones." The prisoner had been tried for a fraud in uttering this instrument, and Blackstone, J., had directed an acquittal, believing that it was a forgery. But the judges upon an indictment for forgery, said that this note was anything but a bank note, and that the representation of the utterer avowing its validity could not vary the case,¹ and a note without a signature was held not to be the subject of forgery.² Upon an indictment for forging a guinea note of the Royal Bank of Scotland, it occurred to Hullock, B., that an express authority to draw and issue these notes should have been shown; but upon referring to the statutes 48 Geo. 3, c. 149, s. 16, and 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 23, after the trial, the learned judge came to the conclusion that if these statutes did not confer a legal power to issue promissory notes, they recognized it in the amplest manner, and the judges were of the same opinion.³ In cases concerning illegal possession, the statute assumes the original possession to have been illegal, so that a person who retains a forged note in order to maintain an action against the party from whom he has received it, must not be charged with feloniously having the forged instrument in his possession.⁴

It seems that if a banking company be also a corporation for some other purpose, it will not be competent for them to issue bills in their corporate capacity without an especial authority from the legislature. Consequently, the uttering of their notes, if issued in the corporate names, would not be within the statute, and if it were so, the indictment must carefully express that the company in question were carrying on the business of bankers. So that a conviction was held wrong, because the uttering of a Scotch note in England was held not to be within an Act which excepted Scotland from its provisions.⁵ And so it is if the charge be for having a plate in possession for making bills of exchange in the name of a corporation; upon such an occasion, whilst the judges were disposed to entertain the objection above alluded to, they arrested the judgment for want of an averment that the company carried on the business of bankers.⁶ And where a promissory note ran thus, "I promise to pay the bearer one guinea on demand here in cash or Bank of England notes, &c.," the judges were understood to have held the conviction wrong.⁷ However, although the same exception alluded to above occurs in 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s.

¹ R. v. Jones, Leach, 204; 1 Doug. 300, 302, n.; East, P. C. 883. And see 4 Taunt. 303, recognized there by Mansfield, C. J., who said that Jones's case was that of telling a falsehood.

² R. v. Pateman, Russ. & Ry. 495.

³ R. v. M'Keay, 1 Moo. C. C. 130.

⁴ Brooks v. Warwick, 2 Stark. 389.

⁵ R. v. M'Kay, Russ. & Ry. 71.

⁶ R. v. Catapodi, Russ. & Ry.

⁷ R. v. Wilcock, 2 Russ. C. M. 498.

30, the forging, uttering, or altering in England of any writing or matter whatsoever purporting to be made, or actually made out of England, is declared to be punishable in like manner as if the instrument were made in England, or purported so to be. And by the same clause the same rule is extended to the forgery, &c., in England, of bills, notes, deeds, bonds, &c., payable or purporting so to be out of England. This Act extends to foreign notes.¹ Under sect. 18, the learned judge (Coleridge) doubted whether a plate merely bearing on it the royal arms of Scotland and the Britannia, although placed as they would have been found in a complete note of the British Linen Banking Company, satisfied the words of the statute; but the court were of opinion² that the conviction was right.³

Indictment.] The indictment for forging a bank note states that A. on, &c., feloniously did forge a certain note of the Bank of England with intent to defraud. There will be a second count for uttering. The same form will serve for a "bank post bill," i. e. "a certain bank post bill." Upon one occasion, it was held that it was not competent to describe a bank post bill as a bill of exchange, but the judges said that it might be called a bank bill of exchange. And in the same case they were of opinion, that discharging an indorsement and inserting another, or making it thereby a general instead of a special indorsement, was an alteration of an indorsement.⁴ An objection was once made that the indictment omitted to express in what manner, or to whom the notes in question were disposed of, but the judges observed that the general allegation was sufficient.⁵

It has been made a question, whether an indictment for forgery upon a joint stock bank must lay the intent to have been to defraud one of the registered officers, whose name is returned under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, or whether it is sufficient to state the intent generally.⁶ But more recently it has been determined that the prosecution need not be in the name of the public officer, yet, nevertheless, that if the public officer be named as the party defrauded, there must be an averment of his appointment under the statute above mentioned.⁷ Again, it seems that an indictment against a shareholder for a forgery upon a joint stock bank, must not lay the intent to be to defraud another shareholder and others.⁸ But now the statement of general intent is sufficient.

¹ R. v. Lee, 2 Moo. & Rob. 281.

² Coleridge and Crompton, JJ., at first hesitating.

³ R. v. Keith, 24 L. J. M. C. 110; Dears. 486.

⁴ R. v. Birkett and another, Russ. & Ry. 251.

⁵ R. v. Holden and others, Russ. & Ry. 154.

⁶ R. v. Burgiss, 7 C. & P. 490.

Whether the returns must be proved by the production of examined copies to show that such persons are the officers of the joint stock bank, qu. ? And see R. v. Carter, Den. 65.

⁷ R. v. Beard, 8 C. & P. 143.

⁸ R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 586.

Evidence.] Difficulties have occurred upon some occasions of uttering, disposing, and having in possession, as to the evidence. They have been principally upon the question of guilty knowledge. Thus, in the case of uttering, a prior tender of a forged note may be shown, provided the note be produced, or the forgery of it proved.¹

It was observed in this case by the judges, that the weight of the evidence would depend on the number of the other notes, the distance of time at which they were put off, and the situation of life of the prisoner, so as to make it more or less probable that so many notes should pass through his hands in the course of business.² The conduct of the prisoner may also be laid before the jury,³ and it seems that what he said upon a former uttering⁴ is likewise admissible. But there are adverse decisions to the latter holding.⁵ Such evidence was deemed allowable, although the witnesses' names were not on the back of the indictment, yet Littledale, J., observed, that it was not usual to press such evidence.⁶ And again, it was held upon an indictment for uttering Edinburgh notes, that evidence of uttering Paisley notes was clearly admissible if the latter formed the subject of another indictment.⁷ However, evidence of former utterings are admissible generally, whether the subjects of those utterings form charges in other indictments or not.⁸ The judges certainly doubted upon the point at one time.⁹ Upon another occasion two forged notes found upon the prisoner were given in evidence in furtherance of a prosecution for uttering with a guilty knowledge.¹⁰

Still, if the second uttering be made the subject of a fresh indictment, it cannot be brought forward to support a charge for a prior uttering.¹¹

However, it seems that there is more difficulty in admitting proof of uttering subsequent to the charge laid in the indictment, and the rule has been recognized that previous acts only can be in general offered for that purpose, although it has been said, that a subsequent uttering of notes of the same manufacture with those connected with the principal case, and upon an occasion not foreign from that transaction, might be admissible.¹² With reference to the

¹ R. v. Ball, Russ. & Ry. 132. Diss. Chambre, J., 1 Campb. 324. See also R. v. Green, 3 Car. & K. 209. R. v. Nisbett, 6 Cox, 320, post.

² Russ. & Ry. 133.

³ R. v. Whiley, and another, Leach, 983; 1 New Rep. 92, nom. Wylie and another. R. v. Tattershall was cited, Leach, 984.

⁴ R. v. Nisbett, 6 Cox, 320.

⁵ R. v. Phillips, 1 Lew. C. C. 105; R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 586.

⁶ R. v. Martin and another, 1 Lew. C. C. 104.

⁷ R. v. Hodgson, Id. 103. See however, R. v. Sunderland, post.

⁸ R. v. Phillips, ante. R. v. Kirkwood, 1 Lew. C. C. 103, cor. Littledale, J.

⁹ Id. per Hullock, B.

¹⁰ R. v. Sunderland, 2 Lew. C. C. 109.

¹¹ R. v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 633.

¹² R. v. Taverner, Car. Cr. L. 195; cor. Lord Ellenborough; Thomson, C. B.; Lawrence, J.

time of uttering, it has been held sufficient upon an indictment for uttering in June to prove another such uttering in November,¹ although some judges doubted upon one occasion whether six weeks were not too long an interval.² And Gaselee, J., was once disposed to admit evidence of an uttering, one month after the charge in the indictment.³ That learned judge consulted with Alexander, C. B., and referred to Russell on Crimes, but said he would reserve the point. The evidence, however, was not pressed.⁴ Upon an indictment for having forged notes in possession, where the evidence was that the prisoner directed the vendee of the notes to a hole in a bank where they in fact were, it was objected that this possession was insufficient, because the notes were not in the actual possession of the prisoner, nor in his custody, nor in his dwelling house, but a witness having stated at the trial that the prisoner had admitted having "put the notes in an old shoe," the judges held the conviction right. And some thought that if the notes had been in any place under the prisoner's control, or put there by his direction, it would have been enough, and it was the prevailing opinion amongst them that every uttering would include a custody and possession within the statute.⁵ But a letter found in the prisoner's lodgings, but not upon him, he being in custody when it came, cannot be read to show a guilty knowledge.⁶

It is yet to be noticed with regard to a previous or subsequent uttering, that the falsity of the instrument itself must be shown. And therefore, where the forged note was not produced, nor its non-appearance accounted for, proof that the prisoner returned the money after an uttering of a 5*l.* note, and received back the note, was held insufficient, and he was recommended to mercy.⁷ It may be added, that a person who utters notes through the medium of an innocent agent, is as much the principal as though he did the act with his own hand. And thus, where the prisoner gave some forged notes to a boy for the purchase of goods which were brought back to him by the boy, it was held, that he was rightly charged with the offence of forgery.⁸ With reference to the proof of forgery of the note itself, the cashier might have been called, because he was not personally responsible.⁹ But it was not indispensable that he should be examined, and upon more than one occasion it has been held that a person acquainted with the handwriting of that officer might disprove the false signature.¹⁰ So, in the case of the signing clerk, where it could be established aliunde that the handwriting produced is not the signature of that officer.¹¹

¹ R. v. Stewart, 2 C. & P. 114.

⁷ R. v. Millard, Russ. & Ry.

² R. v. Millard, Russ. & Ry. 245.

⁸ R. v. Giles, Car. C. L. 191.

³ R. v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 411.

⁹ R. v. Newland, Leach, 311.

⁴ 4 C. & P. 413.

¹⁰ R. v. Hughes, East, P. C.

⁵ R. v. Rowley, Russ. & Ry. 1002. R. v. M'Guire, Id.

110.

¹¹ Bank Prosecutions, Russ. &

⁶ R. v. Huet. See Leach, 820. Ry. 378.

Now, however, the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, has abolished the incompetency of a witness by reason of interest.

By 16 Vict. c. 2, the signatures of the cashiers impressed upon notes, bank post bills, and bank bills of exchange by machinery, are declared to be as valid as though they should be written.

It had been usual for the bank in cases of forgery which they considered not aggravated, to prefer an indictment for the lesser offence of having the forged note in possession, and thus to subject the prisoner to transportation only. Upon such an occasion it was left to the judges to say—1. Whether this could be done where the proof of having in possession could not be shown without also proving the putting off, which was a capital offence, the transaction being the same. 2. Whether the counsel for the bank might elect under such circumstances. 3. Whether the judges would try the charge for the minor offence before disposing of the capital indictment. 4. Whether, if during the proof of the minor charge, it should turn out that a capital forgery had been committed, the judge must direct an acquittal, and order the prisoner to be tried capitally upon an indictment already found, or upon a new indictment. 5. Whether, if the prisoner were acquitted, by consent, of the higher felony, he must be acquitted of the minor charge upon evidence of his having been guilty of the capital crime. Upon these respective questions the judges held that an acquittal need not be directed, the minor offence not merging in the greater, and that the bank might proceed upon the minor charge, although indictments were found for the capital offence.¹ Under 7 Geo. 4, c. 46, s. 4, a certified copy of the return forwarded to the stamp office is not exclusive evidence. An examined copy is as good, or better.²

The plates of bankers in Upper Canada have been held to be within the protection of the repealed Act, 1 Will. 4, c. 66.³

Indictment. Foreign bills or notes.] The indictment for forging or uttering foreign bills or notes should have a translation of the original. The prisoner was charged with forging a Prussian treasury note, but it was neither translated nor explained by averment on the record, and judgment was arrested upon a case reserved.⁴ So upon the 19th section of 1 Will. 4, c. 66, where the charge was for having in custody illegally certain plates upon which Polish promissory notes were engraved, it was objected that an inaccurate translation had been appended, and that, instead of engrossing fac-similes of the notes upon the parchment, the fac-simile had been sewed with thread to it, and the judges were of opinion that all the counts in which the fac-similes of the notes were not engrossed upon the parchment were bad. And,

¹ Bank Prosecutions, Russ. & Ry. 378.

² R. v. Carter, Den. C. C. 65. See Edwards v. Buchanan, 3 B. & Adol. 788.

³ R. v. Hannon, 2 Moo. C. C. 77. Parke, B., and Alderson, B., dub.

⁴ R. v. Goldstein, Russ. & Ry. 473.

moreover, it was considered that although the statement in the indictment that the notes were for the payment of five florins, without showing what money florins were, nor of what value, was defective, the fault was nevertheless cured after verdict, by 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 11, the offence having been described in the words of the statute.¹

CHAPTER VIII.

OF FORGERY OF DEEDS, BONDS, &c.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 20, Whosoever, with intent to defraud, shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any deed, or any bond or writing obligatory, or any assignment at law or in equity of any such bond or writing obligatory, or shall forge any name, handwriting, or signature purporting to be the name, handwriting, or signature of a witness attesting the execution of any deed, bond, or writing obligatory, or shall offer, &c., any deed, bond, or writing obligatory having thereon any such forged name, handwriting, or signature, knowing the same to be forged, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Deeds, bonds, &c.] There have been some decisions as to the meaning of the word "deed," under the old statutes. For instance, in Fauntleroy's case, a power of attorney was held to be a deed.² So, a power of attorney to receive a seaman's wages was held to be a deed, and it made no difference whether the party whose name was fraudulently used had existence or not.³ In like manner, a power of attorney to receive prize money was considered to be a deed.⁴ And, in the same case, it was the opinion of a majority of the judges, that a want of compliance with certain directing forms prescribed by statutes, did not invalidate the instrument, nor make it the less the subject of forgery.⁵ Again, an indenture of apprenticeship has been held to be a deed, and the prisoners were held properly convicted of forging such a docu-

¹ R. v. Warshaner, 1 Moo. C. C. 466; 7 C. & P. 416, 423, 428, 429. R. v. Harris, 1 Moo. C. C. 470; 7 C. & P. 416. R. v. Moses, Id. 423. R. v. Harris, 428, 429. Id. Depending on the decision in R. v. Warshaner.

² 1 Moo. C. C. 52.

³ R. v. Lewis, East, P. C. 957; Fost. 116; Leach, 451, 607.

⁴ R. v. Lyon, Russ. & Ry. 255.

⁵ Id.

ment with intent to defraud the stewards of the feast of the Sons of the Clergy.¹ Other cases, especially, of uttering powers of attorney, and where these writings were regarded as deeds, may also be found cited in Fauntleroy's case.²

A deed was within the statute 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3.³ It was held, that such a deed needed not to be set out verbatim.⁴

The prisoner was charged with forging and uttering a deed of transfer of ten shares in the London and Croydon Railway Company, with intent, 1st, to defraud A.; 2nd, B.; and 3rd, the company. In July, 1845, one C. transferred, by two deeds of transfer, 100 shares to A. These deeds purported to be executed by A. as transferee, but the deeds were so far false as that the signatures were not those of A. but of the prisoner, and without A.'s cognizance. On the 2nd of August, 1845, by seven deeds of transfer purporting to be executed by A. as transferrer, these shares were transferred to five different persons, and by one deed ten shares purported to have been transferred to B. The name of A. was signed to all these deeds by the prisoner without A.'s cognizance. There was a profit on these shares due to A., but he refused to receive it, and no further call could be made on the shares. The prisoner was held, upon these facts, entitled to an acquittal, because there was no fraud upon the company, nor upon A., nor upon B.⁵

But a prisoner may be convicted of a forgery with intent to defraud, although no person could have been defrauded.⁶ Taking seals and affixing them to a genuine signature, with intent to defraud, is forgery, where the instrument requires a seal.⁷

Indictment.] The indictment states, that A. on, &c., a certain deed [or bond] feloniously did forge with intent to defraud.

There will be a second count for uttering.

Where a bond had this addition in the indictment—"by which A. was bound," judgment was arrested, for A. could not be bound by a forged bond.⁸ The prisoner was indicted for forging an administration bond, on administration granted of the effects of E. S. It was objected that no forgery had been proved, because the statute 22 & 23 Car. 2, c. 10, s. 1, requires the bond to be given by the party to whom administration is granted, and not by the party entitled to administration. The bond, therefore, having been given by the party to whom, in fact, administration was granted, was a good bond. The objection was overruled.⁹

¹ R. v. Jones, Leach, 366; East, P. C. 991.

² 1 Moo. C. C. 67, 68.

³ Now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42.

⁴ R. v. Davies, 2 Moo. C. C. 177; 9 C. & P. 47. See R. v. Collins, 2 Moo. & Rob. 461. A forged deed will be impounded by the court if it transpires in a civil suit.

⁵ R. v. Marcus, 2 Car. & K. 356.

⁶ Den. & P. 501, Maule, J.

⁷ R. v. Collins, 1 Cox, 57.

⁸ R. v. —, 3 Mod. 104.

⁹ R. v. Barber, 2 Car. & K. 434; 1 Cox, 62. In this case it was also held that although two signatures to a joint and several bond were genuine, yet, as the third was forged, the prisoner was guilty of forgery.

Fraudulent concealment and falsifying of deeds.] By 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 24, extended to mortgagees by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 8, any seller or mortgagor of land, or of any chattels, real or personal, or choses in action, conveyed or assigned to a purchaser, or the solicitor or agent of such seller, &c., who shall conceal any settlement, deed, will, &c., material to any title or incumbrance from the purchaser, or falsify any pedigree upon which the title depends, to induce him to accept the title, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, or both, and shall also be liable in an action for damages for any loss thereby occasioned. And, in estimating the damages, regard shall be had to any expenditure by the purchaser, &c., upon the land. But no prosecution shall be instituted without the sanction of the attorney-general, nor without notice to the person whom it is intended to prosecute.

CHAPTER IX.

OF FORGERY OF WILLS.

Wills.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 21, Whosoever, with intent to defraud, shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any will, testament, codicil, or testamentary instrument, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life, or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

It is no extenuation of the offence that the party whose will has been forged was alive at the time of the forgery,¹ nor that the forgery was of the last will and testament of the living person. As where a laundress proved that the instrument purporting to be her last will was false. The objection was raised, that as without a death a will could have no effect, the crime could not have occurred. But the judges held, that although it should appear impossible for such an instrument as the instrument forged to exist, a forgery might yet be committed by a false writing purporting to be such an instrument, provided it should, upon the face of it, seem to be good and valid.² So, where the will of a non-existing person was fraudulently produced, the same conclu-

¹ R. v. Murphy, 10 St. Tr. 183. was argued, but in vain, that the will was ambulatory, and could ² R. v. Sterling, Leach, 99. have no validity till death.

R. v. Coogan, East, P. C. 948. It

sion was arrived at;¹ nor did it make any difference that the prisoner had varied the christian name of the supposed testator, as where the will began—"I, Peter Perry," &c., and ended "John +^{his} Perry."² But in the absence of satisfactory evidence, the judges will presume that the will is a will of land, and, under the old statutes concerning wills, this was an important consideration, because, where a false will was produced, signed by two witnesses only, and the prosecutor could not show that the supposed testator had any chattel interest, the conviction was held wrong for want of a proper attestation.³

Indictment.] The indictment charges that A. on, &c., feloniously did forge a certain will and testament, with intent thereby then to defraud.

The second count states that A. on, &c., feloniously did offer and utter a certain forged will, &c., with intent thereby then to defraud the said A., when he so offered and uttered the said last-mentioned will, &c., then knowing the same to be forged.

It has been held sufficient to describe the instrument as either "a certain false, forged, and counterfeited will," or as "a certain paper writing, with a seal thereto affixed, purporting to be the last will and testament," &c., or as "a certain will and testament."⁴ And it will be observed, that an apparent blunder in the will, as that of signing John Perry to a writing which began with Peter Perry, is quite different from an inaccurate mention of the forged instrument itself. Therefore, where the false writing began thus—"James Gibson," and the indictment recited it thus—"I, James Gibson," the variance was held to be fatal.⁵

Evidence.] After having established the falsity of the document, some slight proof of the identity of the party whose will has been forged is necessary. In the case of a seaman's will, the muster book of the Navy Office has been held admissible for the purpose of proving that the supposed testator belonged to a particular ship,⁶ and the assignation book will be received in order to prove the revocation of a probate.⁷ But this latter evidence is not now necessary, although once so considered.⁸ So that where the probate of a will unrepealed was put in by the prisoner, and relied on as a bar, Lord Ellenborough overruled the defence, and the prisoner was convicted. And the authority of R. v. Vincent, which had been previously impeached by all the judges, was rejected.⁹ Nine

¹ R. v. Avery, 8 C. & P. 596.

² R. v. Fitzgerald, Leach, 20.

³ R. v. Wall, East, P. C. 953. The stat. 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9, requires two witnesses only in all cases. As to seamen's wills, see 2 Will. 4, c. 46, s. 33, post.

⁴ R. v. Birch, Leach, 79. See Stark, Cr. P. 503; East, P. C. 980.

⁵ R. v. Coogan, Leach, 448.

⁶ R. v. Fitzgerald and another, Leach, 20. R. v. Rhodes, Id. 24.

R. v. Jannet, 2 Russ. C. M. 443.

⁷ R. v. Ramsbottom, Leach, 25, n.

⁸ R. v. Vincent, Str. 481.

⁹ R. v. Gibson, Russ. & Ry. 343, n. R. v. Goodrich, 3 T. R. 126, cited.

judges held this ruling of Lord Ellenborough to be correct in a subsequent case, and they concurred in denying the authority of R. v. Vincent, which the counsel for the defence had urged upon the court.¹

Where a person was charged with uttering a forged will, which it was suggested had been written over effaced pencil marks, an engraver who had examined the paper with a mirror and traced the pencil marks, was admitted as a witness for the prosecution, for the purpose of giving his opinion.² A. was a mortgagor, B. mortgagee, and C. an attorney; A. stated to C. that he was the owner of certain lands, and produced a forged will as his proof, which he gave to C. The money was advanced, and C. acted as solicitor. Upon an indictment against A. for uttering the forged will, it was held that C. must produce it, and also give evidence as to what A. said as to the advance of the money.³ There was a joint charge against three for procuring certain other persons to utter a forged will. The only evidence for the prosecution was of separate acts done at separate times and places by each of the parties charged as accessories. After that evidence was given, one pleaded guilty. It was held that the other two might be convicted.⁴ Where the charge was for uttering a forged will, with intent to defraud a person unknown, in the absence of evidence to show that any person could have been defrauded, the judges were evenly divided upon the question.⁵

¹ R. v. Buttery and another, Russ. & Ry. 342.

² R. v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 434.

³ R. v. Avery, 8 C. & P. 596. See R. v. Tylney and another, Den. C. C. 319.

⁴ R. v. Barber, 1 Car. & K. 442.

⁵ R. v. Tylney, ut supra. Whether a forged document intrusted to an attorney as an attorney can be produced as evidence on a trial for forgery, qu.?

To forge the seal or signature of the Probate Court is felony, and punishable with penal servitude for life or not less than seven years, or with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three years nor less than one year. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 31, s. 29.

CHAPTER X.

OF FORGERY OF BILLS AND NOTES.

Bills and notes.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 22, Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any bill of exchange or any acceptance,¹ indorsement, or assignment of any bill of exchange, or any promissory note for the payment of money, or any indorsement or assignment of such promissory note,² with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.³

And by sect. 25, Whenever any cheque or draft on any banker shall be crossed with the name of a banker, or with transverse lines with the words “and company,” or any abbreviation thereof, whosoever shall obliterate, add to, or alter any such crossing, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any cheque or draft whereon any such obliteration, addition, or alteration has been made, knowing the same to have been made with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than two years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

With regard to bills and notes, many questions have arisen upon the subject of a false or fictitious name. The rule seems to be that whenever such a false name is used with a fraudulent intention, the case comes within the statute; whilst, on the other hand, it is possible for an individual to employ his right name and yet be guilty of forgery. Though, as a general principle, if the real name be placed upon the instrument, the offence will only amount to a cheat, or the transaction may be considered as a debt. And again, the party may make use of an assumed name, and yet be guiltless of the more serious offence of forgery. The prisoner forged an acceptance in the name of Scott, but the witnesses for the prosecution proved that he, the prisoner, had, as far as they knew, gone by the name of Bontien. For the defence, it was shown that the prisoner had always been known by the name of Scott, but that he might have been nicknamed Bont or Bontien. The judges held the conviction wrong, because it did not appear to them but that the prisoner had really gone by the name of Scott before the acceptance, or that he had assumed the name of Scott upon that occasion for the express purpose of fraud.¹ So, where the prisoner used the name of another person fraudulently, and accepted a bill in that name, but with general views of supporting a false credit, and not with the sole purpose of issuing the specific bill, he was held not to be guilty of forgery.² Whence it is, that if the prisoner should give his right name, he will, of necessity, be acquitted of forgery.³ So it was, again, where the prisoner uttered a right indorsement, with a false assertion that he, the prisoner, was the indorser.⁴ So, where the prisoner indorsed a bill, "per procuration," "Thomas Tomlinson"—"Emanuel White,"—Emanuel White being his real name, it was held not to be a forgery. The judges were unanimous. It was a bare lie. The prisoner said he had the authority and wrote his own name.⁵ But if the real name of the prisoner should appear and no proof of any change of name be given till the time of the fraud, it lies on him to show his assumption of the wrong name on other occasions, and for other purposes.⁶ It is, indeed, for the jury to say whether the name has been assumed with a fraudulent view. As soon as that fact is found against the accused, the judges will very rarely disturb the verdict, and therefore, although the point was once much discussed, it is now past controversy, that to make an instrument in a fictitious name, (i. e., a name by which the forger was not known at the time of the forgery,) with a fraudulent design, is forgery.⁷ And it is no objection that the name indorsed does not correspond with that in the body of the bill.⁸ So again, where the prisoner drew a draft in the name of Vennist, who never kept cash with the banker drawn upon, nor was in any way known to him.⁹ And it is entirely immaterial whether the person whose name is assumed, ever had existence, for the gist of the crime is, the deception through a false medium. So that where Bolland forged an instrument in the name of J. B., of Rathbone Place, he was executed after a consideration of his case. the principal doubt having arisen (as it was understood) upon the fact that no such person as J. B. was in existence at the time of the offence.¹⁰ A fortiori, where the name of an existing person is employed.¹¹ If

¹ The stat. 18 Geo. 3, c. 18, concerning forging acceptances with intent to defraud corporations, was repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101.

² By whatever name designated, if it be in law such an instrument. Sect. 39.

³ See ss. 23, 24, post, p. 670.

¹ R. v. Bontien, Russ. & Ry. C. & P. 408. A receipt, to the same effect.

² R. v. Whyte, 5 Cox, 290. R. v. Bontien, supra, and R. v. Burton-upon-Trent (Inhabitants), 3 M. & S. 537, were cited.

³ R. v. Woodward, cited, Leach, 782. See R. v. Story, Russ. & Ry. 81.

⁴ R. v. Hevey, Leach, 229; East, P. C. 856; Russ. & Ry. 407, n.

⁵ R. v. White, Den. 208; 2 Car. & K. 204. See R. v. Arscott, 6

⁶ Leach, 83.

⁷ R. v. Dunn, Leach, 57; East, P. C. 962. R. v. Lewis, Id. 957.

⁸ R. v. Parke, 1 Cox, 4.

⁹ R. v. Lockett, Leach, 94; East, P. C. 940. R. v. Abrahams, Leach, 96; East, 941.

¹⁰ R. v. Bolland, Leach, 83; East, P. C. 958. R. v. Wilks, East, P. C. 957.

¹¹ R. v. Hadfield, 2 Russ. C. M. 231, citing 6 Ev. stat.

no such person as the individual whose name has been assumed, has ever kept cash with the banker to whom the false cheque is presented ; it is for the prisoner to show that the name at the foot of the cheque is real. The circumstance above stated is primâ faciæ evidence that the name was fictitious.¹ And any inquiries made to ascertain the existence of the person whose name has been so assumed, are matters for the consideration of the jury.²

It is, again, unimportant that the prisoner, instead of contradicting himself from the person whose name is fraudulently put forward, endeavours to identify himself as the same individual. As in R. v. Dunn, where the prisoner was asked what name should be put to her mark, upon which she replied, "You know my name ; you may write Mary Wallace ;" whereas it was clearly proved that her name was Elizabeth Dunn.³ Nor is it material that the party to whom the forged instrument is tendered, inclines to give credit to the prisoner as well as to the fabricated writing. As, where the prosecutor, deceived by the genteel appearance of the prisoner, took his cheque upon a firm which he knew, but where the prisoner had no effects. Judgment was respited in order that it might be considered whether the tradesman's having given credit to the prisoner, and not to the draft, had not varied the case ; but this was held to be forgery, and the conviction was affirmed.⁴ Then, again, it is of no consequence that the prisoner could have got credit by using his real name, if, in truth, he is the forger or utterer of a counterfeit writing. Thus, the prisoner found a good bill, and being informed that he could not have it discounted unless he put his name on the back, he wrote "John Williams," whereas his name was Taft. But, had he given his right name, the money would have been paid to him, and upon this, Nares, J., reserved the point. The judges, however, held this to be a forging, for the owner of the bill lost all chance of tracing his property, and the person who discounted the bill lost the benefit of a real indorser, should the prior indorsement have accidentally failed.⁵ The same point was subsequently submitted to the judges, in the case of a false receipt indorsed upon a bill of exchange, and their decision was the same.⁶ The same law prevails, if a person writes an acceptance in his own name to represent a fictitious firm. It is the same as though a fictitious person was represented.⁷

Again, it is no defence, that the prisoner, when coming to a strange place, might take what name he should think fit. As where the party came to lodge with a Mrs. W. by the name of Cooke, and was never known to his landlady by any other name ; but it turned out that his real name was Francis, and that he had

¹ R. v. Buckler, 5 C. & P. 118.
R. v. King, Id. 123.

² 5 C. & P. 125.

³ East, P. C. 962.

⁴ R. v. Shepherd, East, P. C. 967
Leach, 226.

⁵ R. v. Taft, Leach, 172. R. v. Levy, Id. 173.

⁶ R. v. Taylor, Leach, 214.
R. v. Marshall, Russ. & Ry. 76.

R. v. Whaley, Id. 90.

⁷ R. v. Rogers, 8 C. & P. 629.

gone by other names. He forged a draft in the name of Cooke, and judgment was respited on the ground of a supposed right on the part of the prisoner to assume any name, but the judges were of opinion that he had been properly convicted.¹ And a similar decision was arrived at, where the prisoner had likewise assumed a false name for the purpose of pecuniary fraud connected with the forgery.² Again, the resumption of a real name fraudulently may be a forgery, although there was once a judgment to the contrary.³ But it seems that the learned judge qualified this decision by basing it upon the particular circumstances of the case, and in fact, the opinion was pronounced too precipitately, the judges, in reality, having adjourned the question to another term, when many inclined to think that forgery had been committed.⁴ But subsequently, in the case of Scott, who called witnesses to shelter himself from the consequences of a fraud, by showing that he had done the act, which was the subject of the indictment, in his real name, the judges held the conviction wrong, but solely on the ground of there not being sufficient evidence that the prisoner had not gone by the name of Scott before the time of accepting the bill in that name, or, that he had assumed the name for that purpose.⁵ Again, supposing that the real name should happen to tally with that of another individual fraudulently personated, whether that individual be or not in existence, a forgery may be committed. As where one Thomas Brown uttered a forged five-guinea note signed "Thomas Brown," representing the drawer, at the same time, as his brother. The judges held this a forgery.⁶ So, where a bill drawn abroad, and payable to H. Davis or order, got into the hands of another H. Davis, who placed his name on the back of the bill, all the judges agreed that this was forgery, although the real name was indorsed.⁷ So, where the prisoner offered a promissory note, signed "William Holland," in payment for some corn, representing to the seller that Wm. H. kept a public-house at Tipton, and that he the prisoner was the payee, it was held that as the payee, he must be cognizant of the particulars of the note, and consequently, as the prosecutor had proved that the note was not the note of the publican, it was considered to be no defence to insinuate that another William Holland lived in the neighbourhood, who might have been the maker of the

¹ R. v. Francis, Russ. & Ry. 209. The draft having been dishonoured, the prisoner added "junior" to it and sent it back to the bankers, and then absconded.

² R. v. Peacock, Russ. & Ry. 278.

³ R. v. Aickles, Leach, 438; per Ashhurst, J. East, P. C. 968.

⁴ The judgment was given by Ashhurst, J., in May, 1787, and the judges considered the question in the following Trinity Term, but no resolution was come to upon the point, there being a considerable difference of opinion. See East, P. C. 969; Leach, ut supra.

⁵ R. v. Bontien and another, Russ. & Ry. 260; ante, p. 660.

⁶ R. v. Parkes and another, Leach, 775. Parkes was discharged by reason of a mistake in the venue.

⁷ Mead v. Young, 4 T. R. 28. See also R. v. Maddock, 2 Russ. C. M. 500.

note. It lay upon the prisoner to prove that fact, and to show that the note was, in reality, that of the other William Holland.¹ There was a case, however, where the prisoner, D. Walker, a pauper in Liverpool, made a bill signed D. Walker & Co., purporting to be drawn on Devaynes & Co., London,—and it is said, that Chambre, J., ruled that the evidence was not sufficient to go to the jury. The evidence was, that the prisoner drew the bill in question, and that similar bills had been drawn in like manner, and provided for when due, although the drawer was unknown to Devaynes & Co.²

And, moreover, when there is a true name, the addition of a false description for the purpose of giving an instrument additional credit, is not forgery. As where the bill ran thus:—

Two months after date, &c. To Mr. Thomas Bowden, Baize Manufacturer, Romford, Essex.

Accepted, Thomas Bowden.

Payable when due, at No. 40, Castle Street, Holborn, London.

The words and figures in italics were added by the prisoner. It appeared that no such person as T. B. lived at Castle Street, or ever carried on the business of a baize manufacturer at Romford. But there was evidence to show that there was such a person as Thomas Bowden, and that the acceptance upon the bill which the prisoner was charged with forging, was his. Nevertheless, the jury found that there was no such person as T. B. But Best, J., thinking that there was such a person, respited the judgment, and the conviction was held wrong, although there was no person answering the description or addition, and a pardon was ordered to be applied for.³

Whereas, on the other hand, if there be one answering such description or addition, it is forgery. The prisoner uttered the following instrument:—

Leeds, Oct. 22nd, 1847.

No. 148. 7. 9. Three Months, &c. Value received.—A.B.
To Mr. Wm. Wilkinson, Halifax. Payable, London.

The name of the drawee and acceptor was correct. There was such a man. He was in the prisoner's employ, but the address "Halifax," and "payable, London," were added by the prisoner. And there were persons at Halifax of the name of Wm. Wilkinson, from none of whom had any authority been received. This was unanimously held to be a forgery. It was an intent to make the acceptance appear to be that of a different existing person.⁴

¹ R. v. Hampton, 1 Moo. C. C. 255.

² R. v. Walker, 2 Russ. C. M. 326, citing 6 Ev. Stat. 580.

³ R. v. Webb, Russ. & Ry. 405.

⁴ R. v. Blenkinsop, Den. 276. See, to the same effect, R. v. Mitchell, Id. 282, note, where the question was put to the jury: "Do you find that he (the prisoner) got the second bill with the intention to pass it as the bill of one John Cooper, real or imaginary, other than the John Cooper whose name is on the bill? If so, he is guilty of forgery."

It is no defence to allege, that the uttering depended upon a future investigation. As, where the prosecutor said, that he hoped the bill he was offering would satisfy the bank as a security for a debt which he owed, and the manager replied that it would depend upon the result of certain inquiries. The uttering was complete.¹

The prisoner used the name of Mitchell, who was once employed at the Nine Elms station, and Mitchell, who was called for the prisoner, proved that he once gave him authority to use his name. But the prisoner had connected Mitchell with the bill he had forged, as being at the Nine Elms station, and he admitted his knowledge of Mitchell having left the place. Blenkinsop's case, just mentioned, was cited for the prosecution, and the prisoner was found guilty. So that the genuine acceptance of an existing person, used by a person in different circumstances, amounts to the acceptance of a fictitious drawer, so as to constitute a felonious uttering.² The contemplation of the specific bill, must, however, have been in the prisoner's mind, in order to constitute forgery, when he has accepted a bill in the name of another.³

Where an error is palpable upon the face of a bill or note, so as to make it plainly defective, it cannot be the subject of forgery. As if it should appear upon a charge of forging an acceptance, that there is no drawer's name to the bill.⁴ So, a paper of the following tenor,—“Please to pay on demand to the bearer the sum of 20*l.* for value received,—as witness my hand, Messrs. Thomas Gully & Co.”—was held not to be a bill of exchange, nor an order for the payment of money.⁵ Or, where a check was declared not to be valid, unless it had the signatures of three parish officers. The prisoner altered it when it had the signature of one only. This was an incomplete instrument, although, subsequently, the signatures of all three officers were attached, and the cheque was cashed.⁶ But, where the blot is merely collateral or incidental, a manifest distinction is recognized by the judges. And the 4th section of 1 Will. 4, c. 66, expressly ordained,⁷ that offenders might be indicted under the Act, although the instrument in question did not, in any respect, conform to the statutory provision relating thereto, if it were, in law, the particular instrument described in the indictment. The prisoner drew a bill upon the treasurer of the navy, payable to —, or order, whereas he ought to have drawn upon the commissioners. But the judges held, that the instrument, however inaccurate in this respect as a bill of exchange, might have been an order for the payment of money, had there been a payee mentioned. The conviction was held wrong for want

¹ R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 582.

⁵ R. v. Curry, 2 Moo. C. C.

² R. v. Nisbett, 6 Cox, 320. See 218.

R. v. Webb, Russ. & Ry. 405.

⁶ R. v. Turpin, 2 Car. & K.

³ R. v. Whyte, 5 Cox, 290.

820.

⁴ R. v. Butterwick, 2 Moo. & Rob. 196.

⁷ Now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 39.

of this. The 4th section would have cured the first objection, because the instrument was a bill of exchange quoad the officers of the navy, but could not help the difficulty respecting the payee, which was a fault affecting the integrity of the writing itself.¹ So, where the place of the payee's abode was omitted, and there was no attestation by a subscribing witness, a conviction for forging the instrument was held improper, for if real, it could not be said to be valid or negotiable, and thus, would not be in law a bill of exchange.² So, a document requiring the drawer to pay to his own order, and indorsed by the drawer, and accepted by the drawee, is not a bill of exchange.³ But it is no defence, that no person is named as drawee in the bill.⁴ So, though there be neither drawee nor acceptor.⁵ As where the prisoner drew a bill upon the commissioners of the navy for pay, although it did not comply with the requisites of the statute 35 Geo. 3, c. 94, the judges held, that he had been rightly convicted of forgery, because the instrument set forth in the indictment was in form a bill of exchange.⁶ An instrument was uttered in the form of —Pay to A. B. "17 or bearer pounds." This misplacing of "pounds" was held to make no difference, and the prisoner was convicted.⁷ Again, where the prisoner uttered a false bill, with an indorsement payable to his own order, and merely as a pledge, all the judges were of opinion that the act amounted to forgery, the bill having been given to obtain credit, although only left as a pledge.⁸ The reason of this decision, or rather the cause of the doubt, was in some measure explained in a subsequent case, where the prisoner uttered a bill, in like manner, without an indorsement, and it was objected, that such an instrument was not a valid bill, and could not, therefore, be the subject of forgery. Lawrence, J., doubted at first, because, without an indorsement, the writing could not be available in the hands of the party to whom it was uttered, and consequently, was not negotiable, and Bayley, J., for a similar reason, concluded the conviction wrong. But Lawrence, J., was afterwards satisfied that the objection would not hold, because had this forged bill been true and genuine according to its purport, the holder of it, for a valuable consideration from the payee, might compel the payee to indorse it.⁹ So, where the charge was for forging the promissory notes of the stewardesses of a provident society, it was objected, that as the regulations for the government of the society had not been confirmed, and filed at the quarter sessions, such a note could not be said to be negotiable, and so, not within

¹ R. v. Richards, Russ. & Ry. 193. R. v. Randall, Id. 195. And see R. v. Pateman, Id. 455.

² R. v. Moffat, Leach, 431.

³ R. v. Bartlett, 2 Moo. & Rob. 362.

⁴ R. v. Hawkes, 2 Moo. C. C. 60, diss. Parke, B., Patteson and Coleridge, JJ.

⁵ R. v. Smith, 2 Moo. C. C. 295.

⁶ R. v. Chisholm, Russ. & Ry. 297.

⁷ R. v. Boreham, 2 Cox, 189.

⁸ R. v. Birkett, Russ. & Ry. 86. Here the name of H. payee was real, but the names of the drawers were forged.

⁹ R. v. Wicks, Russ. & Ry. 149.

2 Geo. 2, c. 25. But the judges were of opinion that this was a valid promissory note.¹ And in order to avoid the evil consequences which would result from directing acquittals where the false instrument produced in evidence may happen to be unstamped, the judges have resolved—that the absence of a stamp is immaterial, for otherwise, securities might be published on improper stamps with impunity. So that the principle soon obtained that the regulations of the revenue laws could not alter the crime of forgery. Moreover, it was mentioned, that the holder of a bill could get it stamped after it was made.² However, upon a future occasion, this latter circumstance was held to make no difference after the passing of 31 Geo. 3, c. 25, which forbade the stamping of an instrument after being drawn. The judges again recognized Hawkeswood's case, and repeated their opinion, that the revenue laws could not interfere with the principles of forgery.³

Circumstances, however, of a peculiar nature, may occur in determining what shall and what shall not be forgery. The prisoner uttered a bill drawn upon Williams & Co., and there was a possibility that the figure “3” was on one corner of the bill: the bill would then stand thus:—

Two Months, &c.—

To Messrs. Williams & Co., Bankers,
“3,” Birchin Lane, Cornhill.

The object of the prisoner might have been to create a belief that the Williams & Co. mentioned were the bankers of that name at No. 20, Birchin Lane, under the firm of Williams, Birch, & Co., as he declared that the acceptors were Williams, Birch, & Co.⁴ But he proved in his defence, that three bills on Williams & Co. had actually been paid at 3, Birchin Lane, and as the prosecutors did not show that the figure 3 was not on the bill when the prisoner offered it, the judges held the conviction wrong.⁵

The alteration of a figure, by substituting one of higher import is forgery:—The prisoner was charged with forging a bill of exchange and an acceptance. The bill stood thus,— London, August 20th, 1836.

“£500.”

“Two months after date pay to my order, the sum of five hundred pounds, value received.—C. Taylor.”

To the Revd. C. H. Jenner,
No. 1, Chesterfield Street, May Fair.

It appeared that the prisoner had liberty from the prosecutor to

¹ R. v. Box, Russ. & Ry. 300; 6 Taunt. 325.

² See R. v. Hawkeswood, Leach, 257; East, P. C. 955. R. v. Lee, Leach, 258, n. See also R. v. Moffatt, Id. 431; 1 Taunt. 97.

³ R. v. Morton, East, P. C. 955. R. v. Reculist, Leach, 703. R.

v. Davies, East, P. C. 956. R. v. Teague, Russ. & Ry. 33.

⁴ Who usually made their acceptances thus—“Williams & Co.”

⁵ R. v. Watts, Russ. & Ry. 436. The jury had found that the acceptance was not that of any London bankers.

fill up a blank acceptance with the sum of 200*l.*, and that he had taken away the bill with those figures upon it: the bill was subsequently found in the hands of another person in the state mentioned in the indictment, and it likewise appeared that some acid had been used upon the paper. This case was argued for the prisoner, but the judges were unanimous, that to fill up the bill with the figures 500*l.*, when the prisoner's authority was limited to 200*l.*, was a false making of a bill for 500*l.*, and the conviction was held right.¹ The alteration of the crossing of a cheque was not forgery, being no part of the draft,² but the stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 25, has provided against this fraud.³

A clerk was directed to fill up a cheque for a certain sum, instead of which he filled it up with a larger amount, and retained the balance on the score of some claim he made for salary. This was held to be a forgery, upon the authority of R. v. Hart and R. v. Bateman. The learned judge, in R. v. Bateman, left the intent to defraud to the jury, who convicted the prisoner, and the judges held the conviction right on the authority of R. v. Hart,—Coltman, J., merely remarking, that he had a doubt whether the claim of the alleged amount of salary ought not to have been left to the jury.⁴ So, where the prisoner having obtained an acceptance for 1,000*l.*, came to the prosecutor and got two bills for 500*l.* under a pretence that the bill for 1,000*l.* was too large in amount to be discounted, but instead of destroying the bill for 1,000*l.* in the prosecutor's presence, altered it from a bill at three to one of twelve months. This was held by Park, J., to be a forgery.⁵ The following case was held by Erle, J., to be an alteration within the Act:—"10th March, 1849.—Please to pay T. P. G. Turberville, three, 3*l.* 12*s.* 6*d.* for sick pay to Brother Isaac Jones. Signed, &c." The word "three" and the figure "3" were alterations made by the prisoner, and forgeries.⁶ It is, however, of course no forgery to procure the signature of a party to a document altered without his knowledge, although the procuration be fraudulent, and the act itself be a fraud.⁷ Nor to induce one to sign a paper upon a misrepresentation of its contents.⁸ It is not forgery, if a person has good ground for believing that he had the consent of another, to write his name to an acceptance.⁹ If the person drawn upon had paid such bills on three or four occasions, it would be a ground for such belief, especially in the absence of any remark or remonstrance.¹⁰ A fortiori, if the authority be shown.¹¹ So upon a charge of forging the name of W. S. prior to the alleged forgery, letters were allowed to be read by counsel in order to show that the prisoner

¹ R. v. Hart, 1 Moo. C. C. 486. R. v. Teague, East, P. C. 979. R. v. Bateman, 1 Cox, 186; cited, Den. 285.

² Simmonds v. Taylor, Publ. Off., 27 L. J. C. P. 45. Affirmed, in error, Id. 248.

³ Ante, p. 659.

⁴ R. v. Wilson, Den. 284; 2 Car. & K. 527.

⁵ R. v. Atkinson, 7 C. & P. 669.

⁶ R. v. Turberville, 4 Cox, 13.

⁷ R. v. Chadwick, 2 M. & Rob. 545.

⁸ R. v. Collins, Id. 461.

⁹ R. v. Parish, 8 C. & P. 94.

¹⁰ R. v. Beard, Id. 143.

¹¹ R. v. Parish, ut sup.

bonâ fide considered that he had authority to write W. S.'s name to a receipt on a post office order.¹ But it is not a defence in the absence of such authority, that the prisoner believed he should be able to pay the bill, &c., when due.² Nor is it a defence, that the prisoner told A., an innocent agent, that he was at liberty to sign the name of W. S., if the agent does so upon that representation; express words are not necessary, and the prisoner is a principal in such a forgery.³ So, where all the names on a bill were fictitious, it was held no defence to say, that the full intention was to pay the bill when arrived at maturity, the more so, if no such intention were communicated to the person to whom the prisoner uttered the bill.⁴ Unexplained, the circumstance of a party putting into circulation a forged document, leads to the inevitable conclusion of an attempt to defraud,⁵ and that the intent was to defraud the person to whom he pays the bill.⁶ Relationship will not vary the case; a person must not presume on the kindness of a relation, if he forges a bill upon that relation.⁷ Even a guarantee to the prisoner's bankers to a larger amount than a forged note which he has paid to them, will not be evidence sufficient to prevent the case from being submitted to the jury.⁸

A. writes J. S. across a blank stamp, and goes away. B. writes a bill upon the stamp, being confederated with A. in a fraudulent transaction; it seems that this is, nevertheless, not a forgery of the acceptance.⁹ The prisoner forged an indorsement in the name of one executrix to a bill made payable to several executrices; this was held to be within the statute, any indorsement being sufficient.¹⁰

Foreign bills.] It has been held, that foreign securities need not possess the technical properties required by the municipal law of England, and that it is sufficient if, on the face of the whole instrument, they import an undertaking, or order for the payment of money.¹¹ And Richardson, J., who tried the case just referred to, was also inclined to think that the word "purporting" in the Act, appeared rather to refer to the person by or on whose behalf the instrument was issued, than to the form of the instrument itself.¹² The prisoner was tried for forging a foreign bill, which was thus translated:—

¹ R. v. Clifford, 2 Car. & K. 202.

² R. v. Beard, ut sup. R. v. Geach, 9 C. & P. 499.

³ R. v. Clifford, ut supra.

⁴ R. v. Hill, 2 Moo. C. C. 30; 8 C. & P. 274.

⁵ R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 582.

⁶ S. C.

⁷ R. v. Beard, 7 C. & P. 143.

⁸ R. v. James, 7 C. & P. 553.

⁹ R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 582.

¹⁰ R. v. Winterbottam, 1 Den.

C. C. 41. Note.—It will be presumed that bankers have complied with all statutory regulations concerning their notes. The prisoner must prove the contrary. R. v. Williams, 1 Cox, 234.

¹¹ R. v. Goldstein, Russ. & Ry. 473.

¹² See post, "Indictment," Russ. & Ry. 477; and, in England, this defect is now cured by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 39, as to English securities.

"No. 6,811, § Due 7 December.

"St. Petersburg, the 4th August, 1834.

"Good for £500 sterling. At four months' date by this bill "of exchange, to the order of ourselves, the sum of five hundred "pounds sterling, value in myself, which you will pass according "to the advice of Stieglitz & Co."

"No. 7,800. Messrs. Brown, Dan, Hamming, Dublin, "497 Payable, London.

"Accepted for five hundred pounds sterling, payable at Messrs.
"Ransom & Co., bankers, London.

"Brown, Dan, Hamming."

The judges held the conviction for uttering this instrument as a forged bill of exchange, good.¹ If persons cause an engraver to make plates, they will be within 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 19, although they may not know the nature of the plates; and they need not be all present at the order; indeed it was left to the jury to say, whether the two who gave the order, knew the nature of the instrument; and secondly, whether all three concurred in the order.² One prisoner resided in London, the other on the continent, and they combined to employ an innocent agent to make a plate for the purpose of forgery; the plate was completed, and both were held to be principals.³

¹ R. v. Szudurskie, 1 Moo. C. C. 429. Cox, 281. Secus, if the maker had been a guilty person and had been

² R. v. Mazeau, 9 Car. & P. 677. counselled by others. Per Tindal, C. J.

³ R. v. Bull and another, 1

CHAPTER XI.

FORGERY OF UNDERTAKINGS, WARRANTS, ORDERS,
REQUESTS, RECEIPTS, &c.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 23, Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request for the payment of money, or for the delivery or transfer of any goods or chattels, or of any note, bill, or other security for the payment of money, or for procuring or giving credit, or any indorsement on or assignment of any such undertaking, &c., or any accountable receipt, acquittance, or receipt for money or for goods, or for any note, bill, or other security for the payment of money, or any indorsement on or assignment of any such accountable receipt,¹ with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 24, whosoever, with intent to defraud, shall draw, make, sign, accept, or indorse any bill of exchange or promissory note, or any undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request, for the payment of money, or for the delivery or transfer of goods or chattels, or of any bill, note, or other security for money, by procuration or otherwise, for, in the name, or on the account of any other person, without lawful authority or excuse, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any such bill, &c., without lawful authority or excuse, knowing the same to have been so drawn, made, signed, accepted, or indorsed as aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

And by sect. 26, whosoever shall fraudulently forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or fraudulently altered, any debenture issued under any lawful authority whatsoever, either within Her Majesty's dominions or elsewhere, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to

¹ The 39th section includes a variety of instruments, which, if in law, wills, &c., undertakings, &c., are to be held such, by whatever name they may be called. There is, however, a curious discrepancy between this clause and the 39th: the words "or for the delivery or transfer of any goods or chattels, or of any note, bill, or other security, for the payment of money or for procuring or giving credit," and "any accountable receipt, acquittance, or receipt for money, &c., or any indorsement," &c., are omitted in sect. 39, which corresponds in this respect with the original draft of the bill.

imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.¹

An order for the payment of money in respect of which forgery may be committed, is such an instrument as purports, upon the face of it, that the individual making it has a right to require the payment of the money therein mentioned. If, therefore, the effect of the writing be a request only, it is not within the statute. The following orders are instances of this rule.

"Messrs. S.,—Please to send 10*l.* by the bearer, as I am so ill, I cannot wait on you. E. W."²

"Mr. Thomas,—Sir, you will please to pay the bearer, Mr. R. P., 3*l.*, &c., and you will much oblige yours, J. B.,

"2, Brown's Buildings, Stanhope Street.

"To Mr. Thomas, Gray's Inn."³

In these cases it was evident that there was nothing compulsory on the face of the writings; consequently, the offence could not amount to forgery.⁴ But a very slight change in the form of the note will alter the character of the transaction, and create the distinction between an order and a request. For example:—

"Port of London, May 1st, 1834.

"Three days after the ship Mary Ann sails from Gravesend please to pay to B. or his order the sum of 4*l.* 5*s.*, &c., as per agreement with your obedient servant, G. M., master."

The prisoner wrote in the margin,—“On receiving this cheque, I agree to sail in the ship Mary Ann, and to be on board within 16 hours from the date of the cheque, May 1st.” The judges held the conviction right under 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 3.⁵ And there is this difference between the word “compulsory” on the face of an order, and an Act of parliament authorizing the order, that in both cases, indeed, the order for payment must appear, but there may be instances where the statute is not strictly complied with, and yet, the instrument in question has been considered the subject of forgery; a proper count applicable to the case, of course, appearing in the indictment.⁶ Thus, “I promise to pay, &c., or such other sum of money, not exceeding the same, as he may incur, and by reason of his becoming one of the sureties to M. M., &c.” This, although not a positive undertaking, was held to be within the Act.⁷ “This is to satisfy, that R. R. as swept ¹ The Act against forgery of partnership firms (6 Geo. 4, c. 56,) was repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101.

² R. v. Ellor, Leach, 323.

³ R. v. Baker, 1 Moo. C. C. 231. Gaselee and Park, JJ., diss.

⁴ 1 Moo. C. C. 234.

⁵ R. v. Bamfield, 1 Moo. C. C. 416. R. v. Anderson, 2 M. & Rob.

469. It was a sailor's shipping note for 2*l.* 15*s.*, payable to A. B., or bearer, five days after the ship should sail. And an indictment for false pretences was held wrong. It should have been for forgery.

⁶ More especially with reference to bills of exchange.

⁷ R. v. Reed, 2 Moo. C. C. 62; 8 C. & P. 623.

"the flues, and cleaned the bilges, and repaired four bridges of the "Princess Victoria, J. N., 4*l.* 10*s.*" This order, if genuine, could have authorized the payment of this sum of 4*l.* 10*s.*, and it was held to be a warrant for the payment of money.¹ This case of R. v. Rogers, and also Mc Intosh's case, were cited where the prisoner was charged with forging a certificate of a lodge. It appeared, however, that the lodge,—the Conqueror Lodge—according to his certificate, being dissolved, had no existence, and that this was so at the time of the forgery. Erle, J., thought the objection as to the non-existence fatal, but left the case to the jury, who convicted the prisoner. He was then charged with obtaining money under false pretences, and again convicted, and sentence was passed on him for that offence, and not for the forgery.²

"Thornton-le-Moor, July 20, 1844.

"Mr. Johnson,—Sir, please to pay to James Jackson the sum of "13*l.* by order of Christopher Sadler, Thornton-le-Moor, brewer, "the District Bank. I shall see you on Monday,—Yours obliged,
"Charles Sadler."

This was held to be an order for the payment of money.³

"Mr. Martin will be pleased to send by the bearer 10*l.*, on "Mr. Hodge's account, as Mr. Hodge is very bad in bed, and "cannot come himself.

"Martin Ralph, foreman, St. Austell Foundry."

This was also held to be a warrant or order for the payment of money.⁴ The indorsement of a shareholder on a railway dividend warrant is a warrant or order, and the conviction of a clerk of the company who had forged the indorsement was affirmed.⁵ Still, there is a distinction between a warrant and an order, so that if the indictment should happen to describe an instrument as an order which is a warrant only, and fails to call it a warrant also, the objection would be fatal. As, where one kept a deposit at his banker's, but never drew cheques. A cheque being presented, the banker paid it, but this instrument being called an order, the prisoner was discharged from the forgery, because there was no power to draw cheques. The instrument was a warrant, not an order.⁶ An indictment charged the forgery of an order, warrant, or request, in hæc verba, and then set out the instrument. It was

¹ R. v. Rogers, 9 C. & P. 41.

² R. v. Rouse, 4 Cox, 7. Erle, J., held that it lay upon the prisoner to show the illegality of the instrument, and that the mutual promises or agreements of the society in question were against 37 Geo. 3, c. 123, s. 1, and 17 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 25.

³ R. v. Carter, Den. 65; 1 Car. & K. 741.

⁴ R. v. Vivian, Den. 35, Coleridge, J., dub.; 1 Car. & K. 719.

It is no matter whether or not the party signing may have funds in the hands of the party addressed.

⁵ R. v. Autey, 7 Cox, 329. And R. v. Arscott was distinguished, for there the indorsement was upon an order which the statute did not provide against, whereas this was itself an order.

⁶ R. v. Williams, 2 Car. & K. 51.

objected, that the instrument was a request, and not an order or warrant, but the court affirmed the conviction.¹ For, by Parke, B., where the indictment sets out the instrument, the descriptive matter may be mere surplusage, and the court can determine its character, and so description is needless.² The following instrument, however, was held to be both a warrant and an order:—

“Mr. Lowe, “London.
 “Bought of C. Dawson, English and foreign fruit merchant
 “and potato salesman. Nov. 9. 2 bushels of apples, 9s.
 “Sir,—I hope you will excuse me sending for such trifle, but I “have received a lawyer’s letter this morning, and unless I can “make up a certain amount by one o’clock, there will be an action “commenced against me, and I am obliged to hunt after every “shilling. Yours, &c., F. Dawson.”³

The statute applies to a promise of payment by a third person. John Stone, who also went by the name of R. Phoenix, applied for goods. The credit he asked was promised only upon his father’s guarantee. The prisoner then forged the name of Taylor Phoenix to a guarantee, and obtained the credit. This was held by the judges to be an undertaking within the statute, and also an undertaking for the payment of money by the supposed party himself.⁴

Every bill of exchange is an order for the payment of money, although the converse will not hold.⁵ A dividend warrant falls under the same rule. And so it is in the case of a blank cheque, for the banker can charge his customer with the amount;⁶ and a navy bill.⁷ So a post-dated cheque,⁸ and a forged pass,⁹ and a post-office order.¹⁰ And since the passing of 1 Will. 4, c. 66,¹¹ the following order would probably come within the 4th section of that Act, although before the statute, nine judges held that it was not an order.

“Gentlemen,—Please to pay the bearer on demand £15, and “accompt it to your humble servant. C. R. Ravenscroft.

“Payable at Messrs. Masterman & Co., White Hart Court.
 Wm. McInverheny.”¹²

¹ R. v. Williams, Den. & P. 61; 20 L. J. M. C. 106.

² Den. & P. 63. Mr. Denison thought that R. v. Williams, 2 Car. & K. 51, was overruled by this decision, and referred to R. v. Newton, 2 Moo. C. C. 59.

³ R. v. Dawson, Den. & P. 75; 20 L. J. M. C. 102.

⁴ R. v. Stone, Den. 181; 2 Car. & K. 364.

⁵ See R. v. Lockett, Leach, 94; R. v. Shepherd, East, P. C. 944; R. v. Willoughby, Id.; R. v. McIntosh, Id. 942; R. v. Cartwright, Russ. & Ry. 106; R. v. Clarkson, 1 Cox, 110.

⁶ R. v. Wright and others, 1 Lew. C. C. 135.

⁷ Id.

⁸ R. v. Taylor, 1 Car. & K. 213.

⁹ R. v. M’Connell and another, 2 Moo. C. C. 298; 1 Car. & K. 371. Although a woman presented the pass which directed the money to be paid to W. H. upon his giving a receipt, it made no difference.

¹⁰ R. v. Gilchrist, Car. & M. 224.

¹¹ Now repealed.

¹² R. v. Ravenscroft, Russ. & Ry. 161. Diss.—Mansfield, C. J.; Graham and Wood, BB.

So,

"Holton, Mar. 31, 1853.

"Sirs,—Please to pay the bearis, Mrs. Smart, the sum of "eagth hundred & 50. 4£ ten shillings for me, James Ramsey," was held to be such an order, although not addressed to any one; it being explained in evidence that the order was addressed to a particular firm.¹ A letter of credit, requesting that cash to the amount of 60*l.* might be at the disposal of A., has also been held to be within the 1 Will. 4.² The following writing has also been deemed rightly described as a warrant.

"To Molineux & Co.

"Pay to my order, two month after date, to Mr. John "Smith, the sum of £80, and deduct the same out of my account.

"John Smith,

"Farmer, Hailsham, Sussex."

£80.

No signature was indorsed.³

So again, a document which authorized the bearers to receive certain monies deposited upon accountable receipts in a bank by a friendly society, was held to be an order for the payment of money.⁴ So, an order to pay J. W. so much, provided the said J. W. has sailed in the said ship, is within the Act, although it was objected, 1st, that the order was not absolute; 2nd, that the averment of the condition having been performed did not appear in the indictment.⁵

Essex Provident Society. A cheque was signed by the chairman and three members of the Dunmow sub-committee. This cheque, in the ordinary course of things, should be countersigned by B. the clerk. Three forged signatures only were brought accordingly to B., who countersigned. It was objected that the instrument was not complete, but Lord Denman thought it sufficient.⁶ Again, the statute does not apply exclusively to commercial transactions. The prisoner forged an order for the payment of certain prize money, and the judges held the conviction proper. And, in fact, the objection was not even made in that case. But it was taken upon a subsequent occasion, where the charge was for forging the order of a justice of the peace upon a high constable for the payment of 10*s.*, and although pressed, the court overruled it.⁷ Again, where a justice of the peace was authorized by 48 Geo. 3, c. 75, to reimburse the churchwarden, overseer, headborough, or constable, any expense incurred in burying a dead body cast on

¹ R. v. Snelling, 23 L. J. M. C. 8; March, 1844. See post, R. v. Dears, 219.

² R. v. Raake, 2 Moo. C. C. 66; 8 C. & P. 626.

³ R. v. Smith, Den. C. C. 79; 1 Car. & K. 700. Amongst other cases cited was that of R. v. Hussey, C. C. Court, from the "Law Times,"

⁴ R. v. Harris and another, 2 Moo. C. C. 267; 1 Car. & K. 179.

⁵ R. v. Lonsdale, 2 Cox, 222.

⁶ R. v. Lee, 3 Cox, 80.

⁷ R. v. Graham, East, P. C. 945. See also R. v. Rushworth, Russ. & Ry. 317.

shore, and such an order was forged, it was objected for the prisoner, that it did not appear upon the face of the order, that the person to whom the repayment had been ordered, was one of the officers mentioned in the statute, consequently that the instrument itself was a nullity. Six learned judges, however,¹ were of opinion, that unless it had appeared on the face of the order, that the payee was not a churchwarden, or other officer, they considered the treasurer bound to conclude, that the justice had satisfied himself of the fact, and they held the conviction right.² Five learned judges held the contrary.³ On the other hand, where it appeared that a justice was empowered to make certain orders under his hand and seal, but that he had neglected to affix his seal, and moreover, that he had addressed his order to a person over whom the statute had given him no authority, the conviction was held wrong.⁴ Hence it appears to be the safest way to pursue the words of the statute which may happen to apply, as nearly as possible.⁵ And a certificate that the prisoner was getting his living by hawking, was considered no undertaking within 1 Will. 4, c. 66.⁶ So, if the instrument be so utterly at variance, not only with the Act which authorizes the supposed order, but also with the common rules of grammar, the indictment cannot be sustained. The order is, in fact, defective upon the face of it.⁷ But it is no objection to show collateral circumstances at variance with the general charge, and which do not appear upon the face of the order. As that the person who signed an order for the payment of money as chairman of the board of guardians was not, in reality, the chairman, the charge being for forging upon the same order the name of another guardian.⁸ It is worthy of attention that although the statute 1 Will. 4, c. 66, fully reached the case of forging an indorsement upon a bill of exchange, it did not comprehend an indorsement upon a warrant or order for the payment of money. Therefore, where instead of charging the indorsement to have been made upon a bill of exchange, it was alleged to have been so written upon an order for the payment of money, the prisoner was held entitled to an acquittal.⁹ So an indorsement on a letter of credit was held not to be an order within the statute.¹⁰ Nor a warrant for wages, signed by the foreman and paid by the cashier.¹¹

Indictment.] The indictment for forging a bill or note states

¹ Wood, B.; Bayley, Holroyd, JJ. Garrow, B.; Best, Richardson, JJ.

² R. v. Froud, Russ. & Ry. 389. See Id 391.

³ Abbott, C. J.; Dallas, C. J.; Graham, B.; Park, J.; Burrough, J.

⁴ R. v. Rushworth, Russ. & Ry. 317.

⁵ See R. v. Russell, Leach, 9.

⁶ R. v. Mitchell, 2 Fost. & F. 44. But it was forgery at common law.

⁷ R. v. Donnelly and another, 1 Moo. C. C. 438.

⁸ R. v. Pike, 2 Moo. C. C. 70. The names of three guardians were necessary to the validity of the instrument.

⁹ R. v. Arscott, 6 C. & P. 410.

¹⁰ R. v. Wilton, 1 Fost. & F. 391.

¹¹ R. v. Pilling, 1 Fost. & F. 324.

that A., on, &c., feloniously did forge a certain bill of exchange [or promissory note], with intent then to defraud.

Second count, for uttering.

Indictment.] The indictment for forging an order, &c. for the payment of money, alleges that A., on, &c., feloniously did forge a certain order, &c., for the payment of money, with intent thereby then to defraud.¹ And if more were stated in the indictment than necessary, the count would, nevertheless, not have been invalid.² Upon an indictment for forging a promissory note, it has been held sufficient to call it "a certain forged promissory note for the payment of 20*l.*," without stating the date.³ In fact, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 42, any instrument may now be described by the name usually known, as a bill of exchange, &c. The word "falsely," it may be observed, is immaterial.⁴ But the allegation as to the forgery must not be put in the alternative, "forge or cause to be forged."⁵ The count should conclude with the allegation of intent to defraud, and this intent must appear in all the substantial parts of the indictment. For where the prisoner was charged with uttering a forged magistrate's order, and concluded thus, "and so the jurors say that by colour and means of the said counterfeit order, unlawfully did obtain from W. L. the said sum of," &c., without adding the intent to defraud, nor the averment of guilty knowledge, judgment was arrested.⁶ With reference, however, to the names of the parties intended to be defrauded, a notification to a common intent was sufficient.⁷ So, where the intent laid was to defraud one partner, whereas the firm consisted of two persons, but the prosecutor took the active part of the concern, the conviction was held right.⁸ Not so where the intent was laid to defraud one partner "and others," whereas there was only one other partner.⁹ A general intent to defraud, without setting out the manner, is sufficient.¹⁰ Yet, as it seems, a shareholder in a joint-stock bank, who uttered a forged acceptance to the bank, could not be convicted on counts laying the intent to defraud another shareholder, and others.¹¹ A count charged that the prisoner did forge a promissory note for 50*l.*, on which promissory note there is an indorsement as follows: "C. J."—with intent to defraud W. R. S. It was objected, that this charge

¹ As to the old cases, see East, P. C. 975, 985. The words "and caused to be forged" are at an end. Lord Mansfield could never see why forge "or cause to be forged" should vitiate the indictment. 1 Burr. 400.

² R. v. Brewer, 6 C. & P. 363.

³ R. v. Burgiss, 7 C. & P. 490; R. v. James, Id. 553.

⁴ Stark. Cr. P. 98.

⁵ East, P. C. 988.

⁶ R. v. Rushworth, Russ. & Ry. 317.

⁷ R. v. Lovell, Leach, 248, East, 990.

⁸ R. v. Hanson, 2 Moo. C. C. 245; Car. & M. 334.

⁹ R. v. Wright, 1 Lew. 269.

¹⁰ R. v. Powell, 2 Sir Wm. Bl. 787.

¹¹ R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 586.

might apply as well to the indorsement as to the note, but the court held, that the words "with intent" must apply to the verb to which the prisoner's name was the nominative, and the prisoner was convicted.¹

The intent in the case of joint-stock banks has been already discussed.² But the averment of general intent in a great measure supersedes these cases.

It is no objection to call an instrument a warrant and order for the payment of money.³

A count for altering a bill or note is often introduced, but it is not very necessary. An indictment for forging will be supported by proof of an alteration. And an indictment for altering by falsely making and forging, will be sustained by proof of the alteration without saying that the prisoner falsely made and forged by altering.⁴ And it is no defence to say, that the statute has the word "alter" as well as "forge," therefore, Teague, who altered a country bank note, (described in the indictment as a bill of exchange,) from 10*l.* to 50*l.*, was held rightly convicted, notwithstanding that objection. The indictment charged a forgery, and the proof was of an alteration.⁵ However, a count for forging a bill, will not cover the forgery of an acceptance. And a count for uttering will follow the same rule. There were several counts for forging and uttering a counterfeit bill, and for forging the acceptance, but there was not one applicable to the uttering of the acceptance. The only part of the bill uttered by the prisoner, which was proved to be forged, was the acceptance. It was objected, that the forging or uttering an acceptance was made a distinct offence by 1 Will. 4, c. 66, so that the conviction could not be correct by reason of the omission. And the judges concurred in this opinion.⁶ So, again, it might be desirable to have counts for forging and uttering an indorsement, where the case would admit of it, and the more especially if it be found impracticable to connect the prisoner with the offence charged otherwise than through the medium of the indorsement.⁷ The count must support the legal signification of the instrument. As, where the indictment charged the forging of a promissory note, but set out an instrument which the judges held to be a bill of exchange. The conviction here was deemed improper.⁸ This matter depends upon the evidence, and explanatory averments are not necessary.⁹ If, therefore, the promissory note should turn out to be a bill of exchange, an acquittal would be directed upon the evidence.

¹ R. v. James, 7 C. & P. 553.
See R. v. Burgiss, Id. 490.

² Ante.

³ R. v. Crowther, 5 C. & P. 316.

⁴ R. v. Elsworth, East, P. C. 986.

⁵ R. v. Teague, Russ. & Ry. 33; East, P. C. 979.

⁶ R. v. Horwell, 1 Moo. C. C. 405; 6 C. & P. 148.

⁷ See R. v. Hough, Russ. & Ry.

120.

⁸ R. v. Hunter, Russ. & Ry. 511.

⁹ R. v. Rogers, ante.

Evidence.] First, with reference to witnesses, it may be remarked that the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 32, s. 2, permitted persons to appear as witnesses in prosecutions for forgery, although they might have an interest in the forged instrument.¹ Then, by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, no person offered as a witness shall be excluded by reason of incapacity from interest from giving evidence, either in person, or by deposition in any suit civil or criminal. The rule once acted upon that if a witness might have been called he must have been called, exists now no longer.² Mr. Starkie says, that "the objection that secondary evidence is substituted for the first, does not apply in this case, since there is not such a distinction between one man's knowledge of his own handwriting and the knowledge of another on the same subject as constitutes the former evidence of a superior character to the latter."³ The principal features of the evidence are the falsity of the instrument,—of the plate—the validity of it, if it were genuine (as, for instance, whether it be within the protection of the law); and, lastly, the intent to defraud. Should there be any special averments, as that the signature of a certain instrument operates in a particular manner, (a navy bill, for example as a receipt,) the prosecutor must have been prepared to prove them.⁴ However, it is of course that the prisoner must be connected with the crime imputed to him, and, moreover, there must be some proof to show the identity of the person whose name has been counterfeited. Sponsonby was indicted for forging an indorsement on a bill in the name of Wm. Pearce. Wm. Pearce was the payee, and as the bill never came into his hands, he was considered to be a competent witness to prove the forged indorsement, but another difficulty arose, because as the drawer was not present, it was not clear that the witness was the real Wm. Pearce, the payee. The drawer's letter of advice to his payee was rejected, and the testimony of Pearce refused, and an acquittal ensued.⁵ This case has been questioned, as under the particular circumstances, the payee, Pearce, should have been admitted, but the new statutes have rendered this of no importance.⁶ In another case, where the names both of the drawer and indorsee were forged, it appeared that the prisoner when he

¹ Under the old law, see R. v. Russell, Leach, 8; R. v. Taylor, Id. 214; R. v. Thornton, Id. 634; R. v. Bunting, Id. 991; R. v. Young, Russ. & Ry. 280, n.; R. v. Crocker, Id. 97; Leach, 987; R. v. Corah, 2 Russ. C. M. 392; R. v. Bate, cited, 8 C. & P. 275. As to the cases where under the old law releases were considered necessary, and where they were dispensed with; R. v. Usher, Leach, 48; R. v. Akehurst, Id. 150; R. v. Spon- sonby, Id. 332; R. v. Treble, Id. 1040; R. v. Peacock, Russ. & Ry. 278; R. v. Mott, Id. 435; R. v. Pigeon, 1 C. & P. 98; R. v. Wells, Bull. N. P. 289.

² See R. v. Downes, East, P. C. 997, 999; R. v. Smith, Id. 1000.

³ Starkie of Ev. part 4.

⁴ But see now 9 Geo. 4, c. 32, s. 2; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1.

⁵ R. v. Sponsonby, Leach, 332.

⁶ See East, P. C. 997. Starkie of Evidence, p. 4.

negotiated the bill, which was drawn by A. H., payable to J. S., declared that J. S. was the son of a cheesemonger at Liverpool, and that the signature of A. H. was a forgery. It was here again objected that the drawer was not produced, but Wilson, J., was opposed to the point raised for the prisoner, since he had himself admitted the payee's identity, and the false signature of the drawer, and the indorsement was disproved by the father of J. S.¹ A letter sent by the prisoner to the prosecutor, and left unanswered, is evidence for the jury to consider whether the prisoner did not believe that he had an implied authority.²

Handwriting.] It has been a rule of law for a very considerable time that comparison of hands is inadmissible as evidence. Therefore, it would be of no avail to tender proof of other documents than those mentioned in the indictment, in order to fix the prisoner's handwriting. But this rule does not obtain so strictly in the case of the party whose name is forged. For it is said, that upon one occasion, Bayley, J., desired the person in question to write his name upon a sheet of paper, which was handed to the jury after they had turned round to deliberate.³ Where the prisoner had drawn and indorsed a bill, and his handwriting to the acceptance of the same bill was then proved, Littledale, J., although hesitating at first, afterwards allowed the case to go to the jury, saying that he would reserve the point, but the prisoner was acquitted.⁴

An instrument without a forged indorsement was found in the prisoner's hands. But very soon afterwards the forged name appeared. There was no proof of his handwriting, nor that he could write, but Erle, J., allowed the case to go to the jury.⁵

Uttering.] It was doubted at one time whether evidence of the possession of other forged instruments could be admitted against the prisoner upon a charge of forgery. However, where the prisoner was indicted for forging a bill of exchange, three bills found in his pocket-book were admitted in evidence by Sutton, B., and proof was allowed of their being fabricated. All the judges agreed as to the propriety of introducing this evidence of guilty knowledge.⁶ So, again, other utterings of forged bills with intent to defraud were admitted in evidence by Williams, J., and *Green's case*⁷ was cited for the prosecution, together with Wylie's case.⁸

¹ R. v. Downes, East, P. C 997.

² R. v. Beardsall, 1 Fost. & F. 629.

³ R. v. Williams, 1 Lew. C. C. 123.

⁴ R. v. Musgrave, Id. 112. The bill was never presented for payment. Id. 138.

⁵ R. v. James, 4 Cox, 90. He was acquitted.

⁶ R. v. Hough, Russ. & Ry. 120. See R. v. Ball, post.

⁷ R. v. Oddy, was cited for the prisoner. 20 L. J. M. C. 198.

⁸ R. v. Wylie, 1 New Rep. 92. R. v. Nisbett, 6 Cox, 320.

So it was in the case of a forged acquittance.¹ But it is not so clear that a party can be convicted of forgery with intent to defraud, merely upon the circumstance of his having forged instruments in his possession. Crocker was tried before Le Blanc, J., for forging a promissory note. It was objected in the course of the inquiry, that there was no evidence of this note having been forged in the county of Wilts, the prisoner not being in Wiltshire, but in Somerset at the time when the note appeared to bear date. But as it was shown that the note was found in the prisoner's lodgings in Wiltshire, the learned judge admitted it. It was then objected that as the note had been kept in the prisoner's possession, and never uttered nor attempted to be made use of, there could not be any intent to defraud. But the learned judge considered that the question of the prisoner's guilt or innocence was entirely for the jury, and he was found guilty. The conviction, however, was held invalid upon another ground.² Nevertheless, two reporters have said that the judges were against the admissibility of the evidence as proof of a forgery in Wilts, but in Russell and Ryan this is doubted, the learned editors declaring, that no such decision on the part of the judges had ever transpired.³ Upon an indictment for uttering a forged bill, it appeared that the bill, with several others, was drawn by the prisoners upon the prosecutor, and that they had been paid into the bankers of the prisoner in Bucks to his credit, but by whom or when was not in evidence. Maule, J., held that there was no case for the jury. There was no proof of uttering in the county where the forgery was charged.⁴ What the prisoner has said concerning bills not in evidence is not admissible.⁵ The act of putting a letter into the post office is an uttering, and the post-office mark upon the letter containing the forged instrument, is evidence of that uttering.⁶ Upon an indictment for uttering a forged cheque in the name of J. W. on a firm of army agents and bankers, a clerk in the former department proved that he knew of no such customer as J. W., and that he had been told by the other clerks that there was no such person. This was held to be sufficient proof to call upon the prisoner to show that there was such a person as J. W., and in the absence of such evidence, it was of itself sufficient for the jury.⁷ A letter also written by the prisoner to a third person, saying that the name of that person is on another bill belonging to the prosecutor, and requesting him not to admit the last-mentioned bill to be a forgery, was allowed in evidence to

¹ R. v. Phillips, 3 Cox, 88, Russ. & Ry. 99, n. See R. v. Rolfe, B. R. v. Edwards, Id. Smith, 4 C. & P. 411.

89, n. R. v. Clarke and another, cited. Contra at Stafford, R. v. Jackson and others, Platt, B.

² R. v. Crocker, Russ. & Ry. 97; 2 New Rep. 87; Leach, 987. And see R. v. Radford, Den. 59.

³ 2 New Rep. 96; Leach, 996;

⁴ R. v. Line, 2 Cox, 56.

⁵ R. v. Cooke, 8 C. & P. 586.

⁶ R. v. Perkins, 1 Lew. C. C. 99, by Park, J., upon the authority of R. v. Burdett.

⁷ R. v. Brannan, 6 C. & P. 326.

show guilty knowledge.¹ But upon an indictment for forging a receipt, Byles, J., and Martin, B., agreed that other acts of forgery by the prisoner on the same prosecutor should not be given in evidence, although they would not trench upon the rules as to uttering in other cases.² A letter inclosing a forged bill was held to be evidence of uttering, without proving that the prisoner put it into the post.³ It is no defence to allege that there was no probability of a cheque being paid.⁴ Nor needs it to be proved that the supposed maker of a forged instrument had not given others authority to use his name.⁵ By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 44, no intent to defraud any particular person need be proved, but it shall be sufficient to prove that the defendant did the act with intent to defraud.⁶

Foreign bills and notes.] The prisoner was indicted for forgery and uttering Polish notes. It was purposed to show that he had very recently been engaged in furthering the fabrication of Austrian notes, but an objection was made that this latter transaction had no concern whatsoever with the Polish forgeries, and that it had taken place a week before the offence which gave rise to the indictment; and, moreover, that no Austrian notes had, in fact, been made. However, the learned judge admitted this evidence for the purpose of showing a guilty knowledge. The count for forging the notes being abandoned, the learned judge doubted whether he had done right in allowing proof of certain dealings between the prisoner and an engraver with regard to Polish cash notes, which were not the subject of the indictment. The prisoner had paid the engraver for certain impressions of these latter notes. The judges considered this case, and being of opinion that the evidence was admissible, affirmed the conviction.⁷

Receipt for money or goods, or order for the delivery of goods.] It is essential, in order to sustain an indictment for forging a receipt, that this instrument should fully maintain the character attributed to it. A confused memorandum from whence it could hardly be collected, whether the acquittance applied to one matter or another, was deemed not to be within the statute of 2 Geo. 2.⁸ And a scrip receipt not filled up with the name of the subscriber was held by the judges not to be an instrument within the protection of the same Act.⁹ So where there was a memorandum stating that "Wm. Chinnery paid to X tomson, the sum of 8l. "Feb. 13, 1812," the judges held that this was no receipt; it was

¹ R. v. Forbes, 7 C. & P. 224.

² R. v. Moore, 1 Fost. & F. 73.

³ R. v. M^cQuin, 1 Cox, 34.

⁴ R. v. Crowther, 5 C. & P. 316.

⁵ R. v. Hurley, 2 Moo. & Rob. 473.

⁶ It is no excuse that the defendant did not mean ultimately to defraud. R. v. Trinfidd, 1 Fost. & F. 43.

⁷ R. v. Ball, 1 Moo. C. C. 470; 7 C. & P. 426.

⁸ R. v. Russell, Leach, 8.

⁹ R. v. Lyons, Id. 597.

an assertion that Chinnery had paid the money, but it did not import an acknowledgment by Thompson.¹ And, "received for R. Aickman,—G. Arscott," was held not to be a receipt within the Act; for forging a receipt for money is writing the name of the person for whom it is received.² So under an indictment which charged the prisoner with having forged certain acquittances and receipts, a supposed scrip certificate of the London and South-Western Railway Company was held not to be a receipt and acquittance within 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 66.³ But four judges held it to be a receipt.⁴ And Coltman, J., held that it was an undertaking for the payment of money.⁵ And, it seems, that a railway scrip certificate was not within 1 Will. 4, c. 66, and that the forgery of such a document is, therefore, only a misdemeanor.⁶ An authority to the treasurer of a county to pay the expenses of a prosecution is not a receipt within 1 Will. 4, c. 66. Therefore, a forged signature at the back of an order purporting to be such an authority was held not to be within that Act.⁷ There was an order presented for payment of the costs of a prosecutor. The sum allowed was in figures opposite the name of the alleged witness, and an indorsement made as by the witness. This was not a receipt nor acquittance, but merely an authority.⁸ But where either upon the face of the instrument itself, or by proper explanatory averments, it appears that the writing is a legal voucher, a forgery may be made out.

" 18th March, 1773.

" Received the contents above by me,
" Stephen Withers."

It was objected that the particulars should have been set forth, that the bill and the receipt were an entirety, and that it by no means followed that the writing in question was a receipt for money. But the indictment having alleged the receipt to have been given with the name "Stephen Withers," of, &c., for the sum of 1*l.* and 4*s.*, the judges held the conviction right, for the bill itself was only evidence of the fact, and showed it to be a receipt for money as charged.⁹ So again, the word "paid, Sadler," were deemed a sufficient receipt. This was the act of a servant who had received money from her mistress to pay bills, and forged the name of Sadler with a small s, without writing any christian name. The mistress testified to her belief of its being a receipt, and the ¹ R. v. Harvey, Russ. & Ry. C. J., dub. The rest of the judges 227. contra. S. C. 2 Car. & K. 496.

² R. v. Arscott, 6 C. & P. 410.

⁶ Clarke v. Newsam, 1 Exch.

³ R. v. West, Den. 258, by eight judges:—Pollock, C. B.; Parke, B.; Alderson, B.; Coleridge, J.; Coltman, J.; Maule, J.; Rolfe, B.; Williams, J.

131.

⁷ R. v. Cooper, 2 Car. & K. 586.

⁸ R. v. Parker, 2 Cox, 274.

⁴ Lord Denman, C. J.; Wilde, C. J.; Wightman, C. J.; Erle, J.

⁹ R. v. Testick, East, P. C. 925, 977. R. v. Taylor, Id. 960, 977.

⁵ S. C. Lord Denman and Wilde, learned judge (Denman) was of opinion that this was not a mere memorandum of the servant that she had paid Sadler, but, under the circumstances, that it was an acquittance within the statute.¹ An attorney was employed by the executors of a public accountant to settle the accounts of the testator with government. In order to deliver the testator's estates from an extent, he procured fabricated vouchers as from workmen employed, and tendered these papers as receipts to the navy board. It was objected, that that transaction lay between the testator and the workmen, and that the navy board had no concern with the truth or falsehood of the receipt; but the learned judges, having considered the case, were of opinion that the receipts had been knowingly uttered by the prisoner with intent to defraud the king, and the conviction was affirmed.² A receipt for an apprentice fee was held to be within the old statute, 2 Geo. 2.³ It was made a question in the following case, whether the instrument set out in the indictment was a receipt or an order for the payment of money, and the judges held it rightly described as a receipt, and affirmed the conviction.⁴

“Received the 22nd day of May, 1834, of Messrs. Cox & Co., “paymasters, royal regiment of artillery, the sum of 13*l.* sterling, “being a part of subsistence for a detachment of Captain Bayley's “company, second battalion, royal artillery at Woolwich, for the “month of June, 1834.

“R. N. Poulden,
“Lieutenant Royal Artillery.”⁴

Moreover, although an instrument upon the face of it may not purport to be a receipt, yet by properly introducing averments, that which would not otherwise be deemed such a receipt, becomes such in law when thus explained. As in the case of a navy bill receipt which appeared thus:—

“Wm. Thornton,
“For receipts,
“Four pence;
“Wm. Hunter.”

Here the judges directed the judgment to be arrested only, because there was nothing in the indictment to explain the import of the words, or to show that they were in any way intended to signify that those persons had received the money, although, in fact, such a form had always been considered as a receipt at the Navy Office.⁵ Mr. Justice Buller thought, in this case, that the second count might be supported, which merely called the instrument a receipt, without adding that it was a navy bill,

¹ R. v. Houseman, 8 C. & P. Leach, 366. See also R. v. Powell, 180. Id. 77. R. v. Harrison, Id. 180.

² R. v. Thomas, Leach, 877; East, P. C. 934.

³ R. v. Jones and another,

⁴ R. v. Hope, 1 Moo. C. C. 414. R. v. Rice, 6 C. & P. 634.

⁵ R. v. Hunter, Leach, 624.

because it was like writing an indorsement upon a bill of exchange. But to this it was answered, that an indorsement is complete by writing the name on the bill, without more; whereas, the name itself, as stated in the indictment, was no receipt.¹ Again, where the words "settled, J. M.," were placed at the foot of a bill of parcels, but there was no averment to explain the meaning of these words, the court held, upon the authority of Hunter's case, that the indictment could not be supported, although the statute 35 Geo. 3,² had declared that the word "settled," amongst other words, should be a receipt within the meaning of that Act.³ So where the receipt stood thus: "1825, received, H. H.," but there was no averment to show the meaning of these initials, the judges were of opinion that the indictment was bad.⁴ But, "received the above rate," was held sufficient without any such averment.⁵ And the word "settled" was deemed, upon another occasion, not to require an explanation.⁶ A pawnbroker's duplicate, given as prescribed by 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 99, is an accountable receipt. A pawnbroker, on being summoned, produced before the justice this fabricated instrument. He had not given up all the goods which had been pledged. The court affirmed his conviction.⁷ So a forged paper without signature, thus, "received from Mr. Beudan—due to Mr. Warman, 17s., settled," was held to be a forged receipt within 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10.⁸ So a receipt "6th Jany., 1830, 16*l.* 15*s.* 6*d.* for the high constable, James Hughes," requires no explanatory averments.⁹ The following instrument likewise was held to be an accountable receipt, although the fact of a receipt was not named throughout the document. In substance it was a receipt. "By order of R. F. Pries, we have this day transferred into the names of Messrs. C. & S., 759 quarters and 4 bbls. of wheat, ex. August, Ferdinand, Captain K. a Newstadt. Entered by W. F. Pries, and now lying at our granaries, B. Wall. The wheat is insured against risk of fire by us, Brown & Young, Corn Ex., October 23, 1852."¹⁰ The signature to a post-office order is required to be

¹ R. v. Hunter, Leach, 633.

² Cap. 55, s. 7.

³ R. v. Thompson, Leach, 910.

⁴ R. v. Barton, 1 Moo. C. C. 141.

⁵ R. v. Maugham, 8 C. & P. 276.

⁶ R. v. Martin, 1 Moo. C. C. 483; 7 C. & P. 549.

⁷ R. v. Fitchie, Dears. & B. 175; 26 L. J. M. C. 90.

⁸ R. v. Inder, Den. 325; 2 Car. & K. 635. By six judges:—Lord Denman, C. J.; Wilde, C. J.;

Cresswell and Erle, JJ.; Platt, B.; Williams, J. But five judges (Parke, B.; Coltman and Patteson, JJ.; Rolfe, B.; and Wightman, J.) thought that the document did not purport to be the receipt of Warman. If it was taken as the prisoner's receipt it was not forgery. But the offence was obtaining money under false pretences. Den. 326.

⁹ R. v. Boardman, 2 Moo. & Rob. 147.

¹⁰ R. v. Pries, 6 Cox, 165.

made by the payee. Byles, J., doubted whether this was an order or a receipt, but thought it an order.¹

A stamped agreement recited an arrangement in consideration of the payment of a sum of money thereby acknowledged; it then released the party. This was held to be a receipt or acquittance.² The prisoner signed a document which entitled him to receive a delivery note, and which in the course of the business of the B. Canal Company, would enable him to demand and have the goods described therein delivered, on payment of the charges for carriage. This was held to be a forging of a receipt within the 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10, and Wightman, J., declared he had no doubt on the subject.³ It may be added, that it is no defence to say that the name at the foot of the receipt is a nonentity. The prisoner obtained 4*l.* from his employer for the purpose of getting certain liquid in the way of business, and subsequently tendered the forged receipt, but it was proved that no such firm was in existence as that written at the bottom of the account, and it was objected, that this, at the most, was but obtaining money under false pretences. But it being answered, that the prisoner was clearly accountable for the 4*l.* to his employer, the learned judge directed the jury, that if they thought the forged receipt had been uttered for the purpose of inducing a belief that the 4*l.* had been applied to get the liquid, which was the professed object in view, they might find the prisoner guilty of uttering; and the judges were of the same opinion, and confirmed the conviction.⁴ It is an uttering although the prisoner do not let the receipt leave his hand. He produced a forged receipt and exhibited it to a person for him to look at, but would not part with it. This person was manager for a creditor of the prisoner, and the prisoner's intent, therefore, was to defraud by showing the forged document. It was objected that this was not an act of uttering and publishing, and after conviction, the case was argued before the judges, but they held that the uttering was made out, and sentence was passed.⁵ It will be observed, that the section has the word "utter," consequently an alteration of the receipt will be a forgery. As where the receipt of a high constable was altered from 3*l.* 5*s.* 9*d.* to 3*l.* 15*s.* 9*d.*:⁶ and the addition of material words to the copy of a supposed receipt will in like manner be an alteration within the statute.⁷ A receipt and acquittance would seem to be almost synonymous. One J. M. had deposited 85*l.* in a bank, and he received from the bank an accountable receipt, thus,—

¹ R. v. Ansell, 8 Cox, 409. Guilty. Point reserved.

² R. v. Hill, 2 Cox, 246.

³ R. v. Meigh, 7 Cox, 401.

⁴ R. v. Martin, 1 Moo. C. C. 483.

⁵ R. v. Radford, Den. 59; 1 Car. & K. 707.

⁶ R. v. Vaughan, 8 C. & P. 276. See also R. v. Hope, ut supra.

⁷ 5 Esp. 101, by Lord Ellenborough. The copy was produced in evidence upon a suggestion that the original had been destroyed.

" M. F., 266.

" Darlington Bank, Stockton,
" 12 d. 6 m., 1839.

" Received of John Mann, eighty-five pounds to his credit.

" For Jonathan Backhouse & Co.,

" £85. Entered, F. B.

" Fred. Backhouse.

" This receipt not transferable."

The prisoner went to the bank with the receipt, and represented himself to be J. M., and wrote the words J. M. on the face of the receipt, and delivered it to the bankers, who paid him 87*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*, the sum mentioned in the receipt, with interest. It appeared that this was the usual way of dealing between the bank and their customers. It was objected, that this was an order not for 85*l.*, but for 87*l.* 17*s.* 6*d.*; but the judges held the conviction good, and said that this was an acquittance for 85*l.* and interest.¹ So where the prisoner forged the indorsement of a shareholder on a cheque, he was held guilty of forgery.² The proof should be confined to the particular receipt, unless, indeed, other receipts could be proved to be forgeries.³

The indictment for forging a receipt states that A. on, &c., feloniously did forge a certain acquittance and receipt for money, with intent thereby to defraud. It is necessary, in an indictment for forging a deed to aver that it was sealed.⁴ But it seems, that "sealed and delivered" will suffice without averring the signature. For a deed is presumed to have been signed, although in the case of a mark it is proper to set out the mark; so that where the words, "Mary Wallace, her mark," were added after the mark had been made and attested, it was objected that these words were not in the note when it was subscribed. But nine judges held the conviction right. Perrott, B., and Aston, J., were of opinion that the charge was not well laid.⁵ And where the indictment charged the prisoner with forging the assignment of a lease, the court entertained the objection that the mark was not set out. In fact, the lease could not be assigned without a writing signed by the party,⁶ and the delivery must be averred.⁷

The prisoner was indicted for uttering a bond and writing obligatory. But there was no condition with a penalty nor defeasance attached to the instrument, and it was moved to arrest the judgment, because in the absence of such provisions, this writing could not be called a bond, but was, in fact, a writing obligatory. Never-

¹ R. v. Atkinson, 2 Moo. C. C. 215; 1 Car. & M. 325.

² R. v. Autey, 26 L. J. M. C. 190; 1 Dears. & B. 294.

³ R. v. Moore, 1 Fost. & F. 73.

⁴ R. v. Newton, 3 Keb. 388.

⁵ R. v. Dunn, East, P. C. 976; Stark. Cr. Pl. 522; Leach, 57.

⁶ R. v. Goddard, 3 Salk. 171; Lord Raym. 920.

⁷ R. v. Smith, East, P. C. 376. Contra, i.e., that the mark need not be set out, but Sir Edward East questions the authority of this decision.

theless, the judges decided against the objection, although, as the prisoner died in Newgate, no opinion was publicly given.¹ The words, "feloniously did falsely forge" a certain writing obligatory are good, although in fact the false bond be not binding on any one.² An indictment for forging and uttering a receipt was held ill upon one occasion, because it not only omitted to give any explanation of certain initials "H. H.," but also failed to show that H. H. had any authority to receive the money for which the receipt had been fraudulently given.³ Yet since the statute, 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3, it is sufficient to describe a receipt generally as in an indictment for larceny, and it is not an objection to say that a receipt is not the subject of larceny.⁴ Where the receipt of a high constable was forged, it was considered that the act might be laid with intent to defraud any rated inhabitant, by name, of the parish where the rate has been imposed, and others.⁵ A forged request was made to a woman in her maiden name. She, however, married before the date of it. It was held, that an indictment for uttering might well lay the intent to have been to defraud the husband.⁶ It is better in describing an instrument which may be a warrant, order, or request, to call it one warrant, one order, and one request, and not a certain warrant, order, and request. But where it was objected that the instrument was merely a request, and was yet called a warrant, order, and request, the court said in answer, that the instrument was set out verbatim, and sustained the conviction.⁷ But where each count set out a good warrant, but called it a warrant and order, the prisoner was acquitted.⁸

Warrant, order, or request for the delivery of goods, &c.] In considering this point, care must be taken not to confound a request of the nature alluded to with an order for the payment of money, for if the document be merely a request, and the indictment represent it as an order, the judges will direct a fresh indictment to be preferred. Thus :

"July 11, 1838.

"Mr. Lang, please to send one piece of lead by the bearer, 12 long 16 wide.

"George Kilby,
"Queenborough."

¹ R. v. Dunnett, Leach, 581.
R. v. Hayworth, 1 Lew. C. C. 122.

² R. v. King, Holt's C. 326.

³ R. v. Barton, 1 Moo. C. C. 141.

⁴ R. v. Martin, Id. 483, 485 ;
7 C. & P. 549; R. v. Vaughan,
8 C. & P. 276. See R. v. Powell,
Leach, 77.

⁵ R. v. Vaughan, 8 C. & P. 276.

⁶ R. v. Carter, 7 C. & P. 134.

⁷ R. v. Williams, 20 L. J. M. C. 106. The request was,

"Sydney St. Dec. 22nd, 1849.

"Mr. Beeran. S— Please to send by bearer a quantity of basket nails to clasp, for

"E. Lloyd."

⁸ R. v. Dixon, 3 Cox, 289. See, however, R. v. Smith, cor. Coleridge, J. contra, 2 Cox, 358.

The prisoner pleaded guilty, but the judges held that this was a request, not an order, and the conviction was held wrong.¹

The following paper was charged in an indictment as an undertaking, and a warrant, and an order for the payment of money :

“Taunton, Fore Street, Feb. 20, 1841.

“Messrs. Seager, Evans, & Co.

“Gentlemen,—I shall feel obliged by your paying Mr. Bennett the sum of 2*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*, and debiting me with the same; you will please have a receipt, and add the amount to invoice of order in hand.

“I am, &c.,

“T. D. Chappell.

“London, Feb. 24.
“T. Bennett.”

“Distillers, &c., Millbank, Westminster, “Received 2*l.* 7*s.* 8*d.*

The judges held this to be a forged request, and the conviction wrong. It was not an undertaking, for none was expressed in the document. It was not an order, for it did not purport to be one in form. It was no warrant according to the decided cases, though it might have been otherwise if res integra. It was not an authority to pay over, the prisoner having no control over the money. The conviction was considered wrong.² So again :

“Monmouth, June 9, 1842.

“Mr. Fisher, I should feel greatly obliged if you will please to send me by the bearer the sum of 3*l.*, as I have had a large quantity of bones this week, and the man from Coleford is coming in to-morrow with 10 cwt. I have about one ton now.

“Yours, Thomas Davis.

“Mr. P. Fisher, Lanwanne.”

This was laid in the indictment as an order for the payment of money. But the judges held the conviction wrong, because this was not an order, but only a request, the party not having any right nor power to make an order.³

“I hereby authorize my servant man, Abraham Egan, to procure a watch of you.

“To Mr. Thomas Kellitt, Thorn.”

Cresswell, J., admitting the fineness of the distinction, held that the instrument was not properly described as an order and request for the delivery of goods, and directed an indictment to be preferred for obtaining the watch by false pretences.⁴ The register of shareholders bearing the seal of the company, and kept according to 8 & 9 Vict. c. 16, s. 9, is evidence to prove the fact of A. being an individual shareholder without more, and further proof need not be given that such a person might be defrauded.⁵ The proof of the receipt of goods by the prisoner is, by itself, no evi-

¹ R. v. Newton, 2 Moo. C. C. 59.

² R. v. Thorn, 2 Moo. C. C. 210; Car. & M. 206.

³ R. v. Roberts, 2 Moo. C. C. 258; Car. & M. 652.

⁴ R. v. Egan, 1 Cox, 29.

⁵ R. v. Nash, Den. & P. 493.

dence of uttering an order. He went to the station and inquired for, and got the parcel in question. This was held to be no evidence of uttering.¹ Nevertheless, it must be understood that an order for the delivery of goods is not the less so, because it may likewise be an undertaking for the payment of money. Thus:—"Please to let the lad have a hat, and I will answer for the money."²

The goods mentioned in the forged request need not be specified, as "Sir, please to deliver my work to the bearer."³ A description for legal certainty will be enough. Thus: "Please to let the bearer, William Gaff, have spilshord and grafting tool for me."⁴ So, "Please to let the bearer, A.B., have for — 4 yards of linen."⁵ Therefore, the defendant was acquitted upon an indictment for obtaining money under false pretences.⁶ So again, "Please to give bearer 2 bars of solder, 2 brushes. Mr. Chapman, Lambs Conduit Place."⁷ So, "Please to let W. T. have such things as he wants for the purpose. I have the amount of 27*l.* for M. C. in my keeping for many years." The prisoner had said that M. C. had died, and had left him 50*l.* or 60*l.* in the hands of the person whose name he had forged, and that he wanted mourning.⁸ And the request need not be addressed to any person.⁹ So again, "August 3, 1839, one 16 in. helmet scoop, one 4 qt. kettle, James Hayward." This was held to be a request for the delivery of goods.¹⁰ Therefore, the objection which prevailed in Clinch's case as to the want of an address prevails no longer.¹¹ A permit to taste wine at the docks, although not countersigned by the clerk of the company, through which omission the fraud was discovered, was held to be an order within 1 Will. 4, c. 66. And secondly, the court held it to be an order for the delivery of goods, and although the quantity delivered for testing was very small, yet the court would not apply the maxim de minimis non curat lex.¹² The rule respecting special averments, used to obtain in the case of warrants, orders, and requests of this nature. So, that where the following paper was alleged in the indictment to be a forged request, without an innuendo to explain it, it was not considered to be an instrument within the stat. 1 Will. 4, c. 66.

"Per bearer.

"88 Aldgate St.

"2¼ superior counterpain.

"J. Davies.

"E. Twell."

In this case the jury said they considered this paper as a request

¹ R. v. Johnson, 6 Cox, 18.

² R. v. White, 9 C. & P. 282.

³ R. v. Jones, Leach, 53.

⁴ R. v. James, 8 C. & P. 292.

⁵ R. v. Evans, 5 C. & P. 553.

⁶ S. C.

⁷ R. v. Hussey, 1 Cox, 345.

⁸ R. v. Thomas, 2 Moo. C. C. 16; 7 C. & P. 851.

⁹ R. v. Carney, 1 Moo. C. C. 351. And see R. v. Cullen, Id. 300.

¹⁰ R. v. Pulbrook, 9 C. & P. 37.

¹¹ Leach, 540.

¹² R. v. Illidge, Den. C. C. 404; 2 Car. & K. 871.

for the delivery of goods mentioned in it, and such papers were in trade so considered. But the judges directed the judgment to be arrested, for the words "per bearer" did not necessarily import "send per bearer." They might mean, "I have sent per bearer." There was no innuendo to explain them.¹ But now, since the 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 123, s. 3, it would appear that such an objection would not be efficient. A forged request has been distinctly recognized to be within the provisions of the Act.² [Trim. 2s.] By presenting this, the prisoner obtained what he wanted. But Platt, B., and Patteson, J., said, this was neither an order nor a request, and by Platt, B., you cannot by parole evidence make that a request which is not so on the face of it.³ The course of dealing between A. and B. was this: A. wrote the names of persons in a list with a sum against each name. Upon the sight of this list B., was to furnish goods on A.'s credit to each name on the list, and to the amount set against the names. It was held that this list was a request for the delivery of goods, and that an alteration in one of the sums in it was a forgery within the statute of William.⁴

Indictment.] The indictment states that A. on, &c., feloniously did forge a certain warrant [order, request] for the delivery of goods with intent thereby then to defraud, against the form, &c. The principle of admitting secondary evidence in proof of an instrument after due notice to produce the original is well known. Either the prisoner or his attorney may be warned to produce the matter required. And where it appeared that the prisoner's attorney had made use of a deed in an ejectment, which deed had been returned, it was held that the attorney need not be called to say what he had done with the deed, in order to let in secondary evidence after notice.⁵ Secondary evidence in this case being accordingly given, it appeared that several words which were set out at length in the instrument, had been abbreviated in the draft, as "Oxon" for Oxford, &c. It was objected that there was a variance. But the learned judge said that this point was entirely for the jury, and that they must decide whether the words abbreviated in the draft were inserted at length in the deed itself.⁶ Proof of the signing and sealing of a deed is also evidence of the delivery, if the deed be in the possession of the party to be benefited, but not so if it be in the possession of the person to be bound by it.⁷ The intent to defraud may well be gathered from the transaction itself. The prisoner's asseverations of honest intentions will avail him but slightly if his conduct be not consistent with them. Thus, in the case of uttering a forged stock receipt, although the prosecutor and his brother swore they believed that the prisoner had no design to commit a fraud, yet as it was the necessary effect and consequence of the forgery, if the prisoner could not repay the

¹ R. v. Cullen, 1 Moo. C. C. 300; 5 C. & P. 116.

² R. v. Robson, 2 Moo. C. C. 183.

³ R. v. Ellis, 4 Cox, 258.

⁴ R. v. Walters, Car. & M. 588.

⁵ R. v. Hunter, 4 C. & P. 128.

⁶ S. C. Verdict, Not guilty.

⁷ R. v. Hayworth, 1 Lew. C. C. 122.

money, it was sufficient evidence of the intent for the jury to convict the prisoner, and the judges held the conviction right.¹ The prisoner, in this last case, was acquitted upon the two first counts, because they charged an intent to defraud the governor and company of the Bank of England, whereas it appeared in evidence that one R. M. alone could have been defrauded.²

CHAPTER XII.

FORGERY CONNECTED WITH RECORDS AND PROCESS.

Forgery connected with records and process.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 27, whosoever shall forge or fraudulently alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or fraudulently altered, any record, writ, return, panel, process, rule, order, warrant, interrogatory, deposition, affidavit, affirmation, recognizance, cognovit actionem, or warrant of attorney, or any original document whatsoever, of or belonging to any court of record, or any bill, petition, process, notice, rule, answer, pleading, interrogatory, deposition, affidavit, affirmation, report, order, or decree, or any original document whatsoever of or belonging to any court of equity or court of admiralty in England or Ireland, or any document or writing, or any copy of any document or writing, used or intended to be used as evidence in any court in this section mentioned, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 28, punishments are ordained against any person who being the clerk of any court, or other officer having the custody of the records of any court, or his deputy, shall utter any false copy or certificate of any record,³ knowing the same to be false; and who, other than such clerk, officer, or deputy, shall sign or certify any copy or certificate of any record as such clerk, officer, or deputy; or shall forge or fraudulently alter, or offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or fraudulently altered, any copy or certificate of any record, or shall offer, &c. any copy or certificate of any record having thereon any false or forged name, handwriting, or signature, knowing the same to be false or forged; or shall forge the seal of any court of record, or forge or fraudulently alter any process of any court other than such courts as in the last preceding section mentioned, or shall serve or enforce any forged process of any court, knowing the same to be forged, or deliver or cause to be delivered to any person any paper falsely purporting to be any such process, or a copy thereof, or to be any judgment, decree, or order of any court of law or equity, or a copy thereof, knowing the same to be false, or shall act or profess to act under any such false process, knowing the same to be false.¹

¹ R. v. Sheppard, Russ. & Ry. 169.

² Russ. & Ry. ut supra.

³ This will include false certificates of convictions.

And by sect. 29, the same penalties await those who shall forge or fraudulently alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or fraudulently altered, any instrument, whether written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, which is or shall be made evidence by any Act, and for which offence no punishment is herein provided.

It does not appear that the stat. 8 Ric. 2, c. 4, is repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 27, but it is virtually superseded by that statute. It declares, that if any judge or clerk falsely enter any pleas, rase any rolls, or charge any verdict to the disherison of any one, he shall be punished by a fine to the king, and by making satisfaction to the injured party. But the stat. 8 Hen. 6, c. 12, concerning the stealing or secreting of records, has been repealed.

A letter was written by the prisoner threatening county court proceedings, not in any way resembling process, but headed with the royal arms, and purporting to be signed by the clerk of a county court. His conviction was held right.² Bramwell, B., thought that the statute applied only to false pretences when there was a genuine process.³ But the same rule was applied afterwards, and Evans's case was relied upon,⁴ and Bramwell, B., held himself bound by R. v. Evans.⁵

By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 94, s. 19, every person belonging to the public record office, who shall certify any writing as a true and authentic record in the custody of the master of the rolls, knowing it to be materially false; and any person who shall for that purpose counterfeit the signature of an assistant record keeper, or shall forge the seal of the public record office, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to transportation⁶ for life, or not less than seven years,⁷ or to imprisonment not exceeding four years.

¹ Judges, bailiffs of inferior courts, counties, hundreds, honours, manors, &c. By 7 Vict. c. 19, s. 9, the word "judge" in that Act shall mean the county clerk, under sheriff, steward, or other person by or before whom the court shall be holden. By sect. 5, to forge the seal or any process of the court, or knowingly serve or enforce such process, or knowingly deliver a false copy of a summons from the court, or act under it, or to act as a bailiff of such court without authority, was made felony, and punishable with penal servitude under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, or imprisonment under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 8. This Act is not repealed.

² R. v. Evans, Dears. & B. 236; 26 L. J. M. C. 92.

³ S. C.

⁴ R. v. Richmond, 28 L. J. M. C. 188.

⁵ S. C.

⁶ Now penal servitude.

⁷ Penal servitude not exceeding three years.

CHAPTER XIII.

FORGERY OF COURT ROLLS.

Forgery of court rolls.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 30, Whosoever shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any court roll or copy of any court roll, relating to any copyhold or customary estate, with intent to defraud, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Indictment.] That A. on, &c., a certain court roll [or copy of a court roll] feloniously did forge with intent to defraud.

Second count—uttering.

CHAPTER XIV.

FORGERY—REGISTRY ACTS.

Registry Acts.] The forgery of memorials, affidavits, &c., under the Registry Acts,¹ is made punishable by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 31, by which, whosoever shall forge or fraudulently alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or fraudulently altered, any memorial, affidavit, affirmation, entry, certificate, indorsement, document, or writing, made or issued under the provisions of any Act passed or hereafter to be passed for or relating to the registry of deeds, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of or belonging to any office for the registry of deeds, or any stamp or impression of any such seal; or shall forge any name, handwriting, or signature purporting to be the name, handwriting, or signature of any person to any such memorial, &c., which shall be required or directed to be signed by or by virtue of any Act, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any such memorial or other writing as in this section before mentioned, having thereon any such forged stamp or impression of any such seal, or any such forged name, handwriting, or signature, knowing the same to be forged, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

¹ 2 & 3 Ann. c. 4 [West Riding of Yorkshire]; 5 Ann. c. 18 [Investments of such deeds]; 6 Ann. c. 35, s. 26 [East Riding]; 7 Ann. c. 20 [Middlesex]; 8 Geo. 2, c. 6, s. 31 [North Riding of Yorkshire]; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 72.

CHAPTER XV.

FORGING ORDERS OF JUSTICES, RECOGNIZANCES, &c.

Forging orders of justices, recognizances, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 32, whosoever, with intent to defraud, shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any summons, conviction, order, or warrant of any justice of the peace, or any recognizance purporting to have been entered into before any justice of the peace, or other officer authorized to take the same, or any examination, deposition, affidavit, affirmation, or solemn declaration, taken or made before any justice of the peace, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be kept in penal servitude for three years, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 34, whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall, in the name of any other person, acknowledge any recognizance or bail, or any cognovit actionem, or judgment, or any deed or other instrument, before any court, judge, or other person lawfully authorized in that behalf, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven years nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

CHAPTER XVI.

FORGERY—ACCOUNTANT-GENERAL, JUDGE OF IRISH LANDED ESTATES COURT, &c.

Forgery—Accountant-general, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 33, whosoever, with intent to defraud, shall forge or alter any certificate, report, entry, indorsement, declaration of trust, note, direction, authority, instrument, or writing, made or purporting or appearing to be made by the accountant-general, or any other officer of the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland, or by any judge or officer of the Landed Estates Court in Ireland, or by any officer of any court in England or Ireland, or by any cashier or other officer or clerk of the governor and company of the Bank of England or Ireland, or the name, handwriting, or signature of any such accountant-general, judge, cashier, officer, or clerk as aforesaid, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any such certificate, &c., knowing the same to be forged or altered, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Registrar of admiralty.] By 53 Geo. 3, c. 151, s. 12, to forge &c., the name or hand of the registrar of the Court of Admiralty, &c., to any certificate, entry, indorsement, &c., in order to receive the money of the suitors, or any certificate, &c., made by such registrar, &c., or knowingly to alter the same, was made felony.¹

¹ And punishable under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, with penal servitude not exceeding three years, or under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, s. 8, with imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement, and once,

twice, or thrice, public whipping. See also 3 & 4 Vict. c. 64. The office of receiver of prebends at the alienation office is abolished. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 82, s. 1. It was felony to forge his handwriting.

CHAPTER XVII.

FORGERY—BIRTHS, BAPTISMS, MARRIAGES, BURIALS.

Forgery—Births, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 35, whosoever shall forge or fraudulently alter any licence of or certificate for marriage,¹ or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any such licence or certificate, knowing the same to be forged or fraudulently altered, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 36, whosoever shall unlawfully destroy, deface, or injure, or cause or permit to be destroyed, defaced, or injured, any register of births, baptisms, marriages, deaths, or burials in England or Ireland,² or any certified copy of such register, or shall forge or fraudulently alter in any such register any entry relating to any birth, baptism, marriage, death, or burial, or any certified copy of such register, or of any part thereof, or shall knowingly and unlawfully insert or cause, &c. in any such register, or in any certified copy thereof, any false entry of any matter relating to any birth, baptism, marriage, death, or burial, or shall knowingly and unlawfully give any false certificate relating to any birth, baptism, marriage, death, or burial, or shall certify any writing to be a copy or extract from any such register, knowing such writing, or the part of such register whereof such copy or extract shall be so given, to be false in any material particular, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of or belonging to any register office or burial board, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any such register, entry, certified copy, certificate, or seal, knowing the same to be false, forged, or altered, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off any copy of any entry in any such register, knowing such entry to be false, forged, or altered, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

And by sect. 37, whosoever shall knowingly and wilfully insert or cause or permit to be inserted in any copy of any register directed or required by law to be transmitted to any registrar or other officer, any false entry of any matter relating to any baptism, marriage, or burial, or shall forge or alter, or shall offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any copy of any register so directed or required to be transmitted as aforesaid, or shall knowingly and wilfully sign or verify any copy of any register so directed or required to be transmitted as aforesaid, which copy shall be false in any part thereof, knowing the same to be false, or shall unlawfully destroy, deface, or injure, or shall for any fraudulent purpose take from its place of deposit, or conceal, any such copy of any register, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be kept in penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

¹ The forgery of a marriage licence is a misdemeanor at common law. R. v. Dudley, 2 Sid. 71; East, P. C. 907.

² “Or any part.” So throughout the clause.

The following was held not to have been an uttering within 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 20. A. gave to B. a forged certificate of a pretended marriage between himself and B. in order that she might give it to C.¹

And by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 81, s. 15, it is enacted, that every person who shall wilfully destroy or injure, or cause to be destroyed or injured, any register book of burials, kept according to the provisions of this Act, or any part or certified copy of any part of such register, or shall falsely make or counterfeit, or cause to be falsely made or counterfeited, any part of any such register or certified copy thereof, or shall wilfully insert or cause to be inserted in any registry book or certified copy thereof any false entry of any burial, or shall wilfully give any false certificate, or shall certify any writing to be a copy or extract of any such register book, knowing the same to be false in any part thereof, or shall forge or counterfeit the seal of any burial board, shall be guilty of felony.

A registrar took down the particulars of a birth from a woman, and had made the entry; she signed it; the particulars were false. This was not a false statement under sect. 41 of the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, but it was a false entry under the 43rd section, and a felony.²

The prisoner was charged with destroying, defacing, and injuring a register of baptisms. The evidence was, that whilst the clergyman turned his back, the prisoner tore off the lower portion of one of the leaves of the parish register. The part of the leaf was entirely torn off and separated from the residue. The prisoner's defence was that the leaf was torn off by accident, but the jury found that it was done wilfully. The case then went before the judges upon three points:—1st, it was said, that as the register, when produced, had the torn piece pasted to the residue of the leaf, so that it was as legible as before, this could not be a destroying, defacing, or injuring within the statute: 2ndly, the indictment charged three distinct offences, destroying, defacing, and injuring, and one offence only was proved: 3rdly, there was no averment of guilty knowledge. But the judges were against the prisoner upon all the points, and the conviction

¹ R. v. Heywood, 2 Car. & K. 352.

² R. v. Dewitt, 2 Car. & K. 905.

was affirmed.¹ It makes no difference that the marriage register cannot be the subject of larceny, and so not within the clause, for the provision is, that no greater certainty need be used than in an indictment for stealing it.² In the same case it was decided that the judge could take judicial notice, that the parish of Seighford, in the county of Stafford, was a parish in England, and that the indictment need not aver that fact.³

CHAPTER XVIII.

DEMANDING MONEY UPON FORGED INSTRUMENTS.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 38, Whosoever, with intent to defraud, shall demand, receive, or obtain, or cause or procure to be delivered or paid to any person, or endeavour to receive or obtain, or to cause or procure to be delivered or paid to any person, any chattel, money, security for money, or other property whatsoever, under, upon, or by virtue of any forged or altered instrument whatsoever, knowing the same to be forged or altered, or under, upon, or by virtue of any probate or letters of administration, knowing the will, testament, codicil, or testamentary writing on which such probate or letters of administration shall have been obtained to have been forged or altered, or knowing such probate or letters of administration to have been obtained by any false oath, affirmation, or affidavit, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

CHAPTER XIX.

FORGERY.—(5 El. c. 14, [repealed.])

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 47, Whosoever shall, after the commencement of this Act, be convicted of any offence which shall have been subjected by any Act or Acts⁴ to the same pains and penalties as are imposed by the Act passed in the fifth year of the reign of Queen Elizabeth, intituled “An Act against Forgers of false Deeds and Writings,” for any of the offences first enumerated in the said Act, shall be guilty of felony, and shall, in lieu of such pains and penalties, be liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

¹ R. v. Bowen, 1 Car. & K. 501 ;
Den. 22.

² R. v. Sharpe, 8 C. & P. 436.

³ Id.

⁴ As the Registry Acts, 2 & 3
Ann. c. 4 ; 5 Ann. c. 18 ; 8
Geo. 2, c. 6, s. 31 ; 7 Ann. c. 30,
&c.

CHAPTER XX.

FORGERY—BANKRUPTCY COURT.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 205, if any person shall forge the signature of any commissioner, registrar, master, &c., of the court, or the seal of the court, or concur in using them for the purpose of authentication, or knowingly tender in evidence any document with a counterfeit signature or seal, he shall be guilty of felony, and punishable under the provisions of 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113.¹

CHAPTER XXI.

FORGERY OF OTHER LEGAL DOCUMENTS.

Official or public documents.] By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, s. 4, if any person shall forge the seal, stamp, or signature of the certificates mentioned in that Act, or of official and public documents, documents of corporations, joint-stock and other companies, or certified copies of documents, byelaws, entries in registers and other books, &c., or knowingly tender in evidence such false instruments, or shall forge the signature of any judge to any order, decree, certificate, &c., or knowingly tender such a false instrument, or if any person shall print a copy of any private Act, or of the Journals of either house of parliament, falsely purporting to have been printed by the printers of the crown, or of either house of parliament, or knowingly tender any such false copy, any such person shall be guilty of felony and punishable with penal servitude not exceeding three years, or imprisonment not exceeding three years, nor less than one year, with hard labour.

Similar punishments are awarded by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 17, against persons forging the seal, stamp, or signature of the documents mentioned in that Act, or wilfully tendering such forged documents.

Lunacy.] The same punishments await such as forge the signature of the registrar in lunacy, or his seal, or who knowingly con-

¹ With penal servitude not exceeding three years, under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, or imprisonment for not more than three years, nor less than one year, with hard labour.

The corresponding section of 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 273, was not repealed, because the new Act did not take effect till the 11th of October.

cur in using such false instruments, or who knowingly tender in evidence any document with a false signature or seal.¹ The signature and seal of the registrar in lunacy are protected in the same manner.²

Court of Chancery officer.] By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 45, s. 112, to forge the signature of any master or registrar or other officer, or the official seal of the report or other office of the Court of Chancery, subscribed, &c. to any order, &c., or to tender the same in evidence, knowing it to be false, is made felony, and punishable as forgeries under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113.³

Court of Admiralty.] By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 78, s. 10, to forge the signature or official seal of any commissioner, judge, or other officer of the Court of Admiralty, or other person authorized to administer oaths, or knowingly to tender in evidence any answers, &c., with a false or fraudulent seal, is made felony, and punishable, &c., under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113.⁴

Probates, &c.] By 20 & 21 Vict. c. 71, s. 28, to forge the signature of any registrar, district registrar, or commissioner for taking oaths, or any seal of the Court of Probate, or knowingly to use or concur in using such, or knowingly to tender in evidence any document with a false signature or seal, is felony, and punishable with penal servitude for life or not less than seven years, or imprisonment not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour.

CHAPTER XXII.

OF PROCEDURE IN FORGERY.

Forging instruments in England or Ireland, purporting to be payable out of England or Ireland.] First, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 40, where the forging or altering any writing or matter whatsoever, or the offering, uttering, disposing of, or putting off any writing or matter whatsoever, knowing the same to be forged or altered, is in this Act expressed to be an offence, if any person shall, in England or Ireland, forge or alter, or offer, utter, dispose of, or put off, knowing the same to be forged or altered, any such writing or matter in whatsoever place or country out of England and Ireland, whether under the dominion of Her Majesty or not, such writing or matter may purport to be made or may have been made,

¹ 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 33.

² 16 & 17 Vict. c. 70, s. 102.

³ That is, by penal servitude not exceeding three years, (20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2,) or imprisonment not exceeding three years, nor less than one year, with hard labour.

⁴ See note 3 above.

and in whatever language the same or any part thereof may be expressed, every such person, and every person aiding, abetting, or counselling, shall be deemed to be an offender within the meaning of this Act, and punishable as if the writing or matter had purported to be made or had been made in England or Ireland; and if any person shall in England or Ireland forge or alter, &c., any bill of exchange, or any promissory note for the payment of money, or any indorsement on or assignment of any bill of exchange or promissory note for the payment of money, or any acceptance of any bill of exchange, or any undertaking, warrant, order, authority, or request for the payment of money, or for the delivery or transfer of any goods or security, or any deed, bond, or writing obligatory for the payment of money (whether such deed, bond, or writing obligatory shall be made only for the payment of money, or for the payment of money together with some other purpose), or any indorsement on or assignment of any such undertaking, &c., in whatsoever place or country out of England and Ireland, whether under the dominion of Her Majesty or not, the money payable or secured by such bill, &c., may be or may purport to be payable, and in whatever language the same respectively or any part thereof may be expressed, and whether such bill, &c., be or be not under seal, every such person, and every person aiding, &c., shall be deemed to be an offender within the meaning of this Act, and punishable as if the money had been payable or had purported to be payable in England or Ireland.

Principal and accessory.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 49, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact in cases of felony under the Act, shall be punishable as principals in the first degree. And the accessory after the fact shall be liable to two years' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement; and every aider and abettor of any misdemeanor under the Act shall be punishable as a principal offender.

The statute of accessories, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94, does not mention the principal in the second degree.

Trial.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 41, if any person shall commit any offence against this Act, or shall commit any offence of forging or altering any matter whatsoever, or of offering, uttering, disposing of, or putting off any matter whatsoever, knowing the same to be forged or altered, whether the offence in any such case shall be indictable at common law, or by virtue of any Act passed or to be passed, every such offender may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished, in any county or place where apprehended, or where in custody, as if his offence had been actually committed there, and every accessory before or after the fact, if the offence be a felony, and every person aiding, &c., if the same be a misdemeanor, may be dealt with, &c., in any county or place where he shall be apprehended or be in custody, as if his offence, and the offence of his principal, had been actually committed in such county or place.

Admiralty.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 50, all indictable offences mentioned in this Act which shall be committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty of England or Ireland shall be deemed to be the like offences as if they had been committed upon the land in England or Ireland, and punishable accordingly, and may be dealt with in any county or place in England or Ireland in which the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, as if actually committed in that county or place; and in any indictment for any such offence, or for accessory, the venue in the margin shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in such county or place, and the offence shall be averred to have been committed on the "high seas;" provided that nothing herein contained shall alter or affect any of the laws relating to the government of Her Majesty's land or naval forces.

Costs in misdemeanor.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 54, the court before which any indictable misdemeanor against this Act shall be prosecuted or tried may allow the costs of the prosecution in the same manner as in felony; and every order for payment shall be made out, and the sum of money mentioned therein paid and repaid, upon the same terms and in all respects as in cases of felony.

Punishments for offences capital before the 1 Will. 4, c. 66, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98.] There are several offences, especially with reference to offences against the revenue, which were punishable with death before the passing of 1 Will. 4, c. 66, and yet were not punishable under that Act. The first section then provided that no such forgeries should any longer remain capital, but be punishable under that Act with other and less penalties.

And now, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48, personation, false representations, false entries, &c., false transfers, false oaths, &c., demands upon the strength of forged documents, also capital before the statute 1 Will. 4, c. 66, offences by any person making or using, or knowingly having in his custody or possession, any frame, mould, or instrument for the making of paper, with certain words visible in the substance thereof, or any person making such paper, or causing certain words to appear visible in the substance of any paper, capital in like manner, shall now, if not punishable under any other provision of the Act, be punishable with penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Fine and sureties.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 51, upon a conviction for a misdemeanor under this Act, the court, in addition to or in lieu of any of the punishments by this Act authorized, may fine the offender, and require him to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour; and in felonies in this Act mentioned the court may require the offender to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace, in addition to any of the punishments by this Act authorized; but no person shall be imprisoned under this clause for not finding sureties for any period exceeding one year.

Hard labour and solitary confinement.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 52, hard labour may be added to imprisonment where both are mentioned as punishments.

And by sect. 53, the solitary confinement may be for any portion of his imprisonment, or imprisonment with hard labour, not exceeding one month at any one time, nor three months in one year.

CHAPTER XXIII.

OF FORGERIES RELATING TO THE GOVERNMENT AND REVENUE.

Forgeries relating to the government and revenue.] It appears that the old Acts relating to stamps, as 12 Geo. 3, c. 48, &c., although not expressly repealed, are yet superseded by more recent enactments. And the first to which we shall advert is the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 7. By that Act if any person shall forge, &c., or cause, &c., any stamp, or die, or any part, relating to any stamp duty, or forge, &c., the impression or any part thereof, upon any vellum, parchment, or paper, or shall stamp or mark, or cause any vellum to be stamped, &c., with a forged stamp, or die, or part, with intent to defraud His Majesty; or if any person shall utter, or sell, or expose to sale any vellum, &c., having thereupon the impression of any such forged stamp, or die, or part, or any such forged impression, or part, knowing the same to have been forged, or if any person shall privately and secretly use any such stamp or die, with a like fraudulent intent, or fraudulently cut, tear, or get off, or cause, &c., the impression of any such stamp, or die, or part, with intent to use the same upon any other vellum, &c., or any instrument or writing charged with duty, he shall, together with aiders and abettors, be guilty of felony.¹ By sect. 8, all the powers, provisions, &c., contained in, and imposed by the Acts of parliament, relating to the duties repealed by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and the several Acts of parliament relating to any prior duties of the same kind, shall be of full force with respect to the duties granted by 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and to the vellum, &c., charged or chargeable therewith, as far as the same are or shall be applicable in all cases hereby not expressly provided for, and shall be observed, &c., so far as the same shall not be superseded by, and shall be consistent with the present Act, as if they were specially enacted with reference to the duties granted under this Act of 55 Geo. 3.

The statute 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 7, is, amongst others, either superseded or repealed by the 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, and 9 Geo. 4,

¹ R. v. Palmer, Leach, 352; East, P. C. 893.

c. 18; but an exception is made when the offences thereby punishable relate to other than the matters specified in such enactment.¹ It is believed that the Act, moreover, of 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 7, contains the provisions now applicable to the forgery of stamps on newspapers. For the 55 Geo. 3, c. 185, and 6 Geo. 4, c. 119, having been in this respect superseded, the Act 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, alone remains to satisfy the provisions of the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 1, concerning newspapers. By that section all the powers, &c., contained in, and imposed by the several Acts of parliament relating to the stamp duties, and not repealed by that Act, shall be of full force and effect with respect to the duties thereby granted as far as the same are or shall be applicable in all cases not thereby (i. e. by 6 & 7 Will. 4) expressly provided for with reference to paper.²

Again, by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 97, s. 12, knowingly, and without lawful excuse, the proof whereof shall be on the person accused, to have in possession any false, forged, or counterfeit die, plate, &c., or part, resembling, &c., any die, &c., of the commissioners of stamps, or any vellum, parchment, or paper, having thereupon the impression of any such false die, &c., or part, or having thereon any false stamp, mark, or impression, resembling, &c., the stamp, &c., of any such die, &c., with a guilty knowledge; or fraudulently using, joining, fixing, or placing for, with, or upon any vellum, &c., any stamp, &c., which shall have been cut, torn, or gotten off from any other vellum, &c., or fraudulently erasing, cutting, scraping, discharging, or getting out of or from any stamped vellum, &c., any name, sum, date, &c., with intent to use any stamp, &c., than that impressed, or that the same may be used for any deed, &c., subject to stamp duty; or knowingly using, uttering, selling, or exposing to sale, or knowingly, &c., (the proof, &c.,) having in possession any stamped vellum, &c., from, or off, or out of which any such name, &c., shall have been fraudulently erased, &c., are respectively declared to be felonies. And aiders and abettors are likewise included within the same penalty. By sect. 11 of this same Act, if false stamps are found in the possession of vendors, licensed to sell stamps, such vendors, unless they can prove the contrary, shall be deemed to have such stamps with intent to vend them.³ By sect. 15, justices may issue warrants for seizing stamps suspected to be stolen or fraudulently obtained. Sect. 24 gives an appeal to the sessions. It is no defence to urge that the prisoner took off a stamp from the parchment innocently in the first instance, as where he cut off the stamps and part of the parchment, if he afterwards separated the blue paper, tearing the impression from the parchment with a fraudulent intent to use it upon some other writing.⁴ But where there was apparently an absence of intention to defraud, although the Act

¹ Lonsdale, p. 78.

² See Lonsdale, 81, note.

³ R. v. Field, Leach, 383.

⁴ R. v. Smith, 1 Moo. C. C. 414; 5 C. & P. 107.

does not say that such an intent is necessary to constitute the offence, Lord Abinger summed up very strongly for an acquittal, and the prisoner was accordingly found not guilty.¹ By 55 Geo. 3, c. 185, s. 7, to forge, &c., or cause, &c., any mark, stamp, or die, provided, &c., under the Act, or any former Act, concerning gold or silver plate, made or wrought in Great Britain, for the purpose of marking or stamping any such plate; or forging, &c., or causing, &c., the impression of any such mark, &c., with a fraudulent intent; or making, &c., or causing, &c., any such plate, or vessel, or any ware of base metal with any such forged mark, &c., or transposing, or removing, or causing, &c., from one piece of gold or silver plate to another, or to any vessel, or ware of base metal, any impression made with any mark, &c., provided or made, &c., as aforesaid, or selling, exchanging, or exposing to sale, or exporting out of Great Britain, any such plate or vessel, &c., with a forged mark or impression, or transposed impression, with a guilty knowledge, or wilfully and without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the person accused) having the possession of any such forged mark, &c., or privately and secretly using any mark, &c., with intent to defraud, are made felonies, and aiders and abettors are included in the like provisions.

By 9 Geo. 4, c. 18, s. 35, to forge, &c., or cause, &c., any type, die, seal, stamp, mark, plate, or device, or any part provided, &c., by the commissioners of stamps, under the Act, or to counterfeit, or cause, &c., the impression thereof, or any part, upon any playing card or dice, or upon any label, thread, or paper, or forging, &c., the name, handwriting, or signature of any sealing officer or other officer of stamps, to, or upon, any paper, wrapper or material, in which any dice shall be actually inclosed; or forging, &c., or causing, &c., any mark or name, or any part directed to be used by the commissioners of stamps, in order to distinguish the maker of any such cards, &c., and printed and marked on, or affixed to, or making part of the wrapper, label, or paper, in which any playing cards or dice shall be actually inclosed, with intent to defraud; or to utter or sell, or expose to sale, or part with for use in play, any card, die, ace of spades, label, wrapper, or jeu whatsoever, with such counterfeit seal, stamp, &c., knowing the same to be counterfeit; or privately or fraudulently to use any seal, &c. of the commissioners of stamps, with intent to defraud, are respectively made felonies.

This enactment supersedes or repeals the statute 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 7, except so far as the offences thereby made punishable relate to other than the materials specified in such enactments.²

What is an uttering.] The act of delivering a box containing, amongst other things, forged stamps, to the servant of the party himself, and by his own hands, in order that the box might be forwarded to a customer in the country, was held to be an uttering.

¹ R. v. Allday, 8 C. & P. 136.

² Lonsdale, p. 78.

And, moreover, as all the parts of the stamps so uttered, and which were visible, were like genuine stamps, it was still deemed to be an uttering, notwithstanding that certain parts which were concealed were unlike true stamps.¹ And again, in the same case, it was held, that the indictment need not set out the impression or inscription, or the stamp, and, therefore, that the mention of it as a "certain paper writing with a forged and counterfeit mark;" and again, "a certain mark" and "a certain stamp" was correct.²

Judgment.] The judgment under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 7, is, that the party be transported for life, or not less than seven years,³ or suffer imprisonment not exceeding four nor less than two years, with or without hard labour and solitary confinement.

Under 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 97, s. 12, the sentence was transportation for life, or not less than seven years,⁴ or imprisonment not exceeding four nor less than two years. The judgment under 55 Geo. 3, c. 185, s. 7, is the same with that under 55 Geo. 3, c. 184, s. 7, and the incidents are similar; under 9 Geo. 4, c. 18, s. 35, there is the same judgment.

By 2 Will. 4, c. 16, s. 3, every person who shall make, or cause or procure to be made, or shall aid or assist in the making, or shall knowingly have in his, her, or their custody or possession, not being authorized by the said commissioners, and without lawful excuse, the proof whereof shall lie on the person accused, any mould or frame or other instrument having therein the words "excise office," or any other words, figures, marks, or devices peculiar to and appearing in the substance of the paper used by the said commissioners for permits, or with any or part of such words, figures, marks, or devices, or any of them, intended to imitate or pass for the same; and every person, except as before excepted, who shall make, or cause or procure to be made, or aid or assist in the making, any paper in the substance of which the words "excise office," or any other words, figures, marks, or devices peculiar to or appearing in the substance of the paper used by the commissioners of excise for permits, or any part of such words, figures, marks, or devices, or any of them, intended to imitate and pass for the same, shall be visible; and every person, except as before excepted, who shall knowingly have in his, her, or their custody or possession, without lawful excuse, (the proof whereof shall lie on the person accused,) any paper whatever in the substance of which the words "excise office," or any other words, figures, marks, or devices peculiar to and appearing in the substance of paper used by the commissioners of excise for permits, or any part of such words, figures, marks, or devices, or of any of them, intended to imitate and pass for the same, shall be visible; and every person, except as before excepted, who shall, by any art, ¹ R. v. Collicott, Russ. & Ry. 212, 229; Leach, 1048; 4 Taunt. 300. or not less than three years: 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

² Leach, 1048, 1053; 1 Will. 4, c. 66, ss. 1, 26. ⁴ Now penal servitude for life under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, or not less than seven years.

³ Now penal servitude for life, mystery, or contrivance, cause or procure, or aid or assist in causing or procuring, the words "excise office," or any other words, figures, marks, or devices peculiar to and appearing in the substance of the paper used by the commissioners of excise for permits, or any or part of such words, figures, marks, or devices, or any of them, intended to imitate and pass for the same, to appear visible in the substance of any paper whatever; and every person, not authorized or appointed as aforesaid, who shall engrave, cast, cut, or make, or cause or procure to be engraved, cast, cut, or made, or aid or assist in engraving, casting, cutting, or making, any plate, type, or other thing in imitation of or to resemble any plate or type made or used by the direction of the commissioners of excise for the purpose of marking or printing the paper to be used for permits; and every person, except as before excepted, who shall knowingly have in his or her custody or possession, without lawful excuse, proof whereof shall lie on the person accused, any such plate or type; shall for every such offence be adjudged a felon, and shall be transported for the term of seven years, or shall be imprisoned, at the discretion of the court before whom such person shall be tried, for any period not less than two years.¹

Paymaster-general.] To forge the handwriting of the paymaster-general appointed under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 35, seems to be punishable with penal servitude for life, or not less than three years, or with imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.²

Excise.] By 46 Geo. 3, c. 75, s. 8, to forge the handwriting of the receiver-general of excise to any draft, &c., or knowingly to utter the same, was made felony.³

Permits.] By 2 Will. 4, c. 16, s. 3, persons making paper in imitation of excise paper, and forgers of plates or types for permits are guilty of felony, and punishable by penal servitude⁴ not exceeding three years, or imprisonment for not less than two years. And by sect. 4, to forge a permit, or any stamp or mark belonging to it, or knowingly to alter it, is a misdemeanor, punishable with penal servitude not exceeding three years,⁵ or fine and imprisonment.

Customs.] By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 28, to forge the handwriting of the receiver-general of the customs, or of the comptroller-general, &c. to any draft or instrument to obtain money from the bank, or to forge any draft, in form of a draft, or utter the same with intent to defraud, is felony, and punishable with

¹ Penal servitude: 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

² 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48; 46 Geo. 3, c. 45, s. 9; 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 35, s. 7.

³ Now punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 95, s. 48.

⁴ 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

⁵ Id.

transportation for life.¹ By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 304, offences relating to the customs may be tried in any county. And by sect. 305, such prosecutions, whether by suit, indictment, or information, are limited to three years next after the date of the offence. But this does not apply to an indictment found by the grand jury at the assizes,² nor to an indictment, wherever preferred, for a conspiracy to remove goods fraudulently from a bonding warehouse.³

Stamps.] By 46 Geo. 3, c. 76, s. 9, to forge the handwriting of the receiver of the stamp duties, &c., to a draft, &c. upon the bank, or a draft in form of a draft, or knowingly to utter the same, is felony, and punishable with penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Mediterranean passes.] The proceeding for forging or uttering a Mediterranean pass is almost obsolete, though not abolished. The offence would be punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48. The same may be said of forging certificates of quarantine.⁴

However, by 6 Geo. 4, c. 78, s. 21, if any officer of the customs or other officer charged with the duties of quarantine, shall desert his duty, or permit any person, vessel, goods, or merchandise to depart, or be conveyed out of the lazaret, vessel, &c., without permission from the king or privy council, or shall give a false certificate of the performance of quarantine, he shall be guilty of felony.⁵

Loans. Scrip receipts.] The forgery of scrip receipts in respect of loans is punishable, unless otherwise dealt with, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48. The uttering of a scrip receipt is complete if it happens after the passing of an Act of parliament, although it might have been signed before. But an indictment, stating that the prisoner forged a scrip receipt, signed C. O., and purporting to have been signed by one "Christopher O," was deemed bad.⁶ Another indictment, however, setting out the tenor only of the instrument, was held sufficient.⁷ And it was likewise held, that a scrip receipt, stating the subscription to have been in respect of so much three per cent. consols, was good for a new loan;⁸ and that such a receipt was valid, though the subscribers were entitled not only to the consols, but also to reduced and to long annuities.⁹

Land tax.] By 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 6, to forge a certificate for

¹ Now penal servitude for life :
20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

² R. v. Thompson, 16 Q. B.
832.

³ Id. Coleridge, J.

⁴ 6 Geo. 4, c. 78, s. 25.

⁵ And punishable under 7 Geo. 4,
c. 28, ss. 8, 9.

⁶ R. v. Reeves, Leach, 808.

⁷ Leach, 819.

⁸ Id. 816.

⁹ Id. 818.

the redemption or sale of the land tax, or knowingly to utter it, is punishable in like manner under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48.

Public works and fisheries.] And so again, with regard to certificates for authorizing exchequer bills to carry on public works and fisheries.¹ But this Act is said to be superseded, as to receipts, by 1 Will. 4, c. 66, s. 10,² and the offence was punishable under this latter statute, and now under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48.

Public pensions and salaries.] With respect to public pensions and salaries, the orders under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 24, concerning these, are orders for the payment of money, and the punishment is, therefore, regulated by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48.

Life annuities.] By 10 Geo. 4, c. 24, s. 41, to forge the registers of nominees, or to make any false declarations, warrants, &c. with reference to life annuities, is made penal and punishable in like manner. So it is in the case of forging or uttering registers, certificates, and transfers concerning the national debt.³

Navy pay and prize money.] So to forge any instrument relating to the pay, prize money, bounty, purser's money, &c. of the navy, or any certificate, or any receipt for wages, &c., or the handwriting of any officer of the navy, or marines, &c., or uttering any similar documents,⁴ or to personate any commission, warrant or petty officer, seaman, or commission or non-commissioned officer of marines, or the wife, widow, or relation, executor, administrator, or creditor of any such officer, &c., or any person entitled to any allowance from the compassionate fund of the navy, in order to receive any wages, pay, &c. with intent to defraud.⁵

By 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 20, s. 85, fraudulently and deceitfully to take a false oath, in order to obtain probate of any will or letters of administration of the effects of any deceased commission, warrant, or petty officer, or seaman, or commission or non-commissioned officer of marines, or marine, &c. fraudulently to receive or demand any wages, pay, prize money, &c. payable or supposed to be payable for the service of any such officer, &c., or from the compassionate fund of the navy, or any pension to the widow of an officer upon or by virtue of any probate, &c. with a guilty knowledge, is made felony, and punishable as in the case above mentioned under sect. 84. By sect. 86, to subscribe any false petition or application to the treasurer of the navy, or to the paymaster of marines, with a false and deceitful representation that

¹ 3 Geo. 4, c. 86.

² Lonsdale, 87.

³ 2 Will. 4, c. 59, s. 19; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48.

⁴ 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 20, ss. 83, 88; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98,

s. 48. The 2 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 35, repeals certain portions of this Act of 11 Geo. 4.

⁵ 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 20, s. 84.

the party is the widow, executor, or nearest of kin of any deceased commission or warrant officer of the navy, or commissioned officer of the marines, or any petty officer or seaman, &c., or to utter or publish any such petition, &c. with a guilty knowledge, in order to procure or enable any other person to procure a certificate from the inspector of seamen's wills or paymaster of marines, and thereby to obtain or enable any other person to obtain without probate, or letters of administration, payment of any wages, &c., or probate, &c., or to receive or demand any wages, &c., with a guilty knowledge, is made felony, and punishable by transportation¹ for fourteen, or not less than seven years, or imprisonment for three years, or not less than one year. By sect. 88, all imprisonments may be with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement. Principals in the second degree, and accessories before the fact, are to be punished as principals in the first degree.² Accessories after the fact are punishable with imprisonment (as above), not exceeding two years.

Army prize money, &c.] By 2 Will. 4, c. 53, s. 49, knowingly and willingly to personate, &c. (or procure the same), the name or character of any officer, &c., supposed to be entitled to any prize money, &c., for or on account of any service performed, &c. by any officer, &c., or to personate, &c. (or aid and procure the same), the name or character of the executor or administrator, wife, widow, next of kin, relation, or creditor of any such officer, &c., in order to receive, or enable any other person to receive, any prize money, &c., due or payable, or supposed so to be, for or on account of any service performed, &c., by any such officer, &c., with intention to receive, obtain, or claim, or to enable any other person to receive, obtain, or claim, from the commissioners of the Royal Hospital, or from any officer, under officer, &c., the payment of any such prize money, &c., with intention to defraud any person or body corporate, or knowingly to take a false oath in order to receive, obtain, or claim any prize money, &c., or demand or receive any prize money, &c., due or payable, &c., upon letters of administration or probate of a will, knowing the will to be forged, or the letters of administration, or the probate of such will, to have been obtained by means of such false oath, with intention to defraud any person or body corporate, are all respectively made felonies, and punishable with transportation³ for life, or not less than seven years.⁴ Accessories after the fact seem to be punishable under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28.⁵ By sect. 50, all prize money, &c., which shall become payable to the treasurer or deputy treasurer of Chelsea Hospital, as in the Act is

¹ Penal servitude for fourteen and not less than three years.

² R. v. Potts, Russ. & Ry. 353.

³ Penal servitude: 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

⁴ Penal servitude not less than three years.

⁵ Sect. 8, 9. Lonsdale, pp. 55,

36.

mentioned, shall be deemed to be public monies in the hands of any person receiving or detaining the same. Under statutes of a similar nature with these it has been held that the prosecutor must give direct evidence of the taking of the oath, and although the counsel for the prosecution upon one occasion requested that the opinion of the judges might be taken upon the point, the court directed the jury that unless they believed that the prisoner had actually taken the oath, they should acquit him.¹ In forgery, a conviction may take place although the offender has employed a fictitious name, or that of a person who never had existence, but this is not so in personation. Brown was indicted for personating William Wheeler, in order to obtain certain prize money for services on board the Terpsichore. But it turned out that there was no such person as William Wheeler on board that ship, nor was there any evidence of the existence of such a person. The judges held the conviction wrong.² So, again, the prisoner was charged with personating Peter M'Cann, in order to gain prize money for services done on board the Tremendous. It appeared that there was such a person as Peter M'Cann entitled to prize money, but not Peter M'Cann. The jury found that the prisoner meant to personate Peter M'Cann, but the judges held that he had not been rightly convicted, for there was no person named M'Cann who could be said to have been connected with the ship, and that was a fact necessary to be proved upon the indictment.³ But the objection of non-existence does not stand in the same light with that of the death of a soldier or seaman, who, of course, was once the living person entitled to the prize money, or supposed to have such a claim. In the latter cases the decease of that party before the offence will not make it the less punishable, as where the prisoner was charged with personating J. B., a seaman, for the purpose of acquiring certain prize money. The clerk, however, said he had reason to believe that J. B. was dead, upon which the prisoner went away, but was subsequently apprehended. It was objected for him that the statute applied to existing persons only, and, therefore, that he, who was dead, could not be supposed to be entitled to the prize money which his next of kin were at that time endeavouring to obtain by suing out letters of administration, and Brown's case was cited. It was answered, that several convictions had taken place under such circumstances, and the judges were of opinion that the conviction was proper.⁴

West Indies relief commissioners.] So to forge any certificate, &c. of the West Indies relief commissioners.⁵

¹ R. v. Brady, Leach, 327. Verdict, Not guilty.

² R. v. Brown, East, P. C. 1007. R. v. M'Annely, Id. 1009.

³ R. v. Tannet, Russ. & Ry. 351.

⁴ R. v. Martin, Russ. & Ry. 324.

R. v. Cramp, S. P. Id. 327. Both cases were tried in Kent by Bosanquet, Serjt., and both convictions were affirmed.

⁵ 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 125, s. 64; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48.

Abolition of slavery receipts.] So again to forge, alter, or utter any receipt connected with the abolition of slavery, was made punishable in like manner, under 1 Vict. c. 84, s. 1.¹

Officers at Chelsea. Prize money.] To forge the hand of any public officer at Chelsea concerned in the paying of prize money is felony, and punishable by transportation for life, or not less than seven years.² And by the same clause it is equally penal to forge, &c., the name of any officer, non-commissioned officer, soldier, or other person entitled to prize money, grant, bounty money, share or other allowance of money, as pensions, or any letter of attorney, bill, ticket, order, certificate, voucher, receipt, will, &c., concerning the payment of prize money, for the purpose of obtaining the same, and it is the same to utter such instruments with a guilty knowledge.³

Half-pay officers' widows' pension.] By 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 3, it is felony to forge any certificate, &c., concerning half-pay officers' and widows' pensions. And it is an offence punishable with penal servitude not exceeding three years, or imprisonment not exceeding four years.⁴ In order to sustain an indictment under these statutes, it is not necessary that the person should ever have had existence, therefore an indictment for forging a letter of attorney relating to a pension merely supposed to be payable, was held good.⁵

Soldiers' and sailors' pensions.] By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 51, s. 9, to forge, &c., or aid or assist, &c., in forging any minute, &c., or other allowance, order, &c., concerning the payment of any pension money under that Act, or to utter the same as true, &c., or forge the name of any pensioner, justice, guardian, parish officer, &c., authorized to sign any such document, in order to obtain or enable any other person to obtain payment of the same, is declared to be felony. And the convict may be transported for such term of years, or suffer such other punishment as the court may adjudge.⁶

The following offences are declared to be punishable with such pains and penalties, as by laws in force any persons convicted of forgery are subject to.⁷

Savings banks.] To forge the registers of birth, baptism, death, or burial, under the Savings Bank Annuities Act, or any copy or ¹ 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 12; 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48. See also 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 51.

² 2 Will. 4, c. 53, s. 49. Penal servitude: 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

³ See 9 Geo. 4, c. 16, s. 38. Which, as far as it relates to prize money, is probably superseded by this statute.

⁴ 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

⁵ R. v. Pringle, 2 Moo. C. C. 127; 9 C. & P. 408.

⁶ The section as to punishments is rather inartificially drawn, but it would seem that penal servitude for any term short of life, or imprisonment, may be inflicted.

⁷ 16 & 17 Vict. c. 45.

certificate of the same, or the name of any witness to such certificate, or any declaration made under the Act, or any justice's certificate, or officer's certificate, under the commissioners for the reduction of the national debt, of any such declaration having been taken before him, or any certificate of any governor, person acting as such, minister, or consul, or chief magistrate of any province, town, or place, or other person authorized by this Act to grant any certificate of the life or death of any annuitant.

National debt.] Also to forge, &c., certificates of officers of the commission for the reduction, &c., or of any cashier or clerk of the Bank of England or Ireland, or the name of any person in or to any certificate or other instrument for the payment of money for the purchase of any annuity, or sum payable at death, under the provisions of this Act, or in or to any receipt or discharge for any such annuity, or in or to any receipt or discharge for any payment due or to become due therein, or for any sum payable at death, under the provisions of this Act; or authorizing, or purporting to authorize the receipt of any life annuity, or any annuity for years of whatsoever kind, or sum payable at death, granted under this Act, or the Acts hereby repealed,¹ or any payment due or to become due thereon; wilfully to personate any true and real annuitant;² wilfully to utter, or deliver, or produce any such forged register or copy, or any such forged certificate or declaration knowingly, &c.;—all these acts are felonies, and punishable as any persons convicted of forgery are by any laws in force liable to.³

Savings banks. Seamen.] So to forge or make false representations in order to obtain deposits or interest under the Act for establishing savings banks for seamen, is made punishable with penal servitude not exceeding four years, or imprisonment with or without hard labour not exceeding two years, or, if upon a summary conviction and prosecution, by imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding six calendar months.⁴ All criminal proceedings are, by sect. 9, to be carried on as under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1852.

Public works, woods and forests.] The surveyor of public works, woods, and forests, or his deputy, is protected by the statute 10 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 124, and 2 Will. 4, c. 1, s. 1, and the punishment appears to rest under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, ss. 8, 9.⁵

¹ 3 Will. 4, c. 14; 7 & 8 Vict. c. 83.

² 16 & 17 Vict. c. 45, s. 31.

³ Id. It is difficult to say what sentence should be pronounced. This is a forgery not capital, 1 Will. 4, c. 66, and, therefore, not within the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48. It was not intended that this should be treated as a forgery at common law, but it would seem to be a stretch of the interpretation statutes to hold it otherwise.

⁴ 19 & 20 Vict. c. 41, s. 6.

⁵ Lonsdale, p. 196. And it is certainly a subject for discussion how far the punishment can be otherwise than at common law.

Wrappers. Playing cards.] By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 116, to forge, &c., any wrapper belonging to playing cards, or utter, or be possessed, without lawful excuse, of the same, is felony, and punishable in like manner as forging names or marks provided by the commissioners of inland revenue.¹

Ship's registry.] By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 101, to forge, &c., utter, &c., any register book, or certificate, &c., bill of sale, or other instrument relating to a ship's registry, is declared to be felony.² By sect. 179, every shipping master, or other public officer, who grants or issues any money order with a fraudulent intent, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding four years. By sect. 203, every person forging, &c., uttering, &c., any document regarding seamen's wages and property, or making use thereof, or giving or procuring false evidence or representation, shall be punishable with penal servitude not exceeding four years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding two years, or, upon summary conviction, imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding six months.³

Petty Bag Office.] By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 109, s. 20, to forge any seal belonging to the Petty Bag Office, or make or utter such, or use or tender in evidence or utter any such false impression with a guilty knowledge, or to forge any writ, record, &c., of the office, or out of chancery, or tender in evidence, the same as before, unlawfully and falsely to stamp or seal with any seals belonging thereto any writ, &c., or fraudulently tender in evidence the same so falsely sealed, is made felony. And all persons aiding, abetting, or assisting are likewise punishable as felons.⁴

Post office and postage duties.] By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 33, to forge the handwriting of the receiver-general of the post office, or of that of any person employed by, or under him, to any draft, &c., or to forge, &c., any draft, warrant, or order of such person with a fraudulent intent, is declared to be felony, and punishable with transportation for life;⁵ or by sect. 41, for not less than seven years,⁶ or imprisonment

¹ Penal servitude for life, or not less than seven years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, or solitary confinement.

² And punishable under 7 Geo. 4, c. 28, ss. 8, 9.

³ The better opinion would be, notwithstanding the omission, that the convict would be guilty of felony.

⁴ Id est, with penal servitude not exceeding three years, (20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2,) or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement. 28 Geo. 4, c. 28, ss. 8, 9.

⁵ Penal servitude for life: 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

⁶ Penal servitude not exceeding three years.

for a term not exceeding four years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.¹

By sect. 35 of this Act of 1 Vict. c. 36, principals in the second degree and accessories are to be punished as principals, and accessories after the fact (except receivers) may be imprisoned for two years.² The trial may be where the party has committed the offence, or where he is apprehended, or is in custody.³

The 39th section includes these offences within the jurisdiction of the admiralty.

And as to postage duties, by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96, s. 22, the following acts are declared to be felonies, and punishable with transportation for life,⁴ or for not less than seven years,⁵ or with imprisonment not exceeding four nor less than two years. Again, forging, or causing, &c., any die, plate, or other instrument respecting the postage duties charged under 2 & 3 Vict. c. 52, and this Act. Forging, or causing, &c., the stamp, mark, or impression, or any part of such die, &c., upon any paper made under this Act. Having in possession, or without lawful excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), any forged die, plate, or other instrument, or any part resembling, &c., either wholly, or in part, any die, &c., provided under the Act. Stamping or marking, or causing, &c., any paper, or other substance with any such forged die, &c., or part of such die, &c. Using, uttering, selling, or exposing to sale, or causing, &c., or having in possession as aforesaid any paper or other substance, or material having thereon the impression or part of the impression of any such forged die, &c., or part of such die, &c., or having thereon any forged stamp or impression resembling, &c., the stamp, mark, &c., of any such die, &c., with a guilty knowledge. Privately and fraudulently using with intent to defraud the crown, or causing, &c., any die, &c., provided or to be provided as aforesaid. Privately or fraudulently stamping with the like intent, or causing, &c., any paper or other substance, or material, with any such die, &c., knowingly as aforesaid. Having in possession any paper, &c., so fraudulently stamped, &c., as aforesaid.

With respect to postage covers, it is ordained by sect. 29 of the same Act, that whoever shall make, or cause, &c., or aid in making, or shall knowingly have in possession, without lawful excuse (the proof whereof, &c.), any mould or frame, or other instrument having thereon any words, letters, figures, marks, lines, or devices peculiar to, and appearing in the substance of any paper for postage covers, envelopes, or stamps, or any machinery, or parts thereof for working threads into the substance of any paper, or any such thread, and intended to imitate or pass for such words, &c., or whoever shall unlawfully make or cause, &c., or aid in the making of any paper in the substance of which shall be worked or

¹ Sect. 42. 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5.
Franks are abolished, and, therefore, the 34th section is obsolete.

² See sect. 42.

³ Sect. 37.

⁴ Penal servitude.

⁵ Three years.

appear visible any words, &c., peculiar to and worked into, and appearing visible in the substance of any paper for postage covers, &c., or any part of such words, &c., and intended to imitate or pass for the same, or shall knowingly have in his possession as aforesaid any paper of the like nature, or shall by art, mystery, and contrivance cause or procure, or aid in causing, &c., such words, &c., to be so worked, &c., shall be adjudged a felon, and be transported for seven years,¹ or imprisoned for any period not less than two years.²

Oaths and notarial acts abroad.] By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, s. 5, if any person shall forge, or tender in evidence, the forged seal or signature of any British ambassador, envoy, &c., consul-general, consul, &c., to any document in testimony of any oath, affidavit, &c., administered and sworn, &c., shall be guilty of felony, and be liable to penal servitude for four years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three years, nor less than one year; such document may be impounded. The venue may be in the county where the prisoner was apprehended, or is in custody; and every accessory shall follow the venue as in the case of the principal offender.

Wills of petty officers and seamen.] By 2 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 33, it is enacted, that the petition for probate of wills, of letters of administration of the effects of any deceased petty officer or seaman, or non-commissioned officer of marines, or marine, or for obtaining a check or certificate in lieu of probate or letters of administration in cases of claims where the deceased's assets shall not exceed 32*l.* and 20*l.* respectively, shall be addressed to the inspector of seamen's wills, and shall be forwarded to the secretary of the admiralty; and if any person shall subscribe, transmit, utter or publish any false petition or application to the said inspector, knowing the same to be false, in order to obtain, or to enable any other person to obtain, any check or certificate in lieu of probate or letters of administration as aforesaid, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be transported³ for any term not exceeding fourteen years, nor less than seven years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three years nor less than one year. Principals in the second degree and accessories before the fact, are probably punishable as principals in the first degree, and accessories after the fact are liable to be imprisoned for two years.

¹ Penal servitude.

³ Penal servitude not exceeding

² Buying such paper, &c., is a fourteen nor less than three years. misdemeanor.

CHAPTER XXIV.

OTHER FORGERIES AFFECTING COMMERCIAL PERSONS OR COMPANIES.

Insurance companies.] Securities belonging to insurance societies have been made the subjects of attention with reference to forgery by several statutes: as the London Royal Insurance Companies, by 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, s. 13. The punishment, as far as bonds and orders for the payment of money are concerned, seem to have been under 1 Vict. c. 84, ss. 1, 3, and now under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 20, 23; and with reference to any other offence therein, under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 48. By 54 Geo. 3, c. 133, s. 10, and 54 Geo. 3, c. 144, s. 11, to forge the name or handwriting of any underwriter to any contract of insurance or declaration of return of premium, or fraudulently to alter such declaration after the signing thereof, for the purpose of obtaining an allowance from the commissioners of spoiled stamps, is made punishable, for the first offence, with a penalty of 500*l.*, and for the second, with transportation for seven years.¹ Accessories after the fact are punishable under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28.

Dutch Bay Hall Company.] The statute 12 Car. 2, c. 22, s. 4, (however obsolete, yet unrepealed,) protected the seals of the Dutch Bay Hall Corporation, at Colchester. For the third offence of counterfeiting them, the offender shall suffer as a felon.² The statute 4 Geo. 3, c. 37, s. 15,³ related to the English Linen Company, and the offence of forging their common seal was punishable under 1 Will. 4, c. 66, ss. 1, 26.⁴ The forging of their bonds and bills was punishable under 1 Will. 4, c. 66, ss. 4, 10, respectively.⁵ The British Society for extending the fisheries was protected by 26 Geo. 3, c. 106, s. 26, and the offender liable to transportation for seven years;⁶ principals in the second degree and accessories being punishable under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, ss. 8, 9.

¹ Penal servitude for three years. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

² Penal servitude as above; and 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, ss. 8, 9. See 49 Geo. 3, c. 109.

³ An Act, however obsolete yet not repealed, although sect. 16 is repealed.

⁴ See now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 9, s. 48.

⁵ See now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, ss. 20, 22.

⁶ Penal servitude for three years.

PART VI.

Of Offences relating to the Coin.

CHAPTER I.

OF COUNTERFEITING COIN.¹

Counterfeiting coin.] The statute 2 Will. 4, c. 34, caused a material change in the laws relating to the coin. It consolidated the old law, and, amongst other Acts, repealed so much of the 25 Ed. 3,² as made the counterfeiting of the king's money high treason. The coin protected by the 2 Will. 4, c. 34, was the king's current gold, silver, and copper coin. The principal felonies under that Act were counterfeiting, colouring, impairing the money, buying and selling counterfeit coin for less than the denomination—importing it from beyond the seas, uttering it, or having an illegal possession of such false money; and being found improperly engaged with coining tools in various ways, which will be mentioned in their order. Means for facilitating the detection of offenders are provided, and the mode of proving a former conviction in the case of uttering is particularly directed. But this Act has yielded to that of 1861, although the same law is, for the most part, renewed.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99,³ s. 2, whosoever shall falsely make or ¹ By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 41, an Act providing a new silver coinage, all Acts relating to coin, and not repugnant to this Act, are extended to it.

² Stat. 5, c. 2.

³ By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 1, in the interpretation of and for the purposes of this Act, the expression "the Queen's current gold or silver coin" shall include any gold or silver coin coined in any of Her Majesty's mints, or lawfully current, by virtue of any proclamation or otherwise, in any part of Her Majesty's dominions, whether within the United Kingdom or otherwise; and "the Queen's copper coin" shall include any copper coin and any coin of bronze or mixed metal coined in any of Her Majesty's mints, or lawfully current, by virtue of any proclamation or otherwise, in any part of Her Majesty's said dominions; and "false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's curcounterfeit any coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

By sect. 3, whosoever shall gild or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour or appearance of gold or of silver, or by any means whatsoever, wash, case over, or colour any coin whatsoever resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, or shall gild or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour or appearance of gold or of silver, or by any means whatsoever, wash, &c., any piece of silver or copper, or of coarse gold or coarse silver, or of any metal or mixture of metals respectively, being of a fit size and figure to be coined, and with intent that the same shall be coined into false and counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin; or shall gild, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour or appearance of gold, or by any means whatsoever, wash, &c., any of the Queen's current silver coin, or file or in any manner alter such coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current gold coin; or shall gild or silver, or shall, with any wash or materials capable of producing the colour or appearance of gold or silver, or by any means whatsoever, wash, &c., any of the Queen's current copper coin, or file or in any manner alter such coin, with intent to make the same resemble or pass for rent gold or silver coin" shall include any of the current coin which shall have been gilt, silvered, washed, coloured, or cased over, or in any manner altered, so as to resemble or be apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current coin of a higher denomination; and "the Queen's current coin" shall include any coin coined in any of Her Majesty's mints, or lawfully current, by virtue of any proclamation or otherwise, in any part of Her Majesty's said dominions, and whether made of gold, silver, copper, bronze, or mixed metal; and where the having any matter in the custody or possession of any person is mentioned in this Act, it shall include, not only the having of it by himself in his personal custody or possession, but also the knowingly and wilfully having it in the actual custody or possession of any other person, and also the knowingly and wilfully having it in any dwelling house or other building, lodging, apartment, field, or other place, open or inclosed, whether belonging to or occupied by himself or not, and whether such matter shall be so had for his own use or benefit or for that of any other person.

The Act to commence Nov. 1, 1861, sect. 43. There is now no limitation of time for proceeding, as formerly.

These provisions (8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 23, s. 4, and 7 Ann. c. 25,) were repealed by 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 34. R. v. Phillips, Russ. & Ry. 369. R. v. Willan, East, P. C. 186.

any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

Before this Act, the jury used always to be called upon to say whether the counterfeit coin bore any reasonable likeness to the real money,¹ but now the intent to produce bad money is sufficient when manifested by the production of base metal, however imperfect. It is not to be supposed that the moneyers of the mint are exempt from the operation of the Act. For if they were to make the coin of baser alloy, or of lighter weight than usual, they would certainly be guilty of felony, though a mere mistake would not affect them.²

Evidence.] By the 29th section it is provided, that it shall not be necessary to call any moneyer or other officer of his Majesty's mint for the purpose of proving the false or counterfeit state of the coin mentioned in the indictment, but that the evidence of any other credible witness shall be sufficient. Moreover, by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, it is no longer a disqualification that the witness tendered has been guilty of a crime, and, therefore, the old difficulties upon this subject are at an end.³ And as the offence is now not treason, but felony only, one witness is sufficient. Indeed, the statute 1 & 2 Ph. & M. c. 11, s. 3, now repealed, had before provided for the sufficiency of a single witness in cases relating to the coin.

Indictment.] That A., on, &c., feloniously and falsely did make and counterfeit one piece of coin resembling, and apparently intended to resemble and pass for certain of the Queen's gold coin called a sovereign, against the form, &c.

Three persons were charged with coining, two with colouring, and one for counselling the others. The proof against the accessory was that he visited the women once or twice a week, that whilst he was with them, the rattling of copper money was heard, that, upon one occasion, he was counting something just after he went out, that he endeavoured to escape from apprehension, and that several pieces of bad money were found upon him. The judges held this evidence insufficient to warrant a conviction.⁴

Here it will be observed that four kinds of gilding, silvering, &c., are forbidden:—1st, any coin whatsoever in order to look like gold and silver coin; 2nd, any silver, copper, or metal for the purpose of coining false gold and silver coin; 3rd, any silver

¹ R. v. Wilson, Leach, 285; Id. 365, note (a). R. v. J. & P. Welsh, Id. 364. R. v. Varley, Id. 76; East, P. C. 164; Sir Wm. Bl. 682. R. v. Harris and another, Leach, 135.

² See 1 Hale, 213; East, P. C. 166; 1 Hawk. c. 17, s. 55.

³ See Leach, 829.

⁴ R. v. Isaacs, 1 Russ. C. M. 61; 2 Russ. C. M. 729, n.

coin, so as to look like gold coin; and 4th, copper coin, so as to appear in the similitude of gold or silver coin.

It will, moreover, be noticed, that no such provision as that in the 2nd section is to be found by which unfinished counterfeits are brought within the law, as though they were completed for circulation. And the reason seems to be, that the cases decided before the 2 Will. 4, c. 34, rendered such an enactment unnecessary, whereas, in the instance of counterfeiting, the determinations of the judges were favourable to the prisoners, and thus the need for the provision alluded to was evinced. The following are the leading cases adverted to above. A party was taken in the act of steeping round blanks, composed of brass and silver, in aqua fortis. None of the blanks were in a finished state, but by rubbing they would perfectly resemble silver coin. The jury found that these blanks would not pass current in the state they were in at the time of the arrest, and a large majority of the judges were of opinion that the conviction was right, it being observed, that a contrary construction would prevent any conviction until a wash was discovered, which, in the first instance, would produce a perfect bright shilling or sixpence, and that the colouring of blanks was within the clause of 8 & 9 Will. 3,¹ (now repealed.) It was therefore determined, not only that the offence was complete before the counterfeit money was ready for circulation, but likewise that the mode of attempting the fraud was a colouring within the Act.² And, as to the colouring, it had been previously held, that the process of extracting latent silver from the body to the surface of the base metal by the power of aqua fortis was a colouring within the words "materials producing the colour of silver."³ An indictment charged the prisoner with gilding sixpences with materials capable of producing the colour of gold. The proof was, that the prisoner actually used gold for this colouring. It was urged for him that the prisoner had used gold, and not merely materials capable of producing the colour of gold. The counsel for the crown proposed that the latter words might be altogether rejected. A verdict of guilty being taken, the judges held the conviction good and the indictment proved, but Littledale, J., and Parke, B., held that the indictment was bad.⁴

Indictment, sect. 3.] That A., on, &c., feloniously did gild [or silver] [or with a certain wash capable of producing the colour and appearance of gold [or silver] did feloniously wash and colour with a certain wash, as above], certain of the Queen's current gold coin called a sovereign [or a shilling], resembling or apparently intended to resemble and pass for certain of the Queen's current gold coin called a sovereign [or a shilling], against the form, &c.

¹ C. 26, s. 4.

² R. v. Case, Leach, 154, n.

³ R. v. Lavey and another,
Leach. 153.

⁴ R. v. Turner, 2 Moo. C. C.

42.

Impairing, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 4, whosoever shall impair, diminish, or lighten any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, with intent that the coin so impaired, diminished, or lightened may pass for the Queen's current gold or silver coin, shall, in England or Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Defacing the coin.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 16, whosoever shall deface any of the Queen's current gold, silver, or copper coin, by stamping thereon any names or words, whether such coin shall or shall not be thereby diminished or lightened, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour.

And by sect. 17, no tender of payment in money made in any gold, silver, or copper coin so defaced by stamping, as in the last preceding section mentioned, shall be allowed to be a legal tender; and whosoever shall tender, &c., any coin so defaced shall, on conviction thereof before two justices, be liable to forfeit and pay any sum not exceeding 40s.: provided, that it shall not be lawful for any person to proceed for any such last-mentioned penalty without the consent, in England or Ireland, of Her Majesty's attorney-general for England or Ireland respectively, or in Scotland of the lord advocate.

Indictment.] That A., on, &c., feloniously did diminish and lighten certain of the Queen's current gold coin, that is to say, ten sovereigns, with intent that the same so diminished and lightened should pass for the Queen's gold coin, against the form, &c.

In an indictment for diminishing it must be averred that the coin was unlawfully diminished.¹

Copper coin.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, whosoever shall falsely make or counterfeit any coin resembling, &c., the Queen's copper coin; and whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall knowingly make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession, any instrument, &c., adapted for the counterfeiting any of such coin; or shall buy, sell, &c., or offer, &c., any false or counterfeit coin resembling, &c., such coin, at or for a lower rate or value than the same imports or was apparently intended to import, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

¹ 5 T. R. 27, n.

Foreign gold and silver coin.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 18, whosoever shall make or counterfeit any kind of coin not being the Queen's current gold or silver coin, but resembling, &c., any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Foreign coin, other than gold and silver coin.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 22, whosoever shall falsely make or counterfeit any kind of coin not being the Queen's current coin, but resembling, &c., any copper coin, or any other coin made of any metal or mixed metals of less value than the silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable for the first offence to imprisonment not exceeding one year, and for the second offence to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Indictment—Copper coin.] The indictment for counterfeiting copper coin states that A., on, &c., — pieces of false and counterfeit money, each of the same being made and counterfeited to the likeness of a piece of good legal and copper money of the realm called a halfpenny, then unlawfully and feloniously did make, coin, and counterfeit, against the form, &c.

CHAPTER II.

OF ILLEGAL UTTERINGS AND THE ILLEGAL POSSESSION OF COIN.

Uttering counterfeit gold or silver coin.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 9, whosoever shall tender, utter, or put off any false or counterfeit coin resembling, &c., any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England or Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 10, whosoever shall tender, utter, or put off any false or counterfeit coin resembling, &c., any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and shall, at the time of such tendering, &c., have in his custody or possession, besides the false or counterfeit coin so tendered, &c., any other piece of false or counterfeit coin, resembling, &c., any of such coin, or shall, either on the day of such tendering, &c., or within the space of ten days then next ensuing, tender, &c., any false or counterfeit coin resembling, &c., any of such coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 11, whosoever shall have in his custody or possession three or more pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and with intent to utter or put off the same or any of them, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for the term of three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

But the second offence after conviction is felony.

By sect. 12, whosoever, having been convicted, either before or after this Act, of any such misdemeanor or crime and offence as in sections 9, 10, and 11, or of any felony or high crime and offence against this or any former Act relating to the coin, shall afterwards commit any of the misdemeanors or crimes and offences in any of the said sections mentioned, shall, in England or Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

And by sect. 15,¹ whosoever shall tender, &c., any false or counterfeit coin resembling, &c., the Queen's current copper coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, or shall have in his custody or possession three or more pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling, &c., such coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, and with intent to utter or put off the same or any of them, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

We have now come to the well-known offence of uttering counterfeit coin. We find that the simple act of uttering is a misdemeanor. If another false piece be found in the prisoner's possession besides that which he has uttered, or if he should utter a false coin of the realm twice on the same day, or once again within ten days next ensuing, his act is a misdemeanor, but punishable with a double portion of imprisonment. A second offence of any one of those mentioned after conviction becomes felonious, and is very seriously punishable. The fact of having three pieces of false coin is considered sufficient, if the guilty knowledge of the falsity and the intent to utter any one of them combine to warrant a conviction for misdemeanor, and a heavier term of imprisonment than for having two pieces, or for uttering twice within ten days, may result. The second offence of this nature is likewise a felony, and punishable as under sect. 12.

An indictment under 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, (now repealed,) charged a second uttering to have taken place on the said 14th day of February, and as evidence of uttering at any time before the finding of the indictment would support the charge of a single uttering, it was objected, that it should have been expressly alleged that both utterings were on the same day. But the judges held, that as it must have been proved that the utterings were on the same day, they must take the fact to have been so, and, consequently, that the 14th day of February was the same day.² This case might now apply if the utterings within ten days were to take place on the same day, and an indictment were to be drawn similar to that above mentioned. But the case where it was decided that the facts of uttering twice on the same day should be united in the same count as a single charge, is still of use, and if the second uttering be within ten days, this decision is equally applicable. Owing to the distribution of the charges of uttering into two several counts, the judges held, that the more severe sentence could not take effect.³ Nor can one judgment upon a conviction for two separate utterings in two counts under 2 Will. 4, c. 34, be supported. There might be consecutive judgments of one year's imprisonment upon each count.¹ A person uttered a counterfeit crown, and on a subsequent day a counterfeit shilling. It was held that proof of the last uttering might be given to show the guilty knowledge, and the prisoner was held rightly convicted.²

¹ This was not an offence at common law. R. v. Cirwan, East, P. C. 182; Leach, 834, n.

² R. v. Martin, Leach, 923.

³ R. v. Tandy, Id. 833; East, P. C. 182.

The following determinations appear to apply to utterings of gold, silver, and copper coin. The prisoner was charged with the common trick of "ringing the changes," by taking a bad shilling out of his mouth and pretending it was the same which the person he intended to cheat had just given him. The indictment stated an uttering, and it was objected, that it should have said that the defendant uttered the shilling in question as and for a good shilling. But the court held a different opinion, saying that the words of the Act 15 Geo. 2, c. 28, were in the disjunctive, utter, or tender in payment, that the prisoner could not have been properly charged with uttering this bad coin as and for good money, because he evidently uttered it as bad money, and, accordingly, that, as he had tendered the shilling in payment, the indictment was right.³ The name of the person to whom the bad coin is uttered, if known, should be mentioned in the indictment. And Holt, C. J., said, that if the uttering were to more than one person, the names ought to be laid severally. The chief justice, nevertheless, tried a woman for putting off ten gilt counterfeit pieces to divers persons unknown, and she was convicted. Sir Edward East observes, that "this must be governed by the same rule which prevails in the case as stealing the property of persons unknown."⁴

Two persons were charged under the Act of 2 Will. 4, with uttering. Upon the prisoner were found two bad shillings, and upon one J. L. sixteen such were found. The jury found that the prisoner knew of J. L.'s possession of the bad money, that he knew the coin found on J. L. and himself to be counterfeit, and that both the parties had one common intention of uttering. The judges held this conviction right, the possession of J. L. being in law the possession of the prisoner, who was thus involved in the charge of having three or more bad pieces of money in his possession.⁵ Where two persons jointly prepare bad coin, and yet utter it apart in different places, but with a common intention to share the proceeds, they may be jointly convicted, for they are joint utterers.⁶ And the question in these cases of joint uttering

¹ R. v. Robinson, 1 Moo. C. C. 413. And note, that the words, "common utterer of false money," are now dispensed with. The cases therefore, which have arisen on indictments concerning that point may, for the present, be laid aside. See R. v. Smith, Russ. & Ry. 5; Leach, 856. R. v. Levy, Russ. & Ry. 7, cited. R. v. Booth, Id. R. v. Michael, Id. 29; Leach, 938.

² R. v. Foster, 24 L. J. M. C. 134; Dears. 456.

³ R. v. Frank, Leach, 644. As to association for the purpose of uttering, see R. v. J. and S. Else, Russ. & Ry. 142. R. v. Hurse, 2 Moo. & R. 360.

⁴ East, P. C. 180.

⁵ R. v. Rogers, 2 Moo. C. C. 85, 2 Lew. C. C. 118, 297; Car. & M. 259. Semle, S. C. Nom. R. v. Williams. R. v. Gerrish and another, 2 Moo. & Rob. 219.

⁶ R. v. Hurse, 2 Moo. & Rob. 360.

seems to be whether the one was so near the other as to render effectual help in getting rid of the counterfeit coin.¹

There was an indictment for uttering a groat. The inspector of the mint called the piece of false money a groat, but all the other witnesses called it a fourpenny piece. The proclamation was not produced, and the inscription on the coin was fourpence. It was held, that as the jury could identify the circumstance in their own minds, that a groat and fourpenny piece were the same, without the intervention of evidence, the prisoner had been rightly convicted.²

Indictment.] That A., on, &c., unlawfully did tender and utter to one B., one piece of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for certain of the Queen's current coin called —, he the said A. at the time he so tendered and uttered the said piece of false and counterfeit coin, well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, against the form, &c.

The evidence for the second offence cannot, evidently, be sustained, if there be an absence of intention to defraud. And, therefore, although a person may know the piece of coin he is giving away to be counterfeit, yet, if he could not possibly intend to commit a fraudulent act, the charge must fail, as where the prisoner passed off a piece of false money by way of charity.³ Not so where the prisoner gave money to a woman as a price of intercourse, with a guilty knowledge.⁴ If the prisoner should place a piece of bad money upon the counter, and upon being told it is bad, quits the shop, this is an uttering.⁵

Indictment.] That, heretofore, to wit, at a sessions, &c., holden on, &c., before —, by the oath of twelve good and lawful men of the county aforesaid then and there impanelled, it was presented that A., on, &c., did tender and utter, [first conviction,] as by the record, &c., and which said judgment, &c., and the jurors, &c., do further present that the said A., after being so convicted as aforesaid, afterwards, to wit, on, &c., [describe the second offence,] against the form, &c. Where a record of conviction was tallied as of the quarter sessions, and went on to state the offence as within the jurisdiction of this court, Gurney, B., at the assizes, held it a fatal variance.⁶

This second offence must be properly described, and it is usual to set out the names of the persons to whom the coin has been tendered, although Holt, C. J., once tried a woman for putting off

¹ R. v. Jones, 9 C. & P. 761.

⁵ R. v. Welch, 20 L. J. M. C.

² R. v. Connell, 1 Car. & K. 101; Den. & P. 78.

³ R. v. Page, 8 C. & P. 122. Of this case Lord Denman and Coltman, J., have expressed a doubt. 1 Cox, 251.

⁶ R. v. Pigot, 1 Cox, 124. A variance as to the name of the magistrates before whom the trial was had was likewise held fatal. R. v. Bissett, Id. 148.

⁴ R. v. —, 1 Cox, 250.

counterfeit coin to divers persons unknown, and she was convicted.¹ And, according to the opinion of Lord Denman, care must be taken in setting out the name, especially where two prisoners are concerned, lest an ambiguity should be introduced in case one should be acquitted and the other found guilty.² Sir Edward East observes, that the same rule prevails as in the case of stealing property from persons unknown.³ With respect to the particularities which should be adopted in alleging the first judgment, it may be said, that the words "as by the record thereof doth more fully appear," must be carried on throughout the indictment, whenever it becomes necessary to refer to the record. So that, where under the old Act of 15 Geo. 2,⁴ it became necessary to show prior convictions, and the second conviction was set out without a prout patet, the judges were of opinion that the defect was fatal.⁵ It was also objected that there was no allegation of the former judgment and convictions being unreversed, but the judges were satisfied with setting aside the conviction upon the first objection, and they added, moreover, that no judgment for the misdemeanor could be given upon the record as it stood.⁶

Two persons were tried for uttering counterfeit coin, they having other counterfeit coin in their possession. One was convicted and the other acquitted. An indictment stated that C. P. (the prisoner who had been convicted), together with one T. P. (who had been acquitted), was, in due form of law, convicted, &c. The record of C. P.'s conviction stated, in addition, the acquittal of T. P. It was held, that the indictment did not import that T. P. had been convicted, and that there was no variance.⁷ The allegation of guilty knowledge was deemed sufficient under the following allegation. It was charged that the prisoner did utter a counterfeit half-crown to E. H., knowing the same to be false and counterfeit. Here E. H. could not be said (although the last antecedent) to have been the person affected by the guilty knowledge. And although it was not stated that the prisoner uttered, "then and there, knowing," &c., yet it was said that the scienter should be taken to apply to the time of the uttering.⁸ At all events, it was good after verdict.⁹ An indictment alleged, that the prisoners on the same day one other piece of false and counterfeit resembling, &c., did utter. The word coin was omitted after counterfeit, but supplied afterwards. It was held, that the words "of false and counterfeit" might be rejected, and then the charge would be, one other piece, resembling, &c. a piece of the Queen's current silver coin.¹⁰ Evidence of uttering a

¹ East, P. C. 180.

² 2 Moo. C. C. 221.

³ East, P. C. ut supra.

⁴ C. 28, ss. 2, 9.

⁵ R. v. Turner, 1 Moo. C. C. 47.

⁶ Id. 49, 50.

⁷ R. v. Page, 9 C. & P. 756; 2 Moo. C. C. 219. The words, "By due course of law tried and convicted," were deemed sufficient, without stating either plea or verdict. Id.

⁸ R. v. Page, 9 C. & P. 756.

R. v. Jones and another, Id. 761.

R. v. Page, 2 Moo. C. C. 219.

⁹ 2 Moo. C. C. ut supra.

¹⁰ R. v. Jones, 9 C. & P. 61, counterfeit shilling on a day subsequent to the prisoner's uttering a counterfeit crown-piece is receivable to show guilty knowledge.¹ And having a quantity of counterfeit coin, each piece wrapped up in a separate piece of paper, and distributed in different pockets, is some evidence of an intent to utter.² In order to facilitate the proof of the required conviction, it is provided by sect. 37 of the Act now under consideration, that a copy of the previous indictment and conviction, purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court where the offender was first convicted, or by the deputy of such clerk or officer, shall, upon proof of the identity of the person of the offender, be sufficient evidence of the previous indictment and conviction, without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed or certified the same.³ The evidence of a joint uttering should show the parties in near association with each other, so as to be capable of rendering mutual aid and assistance. So that if A. and B. agree together for a fraudulent purpose, and each go different ways, but utter the false money quite apart from each other, the offences are several and not joint.⁴ So where two were indicted for uttering and having in possession a counterfeit shilling, it was held that the one could not be convicted of uttering upon evidence of his having other bad money in his possession for the purpose of uttering, although he had been the associate of the other prisoner. And with respect to the other prisoner, although she was held rightly convicted of a single offence of uttering, it was also held, that her conviction for having bad money in possession was wrong, as it proceeded merely upon the evidence of her having kept company with the man,⁵ who had large quantities of false coin in his custody, but who was not present with her when she committed the offence of uttering.⁶ But where two went together to a shop, and one remained outside whilst the other uttered, the former having bad pieces of money in her possession, it was considered a joint offence. And upon an indictment stating that the two prisoners had uttered a counterfeit shilling, having another counterfeit in their possession, it was held immaterial to show which was the piece uttered, no good money having

¹ R. v. Foster, 24 L. J. M. C. 134; Dears. & P. 456.

² R. v. Jarvis, 25 L. J. M. C. 30; 7 Cox, 53.

³ A fee of 6s. 8d. is to be taken.

⁴ R. v. Manners, 7 C. & P. 801.

⁵ The prisoners were husband and wife.

⁶ R. v. J. and G. Else, Russ. & Ry. 142. R. v. Page, 1 Russ. C. M. 82. But note, that the distinction between felony and misdemeanor was not sufficiently adverted to in these cases, so that Talfourd, J., directed the jury to convict under similar circumstances, and the judges supported the view, approving of Mr. Greaves's observations in his edition of Russell, and overruling R. v. Else and R. v. Page, 1 Russ. C. M. 83, note (b). R. v. Greenwood, 21 L. J. M. C. 127; Den. & P. 453.

been found upon them.¹ If some good pieces had been found, the objection in their power would have been unanswerable.² The principle is, whether one is so near to the other as to help that other in getting rid of the bad money.³ As, by giving a sign. The prisoner was fifty yards off, and gave a sign.⁴ There must, however, be previous concert, and presence. Evidence of a prior understanding and concert will not be sufficient without a presence actual or constructive.⁵

Uttering false foreign coin as the Queen's coin, or as foreign coin.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 13, Whosoever shall, with intent to defraud, tender, utter, or put off as or for any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, any coin not being such current gold or silver coin, or any medal or piece of metal or mixed metals, resembling in size, figure, and colour the current coin as or for which the same shall be so tendered, &c., such coin, medal, or piece of metal or mixed metals so tendered, &c., being of less value than the current coin as or for which the same shall be so tendered, &c., shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and shall be liable to imprisonment not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 20, Whosoever shall tender, utter, or put off any such false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

By sect. 21, Whosoever, having been so convicted as in the last preceding section mentioned, shall afterwards commit ~~the~~ like offence of tendering, &c., any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement; and whosoever, having been so convicted of a second offence, shall afterwards commit the like offence of tendering, &c. any such false or counterfeit coin as aforesaid, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude for life, or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

And by sect. 23, Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall have in

¹ R. v. P. and E. Skeritt, 2 C. & P. 427.

² Id. 429, per Garrow, B.

³ R. v. Page and Jones, 1 Russ. C. M. 82.

⁴ R. v. Hayes and another, 1 Cox, 362; 2 Cox, 68. R. v. Page was cited.

⁵ R. v. West and another, 2 Cox, 237, Cresswell, J.

his custody or possession any greater number of pieces than five pieces of false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, or any such copper or other coin as in the last preceding section mentioned, i. e. 22, shall, on conviction thereof before any justice, forfeit and lose all such false and counterfeit coin, which shall be cut in pieces and destroyed by order of such justice, and shall for every such offence forfeit and pay any sum of money not exceeding 40s. nor less than 10s. for every such piece of false and counterfeit coin which shall be found in the custody or possession of such person, one moiety to the informer, and the other moiety to the poor of the parish where such offence shall be committed; and in case any such penalty shall not be forthwith paid, it shall be lawful for any such justice to commit the person who shall have been adjudged to pay the same to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour for the space of three months,¹ or until such penalty shall be paid.

By sect. 5, Whosoever shall unlawfully have in his custody or possession any filings or clippings, or any gold or silver bullion, or any gold or silver in dust, solution, or otherwise, which shall have been produced or obtained by impairing, diminishing, or lightening any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to have been so produced or obtained, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for any term not exceeding seven years and not less than three years,—or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement.

Indictment. Illegal possession.] That A., on, &c., unlawfully had in his custody and possession three pieces of false and counterfeit coin resembling and apparently intended to resemble and pass for certain of the Queen's silver coin called —, with intent then to utter and put off the same, he the said A. well knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, against the form, &c.

CHAPTER III.

OF ILLEGAL DEALINGS WITH FALSE COIN.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 6, whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused) shall buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, or offer to buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin at or for a lower rate or value than the same imports or was apparently intended to import, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement; and in any indictment for any such offence as in this section aforesaid it shall be sufficient to allege that the party accused did buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, or did offer to buy, sell, receive, pay, or put off, the false or counterfeit coin at or for a lower rate or value than the same imports or was apparently intended to import, without alleging at or for what rate, price, or value the same was bought, sold, received, paid, or put off, or offered to be bought, sold, received, paid, or put off.

¹ Calendar months.

By sect. 7, whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall import or receive into the United Kingdom from beyond the seas any false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude for life, or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 8, whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall export, or put on board any ship, vessel, or boat, for the purpose of being exported from the United Kingdom, any false or counterfeit coin, resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current coin, knowing the same to be false or counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland of a crime and offence, and liable, at the discretion of the court, to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

And by sect. 19, whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall bring or receive into the United Kingdom any such false or counterfeit coin resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any gold or silver coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, knowing the same to be false and counterfeit, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 48, s. 1, the provisions of 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 34, are, with some exceptions, extended to the colonies, and as that Act is only repealed as far as the United Kingdom is concerned, it survives as to the colonial possessions. By sect. 2, if any person shall import into the colonies any false or counterfeit coin resembling the gold or silver coin, with a guilty knowledge, he shall be liable to transportation for life, or for not less than seven years, or to imprisonment not exceeding four years. But by sect. 3, if there be any local provision in the colony, the Act is not to extend to it. And again, by sect. 4, the local legislatures of the colonies may alter or repeal any of the provisions extended or not made applicable by this Act to the colonial possessions.

734 Offences respecting Implements for False Coin.

Buying and selling, &c.] Under a clause not dissimilar to this, it has been held that the contract must be proved as laid. So that proof of the sale of five bad shillings for half-a-crown was held to be a variance in an indictment for paying and putting off of five counterfeit shillings for two shillings.¹ But it is sufficient if the evidence be substantially in keeping with the charge. Thus the following contract was held to be sustained by the evidence produced. The indictment charged the putting off of "a counterfeit sovereign and three counterfeit shillings for the sum of five shillings," and the proof was that the prisoner agreed to sell the bad sovereign at 4s., and the three bad shillings for 1s., and two good half-crowns appeared to have been paid. The court decided that there was here no variance.²

Indictment under sect. 6.] That A. on, &c., feloniously did sell to one B. ten pieces of false coin, resembling ten pieces respectively of the Queen's current gold coin called sovereigns, at and for a lower rate and value than they and each of them imported, to wit, for the sum of 10s. each, against the form, &c.

Under sect. 7, that A. on, &c., feloniously did import into the United Kingdom pieces of false and counterfeit coin, resembling the Queen's current gold coin called —, he the said A. well knowing the same, when he so imported them, to be false and counterfeit, against the form, &c.

The same form will apply under sect. 8, using the word "exporting."

CHAPTER IV.

OF OFFENCES RESPECTING IMPLEMENTS FOR MAKING FALSE COIN.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 24, Whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall knowingly make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession, any puncheon, counter puncheon, matrix, stamp, die, pattern, or mould, in or upon which there shall be made or impressed, or which will make or impress, or which shall be adapted and intended to make or impress, the figure, stamp, or apparent resemblance of both or either of the sides of any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, or of any coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, or any part or parts of both or either of such sides; or shall make or mend, &c., any edger, edging or other tool, collar, instrument, or engine adapted and intended for the marking of coin round the edges with letters, grainings, or other marks or figures apparently resembling those on the edges of any such coin as in this section aforesaid, knowing the same to be so adapted and intended as aforesaid; or shall make or mend, or begin or proceed to make or mend, or shall buy or sell, or have in his custody or possession, any press for coinage, or any cutting engine for cutting by force of a screw or of any other contrivance, round blanks out of gold, silver, or other metal or mixture of metals, or any other machine, knowing such press to be a press for coinage, or knowing such engine or machine to have been used or to be intended to be used for or in order to the false making or counterfeiting of any such coin as in this section aforesaid, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

¹ R. v. Joyce, Car. C. L. 184.

² R. v. Hedges, 3 C. & P. 410.

By sect. 25, whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse (the proof whereof shall lie on the party accused), shall knowingly convey out of any of Her Majesty's mints any puncheon, counter puncheon, matrix, stamp, die, pattern, mould, edger, edging or other tool, collar, instrument, press, or engine used or employed in or about the coining of coin, or any useful part of any of the several matters aforesaid, or any coin, bullion, metal, or mixture of metals, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of felony, and in Scotland of a high crime and offence, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

And by sect. 27, if any person shall find or discover in any place whatever, or in the custody or possession of any person having the same without lawful authority or excuse, any false or counterfeit coin, resembling or apparently intended to resemble or pass for any of the Queen's current gold, silver, or copper coin, or any coin of any foreign prince, state, or country, or any instrument, tool, or engine whatsoever, adapted and intended for the counterfeiting of any such coin, or any filings or clippings, or any gold or silver, bullion, or any gold or silver dust, solution, or otherwise, which shall have been produced or obtained by diminishing or lightening any of the Queen's current gold or silver coin, it shall be lawful for the person so finding or discovering and he is hereby required to seize the same, and to carry the same forthwith before some justice; and where it shall be proved, on the oath of a credible witness before any justice, that there is reasonable cause to suspect that any person has been concerned in counterfeiting the Queen's current gold, silver, or copper coin, or any such foreign or other coin as in this Act before mentioned, or has in his custody or possession any such false or counterfeit coin, or any instrument, tool or engine whatsoever adapted and intended for the making or counterfeiting of any such coin, or any other machine used or intended to be used for making or counterfeiting any such coin, or any such filings, &c., or any such gold or silver in dust, solution, or otherwise as aforesaid, it shall be lawful for any justice, by warrant under his hand, to cause any place whatsoever belonging to or in the occupation or under the control of such suspected person to be searched, either in the day or in the night, and if any such false or counterfeit coin, or any such instrument, tool, or engine, or any such machine, or any such filings, or any such gold or silver in dust, solution, or otherwise as aforesaid, shall be found in any place so searched, to cause the same to be seized and carried forthwith before some justice; and whensoever any such false or counterfeit coin, or any such instrument, tool, or engine, or any such machine, or any such filings, or any such gold or silver in dust, solution, or otherwise as aforesaid, shall in any case whatsoever be seized and carried before a justice, he shall, if necessary, cause the same to be secured, for the purpose of being produced in evidence against any person who may be prosecuted for any offence against this Act; and all such false and counterfeit coin, and all instruments, tools, and engines adapted and intended for the making or counterfeiting of coin, and all such machines, and all such filings, clippings, and bullion, and all such gold and silver in dust, solution, or otherwise as aforesaid, after they shall have been produced in evidence, or when they shall have been seized, and shall not be required to be produced in evidence, shall forthwith be delivered up to the officers of Her Majesty's mint, or to the solicitors of Her Majesty's treasury, or to any person authorized by them to receive the same.

The following evidence was given upon an indictment for having illegally in possession a mould for coining of the obverse side of half-a-crown. The mould and other materials for coining and several suspected persons were found in a house belonging to the prisoner, but he was not captured at the time. An attack, however, was made upon the police, and it was attempted to destroy the coining materials. The prisoner then came to the house, notwithstanding a warning from within that "the police were there." He was then taken. About thirteen days before, he had passed a bad half-crown, but it did not appear that the half-crown belonged to the mould found in his house. This evidence was held admissible, and all the prior facts mentioned were deemed proper to be left to the jury on the charge of felony.¹

A resemblance of the instrument to the coin to a common intent is sufficient. And therefore the words, "figure, stamp, or apparent resemblance," will be satisfied if the imitation be such as will impose on the world. It is, indeed, a common principle in the law concerning the crimen falsi that such a resemblance is sufficient. Therefore, where the puncheon was proved to be capable of making an old shilling current, although without a counter puncheon it could not make the figures, the judges held upon an indictment for having a puncheon in possession upon which was impressed the figure of the head side of a shilling, that the conviction was right, for an exact figure was not within the intention of the legislature, but only such a similitude as might be capable of deceiving an ordinary observer.¹ So where a collar was the tool found in the prisoner's custody, which could not be used without a screw, the judges held it to be an edging tool within the old Act 8 & 9 Will. 3.² And now the word "collar" is expressly mentioned. And the judges came to that opinion although the collar was an instrument of more modern invention than the time of Will. 3.³

¹ R. v. Weeks, 8 Cox, 455; 30 L. J. M. C. 142.

A die sinker at Birmingham was employed by the prisoner to sink two dies for counters for two whist clubs, &c. The counters were to resemble shillings. The die sinker gave notice to the mint, and when the order was executed, the prisoner was taken and charged as a principal with making a die which would impress the figure, &c., of a shilling. It was objected for the prisoner that as the die sinker had acted under the directions of the mint in making the tool, no felony had been committed. The prisoner should have been indicted for a misdemeanor by inciting the die sinker to commit a felony. On the other hand it was urged that the die sinker was an innocent agent, and that the prisoner was consequently well convicted as a principal, and of this opinion were the judges, with the exception of Cresswell, J.⁴

Indictments under sect. 24.] That A. on, &c., one puncheon [mould], upon which there was made and impressed the figure of one of the sides, that is to say, the — piece of a piece of the Queen's current gold coin called a sovereign, and feloniously and falsely did make, against the form, &c. That A. on, &c., one puncheon in which and upon which there was impressed, &c., feloniously and without lawful excuse did then have in his possession.

Evidence.] The metal of which the mould is composed not being particularly specified in the new Act as it was in 8 & 9 Will. 3, the old cases upon that point are no longer of so much value as formerly. As where it was held that under an indictment for having in possession a die made of iron and steel, proof of a die made of either material would suffice.⁵ It will be remarked, that

¹ R. v. Ridgelay, Leach, 189; East, P. C. 171.

² C. 26, s. 1, &c.

³ R. v. Moore, 1 Moo. C. C. 122; 2 C. & P. 235.

⁴ R. v. Bannen, 2 Moo. C. C. 309; 1 Car. & K. 295. So was R. v. Valler, where the Danish consul directed a plate to be engraved in order to detect an intended fraud on the part of the prisoners. The person making the plate was an innocent agent, and the prisoners were rightly indicted as principals. R. v. Valler and others, 1 Cox, 84.

⁵ R. v. Phillips, Russ. & Ry. 369. R. v. Oxford, Id. 382.

the clause of 2 Will. 4, has both the expressions "upon which there shall be made or impressed," and "which will make or impress." An indictment under 8 & 9 Will. 3, charged, that the prisoner had in his custody a mould upon which was "made or impressed," &c. The proof was, that the instrument was rather one which was calculated to make or impress, it having the resemblance of a shilling inverted, and the question was reserved. But the judges, although they thought that "make and impress" would have been more accurate, were of opinion that the conviction should stand, because, in fact, the stamp of the current coin was certainly impressed on the mould in order to form the cavity thereof.¹ And as the words "any part or parts" are in the clause, it was deemed enough to show, upon an indictment under 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 34, s. 10, for making a mould intended to make and impress the figure and apparent resemblance of the obverse side of a shilling, that the mould and a part of the impression was made by the prisoner.² But upon a count for having in possession such a mould impressed with such a resemblance without saying "part thereof," it was held that in this case the jury must be satisfied that the whole of the obverse side of the shilling had been impressed at the time when the prisoner had the mould in his possession.³ And if it is not a mould at all, à fortiori, the prisoner must be acquitted, although there may be a perfect impression on one side.⁴ The words in the statute as to mould, resembling part of the obverse of a coin, relate to cases where several moulds put together would make the obverse. So that if a mould be made to resemble the obverse of a coin partly defaced by wear, the indictment should be for having in possession a mould "upon which said mould was made and impressed the figure and apparent resemblance," &c.⁵ Yet, the words "then and there," before "made and impressed," were deemed necessary in this particular case. For want of them, the first indictment against the prisoner was held bad upon demurrer, but upon a fresh indictment containing these words, the charge was held rightly laid.⁶ If a die be made so as to counterfeit money, not for distribution in this country, but only to try the experiment, before sending out the apparatus abroad, the offence is complete. It is an act done with intent to commit, and proximately connected with, a felony.⁷

¹ R. v. Lennard, Leach, 90; See R. v. Bell, Fost. Cr. L. 430.

² R. v. Foster, 7 C. & P. 494.

³ R. v. Foster, Id. 495.

⁴ R. v. Macmillan, 1 Cox, 41.

⁵ R. v. Richmond, 1 Car. & K. 240.

⁶ Id.

⁷ R. v. Roberts, 1 Jur. (N. S.) 1094; 7 Cox, 39, in the case of silver half dollars of Peru. These were dies, having engraved thereon the obverse and reverse sides of the coin. See R. v. Williams, referred to, 7 Cox, 43.

CHAPTER V.

OF PROCEDURE IN COINAGE OFFENCES.

False coin may be cut.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 99, s. 26, where any coin shall be tendered as the Queen's current gold or silver coin to any person who shall suspect the same to be diminished otherwise than by reasonable wearing, or to be counterfeit, it shall be lawful for such person to cut, break, bend, or deface such coin, and if any coin so cut, broken, bent, or defaced shall appear to be diminished otherwise than by reasonable wearing, or to be counterfeit, the person tendering the same shall bear the loss thereof; but if the same shall be of due weight, and shall appear to be lawful coin, the person cutting, &c., the same, is hereby required to receive the same at the rate it was coined for; and if any dispute shall arise whether the coin so cut, &c., be diminished in manner aforesaid, or counterfeit, it shall be heard and finally determined in a summary manner by any justice, who is hereby empowered to examine upon oath, as well the parties as any other person, in order to the decision of such dispute; and the tellers at the receipt of Her Majesty's exchequer, and their deputies and clerks, and the receivers-general of every branch of Her Majesty's revenue, are hereby required to cut, break, or deface, or cause to be cut, broken, or defaced every piece of counterfeit or unlawfully diminished gold or silver coin which shall be tendered to them in payment of any part of Her Majesty's revenue.

Venue.] By sect. 28, where any person shall tender, utter, or put off any false or counterfeit coin in one county or jurisdiction, and shall also tender, utter, or put off any other false or counterfeit coin in any other county or jurisdiction, either on the day of such first-mentioned tendering, uttering, or putting off, or within the space of ten days next ensuing, or where two or more persons, acting in concert in different counties or jurisdictions, shall commit any offence against this Act, every such offender may be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished, and the offence laid and charged to have been committed, in any one of the said counties or jurisdictions, in the same manner in all respects as if the offence had been actually and wholly committed within such one county or jurisdiction.

Proof.] By sect. 29, where, upon the trial of any person charged with any offence against this Act, it shall be necessary to prove that any coin produced in evidence against such person is false or counterfeit, it shall not be necessary to prove the same to be false and counterfeit by the evidence of any moneyer, or other officer of Her Majesty's mint, but it shall be sufficient to prove the same to be false or counterfeit by the evidence of any other credible witness.

By sect. 30, every offence of falsely making or counterfeiting any coin, or of buying, selling, receiving, paying, tendering, uttering or putting off, or of offering to buy, &c., any false or counterfeit coin, shall be deemed to be complete, although the coin so made or counterfeited, or bought, &c., shall not be in a fit state to be uttered, or the counterfeiting thereof shall not be finished or perfected.

By sect. 31, it shall be lawful for any person whatsoever to apprehend any person who shall be found committing any indictable offence, or any high crime and offence, against this Act, and to convey or deliver him to some peace officer, constable, or officer of police, in order to his being conveyed as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace or some other proper officer, to be dealt with according to law.

By sect. 32, no conviction for any offence punishable on summary conviction under this Act shall be quashed for want of form, or be removed by certiorari into any of Her Majesty's superior courts of record; and no warrant of commitment shall be held void by reason of any defect therein, provided it be therein alleged that the party has been convicted, and there be a valid conviction to sustain the same.

By sect. 33, all actions and prosecutions to be commenced against any person for anything done in pursuance of this Act shall, in England or Ireland, be laid and tried in the county where the fact was committed, and shall, in England, Ireland, or Scotland, be commenced within six months after the fact committed, and not otherwise; and notice in writing of such action and of the cause thereof, shall be given to the defendant or defender one month at least before the commencement of the action; and in any such action brought in England or Ireland, the defendant may plead the general issue, and give this Act and the special matter in evidence, at any trial to be had thereupon, and in Scotland the defender may insist on all relevant defences; and no plaintiff or pursuer shall recover in any such action if tender of sufficient amends shall have been made before such action brought, or if a sufficient sum of money shall have been paid into court after such action brought, by or on behalf of the defendant or defender; and if in England or Ireland, a verdict shall pass for the defendant, or the plaintiff shall become nonsuit, or discontinue any such action after issue joined, or if, upon demurrer or otherwise, judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, or if, in Scotland, the verdict shall be for the defender, or if the pursuer shall abandon the action, or the court shall dismiss it as irrelevant or improperly laid, in every such case the defendant or defender shall recover his full costs as between attorney and client, and have the like remedy for the same as any defendant or defender has by law in other cases; and though a verdict shall be given for the plaintiff or pursuer in any such action, such plaintiff or pursuer shall not have costs against the defendant or defender, unless the judge before whom the trial shall be shall certify his approbation of the action.

By sect. 34, all high crimes and offences, and crimes and offences against this Act, which may be committed in Scotland, shall be proceeded against and tried according to the rules and procedure of the criminal law of Scotland; and all proceedings by this Act made competent before any justice or justices, and all and every the powers and authorities by this Act given to or conferred upon any such justice or justices, shall, in Scotland, be competent before and may be exercised by any sheriff, magistrate, or justice of the peace.

And by sect. 35, in the case of every felony punishable under the Act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this Act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this Act, shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

The 36th section provides for the admiralty jurisdiction.

By sect. 38, a person convicted of misdemeanor under this Act may be fined and required to find sureties, and a person convicted of any felony under this Act may be required to find sureties. In either case the limit of time is one year. Sect. 39 sanctions the addition of hard labour to imprisonment and solitary confinement, not exceeding one month at one time, nor three months in one year, under sect. 40. By sect. 41, summary proceedings in England are directed to be taken under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, and in Ireland under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 97. By sect. 42, where a prosecution is ordered by the treasury, the court shall allow the costs of the prosecution, and also in cases not so conducted, if there be a conviction, but not otherwise, such costs shall be allowed, and the order for payment made as in cases of felony.

PART VII.

*Of Offences against the Person and of Surety of the Peace.*¹

CHAPTER I.

HOMICIDE. MURDER.

Murder is the felonious destruction of life with malice. If it be accompanied by the greater offence of high treason, the charge of murder does not merge in that of treason, in like manner as a misdemeanor sinks into a felony when the two charges are concurrent; therefore it is not a ground for acquittal upon an indictment for murder, that the party was at the time of committing the offence, in the prosecution of a treasonable act.

Malice is either express or implied. The proof of express malice has the effect of preventing any favourable construction which a provocation by the murdered man might otherwise by possibility produce, and which would rebut the implication of malice.² Implied malice arises in all cases of homicide, which amount, in point of law, to murder,³ so that if the defendant can offer any excuse for his conduct, it lies upon him to show the extenuating circumstances.⁴ The judges, however, will not presume general malice from isolated facts, such as lurking in the neighbourhood.⁵

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 8, every offence which before the commencement of the Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, would have amounted to petit treason, shall be deemed to be murder only, and no greater offence; and all persons guilty in respect thereof, whether as principals or as accessories, shall be dealt with, indicted, tried, and punished as principals and accessories in murder. Petit treason therefore exists no longer.

¹ The stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, upon this subject, is not to extend to Scotland: sect. 78. The statute to commence Nov. 1, 1861: sect. 79.

² East, P. C. 224.

³ East, P. C. 231. R. v. Legg, Kel. 27.

⁴ R. v. Greenacre, 8 C. & P. 35.

⁵ R. v. Wilson, 1 Lew. C. C. 112.

Revenge is a strong ingredient in murder. As, when after a quarrel the prisoner returned with a sword in half-an-hour, and seeking a fresh occasion for renewing the dispute, stabbed the deceased to the heart, after having received from him two blows on the shoulder with a cudgel. His threats of vengeance, and consequent provocation, induced the judges to agree that the case was one of murder.¹ The words, also, "Damn you! I will have your blood," are said to have weighed much with the judges in the case of Major Oneby, particularly when coupled with an offer of reconciliation on the part of the deceased. A dispute had arisen, but the parties had ceased from hostilities, and had sat down again, and then, subsequently, Oneby insisted upon fighting with the deceased in a room alone, and killed him. Here the judges considered the act of the prisoner to have been deliberate, and his malice express.² And thus, again, if a man have no design against any life in particular, but declares that he will kill the first man he meets, and he kills one accordingly, here, at all events, express malice, if not a general feeling of revenge, enters into the transaction, and the offence is murder.³ So, if a person manifest a determination for mischief, although he say nothing, yet if he commit a deadly act immediately afterwards, his case will be one of murder. This is the case of the man who threw a bottle at A., and then drew his sword. It was held to be no extenuation, that A. returned the bottle at the prisoner, which inflicted a wound; his stabbing of A. was therefore ruled to be murder, for his drawing showed that he intended to follow up his blow.⁴ This last was an instance of implied malice.⁵ Again, where in a fight of two minutes, the deceased was found to have been stabbed in several places by the prisoner, Bayley, J., left it to the jury to say whether the prisoner had used the knife privately from the beginning, if so, the crime was murder, and the jury found him guilty of murder.⁶ Even in the case of a man who killed an adulterer in his wife's bed, it was said, that if he had postponed his vengeance, he would have been guilty of murder.⁷ And the same law has been recognized in the case of a man who saw a person in the act of committing an unnatural offence with his son⁸ although the man did not see the act done, and Park, J., summed up for a conviction for murder, but the jury found a verdict of manslaughter.⁹

Cruelty.] Cruelty is another feature in homicide, of an aggravated character, and deliberate malice will, under such circum-

¹ R. v. Mason, East, P. C. 239; 531. R. v. Whiteley, 1 Lew. C. C. Fost. 132. 173; see 1 Hale, 451.

² R. v. Oneby, 2 Str. 766. See 1 C. & P. 437.

³ See Lord Raym. 1489.

⁴ R. v. Mawgridge, Kel. 128.

⁵ Str. 771. See also Russ. & Ry. 43.

⁶ R. v. Anderson, 1 Russ. C. M.

⁷ R. v. Manning, Tho. Raym. 212. R. v. Maddy, 1 Ventr. 158; Semble, S. C. before Jones, J., Id. 159.

⁸ R. v. Fisher, 8 C. & P. 182.

⁹ S. C. And see R. v. Royley, Cro. Jac. 296; 1 Ventr. cited, 159.

stances, presumed against the accused. As, where one deals unlawfully and wilfully with a helpless person.¹ So, where one carried his sick father from town to town, in a severe season, against his will, and thereby caused his death.² And again, where a woman left a child in an orchard, covered only with leaves, so that a kite came upon and killed it,³ or in a hog-sty,⁴ or on a barren heath. And also where parish officers shifted a child from parish to parish, whereby it perished for want of sustenance,⁵ whereas the crime might be reduced to manslaughter if the child were left at a gentleman's door.⁶ So, if a man be put in a strong room against his will, being a prisoner, and through the unwholesomeness of the place he catch a bad distemper, his keepers will be guilty of murder.⁷ So, if from a continuance of rigorous and cruel usage, a disease makes its appearance which ends in death, whether the fatal result proceed from active severity or passive negligence, the law will imply malice.⁸ Upon which ground it is, that a master who neglects to provide proper nourishment for his apprentice, is guilty of murder if death ensue.⁹ The wife, in this case, was acquitted, it not being her duty to have provided food.¹⁰ And herein consists the distinction: where the duty exists, the neglect amounts to murder; where the duty is absent, the negligence is manslaughter.¹¹ Still, if the wife had used active severity, so as to amount to ill usage, she would have been included in the conviction. Upon a similar principle, a married woman who omitted to supply her illegitimate child with food, was held not guilty of murder, it not having been shown that the husband had supplied her with food for the purpose of maintaining the infant, and that she had wilfully neglected to give it.¹² So, if a master neglect to provide proper medicines for his apprentice, he is at all events guilty of manslaughter, although the law is otherwise as to a servant,¹³ and although there be an invalid indenture of apprenticeship, yet if the prisoner should be proved to have starved the deceased as his apprentice, he will not be allowed to turn round and say that no relation of master and servant existed.¹⁴

¹ R. v. Walter, Car. & M. 164.

² East, P. C. 225.

³ Id. 226.

⁴ Id.

⁵ R. v. Walter, Car. & M. 164; R. v. Stockdale, 2 Lew. C. C. 220.

In this case a count charged the child's death to have arisen from exposure to cold, but the medical men attributed death to a contusion, though they said that cold might have accelerated death;—Patteson, J., held that as the count charged the exposure, it could not be supported.

⁶ Car. & M., ut supra.

⁷ 9 St. T. 218, by Carter, B. R. v. Huggins, 2 Str. 856, 864; 2 Ld. R. 1574.

⁸ R. v. Self, Leach, 137; East, P. C. 226.

⁹ R. v. Squire and ux. 1 Russ. C. M. 190.

¹⁰ Id. per Lawrence, J.

¹¹ R. v. Bubb and another, 4 Cox, 455.

¹² R. v. Saunders, 7 C. & P. 277.

¹³ R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 153.

¹⁴ R. v. Davies, 1 Russ. C. M. 491.

So, if an infirm person be treated with such gross negligence as that the jury can justly infer that death was contemplated, it is murder. Merely to prove it, such a case would amount to manslaughter.¹ Imprisonment is evidence of a duty to supply food, otherwise the allegation of a duty to supply food should appear in the indictment.² Excessive correction savours of cruelty, and the danger to the prisoner will be much augmented if the weapon he uses is an improper instrument, for though it is impossible to say how far correction with an ordinary weapon might, if pushed to excess, justify a conviction for murder, it is agreed that the use of one which is unusual imports a mischievous disposition, and that the party employing it must abide the event. For in this latter case, the question is, whether the violence perpetrated was done with an intent to kill. A bar of iron has been considered an improper instrument, and death having ensued, the judges held a master guilty of murder who, in a passion, struck his apprentice with it.³ So, with a great staff.⁴ Again, when a park-keeper struck a boy who was trespassing (but made no resistance) two blows, and tied him to his horse's tail, and then struck him again, upon which the horse ran away and the lad was killed, the prisoner was held to have had "premeditated malice," and was executed.⁵ So, a blow with a sword may be considered to be equally improper, where a master had so struck his servant for refusing to deliver up a key, he would probably have suffered, but for some errors in the indictment.⁶

The compelling of a child to work for an unreasonable time, whereby consumption ensues, is only manslaughter.⁷

Sudden Quarrel.—Provocation.—Affray.] It is not to be supposed, however human infirmity may be regarded, that every case of sudden quarrel or provocation must be, of necessity, extenuated in the event of death. The resolution concerning Mawgridge⁸ affords a proof of this. A. and B. fell out, and A. offered B. a pot of ale to strike him. B. struck, and A. killed B. This was held to be murder.⁹ So, if a person should retreat purposely to a wall in order to kill his adversary, it is murder if he kill him.¹⁰ And the question is, whether the provocation, at the time of the fatal assault, was so intense as to overpower the understanding of the person. Has there been time for cool reflection to intervene? Have thought, contrivance, and design been imported into the transaction?

¹ R. v. Marriott, 8 C. & P. 425.

² R. v. Edwards, Id. 611. R. v. Goodwin, 1 Russ. C. M. 563, referred to with approbation by Lord Campbell, 21 L. J. M. C. 202.

³ R. v. Grey, Kel. 64.

⁴ 1 Hale, 474; Norw. As. 1670.

⁵ R. v. Halloway, Cro. Car. 131.

⁶ R. v. Keite, Ld. Raym. 138. He was convicted of manslaughter.

⁷ R. v. Cheeseman, 7 C. & P. 455.

⁸ Ante.

⁹ 2 Ld. Raym. 1496.

¹⁰ Kel. 58.

If these latter incidents appear to have been pre-eminent, the offence amounts to murder.¹ So, if A. use a deadly weapon pre-meditatedly, in a contest, he becomes guilty of murder, should death ensue. If he uses it in a scuffle without such intention, the offence is manslaughter.² A soldier, as he was running towards an affray, was accosted by a woman who said, "You will not murder the man, will you?" To which he replied, "What is that to you, you bitch?" upon which the woman gave him a box on the ear. He then struck her with the pommel of his sword on the breast, and upon her running away, pursued and stabbed her in the back. Holt, C. J., thought that this was murder, for the soldier had returned a blow for the box on the ear, which, of itself, could not have justified the killing. Other circumstances, however, appearing more favourable to the prisoner, he was only convicted of manslaughter.³

So, where a soldier, after a general scuffle, went out into the yard of a public house, and fetching thence a pitchfork, wounded a person with whom he had previously been struggling, and thereby occasioned his death, the judges were in doubt whether he was not guilty of murder, for the jury had found that he had said of the deceased during the contest, "Damn him! I will murder him;" that he did not labour under any apprehension of personal danger, and that he did not see his comrade bleeding at the time of the fatal stroke, a circumstance which had happened, and which might have provoked him. It was, perhaps, a fact in the prisoner's favour, that only one minute had elapsed between his departure and return with the pitchfork. It was determined that he should be recommended for a pardon, having been convicted of murder, on condition of his serving abroad for his life.⁴ So, where a party had purposed to enlist with one C. and the prisoner, who were soldiers, but afterwards repented, upon which a quarrel ensued, and a crowd collecting, C. drew his sword, and stood in the doorway of the inn declaring that no one should go out,—the prisoner presently finding that the innkeeper's son had got hold of the arm in which C. held his sword, stabbed the latter in the back. It was held, that this would have been murder had the son died, for neither C. nor the prisoner had any right to enlist recruits, nor to prevent the rescue of the party who enlisted, and no blow had been inflicted upon the soldiers.⁵

Drunkenness.] Drunkenness is no excuse for homicide, but it is occasionally taken into consideration, especially where provocation has been given by a blow, to determine whether the prisoner

¹ R. v. Hayward, 6 C. & P. 157. Verdict, Guilty of murder.

² See R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 160.

³ R. v. Stedman, East, P. C. 234.

⁴ R. v. Rankin, Russ. & Ry. 43.

⁵ R. v. Longden, Russ. & Ry. 228.

acted from passion or from malice, and likewise to account for any expressions of the prisoner.¹

Duels.] Duels fall under the head of inexcusable provocation in cases where the meeting for a fatal purpose is deliberately postponed.² For if the duel takes place upon a sudden heat, it is otherwise.³ A very slight circumstance will alter the character of the transaction. As where Lord Morley objected to fighting at the moment of a quarrel, because of the disadvantage he would labour under from high shoes. This was considered evidence of malice, for it showed that deliberate reflection had taken place.⁴ The seconds are also implicated in the same crime, although it was doubted for some time whether the seconds of the party killed were guilty of more than a high misdemeanor.⁵ And so likewise all who give countenance to the duel, by aid or encouragement, are guilty of murder if death ensues, although mere presence will not be sufficient to implicate them.⁶ Thus, again, the second of the deceased person may be convicted of murder upon an indictment charging him with being present, aiding, and abetting the person who killed his, the prisoner's, principal.⁷

Hence it is that the seconds may refuse to give evidence upon the trial of the principals; but it has been held, that if they consent to be sworn, they must disclose all they know, although their testimony may be prejudicial to themselves.⁸ It may be observed here, that a casual meeting between B. and C. at a place where C. has previously agreed to meet A. in a hostile manner, will not implicate B. in the crime of murder, nor of manslaughter, if C. be killed by A., and B. take no share in the transaction. And this, although B. knew that a quarrel exists between A. and C.⁹

Homicide in the prosecution of an illegal act.] The law is so careful of human life, that it will hold persons responsible as murderers for a fatal accident, although the blow may have been given by mistake, if it were, in the first instance, levelled wilfully against some other person, and in the prosecution of an unlawful purpose. Those, therefore, who engage in illegal designs are liable as principals in the second degree, for a homicide committed by one of ¹ R. v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 817. By Patteson, J., in R. v. Cruse and ux., 8 C. & P. 546. R. v. Pearson, 2 Lew. C. C. 144. "A man may be so drunk as not to be able to have an intent." R. v. Monkhouse, 4 Cox, 55.

² R. v. Taverner, 1 Ro. Rep. 360; 3 Bulstr. 171; Kel. 28.

³ R. v. Kirk and another, 12 Mod. 304.

⁴ R. v. Bromwich, 1 Lev. 180. R. v. Lord Morley and Bromidge,

1 Sid. 277; 2 Ld. Raym. 1496, citing Crompt. 23, 25.

⁵ 1 Hale, 443; East, P. C. 242. R. v. Young and another, 8 C. & P. 644.

⁶ 8 C. & P., ut supra, and Id. 652.

⁷ R. v. Cuddy, 1 Car. & K. 210.

⁸ R. v. England, Leach, 767. And see several cases to the same effect, Id. 769.

⁹ R. v. Lord Mohun, Holt's Ca. 479.

their party. And if it were arranged between A. B. and C. that B. and C. should commit a burglary, and that, in case of resistance, they should proceed to murder, there is reason to believe that, in case of murder, A. would be an accessory before the fact. Thus, with reference to the general principle of combination for an unlawful object, where two soldiers had been denied beer at an unseasonable hour, but afterwards contrived to rush into the house, and whilst one was engaged in scuffling with the landlord, the other stabbed him with a sharp instrument,—it was held to be murder in both, for there was reasonable evidence of the prisoners having come the second time with a deliberate intention of using violence, in case their demand for beer had not been complied with, and the struggle with the landlord made no difference, because he had a right to use reasonable force in removing the soldier from his house at that hour of the night.¹ The law is the same in the common case of affrays with poachers, although no blow be struck by any one of the party, except the actual murderer.² And where two poachers had surrendered to gamekeepers, who did not announce in what capacity they had made the capture, and then, upon the call of the two, a third came up and killed one of the keepers, it was held murder in all, although the two did no act except to summon their comrade.³ So, where Lord Dacre and others agreed to hunt in a park, and to kill all who might resist,—upon the death of the keeper at the hands of one of the company, it was ruled to be murder in all, although Lord Dacre was a quarter of a mile from the spot when the blow was given, and knew nothing of it.⁴ And upon another occasion, it was held to be no defence that one of the park-keepers fired first, there being an original intent to murder in case of resistance.⁵ So, where persons came to a place to seize goods illegally by force, and a gentlewoman coming out of the house unarmed, was killed by a stone thrown by one of the parties, it was held murder in all.⁶ So, in the well-known case of the unlawful distress, if the stroke had been levelled at any one, either wilfully or by mistake, it would, undoubtedly, have been murder.⁷ So, upon a hue and cry, all the robbers who resisted their pursuers were held guilty of the murder of one of them, although they were at a distance from the actual slayer in the same field.⁸ Two go forth to rob a person, and death ensues; both were guilty of murdering the person robbed.⁹ In R. v. Price and others, where an assault was made by

¹ R. v. Willoughby, East, P. C. 288, per Buller, J.

² R. v. Edmeads, 3 C. & P. 390.

³ R. v. Whithorne, 3 C. & P. 394.

⁴ Le Seignior Dacre's case, Mo. 86; Palm. 35. And see East, P. C. 256; Sav. 67; Leach, 374.

⁵ R. v. Wormal and others, 2 Ro. Rep. 120.

⁶ The statute De Malefactoribus in Parcibus, 21 Ed. 1, st. 2, is repealed, but this makes no difference as to the general law.

⁷ R. v. Mansell and Herbert, Dy. 128.

⁸ R. v. Jackson and others, 1 Hale, 464. R. v. Howell, 9 C. & P. 437.

⁹ R. v. Jackson and another, 7 Cox, 357; and R. v. Howell was cited.

six persons on one man, Byles, J., thus directed the jury. The person who stabbed was guilty of murder, even though he might have intended only bodily harm. If the five others designed that death should ensue, it was murder in them. So, if there was a common intent to use the knife. If no common design, yet if they were present abetting the act, it was murder in all. If none of these circumstances could be verified, the five should be acquitted, and the stabber alone convicted. If the jury could not say which struck the blow in this latter case, all should be found not guilty.¹ In order, however, to entail the guilt upon the parties, the killing must be in furtherance of the unlawful act. Therefore, where a fray took place between a landlord and his assistants, who were about to make a distress, and the prisoners who were hired by the tenant to oppose it, and in the course of the fray a boy, quite unconcerned in the affair, and who was standing at his father's door, was slain by a person unknown, the majority of the judges held it not to be murder, for, as far as the evidence went, it seemed to be a killing by accident, and quite independent of the original purpose.² So, where a smuggler engaged with others in a struggle with the king's officers, shot one of his accomplices, it was held that this would have been murder in the whole party, had the special verdict found that the gun had been discharged against the officers, but in the absence of that finding, non constat, but that the killing was premeditated against the accomplice only, in which case the hand which did the act would alone be guilty.³ So, when two were beating one, and a stranger remonstrated, upon which one of the assailants stabbed the stranger, the judges held that the other assailant was not guilty of the murder, because the killing was collateral, and did not ensue upon the act of assault.⁴ So, where one saw his master fighting, and took his part, here although the master was, under the circumstances, guilty of murder, yet the servant having joined suddenly, and without premeditation, was held to have committed manslaughter only.⁵ Just so it is, that if a man take a pistol out of his pocket and commit a murder, independently of the original unlawful design, the confederate will not be involved in the more serious charge.⁶ Two brothers were fighting, and a third person laid hold of one of them who stabbed him; it was held, that the offender would have been guilty of murder had death ensued, and no further violence had been used than what was necessary to prevent the fight; if any excess had been committed, the offence would have been reduced to manslaughter.⁷ A woman put skewers into the womb of another woman, in order to procure abortion, and the woman died of the

¹ In R. v. Price and others, 8 Cox, C. C. 96.

² R. v. Hubson and others, East, P. C. 258; Leach, 6. Nom. R. v. Hodgson. See R. v. Macklin and others, 2 Lew. C. C. 225.

³ R. v. Plummer, 12 Mod. 627; Kel, 109. R. v. Tomson, Id. 66.

⁴ Anon, 8 Mod. 164.

⁵ R. v. Salisbury, Plowd. 100.

⁶ R. v. Duffey and another, 1 Lew. C. C. 194. See also R. v. Borthwick and others. 1 Dougl. 207.

⁷ R. v. Bourne, 5 C. & P. 120.

injury : this was held to be murder,¹ and it makes no difference that life might have been saved had certain means been used. The prisoner caused a premature birth by her criminal conduct towards a woman, and the child died by reason of exposure ; the possibility of saving the child had no bearing upon the matter.² The prisoners were charged with intoxicating a person, and then ill-using him so that he died. The object was to get the man, who was a sheriff's officer, out of possession. The indictment was for manslaughter, and the court held that, if it were necessary to prove that the prisoners knew that the liquors given would cause death, the case would amount to murder. It was not the less manslaughter because the prisoners drove the deceased about in a carriage, not to kill him, but to keep him out of possession.³ Then, killing by mistake will amount to murder or manslaughter, according to the particular circumstances of each case.⁴ A. advised B. to poison his wife ; B. did so, but the woman recovered. She, however, gave her daughter some of the poisoned food, and the child died. It was held that A., although accessory to the malicious attempt against B.'s wife, was not guilty of the death of the child. But B. was guilty of murder.⁵ One Agnes Gore put poison into some medicine prepared by an apothecary. The apothecary vexed by the evil results which had attended his medicine, declared he would take it himself, and, cutting off a piece (it was an electuary), eat it, and died of the poison. Agnes Gore was held guilty of murder.⁶ Catherine Michael gave to S. S. some laudanum to administer to an infant, and she was adjudged guilty of murder, although a child, who happened to find the laudanum on a mantel-piece, administered it to the infant instead of S. S., who did not intend to administer it, and although the child gave more than a teaspoonful, the quantity directed by C. M. to be taken.⁷ C. was indicted as a principal in murder. C. got some arsenic, and persuaded B. to administer it. Being absent when the poison was given, it was contended that C. was not within the statute 11 & 12 Vict. c. 46,⁸ and that the Act did not apply to murder, but the objection was overruled . . .⁹ A. was privy to a plot to murder B. by means of an explosive machine which killed C. This proof was held sufficient to go to the jury as evidence of his murdering C. and of being accessory.¹⁰ But the indictment must be drawn with care. There was an indictment against the prisoner for causing poison to be taken by B., with intent to murder B. The evidence was, that B. took

¹ R. v. Tinckler, East, P. C. 230.

² R. v. West, 2 Car. & K. 784.

³ R. v. Packard, Car. & M. 236.

⁴ R. v. Lewis, 6 C. & P. 161 ; Fost. 262 ; Kel. 111. R. v. Saunders, Plowd. 474 ; 1 Hale, 441.

⁵ R. v. Archer, Plowd. 475.

⁶ R. v. Gore, 9 Rep. 81 (a).

⁷ R. v. Michael, 2 Moo. C. C. 120. See R. v. Williams, Den.

39. An application to inspect the stomach will be entertained on the prisoner's behalf before trial.

R. v. Spry and another, 3 Cox, C. C. 221.

⁸ See now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 94.

⁹ R. v. Chadwick, Greaves Cr. Law Acts (1861), p. 10.

¹⁰ R. v. Bernard, 1 Post. & F 240.

the poison, but that it was intended for another, and the indictment was held to be bad. But an indictment was preferred stating the intent to have been "to commit murder," and the prisoner was convicted.¹ A woman threw a piece of iron at her child in order to frighten him, but unhappily caused thereby the death of another child, who chanced, by coming into the room, to meet the stroke: this was held to be manslaughter.²

Lastly, it may be added, that the killing must take place, not only in pursuance of the unlawful act, but also during the continuance of that undertaking, that is, if it be sought to affect the whole party with the crime of murder. Because a fresh confederation or provocation may be the means of changing the features of the transaction very materially. As where A. with several followers, and probably, upon a claim of title, ejected B. from a house. Threedays afterwards, B. with others, came armed, with an intent to re-enter, and one of them cast fire into a thatched house adjoining the mansion, upon which a gun was fired by one of A.'s party, which killed one of B.'s party. It was held that this was manslaughter only in A. and his friends, because here was a fresh and sudden provocation, though had the death happened during the illegal entry of A. he would, in all likelihood, have incurred the guilt of murder.³

Homicide by resisting officers.] The act of killing an officer being, of course, unlawful, all those who may be present, and who offer resistance, must be considered as aiding and abetting. The doubts which have been entertained upon this subject of killing an officer, have arisen, principally, as to the validity of the warrant of arrest, and sometimes, as to the mode of executing it. It may be observed that the fact of the person charged by a warrant, or against whom process may be out, being an innocent man, will make no difference, should the instrument which authorizes his capture be regular, and the mode of executing it correct. A man, however innocent, therefore, who resists to death a legal arrest, will be guilty of murder.⁴

Our remarks here will be chiefly confined to the arrest in civil suits, inasmuch as we have fully treated upon arrest in criminal cases in the early portion of this work.⁵ There is an instance of both the objections above adverted to, with regard to the warrant and the mode of its execution, in a case where the county clerk of Somerset had signed an attachment in his own cause, and the officer whom the sheriff had directed to execute the process was killed by the person attached. It was said for the prisoner, that this process was illegal, and consequently void, but the judges held that the county clerk had only acted ministerially, and not as judge in his own cause. It also appeared that the outer door, through which the deceased entered, was divided into two parts, the lower part being closed and the upper open. The officer put his hand over the latch to open it, upon which a struggle ensued, and then the deceased having prevailed, and got beyond the doorway, he was almost immediately shot. The judges were of opinion that the prisoner had been properly convicted.¹ And it is to be observed, that if the writ itself be correct, a defect in the proceedings upon which it was founded will not vary the guilt of him who resists it. It is enough, if a jurisdiction appear over the subject matter of the process.² The writ and warrant were held sufficient, without showing the judgment or decree. In this case the writ of execution, the injunction for delivering possession, and the writ of assistance, were read in evidence, but not the decree.³ So again, where an escape warrant had been obtained unduly, and even by perjury, it was held to be murder in a party who killed the officer.⁴ And these cases are quite different from such as show an error in the process itself, for that circumstance alleviates the offence, and reduces it to manslaughter.⁵ With reference to the mode of arresting, as every man's house is held to be his castle, "for safety and repose," it is not competent in civil suits for an officer to break the outward door.⁶ This is a privilege which the occupier and his family become entitled to, by virtue of their ordinary residence in a place. It will be recollected that we are now speaking of civil suits, for in criminal matters, and, as it should seem, upon an escape warrant,⁷ the regular course of justice must not be impeded by any external guard. And the privilege will not prevail if there be an escape and fresh pursuit.⁸ Nor will it extend to shelter a stranger who takes refuge in the house of another.⁹ Although it may be added, that if a door be broken in search of a stranger, and he be not found, the peril rests with the invader.¹⁰ And a magistrate's warrant sets aside all these niceties. It has been stated that the filling up of a blank warrant in cases of felony, was so far authorized as to place the person who might execute it within the fullest protection of the law.¹¹ But this is not so in civil matters, and therefore, where the warrant had been filled up after it was sealed, a killing of the officer was ruled to be manslaughter only.¹² Even this decision seems, nevertheless, to be limited to cases where the writ has been sent out of the office before its completion. So that where the names of the officers to whom a writ of Hab. fac. poss. was directed, were interlineated after the writ was sealed, and while it remained in the hands of the under-sheriff, the judges held a conviction, under 9 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 1, for shooting, right.¹³ Yet, whether the matter be civil

¹ R. v. Ryan, 2 Moo. & Rob. 213. Hale, P. C. 444; East, P. C. 259.

² R. v. Conner, 7 C. & P. 438. ⁴ East, P. C. 300.

³ Case of Drayton Basset, 1 ⁵ Ante.

¹ R. v. Baker, Leach, 112; East, P. C. 323.

² R. v. Rogers, East, P. C. 310; Fost. 311. R. v. Mackalley, 9 Rep. 61 (b).

³ East, P. C. 310 (n).

⁴ R. v. Curtis, Fost. 135.

⁵ East, P. C. 312. See R. v. Mead and another, 2 Stark. N.P.C. 205.

⁶ Lee v. Gansel, Cowp. 1; East, P. C. 323.

⁷ East, P. C. 310.

⁸ East, P. C. 324.

⁹ Id. 323.

¹⁰ Id. 324.

¹¹ Ante.

¹² R. v. Stevenson, 10 St. Tr. 462.

¹³ R. v. Harris, Leach, 929. See

Burslem v. Fern, 2 Wils. 47.

Housin v. Barrow, 6 T. R. 122.

R. v. Stevenson and others, East, 326.

or criminal, a notification of the business on hand must be made by the officer, unless, indeed, the circumstances of the particular case should point out his authority, and this intimation must be met by a refusal, either direct or indirect, to open the door, before the persons without can proceed to extremities.¹ So where an arrest is made in the street or elsewhere, openly, or in a house, the entry being undisturbed, some notice must still be tendered, as a staff of office, or words denoting the authority to arrest, or naming the party aloud upon hue and cry, and in the daytime this notice is the more easily given, because a mere ensign of office will suffice.² And if there be evidence to show that the prisoner knew the party to be an officer, no notice at all need be proved.³ But when a bailiff pushed abruptly into a chamber, and was met by the party he intended to take, with a sword, and thus perished in the surprise of the moment, it was held, that as no notice had been given, the case could not amount to murder.⁴ In criminal cases it is not necessary to produce the warrant for arresting the party, but in civil process, although the bailiff must not part with his warrant, he must if it be demanded, show and explain it.⁵ Lastly, with reference to the time of arrest, it is no excuse to say that the officer came at an unreasonable hour, for there might not otherwise be a convenient opportunity for doing justice to the creditor.⁶ But save for treason, felony, and a breach of the peace, it is not competent to execute process on a Sunday.⁷

The second point is the guilt of those who aid and abet a fatal assault committed upon the officers who execute civil process, or apprehend by virtue of a magistrate's warrant. As a general principle these persons are guilty of murder, the point in their favour, independently of the invalidity of the warrant, being their separation or dissent from the violence of their companions. Several may be engaged in an affray: some of these may continue active in the brawl, until a deadly blow has been given; others may retire previously from the contest. In such a case the former only are guilty of murder.⁸ If there be no such retirement, all aiders and abettors are equally guilty with the party who gives the stroke.⁹ Again, some may be ignorant of the presence of a constable, and others may aid and abet with a knowledge of that fact, and then the latter only incur the guilt of murder, unless, indeed, all had united for the purpose of an unlawful tumult, in which case the idea of a sudden affray would be lost.¹⁰ And it is moreover possible that the assailants might not generally know the officers, but yet might have reason to be cognizant of the

¹ East, P. C. 324; Fost. 136.

² East, P. C. 315. R. v. Gordon, Id. 319. To the same effect is R. v. Mackalley, 9 Rep. 61 (b). Case of the Sissinghurst Rioters, 1 Hale, 462.

³ R. v. Pew, Cro. Car. 183.

⁴ 1 Hale, 470; cor. Glynn, C. J.; East, P. C. 314.

⁵ East, P. C. 319.

⁶ R. v. Mackalley, 9 Rep. 68. Objection 1. See R. v. Hagan, 8 C. & P. 167, post.

⁷ East, P. C. 325.

⁸ R. v. Wallis, 1 Salk. 334.

⁹ Benson v. Offley (appeal), 2 Show. 510.

¹⁰ R. v. Tyler and another, 8 C. & P. 616.

presence of the ministers of justice; and if so, their ignorance would seem to be no defence to an indictment for murder.¹ Intimidation is no defence, if some act be done by the prisoners. The duty of persons so circumstanced is to leave the unlawful assembly as soon as they can consistently with their personal safety.² And it will not avail the prisoners to say that the mob had no particular object in view.³

And, if a person interpose who was not originally mixed up with the quarrel, he must abide the consequence of any violent act on his part. As, if a bailiff be engaged in his regular duty, and a stranger suddenly interfere and kill him, this is murder.⁴ Still, in favour of human life, if the defendant can prove that he merely stepped in to keep the peace or prevent mischief, and that the occurrence took place, as it were, by misadventure, he will, at all events, be discharged from the heavier crime.⁵ Even the principal in a transaction, as an arrest or an affray, if he disavow the acts of his friends in time, or if these acts be entirely independent of his own conduct, will not be held answerable for their violence. As, if A. remain quite passive under an arrest, and B., without previous concert, kill the bailiff, A. is not guilty of any offence.⁶ So, where one out of many others submitted to an arrest, and then one of the pursuers upon a hue and cry was slain by a confederate, it was held that the person in custody was not guilty of murder.⁷

There is one other point: can a third person plead the illegality of a warrant, the execution of which he has opposed with bloodshed? The better opinion seems to be, that he cannot make such a defence with success, but some difference of opinion has prevailed. A man was impressed without a warrant; three or four persons seeing the capture demanded the warrant, and denying the authority of the paper which was shown to them, a scuffle arose, which ended in the death of one of the officers. It was held by eight judges against four that this was manslaughter, although Kelyng, C. J., expressed himself strongly to the contrary.⁸ A woman was arrested illegally by a constable; several persons, thereupon, attacked the officer, but became pacified for the moment, and retreated. However, they advanced again, and the constable calling D. to his assistance, the latter was killed before any stroke had been inflicted upon the assailants. Seven judges against five held this to be manslaughter, on the ground, that an illegal imprisonment was a sufficient provocation to all people, and a warranty for their interference. The five judges said, it might be a

¹ R. v. Yong, 4 Rep. 40 (a); East, P. C. 315, 316; 1 Hale, 463.

² R. v. Tyler and another, 3 C. & P. 616. Verdict, "Guilty of murder."

³ R. v. Tyler, ut supra.

⁴ Kel. 87; East, P. C. 318. See R. v. Sir C. Stanley, Kel. 86.

⁵ 1 Sid. 160; East, P. C. 318.

⁶ R. v. Sir C. Stanley, Kel. 87; R. v. Sir H. Ferrers, Cro. Car. 371.

See Anon. at Hertford, East, P. C. 296.

⁷ R. v. Jackson and others, 1 Hale, 464.

⁸ R. v. Huggett, Kel. 59; 1 Hale, 465; i. e. that the case was murder.

provocation to a prisoner, but not to a stranger, and here, the prisoners were entire strangers to the woman.¹ But Mr. Justice Foster observes upon this case, that there was time for cool reflection between the first and second attack, and that the assailants seemed to be pacified; so that the second assault seemed rather to have been grounded upon resentment, or a principle of revenge, than any hope or endeavour to assist the woman.² Mary Adey killed an officer who was taking the man she cohabited with, under an illegal warrant. The act was done in a transport of passion, and although three judges thought it murder, a special verdict was found, and the matter came, upon argument, before the judges. No opinion was publicly given, but whether the prisoner escaped from gaol during the riots of 1780, or whether, as it is said, the judges thought the case manslaughter and so the prisoner was discharged, does not seem to be quite clear.³

Killing by officers.] When an officer, during his capture, commits a homicide, it should appear, in order to justify an extremity so serious, that he had a good excuse for his conduct; as, where in an affray with smugglers, a revenue officer was twice knocked down, upon which he shot the deceased. Being indicted for murder, he was acquitted.⁴ However, it will not avail to allege a slight interruption, nor will any act of resistance sanction a killing, especially if the necessity of the occasion be exceeded; and a fortiori, if the officer kill after the resistance has ceased, and there has been time to cool, he will be guilty of murder; or, again, if he kill, meeting with no resistance.⁵ And the same consequence will ensue if he take life under an insufficient authority, for he is then no legal officer.⁶ In the case of Reason and Tranter, who were tried for killing Mr. Luttrell, it was agreed, that a disproportionate revenge would entail the crime of murder upon officers, and that an assault with a walking cane, which drew a little blood, would not justify an unrelenting attack upon the striker, especially the act of shooting him on the ground. Still, a determined attempt at rescue on his part would alter the case, and might even reduce the killing to justifiable homicide.⁷ Nevertheless, this seems to have been one of the cases in which the officers almost transgressed the necessity of the occasion. So, if a constable encounter a bailiff in the execution of his duty, and kill him, he will be guilty of murder.⁸ But the greater number of charges against officers has arisen in cases where their authority has been altogether disputed. This matter has been frequently discussed upon impressments. It was usual with the admiralty to intrust the press warrant to a par-

¹ R. v. Tooley and others, 2 Ld. Raymond, 1296.

² Fost. 315.

³ R. v. Adey, Leach, 206, 212.

⁴ R. v. Marsh and others, 3 Mod. 66.

⁵ East, P. C. 297.

⁶ East, P. C. 312.

⁷ Fost. 292; 1 Str. 499; but not so well reported in Strange.

⁸ 1 Hale, 460; East, P. C. 305.

A case at Exeter before Heath, J., upon an assault and rescue.

ticular officer, and he, in his turn, confided the execution to a commissioned officer, whose name and office appeared in the body of the warrant; consequently, if the person intrusted with the impressing ventured to kill a seaman who endeavoured to escape, he was guilty of murder, if he had no warrant.¹ And it made no difference that the mariner drew a knife, in order to resist, after his capture and detention; for in the absence of the warrant, the conduct of the officer was entirely illegal.² So, again,—leaving the question of pressing,—a ship's sentinel has no authority to kill persons approaching the vessel, unless it be in order to preserve the crew. The prisoner was under orders to keep off all boats, and was furnished with arms and ammunition; certain boats pressed upon the ship, upon which the sentinel fired, and killed a man. The jury found, that the shot had been fired under a mistaken impression of duty, but the judges held that the case was one of murder, although under the particular circumstances they recommended that a pardon should be applied for.³ So, when a constable shot at a man who was stealing wood in a coppice, he was convicted of shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, although he could not have otherwise made an arrest, and although by reason of former convictions for wood-stealing, but which were unknown to the constable, the man's offence amounted to felony, the conviction was sustained.⁴

By 1 Geo. 1, st. 2, c. 5, s. 3, officers happening to kill, maim, or hurt persons who continue for more than one hour in an unlawful assembly after proclamation, are indemnified for their conduct.

And by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 53, s. 8, vessels engaged in smuggling which do not bring to upon a signal, may be fired at, the captain or other person being indemnified from any indictment or other proceeding, in consequence thereof.

Murder of infants.] We will now advert to the murder of infants. It seems to be necessary that the child should have an independent circulation, before it can be the subject of a murderous assault; therefore if a man strike a woman with child, so as to cause the death of the child, he is neither guilty of murder, nor of manslaughter.⁵ But it is not essential, if the child be wholly born, that it should have breathed;⁶ whilst, on the other hand, the fact of the child's breathing is, of itself, insufficient, as it might have died before its birth.⁷ However, it was at one time made a question, whether a child, connected with the mother by the umbilical cord, but wholly produced into the world, was the subject of murder if strangled intentionally by its mother.⁸ The jury must be satisfied

¹ R. v. Browning, East, P. C. 312.

² R. v. Dixon, East, P. C. 313. R. v. Browning, Id. 312; and see Fost. 154. R. v. Borthwick, 1 Dougl. 207.

³ R. v. Thomas, 1 Russ. C. M. 614. R. v. Withers, see East, P. C. 295.

⁴ R. v. Dadson, 20 L. J. M. C. 57; Den. & P. 35.

⁵ 1 Hale, 433. R. v. Enoch, 5 C. & P. 539. R. v. Poulton, Id. 329. R. v. Wright, 9 C. & P. 754.

⁶ R. v. Brain, 6 C. & P. 349.

⁷ R. v. Sellis, 7 C. & P. 850.

⁸ R. v. Crutchley, 7 C. & P. 814.

of the full birth,¹ and then it seems, that the offence is murder;² and the point was seriously considered by the judges, in Michaelmas Term, 1848, when they unanimously held the conviction, under such circumstances, right, although the child was still attached to the navel string.³

The term "quick with child," means having conceived.⁴

Other cases of murder.] The prisoner shot a man who was dressed in white, and who pretended to be a ghost; here, the deceased had only been guilty of a misdemeanor, and it was therefore adjudged murder to kill him, but the prisoner was reprieved.⁵

Suicide.] If two persons encourage one another to commit suicide, and one fails in the attempt, the deceased will be felo de se, and the survivor a principal in the murder; for suicide is murder by the English law. In a case of this kind, the prisoner was recommended for a pardon, because it did not appear but that the deceased might have fallen into the water at the last moment by accident, although it was clear that both had gone out at night for the purpose of self-destruction.⁶

The absence of the person abetting suicide will make no difference, if his advice be followed; as in the case of poisoning.⁷ Drunkenness, so as to negative the idea of consciousness, is evidence to show that there was no attempt to commit suicide, at least not in point of law.⁸

Civil trespass.] So, as in the case of the ghost, a mere trespasser cannot be put to death without subjecting the slayer to an indictment for murder. It was held some years since, by Holroyd, J., that a civil trespass would not excuse firing at the trespasser. Nevertheless, the taking forcible possession of a close was held to be more than a trespass, and the entering of a dwelling by force, especially at night, was deemed a matter of aggravation; still, said

¹ S. C.

² R. v. Reeves, 9 C. & P. 25.

³ R. v. Trilloe, 2 Moo. C. C. 260.

⁴ R. v. Wycherley, 8 C. & P. 262. As to the proof necessary to support an allegation of the child being a bastard, see R. v. Poulton, 5 C. & P. 329. And as to the old statute, 21 Jac. 1, c. 27, (repealed,) respecting the concealment of the death of bastards, see East, P. C. 228, 229.

⁵ R. v. Smith, 1 Russ. C. M. 546.

⁶ R. v. Dyson, Russ. & Ry.

523. R. v. Alison, 8 C. & P. 418. And see R. v. Russell, 1 Moo. C. C. 356.

⁷ R. v. Vaux, 4 Rep. 44 (a). But see R. v. Leddington, 9 C. & P. 79, contra, Alderson, B., where it was held that the prisoner could not be tried as accessory before the fact, the advice to commit suicide having been followed. The 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, only extends to such persons as were previously liable to be tried either with or after the principal, and an accessory before the fact to suicide was not triable at common law.

⁸ R. v. Moore, 3 Car. & K. 319.

the learned judge, a man is not authorized to fire upon every invasion or intrusion.¹ A fortiori, if he have time to reflect; as where A. having threatened to shoot trespassers, upon seeing one, went back to his house, and got a pistol and shot the trespasser; he was held guilty of murder.²

Wanton carelessness.] Wanton carelessness may amount to murder; as if a workman were to throw down stones recklessly in a public street, especially after being warned.³ So, if a driver will dash forward after timely notice of the danger likely to ensue.⁴ So, if a man were purposely to let loose a vicious animal, it might be only to frighten;⁵ but, à fortiori, if it were to be done maliciously, he would be guilty of murder.⁶ So, where a boy who had been warned not to come near to a shop, did come and throw a sharp instrument at an apprentice, which killed him, it was ruled manslaughter, although there was no malice against the apprentice, and Hullock, B., said that the charge might have been for murder.⁷

The plague.] Respecting the plague, Lord Hale inquires, "What, if a person goes abroad with an intent to infect another, and another is thereby infected and dies, whether that be not murder by the common law might be a question."⁸

False accusation.] One J. Kidder was convicted and executed upon the testimony of two persons, who had conspired with others for the purpose of obtaining a reward. In this case, the judges, although much disposed to hold the offence murder, abstained nevertheless from so doing, by reason of the danger of deterring witnesses from giving evidence in capital prosecutions, if it must be at the peril of their lives.⁹

Death from fear of immediate violence.] If a person through fear of immediate violence throw himself into danger, as if, in order to escape a blow, he cast himself into a river, and be drowned, the aggressor will probably be guilty of murder.¹⁰ So where the prisoner beat his wife, and threatened to throw her out of the window, upon which, through terror, she threw herself out and died of the bruises occasioned thereby, three judges expressed their

¹ R. v. Meade and Belt, 1 Lew. C. C. 184.

² R. v. Moir, 7 C. & P. 179, cited.

³ See R. v. Hull, Kel. 40.

⁴ See 1 Hale, 476.

⁵ Lord Hale speaks of such a case at St. Albans, where the owner wished only to make sport, and was hanged for the consequences, but he adds that it was but a hearsay. 1 Hale, 431.

⁶ East, P. C. 265.

⁷ R. v. Langstaffe, 1 Lew. C. C. 162.

⁸ 1 Hale, P. C. 432.

⁹ R. v. Macdaniel and others, East, P. C. 333; Leach, 44; Fost. 121. Foster, J., was evidently against the conviction.

¹⁰ R. v. Pitts, Car. & M. 284.

opinion, that although there was reason to believe that the death had happened through the blow inflicted before her fall, yet, that the husband was answerable for the consequences of the fall, if it took place through his threats. The jury, however, conceived that the wife's intemperance was the cause of her death, and they gave a verdict of acquittal.¹ So, where the prisoner had several times committed assaults upon the deceased, in consequence of which a fatal mortification ensued, it was doubtful whether the indictment for murder could not have been sustained, but an objection arising upon the record itself, judgment was arrested.²

Extreme youth.] Where the youth of the offender has been very tender, it has been a matter of serious consideration with the judges, whether a sufficient mischievous disposition has appeared to warrant an execution. A boy of ten years old was convicted before Chief Justice Willes of the murder of a girl of five years of age, but the chief justice respited the execution, lest the punishment of such a child by death should be deemed to savour of cruelty; but the judges held, that the circumstances of the case showed so much cunning, as that the boy ought to suffer as an example to others, and the convict would have been hanged but for the interposition of the secretary of state.³ The judges also held, that the boy's declaration before a magistrate of his guilt had been properly received.⁴

Other cases.] The responsibility of judges and officers in ordering execution will be found in a future page, when we come to treat of justifiable and excusable homicide.⁵

It is no defence that wounds, if properly treated, might have been cured.⁶ Nor, that the deceased refused to submit to a surgical operation which might have saved him.⁷ Nor, that the operation might have caused death, being rendered necessary by the felonious act.⁸ Nor, that the brandy administered necessarily after severe kicks might have entered into the lungs, and so have caused death.⁹ A bill for murder being preferred, the grand jury cannot find a true bill against A. for murder, and another against B. for manslaughter. There must be a new bill against B., but the bill is good as a bill for murder against A.¹⁰

Judgment.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 1, whosoever shall be convicted of murder shall suffer death as a felon.

By sect. 2, upon every conviction for murder the court shall ¹ R. v. Evans, 1 Russ. C. M. 489.

² R. v. Ladd, Leach, 96.

³ R. v. York, Fost. 70.

⁴ S. C.

⁵ Post. East, P. C. 334; 1 Hale, P. C. 497.

⁶ R. v. Reading, 1 Keb. 17. R. v. Rew, Kel. 26.

⁷ R. v. Holland, 2 Moo. & Rob. 351.

⁸ R. v. Pym, 1 Cox, C. C. 339.

⁹ R. v. M'Intyre, 2 Cox, 379.

¹⁰ R. v. Bubb and another, 4 Cox, 455.

pronounce sentence of death, and the same may be carried into execution, and all other proceedings upon such sentence and in respect thereof may be had and taken, in the same manner in all respects as sentence of death might have been pronounced and carried into execution, and all other proceedings in respect thereof might have been had and taken, before the passing of this Act, upon a conviction for any other felony for which the prisoner might have been sentenced to suffer death as a felon.

By sect. 3, the body of every person executed for murder shall be buried within the precincts of the prison in which he shall have been last confined after conviction, and the sentence of the court shall so direct.¹

CHAPTER II.

OF MANSLAUGHTER.

Manslaughter.] Manslaughter is a felonious killing without malice, before the blood has time to cool.² It includes a very large portion of violent deaths, for the law, which is as compassionate to human infirmity as the merciful consideration of juries, has contrived to extenuate many killings occasioned by hasty and riotous conduct; and deaths caused by careless accident, or negligence, are also viewed in the same mitigated aspect. Whilst, therefore, the law is borne out in its stern demand for inquiry into the death of a subject, and for punishment, unless a strong case can be made out in excuse, it is attended, in the absence of malice, with a more favourable construction of the offence; and thus we have the term "manslaughter" to represent various illegal homicides which are less than murder. This principle will be found to prevail throughout the decisions. Thus, if a parent punish a child with an instrument calculated to do great bodily harm, or with cruelty, it will be murder; but if the punishment be inflicted to an improper excess only, with a weapon comparatively harmless, and, of course, without a malicious intent, it will only be manslaughter. As, when a father beat his son with a rope, for theft, and with undue severity, so that he died, it was ruled manslaughter.³ And the same law obtains with reference to the relation between master and servant; as, where a master took up a clog and threw it at his boy, and killed him.¹ So, where a shepherd boy permitted some sheep to escape through negligence, upon which the prisoner took up a hedge stake and threw it at the lad, thereby fracturing his skull, and causing his death. Here the jury negatived the intent to kill, and thus the charge of murder was got rid of, but the stake being an improper instrument, they found that he was guilty of manslaughter.² In one case, the judges were apparently doubtful as to a child's stool being such an instrument as would inflict a grievous bodily harm, and so aggravate the offence. A mother-in-law, by way of correcting her daughter for a trivial fault, threw such a stool at her. It struck the girl, who was only ten years old, on the temple, and caused her death shortly afterwards. The special verdict negatived the intent to kill. After lying twelve months in prison, the woman was pardoned, without any communication from the judges on the case.³ Very near to this point is the case of one who beat a trespasser. There is, however, this distinction, namely, that in the latter case there is no justification for the slightest blow, and therefore death, under such circumstances, must amount to manslaughter.⁴

¹ See as to the new law of conspiring to murder, post, and as to the indictments, post.

² R. v. Taylor, 2 Lew. C. C. 215, Taunton, J.

³ Anon. East, P. C. 261.

Administering poison.] A. gave his wife sulphate of potash to procure abortion. She died. He was held rightly convicted of manslaughter.⁵

Starving.] Again, if a master treats his apprentice harshly, withholding from him that care to which he is entitled, so that his health suffers through the neglect, this will be a case of manslaughter, unless there be evidence of malice, as personal violence, want of food, &c., in which latter event it would be murder.⁶ But the indictment must, upon these occasions, allege a duty to supply food.⁷ So, again, where there is a separation between man and wife, and a fixed allowance regularly paid, and the husband is acquainted that his wife is houseless, and, in fact, the wife dies for want of shelter, it seems that he will be guilty of manslaughter; but he is not primâ facie bound, under such circumstances, to afford her shelter.⁸ Yet if she be labouring under a fatal disease,

¹ R. v. Turner, Comb. 407, 408.

² R. v. Wiggs, Leach, 378, n. And see R. v. Keite, 1 Ld. Raym. 138.

³ R. v. Hazel, Leach, 368.

⁴ 1 Hale, 473. So is R. v. Hopley, 2 Fost. & F. 202. [Severe beating.]

⁵ R. v. Gaylor, Dears. & B. 288.

⁶ R. v. Self, Leach, 137. And see 1 Russ. C. M. 648, citing

R. v. Wade, O. B. 1784, as to the question whether there can be any middle course between a verdict of "guilty of murder" and acquittal in such a case. See also R. v. Smith, 1 Russ. ut supra, 546; Leach, 137, n., citing R. v. Patmore, O. B. 1789.

⁷ R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 611. See R. v. Crumpton, Car. & M. 597.

⁸ R. v. Plummer, 1 Car. & K. 600.

and the want of shelter can be shown to have accelerated her death, his guilt accrues.¹ So, where he supplies food and clothing for a child, and knows that they are withheld, he is guilty of this crime in case of death.²

Sudden provocation, quarrel, &c.] In cases of sudden provocation, if the intent to murder be negatived, and there be no implied malice, a deadly stroke will only induce the penalties of manslaughter.³ In fact, any intentional breach of the peace (and it would be difficult to point out such a breach without intention if death ensues) will bring with it the crime of manslaughter.⁴ As, where after a quarrel between the deceased and the prisoner, the latter was found at a bench with a knife in his hand, working at his trade; fresh words having passed, the deceased assaulted the prisoner, and they began to fight, and then the prisoner gave a stab with the knife which he held in his hand. The judges held this to be manslaughter.⁵ So, upon an affray between soldiers and keelmen, where a soldier killed by mistake a person who seemed to be a keelman, the judges held clearly that this was but manslaughter.⁶ If A. be riding, and B. whip A.'s horse out of the road, it is said, that should A. kill B. it is only manslaughter.⁷ So, in the case of the pickpocket taken in the fact, and drowned by being ducked in a pond, the prisoner, who had been robbed, and who threw him in, was adjudged guilty of manslaughter only, by reason of the sudden provocation, and the encouraging clamour of the multitude.⁸ So, where a blow was given by A. to B. of a character so slight as scarcely to reduce the killing of A. by B. by reason of it to manslaughter, yet, as it was accompanied by words and gestures on A.'s part of great aggravation, it seems to have been considered manslaughter on account of the additional provocation.⁹ So, where a creditor placed a man with his sword undrawn at his debtor's chamber door whilst he sent for a bailiff, upon which the debtor, after some words, killed him, it was held, upon the statute of stabbing, (now no longer in existence,) that the restraint of liberty was a sufficient provocation to reduce the offence to that of felony at common law.¹⁰ Nevertheless, it would be a mistake to suppose that every blow will, of necessity, reduce the killing to manslaughter.¹¹ Thus, where one was playing music

¹ See also upon the subject of neglect, R. v. Crumpton, Car. & M. 597. Kessal, 1 C. & P. 437. R. v. Thomas, 7 C. & P. 817. And see 1 Hale, 482.

² R. v. Bubb and another, 4 Cox, 455. So is R. v. Saunderson, ante.

³ R. v. Kirkham, 8 C. & P. 115.

⁴ R. v. Harrington, 5 Cox, 231.

⁵ R. v. Snow, Leach, 151. R. v. Taylor, 5 Burr. 2793. R. v. Mitton, East, P. C. 411. R. v.

⁶ R. v. Brown, Leach, 148.

⁷ 1 Hale, 456.

⁸ R. v. Fray, East, P. C. 236.

⁹ R. v. Sherwood, 1 Car. & K. 556.

¹⁰ The Protector v. Buckner, Sty. 467.

¹¹ R. v. Lynch, 5 C. & P. 324, by Lord Tenterden.

in a thoroughfare, and a policeman pushed him gently to make him go on, in order to get rid of the crowd which was collecting, it was considered that a blow from a dangerous weapon would amount to murder if the policeman died from the effect of it, but manslaughter only if the policeman were to knock the music-player down first.¹

So, in sudden duels, the principle above mentioned with regard to provocation prevails. As, where Sir Charles Pyn was killed in an unpremeditated combat; and it was held to make no difference that his adversary took him up after death by the nape of the neck, saying, "Damn you! you are dead."² And the vengeance expressed after the fact may be referred to the same transport of passion which prompted the whole transaction. As, in a quarrel between French prisoners, the deceased, being suspected of dishonesty, and a clamour being raised, the prisoner pushed him down, upon which he struck the prisoner rather violently, and then the latter pushed him down again, and when he was down stamped upon his stomach, and afterwards kicked him. The blows on the stomach were considered to be the cause of death, and the jury convicted the prisoner of murder, but the judges held the case to be manslaughter.³ So, in Kessel's case,⁴ the point in favour of the prisoner was, his having the knife in his hand. Had he retreated for the purpose of drawing it, he would have been guilty of murder. It was all one act, whereas, if a previous intent to do mischief be proved, that circumstance will be most unfavourable to the prisoner, and may cause his conviction for murder.⁵

A common boxing match is within these rules, or, "fighting up and down;"⁶ or a wrestling match, if carried on in anger.⁷ And it is no answer to allege that the prisoner was excited by taunts.⁸ And all persons present are equally guilty of manslaughter, if the death be caused by blows given in the fight.⁹ And, here again, if any undue advantage be taken by one of the combatants, the offence will amount to murder.¹⁰ Again, if upon the receipt of gross abuse a blow be struck with a weapon not likely to kill, it will be but manslaughter should death ensue. As where a man snatched up a broomstaff, and throwing it at a woman, struck her head and killed her. Here it was greatly doubted whether this could possibly amount to murder, and a pardon was recom-

¹ R. v. Hagan, 8 C. & P. 167.

² R. v. Walters and others, 12 St. Tr. 113. R. v. Lord Byron, 11 St. Tr. 1177.

³ R. v. Ayes, Russ. & Ry. 166.

⁴ Ante, p. 763. See R. v. Stedman, East, P. C. 234.

⁵ 7 C. & P. 817, ante.

⁶ R. v. Thorpe, 1 Lew. C. C. 171.

⁷ R. v. Canniff, 9 C. & P. 359.

⁸ R. v. Ward, East, P. C. 270.

⁹ R. v. Murphy, 6 C. & P. 103. Secus, if the ring be broken and the deceased be assaulted by others. Id. 104.

¹⁰ R. v. Whitely, 1 Lew. C. C. 173.

mended;¹ whereas, had the blow proceeded from a more dangerous instrument, it would have been murder; for the use of a strong weapon would have imputed a mischievous disposition, and thence implied malice would have been presumed. So, where a man's son came home to his father very bloody, having been beaten by another lad, the father ran immediately three-quarters of a mile, and struck the other boy with a small cudgel and killed him. The judges held this manslaughter, as being done in sudden heat and passion.² So, where the prisoner, being much provoked, struck a woman with a pewter pot twice on the head, and which produced erysipelas and caused her death, Gibbs, C. B., told the jury that the aggravation, though not sufficient to justify a provocation which would excuse the giving a deadly wound would palliate a moderate blow, and it was found manslaughter only.³

Adulterer.] There is one species of wrong which, although not a personal assault, is yet so grievous as in some measure to excuse the injured party in yielding to a sudden transport of passion. It is where a man finds another in the act of adultery with his wife. Here, if death be immediately inflicted, the law will hold him to be guilty of manslaughter only, and that, too, of the lowest degree.⁴ So, if a father see one in the act of committing an unnatural offence with his son, the death inflicted instantly would be manslaughter of the lowest degree. But a delay would be fatal, as if the father should only hear of the act, and then go and strike the offender with a stick, and then stab him with a knife, this would be murder.⁵ And in the case of adultery, mere suspicion, however strong, will not reduce the killing of the woman to manslaughter: such a killing amounts to murder.⁶

Mere words.] Mere words, therefore, (it follows from a review of the authorities,) will not reduce a killing to manslaughter, if a dangerous weapon be used,⁷ nor any insulting gestures under the above circumstances;⁸ and it is a question whether words of menace would in any way alter the case;⁹ although it was cer-

¹ 1 Hale, 456. The converse of R. v. Sherwood, ante, where the deceased struck a slight blow, but accompanied it with gross abuse, and was killed with a dangerous weapon.

² R. v. Royley, Cro. Jac. 296; Godb. 182; 12 Rep. 87.

³ R. v. Freeman, 1 Russ. C. M. 518.

⁴ R. v. Manning, Tho. Raym. 212. R. v. Pearson, 2 Lew. C. C. 216, ante.

⁵ R. v. Fisher, 8 C. & P. 182.

See ante. The jury are to find the time which may have elapsed between the provocation and the stroke, and the court will then judge whether the blood has or not had time to cool. Id.

⁶ R. v. Kelly, 2 Car. & K. 814.

⁷ See 1 Hale, 456. R. v. Sherwood, ante, p. 763.

⁸ Watts v. Brains (on appeal), Cro. El. 778; Noy. Rep. 171; 1 Hale, 455. See Kel. 55.

⁹ East, P. C. 233. R. v. Woodhead, 1 Lew. C. C. 163.

tainly said by Lord Hale that it had been so adjudged.¹ Probably, if the words of menace were accompanied by a corresponding action, the matter might be better understood and the opinions reconciled,² although a third person may be regarded with tenderness, under some circumstances, without a personal blow. As, where two were playing at bowls, and a quarrel with blows having ensued, a third person, in revenge of his friend, struck the other mortally: it was held but manslaughter.³

Negligence towards children and others.] The same principle of protecting human life is carried on in cases of gross negligence towards children or others.⁴ This may arise from delay,⁵ inefficiency in medical treatment, or through carelessness, or an accident, which might have been avoided by prudence. These cases would, for the most part, amount to manslaughter.⁶ The prisoner was charged with giving gin immoderately to a child; and it was held, however inconsiderate the act, that an indictment would lie, but as it turned out that the child snatched up the glass and drank off the liquor, an acquittal took place.⁷ So, sending a wrong medicine negligently.⁸ So, giving corrosive sublimate in a case of cancer by a blacksmith;⁹ and administering an improper remedy when medical aid can be procured. There must, however, be more than an ordinary measure of ignorance, or of neglect, or rashness, in order to convict a person of this offence through want of skill;¹⁰ and it is observable, that the cause of death must be the administering of the medicine, so that where a child grew better, and no further notice was taken for three weeks after taking lobelia, (a dangerous medicine,) but then died, the prisoner was acquitted.¹¹ If a man-midwife be so unprepared for his duty as to wound a child mortally before the delivery, in order to save the mother, when, by an ordinary degree of skill he might have saved both, he is guilty of

¹ R. v. Lord Morley, 1 Hale, 456. See, however, Kel. 55.

² East, P. C. 233.

³ 12 Rep. 87, said to be R. v. Rowley, Fost. 294.

⁴ But trustees of roads must not as trustees be included in this category. R. v. Pocock, 5 Cox, 172.

⁵ As where the prisoners neglected for several days to apply to the union for relief for their infant child when starving for want of food. R. v. Mabbett and another, 5 Cox, 339.

⁶ See R. v. Leggett and another, 8 C. & P. 191. R. v. Walters, Car. & M. 164.

⁷ R. v. Martin, 3 C. & P. 211. See R. v. Packard, ante, p. 751.

⁸ R. v. Tessymond, 1 Lew. C. C. 169.

⁹ R. v. Crook, 1 Fost. & F. 521; R. v. Bull, 2 Fost. & F. 201, was a case of prussic acid, but there was an acquittal upon the merits.

¹⁰ R. v. Long, 4 C. & P. 398, 423. R. v. Simpson, Wilcock, Med. Law, App. 227; 1 Lew. C. C. 172. S. P. R. v. Webb, 1 Moo. & Rob. 405. The case of Morison's pills. The principle being, that a person of competent skill may be unfortunate upon some occasions, but that one entirely incompetent must abstain from meddling with medicine or surgery, unless there be no means of gaining better help. See 1 Hale, 429.

¹¹ R. v. Crick, 1 Fost. & F. 519.

manslaughter.¹ But if the party exercise his skill bonâ fide, and there be an absence of gross negligence, it is no ground for prosecution in case of a fatal result, that he is not a surgeon, and that he has not received a regular medical education.² So, where a man-midwife, not regularly educated, tore away the prolapsed uterus of a patient by mistake for the placenta, Lord Ellenborough said that, in order to convict, there must be the grossest ignorance or most criminal inattention, and the person was acquitted.³ Whilst, on the other hand, a licence will not screen a person from the consequences if he be guilty of misconduct,⁴ and the consent of a patient is no defence to criminal negligence or ignorance.⁵ The negligence of a woman, by not providing clothes and necessities for her baby, is not manslaughter: but concealment of birth may be drawn as an inference.⁶ Again, if it is the duty of a person (for example, a ground bailiff of a mine,) to ventilate the mine by air headways, so that if through his neglect an explosion of fire-damp happens, this is manslaughter, supposing that by any reasonable precautions he might have used these means of protection.⁷ The negligence of others, conjointly with the prisoner, affords no ground of defence upon an indictment of this nature.⁸ So, where the engineer in charge at a coal pit, left it to the management of an ignorant boy, who even told him he could not act right, and a man was killed, the engineer was held guilty of manslaughter.⁹ A servant of a railway was charged with manslaughter. The neglect to give a proper signal was alleged to have been the cause of death. It was held that the rules concerning the signal need not be set forth in the indictment, it being affirmed by the company that there were other duties incompatible with this of signalling; nevertheless it was deemed unnecessary to set forth those duties, and then negative that the prisoner was employed on those other duties; that it was his duty to signal; that there was an obstruction, and that he neglected to signal, were sufficient statements without an averment that he saw the obstruction. It was also held unnecessary to describe the signal, proof being given that it was a proper signal. The charge of giving a wrong signal, and not the right one, was not deemed bad for duplicity. That he "did neglect and omit to alter the signal" was held sufficient, without stating the specific alteration.¹⁰

But where the valves of an engine were merely out of order, and neither the master nor the engineer knew of it; in fact, the

¹ R. v. Senior, 1 Moo. C. C. 346.

² R. v. Van Butchell, 3 C. & P. 629. See East, P. C. 264.

³ R. v. Williamson, 3 C. & P. 635.

⁴ R. v. Long, 4 C. & P. 398, 423. R. v. Spiller, 5 C. & P. 333. S. C. nom. R. v. Spilling, 2 Moo. & Rob. 107. R. v. Ferguson, 1 Lew. C. C. 181. The case of a surgeon.

⁵ R. v. Ellis, 2 Car. & K. 470.

⁶ R. v. Knight, 2 Fost. & F. 40.

⁷ R. v. Haines, 2 Car. & K. 368.

⁸ S. C. See R. v. Barrett, Id. 343, and post, "Indictment."

⁹ R. v. Lowe, 3 Car. & K. 123. Such a neglect of duty might even amount to murder.

¹⁰ R. v. Pargeter, 3 Cox, 191.

deceased might himself have caused the accident, it was held not to be manslaughter.¹ Overloading a boat will likewise create the offence.²

Careless accident.] Another case of negligence is, where a party conducts himself with such carelessness towards the public as to cause a fatal accident, as by driving over a person: and it is no excuse to say that the deceased was told to get out of the way, and that if not drunk, he might have escaped.³ Nor is it an excuse that the prisoner is near-sighted.⁴ Nor that the walker is on the carriage-way, being infirm, for he has a right to use the carriage-way, and reasonable care must be used towards him.⁵ Nor that the walker is accustomed to keep the middle of the road, if the driving be of a character to amount to negligence.⁶ And if two persons drive a cart along a road in concert, each is guilty, in case of a death, at least of manslaughter.⁷ And, in that case it was no excuse that the person killed was deaf and dumb.⁸ So, sitting inside a cart instead of being at the horse's head, will warrant a conviction for manslaughter.⁹ So in racing.¹⁰ Still, if the person racing on horseback have a companion, the latter, although riding fast at the time of the accident, will not be guilty of manslaughter.¹¹ So it is in navigating a vessel upon the river Thames.¹² So in the case of fire-arms. The defendant came to town in his chaise, and fired his pistols, thereby killing a woman: he was held by King, C. J., to have committed manslaughter.¹³ So in the case of tampering with a loaded gun.¹⁴ So where a midshipman fired in the usual manner at the hallyards of a boat in order to bring her to, but unhappily killed a man, the same doctrine prevailed.¹⁵ So it was where cannon was sent out on a day of rejoicing in an imperfect state, the defendant having been previously warned, by having the cannon returned.¹⁶ So where per-

¹ R. v. Gregory and another, 2 Fost. & F. 153. There was no proof of omission nor of commission.

² R. v. Williamson, 1 Cox, 97.

³ R. v. Walker, 1 C. & P. 320. See also, to the same effect, 1 Hale, 476; Fost. 263.

⁴ R. v. Grout, 6 C. & P. 629.

⁵ Boss v. Litton, 5 C. & P. 407.

⁶ R. v. Longbottom and another, 3 Cox, 439.

⁷ R. v. Swindall and another, 2 Cox, 141. The one is principal in the first, the other in the second degree, and no election was allowed, where both were included in the same indictment.

⁸ R. v. Swindall, 2 Car. & K. 230.

⁹ R. v. Knight, 1 Lew. C. C.

168. The prisoner was going down hill with the reins on the horse's back. He was not driving hard. Erle, J., left it to the jury to say whether, if the prisoner had used the reins, he could have saved a child who was killed, or whether he could not had he pulled the reins up. R. v. Dalloway, 2 Cox, 273. Not guilty.

¹⁰ R. v. Timmins, 7 C. & P. 499.

¹¹ R. v. Mastin, 6 C. & P. 396.

¹² R. v. Taylor, 9 C. & P. 672. See R. v. Allen and R. v. Green, post.

¹³ R. v. Burton, Str. 481.

¹⁴ East, P. C. 267.

¹⁵ R. v. Phillips, Cowp. 830.

¹⁶ R. v. Carr, 8 C. & P. 163, n.

sons put some hot cinders upon deceased's belly when he was drunk and asleep, having previously covered him with straw, which ignited. Patteson, J., drew the distinction between careless accident, and design, observing, that even if the prisoners meant only to harm the deceased, the act was murder.¹

So, in the ordinary occurrences of life, whether in sport or earnest, a careless disposition will be apt to produce fearful consequences. If a woman runs upon a sword it is an accident, but, if a man has a sword drawn in his hand carelessly, and the woman falls on it, there is negligence, and the man is guilty of the offence.² If a man endeavours to take a gun from another and it goes off, causing death, this is manslaughter.³ As where Sir J. C. played with his servant, the one having a sword in the scabbard, and the other a bed staff, and the chape of the scabbard coming off, the point of the sword killed the servant, it was ruled manslaughter.⁴ So, if in tiling a house, the workman do not give a notice of warning to those passing below, he will be answerable for a fatal accident.⁵ So, again, slinging a cask negligently, and causing death, will be manslaughter.⁶ So, throwing stones down a coal mine, and thereby detaching the scaffolding.⁷ So, where a lad took a trapstick out of a cart for a frolic, but the carman was killed in consequence, it was held to be manslaughter.⁸ So, where the prisoners recklessly threw bags of nails upon the deceased in a cart, it was held unnecessary to allege in the indictment that they knew of the presence of any one in the cart, because manslaughter excludes malice.⁹ And there is a difference in sporting, between cases where the amusement is licensed, and where the party is not acting in conformity with the law. As if one be shooting in his own park, and kill a person by accident, his right to shoot in his own ground will render the misfortune excusable. But if he shoot in the park of another, without licence, the killing will be manslaughter.¹⁰ So, if one throw a stone at a bird in an unfrequented place, an accidental death through a bad aim will be excusable homicide. But if he were to throw at A.'s poultry or cattle, death under such circumstances would amount to manslaughter.¹¹ Still, had he meant to steal the poultry, there would have been a felonious intent, and the death would be murder.¹² So, where a man killed a child whilst cock-throwing at Shrovetide, Judge Foster ruled it manslaughter, because the sport was barbarous and unmanly.¹³ And it may be added, that another

¹ R. v. Errington, 2 Lew. C. C. 217.

² R. v. Noon, 6 Cox, 137.

³ R. v. Archer, 1 Fost. & F. 351.

⁴ R. v. Sir John Chichester, Al. 12; and see East, P. C. 269.

⁵ R. v. Hull, Kel. 40; 1 Hale, 475.

⁶ R. v. Rigmaidon, 1 Lew. C. C. 180.

⁷ R. v. Fenton and others, 1 Lew. C. C. 179.

⁸ R. v. Sullivan, 7 C. & P. 641.

⁹ R. v. Lear and another, 1 Russ. C. M. 638.

¹⁰ 1 Hale, 475.

¹¹ 1 Hale, 475; East, P. C. 255.

¹² East, ut supra.

¹³ Fost. 261.

distinction is made between mala prohibita and mala in se. For if a person were to commit homicide whilst sporting, not being qualified (and at this day without a certificate), yet with the licence of the owner of the land, this act, although he be violating a statute, will not make him a manslayer.¹

Placing poison, through negligence, where a child or other person may improvidently take it by mistake, supposing it to be food, is an act of manslaughter.²

Upon a quarrel, the prisoner struck the deceased with a stick. The deceased spurred his horse, was thrown, and lost his life. This was held manslaughter.³ The act must be that of the prisoner. He carelessly left a steam engine, and an unskilful person in his room set the engine in motion, and killed the deceased. Alderson, B. directed an acquittal.⁴ Mere negligence, without any personal act done, does not come within the limits of this offence, if a part of the duty be performed. As, for instance, an omission in steering a steam boat.⁵ So, where the prisoner went away from a windlass which he was working with two others, in consequence of which the latter were forced to let go their hold, and a person beneath was killed, Garrow, B., held, that the words in the indictment—"compel and force A.B. and C.D. to leave the said windlass," must be intended to mean active force, and the prisoner was acquitted.⁶ So, it was again, where the prisoner accidentally pushed away a boat, and the deceased overbalanced himself.⁷ Yet, the failure of a pilot, through negligence, to make the mariners understand his orders, whereby life was sacrificed, was held to amount to manslaughter.⁸ So, where a banksman on a railway failed to place a stage on the mouth of a shaft to receive a truck, by which omission the truck fell down the shaft and killed a workman, he was held guilty of manslaughter.⁹

Thus, it is evident that a necessity, almost inevitable, will be the only excuse for taking life. There was a scuffle at night between father and son, another son hearing the noise, got up and beat his brother, striking him on the ground, and preventing him from escaping the blows which he was inflicting. As they were striving, however, the prisoner who had been the original aggressor, gave his brother a mortal wound with a penknife, and it was held manslaughter, for there was not such a degree of necessity as might possibly be deemed inevitable.¹⁰ Upon a charge of violating a child, death being the consequence, the jury not being willing to convict of murder, Wightman, J., observed, that they might

¹ East, P. C. 260.

² Id. 266.

³ R. v. Hickman, 5 C. & P. 151.

⁴ R. v. Hilton, 2 Lew. C. C. 214.

⁵ R. v. Green, 7 C. & P. 153.
R. v. Allen and another, Id. 156.

⁶ R. v. Lloyd, 1 C. & P. 301.

⁷ R. v. Waters, 6 C. & P. 328.

⁸ R. v. Spence, 1 Cox, 352, and the cases of Green and Allen were cited.

⁹ R. v. Hughes, 26 L. J. M. C. 202; Dears. & B. 248.

¹⁰ R. v. Nailor, East, P. C. 277; Fost. 278.

negative the constructive malice, and find a verdict of manslaughter.¹ It is no defence to a charge of manslaughter, that the deceased might have died in a short time, ex. gr., in a month or six weeks, of natural disease.²

Fireworks.] The prisoner was a maker of fireworks. In his absence, either by negligence or accident, there was an explosion, and a rocket flew across the street, and set fire to a house, by which the deceased was burnt. It was held that there were two causes of death,—the fireworks, (illegally kept indeed,) and likewise the negligent burning of them. And the court held, that the mere keeping was too remote from the death to make the master amenable for the neglect of his servants.³ And a case was cited from the sessions reports at the Old Bailey, where the said law was said to have been laid down by Alderson, B.⁴

Resisting officers and others.] It may be said in few words, that where the proceedings upon which an officer grounds his arrest are defective, or, where he departs from his duty in making the capture, as by undue violence, unnecessary duress, &c., fatal consequences will only draw after them the crime of manslaughter. Thus, where a warrant to arrest the prisoner was delivered in blank to the deceased, who inserted therein the names of A. and B., and afterwards, in endeavouring to assist in the arrest, was shot by the prisoner, it was held no more than manslaughter, although this being the second taking, the prisoner had declared he would shoot the deceased if he attempted to arrest him again.⁵ So, where a bailiff attempted to execute a writ in an exclusive liberty, but there was no non omittus clause in the writ, and the prisoner cut him with an axe, Wood, B., held that the bailiff was a trespasser, and he directed an acquittal.⁶ And in the same case, the judge ruled that the writ as well as the warrant should be produced.⁷ So, again, where an officer to whom a press warrant was intrusted, was absent when the vessel was boarded, and one of his party was killed by a mariner, the latter was held guilty of manslaughter only.⁸ But if a warrant be directed to several, any of these may execute it.⁹ So, if a servant of A., who is not lord of the manor, find one poaching at night on B.'s land, and pursue with intent to arrest him, this is so far an attempt at an illegal arrest that it is only manslaughter in the poacher if he shoots the servant,¹⁰ and ¹ Which they did, and the sentence was penal servitude for life. R. v. Greenwood, 7 Cox, C. C. 404.

² R. v. Fletcher, 1 Russ. C. M., 507. Husband beating his wife.

³ R. v. Bennett, 28 L. J. M. C. 27; Bell, 1.

⁴ S. C. And as to the evidence to prove manslaughter in a case of fire, see R. v. Gardner, 1 Fost. & F. 669.

⁵ R. v. Stockley, East, P. C. 310.

⁶ R. v. Meade and another, 2 Stark. N. P. C. 205; Holt, N. P. C. 593.

⁷ 2 Stark. ut supra, 206.

⁸ R. v. Broadfoot, Fost. 154.

⁹ East, P. C. 314.

¹⁰ R. v. Davis, 7 C. & P. 785.

é converso, if the keeper shoot the poacher, with no other authority as keeper than that of an appointment by a person who has a mere permission to shoot, he is guilty of this charge.¹ So again, in cases where a notification is necessary, and the officer neglect to give the due warning, (and in the case of breaking doors, whether it be upon fresh pursuit or not,) the same mitigation will avail the prisoner.² So again, if the bailiff break an outer door to execute process, his death will be extenuated in like manner;³ and we have seen, that in criminal cases, an innocent person is bound to submit to, and respect the laws, so that whatever may be the impropriety of the arrest, he will be guilty of manslaughter if he kill the officer.⁴ On the other hand, should the officer meet with resistance, and use more force than is necessary in making his capture, so as to occasion death, he also becomes guilty of manslaughter.⁵ As, where a collector coming to distrain, met with resistance from a maid-servant who stood at the door to hinder the taking away of the distress, upon which he beat her head and back against the door post, so that she died. He was held guilty of manslaughter, having exceeded the necessity of the case.⁶ So, if a bailiff be locked into a house, he may justify using force to gain his liberty, and if death ensues, the consequences can but amount to manslaughter.⁷ Two constables took opposite sides in an affray, and one of them was killed. Here, the surviving constable was held guilty of manslaughter only, for each constable had as much authority as the other, and each was acting out of the scope of that authority, and, moreover, each had enjoined the other party to desist.⁸

An excise officer meeting with a sudden resistance when off his guard, killed the deceased, who was a smuggler, and Holroyd, J., ruled, that he was not justified in so doing, unless he had reason to apprehend danger to his life, and, even then, a deadly weapon ought not to be used, if any other instrument sufficient for the personal protection of the party attacked were at hand.⁹

But it may be noted, in conclusion, that a blow from an officer will not, in general, reduce the killing of that officer from murder to manslaughter.¹⁰

Judgment.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 5, Whosoever shall be convicted of manslaughter shall be liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, or to pay such fine as the court shall award, in addition to or without any such other discretionary punishment as aforesaid.

¹ R. v. Wesley, 1 Fost. & F. 528.

² East, P. C. 314, 324.

³ R. v. Cook, Cro. Car. 537; 1 Hale, 458.

⁴ See East, P. C. 309, observing upon R. v. Simpson, 4 Inst. 333. R. v. Withers, East, P. C. 233; The Protector v. Buckner, Sty. 467.

⁵ East, P. C. 320.

⁶ R. v. Goffe, 1 Ventr. 216.

⁷ East, P. C. 324.

⁸ 1 Hale, 460; East, P. C. 304.

⁹ R. v. Forster, 1 Lew. C. C.

187.

¹⁰ Anon. Id. 58.

CHAPTER III.

HOMICIDE NOT FELONIOUS.

1. *Excusable.*2. Justifiable.

Excusable homicide.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 7, no punishment or forfeiture shall be incurred by any person who shall kill another by misfortune or in his own defence, or in any other manner without felony.

The distinctions between homicide excusable and justifiable are not likely to be very useful at the present day; perhaps the principle deducible is, that the law, as in the case of officers, for the most part, justifies their violence, but, in other cases, makes merely an allowance for the necessity, mistake, or accident, or even the sudden emergency of the transaction, and passes over the homicide, as it were, without exacting the usual retribution where life has been sacrificed. Thus, during innocent recreations, where the weapons used are not deadly nor unlawful, should a casualty occur, the law will not convert a misfortune into an offence, for the possibility of danger cannot be allowed to operate against harmless amusements.¹ So, during the course of rightful employments, an accident will frequently be excusable. A carter ran over a woman with a load upon her head, in an unfrequented place, and killed her. It was held by three judges that this was but misadventure, although, had the spot been much travelled, it would have been manslaughter.² So it was where a workman's axe flew off and killed a bystander.³ So, if one lay poison to kill rats, in a place where no danger need be apprehended, the death will be but misadventure.⁴ So it is in cases of mistakes: a master ordered his servant to fire in case he heard anything rush into the corn, expecting that he might catch some deer, which were in the habit of coming in to spoil it. It was in the night, and as one A. rushed into the corn at another part of the field, the servant fired and killed him; and, although there were some circumstances of difficulty, owing to an idea that the servant had not used proper caution, it was ruled misadventure; but had not the master given the order, it would have been manslaughter; here the servant might have been

¹ East, P. C. 268, 271.

² East, P. C. 263.

³ East, P. C. 264.

⁴ Id. 266.

thrown off his guard by the command.¹ So, where a man discharged his gun, and went to church, but whilst he was there, another person went privately to shoot game, and returned the gun to its place loaded. The prisoner took up the gun, and touched the trigger, upon which it went off and killed his wife. Foster, J., directed an acquittal.² So it is if an accident happens with foils, between masters of defence.³ Again, where a thief breaks into a house, the law will consider the natural dread of personal violence which the owner may apprehend, and, therefore, should he kill the intruder, he will be excused.⁴ The same law will protect a lodger, or a sojourner.⁵ So, out of a house, if a person be merely protecting his grounds, his garden, for instance, and he have good reason for suspecting that his life is in immediate danger, he may shoot the thief so menacing him.⁶ So, a man may use reasonable violence to turn a trespasser out of his house, but a kick which causes death is not justifiable under such circumstances.⁷ But there must be good ground for this, or for supposing that some bodily injury is about to be inflicted by the thief.⁸ And it is, moreover, absolutely imperative, in these last cases, that, if it be possible, the party should retreat from the attack.⁹ Upon an alarm of thieves, a man advanced in the dark, thrusting his rapier before him, and killed a woman who had concealed herself; this was ruled misadventure;¹⁰ yet, Mr. Justice Foster inclined to think, that this case of Levet should have been manslaughter, for want of circumspection.¹¹ Certain persons drew their swords upon F., and F. killed one of them: he was held excused.¹² Again, where a sudden quarrel arises, and one of the parties assaults the other, upon which, the latter having retreated to the utmost, and, being in danger of his life, kills his assailant, it is but misadventure, or, as it was termed till lately, chance medley.¹³ This was the true meaning of chance medley, which came afterwards to be confounded

¹ 1 Hale, 40, 476; East, P. C. 266.

² Fost. 263, where Rampton's case (Kel. 41) is denied to be law. In that case a man found a pistol in the street, and having tried it with the rammer, brought it home. The rammer, however, was too short, and the prisoner having cocked the pistol, in an idle frolic, killed his wife. It was ruled manslaughter.

³ Hob. 134.

⁴ East, P. C. 289; Hob. 96.

⁵ R. v. Cooper, Cro. Car. 544.

⁶ R. v. Scully, 1 C. & P. 319.

⁷ R. v. Wild, 2 Lew. C. C. 214.

⁸ R. v. Bull, 9 C. & P. 22.
R. v. Hinchcliffe, 1 Lew. C. C. 161.

⁹ R. v. Dakin, 1 Lew. C. C. 166.

¹⁰ R. v. Levett, Cro. Car. 538.

¹¹ Fost. 299. R. v. Morrison, 8 C. & P. 22, where want of circumspection caused the killing by a watchman to amount to manslaughter. But see Sir William Hawkesworth's case, East, P. C. 275, who was killed by his keeper under a command to shoot any one who came near the deer. He, being weary of life, came himself, and was shot. This was misadventure. So, where a commander tried the vigilance of his sentinel, and was shot by the sentinel.

¹² R. v. Ford, Kel. 51.

¹³ Chance meler, or chaud medley.

with misadventure or accident.¹ Should the first blow be struck by the slayer, or should he not draw back as far as may be practicable, the case will assume the more serious form of manslaughter. The killing above mentioned was denominated, "homicide, se defendendo, upon chance medley." There was, indeed, this hardship upon a verdict of chance medley, or of excusable homicide generally,—namely, that as the goods of the party were forfeited, he was compelled, at his own cost, to sue out a pardon. The jury used to find the facts specially, and it then became necessary for the court to bail him, upon which, the record being certified in chancery, a pardon, without application to the king, issued under the Statute of Gloucester, and the goods were restored; but at the present day, a verdict of acquittal is directed.² There is one more, a sort of homicide of dire necessity, which is not induced by the fault of another party, and it is, where one of two innocent men must die for the other's preservation. This has been holden by some to be justifiable, perhaps it may be more properly considered as excusable.³

Justifiable homicide. Secondly, as to justifiable homicide. If a criminal be executed by virtue of a warrant emanating from a proper jurisdiction, and in pursuance of the judgment against him, the homicide will, according to the English law, be justifiable.⁴ But the execution must not vary from the judgment, although the sheriff may behead for felony by a special warrant from the crown. And the officer empowered to execute, or his appointed deputy, is the only person who can lawfully act for that purpose; consequently, it would be murder in any one else to take the life of the culprit.⁵ Again, the officer is excused, although he act under an erroneous judgment, if the court has jurisdiction over the offence.⁶ Should there be no jurisdiction, it seems that, under some circumstances, if the officer act bonâ fide, he might still be excused; but the judge would be guilty of murder. Still, with reference to the question of jurisdiction, when there is a colour, and the judge acts bonâ fide, the case would probably fall under the head of excusable homicide.⁷ As if justices of the peace were to try a case of treason, upon the ground that their commission embraces all felonies, and so, because treason is felony, their jurisdiction would extend to that crime also. Here, although the judgment would be erroneous, yet, as there might be a colour for the proceeding, Lord Hale is of opinion that the execution of a capital sentence would not be murder in the justices.⁸ Now, however, justices are expressly forbidden to meddle with treason by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38,⁹ and the case would amount to murder.

Homicide by officers and others in the advancement of justice,

¹ East, P. C. 221.

² East, P. C. 220, 221, 222; and see Id. 279, 280.

³ East, P. C. 221.

⁴ East, P. C. 221, 334.

⁵ East, P. C. 335.

⁶ Id.

⁷ Id. 334.

⁸ 1 Hale, 497.

⁹ Sect. 1.

deserves a particular consideration. It may be justifiable in cases of felony and misdemeanor, and also in civil suits. But this is the plain distinction between felony and other cases, namely, that in felony, it may be lawful for an officer to kill before the arrest, whereas in the latter, he must encounter resistance in order to justify his violence. Thus, in felony, if the officer have a warrant against any one, either he or his assistants, or any private person joining in the pursuit, may kill the accused if he cannot be otherwise secured.¹ And, à fortiori, if resistance be made.² So, if a hue and cry be duly raised, i. e., under a magistrate's warrant, or by the aid of the constable without warrant, and with the name of the person sought after, the same doctrine obtains.³ So, if a felony be committed, and the felon be killed while flying from justice, it being impossible to overtake him without doing violence, it is the same.⁴ A fortiori, if he resist. So, after arrest, whether by warrant or otherwise, in case of felony, if the party struggle or escape, and there be no other means of retaking him except by violence.⁵ And it seems that neither a constable nor a private person need give back in the event of resistance, but that force may be repelled by force; but where there is no warrant, nor a regular hue and cry, private persons must take the consequences of putting a person to death if he escape, and even a constable must be satisfied of the reasonableness of the charge, before he ventures to kill a fugitive upon fresh pursuit.⁶ So that if the person pursued should turn out to be innocent, the private person killing him would be guilty of manslaughter at the least, though the constable would be justified, inasmuch as no one ought to fly from justice, whatever may be the integrity of his conduct.⁷ And further, if the constable be ignorant of the commission of a felony, and yet fire upon, or assault another, upon fresh pursuit, he will be guilty of manslaughter, or of felonious injury, as the case may be. As, where the party wounded had actually committed felony in a copse, but the constable did not see it, he was held rightly convicted of feloniously wounding.⁸ Then, as to misdemeanors, it may be observed, that a party may not be killed before arrest, under any circumstances, unless, indeed, in the case of a dangerous wound given, which would raise the strongest presumption of felony.⁹ And in cases of misdemeanor, the authority of a warrant makes no difference.¹⁰ But, after arrest, the case is different, and so it is again if resistance be made. Under these latter circumstances, the constable is justified as in felony, and so are all persons upon whom he may call for aid; but a private person cannot act upon his own accord in misdemeanor, whether the party be guilty or innocent.

¹ East, P. C. 298.

² East, P. C. 300.

³ Id.

⁴ 1 Hale, 489.

⁵ East, P. C. 300.

⁶ Id. 301.

⁷ East, P. C. 299.

⁸ R. v. Dodson, 3 Car. & K. 148.

⁹ East, P. C. 302.

¹⁰ Id.

Lastly, with regard to civil suits, it may be said that the same rule prevails, so that a bailiff after, but not before arrest, may lawfully kill a person striving to escape.¹ And so it is in cases of resistance, provided, as we have already said, that the capture cannot be made without these violent measures. And the bailiff may repel force by force, and need not retreat, and the case in Rolle, which seems to militate against this position, has been denied to be law.²

However, it should be added here, that in all cases, whether of felony, misdemeanor, breach of the peace, or civil process, if it be possible to notify the cause of arrest before the death happens, it must be done in order to warrant a verdict of justifiable homicide. There certainly may be cases where this warning cannot be conveniently given, as upon fresh pursuit, where a felony has been committed, or upon escape from arrest, but here it seems that the party's own act dispenses at once with the necessity of notification. And, once more, gaolers, in case of resistance, or attempts to escape on the part of their prisoners, may repel force by force, and may even take life, rather than that the ends of justice should be defeated. But although they are not compelled to retreat like private persons, as far as may be with safety, they must be prepared to show good grounds for apprehending personal danger, or an escape, before they proceed to extremities. Having used all due forbearance, a killing by them in an endeavour to break prison, or in an affray, will fall under the head of justifiable homicide.³

¹ East, P. C. 307.

² Id. Calfield v. — (appeal),
1 Ro. Rep. 189.

³ East, P. C. 330. See generally upon the subject of homicide, 1
Hale, 411; East, P. C. 198; Hawkins in loco; 1 Russ. C. M. 482.

And the old law upon the statutes of stabbing, 1 Jac. 1, c. 8; 3
Car. 1, c. 4. As to the punishment for rescue in cases of murder, see
1 Vict. c. 91, s. 1.

CHAPTER IV.

OF THE INDICTMENTS AND THE TRIAL IN MURDER AND MANSLAUGHTER.

Indictments and trial in murder, &c.] Before the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, the indictment for murder usually stated that A. "not having the fear of God before his eyes, but being moved and seduced by the instigation of the devil, feloniously, and of his malice aforethought, did make an assault." It then described the blow, and the time of giving it, the means by which death was produced, and stated that the deceased died in consequence of the violence or injury inflicted upon him, care being taken to insert the time of the death. It then concluded by saying that A. did thus "kill and murder the deceased, against the peace," &c. The indictment for manslaughter was constructed in the same manner, but the expression of the malice aforethought and murder were of course omitted. The word feloniously, however, is retained, and in the conclusion the phrase "kill and slay" is used.¹ The time and place of the wound, as well as of the death, were alleged, in order that the death might appear to have happened within a year and a day after the stroke.² Where it was said that the prisoner wilfully, feloniously, and after malice aforethought, did mix poison, and did then and there deliver the same, &c., it was held sufficient, without repeating "feloniously and after malice aforethought."³ But now, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 6, in any indictment for murder or manslaughter, or for being an accessory thereto, it shall not be necessary to set forth the manner in which or the means by which the death of the deceased was caused, but it shall be sufficient in any indictment for murder to charge that the defendant did feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, kill and murder the deceased; and it shall be sufficient in any indictment for manslaughter to charge that the defendant did feloniously kill and slay the deceased; and it shall be sufficient in any indictment against any accessory to any murder or manslaughter to charge the principal with the murder or manslaughter (as the case may be) in the manner hereinbefore specified, and then to charge the defendant as an accessory in the manner heretofore used and accustomed.

The indictment may run thus in the case of murder:—"That A. on, &c., feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought,

¹ See Stark. Cr. P. 386, 387, 403.

³ R. v. Nicholson, East, P. C.

² East, P. C. 344; 2 Hale, 179; 346.

Stark. Cr. P. 59, 385.

did kill and murder one B." And in manslaughter,—“That one A. on, &c., feloniously did kill and slay one B.”¹

An omission to state that any stroke at all was given, was deemed fatal,² but it is enough now to state the murderous killing; but the word “murder” cannot be dispensed with.³ But “then and there” did kill and murder is no longer necessary, as formerly;⁴ and on account of the deodand, some value was attached to the murderer’s weapon, as a knife of the value of one penny, &c.; but by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 62, which abolished deodands, it was enacted that from and after the 1st of September, 1846, it shall not be necessary in any indictment or inquisition for homicide, to allege the value of the instrument which caused the death of the deceased, or to allege that the same was of no value; and the mode of stating the death is likewise at an end;⁵ but such parts of the old cases as relate to evidence, will be found under that head.

The prisoner was charged with suffocating a child by placing both hands about the neck of the child. It was held that she might be convicted, although the murder was done by some other person in her presence.⁶ And about the neck, means round it, the expression being freer from difficulty than “about the breast.”⁷ So the throat in the indictment was understood in its ordinary sense, and not according to scientific interpretation;⁸ nor was it

¹ No statement should be made in the alternative, as kill or slay. R. v. Jones, 1 Car. & K. 243. “Stick or staff.” As to the place, see R. v. Helsham, 4 C. & P. 394, no longer material.

² R. v. Long, 5 Rep. 120. R. v. Lorkin, 1 Bulstr. 124. And see 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 77.

³ 1 Ro. Rep. 137.

⁴ R. v. Buckler, Dy. 69, judgment reversed.

⁵ See some of the old cases, infra, for, by possibility, an indictment upon the old system, might be preferred, and might not happen to be quashed. R. v. Hall, Cro. Jac. 95; 5 Rep. 122. R. v. Kelly, 1 Moo. C. C. 113. R. v. Thompson, 1 Moo. C. C. 139. R. v. Brown, 1 Lew. C. C. 165. R. v. Jones, 1 Car. & K. 243. R. v. Jones and another, 1 Cox, 11. Inquisition quashed for uncertainty. R. v. Martin, 5 C. & P. 128. Any hard substance would satisfy the word “hammer” in an indictment. And see R. v. O’Brian and another, Den. 9; 2 Car. & K. 115. R. v. Tye, Russ. & Ry. 345.

Putting moss and dirt into a child’s mouth. It was so stated in the indictment, and although the jury found the cause of death to have been swelling, and not choking, suffocating, or strangling, it was held sufficient. R. v. Warman, 2 Car. & K. 195; Den. 183. R. v. Spiller, 5 C. & P. 333. R. v. Stokes, Den. 307; 2 Car. & K. 536. R. v. Waters, Den. 356; 18 L. J. M. C. 53; 7 C. & P. 250; 2 Car. & K. 864. R. v. Dale and another, 1 Moo. C. C. 5. R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 611. [Starving.] S. P. R. v. Pinhorn, 1 Cox, 70. R. v. Ellis, 2 Car. & K. 470. R. v. Sandys and another, 2 Moo. C. C. 227; Car. & M. 345. R. v. Haydon, 1 Cox, 184, Erle, J. R. v. Whitehouse, 5 Cox, C. C. 144. Negligence in a mine.

⁶ R. v. Culkin, 5 C. & P. 121. As to the names of bastard children, see ante.

⁷ S. C. S. P. generally.

⁸ R. v. Edwards, 6 C. & P. 401.

in general necessary to mention the length, breadth, or depth of wounds. Lawrence, J., once directed the clerk on the Oxford circuit to omit these particulars, and his instructions were obeyed,¹ although two judges² subsequently endeavoured to restore the old custom of stating these particulars, but the other ten were of a different opinion. The ten held, that as the precedents were both ways, they felt themselves at liberty to follow common sense.³

Downing and Powys were charged with murder in two counts. In the first, Downing was charged as principal, and Powys as aiding and abetting; in the second, the case was reversed, and Powys was charged as principal; but the second count used the word "afterwards," and the prisoner's counsel urged that this involved an absurdity, and that, as the jury had found a general verdict, the judgment was erroneous. The judges heard counsel upon the point at considerable length, and decided (Maule, J., diss.) that the two counts substantially related to the same person killed and to one killing; and that they might have been transposed without any alteration of time or meaning; but it was held not essential that the jury should find which of the prisoners fired the shot which destroyed life.⁴

An indictment concluded without "contra formam statuti," but it was held that punishment might, nevertheless, be inflicted under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 9.⁵ There was an indictment against three, against one as principal, and against the others of aiding and abetting. The wound was given on the 27th of May, but the death did not happen till the 29th, and the charge against the two was, that they were aiding and abetting on the day and year first aforesaid. All were found guilty of manslaughter, but it was objected, that as the felony was not complete till the 29th of May, the aiders and abettors could not be convicted upon the charge for killing upon the day and year first aforesaid, which was the 27th. The judges, however, held the conviction right.⁶

Evidence.] It may be observed, that the rule which requires the finding of the body before a verdict of guilty can be pronounced, is qualified, if it can be made appear that the deadly fact has been perpetrated. As where the deceased had been beaten and thrown into the sea; here the jury found that he was killed before he was thrown overboard, and the prisoner was executed.⁷ On the contrary, where

¹ 1 Moo. C. C. 104.

² Holroyd and Littledale, JJ.

³ R. v. Mosley and another, 1 Lew. C. C. 179. R. v. Tomlinson, 6 C. & P. 370; 5 Rep. 122. R. v. Grounsell, 7 C. & P. 788, as to the nature of the instrument and the nature of the wound.

⁴ R. v. Downing and Powys,

Den. C. C. 52; 2 Car. & K. 382.

⁵ R. v. Berry, 1 Moo. & Rob. 463. R. v. Sawyer, Russ. & Ry. 294.

⁶ R. v. O'Brian and others, Den. 9; 2 Car. & K. 115. See R. v. Heydon, 4 Rep. 41; Cro. El. 176; Dy. 50, n.

⁷ R. v. Hindmarsh, Leach, 569.

the father and mother of a child were seen to throw it into a dock where the tide of the sea flowed and re-flowed, Gould, J., directed an acquittal, for the tide might have carried the child out, and so it might have been saved.¹ And, in a case of child murder, it was held that the prisoner could not be called upon to account for the child, nor to say where it was, unless evidence had appeared to show the death of the child.²

Every one present at a murder must be called to give an account of the transaction; so that, when a widow had given her testimony for the prosecution, the learned judge directed the daughter, who had been present at the murder, to give evidence likewise for the prosecution, although her name was not on the back of the indictment, and although she had been brought to the assizes by the prisoner.³ In the same case, two surgeons differed in opinion, and the counsel for the prosecution declined to call a third who was in court, but who, nevertheless, had examined the body of the deceased; but the court ordered him to be called, and examined him.⁴ In tendering evidence of murder by poison, it may be shown that children of the prisoner have previously died of arsenic, and that in the case of her husband, for whose murder she was tried, the symptoms were similar to those of the children.⁵ But Martin, B., rejected evidence that three others of the same family had died by a similar poison, that the prisoner was present at all the deaths, and that he administered something to two of the persons;⁶ whilst on the other hand, evidence of the death of others by explosive grenades, admitted to show the nature of those missiles, was admitted against a prisoner for murder.⁷ And in manslaughter against a surgeon, the court will not hear of his former mode of treatment in other cases, although witnesses may be asked their opinion as to his skill.⁸

The evidence of any kind of violence capable of occasioning death will support a charge of murder upon an indictment framed according to the modern Act of parliament. The proof is no longer limited to the old forms of indictments, where the particular mode of death was set forth with unreasonable technicalities; therefore, whether the death has happened by inflicting a wound or a bruise is entirely unimportant.⁹ But although in cases of starving, it is no longer required that the duty of maintenance should be set out in

¹ Leach, 571. See 2 Hale, 290.

² R. v. Hopkins, 8 C. & P. 591.

³ R. v. Holden, Id. 606.

⁴ Id. As to evidence of malice, see R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221. Evidence of apprenticeship. R. v. Crumpton, Car. & M. 597.

⁵ R. v. Geering, 18 L. J. M. C. 215, cor. Pollock, C. B.; Alderson, B.; and Talfourd, J.

⁶ R. v. Winslow, 8 Cox, 397.

⁷ R. v. Bernard, 1 Fost. & F. 240. The name of the person who gave the order for the grenades was allowed to be asked as a fact, although not then apparently connected with the prisoner. S. C.

⁸ R. v. Whitehead, 3 Car. & K. 202.

⁹ R. v. Warman, Den. 183; 2 Car. & K. 195.

the indictment; nor in cases of exposure, that the obligation to take care of the child should appear; the evidence must show these respective responsibilities.¹ But no such duty need be shown where a medical practitioner causes death by incapacity or misconduct, as by applying wet cloths unskilfully, by which a mortal congestion of the lungs took place.² So it was where a working person was charged with negligence, as when foul air exploded in a mine,³ whereby a fatal calamity ensued. An indictment for causing poison to be taken by B. was not sustained by evidence showing that the poison, although taken by B., was intended for another person.⁴ Upon the indictment of an accessory, the court would not admit of the principal's account of the occurrence, but what the principal said with regard to the intent (i. e., to show malice) was deemed proper evidence.⁵

Trial.] The trial for murder should be in the county where the fact has been committed, i. e., where the blow and the death happen. But as the blow which causes death, and the death itself, might be in more than one county, or, indeed, it might be, than two counties, the statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 12, provides that when any felony or misdemeanor shall be committed on the boundary or boundaries of two or more counties, or within 500 yards of such boundary or boundaries, or shall be begun in one county and completed in another, it may be dealt with and tried in any of the said counties, as if it had been wholly committed therein. A manslaughter, however, committed by one foreigner upon another foreigner upon the high seas, was not cognizable under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 8, although the death happened in England,⁶ on the high seas or on land, within the king's dominions or without. A prisoner was charged with manslaughter in the county of the city of Worcester; the blow which caused death was alleged to have been given in the county of Worcester: this was held to be within the 12th section of the old Act.⁷

The 26 Hen. 8, c. 6, applies to murders, &c., committed in Wales; these may be tried in the next adjoining county where the king's writ runneth. Herefordshire has been holden to be the next adjoining county to South Wales, and Shropshire to North Wales.⁸ And, now by 1 Will. 4, c. 70, s. 19, assizes may be held

¹ R. v. Edwards, 8 C. & P. 611. R. v. Pinhorn, 1 Cox, 70.

² R. v. Ellis, 2 Car. & K. 470.

³ R. v. Barrett, 2 Car. & K. 343.

⁴ R. v. Ryan, 2 Moo. & Rob. 213.

⁵ R. v. Pym, 1 Cox, C. C. 339.

⁶ R. v. Lewis, Dears. & B. 182; 26 L. J. M. C. 104. R. v. Menham, 1 Fost. & F. 369. Pollock, C. B., said that the provision in 7

Vict. c. 2, was directory, and that he could not reserve the points. There might be error on the record. R. v. Lewis was cited. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 10.

⁷ R. v. Jones, 1 Russ. C. M. 550.

⁸ R. v. Athos, father and son, 8 Mod. 136. R. v. Parry, Leach, 108. See R. v. Window, 3 Campb. 78. Goodright d. Richards v. Williams, 2 M. & S. 270.

in Chester and Wales, and consequently, since this statute of 1 Will. 4, murders may be tried in a Welsh as well as in an English county; indeed, it is probable that any trial for murder committed in Wales, otherwise than in a Welsh county, would be a mistrial. If the stroke, however, were given in an English county, and the death should happen in Wales, perhaps there might be a difficulty, notwithstanding the 1 Will. 4, c. 70. The point was doubtful before that Act, and probably is so still.¹ By 28 Hen. 8, c. 15, with reference to murders, &c., upon the high seas; felonies, murders, &c., committed upon the sea, or in any haven, &c.,² shall be tried in any county in England under the king's commission, as if they had been committed on land; and where such felonies, murders, &c., are committed at sea, or in any haven, &c., they may be tried in any of His Majesty's islands, plantations, &c., under the king's commission, and according to the common course of the laws.³

By 57 Geo. 3, c. 53, murders and manslaughters committed on land by the king's subjects out of His Majesty's dominions, may be tried in the colonies belonging to His Majesty; and by 59 Geo. 3, c. 44, murders, manslaughters, rapes, robberies, and burglaries committed on land at the settlement in the Bay of Honduras, may be tried there by virtue of a commission under the great seal.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 9, where any murder or manslaughter shall be committed on land out of the United Kingdom, whether within the Queen's dominions or without, and whether the person killed were a subject of Her Majesty or not, every offence committed by any subject of Her Majesty, in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or manslaughter, or of being accessory to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in any county or place in England or Ireland in which such person shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been actually committed in that county or place; provided that nothing herein contained shall prevent any person from being tried in any place out of England or Ireland for any murder or manslaughter committed out of England or Ireland, in the same manner as such person might have been tried before the passing of this Act.⁴

By 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 22, (the Central Criminal Court Act,) any offence committed within the admiralty jurisdiction may be tried at the Central Criminal Court. By 7 Vict. c. 2, s. 1, after reciting the 28 Hen. 8, c. 15, it is enacted that justices of assize or of oyer and terminer and gaol delivery for trying offences under the jurisdiction of the admiralty, may have all powers for trying offences within that jurisdiction; such justices may inquire of all offences alleged to have been committed on the high seas and other

¹ See East, P. C. 363.

² See R. v. Bruce, Leach, 1093.

³ See 46 Geo. 3, c. 54.

⁴ The Act does not extend to Scotland in this respect: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 78.

places within such jurisdiction, and may deliver the gaol in every county and franchise within their commission. All indictments found and trials had shall accordingly be valid under such circumstances, and such justices may award costs under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 22.

By sect. 2, in all such indictments the venue in the margin shall be the same as if the offence had been committed in the county where the trial is had, and all material facts, which in other indictments would be alleged to have taken place in the county where the trial is had, shall, in indictments prepared and tried under the Act, be averred to have taken place "on the high seas." The 3rd section relates to committals by justices in conformity with the statute. The 4th section saves the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court, and the right to issue special commissions.

The following decisions have taken place upon the respective Acts of parliament above mentioned. An indictment under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 7, ought to have averred that the prisoner and the deceased were subjects of the king, and the prisoner's own declaration would then have sufficed as proof to the jury for that purpose.¹ On the other hand, a Spaniard who killed an Englishman on the Canton river, within the tideway, about eighty miles from the sea, was discharged.² A Spaniard entered into articles to serve in an English merchant vessel, and subsequently the captain set up in trade, making the Spaniard, whose services were not required by the new captain, his interpreter, but without the consent of the crew. A quarrel arose abroad upon land between the Spaniard and one of the crew, which ended in the death of the latter, who died on board ship. It was held that the Spaniard was not a subject of His Majesty within the meaning of the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, and that as the blow took place on shore, and the death at sea, the offence had not been committed on land, out of the United Kingdom, so as to be within 57 Geo. 3, c. 53.³

The Central Criminal Court has jurisdiction to try a British subject for a murder committed out of the Queen's dominions upon a foreigner. The prisoner was a native of Malta, and he murdered a Dutchman. It was objected that the person murdered should have been a British subject, and so described in the indictment. It was admitted that the murderer abroad must be a British sub-

¹ R. v. Helsham, 4 C. & P. 394. See 1 Russ. C. M. 554, note (u), where it is said that the court thought, upon a subsequent occasion, that the construction in R. v. Helsham was too narrow. Vaughan, J., said that a man might own allegiance for protection.

² R. v. Depardo, 1 Taunt. 26, 32; Russ. & Ry. 134. In this case the prisoner, who was a prisoner of war, had volunteered his services to the king, and received his bounty. He gave the stroke on shore, but the death happened on ship-board. He was tried under 33 Hen. 8, c. 23, and 43 Geo. 3, c. 113, s. 6, for manslaughter.

³ R. v. De Mattos, 7 C. & P. 458.

ject. The judges were unanimous in favour of the conviction.¹ The prisoner may be tried for murder and manslaughter at the same time, where the grand jury have found a bill for murder, and the verdict upon the coroner's inquisition is manslaughter and vice versa.² Again, the grand jury find for manslaughter, and ignore for murder. The better way is to present a new bill for manslaughter, instead of striking out "maliciously," &c., in open court.³ The grand jury may find a true bill for murder against one, and for manslaughter against another, in the same charge, that is, if it be so charged against them, but not for murder against one and manslaughter against the other, if both be charged with murder.⁴

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 10, where any person, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt upon the sea, or at any place out of England or Ireland, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt in England or Ireland, or, being feloniously stricken, poisoned, or otherwise hurt at any place in England or Ireland, shall die of such stroke, poisoning, or hurt upon the sea, or at any place out of England or Ireland, every offence committed in respect of any such case, whether the same shall amount to the offence of murder or of manslaughter, or of being accessory to murder or manslaughter, may be dealt with, inquired of, tried, determined, and punished in the county or place in England or Ireland in which such death, stroke, poisoning, or hurt shall happen, in the same manner in all respects as if such offence had been wholly committed in that county or place.

Verdict.] It is most common for a jury to find their verdict "guilty of manslaughter," when they do not esteem the charge to amount to murder.⁵ But the judges will not receive that verdict where the evidence is such as to preclude the possibility of the case being manslaughter, the jury must then convict of murder or acquit the prisoner. As in the case of the ghost,⁶ where the court refused to receive a verdict of manslaughter, observing, that if the jury believed the evidence, they must find the prisoner guilty of murder.⁷ A man may be found guilty of aiding and abetting, although the principal in the first degree be acquitted, if the indictment conclude that both the prisoners committed the murder.⁸ In one count of an indictment the cause of death was alleged to have been occasioned by a blow from a stick, in another count by the

¹ R. v. Azzopardi, 2 Moo. C. C. 288; 1 Car. & K. 203.

² R. v. Walters, 1 Russ. C. M. 565.

³ 2 Hale, 162. R. v. Turner, 1 Lew. C. C. 176. East, P. C. 347.

⁴ East, P. C. 347.

⁵ See 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 5, "not guilty of the murder, but guilty of manslaughter."

⁶ Ante.

⁷ 1 Russ. C. M. 546. But this exposition of the law is very unsatisfactory, because, upon seeing the ghost, the prisoner might have been seized with an uncontrollable panic, and, therefore, the question was purely one for the jury.

⁸ R. v. Taylor and another, Leach, 360.

throwing of a stone. The verdict on both counts was, guilty of manslaughter, and the court held the conviction right, because the means of death as stated in the two counts were not inconsistent; had they been so, the verdict would have been uncertain, and a difficulty would have arisen.¹

Two persons were charged with murder in two counts. The first charged A. as principal, and B. as aiding and abetting. The second count was vice versa. The jury found a general verdict, but expressed themselves uncertain as to which prisoner gave the deadly wound, and it was contended that the prisoners should have been found guilty on one or other of the counts only. But it was answered that both were guilty on both counts, and *R. v. Towle*² was relied on by the judge as applicable to the case, and good law, and the conviction was affirmed.³ Upon an indictment for manslaughter, the jury might have convicted of an assault under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, (now repealed,) and the cause of death being a fight, it was held immaterial that the deceased was the challenger, and that it did not appear which struck the first blow.⁴ But upon an indictment for murder, the prisoner could not be convicted of an assault committed in a previous scuffle, which had no connection whatever with the cause of death;⁵ and in a case of manslaughter, where an assault took place some time before death, and the evidence was that death took place from natural causes, the prisoner could not be convicted of an assault under this statute of Victoria.⁶

No one, excepting the woman, can be convicted of concealing the birth upon an indictment for child murder.⁷

Judgment.] The judgments for murder and manslaughter have been already set forth.

An indictment for murder being moved by certiorari into the King's Bench, it was held that a judge at nisi prius might pass sentence under 25 Geo. 2, c. 37, without remitting the transcript of the record to that court, although the postea might certainly be so returned and judgment given there.⁸

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 115, ss. 38, 45, and 46, courts-martial are empowered to deal with cases of murder and manslaughter, and to pass sentence of death in cases of murder, and for manslaughter to inflict penal servitude for life or not less than three years, "or such other punishment as is thereafter mentioned."⁹

A case happened before benefit of clergy was abolished, the ¹ R. v. O'Brian and others, in the case of the coroner's inquisition. Den. C. C. 9; 2 Car. & K. 115.

² Russ. & Ry. 314.

³ R. v. Downing and another, Den. C. C. 52.

⁴ R. v. Lewis, 1 Car. & K. 419. See R. v. Pool, 9 C. & P. 728.

⁵ R. v. Phelps, 2 Moo. 240. See

⁶ R. v. Connor, 2 C. & K. 518.

⁷ R. v. Wright, 9 C. & P. 754.

⁸ R. v. Thomas, 4 M. & S. 442, 447.

⁹ Id. ss. 38, 45, 46. This Act corresponds with 23 & 24 Vict. c. 123, s. 38, &c.

principle of which still applies, although the question mainly turned upon that privilege. A person had caused the death of two children by one and the same act. He was tried for the murder of one of the children, and found guilty of manslaughter, and he received the benefit of clergy. Then the second child died, and the prisoner was again tried and convicted of manslaughter. But it occurred to the judge that he could not award any punishment for the second death, and the judges were of the same opinion, holding, that the prisoner might allege the allowance of clergy, as a bar to any future judgment for the same offence.¹

Costs.] The father of the deceased retained an attorney to prosecute; but the solicitor of the police had orders likewise to prosecute, and the constable had been bound over to prosecute. The father's costs could not be allowed.²

CHAPTER V.

OF ATTEMPTS TO MURDER.³

Attempts to murder, or do other personal injuries, are usually carried on by active violence on the part of the criminal, as stabbing, strangling, shooting, or the like,—or it might be by placing a noxious material in the way, as poison, explosive substances, or other such things as may occasion a bodily injury, dangerous to life or member. And it should be understood that the hurt must proceed either directly or indirectly from the agency of the prisoner. So that where the party assaulted forced part of his body against a weapon with which the prisoner was attacking him, although it was in self-defence, the judges held that a wound had not been inflicted within the meaning of the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 11.⁴

The modern provisions upon this subject are to be found in 1 Vict. c. 85, ss. 2, 3, 4, and 5, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25,⁵ and the offences therein described were—administering, or causing to be taken, any ¹ R. v. Jennings, Russ. & Ry. 388. As to the admiralty jurisdiction, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 68, where there is a proviso saving the laws relating to the government of His Majesty's land and naval forces.

² R. v. Yates, 7 Cox, 361.

³ The statute 43 Geo. 3, c. 113, respecting malicious injuries, was repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101.

⁴ R. v. Beckett, 1 Moo. & Rob. 526.

⁵ Both repealed.

poison, or other destructive thing; attempting to administer the same; stabbing; cutting; wounding; shooting; drawing a trigger, or attempting to discharge any kind of loaded arms; attempting to drown, suffocate, or strangle; causing any bodily injury dangerous to life; using explosive substances; corrosive fluid, or other destructive matter. There were, besides, injuries to railways, using chloroform, and other such crimes. The intent upon all these occasions is manifested by the particular circumstances of each case, and is, for the most part, a question for the jury.¹ The prevalence of an unkindly feeling is enough to bring the offender within the Act, and, consequently, under these provisions, the term "malice" need not mean "malice aforethought."² General malice is sufficiently to be presumed without evidence of ill-will towards the party receiving the hurt.³ And there is another distinction between cases which are founded upon statutes where the word "maliciously" has been made to constitute the very essence of the crime,⁴ and those which proceed upon Acts like that before us. Under the first-mentioned statutes, although no proof of particular malice was required, the offence must yet have been committed under such circumstances as would have amounted to murder.⁵ And as the word "maliciously" was omitted in 1 Vict. c. 85, ss. 2 and 3, (although in all attempts to murder, malice forms an ingredient in the crime,) yet the party would not be entitled to an acquittal if the facts were such as to reduce the offence in case of a fatal result to manslaughter.⁶

The following are the crimes under the Act of 1861 where the intent is to commit murder.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 11, whosoever shall administer to or cause to be administered to or to be taken by any person any poison or other destructive thing, or shall by any means whatsoever wound or cause any grievous bodily harm to any person, with intent in any of the cases aforesaid to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 12, whosoever, by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance, shall destroy or damage any building with intent to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 13, whosoever shall set fire to any ship or vessel or any part thereof, or any part of the tackle, apparel, or furniture

¹ Where, through fear of her husband, a woman jumped out of the window, it was deemed necessary to show that the husband had made her take that step. R. v. Donovan, 4 Cox, 399.

² R. v. Griffiths, 8 C. & P. 248.

³ 1 Moo. C. C. 95. R. v. Jarvis and others, 2 Moo. & Rob. 40.

⁴ See 43 Geo. 3, c. 58. R. v. Gastinaux, Leach, 417.

⁵ R. v. Gastinaux, ut supra.

⁶ R. v. Griffiths, 8 C. & P. 248; R. v. Nicholls, 9 C. & P. 267.

thereof, or any goods or chattels being therein, or shall cast away or destroy any ship or vessel, with intent in any of such cases to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 14, whosoever shall attempt to administer to or shall attempt to cause to be administered to or to be taken by any person any poison or other destructive thing, or shall shoot at any person, or shall, by drawing a trigger or in any other manner, attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person, or shall attempt to drown, suffocate, or strangle any person, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to commit murder, shall, whether any bodily injury be effected or not, be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable to be kept in penal servitude for life or for any term not less than three years,—or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

And by sect. 15, whosoever shall, by any means other than those specified in any of the preceding sections of this Act, attempt to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

In considering these clauses, the failure of the design in view has not escaped the attention of the legislature, and thus attempts to commit these serious offences have, in many cases, been distinguished from the acts themselves. And a mistake, as if A. should shoot at B. and wound him, but with an intent to kill C., will not alter the penalty.¹ Nor is it a defence in a case of apprehension, that the prisoner had no reason to believe in the lawfulness of the apprehension.² In the following case the prisoner's crime might have been reached under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 3, although he escaped under the old law. He gave a woman a cake and some cherries, desiring her to give them to a bastard child belonging to them. But the woman observing something white on the cherries, tasted one of them, and likewise the cake, and finding both to have a nauseous flavour, buried them in the dunghill. Subsequently, the prisoner offered the woman another cake for her own eating, but after seeing him eat, or pretend to eat a piece, she took it, and put into her mouth, but spat it out, and did not swallow any part. The man then left the cake, and it was discovered to have sundry poisonous ingredients within it. The intent, therefore, of the prisoner was not doubtful, but it was objected that as the woman had not swallowed any part of this cake she could not be said to have taken the poison, and thus, that the prisoner could not be convicted of administering. But the judges were of opinion that swallowing was not essential to the completion of the crime, hesitating, nevertheless, upon the point whether the mere delivery of the cake to the prosecutrix could be called an administering. Had the prisoner put the cake into her mouth, the case might have been materially different; but here, he neither administered, nor caused to be administered, according to the strict construction of a highly penal Act, and a pardon was recommended.¹ Park, J., however, is said to have questioned the accuracy of this statement, and to have attributed the decision of the judges to the fact of no poison having been introduced into the stomach.² But under the 3rd section of 1 Vict. c. 85, and sect. 11 of the present Act, such a person would probably be convicted of attempting to administer poison with intent to murder; for the delivery of the cake, and the taking by the woman, would be deemed one entire act of attempting that which, in the result, might very possibly amount to a real administering.

¹ R. v. Smith, 25 L. J. M. C. 29. R. v. Lynch, 1 Cox, 361. ² R. v. Bentley, 4 Cox, 406.

A delivery of poison, however, in a case of homicide, is proved by showing that the poison was placed in such a situation as to be made use of by the party intended to be murdered. As where the prisoner put poison into a pudding meal which was in a bowl, and would be taken by the family in the ordinary way.³ So, again, where a servant put poison into some coffee, and told her mistress that coffee was ready, it was held "a causing to be taken" within the Act.⁴ So, under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, it was held, that if poison be sent to A., and B. take it by mistake, the case is made out.⁵ So, where a drug was given to a woman to produce miscarriage, Coleridge, J., doubted, as the prisoner was not present when the drug was taken, whether that was an administering or causing to be taken, but the court, after considering it, affirmed the conviction.⁶ So, where the prisoner brought some savin, and called from time to time to know how it acted, and the woman became ill afterwards, this was a "causing to be taken."⁷ A. delivered poison to B., and told B. to put it into some beer for C. to drink, saying he should like to kill C. Instead of doing this, B. gave the poison to C. and related to C. what had passed. Here, had B. carried out A.'s purpose he would have been the principal felon, and thus A. was held not to have attempted to administer poison within the statute 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 6.⁸ It is no objection that the poison is not free to act, as where two kernels of a cocculus indicus berry were administered to a child who swallowed them. They would have destroyed life, but they passed through the body without harm,

¹ R. v. Cadman, 1 Moo. C. C. 114.

² 5 Law Mag. 473. The case is said to have been rightly reported in Carr. Sup. 237; 6 Cox, 16, n.

³ R. v. Nicholson, East, P. C. 346.

⁴ R. v. Harley, 4 C. & P. 369. R. v. Dale, 6 Cox, 14. It is a question for the jury.

⁵ R. v. Lewis, 6 C. & P. 161.

⁶ R. v. Wilson, 26 L. J. M. C. 18; Dears. & B. 127.

⁷ R. v. Farrow, Dears. & B. 164.

⁸ R. v. Williams, 1 Car. & K. 589. R. v. Williams and another, Den. 39.

being too strong for the child's stomach. The judges held the prisoner guilty of the crime charged under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 2.¹ Spanish flies were put into ale and caused mischief. It was a foolish joke, and not within the 1 Vict. c. 85,² but would now be reached by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20.

Wounding.] If the wound be caused by shooting, it must appear that the prisoner shot AT the person he is charged with assaulting;³ for, if that individual could not, by possibility, have been injured by the shooting, the crime has not been completed. Therefore, upon an indictment for firing a gun into the house of A. with intent to murder A., it was necessary to show that some one was within reach of the gun when it was so fired.⁴ It is true that A. himself need not have been the person,⁵ for general malice will be sufficient; nevertheless, however manifest the evil intention may be, there must be proof that an injury might have been committed.⁶

It seems to be admitted, that the continuity of the skin, or, in other words, the external surface of the body, must be divided in order to sustain a charge of wounding, although the present Act will include almost all bodily injuries.⁷ Where, therefore, the prisoners threw the prosecutor (having previously beaten him with an iron bar and hammer) down a staircase, evidently with an intent to do him a serious injury, and probably to murder him, whereby also his collar-bone was broken, the judges, after much discussion, held, that as the continuity of the skin had not been divided, there had been no wound within the Act, and the conviction was held wrong. Lord Tenterden also said, that he thought the word "wound" had not been introduced to cure the difficulty, whether cutting or stabbing instrument was used.⁸ But, where a hammer was thrown at the prosecutor, which inflicted a wound upon his head, and made him "very bloody," upon a question whether that could be considered a stab, cut, or wound within the statute, the judges held the conviction right.⁹ A blow with a bludgeon has been ranged within the same rule, blood being drawn.¹⁰ So,

¹ R. v. Cluderay, 19 L. J. M. C. 119; Den. C. C. 514; 2 Car. & K. 907.

² R. v. Walkden and others, 1 Cox, 282. It was not a common assault nor an attempt to commit a misdemeanor.

³ R. v. Empson, Leach, 224. See Russ. & Ry. 3.

⁴ R. v. Lovel, 2 Moo. & Rob. 39.

⁵ R. v. Holt, 7 C. & P. 518.

⁶ R. v. Jarvis, 2 Moo. & Rob. 40. The intent is a matter for the jury.

⁷ 1 Moo. & Rob. 527.

⁸ R. v. Wood and another. Diss: Bayley, B.; Park, J.

Thus it seems to have been the impression upon the mind of Lord Tenterden, that although the word "wound" would in effect cure the difficulty which arose sometimes in indictments, upon the terms cutting and stabbing, yet, that it was not so much introduced for that end, as to bring within the operation of the Act, a wound which, being neither a stab nor a cut, might yet break the skin, or, to use the words mentioned in the text, the "continuity of the skin."

⁹ R. v. Withers, 1 Moo. C. C. 294.

¹⁰ R. v. Payne, 4 C. & P. 558.

a kicking with a shoe, the skin being divided.¹ So, a wound from the butt end of an air gun was deemed to fall within the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, although the instrument itself did not come in contact with the head, a thick hat, which the prosecutor had on his head, having intervened.² A stick or club has been held sufficient.³ And, if the skin be separated internally, it is enough, although there be no external division, as where a blow was given with a hammer which broke the lower jaw in two places.⁴ Yet the whole of the skin must be divided; a mere abrasion of the cuticle, although it should cause an issue of blood, will not be sufficient to constitute an offence within this clause.⁵ And there must be some kind of instrument, in order to satisfy the word "wound," so that an injury inflicted with the hands or teeth will not be such a wound.⁶ Nor the biting off of a finger, although it ought to be added, that in this last case, six judges dissented from the majority.⁷ But the bite of a dog set on by the prisoner has been considered to be within the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31.⁸ A kick on the private parts, which ruptured the membrane lining the urethra, was held to be a wounding.⁹ But a kick in a woman's private parts, which caused a flow of blood mingled with urine for some time afterwards, was held not to be within the Act, because the surgeon could not state from what particular vessel the blood originally flowed.¹⁰ The word "wound" is, nevertheless, a most necessary word to be employed, as it reaches several offences which might otherwise pass unpunished; thus, upon a charge for cutting with a hammer, where it turned out that the injury was caused by the claw or sharp part of the instrument, although indeed the indictment was sustained in that case.¹¹ Yet, if the blow be given with the blunt end, and the charge be for cutting only, not mentioning a wound, an acquittal must take place.¹² So, blows, with a square iron bar, or with the metal scabbard of a sword, (the sword being in the scabbard,) or, with the handle of a windlass, have been respectively held not to be cuttings within

¹ R. v. Shadbolt, 5 C. & P. 504.
² R. v. C. and J. Briggs, 1 Moo. C. C. 318.

³ R. v. Skeard, 2 Moo. C. C. 13; 7 C. & P. 846.

⁴ R. v. Lancaster, 2 Stark. Ev. 692.

⁵ R. v. Smith, 8 C. & P. 173. See R. v. Warman, Den. 103.

⁶ R. v. M' Loughlin, 8 C. & P. 635.

⁷ R. v. Harris, 7 C. & P. 446.
R. v. Jennings, 2 Lew. C. C. 130. A child's prepuce.

⁸ R. v. Stevens, 1 Moo. C. C. 409. For the conviction, 6: Park, J.; Vaughan, B.; Alderson, J.; Gaselee, J.; Bosanquet, J.; Gurney, B. Against the conviction,

7: Lord Denman, C. J.; Lord Lyndhurst, C. B.; Tindal, C. J.; Littledale, J.; Taunton, J.; Bolland, B.; Williams, B. Absent: Patteson, J.; Parke, B. See, however, post, "Bodily Injuries dangerous to Life," and R. v. Murrow.

⁹ By Alderson, J. R. v. Elm-sly, 2 Lew. C. C. 126. The point would have been reserved if necessary. See, however, R. v. Hughes, 2 C. & P. 420.

¹⁰ R. v. Waltham, 3 Cox, C. C. 442.

¹¹ R. v. Jones, Id. 441. The distinction was recognized in R. v. Waltham.

¹² R. v. Atkinson, Russ. & Ry. 104.

¹³ 1 Russ. M. C. 729.

the old Act, 43 Geo. 3, c. 58.¹ So again, when the wound was punctured and triangular, as if it had been inflicted with the point of a bayonet, (which in fact was the case,) and the indictment charged a striking and cutting, the conviction was held wrong, for the injury was done by stabbing, not by cutting.² It is no defence to say that the weapon was one used for a particular purpose, as, for example, an iron used for forcing open drawers, and sharp at one end, so as probably to cut, and yet not used for cutting.³ Yet, although in ordinary use it might not cause death, an instrument, if used with excessive violence, and in an extraordinary manner, might have a fatal effect. It was for the jury to decide upon the point.⁴ And, moreover, it must not be lost sight of, that all these injuries, if wilfully inflicted, are misdemeanors under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20. But the last cases are quite obsolete, because the indictment would, of course, charge a wounding, without more.

What kind of wound.] Yet, although blood be drawn, every slight scratch cannot be called a wound within the statute. Formerly, indeed, some judges doubted whether the wound ought not to have been in a vital part, in order to warrant a conviction.⁵ And Bayley, J., directed an acquittal upon one occasion where the wounds were not severe, although it must be admitted that it was a case in which the provisions in Lord Ellenborough's Act, with reference to manslaughter, very strongly applied.⁶ However, Park, J., held the contrary upon a subsequent occasion,⁷ and the point came to be considered some years afterwards, in a case where the prisoner cut a person upon the wrist, inflicting a slight wound, which got well in about a week, and from deference to the opinion of Bayley, J., this point, amongst others, was saved for the judges; but they said, that the question was the intent which governed the blow, and not the harm itself which was done, so that, as in the case before them, if an intent to do grievous bodily harm existed, it was immaterial whether the prisoner had, in reality, effected his purpose,⁸ and this decision governs the clause with intent to murder. So, although the wound be upon a place which rarely produces a fatal issue, the prisoner is equally guilty if the intent be proved.⁹ So if the wound be neither dangerous nor permanently injurious.¹⁰ If the intent be to cut the clothes, and in warding off the blow, the prosecutor's hand be cut, the case is not within the Act, for want of the intention to cut.¹¹ So, where upon receiving a blow, the prosecutor fell upon some iron trams, the case was not considered to be a wounding within the statute.¹²

¹ R. v. Adams, 1 Russ. C. M. 728.
R. v. Whitfield, and Anon. Id.

² R. v. M'Dermott, Russ. & Ry. 356.

³ R. v. Hayward, Russ. & Ry. 78.

⁴ R. v. Howlett, 7 C. & P. 274.

⁵ 1 C. & P. 299. By Park, J.

⁶ R. v. Akenhead, Holt's N. P. 469.

⁷ R. v. Griffith, 1 C. & P. 298.

⁸ R. v. Hunt, 1 Moo. C. C. 93.

⁹ R. v. Carr, 2 Stark. on Ev. 692.

¹⁰ R. v. Ashman, 1 Fost. & F. 88.

¹¹ R. v. Day, 1 Cox, C. C. 207.

¹² R. v. Spooner, 6 Cox, C. C. 392.

So, where the prisoner struck at A. and hurt B., who had interposed, he could not be convicted for wounding B., because the intent was absent.¹

The 2nd section of the statute 1 Vict. c. 85, contained the words, "or shall by any means whatsoever cause to any person any bodily injury dangerous to life." These expressions supplied the apparent want of consistency in excluding wounds inflicted without an instrument, from the penal consequences of an attack with intent to murder. For, although the offence might come short of the legal definition of wounding, still, if there were an injury dangerous to life, and with a murderous intent, the case was punishable capitally. But now, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 15, whosoever shall, by any means other than those specified in any of the preceding sections of this Act, attempt to commit murder, shall be guilty of felony, and shall be liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement. It appears, however, not to be sufficient to show, under these circumstances, that the death, had it ensued, would have been murder. The judges will not extend the provisions of a severe statute, and they required under the old Act, a finding by a jury of guilty upon the count charging the intent to murder, before they would give effect to the words, "bodily injury dangerous to life."² A woman abandoned her infant and put it into a dry ditch amongst nettles; it was not hurt, being soon afterwards found, and the court held that she could not be convicted of an assault with intent to murder.³ A woman exposed her infant on a cold, wet day and congestion of the heart and lungs followed, but the child recovered. There was no lesion of any part of the organs of the child. The conviction was quashed.⁴ So, where a woman left her infant, a month old, in a highway, and the indictment failed to state that any injury had happened, the same impunity occurred.⁵ But the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 27, has gone a great way towards a remedy for this evil.

It may be remarked, in conclusion, that an attempt to commit murder is, at common law, a high misdemeanor.

Next, with reference to the instrument. The instrument itself with which the offence is said to have been perpetrated, must be one capable of doing harm. So that where the prisoner attacked the prosecutor with a loaded gun, but in the struggle which ensued the powder fell out, it was held, that although the prisoner subsequently drew the trigger, he must be acquitted, because this could not be called an attack with a loaded gun.⁶ So, where the prisoner levelled a blunderbuss, and pulled the trigger, but upon

¹ R. v. Hewlett, 1 Fost. & F. 91.

² R. v. Cruse et ux., 8 C. & P. 541, Patteson, J.

³ R. v. Renshaw, 11 Jur. 615. Nor of a common assault.

⁴ R. v. Gray, Dears. & B. 303; 26 L. J. M. C. 203.

⁵ R. v. Cooper, 2 Car. & K. 876; Den. 459. But this was an indictment for exposing the child with intent to burden the parish. See R. v. Chandler, Dears. & B. 453.

⁶ Anon. 1 Russ. C. M. 724.

examining the weapon, it was found that there was no priming in it, the judges recommended an application for a pardon, upon the ground that the instrument was not loaded within the meaning of the statute.¹ So, a pistol which was not capable of being fired off, was considered not to be "loaded arms" within 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 11.² So, where there was no bullet in the pistol, the indictment having stated in all the counts that the prisoner had shot at the prosecutor with a pistol charged with a leaden bullet.³ So it was where the flint had dropped out of the gun.⁴ So, although the prisoner admitted having fired the gun, Patteson, J., directed an acquittal for want of evidence of its having been loaded.⁵ So, where there was a loaded rifle, which, for want of proper priming, would not go off, it was held not to be a "loaded arm" within the statute; and although the gun was pointed at the prosecutor, the trigger pulled, and the pan down, it was held to make no difference.⁶ So, where the gamekeeper waited till the prisoner was out of distance, Parke, B., would only allow a conviction for a common assault.⁷ However, if there be a possibility of mischief, it will be no defence to urge that the instrument was not loaded with a destructive material. The prisoner wounded a woman by firing close to her ear, and the jury added an opinion to their verdict of guilty, that the pistol was loaded with something else besides gunpowder and wadding, for the prisoner had alleged, in extenuation of his crime, that nothing else was there. Application was made to the crown for mercy, upon the ground of there being nothing but powder and paper in the pistol, upon which the matter was referred to the judges, who held the conviction right.⁸ Again, the barrel of a gun, detached from the stock and lock, was deemed an instrument within the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, and the prisoner, who had struck a percussion cap on the nipple of the barrel, was convicted.⁹ So, applying a lighted match to a loaded matchlock gun, or striking the percussion cap of a percussion gun.¹⁰ So, although a scythe was, with the exception of two inches at the end, fenced, the prisoner was convicted of "unlawfully wounding." She might not have intended to wound, and yet might have known that the scythe was uncovered.¹¹ The jury, however, are to be the judges in each case concerning this particular. It is not necessary to adduce independent proof of the loading with a slug, or a bullet; for if, from the circumstances, the jury should be of opinion that the gun or other instrument was so loaded, it will be sufficient.¹² All these are intents to murder.

¹ R. v. Carr, Russ. & Ry. 377.

² R. v. Harris, 5 C. & P. 159.

³ R. v. Hughes and another, 95. Id. 126.

⁴ R. v. Lewis, 9 C. & P. 523.

⁵ R. v. Whitley, 1 Lew. C. C. 483. 123. See Blake v. Barnard, 9 C. & P. 626.

⁶ R. v. James, 1 Car. & K. 530.

⁷ R. v. Abraham, 1 Cox, 208.

⁸ R. v. Kitchen, Russ. & Ry.

⁹ R. v. Coates, 6 C. & P. 394.

¹⁰ R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P.

¹¹ R. v. Cox, 1 Fost. & F. 664.

¹² R. v. Elliott, 1 Hawk. c. 55, s. 9. R. v. Weston, Leach, 247.

But the intent is in all cases a matter for the jury. They may also find more than one intent, and such a verdict will not vitiate the indictment, although a single intent only be there charged. As, where the count stated an act of shooting with intent to do some grievous bodily harm. The jury found that the prisoner's object was to prevent his lawful apprehension, but that in order to effect that purpose, he had the intention of doing grievous bodily harm to the prosecutor. The judges held the conviction proper, for since both intents existed, it was immaterial which was the principal or which the subordinate one.¹ So, upon evidence of shooting with intent to prevent apprehension, the prisoner may be convicted of an intent to murder.² So, it would seem, that a shot fired into a vessel may be considered as directed at every individual on board of that vessel.³ Upon a count charging that the prisoner shot with intent to murder, if it be necessary that the jury should be satisfied of that intent at the moment when the shot was fired, the fact that the offence would have been murder had death ensued, would be a good ground from whence the jury might infer such intent, since any one must be taken to intend the necessary consequence of his own act.⁴

On the other hand, if the jury negative the intent charged in the indictment, the prisoner cannot be duly convicted. As where the intents were laid, 1st, to murder, 2ndly, to disable, 3rdly, to do grievous bodily harm, but the jury found that the act of cutting was done to prevent apprehension, and for no other purpose; the conviction was held wrong.⁵ So, where the charge was for cutting with intent to murder, maim, and disable, and the jury found the intent to have been to disable till the prisoner could effect his escape, the conviction was held wrong, because a temporary, not a permanent disability was contemplated.⁶ And again, the jury may properly deliver their verdict in accordance with the charge mentioned in the indictment, should the circumstances warrant their finding, although the prisoner's main intent was manifestly different from that found against him. As where the prisoner cut a child's private part, his object, probably, was to commit a rape, but the indictment charged him with doing a grievous bodily harm, and the jury having found him guilty, the judges affirmed the conviction.⁷ Where the intent alleged was to drown, and the prisoner's object appeared to be to keep the prosecutor from landing in a boat at a disputed ferry, which he did by punching holes in the prosecutor's boat, Coleman, J., stopped the case.⁸

¹ R. v. Gillow, 1 Moo. C. C. 85. the case would in law have been murder, qu.? S. C.

² R. v. Davis, 1 C. & P. 306.

³ R. v. Bailey, Russ. & Ry. 1.

⁴ R. v. Jones, 9 C. & P. 258.

But whether the jury must be satisfied of such intent at the moment of shooting, or, whether it would be sufficient, that, had death ensued,

⁵ R. v. Duffin and another, Russ. & Ry. 365.

⁶ R. v. Boyce, 1 Moo. C. C. 29.

⁷ R. v. Cox, Russ. & Ry. 362. See R. v. Bowen, Car. & M. 149.

⁸ R. v. Sinclair, 2 Lew. C. C. 49.

Indictments.—Poison.] The charge for administering poison states that A., on, &c., feloniously did administer to one B. a certain poison, to wit, &c., with intent, thereby feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, the said B. to kill and murder.

If the indictment be for a felonious attempt, the words “feloniously did attempt to administer” should be inserted.

The indictment for wounding with a murderous intent alleges that A., on, &c., with a certain knife, which he the said A. in his right hand then had and held, feloniously did wound one B. with intent in so doing then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, the said B. to kill and murder.

If the indictment be with an intent to do grievous bodily harm, it should be stated accordingly.

Gunpowder.] The indictment for damaging a building by gunpowder states that A., on, &c., feloniously by the explosion of [gunpowder], a certain building of one B., situate, &c., did damage and destroy, with intent in so doing, feloniously, wilfully, &c., the said B. to murder, against the form, &c.

Ships.] This indictment states, that A., &c., upon the high seas, feloniously did set fire to a certain ship called —, the property of B., with intent, then and thereby feloniously, &c., to murder the persons on board of the said ship, or some of them, against the form, &c.

Shooting.] The indictment for shooting is, that A., on, &c., a certain [gun, &c.] then loaded and charged with gunpowder and [shot], which gun the said A. in his right hand then had and held, did then feloniously shoot and discharge at and against one B., with intent, &c., the said B. then and thereby feloniously, wilfully, and of his malice aforethought, to kill and murder. The attempting is in the same form; so the intent to do grievous bodily harm.

Attempts to drown, suffocate, or strangle.] These indictments are thus varied. That A., on, &c., feloniously did take one B. [if an infant state him or her to be of tender years] into both the hands of the said A., and did then feloniously cast, throw, and push the said B. into a certain [river, pond, &c.] of great depth, to wit, of the depth of —, and did then feloniously keep the said B. in the water of the said [river, &c.,] for a certain space of time, to wit, &c., and by so casting, &c., and keeping as aforesaid, the said A. then feloniously did attempt to drown the said B., with intent in so doing then and thereby [state the intent to murder.]

The attempt to suffocate.] That A., &c., a certain — which in both his hands the said A. then had and held in and upon the mouth and nostrils of one B., there feloniously did put and place, and the said — upon the mouth and nostrils of the said B. then feloniously did forcibly keep and continue for a certain space of time, to wit, &c., for the purpose of preventing the said B. from breathing, and did then by so putting and placing the same in and upon the mouth and nostrils of the said B., and keeping and continuing the same there as aforesaid, feloniously attempt to suffocate the said B., with intent, &c. [State the intent to murder.]

The attempt to strangle.] That A., on, &c., a certain handkerchief about the neck and throat of one B., then feloniously and forcibly did fix, fasten, and tighten, and did then by so fixing, &c., the said handkerchief about the neck and throat of the said B., and by tightening the same as aforesaid, feloniously attempt to strangle the said B. with intent, &c. [State the intent to murder.]

The word "unlawfully" is indispensable where the statute uses it.¹

It is necessary that the injury should be expressly laid with the intent charged, so that an indictment omitting to state that "in so doing," or "by means thereof," &c., the prisoner intended to do some grievous bodily harm, &c., would probably be deemed invalid.

It is held for clear law that in an indictment for wounding, the means by which the wound was inflicted need not be alleged, and that to state them at all is mere surplusage; therefore, should the means be stated, the court is not confined to such statement, and thus, where two modes of wounding were mentioned, and it was uncertain whether of the two had caused the wound, the judges came to the conclusion that it was immaterial if the wound had been given with a stick, or with a shoe,² and hence no instrument need be named in the indictment. So again, upon a charge of doing a bodily injury dangerous to life, by feloniously beating, striking, and kicking and knocking against a ceiling, &c., it was held that the allegation was sufficient, without stating what the particular injury was,³ nor need it be shown in which hand the prisoner held the weapon.⁴ So it is, although the word "wound" should be omitted in an indictment for stabbing or cutting; but the indictment must distinguish between a stab and a cut, should that important word "wound" be left out, although the weapon need not be mentioned.⁵ So, if the statement of intent be neglected, the indictment fails. As if upon an indictment for wounding, the jury find the intent to have been for the purpose of resisting lawful apprehension, and no other, and there be no such intent laid;⁶ but if the two intents are laid, it is clearly sufficient if the jury affirm one without the other.⁷ And again, the intent may be laid to injure more than one person, so that there may be a count for

¹ R. v. Ryan and another, 2 Moo. C. C. 15. See R. v. Davis, Leach, 493.

² R. v. C. and F. Briggs, 1 Moo. C. C. 318. R. v. Erle, 2 Lew. C. C. 133, on 1 Vict. c. 85.

³ R. v. Cruse et ux., 2 Moo. C. C. 53; 8 C. & P. 541.

⁴ R. v. Howes and others, 3 Ch. Barn, 868.

⁵ R. v. M'Dermott, Russ. & Ry. 356.

⁶ R. v. Gillow, ante, p. 796. The intent, as laid, must be proved, in order to justify the more serious charge. R. v. Cox, 1 Fost. & F. 664.

⁷ 1 Lew. ut sup.

shooting with intent to murder A., and another for a like offence with a similar design against B.¹ And, where there were several counts charging the prisoner with having shot twice at the same person, it was the opinion of the judges, that the words, "with intent in so doing, that is to say, in shooting at the said Thomas Pearce as aforesaid," were grammatically and legally referrible to the last antecedent matter, and consequently, that the omission of the word "last," i. e., "as last aforesaid" did not raise a valid ground of objection.² An indictment charged the prisoner with drawing the "trigger of a certain pistol loaded with gunpowder and a leaden bullet," and so feloniously and maliciously attempting to "discharge the said pistol at the said A." &c. This was held good without saying, "discharge the said pistol so loaded as aforesaid."³ It is sufficient to allege the shooting, without adding with what the gun was loaded.⁴

Trial.] The jurisdiction of justices of the peace and recorders is taken away in respect of the trial of all these offences by the statutes 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1, and 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, s. 15, with respect to the particular offences therein mentioned. The jurisdiction of the admiralty is preserved by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 68.⁵

Verdict.] If there be a joint charge for a malicious mischief of the kind now under consideration, one offender may be found guilty and the rest acquitted.⁶ At no time could a prisoner charged with cutting, &c., plead guilty to a common assault; he must plead to the felony. If no evidence were offered of the felony, he might have been acquitted of that, and convicted of the common assault on his own confession.⁷ But this cannot be now done since the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 10. But he may be convicted of unlawfully wounding, which is a misdemeanor under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, ss. 4, 5. As where three were charged with felony in cutting and wounding, and two were convicted, and the other found guilty of the misdemeanor of unlawfully wounding, the conviction was held right.⁸ Three persons were indicted jointly for cutting and wounding, but the third did not come up till one of the two first had got away, still this third man kicked the prosecutor whilst he was on the ground struggling with the others: here it was held, that although the case might be sustained against the two first, both in respect of the wounding or

¹ R. v. Holt, 7 C. & P. 518.

² R. v. Voke, Russ. & Ry. 531.

³ R. v. Baker, 1 Car. & K. 254.

⁴ R. v. Cox, 3 Cox, C. C. 58.

⁵ See R. v. Amarro, Russ. & Ry. 286.

⁶ R. v. Gibson and others, Leach, 359.

⁷ R. v. Calvert, 3 Car. & K. 201.

⁸ R. v. Cunningham and others, Bell, 72; 28 L. J. M. C. 66; and R. v. Fenwick, Lincoln, Sp. as. 1844, was cited, where two or more prisoners were tried for this felony, and one was convicted of a common assault.

the assault, yet that the third man must be acquitted of both under this indictment.¹ Again, two persons attacked and wounded the prosecutor, with intent to rob him, but it did not appear which had inflicted the wound. Upon an indictment for wounding with intent to do some grievous bodily harm, it was held that the prisoner might be convicted, whether his were the hand or not which inflicted the wound, if the jury believed that he intended bodily harm in order to carry out his purpose of robbery.²

If counts are joined for wounding and for a common assault, the verdict, to prevent error, should be entered separately. As where the trial had advanced considerably, before the mistake was discovered; here the judge summed up to the jury without noticing the count for the common assault, but the jury found the prisoner guilty of stabbing with intent to do grievous bodily harm, the verdict was so entered, and the judges held the conviction right.³

Again, there may be a verdict of guilty under these statutes, although had death ensued, the case might be but manslaughter;⁴ yet where the intent was laid with intent to murder, Lord Kenyon directed an acquittal upon that count, being of opinion that if death had ensued, the case would only have amounted to manslaughter.⁵

By 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, it was enacted that, on the trial of any person for any of the offences hereinbefore mentioned, or for any felony whatever, where the crime charged included an assault against the person, it should be lawful for the jury to acquit of the felony, and find a verdict of guilty of assault against the person indicted, if the court should warrant such finding. But this clause was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 10. The decisions under the repealed statute were these:—If there were one good count in an indictment judgment might be given for the assault, though all the other counts were bad.⁶ The words “or for any felony whatever,” are worthy of attention. It applied retrospectively, i. e. to cases which occurred before the statute came into operation,⁷ and was not confined to cases under the Act. It ap-

¹ R. v. M'Phane, Car. & M. 212.

² R. v. Bowen, Id. 149. If the weapon be an unlawful one, the prisoner may be convicted of unlawfully wounding, although he had no intent to wound. R. v. Cox, 1 Fost. & F. 664.

³ R. v. Jones, 2 Moo. C. C. 94; 8 C. & P. 776.

⁴ R. v. Griffiths, 8 C. & P. 248. Wounding with intent to disable. Anon. 2 Moo. C. C. 40. Wounding with intent to maim. Under the old Acts it was for the judge to say whether the offence would have amounted to murder. R. v. Besson, 7 C. & P. 142. Here the intent was laid to murder, and Little-dale, J., was disposed to leave it so to the jury, but circumstances occurred, which, if a witness, named Stone, were believed, would have reduced the offence to manslaughter. Verdict, Not guilty.

⁵ R. v. Mitton, East, P. C. 411.

⁶ R. v. Nicholls, 9 C. & P. 269.

⁷ R. v. Hagan, 8 C. & P. 167.

plied to manslaughter, for instance,¹ but the assault in a case of manslaughter, must have been, in some measure, the subject of the charge, and indeed, it must have been of itself a felony, but for some cause of mitigation. And moreover, the assault must have tended to cause the death of the deceased.² So again in rape.³ Two men were charged with robbing the prosecutor of his watch. He did not appear, but an assault upon him was proved. The jury convicted one of the prisoners of an assault, but negatived the intent to rob. This conviction was held right, because the assault was identical with that charged in the indictment, although the felonious part of it was neutralized by the finding.⁴ On the other hand, where there had been a scuffle between the prisoner and the deceased, and the prisoner went home, and afterwards the deceased received a blow from others which killed him, it was held, upon an indictment for murder, that the jury could not find the man who had gone home, guilty of an assault under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, because it was not the identical, but a distinct and separate assault.⁵

These also are the cases where, in general, the conviction for an assault has been allowed. A loaded pistol was presented by the prisoner, who was prevented from pulling the trigger.⁶ The prisoner struck the broker's assistant with an axe over the forehead.⁷ Where two men jointly assaulted and wounded the prosecutor, but not a third man who came up afterwards and assaulted the prosecutor, but who was arraigned on the joint charge.⁸ So, in abduction, where the jury were satisfied that force was used towards the lady, and yet were not prepared to say that the force arose from motives of lucre.⁹ And, in a case of robbery, the following finding was held not to take the case out of the statute,—“Guilty of an assault, but without intention to commit any felony.”¹⁰

Cases to the contrary were, feloniously administering poison under the statute.¹¹ So where the charge was administering poison with intent to murder, and the verdict was, guilty of administering, but not with intent to murder, the case was considered not to include an assault within the statute.¹² Again, where the instrument in question was not capable of doing harm in the manner with which it was used, the same result happened; as where the prisoner pointed a pistol at another, which turned out not to be

¹ R. v. Pool, 9 C. & P. 728. R. v. Lewis, 1 Car. & K. 419.

² R. v. Crumpton, Car. & M. 597.

³ Anon., 2 Moo. C. C. 40.

⁴ R. v. Birch, 2 Car. & K. 193.

⁵ R. v. Phelps, 2 Moo. C. C. 240; Car. & M. 180. R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483. R. v. Gutteridge, Id. 471.

⁶ R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483.

⁷ R. v. Sullivan, Car. & M. 209.

⁸ R. v. M'Phane, ante, p. 800.

⁹ R. v. Barratt, 9 C. & P. 387.

¹⁰ R. v. Ellis, 8 C. & P. 654.

R. v. Boden, 1 Car. & K. 395.

¹¹ R. v. Dilworth, 2 Moo. & Rob. 531.

¹² R. v. Draper, 1 Car. & K. 176.

loaded, or which could not be discharged, there could be no conviction for assault within the Act.¹

But the charge of assault at common law remaining, some prisoners might have been convicted of the felony, and others of the assault, as upon an indictment for wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm.²

Where a husband and wife were charged with inflicting an injury dangerous to life, with intent to murder, the wife could not be acquitted at the close of the case for the prosecution, inasmuch as she might have been convicted of an assault, at all events, under the statute, and she would then have been punishable for an assault as well as her husband.³ But, as we have seen, the statute which empowered the jury to convict for the assault in these cases is repealed, and the cases themselves are scarcely admissible except as matters of history.

CHAPTER VI.

OF LETTERS THREATENING TO MURDER.

Letters threatening to murder.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 16, Whosoever shall maliciously send, deliver, or utter, or directly or indirectly cause to be received, knowing the contents thereof, any letter or writing threatening to kill or murder any person, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding ten nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement, and, if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.⁴

Indictment.] The indictment states that A. on, &c., maliciously and feloniously did send to one B., a certain letter, directed to the said B. by the name and description of, &c., threatening then the said B. to kill and murder, and which said letter is as follows, [set out the letter,] against the form, &c.

¹ R. v. Baker, 1 Car. & K. 254.
R. v. James, Id. 530.

² R. v. Archer and others, Id. 174; 2 Moo. C. C. 283.

³ R. v. Cruse et ux., 8 C. & P. 541. See also as to the judgment in this case, Anon. 2 Moo. C. C. 40, 41. As to the old law under the Coventry Act, Leach, 51, 55, 187; East, P. C. 394, et seq. As to the old law of mayhem, 1 Hawk. c. 55; the Black Act (repealed) 1 Hawk. c. 55. These crimes are high misdemeanors at common law. R. v. Bacon, 1 Lev. 146; East, P. C. 411.

⁴ As to threatening letters under the Larceny Act, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, ss. 44, 46; under the Malicious Injuries Act, Id. c. 97, s. 50.

CHAPTER VII.

OF ACTS CAUSING OR TENDING TO CAUSE DANGER TO LIFE OR BODILY HARM.

Shipwreck.] The first of these Acts is impeding a person endeavouring to save himself from shipwreck.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 17, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously prevent or impede any person, being on board of or having quitted any ship or vessel which shall be in distress, or wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, in his endeavour to save his life, or shall unlawfully and maliciously prevent or impede any person in his endeavour to save the life of any such person as in this section first aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

Indictment.] The indictment under this clause would be that A. on, &c. feloniously and maliciously did prevent and impede one B. [or a certain person to the jurors unknown], being on board of a certain ship called —, [or having quitted] the said ship being then in distress, [wrecked, &c.] in his endeavour then to save his life [or the life of any other person], against the form, &c.

Shooting, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 18, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously by any means whatsoever wound or cause any grievous bodily harm to any person, or shoot at any person, or, by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner¹ attempt to discharge any kind of loaded arms² at any person, with intent,

¹ “In any other manner.” These words are interpreted as the word “other” often is in civil actions. They mean something analogous to the acts already related, as drawing a trigger, &c. Where the prisoner put his finger upon the trigger of a loaded pistol, but was prevented from pulling it, he was held not to have committed the crime of attempting to discharge loaded arms by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner. R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483; 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 4, (rep.) So, where the prisoner administered croton oil, so as to produce very dangerous symptoms, but with intent merely to punish the prosecutor, his conviction for administering with intent to do grievous bodily harm was considered by the judges, but, as the prisoner died, no judgment was given. R. v. Hanson, 4 Cox, 138.

² “Loaded arms.” The case of the tin box loaded with gunpowder and peas, was provided against by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, ss. 3, 4, and now is by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 28, 29. The case was R. v. Mountford, 1 Moo. C. C. 441.

in any of the cases aforesaid, to maim, disfigure, or disable any person, or to do some other grievous bodily harm to any person, or with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of any person,¹ shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life, or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

With respect to the term “disfigure” which is used in this section, it has been said by a learned judge, that it is a vague charge:—“I cannot form to myself any idea,” said the judge, “of what constitutes such an intent; I therefore recommend you [the jury] to attend to the charge of cutting with intent to do some bodily harm.”²

With reference to “maim and disable,” a distress was levied for rent, but the man was ejected. The owner of the goods distrained did not appear to have been mixed up with the transaction, but when the broker came to re-enter, the prisoner was in the room, and struck one of the assistants on the forehead with an axe. Here it was held, that he could not be convicted of wounding with intent to maim and disable, though he might for wounding with intent to murder, and that, at all events, he was guilty of an assault.³

In all these cases of wounding, &c., a party having a dangerous weapon is bound to retreat as far as possible before he uses it; he, otherwise, is guilty under this statute, if, indeed, any of the intents of the statute are verified in his case, as if he intended grievous bodily harm when he failed to retreat far enough.⁴ And no words nor gestures can warrant the use of a dangerous weapon.⁵

The injuries mentioned with reference to lawful apprehension and detainer, are, of course, intimately connected with the law of arrest, and they have been already discussed in a former part of this work.

The indictment would be the same, varying the mode of stating the intents as to murder, &c. with those which we have already set out.⁶

Wounding, &c., with or without a weapon.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously wound or inflict any grievous bodily harm upon any other person, either with or without any weapon or instrument, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to penal servitude for three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Indictment.] The indictment states that A. on, &c. unlawfully

¹ R. v. Duffy, 1 Lew. C. C. 58, n.

² R. v. Duffy, 1 Lew. 60.

³ R. v. Sullivan, Car. & M. 209; but not now of the assault.

⁴ R. v. Odgers, 2 Moo. & Rob. 479.

⁵ R. v. Woodhead, 1 Lew. C. C. 60.

⁶ Ante, p. 797, &c.

and maliciously did wound one B. [or inflict grievous bodily harm] against the form, &c. If the charge be for inflicting bodily harm, the means should be stated.

Attempting to strangle, &c. with intent to commit an indictable offence.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 21, whosoever shall, by any means whatsoever, attempt to choke, suffocate, or strangle any other person, or shall, by any means calculated to choke, suffocate, or strangle, attempt to render any other person insensible, unconscious, or incapable of resistance, with intent in any of such cases thereby to enable himself or any other person to commit, or with intent in any of such cases thereby to assist any other person in committing any indictable offence, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Indictment.] The indictment states the attempt to do the particular act, and the intent to commit the indictable offence, which should be particularly described.

Using chloroform to commit an indictable offence.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 22, whosoever shall unlawfully apply or administer to or cause to be taken by, or attempt to apply or administer to or attempt to cause to be administered to or taken by, any person, any chloroform, laudanum, or other stupefying or overpowering drug, matter or thing, with intent in any of such cases thereby to enable himself or any other person to commit, or with intent in any of such cases thereby to assist any other person in committing, any indictable offence, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

The indictment should state the drug with which the offence was committed or attempted, and the intent.

Administering poison so as to endanger life or inflict grievous bodily harm.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 23, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously administer to or cause to be administered to or taken by any other person any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, so as thereby to endanger the life of such person, or so as thereby to inflict upon such person any grievous bodily harm, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding ten years nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.¹

Noxious thing.] There was a count for administering cantharides with intent to do grievous bodily harm. Another count laid the intent to have been murder. Byles, J., thought that a voluntary taking was not within the 9 & 10 Vict. c. 25, but after consulting with Willes, J., he said, that the words "to be taken" might be referred to "dangerous or noxious thing." The prisoner gave the cantharides, a deadly poison, in some rum.¹

¹ See R. v. Walkden, 1 Cox, 282. R. v. Hanson, 4 Cox, 138. R. v. Heppingstall, 8 Cox, 111.

The indictment states that A. on, &c., unlawfully, feloniously, and maliciously did administer to one B. a certain destructive and noxious thing called — [a poison], whereby the life of the said B. was then and thereby endangered, [or whereby grievous bodily harm was inflicted upon the said B.] against the form, &c.

Administering poison with intent to injure, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 24, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously administer to or cause to be administered to or taken by any other person any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, with intent to injure, aggrieve, or annoy such person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to penal servitude for three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Indictment.] The indictment is similar to the last, but the intent must be stated, which is not necessary when life is wilfully endangered, or grievous bodily harm inflicted.

Then, as to the verdict incident to the two last sections (23 and 24). By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 25, if upon the trial of any person for any felony in the 23rd section mentioned, the jury shall not be satisfied that such person is guilty thereof, but shall be satisfied that he is guilty of any misdemeanor in the 24th section, the jury may acquit the accused of such felony, and find him guilty of such misdemeanor, and thereupon he shall be liable to be punished in the same manner as if convicted upon an indictment for such misdemeanor.

Apprentices and servants.] With regard to apprentices and servants, it is enacted, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 26, whosoever, being legally liable, either as a master or mistress, to provide for any apprentice or servant necessary food, clothing, or lodging, shall wilfully and without lawful excuse refuse or neglect to provide the same, or shall unlawfully and maliciously do or cause to be done any bodily harm to any such apprentice or servant, so that the life of such apprentice or servant shall be endangered, or the health of such apprentice or servant shall have been or shall be likely to be permanently injured, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to penal servitude for three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Indictment.] The indictment states that A., &c., on, &c., being then legally liable as the master of one B., then being his apprentice, to provide as master for the said B., his apprentice, necessary food, clothing and lodging, did, on, &c., and on several other days, wilfully neglect to provide the same for the said B., so being such apprentice, whereby the life of the said B. was much endangered, against the form, &c.

¹ R. v. Vaughan, 8 Cox, 256. There was no count for a common assault; had there been one there might have been a conviction at common law. By Byles, J., Id. 257.

In the case of an illegitimate child placed under the defendant's care, the indictment failed to show a duty to take care of the child, or that the child was under the control of the defendant, or that any injury was produced for want of care, or even that injury would naturally have resulted.¹ And so it was where the indictment failed to show that the prisoner had the means of supporting her child.²

Exposing children.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 27, whosoever shall unlawfully abandon or expose any child, being under the age of two years, whereby the life of such child shall be endangered, or the health of such child shall have been or shall be likely to be permanently injured, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to penal servitude for three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Indictment.] The indictment states that A., on, &c., a certain child being under the age of two years, &c., to wit, &c., and known by the name of [or to the jurors unknown], unlawfully and maliciously did abandon and expose, whereby the life of said child was then and thereby greatly endangered, against the form, &c.

Causing bodily injury by gunpowder.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 28, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously, by the explosion of gunpowder or other explosive substance, burn, maim, disfigure, disable, or do any grievous bodily harm to any person, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life, or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement; and if a male, under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping.

By sect. 29, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously cause any gunpowder or other explosive substance to explode, or send or deliver to or cause to be taken or received by any person any explosive substance or any other dangerous or noxious thing, or put or lay at any place, or cast or throw at or upon, or otherwise apply to any person, any corrosive fluid,³ or any destructive or explosive substance, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to burn, maim, disfigure, or disable any person, or do some grievous bodily harm to any person, shall, whether any bodily injury be effected or not, be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life, or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement; and if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

¹ R. v. Pelham, 15 L. J. M. C. 456. See as to Scotland, 6 Geo. 4, 105; 8 Q. B. 959.

² R. v. Chandler, 24 L. J. M. C. 109, Dears. 453.

³ R. v. Murrow, 1 Moo. C. C. or hurt.

And by sect. 30, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously place or throw in, into, upon, against or near any building, ship or vessel, any gunpowder or other explosive substance, with intent to do any bodily injury to any person, shall, whether or not any explosion take place, and whether or not any bodily injury be effected, be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement, and if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

Indictments.—For burning by gunpowder.] The indictment for causing bodily injury states that A. on, &c., by the wilful explosion of a large quantity of gunpowder, to wit, &c., by him so caused, did unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously burn and disable one B., against the form, &c.

For causing gunpowder to explode.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did cause a certain large quantity of gunpowder, to wit, &c., to explode with intent in so doing, then and thereby to burn one B., against the form, &c.

If the explosive substance be sent, the allegation is, that A., on, &c., unlawfully, &c., did send to one B. a certain large quantity of a certain explosive, dangerous, and noxious substance, with intent then and thereby to burn and disable the said B., against the form, &c.¹

If the charge be for throwing corrosive fluid, the indictment will be that A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did cast and throw at and upon one B. a large quantity, that is to say, — of a certain corrosive fluid called —, with intent in so doing then and thereby to burn the said B., against the form, &c.

So that A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and feloniously did throw into a certain building, situate, &c., a large quantity of gunpowder, to wit, —, with intent then and thereby to do bodily damage to one B., being then in the said building, &c., against the form, &c.

Spring guns, traps, &c.] So many accidents happened, and so many disputes arose, especially under the game laws, with reference to traps and spring guns, as to determine the legislature to interfere. Thus, by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 18, the act of setting such a gun or trap was made a misdemeanor; and now, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 31, whosoever shall set or place, or cause, &c., any spring gun, man trap, or other engine calculated to destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm, with the intent that the same or whereby the same may destroy or inflict grievous bodily harm upon a trespasser or other person coming in contact therewith, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to penal servitude for the term of three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and whosoever shall knowingly and wilfully permit any such spring gun, man trap, or other engine which may have been set or placed in any place then being in or afterwards coming into his possession or occupation by some other person to continue so set or placed, shall be deemed to have set and placed such gun, trap, or engine with such intent as aforesaid: provided that nothing in this section contained shall extend to make it illegal to set or place any gin or trap such as may have been or may be usually set or placed with the intent of destroying vermin: provided also, that nothing in this section shall be deemed to make it unlawful to set or place or cause to be set or placed, or to be continued set or placed, from sunset to sunrise, any spring gun, man trap, or other engine which shall be set or placed, or caused or continued to be set or placed, in a dwelling house, for the protection thereof.

¹ As to placing gunpowder near a vessel with the intent to damage it, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, s. 45.

Indictment.] The indictment states that A. on, &c., did unlawfully set and place a certain [spring gun or man trap], with intent that the same should destroy [or inflict grievous bodily harm upon] a trespasser or other person who might come in contact therewith.

Damages, &c. to railways.] The crime of maliciously or wantonly throwing or placing obstructions on railways necessarily aroused the attention of parliament, and, accordingly, several clauses have been introduced to meet these acts of misconduct.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 32, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously put or throw upon or across any railway any wood, stone, or other matter or thing, or shall unlawfully and maliciously take up, remove, or displace any rail, sleeper, or other matter or thing belonging to any railway, or shall unlawfully and maliciously turn, move, or divert any points or other machinery belonging to any railway, or shall unlawfully and maliciously make or show, hide or remove, any signal or light upon or near to any railway, or shall unlawfully and maliciously do or cause to be done any other matter or thing, with intent, in any of the cases aforesaid, to endanger the safety of any person travelling or being upon such railway, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and if a male under sixteen years, with or without whipping.

By sect. 33, whosoever shall unlawfully and maliciously throw, or cause to fall or strike, at, against, into, or upon any engine, tender, carriage, or truck used upon any railway, any wood, stone, or other matter or thing, with intent to injure or endanger the safety of any person being in or upon such engine, tender, carriage, or truck, or in or upon any other engine, tender, carriage, or truck of any train of which such first-mentioned engine, tender, carriage, or truck shall form part, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

And by sect. 34, whosoever, by any unlawful act, or by any wilful omission or neglect, shall endanger or cause to be endangered the safety of any person conveyed or being in or upon a railway, or shall aid or assist therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

It is no defence to say that the intent was not to effect an obstruction if the act done had a tendency to create the mischief charged.¹ Proof that the prisoner placed a stone on the railway is sufficient to enable the jury to decide what his intention was. If the act was done maliciously, the jury might find that the act was malicious.² It need not be stated that the railway was worked under the powers of an Act of parliament. It needs only to be said that the defendant acted unlawfully, and that the act might have endangered the safety of passengers. Throwing a stone is such an act, and the offender may be indicted on the statute, and there may likewise be a count at common law.³ Where the tender upon which a stone was thrown was empty, the prisoner was acquitted, the statute requiring that some person should be within.⁴ Still the missile needs not to have been thrown on a particular truck, if the safety of the passengers were endangered.⁵ And there must be such an intent as that; if the attempt should succeed, the prisoner would have been guilty of wounding or doing grievous bodily harm. An intent to commit an assault was therefore insufficient.⁶

A truck was placed across a line not completed. No obstruction nor collision took place. The railway was, however, used by the workmen in order to finish it for opening. The prisoners were held to have committed an offence within 3 Vict. c. 97.⁷

The neglect of a driver or stoker to look out for signals, according to the rules of the company, whence a collision happened, was held not to be an act of misdemeanor within the 15th section of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97. And the offences under the 13th and 14th clauses of that Act were deemed to have been triable at the quarter sessions only, and not at the Central Criminal Court.⁸

Indictment.] If the indictment be for placing wood or stone on the rail, it states, that A. on, &c., unlawfully, maliciously, and

¹ R. v. Holroyd, 2 Moo. & Rob. 339.

² R. v. Upton, 5 Cox, 298. Not malice in the ordinary sense of the term. Id. 299, Wightman, J.

³ R. v. Bowray, 10 Jur. 211.

⁴ R. v. Court, 6 Cox, 202.

⁵ R. v. Sanderson, 1 Fost. & F. 87.

⁶ R. v. Rooke, 1 Fost. & F. 107.

And, as there was much popular excitement, the counsel declined, with the approbation of the judge, to offer any evidence upon a second indictment for misdemeanor.

⁷ R. v. Bradford, 8 Cox, 309.

⁸ R. v. Pardenton, 6 Cox, 247.

feloniously did put, cast, and throw a piece of wood upon and across a certain railway called —, in the parish of —, in the county of —, with intent then in so doing thereby to endanger the safety of persons then and there travelling upon the said railway, against the form, &c.

And if for throwing a stone, that A. on, &c., unlawfully, &c., did throw a stone against and upon a certain carriage then being upon a certain railway called —, in the parish, &c., with intent then in so doing to endanger the safety of the persons then being and travelling in the said carriage, against the form, &c.

Furious driving.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 35, whosoever, having the charge of any carriage or vehicle, shall, by wanton or furious driving or racing, or other wilful misconduct, or by wilful neglect, do or cause to be done any bodily harm to any person whatsoever, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Indictment.] The charge is, that A. on, &c., being then a coachman, having the charge of a certain public carriage called —, did unlawfully, by wanton and furious driving of the horses attached to the carriage aforesaid, thereby then do grievous bodily harm to one B., and him the said B. did then and thereby maim, hurt, and injure, against the form, &c.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF ASSAULTS.

1. On Clergymen, during Divine Service, &c.
2. On Magistrates, &c. when preserving Wrecks.
3. With intent to commit Felony, or on Peace Officers.
4. With intent to obstruct the Sale of Grain, or its free Passage.
5. On Seamen.
6. Assaults arising from Combination.
7. Common Assaults and Aggravated Assaults.

1. Clergymen.] The first assault to which we have to direct the reader's attention is that upon an officiating clergyman, the grave character of which is in some degree mitigated by its rarity.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 36, whosoever shall, by threats or force, obstruct or prevent, or endeavour to obstruct or prevent, any clergyman or other minister in or from celebrating divine service or otherwise officiating in any church, chapel, meeting house, or other place of divine worship, or in or from the performance of his duty in the lawful burial of the dead in any churchyard or other burial place, or shall strike or offer any violence to, or shall, upon any civil process, or under the pretence of executing any civil process, arrest any clergyman or other minister who is engaged in, or to the knowledge of the offender is about to engage in, any of the rites or duties in this section aforesaid, or who to the knowledge of the offender shall be going to perform the same or returning from the performance thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.¹

Indictment.] That A. on, &c., in and upon one B., the said B. being then a clergyman, and in the act of performing divine service [on or about to perform divine service, &c.], did make an assault, and him, the said B., by virtue of a certain writ of —, did arrest him, the said B., whilst he the said B. was so performing divine service as aforesaid, [or whilst, &c.]

2. Magistrates.] The next assault to be noticed is that upon magistrates, officers, and other persons, in their attempts to preserve wrecks. By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 37, whosoever shall assault and strike or wound any magistrate, officer, or other person whatsoever lawfully authorized, in or on account of the exercise of his duty in or concerning the preservation of any vessel in distress, or of any vessel, goods, or effects wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, or lying under water, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.²

Indictment.] That A. on, &c., in and upon one B., the said B. then being one of Her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the county of —, and then being engaged in the exercise of his duty as such justice in and concerning the preservation of a certain vessel then wrecked, &c., did make an assault, and him the said B. did then strike, &c., by reason of the exercise of the said duty of the said B. as such justice as aforesaid, against the form, &c.

3. Peace officers.] An assault with intent to commit felony, or ¹ See 23 & 24 Vict. c. 32, s. 2, as to disturbances in churches, &c.

² See R. v. Cartwright, 4 T. R. 490; and the statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 10, as to apprehending offenders; and sect. 11, as to apprehending persons found committing indictable offences in the night.

upon peace officers, is provided for by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 38 : —Whosoever shall assault any person with intent to commit felony, or shall assault, resist, or wilfully obstruct any peace officer in the due execution of his duty, or any person acting in aid of such officer, or shall assault any person with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of himself or of any other person for any offence, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

At common law an attack upon any officer is a very great misdemeanor, and punishable by fine and imprisonment. The assaults above mentioned are withdrawn from the summary jurisdiction clause,¹ so that, if the justices become sensible of the aggravated nature of the assault, they will call upon the defendant to answer the charge at the sessions. So, with force or violence to assault or resist any excise officer, &c. in the execution of his duty in search of, or arresting persons engaged in carrying, removing, or concealing goods, is a misdemeanor under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, ss. 40, 43, and punishable by imprisonment, with hard labour, for three years, in addition to, or in lieu of, any other punishment or penalty which may by law be inflicted or imposed upon the offender.² Moreover, by force or violence, to assault, resist, &c. any officer of the army, navy, or marines, being duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, and on full pay, or any officer of customs or excise, or other person acting in his or their aid or assistance, or duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, in the due execution of his or their office or duty, is made punishable with transportation for seven years, or imprisonment, with hard labour, for any term not exceeding three years, at the discretion of the court.³ This offence was felony under the statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 108, s. 59. It will be noticed, that the imprisonment with hard labour is part of the sentence, and that the discretion of the court applies to the term of imprisonment.

Likewise, by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 101, s. 9, an assault upon any officer of a workhouse or relieving officer, in the execution of his duty (and by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 105, s. 18, officers under the 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, are included,) is punishable as an assault upon a peace officer, &c.;⁴ and the court shall have the same power as in the case of the last-mentioned assault, to order costs. Upon an

¹ By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 46.

² A separate penalty may be recovered against each defendant. R. v. Clark and others, Cowp. 610. Where the offence is in its nature single, and cannot be severed, there the penalty shall be only single, because though several persons may join in committing it, it still constitutes but one offence. But where the offence is in its nature several, and where every person concerned may be separately guilty of it, then each offender is separately liable to the penalty. Id. 612.

³ 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 251, now penal servitude not exceeding 3 years, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2. See R. v. Lilly, 7 Mod. 63.

⁴ Supra.

application for costs, the judge must be satisfied that the defendant was taken before justices, with a view to a summary conviction, and that he was sent by them to the assizes. But the production of a summons is sufficient proof.¹

These seem to be the chief statutes upon the subject of assaulting officers and persons in authority. And the same want of legal right which would make an officer guilty of an assault in arresting another, will likewise operate to produce an acquittal in cases where the defendant is charged with this offence. Therefore, where the prosecutor, a constable belonging to the Thames police office, acting under a general warrant, endeavoured to apprehend the defendants, who thereupon drove away the officer, Lord Kenyon directed an acquittal, for there was no competent authority to make the arrest.² In this case, there was a count for a common assault, but it will be observed, nevertheless, that that circumstance will make no difference if there be a general verdict. The defendant was indicted for an assault, false imprisonment, and rescue, but it turned out that the indictment had omitted to allege that the prosecutor was an officer of the court out of which process had issued, and it was in vain suggested that the term "serjeant-at-mace" had supplied the omission. Judgment was arrested;³ and by Lord Ellenborough, "Though the jury, in finding the defendant guilty generally upon the second count, must necessarily have included the assault, yet finding as they do the whole count, we must take it that they found the assault committed under the circumstances charged in that count."⁴ So, under a warrant directed to the constables of W., a constable of W. was held not justified in executing it within the parish of D., and a verdict of not guilty was entered against the defendant.⁵

It is not a defence to the charge of assaulting an officer, that an affray is likely to be the consequence of persisting in a capture. As where bailiffs endeavoured to carry a process into execution, of the regularity of which there was no doubt, and a scuffle ensued, which ended in the infliction of some injury on a woman by the bailiffs. Supposing her to have been killed, the constable took the bailiffs into custody, and did not liberate them until the next morning, when it was ascertained that the woman had recovered. The constable and his assistants being indicted for the assault and rescue, Heath, J., directed the jury, if they believed the evidence, to find the defendants guilty.⁶ "For if one, having a competent authority, issue a lawful command, it is not in the power of any other, having an equal authority in the same respect, to issue a command contrary to the first, for that would be to legalize confusion and disorder."⁷ An officer has a right to enter a public

¹ R. v. M'Gavaran, 7 Cox, 64.

² R. v. Lawson and others, 3 Esp. 262.

³ R. v. Osmer, 5 East, 304.

⁴ Id. 308.

⁵ R. v. Weir and others, 2 D.

& R. 444. Had the warrant been directed to the constable by name, the case might have been different.

⁶ East, P. C. 305; Anon. Exeter Sum. 1793.

⁷ Id. 304; 1 Hale, 460.

house, if he hear a disturbance, especially at night, and an assault committed under such circumstances is an assault upon him in the execution of his duty.¹

Collectors of taxes are within the protection of the law upon this subject, and likewise are within the provisions of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100. An assault upon such a revenue officer is, therefore, a serious misdemeanor. It has been held, that the arrears of assessed taxes need not be demanded from the debtor by the collector in person, and that there need not be a direct refusal of payment to the collector in person. If the demand be made by any one on behalf of the officer, and payment has been refused, either through inability or any other cause, the stat. 43 Geo. 3, c. 99, s. 33, will have been satisfied. An indictment was drawn against a defendant for assaulting a collector, and it stated that the officer held lawful possession of certain goods under a levy for a specified sum of money for arrears of assessed taxes. The prosecutor was not in a condition to prove the amount of this sum, and Lord Denman, although he thought that no sum need have been mentioned, ruled, nevertheless, that it was imperative upon the prosecutor to show the amount of the allegation which had been introduced, especially if the debtor understood the nature of the arrears at the time of the demand.² But the defendant was convicted on the second count, and upon a motion for a new trial, the court held that no personal demand was necessary under the statute, and that if the debtor understood what the amount of the demand was, it was not necessary to specify it, in order to support that count.³ But a collector has no right to take a constable with him when he goes to collect his rate, unless he has grounds for believing that an assault will be committed upon him, or that payment of the tax will be resisted. A collector went into the house of the defendants in order to demand a land tax, and introduced a constable. No objection was made, but afterwards, having reasonable grounds to apprehend violence, the officer brought in another constable, and upon this last person an assault was made by the defendants. The court held that the collector was justified in asking for the services of the last-mentioned constable, and that the attack made upon the officer was whilst he was in the execution of his duty, and moreover, that the wrongful introduction of the first constable furnished no ground for an answer to the indictment.⁴ If an officer strike first, his situation will not protect him against the return of the blow. It was so held, where the mayor of Yarmouth struck a

¹ R. v. Smith and others, 6 C. P. 136. R. v. Mabel, 9 C. & P. 474. The officer in this last case laid hold of the defendant without a probability that there would be a breach of the peace, and Parke, B., desired the jury to consider whether the violence used by the defendant in consequence was more than necessary to repel the policeman's assault, for if so, they should find him guilty of the common assault. The jury acquitted the party.

² R. v. Ford, 4 Nev. & M. 451; Ad. & El. 588.

³ 2 Ad. & El. ut supra.

⁴ R. v. Clarke and another, 3 Ad. & El. 287; 4 Nev. & M. 671.

defendant, and an information was denied to the mayor.¹ Upon the trial of an assault upon a county-court bailiff, it was objected, that proof of the proceedings out of which the warrant issued should be shown, especially as it was a prison judgment, i. e. sent from one county to be executed in another. But the court overruled the objection.²

Indictment with intent to commit felony.] That A. on, &c., in and upon one B. did make an assault, and him, the said B., did then beat, wound, and illtreat the said A., then intending feloniously, &c. [describe the felony contemplated], against the form, &c.

Second count—Common assault.

Upon a peace officer.] That A. on, &c., in and upon one B., the said B. then being one of the constables of —, and in the due execution of his office, did make an assault, and him, the said B., so being such constable as aforesaid, did then beat, &c., against the form, &c.

Second count—Common assault.

To prevent apprehension.] That A. on, &c., in and upon one B. did make an assault, and him, the said B., did then beat, &c., with intent thereby then to resist and prevent the lawful apprehension [detainer] of the said A., for and in respect of a certain felony, for the commission of which said felony the said A. was then liable to be apprehended by the said B., against the form, &c.

4. Assaults with intent to obstruct the sale of grain.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 39, whosoever shall beat, or use any violence or threat of violence to any person, with intent to deter or hinder him from buying, selling, or otherwise disposing of, or to compel him to buy, sell, or otherwise dispose of, any wheat or other grain, flour, meal, malt, or potatoes, in any market or other place, or shall beat or use any such violence or threat to any person having the care or charge of any wheat or other grain, flour, meal, malt, or potatoes, whilst on the way to or from any city, market town, or other place, with intent to stop the conveyance of the same, shall, on conviction thereof before two justices, be liable to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour in the common gaol or house of correction not exceeding three months: provided that no person who shall be punished for any such offence by virtue of this section shall be punished for the same offence by virtue of any other law whatsoever.

5. Assaults on seamen, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 40, whosoever shall unlawfully and with force hinder or prevent any seaman, keelman, or caster from working at or exercising his lawful trade, business, or occupation, or shall beat or use any violence to any such person with intent to hinder or prevent him from working at or exercising the same, shall, on conviction thereof before two justices, be liable to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour in the common gaol or house of correction not exceeding three months: provided that no person who shall be punished for any such offence by reason of this section shall be punished for the same offence by virtue of any other law whatsoever.

¹ R. v. Symonds, Cas. Temp. H. 159, Williams, J. dub. Morrell v. Martin, 4 Sc. N. R. 300. Carratt 240.

² R. v. Davies, 8 Cox, 486. v. Morley, 1 Q. B. 18; and Fost. Leigh & Cave, 64; 30 L. J. M. C. Cr. L. 311, were cited.

Assaults arising from combination.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 41, Whosoever in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy to raise the rate of wages, or of any unlawful combination or conspiracy respecting any trade, business, or manufacture, or respecting any person concerned or employed therein, shall unlawfully assault any person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.¹

Common assault and battery.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 42, where any person shall unlawfully assault or beat any other person, two justices, upon complaint by or on behalf of the party aggrieved, may hear and determine such offence, and the offender shall, upon conviction thereof before them, either be committed to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two months, or else shall forfeit and pay such fine as shall appear to them to be meet, not exceeding, together with costs (if ordered), the sum of 5*l.*; and if such fine as shall be so awarded, together with the costs (if ordered), shall not be paid, either immediately after the conviction, or within such period as the said justices shall at the time of the conviction appoint, they may commit the offender to the common gaol or house of correction, there to be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two months, unless such fine and costs be sooner paid.

In its common acceptation, the common assault does not mean merely the ordinary attack which so frequently happens when persons are irritated by passion; whatever pain or inconvenience is wilfully or unlawfully inflicted upon the person of an individual by the act or agency of another is an assault. And it is a common assault when no circumstances present themselves in the case which manifest an intent to have committed some other crime, or where the act done constitutes a separate charge under some act of the legislature. Thus if one administer a mischievous drug in coffee to his neighbour, thereby causing him a certain amount of suffering, the act, however hazardous, may not be of rych, Alphabetical Arrangement of Peel's Acts, p. 27.

¹ See a form for an assault committed in pursuance of a conspiracy to raise the rate of wages. Wool-

a felonious character, and yet, although no blow be struck, it is very clearly an assault at common law.¹

So, if a person of tender years be under the control of a master who withholds proper food from the child, or exposes it to the inclemency of the weather, the party thus misconducting himself is liable to be indicted for an assault.² Yet where a woman abandoned her infant in a dry ditch among nettles, and it was not hurt, it was held, that she could not be convicted of a common assault nor of an intent to murder.³ And it is no defence to allege that a mere non-feazance, as not providing maintenance, is not punishable,⁴ although it might be matter of excuse if the child were able to relieve itself from the treatment complained of, because the presumption of coercion would be lessened.⁵ And, on the other hand, exposure to weather is an assault, whether the servant be of tender years, or of a more advanced age.⁶ These cases, however, proceed upon the supposition of dominion on the part of the master. Where, therefore, an idiot was found in a dark room without sufficient warmth or clothing, it was held, that no obligation attached on his brother, at whose house he was an inmate, to provide proper food or warmth for him, and consequently, the charge for assault and imprisonment was considered invalid.⁷

However, if the charge be for neglecting to provide sustenance or clothing, the indictment must allege that the child was of tender years, and under the control and dominion of the defendant. For want of such allegations a person was held to have been improperly convicted by a majority of the judges.⁸ And in the case of R. v. Ridley above mentioned, Lawrence, J., mentioned the case at Exeter, upon finding that these same allegations were omitted in the indictment, and the counsel for the prosecution declining to proceed, the defendant was acquitted.

By 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 35, s. 8, to require or compel an apprentice or person of any description to ascend a chimney flue for the purpose of extinguishing a fire therein, is declared to be a misdemeanor, and punishable with fine and imprisonment as at common law. Under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 27, the offence depends on the permanent injury to health. Evidence that the child had suffered injury, but not to any serious extent, was held insufficient to warrant a conviction under the statute of 14 & 15 Vict. c. 11.⁹

Duress amounts to an assault. Whence it is, that an illegal

¹ R. v. Button, 8 C. & P. 660. See Edsall v. Russell, 6 Jur. 996, and 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20.

² R. v. Ridley, 2 Campb. 650.

³ R. v. Renshaw, 11 Jur. 615. Had the child been hurt, whether she could have been convicted of a common assault, qu.? S. C.

⁴ R. v. Ridley, 2 Campb. 653.

⁵ Id.

⁶ By Lawrence, J., R. v. Ridley, 2 Campb. 653.

⁷ R. v. W. J. & S. Smith, 2 C. & P. 449.

⁸ Anon. 2 Camp. 652, at Exeter, cor. Le Blanc, J., in 1802. See now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, ss. 26, 27.

⁹ R. v. Philpott, 22 L. J. M. C. 113.

imprisonment is punishable in like manner. And this offence happens where a person is improperly detained in any place, whether it be a private house, or in the street, or in a mad-house,¹ and, of course, if in a gaol. No blow needs be given, for the coercion creates an immediate inconvenience, if not pain to the person of the individual confined, who, if he should attempt to escape, would be met with actual force, and who by remaining passive through fear, is under the influence of an implied restraint. And it probably came to be assumed that every false imprisonment included a battery,² on the ground of the natural anxiety which would prompt every man to release himself from an unjust thralldom, inasmuch as the effort to escape would immediately create a laying on of hands, and so a battery. In a case, however, which came before the Court of Common Pleas, the judges said they had looked into the authorities, and that it was absurd to contend that every imprisonment included a battery. And they cited Co. Litt. 253,³ to show that nothing more was said by Lord Coke in the passage relied on than that the "imprisonment was a corporal damage."⁴

Again, to lift up the hand in a threatening manner so as to exhibit an intention, coupled with an ability, to do harm is an assault, though no blow be struck, for it is an attempt or offer to do violence; and striking at a person, drawing a sword or bayonet, throwing a bottle or glass, or presenting a weapon within reach of him, will come within the same rule.⁵ So, if a pistol, whether loaded or not, be presented so near as that, had it been loaded and gone off, it would have been dangerous to life, the person presenting it is guilty of an assault.⁶ Indeed, if two go out to fight, and a battle takes place, it is immaterial who is the first striker, for both are guilty;⁷ yet in the case of the pistol, clearly denoting that the party did not mean to fire it off, as where the master of a ship said that if the plaintiff was not quiet he would blow his brains out, it seems that this was not an assault.⁸ Several persons surrounded the plaintiff, tucked up their sleeves, and threatened to break his neck if he did not go out of the house. This was an assault.⁹

So, the act of setting a dog on to bite; wilful and furious driving over a person; or riding wantonly and carelessly over him, are respectively assaults.¹⁰ So, where a light squib was tossed by the defendant into the street at Taunton, which, after passing

¹ R. v. Coate, Lofft. 73.

² Oxley v. Flower, Selw. N. P. 620, cor. Lord Kenyon, C. J.

³ Which was the foundation of the proposition in Bull. N. P. 22 (c).

⁴ Emmet v. Lyne, 1 New. Rep. 255; Co. Litt. 253 (b). A person falsely imprisoned may likewise demand surety of the peace, 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 7.

⁵ East, P. C. 406; 1 Hawk. c.

62, s. 1.

⁶ R. v. St. George, 9 C. & P. 483.

⁷ Matthew v. Ollerton, Comb.

218. R. v. Lewis, 1 Car. & K. 419.

⁸ Blake v. Barnard, 9 C. & P.

626. See Osborn v. Veitch, 1

Fost. & F. 317.

⁹ Read v. Coker, 22 L.J.C.P. 201.

¹⁰ 1 Russ. C. M. 751.

through several hands, finally fell on the plaintiff and put out his eyes, it was held by three judges that the action for trespass and assault was well brought.¹

So, if one push a drunken man against another, and especially if he cause an injury by his act, he may be punished by indictment, or be compelled to pay damages.²

So, evidence that the defendant spit in the prosecutor's face was held sufficient to prove a battery.³

So, where the hair of a pauper was forcibly cut off in the poor-house, it was held to be an assault.⁴ If a man place an infant, which cannot help itself, upon a dunghill, or openly in the fields, so that beasts or fowls may destroy it, it is a breach of the peace.⁵ So, where two persons carried an infant in a bag, and hung it on some park palings, it was an assault on the child.⁶ But words alone, although they may serve to explain the defendant's intention at the time of the assault, will never, of themselves, amount to this offence.⁷ From hence it follows as a necessary consequence, that as soon as the hand is unlawfully laid upon the person of an individual, the offence is manifestly an assault. A blow of any kind, a push,⁸ or any similar act of violence must be undoubtedly deemed an assault. Although there must be a hostile intention. Placing the hand on the shoulder in order to show an inspector how he might manage the hose better at a fire, is not an assault.⁹ A master took indecent liberties with his female scholar. They were short of a rape, or of an immediate attempt to commit that offence, and the girl, a girl of thirteen, did not resist to the utmost the lustful conduct of the defendant. But she swore that the acts done were against her will, and the judge observed, that the authority and influence of the master were likely to have put the child off her guard, through her age and inexperience; that a fear and awe of the prisoner might check her resistance and lessen her natural sense of modesty and decency, and that under such circumstances less resistance was to be expected than in ordinary cases. A verdict of guilty then passed against the prisoner upon a count for an

¹ Scott v. Shepherd, 3 Wils. 403, Blackstone, J., diss.

² Short v. Lovejoy, Bull. N. P. 16. Secus if the intention were to assist the drunken man, Id.

³ R. v. Cotesworth, 6 Mod. 172. Every battery includes an assault, but the rule does not hold è converso. But personal violence, as a push, or blow, or stroke of any kind, will constitute a battery. But not a gentle laying on of hands, such as would satisfy an allegation of molliter manus imposuit, which may, indeed, be an assault, but not a battery.

⁴ Forde v. Skinner, 4 C. & P. 239; and the cutting off of the hair with a view to degrade the plaintiff, and not for the purpose of cleanliness, would be an aggravation, and operate to increase the damages. S. C.

⁵ Poph. 13.

⁶ R. v. March, 1 Car. & K. 496.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 1, although the contrary doctrine was once entertained. Id.

⁸ Although stopped by the plaintiff or prosecutor. Martin v. Shoppee, 3 C. & P. 373. Stephens v. Myers, 4 C. & P. 349.

⁹ Coward v. Baddeley, 28 L. J. Ex., 260.

assault with intent to commit a rape, and also upon one for a common assault, but the judgment was respited upon a doubt whether the evidence justified a conviction for the assault with intent, &c. And the judges came to the conclusion that the evidence was fully sufficient to support the count for a common assault, and that judgment should be passed upon the prisoner.¹

A German quack was applied to by a woman for his advice against fits, with which she was troubled. He made her strip naked, himself taking off her clothes, and he then rubbed her for some minutes with some stuff from a bottle. She swore that she did not put off her clothes willingly—he made her. In this case, again, the judges held that the conviction for the common assault was good, thus laying aside the special count for an assault with intent, &c.² So, where a medical man had connection with a girl of fourteen under the plea of curing her of a complaint, there being no proof of her being aware of the act which was done, the court were clear that it was an assault, although she consented under the idea that it was for her benefit.³ And personal chastisement, inflicted on a female pauper in an indecent manner, is an assault, although confined within the limits of moderation.⁴ However, where the defendant put cantharides into rum, and the prosecutor drinking it unwittingly became ill, it was neither an assault nor a misdemeanor at common law.⁵

It may be remarked here, that in misdemeanors all are principals. So that although the defendant strike not any blow, yet if he used words of encouragement, as, "Go it, go it," he is equally guilty with the striker.⁶

Defences to common assaults.] However, the intention of the party upon a charge of assault will be taken into consideration by the jury in common as well as in aggravated cases of that nature. As where a man laid his hand upon his sword, and probably in a menacing manner, but said, "If it were not assize time, I would not take such language from you:" here the observation negatived the intent to assault, and the intention not operating with the act, the deed was not complete.⁷ This intent, again, is negatived in the case of the schoolmaster who properly corrects his pupil, of the parent who chastises his child with moderation, of the gaoler who coerces his prisoner, or even, as some say, the husband his wife, of the officer who compels obedience to the laws,⁸

¹ R. v. Nichol, Russ. & Ry. 130.

² R. v. Rosinski, 1 Moo. C. C. 19.

³ R. v. Case, Den. 580 ; 19 L. J. M. C. 174. "The counsel for the defendant has confounded active consent with passive non-resistance." Den. 583, Patteson, J. Alderson, B., inclined to think it a rape. Id. See R. v. M'cGavarron, 6 Cox, 164. The defendant put his hands on a girl of thirteen, who did not object.

⁴ R. v. Miles, 6 Jur. 243.

⁵ R. v. Hanson, 2 Car. & K. 912.

But see now 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 20.

⁶ Anon. 1 Lew. C. C. 17.

⁷ Tuberville v. Savage, 1 Mod. 3.

⁸ The case of the churchwarden, who after request and refusal, removed the hat of a person from his head in church. Hawe v. Planner, 1 Saund, 13.

of the man who binds or restrains an insane person, or lays hands upon one who is about to commit a violent action, or¹ resists in a gentle and reasonable manner an attempt to despoil him of lands or goods.²

The plea to an action of assault and battery was that the plaintiff had some dead rabbits which belonged to his master, and that the servant requested the plaintiff not to carry them away, and, on his refusal, gently took them from him. The defendant had judgment in his favour.³

So, if the striking be in defence of a parent, wife, or child, or master, the assault is justified, for the intention which promoted the blow was lawful.⁴ So again, if the wife should inflict a blow in defence of her husband.⁵ Or if the master should interfere to protect his servant.⁶ The relation between master and servant is involved in the transaction. Again, an intention to commit a battery is negatived, notwithstanding the infliction of violence, if the circumstances are attended with much outrage on the part of the original aggressor. As where the defendant, in an action of trespass for an assault, proved that the plaintiff had taken his horse, and that he only advanced with his staff in a threatening manner in order to regain his property. The defendant had a verdict.⁷ Or, if a man should discover another in the act of damaging his property,⁸ breaking down his gates, advancing upon his land with a show of force. Here it is competent to repel aggression with something more than an ordinary degree of resistance, and if a battery happen, the intention to commit that breach of the peace is set aside by the emergency of the occasion. And thus a plea by the defendant that the plaintiff had endeavoured with a strong hand to break his close, whereupon he resisted and opposed him, and if any damage happened to the plaintiff, it was in defence of the possession of that close, was held good.⁹ And by Lawrence, J., if any further mischief ensued, it was in consequence of the plaintiff's own act, so that the battery followed from the resistance. And this way of considering the case, said the learned judge, would reconcile all the authorities.¹⁰ Where leave and licence can be pleaded, there may be a defence to an indict-

¹ As where two were fighting, and the plaintiff took the defendant by the collar, who, in his turn assaulted the plaintiff. Griffin v. Parsons, Selw. N. P. 27, cor. Legge, B. Plea, Son ass. demesne. Replication, de injuriâ. It was objected that the matter should have been replied specially, but the judge said that the evidence was not offered by way of justification, but to show the absence of any intention to commit an assault, and that was fit matter to be left to the jury.

² 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 23.

³ Blades v. Higgs, 30 L. J. C. P. 347.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 23.

⁵ Leward and ux. v. Basley, Lord Raym. 62. Plea, Son ass. demesne. Replication, defence of the husband. Demurrer, judgment for the plaintiff.

⁶ Tickell v. Read, Lofft. 215.

⁷ Keilw. 92.

⁸ Green v. Goddard, 2 Salk. 641, 2 Inst. 316. See Cro. Car. 138. There is no time to make a request in such a case.

⁹ Weaver v. Bush, 8 T. R. 78.

¹⁰ Id. 81. See 4 Taunt. 822.

ment for assault.¹ If the entry into a house be peaceable, there must be a request to leave it in order to justify an assault, but if the entry be forcible, the intruder may be repelled at once.²

So, the intent to commit either an assault or battery is negatived by evidence of accident, provided that the circumstances of the transaction were lawful. As in the case of a soldier who hurts another during the exercise of arms. So, where two were playing at cudgels, it was once said that an unintentional hurt was no battery.³ So, if a horse run away, and knock a man down, it is no battery by the rider, if the casualty were not caused by the default of the latter.⁴ So, where the defendants were throwing down skins into a yard in the proper prosecution of their business, and the wind taking hold of a skin blew it into the plaintiff's eye, thereby depriving him of sight, it was held, that although the yard was a public way, the casualty could not have been avoided, and the parties were acquitted.⁵

But in all these cases the law will watch with jealousy against excess. If the defendants in the last case had been throwing about their skins wantonly, they would have been guilty of an assault. If the rider of the horse had been conducting himself carelessly, he could not have pleaded not guilty with success. The soldier who, in a skirmish, had the misfortune to hurt his comrade, was held answerable in trespass, because he had not set out the circumstances of the case so clearly as to show to the court that the hurt complained of had been the result of inevitable accident.⁶ And the case of the cudgels has been questioned, because the act of fighting is in itself unlawful. As where Hayward, Serjt., proposed to show on the behalf of the defendant that there had been a mutual fight, but by Parker, C. B., the consent of the plaintiff is no bar to the action, and he is entitled to a verdict for the injury done him.⁷

So any excess on the part of the schoolmaster, parent, gaoler, or other person, will immediately hinder the presumption of absence of intention from arising, for if an extreme degree of correction or of violence be employed, it cannot be denied that the defendant wilfully committed the battery complained of. As if A. should lift up his hand or stick to strike B., and B. should give way to his passion, and having struck A. should proceed to acts of violence quite incommensurate with the prior assault.⁸

¹ R. v. Meredith, 8 C. & P. 589. Lord Abinger.

² Tullay v. Reed, 1 C. & P. 6.

³ 1 Russ. C. M. 755.

⁴ Gibbons v. Pepper, 4 Mod. 405. But the plaintiff had judgment, because the defendant, the rider, had neglected to plead the general issue, and had pleaded specially instead.

⁵ R. v. Gill and others, 1 Str. 190.

⁶ Weaver v. Ward, Hob. 134. He had merely pleaded casualiter et per infortunium contra volun- tatem meam, without setting forth that the accident could not be averted. A fortiori, if the person assaulted strike a blow from revenge when the danger is passed. R. v. Driscoll, Car. & M. 214. To the same effect, Underwood v. Hewson, Str. 596. Dickenson v. Watson, Tho. Jones, 205.

⁷ Boulter v. Clark, Bull. N. P. 16. If a person license another to beat him, such licence is void, being against the peace. Bull. N. P. 17.

⁸ See East, P. C. 406.

So again, the law will not extend the relations which, we have seen, serve occasionally as justifications for assaults. A tenant cannot justify, therefore, for interfering to protect his landlord, otherwise than one individual can raise his hand in defence of an indifferent person.¹ Nor can a servant, although at the bidding of his master, justify an assault and battery as servant, in defence of his master's son, because he is not a servant to the son.² And if, instead of replying molliter manus to a plea of son assault demesne, in respect of an attack made upon the plaintiff's possession of lands by the defendant, he plead that he gently assaulted the defendant, he will have judgment against him, because, unless the violence were very great on the other side, an assault, under such circumstances, cannot be warranted.³ It has even been determined, that a servant who saw a person about to beat his master's horse, was not justified in laying his hands gently upon him, because he had not then beaten the horse; and, consequently, that the defendant was entitled to judgment, although he had beaten the plaintiff for touching him.⁴ Again, a medical man is protected against a charge of assault if he exercises a careful discretion in giving his certificate in the case of supposed lunacy. But if he should make a statement without being properly satisfied of any immediate injury likely to be inflicted by such a person either upon himself or others, he may become guilty of an assault by rendering himself accessory to the coercion of that person.⁵ And, lastly, with reference to the point of accident, if the occasion be unlawful, the unlawful intention will not be negatived. As where there was a fight, and one of the combatants, without any design to do so, struck a third person. Here the unpremeditated attack would only operate in mitigation of damages.⁶

We have reserved one class of cases respecting violence used by magistrates or officers in the execution of process or warrants, because, as several decisions have taken place upon the peculiar circumstances which have arisen in the course of such proceedings, a separate mention of the subject seems to be the most convenient in this place. And it is observable, that whilst an assault upon officers is made especially punishable under various statutes, an assault by them is merely regarded in the light of a common assault. If an arrest on the part of an officer be unjustifiable, he is certainly guilty of an assault, as if he should attempt to execute process on a Sunday, or, on any day, upon a privileged person, or exceed his authority, although his warrant be regular. An excise officer was executing a warrant to search the house of the defendant for an illegal still. The defendant contrived to get possession of the warrant, and refused to give it up, upon which a scuffle ensued, the officer having first touched the defendant.

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 24.

² Id.

³ Jones v. Tresilian, 1 Mod. 36; 1 Sid. 441.

⁴ Shingleton v. Smith, 2 Lutw. 1481, and see Id. 1483.

⁵ Anderdon v. Burrows, 4 C. & P. 210.

⁶ James v. Campbell, 5 C. & P. 372.

There being evidence of much violence on both sides, Lord Tenterden left it to the jury to say whether the officer had used unnecessary violence, and they acquitted the defendant.¹ The defendant was a marshal on duty at Guildhall, and meeting with obstruction, he struck the plaintiff on the face, although the latter was unable to move on, and the jury found a verdict against the marshal for this excess of his authority.² So, in the case of a constable.³ But if the constable witness an assault, and arrest the party soon afterwards, lest he should renew the attack, it is one transaction, and the arrest is right, and the conviction good.⁴ So, if a party be seen speaking to a reputed thief, it is not competent for a constable to push him on. By doing so, the constable becomes guilty of an assault.⁵ A magistrate, likewise, is guilty of this misdemeanor if he detains a known person under the expectation that a charge is likely to be preferred against that individual.⁶ Many other cases of assault will easily be conceived by comparing the law of arrest with the present subject, and adverting to those cases where the constable or other officer is not justified in effecting a capture. And, on the other hand, where the officer is borne out in his acts, both in respect of his authority and the mode of exercising it, the assault is negatived.

So, in a case where the jurisdiction of the Palace Court came in question, there was judgment for the defendant upon a special verdict in an indictment for assault.⁷ Again, trespass was brought for an assault and false imprisonment. The pleas were, not guilty, and that the plaintiff committed the first assault, upon which the defendant gave him in custody to a peace officer who saw the transaction. Replication, that the plaintiff was employed to serve the defendant with process, and, in order to do this, that he necessarily laid his hands upon the defendant. Rejoinder, excessive violence, and issue thereon. And, after a verdict for the plaintiff and motion in arrest of judgment, the court said, that by rejoining excess, the defendant had admitted that if in any case it could be necessary to touch a party in order to serve him with process, it was in that instance, and they could not say but that, under particular circumstances, it might be necessary and lawful to do so, and the rule was refused.⁸

The same rule as to officers extends to those who aid and assist them in the execution of their duties. And it has been said to be no battery to lay the hand gently on a man against whom a warrant of arrest had been issued, and to tell the officer that this is the

¹ R. v. Milton, Moo. & M. 107 ; 3 C. & P. 31.

² Imason v. Cope, 5 C. & P. 193.

³ Levy v. Edwards, 1 C. & P. 40.

⁴ R. v. Light, 27 L. J. M. C. 1.

⁵ Stocken v. Carter, 4 C. & P. 477.

⁶ R. v. Birnie, 1 M. & Rob. 160.

⁷ R. v. Stobbs, 3 T. R. 735.

⁸ Harrison v. Hodgson, 10 B. & C. 445. Therefore, had the defendant demurred, he would probably have been in no better position. And note, that son assault demesne, or an arrest upon process, may reman he wants.¹ Then, with reference to magistrates, upon the hearing of a summary case, the matter is judicial, and, as long as a person conducts himself properly, it is an assault to turn him out of the room.² On the other hand, when the investigation is preliminary, the magistrates may order any or all persons out of the room.³ So may the coroner.⁴ So, where the magistrates regulate the practice of their own courts, they may turn out a person who insists upon being heard as an advocate or attorney, for instance, if his presence be contrary to their rule.⁵

Proceedings.] The usual proceeding is by indictment, but the court will sometimes grant an information, as for a malicious impressment;⁶ and it will be granted in very aggravated cases, even on the face of affidavits of denial on the other side.⁷ It was refused in a case of an assault with intent to extort money, the money not being obtained;⁸ and again, for a battery committed in Newfoundland;⁹ and again, for forcibly retaking a wife contrary to articles.¹⁰

Trial.] Upon the trial of an assault, as in other cases, the defendant must perform the terms of his recognizance. So that, where he was to appear, enter, and try his traverse, although he might have withdrawn his plea of not guilty, and have pleaded guilty, or might have given the prosecutor ten days' notice of his intention to try, he could not otherwise claim to try his traverse at the gaol delivery, unless he entered his traverse. Where he neglected to take this step, it was held, that he ought not to have been tried.¹¹

It was formerly received for law, that a party might indict for an assault and proceed to judgment, although an action were depending at the same time for the assault.¹² For the fine to the king and the damages to the party are quite distinct in their nature.¹³ And accordingly the Court of Common Pleas refused to make a rule upon the prosecutor under such circumstances to put him to his election, saying, they must then make a general rule, that the parties must always make their election.¹⁴ spectively be given in evidence under the general issue. Wilson v. Dod, 1 Ro. Rep. 135. Lane v. Hegberg, Bull. N. P. 9.

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 2.

² Daubney v. Cooper, 10 B. & C. 237.

³ Cox v. Coleridge, 1 B. & C. 37.

⁴ Garnett v. Ferrand, 6 B. & C. 611.

⁵ Collier v. Hicks, 2 B. & Adol. 663.

⁶ R. v. Webb, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 19.

⁷ Anon. 2 Barnard 27. See also Anon. Id. 138. Assault on a farmer by a magistrate, and information granted. See R. v. Lynn, Id. 242.

⁸ Anon. 2 Barnard, 87.

⁹ R. v. Hooker, 7 Mod. 193; see also R. v. Sir C. Holloway, 8 Mod. 283, a rule to show cause granted against a boy of fifteen, for assaulting his master.

¹⁰ R. v. Lord Vane, Sir Wm. Bl. 18.

¹¹ R. v. Fry, 1 Leach, 111. See also R. v. Featherstonhaugh, 8 C. & P. 109. But traverse is abolished.

¹² 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 4.

¹³ 1 B. & P. 191.

¹⁴ Jones v. Clay, Id.

But the law upon this subject appears to have undergone some revision. For in a far more modern case, although no determination was come to as to the matter of election, the Court of King's Bench refused to pass any judgment upon a defendant who was brought up after a conviction for an assault, because it appeared that an action was still depending in respect of the same matter. And the offer of the prosecutor to discontinue the action did not alter the resolution of the court. The defendant, however, having indulged in violent language towards the prosecutor in addressing the court, was ordered to find security for his good behaviour.¹

So again, where the prosecutor had taken out a warrant against the defendant for an assault, the court would not grant him a criminal information, although he was ready to agree that the abandonment of the proceedings on the warrant should form part of the rule.² But where the defendant admitted the assault in the presence of a policeman, who thereupon took him into custody, the court granted an information, although the prosecutor declined to press the charge before the magistrate.³

A person may be charged in the same indictment with two assaults, although each assault is, in itself, a distinct offence. Such, at least, was the opinion of the court upon an indictment for publishing two distinct libels upon different persons, and the case of R. v. Clendon,⁴ where judgment upon a conviction for assaulting two persons was arrested, was denied to be law.⁵ And it is no objection to the finding of a grand jury, that they have rejected that portion of a bill which related to a riot, and found the residue which charged an assault.⁶ So, where there are two counts, evidence of two distinct assaults was admitted.⁷

It sometimes happens that there are cross indictments in respect of the same transaction. When they come on to be tried as traverses, the judge will direct the jury to be sworn in both, and the counsel for the prosecution of that which is first entered will open his case, and call his witnesses. The counsel on the other side will then do the same, and there will not be any reply by either counsel.⁸

The words, "against the form of the statute," in an indictment for an assault at common law, have been held to be mere surplusage.⁹

Verdict.] A verdict of guilty comprehends, of course, both assault and battery, if both be laid. But should the assault be ill laid, and the verdict pass against the defendant for battery, he will have been properly convicted of both, because every battery includes an assault.¹⁰

¹ R. v. O'Gorman Mahon, 4 Ad. & El. 575.

² Ex parte — Gent. one, &c., 4 Ad. & El. 576.

³ R. v. Gwilt, 8 D. P. C. 476.

⁴ 2 Str. 870; Ld. Raym. 1572; 1 Barnard. 337.

⁵ 2 Burr. 984; Lofft. 271.

⁶ R. v. Fieldhouse, Cowp. 325.

⁷ R. v. Davies, 5 Cox, 328.

⁸ R. v. Wanklyn, 8 C. & P. 290. R. v. Vaughan, Id.

⁹ R. v. Mathews, Leach, 585.

¹⁰ See post, R. v. Powell, 2 B. & Adol. 75; 1 Hawk. c. 62, s. 1.

There were two counts, one for inflicting grievous bodily harm, the other for a common assault. The verdict was, "Guilty of an aggravated assault, but without premeditation." The verdict was entered upon the count for inflicting grievous bodily harm, and the judges held this course to have been right.¹ However, upon an indictment for assaulting and inflicting grievous bodily harm, the verdict "Guilty of a common assault" was sustained.²

Judgment.] The judgment for an assault at common law is fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court, and surety of the peace may likewise be a part of the sentence,³ although the defendant is occasionally allowed, by a sort of extrajudicial permission, to speak with the prosecutor, and thus obtain a mitigation of the fine.⁴

Aggravated assaults.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 43, when any person shall be charged before two justices with an assault or battery upon any male child whose age shall not in the opinion of such justices exceed fourteen years, or upon any female, either upon the complaint of the party aggrieved or otherwise, the said justices, if the assault or battery is of such an aggravated nature that it cannot in their opinion be sufficiently punished under the provisions hereinbefore contained as to common assaults and batteries, may proceed to hear and determine the same in a summary way, and, if the same be proved, may convict the person accused; and every such offender shall be liable to be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction, with or without hard labour, for any period not exceeding six months, or to pay a fine not exceeding (together with costs) the sum of 20*l.*, and in default of payment to be imprisoned in the common gaol or house of correction for any period not exceeding six months, unless such fine and costs be sooner paid, and, if the justices shall so think fit, in any of the said cases, shall be bound to keep the peace and be of good behaviour for any period not exceeding six months from the expiration of such sentence.

But it is provided by sect. 46, that in case the justices shall find the assault or battery complained of to have been accompanied by any attempt to commit felony, or shall be of opinion that the same is, from any other circumstance, a fit subject for a prosecution by indictment, they shall abstain from any adjudication thereupon, and shall deal with the case in all respects in the same manner as if they had no authority finally to hear and determine the same: provided also, that nothing herein contained shall authorize any justices to hear and determine any case of assault or battery in which any question shall arise as to the title to any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any interest therein or accruing therefrom, or as to any bankruptcy or insolvency, or any execution under the process of any court of justice.

¹ R. v. Sparrow, Bell, 398.

² R. v. Oliver, Bell, 287.

³ East, P. C. 406.

⁴ See 1 Russ. C. & M. 760.

Assault—Certificate.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 44, if the justices, upon the hearing of any such case of assault or battery upon the merits, where the complaint was preferred by or on the behalf of the party aggrieved, under either of the last two preceding sections, shall deem the offence not to be proved, or shall find the assault or battery to have been justified, or so trifling as not to merit any punishment, and shall accordingly dismiss the complaint, they shall forthwith make out a certificate under their hands stating the fact of such dismissal, and shall deliver such certificate to the party against whom the complaint was preferred.

And by sect. 45, if any person, against whom any such complaint as in either of the last three preceding sections mentioned shall have been preferred by or on the behalf of the party aggrieved, shall have obtained such certificate, or, having been convicted, shall have paid the whole amount adjudged to be paid, or shall have suffered the imprisonment or imprisonment with hard labour awarded, in every such case he shall be released from all further or other proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same cause.

Upon application, the justices are bound to grant the certificate, although neither party be present. The word "forthwith" is satisfied by a day or two afterwards;¹ even some days afterwards will not exclude the certificate, but it must be asked for.² "Forthwith" may mean that the justice cannot grant it when the matter has passed out of his mind, and the case of R. v. Robinson can only be supported in that view.³

For there the case was heard on the 29th of November, but the appeal was not granted till the 29th of January: it was held that the word "forthwith" was not satisfied.⁴

Moreover, it was held on special demurrer, that a plea of certificate was bad for want of showing that the dismissal of the complaint accrued under one of the grounds mentioned by 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 27,⁵ and by Lord Denman, "it ought to show the ground upon which it is given."⁶

As to what is a "hearing," upon one occasion the plaintiff retired, but the defendant attended. This was a "hearing."⁷

The words "upon the hearing," are satisfied if the defendant pleads not guilty. Therefore, although the complainant declined to proceed, saying he should bring an action, the certificate of the justices dismissing the case was held to be an absolute bar to such action. The defence in question was pleaded in answer to the count in trespass.⁸

¹ Hancock v. Sones, 28 L. J. M. C. 196; 8 Cox, 172.

² Coster v. Hetherington, Id. 175.

³ See Chaplin v. Levy, 23 L. J. Ex. 200.

⁴ R. v. Robinson, 12 Ad. & El. 672.

⁵ 10 Ad. & El. 635. Skuse v. Davis.

⁶ 10 Ad. & El. 639

⁷ Bradshaw v. Vaughton, 30 L. J. C. P. 93.

⁸ Tunncliffe v. Tedd, 5 C. B. 553. See R. v. Ebrington, 31 L. J. M. C. 14, and ante, plea of "autrefois convict."

Assault occasioning bodily harm and common assault.] Lastly, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 47, whosoever shall be convicted upon an indictment of any assault occasioning actual bodily harm shall be liable to penal servitude for three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and whosoever shall be convicted upon an indictment for a common assault shall be liable to imprisonment, not exceeding one year, with or without hard labour.¹

This is a very sensible provision, calculated to punish many enormities which have hitherto escaped their due punishment, and the sentence for the common assault is where the justices do not think fit to adjudicate, or where an indictment is at once preferred before the grand jury.

And, in conclusion, we may observe, that false imprisonment at sea is an assault. As where a vessel was engaged by the Chilian government to convey certain prisoners, who had been banished, from Chili to England. As long as the vessel was in Chilian waters the detaining was lawful, but when the defendant, who was the master of an English vessel, sailed out of the Chilian territory, an assault and false imprisonment attached.²

CHAPTER IX.

OF RAPE, ABDUCTION, AND DEFILEMENT OF WOMEN.

Rape, &c.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 48, Whosoever shall be convicted of the crime of rape shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour. And by sect. 49, Whosoever shall, by false pretences, false representations, or other fraudulent means, procure any woman or girl under the age of twenty-one years to have illicit carnal connection with any man, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Rape is where one of competent age and mind³ has the carnal knowledge of a woman by force, and against her will. It is said, of competent age, because a boy of fourteen has been held incapable by law of committing this crime.⁴ And the presumption of law to that effect was not altered by the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 31,

¹ See Sect. 20.

² R. v. Lesley, Bell, 220. Conviction affirmed.

³ If the prisoner's counsel or friends mean to rely on weakness of intellect, great caution must be used. Such a defence is most suspicious. Even the clerk to the magistrates should put down any questions and answers relating to this circumstance at the examination. See R. v. Painter, 2 Cox, C. C. 244; 2 Car. & K. 319.

⁴ R. v. Eldershaw, 3 C. & P. 396.

which, by the 16th section, declared the offence to be felony.¹ Nor can evidence be adduced to show the capacity of the prisoner in this respect, he being under fourteen years of age.² But the boy might have been convicted of an assault under the repealed section (sect. 11) of 1 Vict. c. 85.³

It may be observed, that an idiot, utterly unconscious at the time of the offence, is not the less the subject of rape, for although there may be no force, it is an act done without consent, and the power of or capacity to give consent should be left to the jury.⁴

The chief subjects for our consideration seem to be,—

1. The carnal knowledge.
2. The resistance of the woman, and under what circumstances.
3. The evidence.

First, as to the nature of the carnal knowledge.⁵ It is enacted, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 63, that whenever, upon the trial for any offence punishable under this Act, it may be necessary to prove carnal knowledge, it shall not be necessary to prove the actual emission of seed in order to constitute a carnal knowledge, but the carnal knowledge shall be deemed complete upon proof of penetration only.

Before this enactment, there had been much discussion whether both penetration and emission must have united in order to consummate the crime of rape. At one time the authorities and decisions were strongly against the necessity of their union, and old text-writers were by no means wanting who advocated the same doctrine. Moreover, executions took place in conformity with that principle, till at length it came to be doubted whether there could be a carnal knowledge without emission. And upon a case reserved, a majority of the judges, in 1787, were of opinion that both penetration and emission were necessary. Still it was agreed that the jury should be the sole judges of the transaction, and, accordingly, if they decided that the double act had happened, although, no doubt, evidence of emission was given, the judges considered that the finding of the jury on that point must be deemed conclusive.⁶ And hence, probably, it was, that Taunton,

¹ R. v. Groombridge, 7 C. & P. 582. Duffin, East, P. C. 437, [sodomy], the judges were divided. R. v. Cave, Id. 438, Willes, C. J., directed an acquittal. [Rape.] R. v. Hill, Id. 439, seven judges against three. Absent, Perryn, B. Lord Mansfield gave no opinion. R. v. Parker, 1 Russ. C. M. 681. Contra, and agreeable to the present law, see East, P. C. 438. Case at O. B., Foster, J. R. v. Blomfield, Id. 16. Clive, J. R. v. Sheridan, Id. Bathurst, J., and Smythe, B., concurred. R. v. Russen, Id. [Assault on a child.] Ashhurst, J. There being doubts on this case, it was considered by the judges, and

² R. v. Philips, 8 C. & P. 736. See R. v. Jordan, 9 C. & P. 118, post, p. 832.

³ R. v. Brimlow, 2 Moo. C. C. 122; 9 C. & P. 366.

⁴ R. v. Ryan, 2 Cox, 115. Verdict "Guilty." R. v. Fletcher, Bell, 63; 8 Cox, 131, where the matter was fully argued, and Willes, J., said he had ruled the same at the Old Bailey.

⁵ See R. v. Nicholls, 2 Cox, 182.

⁶ For the opinion of the text writers, see East, P. C. 437. In favour of the old opinion, see R. v.

J., formed an incorrect opinion when he held, that notwithstanding 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, the jury ought to be satisfied that both the events above alluded to had happened.¹ The learned judge probably thought that to leave the question for the consideration of the jury, in spite of the absence of direct evidence of emission, was a sufficient advance when contrasted with the judicial decisions which required both acts to be sworn to. So Park, J., stated in a case where the prisoner was interrupted, but did not immediately desist, that he could not consider penetration alone to be sufficient under the new statute.² But Alderson, J., held that penetration being proved, the jury might infer emission, and that it lay on the prisoner to negative the latter fact.³ And previously to this Hullock, B., had held penetration sufficient.⁴ This latter holding is now the law of the land, as the statute 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, intended it to be. Indeed, the judges came at length to a resolution that although the jury had negatived emission, the conviction was right, penetration having been proved.⁵ Even when the hymen has not been ruptured by the penetration, the case is complete, although this conclusion was not arrived at at once. For Gurney, B., upon one occasion held, that the offence had not been committed under such circumstances.⁶ Bosanquet, J., subsequently propounded the contrary of this doctrine, adding, however, that where the accesses to the hymen had not been broken, there was not sufficient to sustain the more serious charge.⁷ The same law prevailed in a case of abusing a female child.⁸ And it was also held, that the prisoner's being disturbed in the act made no difference, provided there were proof of penetration.⁹ So, again, Cox's case was relied on by the judges, in a case where the woman herself negatived emission.¹⁰ In the next case, the prisoner was charged with a rape upon a girl between eleven and twelve years old. The hymen had not been ruptured, but the surgeon expressed his opinion that penetration had taken place, and this fact was found specially, accompanied by a verdict of guilty. But Coleridge, J., who had tried the case, asked whether the matter could be argued, adding, that he the direction of the judge was held right, namely, that if penetration were proved, the rape was complete. The prisoner was executed. Absent: De Grey, C. J., Eyre, B. That the opinion of the jury should be the governing principle upon these occasions, see R. v. Sheridan, East, P. C. 440. R. v. Fleming and another, Leach, 854; East, P. C. 440. R. v. Harwood, East, P. C. 440. R. v. Burrows, Russ. & Ry. 519; 1 Lew. C. C. 288, where the prisoner was interrupted.

¹ R. v. Russell, 1 M. & Rob. 122.

² R. v. Baldwin, 1 Russ. C. M. 683.

³ R. v. Coulthart, 1 Lew. C. C. 94, Carlisle Sp. Assizes, 1832.

⁴ R. v. Jennings, 1 Lew. C. C. 93 and 290. The prisoner was executed. R. v. Cozins, 6 C. & P. 351. [Bestiality.]

⁵ R. v. Cox, 1 Moo. C. C. 337; 5 C. & P. 297. [Abusing a child.]

⁶ R. v. Gammon, 5 C. & P. 321.

⁷ R. v. M'Rue, 8 C. & P. 641. Verdict, guilty of an assault.

⁸ R. v. Jordan, 9 C. & P. 118.

⁹ R. v. Allen, Id. 31.

¹⁰ R. v. Brook, 2 Lew. C. C. 267, Patteson, J.

had reserved it out of respect to a reported doctrine of Mr. Baron Gurney,¹ which that learned judge had withdrawn. And *Russen's case*² was referred to as having settled the point. The conviction was then affirmed, the prisoner's counsel having withdrawn from the argument, after so strong an expression of opinion.³ However, it must, on the other hand, be observed, that emission was never deemed to be conclusive evidence of penetration, and indeed it may be doubted how far it could have been esteemed even prima facie evidence of that act.⁴

Secondly, we have to consider the resistance of the woman. This is so necessary, that eight judges against four resolved, upon one occasion, that, where a man personated a woman's husband, and was not detected till he was in the act of copulation, he was not guilty of rape,⁵ because the beguiling her into consent and co-operation was very different from raising the natural abhorrence consequent upon violence.⁶ This was an indictment for burglary, with intent to commit a rape. But several of the eight judges advised a special verdict should such a case again occur, and it did occur in 1854, and this advice as to the special verdict was insisted on, but the judges of criminal appeal said, that they could not get over the decision in R. v. Jackson.⁷ And Gurney, B., expressly held, before this case in 1854, that such a fraud did not amount to rape, and the prisoner was found guilty of an assault under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11.⁸ And Alderson, B., held the same upon another trial.⁹ So, where under pretence of performing a medical operation, the prisoner got possession of the person of the woman by surprise, and penetrated her person, but she discovered the fraud, and escaped out of the room, it was held, that, although this would have been rape had violence been committed, yet, that under these circumstances, it was merely an assault, and not even an assault with intent to commit a rape.¹⁰

On the other hand, the law will respect female delicacy, and, although proof of resistance or otherwise is, of course, a strong feature in each case, resistance is not universally necessary in order to constitute the offence. As, where the prisoner stupefied a child of thirteen by liquor, and then violated her. Here, he had by constructive force annihilated the power of resistance, and put the will of the woman out of the question. It was as though

¹ R. v. Gammon is alluded to, ante.

² Ante. p. 831.

³ R. v. Hughes, 2 Moo. C. C. 190; 9 C. & P. 752. R. v. Lines, 1 Car. & K. 393. [Abuse of a child.]

⁴ See 1 Russ. C. M. 686.

⁵ R. v. Jackson, Russ. & R. 487.

⁶ Per Dallas, C. J.

⁷ R. v. Clarke, 24 L. J. M. C. 25, Dears. S. P. in Scotland, R. v. Sweeney, 8 Cox, 223. The majority of the judges held that either actual or constructive force was necessary. The Lord President Macneill and Lord Ivory diss. They said, that the force essential to the crime should be relative to the resistance offered. Where there is no resistance to be overcome, it is not necessary to prove the use of force.

⁸ Now repealed. R. v. Saunders, 8 C. & P. 265.

⁹ R. v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 286.

¹⁰ R. v. Stanton, 1 Car. & K. 415. See also R. v. Case, 19 L. J. M. C. 174; Den. 580. Semble to the same effect.

he had knocked her down, and effected his purpose. The conviction was held right by ten judges against three.¹ But it should be remarked, that the jury found the administering of the liquor to have been given for the purpose of exciting the child, and not to make her insensible. So again, where actual resistance would be dangerous and almost impossible, as, where several persons combined together forcibly to violate a female, the question of resistance scarcely occurs. Still, if the jury should be of opinion, that, although in the first instance, the prosecutrix was laid hold of against her will, yet, that she afterwards, in some degree, consented to the act, they ought to acquit of the capital, or more serious charge, and convict of the assault only.² So, where the prisoner took advantage of an idiot, his conviction was affirmed, although she made no resistance, but only complained that he hurt her, and started to try to run away.³ Nor can a prostitute be forced, not even if the prostitute were first taken with her own consent, nor a concubine.⁴ And ultimate consent, extorted by fear of death, or duress, affords no mitigation of the offence.⁵ However, circumstances may be presented to the jury in favour of the woman's consent, as that she concealed the fact for a considerable time from persons who could have protected and avenged her, that she made no cry, nor much personal opposition at the time.⁶

Thirdly, as to the evidence upon indictments for rape, it is of so much importance, that we will mention it under a separate head. First, with reference to the parties who may give testimony, —the common rule of rejecting the wife's evidence against her husband is dispensed with by reason of necessity.⁷ The charge must be substantiated upon the oath of a witness who understands the nature of the obligation, but in the case of an adult, the trial cannot be postponed for the purpose of instructing the witness, as it may in the case of an infant.⁸ And, on the other hand, the judge would not postpone the trial in a case of a child six years old, in order that she might be instructed, although he said he would have done so had she been of more mature intellect, i. e., ten or twelve years of age.⁹ Five persons were charged with this offence. The prosecutrix, when before the grand jury, did not know the names of the different prisoners, but she was able to identify their persons. Here, Tindal, C. J., held, that the grand jury were justified in calling before them a witness who had seen the prisoners when under examination by the magistrate, and who gave their names as the prosecutrix described them; and the learned chief justice added, that if the prisoners could not be thus identified, they might themselves be brought before the grand jury.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Camplin, Den. 89; 1 Car. & K. 746.

² R. v. Hallett, 9 C. & P. 748.

³ R. v. Fletcher, 28 L. J. M. C. 85. [Bell, 63.

⁴ East, P. C. 444; and see R. v. Hodgson, Russ. & Ry. 211.

⁵ East, P. C. 444.

⁶ East, P. C. 445.

⁷ Id. 444.

⁸ Ante.

⁹ R. v. Nicholas, 2 Car. & K. 246.

¹⁰ R. v. Jenkins, 1 Car. & K. 536.

The prosecutrix stated in her evidence that she had made an immediate complaint to her mistress, but the mistress and a washerwoman were attending as witnesses for the prisoners, the washerwoman being able to testify to a fact connected with the offence. Upon this, the judge ordered that both should be called as witnesses for the prosecution, and that every latitude should be allowed to the counsel for the prosecution in examining them. Neither the names of the mistress nor of the washerwoman were on the back of the indictment.¹

Much care and vigilance are necessary in conducting the cross-examination of the prosecutrix. The following questions have been permitted:—"Were you not, on Friday last, walking with a woman reputed to be a common prostitute?"² "Had you connection on — with T. D. or with any other men."³ However, in another case, the learned judge, although he admitted the question, distinctly told the prosecutrix, that she might or might not answer the question; and this alternative reconciles the following decision, where similar questions were rejected by the judges upon a case reserved, but on the ground that the woman was not compellable to answer. It was there held incompetent to ask, whether the witness had not before had connection with other persons, and, whether she had not before had connection with a particular person,—naming him. In the same case, after Wood, B., had decided that the woman was not under an obligation to answer, the counsel for the prisoner called a witness to show that the girl had been caught in bed about a year before this charge with a young man, and offered the young man to prove the connection, but Wood, B., refused the evidence, as it was a specific act of criminality, and one which the other side could not be prepared to answer, and the judges held this ruling to be correct.⁴ Nevertheless, if the woman denies the fact of connection with other persons, those persons may be called to contradict her.⁵ And she may be asked whether the prisoner had not, previously to the charge, had connection with her, with her consent.⁶ And, upon her denial, the prisoner may show such a connection.⁷ Or, whether she had not allowed another man than the prisoner to take liberties with her between the commission of the alleged offence and her complaint of it.⁸ But where the prosecutrix, upon a trial for rape, accounted upon her cross-

¹ R. v. Stroner, 1 Car. & K. 650.

² R. v. Barker, 3 C. & P. 589, by Park and Parke, J.

³ R. v. Goldney, M. S. Hants Lent assizes, 1830, per Bosanquet, J.

⁴ R. v. Hodgson, Russ. & Ry. 211.

⁵ R. v. Robins, 2 Moo. & Rob. 512.

⁶ R. v. Martin, 6 C. & P. 562. In this case Williams, J., observed that he could not understand the case of R. v. Hodgson. Moreover, something said by a relative of the prosecutrix to a relative of the prisoner, in the presence of the prosecutrix "about making it up," was admitted. R. v. Arnall, 8 Cox, 439.

⁷ R. v. Aspinall, 3 Stark. on Ev. 952.

⁸ R. v. Mercer, 6 Jur. 243.

examination for the money supposed to have been given to her, the prisoner's counsel was allowed to contradict that fact.¹

It appeared upon one occasion, that the prosecutrix had been examined before the mayor of a borough. Her answers were taken down, but the prisoner was discharged, and the answers were neither read over to her, nor signed by her, nor, indeed, by the mayor. The man was, however, taken before the magistrates, who committed him. Upon the trial it was held that the counsel for the prisoner might cross-examine the woman as to what she said before the mayor, without having the examination taken before the mayor produced.²

Evidence of loose character generally may be given to affect the credit of the witness,³ and she, on the other hand, may resort to general evidence in opposition to admissions elicited from her in cross-examination, and, à fortiori, to contradict testimony which the judge has admitted against her of a general nature. Thus, where the prosecutrix had allowed herself to have been guilty of crimes committed years since, Holroyd, J., suffered her to show that she had conducted herself with propriety during the interval which had elapsed between that time and the outrage complained of.⁴

The next point of evidence is, the confirmation of the woman's story. This confirmation is much aided by proof of her having called for help, or having related her misfortune as soon as possible to her relations or friends. Still the particulars of her complaint cannot be given in evidence, although they may be so stated if she should be cross-examined as to the fact of her complaint.⁵ The witness cannot be asked more than that the prosecutrix made such a complaint, and that the nature of the complaint related to the violence done her.⁶ The prosecutrix herself may be asked whether she named "a person," but not what person. The name must not be mentioned.⁷ Not even where the woman, who was the object of the violence, was dead at the time of the trial,⁸ could the names be disclosed, which she mentioned at the time of her complaint of the rape. Neither the names nor the particulars of her statement were allowed in evidence.⁹

It appeared upon one occasion that the prosecutrix had been kept out of the way by the prisoners. The judge, upon this, offered to permit her deposition to be read in evidence, but as it was not proved, he would not suffer evidence of her complaint recently

¹ R. v. Dean, 6 Cox, C. C. 23. And care must be taken to distinguish these direct issues from collateral issues where witnesses cannot be called on one side or on the other; See Tilman v. Johnstone, 2 Fost. & F. 66.

² R. v. Griffiths, 9 C. & P. 746.

³ R. v. Clarke, 2 Stark. 241. R. v. Tissington, 1 Cox, 48.

⁴ S. C.

⁵ R. v. Walker, 2 Moo. & Rob. 212.

⁶ R. v. Mercer, 6 Jur. 243.

⁷ R. v. Osborne, Car. & M. 622.

⁸ If the death occurs through the violence, query? whether it would be murder? See R. v. Lad, Leach, 96; East, P. C. 226, 343.

⁹ R. v. Megson, 9 C. & P. 420. R. v. Nicholas, 2 Car. & K. 246.

after the transaction to be given, because that evidence is only legitimate when the prosecutrix herself has been examined. It is admitted only as confirmatory evidence.¹

Principals and accessories in rape.] Where three were indicted for a rape, and all were charged in the first degree, although each one by himself did not perpetrate the act, the judges thought the conviction right, although they recommended that a similar form should, for the future, be avoided.² Principals, therefore, in the second degree, should be charged as being present, aiding and abetting, and so independently of the principal in the first degree.³ A woman may be charged as a principal in the second degree, and so may a husband, for she is not to be prostituted by him to another.⁴

The relations of principals in the first and second degree were much considered in another case. The first count charged Robert Folkes with an actual rape upon the prosecutrix, and Levy Ludds with having been present, aiding and abetting the same. Other counts charged Ludds with being the actor and Folkes with aiding and abetting; other counts charged a certain evil-disposed person with being the principal, and Folkes and Ludds the aiders and abettors; other counts charged a certain other evil-disposed person with being the principal and the others with abetting. Ludds was acquitted upon an alibi, and Folkes was found guilty generally. The facts proved were, that the prisoner Folkes, together with three other men, committed successive rapes upon the prosecutrix, and that the others aided and abetted in turn. No specific provision was made by the statute, 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, as to principals in the second degree,—and the question was, whether upon this indictment the verdict could be sustained against Folkes, who was charged in the first count as a principal, and in the second as an aider and abettor. The judges⁵ met, and considered the point, and they held the conviction good on the first count.⁶

Accessories before the fact are punishable under 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 67.

An indictment charged A. with the principal offence, and B. as principal in the second degree, i. e., aiding and abetting in the commission of the felony. In this case the indictment was held good, and it was also held that B. might be charged either as a principal in the first degree, as he was in law, and a principal in the second degree, as he was in fact.⁷

¹ R. v. Gutteridge, 9 C. & P. 471.

² R. v. Burgess and others, 1 Russ. C. M., 687; 5 Evans, stat. 399. Semble.

³ See R. v. Vide, Fitz Corone, pl. 86. R. v. Lord Baltimore, 4 Burr. 2179.

⁴ R. v. Lord Castlehaven, 1 St. Tr. 387; 1 Russ. C. M. 676.

⁵ Absent; Lord Lyndhurst, C. B.; Bayley, B.; Alderson, J.; and Patteson, J.

⁶ R. v. Folkes and Ludds, 1 Moo. C. C. 354. See in general upon the subject of rape, East, 433, 449; 1 Russ. C. M. 675-693; 1 Hawk. c. 41.

⁷ R. v. Crisham, Car. & M. 187.

Indictment.] The indictment charges, that A., on, &c., in and upon one B., violently and feloniously did make an assault, and her the said B. violently and against her will feloniously did ravish and carnally know, against the form, &c.

It is prudent to use all these words, although the word "ravish" may possibly include the carnal knowledge.¹ The words "an assault" were, upon one occasion, accidentally omitted, so that the charge stood "feloniously and violently did make;" "and her," &c. It was held, nevertheless, that the conviction was right, an assault being included in rape, and that the judgment should not be arrested.²

Where carnaliter cognovit was left out, six judges held that, after verdict, the case was within 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, but that the omission before verdict, if objected to, would be fatal.³

Verdict.] In rape the verdict is guilty or not guilty, for the felony and misdemeanor are not capable of joinder. The prisoner, if acquitted, may be tried for the assault⁴ at common law, and the accessory after the fact may be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years. Instead of committing the prisoner for trial, the magistrates convicted for an aggravated assault under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 30, the information being for assaulting and abusing, though the evidence disclosed a rape. The Court of Exchequer was equally divided, so that the rule for a habeas corpus was discharged, and the conviction stood.⁵

Indictment under sect. 49.] That A., on, &c. [by false pretences, &c., set out the fraud] did procure one B. to have illicit carnal connection with one C., she the said B. at the time of the said procurement being a [woman or child] under the age of twenty-one years. Whereas, [negative the truth of the pretence, &c.]

Against the form of the statute, &c.

Carnal knowledge of a girl under ten years of age.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 50, whosoever shall unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any girl under the age of ten years shall be guilty of felony, and being convicted thereof shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life or for any term not less than three years,—or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

In this case consent is immaterial, as far as the more serious charge is concerned, it being a felonious act to violate the child,

¹ See East. P. C. 447.

² R. v. Allen, 2 Moo. C. C. 179; 9 C. & P. 521.

³ 3 Burn. on Just., by D'Oyly & W. 725.

⁴ As to the assault under 1 Vict. 585, see R. v. Holcroft, 2 Car. & K. 341. R. v. Brimilow, ante, p. 831. R. v. Finchard, 1 Russ.

C. M. 692. Anon. 2 Moo. C. C. 40. R. v. Saunders, 8 C. & P.

265. R. v. Williams, Id. 286.

⁵ In re Thompson, 30 L. J. M. C.

19. Re Thompson, 6 Jur. (N. S.), 1247.

with or without her concurrence.¹ Penetration is sufficient without emission, in like manner as in rape. If any part of the virile member of the prisoner should be found to have entered the labia of the pudenda, this is a penetration.² And the hymen need not be ruptured.³

Again, in like manner as in rape, a boy under fourteen years of age cannot be convicted of this crime, although it should be proved that he had arrived at the age of puberty.⁴

The child must be examined upon oath, but provided that she be acquainted with the nature of that obligation, her age, with regard to the oath, is immaterial.⁵ Even then the trial may be postponed in order that instruction may be given to her for the next assizes,⁶ unless, indeed, the child should be but six years old, in which case Pollock, C. B., declined to allow it, but said that if the age had been ten or twelve, and the intellect more matured, it might have been otherwise.⁷ Although this seems to have been laid down too broadly. For, although the judges would not formerly receive a witness under nine years of age,⁸ yet the rule is, that if a child appears to understand the nature of an oath, she may be examined, although she be under seven years of age.⁹ And Rooke, J., mentioned a case at the Old Bailey, (upon the trial of a prisoner for violating a child seven years of age,) which he had tried at Gloucester, where he had postponed the trial for the sake of instruction, and the prisoner was subsequently convicted and executed upon the child's testimony.¹⁰ Hence, it seems that an age under ten or twelve, though perhaps not so early as six, might be sufficient to warrant instruction, if the intellect of the infant should prove equal to it, whereas, at the age of six, the court will prefer the evidence of immaturity, rather than risk the loss of memory by postponing the inquiry for education.¹¹ But any account given by the child to others cannot be received.¹² And here the difference truly consists, in like manner, as we have seen, that the particulars of a statement in rape cannot be admitted. The fact of a complaint may be shown as confirmatory evidence, and it is better, if possible, that such a circumstance should appear, or that some concurrent fact in corroboration should be adduced.¹³ Although there may certainly be a conviction upon the child's unsupported statement, if there be no reasonable doubt of the prisoner's guilt.¹⁴

¹ R. v. Toon, 1 Lew. C. C. 15.

² R. v. Lines, 1 Car. & K. 393.

³ R. v. Jordan, 9 C. & P. 118.

⁴ S. C.

⁵ R. v. Powell, Leach, 110.
R. v. Flemming and another, Id. 854.

⁶ Anon., Id. 430, n. R. v. Baylis, 4 Cox, C. C. 23.

⁷ R. v. Nicholas, 2 Car. & K. 246.

⁸ East, P. C. 442, where the several cases are given.

⁹ R. v. Brazier, Leach, 199. See also R. v. Tucker, Phil. on Ev. 10.

¹⁰ R. v. Murphy, Leach, 430, n.

¹¹ R. v. Nicholas, 2 Cox, C. C. 136. Otherwise, if eight or nine years old. Verdict, Guilty.

¹² R. v. Brazier, Leach, 199.

¹³ East, P. C. 441.

¹⁴ Anon., 1 Russ. C. M. 695.

In the case above mentioned also, where the child of six years old was rejected as incompetent,¹ the chief baron would not allow evidence of what she said to her mother, and he likewise refused to permit the mother to prove that the child had named a particular person.²

The following evidence, as to the age of the child, was held insufficient upon an indictment for carnally abusing an infant on the 5th of February, 1832:—

1st. A declaration of the grandmother to the father, on the 9th of February, 1832, that on the day previous the child had been born. 2nd. An examined copy of the register of baptisms, by which it appeared that the child had been baptized on the same 9th day of February. The mother was dead.³

Indictment.] That A. on, &c. upon B., a girl under the age of ten years, to wit, of the age of — and upwards, feloniously did make an assault, and her the said B. did then unlawfully and feloniously carnally know and abuse, against the form, &c.

Where the prisoner was charged with assaulting a child, with intent carnally to know and abuse her, and the jury negatived the intent carnally to know, but found the intent to abuse, Holroyd, J., held the allegation divisible.⁴

Verdict.] It would seem that there has been some hesitation concerning the verdict of guilty of assault under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11.⁵ Consent is immaterial where the child is under ten, as far as the more serious charge is concerned, but if consent were really given, the charge of assault could not be sustained, and unless a charge of assault had been incorporated in the indictment, the judges were not more disposed to affirm a conviction for an assault under the repealed clause.⁶ Upon an indictment for an attempt to commit an offence of this nature, with a count for a common assault, it appeared that there had been an attempt, but it could not be proved that the child was under ten. No violence was used, and the girl made no actual resistance. The court held that consent would put an end to the charge of assault, but left it to the jury to say, whether the child had not yielded through fear, for

¹ R. v. Nicholas, supra.

² S. C.

³ R. v. Wedge, 5 C. & P. 298. See generally upon this subject, 1 Russ. C. M. 693–698; East, P. C. 441; 1 Hawk. c. 41.

⁴ R. v. Dawson, 3 Stark. N. P. C. 62. See R. v. Martin, 9 C. & P. 215; 2 Moo. C. C. 123. R. v. Read and others, 18 L. J. M. C. 88; Den. 377. Indictment for a common assault. The verdict was “Guilty, the child being a consenting party, but that from her tender years she did not know what she was about.” The court ordered a verdict of Not Guilty to be entered on the record.

⁵ This clause exists no longer: 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 10.

⁶ R. v. Holcroft, 2 Car. & K. 341. That in case of consent, a verdict of guilty of assault could not be received. R. v. Cockburn, 3 Cox, C. C. 543.

submission obtained through fear would not amount to consent in a child, although in the case of an adult it would go far to show it.¹ The verdict may be guilty of abusing, but not guilty of carnally knowing, and vice versa, for the allegations are divisible.² And, where consent was out of the question, the party might have been convicted of the assault and acquitted of the felony.³ Whilst, on the other hand, where there was no consent, a conviction for the assault could not be had, not even although it were stated in the indictment that the prisoner made an assault on the child.⁴ To prove the age of the child, evidence that the birthday was kept, and that discussions had taken place in favour of the age in the family, was held sufficient.⁵ But where the father was from home at the time of the birth, and the mother was dead, the grandmother, who knew the fact, might have been called.⁶

Carnal knowledge of a girl between ten and twelve years.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 51, whosoever shall unlawfully and carnally know and abuse any girl being above the age of ten years and under the age of twelve years, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and being convicted thereof, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for the term of three years, or to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Consent in this case is therefore immaterial, although, if the girl consent, there is no assault.⁷ The count must expressly allege that the child was between the age of ten and twelve. The first count which did mention the age was held, by Patteson, J., to be incapable of helping the second by means of the word "said."⁸ Where the age turned out to be under ten the prisoner was acquitted, for the offence was felony.⁹ It is, moreover, observable that if the indictment should contain both the charges of knowing and of abusing, an acquittal for the one will not necessarily prevent a conviction for the other.

A summons to the defendant is sufficient so as to ensure costs.

Proof of the case having been heard before the magistrates, must, however, be given, for the hearing must be before justices.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Day, 9 C. & P. 722.

² R. v. Dawson, ante, p. 840.

³ R. v. Folkes, 2 Moo. & Rob. 460. R. v. Read and others, 3 Cox, 266.

⁴ R. v. Banks, 8 C. & P. 574. R. v. Meredith, Id. 589.

⁵ R. v. Hayes, 2 Cox, C. C. 226.

⁶ R. v. Wedge, 5 C. & P. 298.

⁷ R. v. Martin, 9 C. & P. 213.

⁸ R. v. Martin, 9 C. & P. 215; 2 Moo. C. C. 123. R. v. Meredith, 8 C. & P. 589. See also R. v. Read and others, Den. 377; 18 L. J. M. C. 88; 2 Car. &

K. 957. "With respect to indictments under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 17, it was a very common practice to make an assault form part of the charge, and in cases where the girl was known to have consented. . . . It is a very foolish practice, and I have repeatedly desired it not to be done. . . . The statute makes the offence wholly independent of an assault." By Patteson, J., Den. C. C. 583.

⁹ R. v. Shott, 3 Car. & K. 206, under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 12.

¹⁰ R. v. M'Gavaran, 6 Cox, 64.

Indictment.] That A. on, &c., unlawfully did carnally know and abuse a certain girl named B., she the said B. then being above the age of ten years and under the age of twelve years, to wit, of the age of — years, against the form, &c.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 52, whosoever shall be convicted of any indecent assault upon any female, or of any attempt to have carnal knowledge of any girl under twelve years of age, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

Abduction of a woman against her will from motives of lucre.]

The forcible abduction of women was an offence at common law.¹ But the Act, 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, repealed the statutes of Henry 7, Philip & Mary,² and other Acts upon this subject.

And now by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 53, where any woman of any age shall have any interest, whether legal or equitable, present or future, absolute, conditional, or contingent, in any real or personal estate, or shall be a presumptive heiress or coheiress, or presumptive next of kin, or one of the presumptive next of kin, to any one having such interest, whosoever shall, from motives of lucre, take away or detain such woman against her will, with intent to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and whosoever shall be convicted of any offence against this section shall be incapable of taking any estate or interest, legal or equitable, in any real or personal property of such woman, or in which she shall have any such interest, or which shall come to her as such heiress, coheiress, or next of kin as aforesaid; and if any such marriage as aforesaid shall have taken place, such property shall, upon such conviction, be settled in such manner as the Court of Chancery in England or Ireland shall upon any information at the suit of the attorney-general appoint.

There are three points:—First, the estate required; second, the forcible carrying away from motives of lucre; third, the intent to marry or defile, whether the design be or not executed. First, it is necessary that the woman should have some substance of her own, or be heir presumptive, or next of kin, and, therefore, as far as this clause extends, if a man have ever so considerable a fortune, and his daughter does not come within the qualification above mentioned, she is not within the protection of the statute.³ Secondly, there must be a forcible taking or detainer. And here there is a manifest extension of the old law. For it was holden under the repealed statutes, that if a woman were taken from one county into another, and if she did then consent in the last county, the force ceasing before her consent there, the indictment could not be preferred in either, by reason of her consent.¹ Whereas now, the consent in another place and at another time would be evidence that the original taking had been felonious. But, if the force had not ceased when the woman came into the second county, it would then have been a continuing force, and the offence would have been complete. And, consequently, it was no defence, when the whole transaction took place in one county, for the prisoner to say that the woman consented afterwards, because he would then have been suffered to take advantage of his own wrong by triumphing over the weakness of the woman whom he had got by base means into his power.² Nor does it signify that the woman is so much confused as to be unconscious of what she was doing at the time of her marriage, for although such an union might not be, de jure, valid, it is a marriage de facto.³ Again, if the woman consent at first, she is at liberty to retract that consent, so that any subsequent force will bring the offender within the statute.⁴

¹ R. v. Moor, 2 Mod. 128. See 460. R. v. Wakefield, 2 Lew. C. C. East, P. C. 458.

² R. v. Lord Grey, East, P. C.

³ 12 Rep. 100. Lady Fullwood's case, Cro. Car. 485.

It has also been held, that when a girl was inveigled away by the prisoner's confederates, and the prisoner subsequently joined them, and perpetrated his offence, he was within the statute of 3 Hen. 7.⁵ And now the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, fully applies. For the intent to marry or defile, from motives of lucre, is the gist of the case according to the statute 9 Geo. 4. It is of no consequence that the marriage has not taken place, as under the old statutes. And if it be alleged that there has been no force, it is a question for the decision of the jury. They may consider whether the subsequent conduct of the prosecutrix could be said to warrant an opinion that she was not originally removed contrary to her inclinations.

Thirdly, the carrying away must be from motives of lucre, but evidence of an indirect character will be fit for the jury to consider whether the prisoner had not that intention. The prisoner said he had seen the will of one of the lady's relations, and that she would have 220*l.* a year. This was thought to be an important fact for the consideration of the jury.⁶

Witness.] After much discussion it seems now to be allowed that a woman or girl may be a witness under the statute, whether she gave her consent ultimately or not, and whether she has cohabited with the ravisher or not. A distinction was once attempted between actual marriage and consent obtained before the marriage, and a case of force before the voluntary union, but this doctrine seems to be exploded, upon the principle that no offender shall advantage himself of his own wrong.⁷ And further, it has

¹ R. v. Gordons, 1 Russ. C. M. 707.

² 1 Russ. C. M. 703.

³ R. v. Fullwood and others, Cro. Car. 488.

⁴ 1 Russ. C. M. 702.

⁵ R. v. Brown, 1 Ventr. 243.

⁶ R. v. Barratt, 9 C. & P. 387.

⁷ 4 Com. 209; East, P. C. 454, citing the cases of R. v. Fullwood, been ruled, after debate, that a woman may, under such a charge, be a witness for, as well as against her husband, ex necessitate rei, although she has cohabited with him from the day of the marriage.¹

Indictment.] The indictment states, that A. B., on, &c., in and upon one B., the said B. then having a certain interest [describe the interest, as the presumptive heiress of one C., &c.] did make an assault, and her the said B., so having such interest as aforesaid, feloniously and from motives of lucre did take away and detain against the will of the said B., with intent that he, the said A., for lucre as aforesaid, should marry and have the said B. to wife [or carnally know], against the form of the statute, &c.

The second count should omit the particular interest, and merely say "a certain interest," describing it as legal or equitable, as the case may be.

The marriage need not be averred nor proved as formerly, for the offence consists in the intent to marry or defile, combined with the force.

Trial.] The venue may be in any county where the force was used, or where it was continued.² This is one of those offences which, being punishable with transportation for life, cannot be tried by the justices at sessions nor by the recorders of boroughs.³

Verdict.] Before the repeal of the 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, the verdict in this case might have been "guilty of an assault." If the jury negatived the charge of taking away for the sake of lucre, and yet were satisfied that force was used towards the person of the lady, they might have convicted of the assault.⁴ But the clause was repealed by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 10.

Again, by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 53, whosoever shall fraudulently allure, take away, or detain such woman, being under the age of twenty-one years, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, with intent to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person, shall be guilty of felony, and punishable as in the case of lucre.⁵

By sect. 54, whosoever shall, by force, take away or detain against her will any woman, of any age, with intent to marry or carnally know her, or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal

Cro. Car. 488. R. v. Sweendsen, 5 St. Tr. 450. R. v. Swanson and others, 7 Mod. 100. R. v. Wakefield and others, 2 Lew. 1, 279.

¹ R. v. Perry, 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 13, cited by Abbott, C. J., Ry. & Moo. N. P. C. 354. See further upon this subject, 1 Russ. C. M. 701-712; East, P. C. 452-463; 1 Hawk. c. 41.

² 1 Hawk. c. 41, s. 11.

³ 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

⁴ R. v. Barratt, 9 C. & P. 387.

⁵ Ante, p. 842.

servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

And by sect. 55, whosoever shall unlawfully take or cause to be taken any unmarried girl, being under the age of sixteen, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

It has been held that the death of the parent does not invest the step-father or step-mother with authority to consent to the removal of the child. For it is ex jure naturæ that these respective parties derive their power over the infant, and that authority cannot be dissolved by the death of one, nor can it be delegated to a stranger.¹ It was also determined that a natural daughter could not be taken from the custody of her putative father, under these circumstances, without a violation of the law. The question was not whether the child were illegitimate or not, but whether she had been taken illegally from the custody and government of those who, by lawful ways and means, had the guardianship of her. The defendants were thereupon convicted, fined and imprisoned.² It has been said, that if the parent once agree to the removal, it becomes impossible for him to dissent afterwards;³ but whether this be a correct principle or not, it cannot be construed to extend to cases where a schoolmistress or other person is intrusted with the care of a child, so as to imply an assent on the part of the parent, from the mere circumstance of committing the girl to such custody. For the governance must still be deemed to reside in the parent.⁴

If a girl be taken away but for a short time, as for two hours, from her father's house, if the husband has induced her to leave her abode to be married, he is rightly convicted. She continued to live, as before, with her father, and the marriage was never consummated.⁵ So it was where the prisoner took away a girl, not with the view of keeping her permanently from home, but in order to gratify his passions. The absence was three days and nights, and the parting was by mutual consent. He was rightly convicted.⁶ But if no improper motive exists, although the actual taking away may be illegal, the prisoner will be acquitted.⁷ So it would be if the departure of the girl were entirely voluntary. But moral force is within the Act. There are,—1st, the unwillingness of the

¹ See 3 Rep. 39.

² R. v. Cornforth, 11 East, 451, n.; Str. 1162. R. v. Sweeting, East, 457.

³ See 3 Mod. 169.

⁴ See East, P. C. 457, and R. v. Pierson and others, Andr. 310.

⁵ R. v. Baillie, 8 Cox, 238.

⁶ R. v. Timmins, 30 L. J. M. C.

45; Bell, 276. R. v. Frazer, 8 Cox, 446.

⁷ R. v. Tinkler, 1 Fost. & F. 513. The jury were directed to acquit if they thought that he only wanted the child to live with him, and that he honestly believed, though without right, that he had a right to the custody of the child.

parent; 2nd, the taking; 3rd, the force actual or persuasive.¹ Hence enticement will be sufficient. It is true that where under pretence of getting a place for a girl with 5*l.* a year wages, the prisoner decoyed a girl who was returning from an errand, the case was held not to be abduction under 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 20.² But Parke, B., declared subsequently, that the marginal note of that case was not warranted by the facts as they appeared at the trial.³ And false representations made to the parents will justify a conviction under the statute.⁴ The possession of the father extends beyond his actual control. The daughter, under sixteen, left home, being enticed by the prisoner, and there was no proof that, but for his arts, she would not have returned. He was held rightly convicted of taking the girl out of possession. The consent was immaterial.⁵

The prisoner got a ladder and went in the night to a window, from whence the daughter of B., fifteen years of age (who lived with her father), descended, and went away with the prisoner. This was held to be a taking out of the father's possession. The prisoner's defence, that, from her appearance, he thought she was older, was not admitted, nor that the girl herself had proposed to the prisoner to bring the ladder and elope.⁶ On the other hand, if the parents have encouraged the girl in a lax course of life, the case is not within the statute.⁷

Moreover, it being admitted that, in the absence of any disqualifying cause, the father has a right to the custody of his child up to the age of sixteen, persons obstructing the return of a child to her parent are guilty of a misdemeanor.⁸

Indictment.] The indictment states, that A., on, &c., one B. then being an unmarried girl, under the age of sixteen years, out of the possession and against the will of one C., the father of the said B., did then unlawfully take, against the form, &c.

¹ R. v. Handley, 1 Fost. & F. 159. According to the ruling of Maule, J., in R. v. Kipps, 4 Cox, 648.

² R. v. Meadows, 1 Car. & K. 167. So was R. v. Frazer, 8 Cox, 399; Dears. 161, Mr. Baron 446.

³ 22 L. J. M. C. 116. ⁶ R. v. Robins, 1 Car. & K. 456. R. v. Biswell, 2 Cox, 279.

⁴ R. v. Hopkins, Car. & M. 254. ⁷ R. v. Primelt, 1 Fost. & F. 50. R. v. Frazer, 8 Cox, 446.

The child in this case was between ten and eleven. ⁸ R. v. Greenhill, 4 Ad. & El. 624; Ex parte Barford, 8 Cox, 405.

⁵ R. v. Manklatow or Manktelow, 22 L. J. M. C. 115; Dears.

CHAPTER X.

OF CHILD-STEALING.

Child-stealing.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 56, whosoever shall unlawfully, either by force or fraud, lead or take away, or decoy or entice away or detain, any child under the age of fourteen years, with intent to deprive any parent, guardian, or other person having the lawful care or charge of such child of the possession of such child, or with intent to steal any article upon or about the person of such child, to whomsoever such article may belong, and whosoever shall, with any such intent, receive or harbour any such child, knowing the same to have been, by force or fraud, led, taken, decoyed, enticed away, or detained as in this section before mentioned, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and, if a male under sixteen, with or without whipping. Provided that no person who shall have claimed any right to the possession of such child, or shall be the mother, or shall have claimed to be the father of an illegitimate child, shall be liable to be prosecuted by virtue hereof on account of the getting possession of such child, or taking such child out of the possession of any person having the lawful charge thereof.

Indictment.] That A., on, &c., feloniously and maliciously did [by force or fraud] lead and entice away one B., then under the age of ten years, to wit, of the age of — years, with intent [state the intention under the statute], against the form, &c.

The kidnapping of grown persons is no longer felony. The latter offence amounts, upon most occasions, to little more than an assault, but in less civilised times it was deemed necessary to punish offences of this character committed in the northern counties with death. And child-stealing, which at one time was almost dispunishable, unless, indeed, where the clothes were stolen, is now made the subject of greater severity than at common law.¹

¹ See East, P. C. 429. R. v. Lord Grey. Tho. Raym. 473.

CHAPTER XI.

OF BIGAMY.

Bigamy.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 57, whosoever, being married, shall marry any other person during the life of the former husband or wife, whether the second marriage shall have taken place in England or Ireland or elsewhere, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven nor less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and any such offence may be dealt with, &c. in any county or place in England or Ireland where the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, in the same manner in all respects as if the offence had been actually committed in that county or place: Provided that nothing in this section contained shall extend to any second marriage contracted elsewhere than in England and Ireland by any other than a subject of Her Majesty, or to any person marrying a second time whose husband or wife shall have been continually absent from such person for the space of seven years then last past, and shall not have been known by such person to be living within that time, or shall extend to any person who, at the time of such second marriage, shall have been divorced from the bond of the first marriage, or to any person whose former marriage shall have been declared void by the sentence of any court of competent jurisdiction.

Polygamy is said to consist in having a plurality of wives at the same time. The term “bigamy” is most frequently applied to this offence, although, in reality, it is said to mean marrying two virgins successively, one after the other, or once marrying a widow.

Bigamy, thus defined, was an offence by the ecclesiastical law, and not an uncommon counter plea to the claim of benefit of clergy. And, by misapplication, it has usurped the place of the more proper expression,—polygamy,—which is having more than one wife living at the same time. This latter offence is punishable by statute, and is the subject of the present section.

Three points are presented to the reader concerning this crime:—1st, the operation of the marriage acts, for it is plain that if there be no valid marriage, there can be no charge of polygamy in respect of that supposed marriage:—2ndly, the nature of the offence itself, for there are exceptions in the law, which, although they do not reject the marriage, yet exonerate the accused:—3rdly, the kind of evidence which is necessary in order to prove the case, and more especially with reference to the relation between husband and wife.

Marriage Acts.] Marriages solemnized according to the ritual of the Church of England may take place in churches or in chapels consecrated in conformity with the ceremonies prescribed by that church. They may be performed by virtue of banns published, by licence from a surrogate or other person in authority, or by special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Marriages under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, "An Act for Marriages in England," may be solemnized in a place of public worship, other than a church or chapel of the establishment, provided the building be duly registered. They may also be celebrated at the office of the registrar of marriages after due notice and certificate, in the presence of the superintendent registrar and some registrar of the district, and in the presence of two witnesses. The authority for the union, upon these latter occasions, is a notice and certificate (to which we shall presently advert), or a licence from the superintendent registrar, grounded, nevertheless, upon such notice and certificate.

Marriages may also be effected in a church under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, upon the production of the registrar's certificate, which cannot be had without the notice alluded to.¹

There are, therefore, under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, the notice and certificate, or the notice and certificate with the licence, when it is intended to use a chapel or the office for the purpose of marriage, and, in a church, there are the notice and certificate. And, further, by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 1, and 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 36, this facility of contracting marriages in the churches of the establishment by virtue of the registrar's certificate is declared to be in operation in all cases where any marriage may be solemnized after the publication of banns.

The 2nd sect. of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, following the Marriage Act of 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 31, preserves the marriage rites of Quakers and Jews intermarrying respectively with each other, provided in cases under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, that the notice and the registrar's certificate be duly obtained. By 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 30, and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 45, the royal family are excepted.

These ceremonies and documents, therefore, constitute valid marriages, in the absence of impediments, both amongst churchmen and dissenters.

The principal general statute is the 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, which repealed the well known Act 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, and consolidated the law upon this subject. This statute, 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 2, provides for the due publication of banns according to the rubric, and it then contemplates the residence of the parties.² If they dwell in separate parishes, the banns must be published in each, and the ¹ 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 1; 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 36.

² Still if the first marriage be by banns, the objection for the prisoner that the parties did not reside in the parish where the banns were published, and where the marriage was celebrated, failed. R. v. Hind, Russ. & Ry. 253.

marriage must be solemnized in one of the parish churches or chapels where the publication has taken place, and in no other place whatsoever. By sect. 12, parishes where there is neither church nor chapel, and extra-parochial places, are deemed, for the purposes of that Act, only to belong to any adjoining parish, and the publication of the banns is to be certified in like manner as if the parties had actually dwelt in such adjoining parish. By sect. 13, explained and amended subsequently by 5 Geo. 4, c. 32, where a church or chapel is out of repair, or about to be rebuilt, the banns may be published in the adjoining church or chapelry, or in any place licensed for such publication, by the bishop, during such repair. The marriages may also be had, whether by banns or licence, in such licensed places, or, if no place be so licensed, in such adjoining churches or chapels, and marriages theretofore or thereafter solemnized in such churches, chapels, or licensed places, shall not be questioned, nor shall the ministers who have so solemnized the same be liable to any ecclesiastical censure, or other proceeding.¹ And all licences granted by persons having authority to grant such for the solemnization of marriages in any church or chapel wherein marriages have been usually solemnized, shall be available for licensed places, and both banns and marriages published and solemnized in such places shall be considered as proclaimed and solemnized in the church, and shall be registered accordingly. By 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 3, the bishop, with the consent of the patron and incumbent, may authorize the proclamation of banns in any public chapel to which a chapelry is annexed, or in any chapel situated in an extra-parochial place.² By sect. 4, notice must be placed in some conspicuous part of the interior of such chapel. The 5th section extends the provisions relating to marriage registers to chapels so authorized as aforesaid. The 6th section directs that a book shall be substituted for the registration of banns, instead of loose papers as heretofore. The 7th section requires that seven days' notice shall be given to the parson, vicar, &c., dated on the day of its delivery, of the true christian names and surnames, and of the abodes of the parties, together with the time of their residence. But by sect. 26, after the marriage by banns, no proof of the actual dwelling of the parties need be offered, nor shall any evidence be received to prove the contrary.³ The 9th section enacts, that if the marriage be not had within three months after the complete publication of banns, the banns must be republished for three Sundays, according to the Act, unless there be a licence duly obtained, according to the provisions of the Act. By sect. 22, marriages entered into elsewhere than in a church or public chapel, where banns may lawfully be published, or without licence, are declared to be null and void. So it is also if the parties consent to acquiesce in the solemnization of such

¹ See R. v. Hind, supra.

² See 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, post, chapels.

extending this power to licensed marriage by any person not in holy orders. And in both these cases there must be a guilty knowledge.

³ See R. v. Hind, supra.

Looking for a moment at sect. 7, we may observe, that a partial error in the surnames, or even a mistake in the christian names, without a fraudulent intention, will not vitiate a marriage.¹ But a total mistake in the surname has been held fatal, although the parties were entirely ignorant of any improper conduct at the time of their union.² "Although it is a great hardship," said Lord Tenterden, "upon innocent parties to pronounce such a marriage void, it would be a much greater inconvenience to the public to alter the settled rules upon this subject, for the sake of preventing a particular mischief."³ And the first marriage being thus void, it is presumed that bigamy could not be committed in respect of a second marriage under such circumstances. But where the first marriage is correct, the nullity of the second marriage will not entitle the prisoner to an acquittal. As where W. Allison married a second wife in the name of Wilkinson, his conviction was held right.⁴ So, where the prisoner, upon a second marriage, wrote down the name of Anna Timson for the banns, the judge held that he should not be permitted to defend himself on the ground of his having intermarried with Susannah Timson, the woman's real name.⁵ So, where the prisoner contracted the second marriage in the maiden name of his mother, and the woman he married had also made use of her mother's maiden name, the judges held that the conviction was right.⁶ So, where the deceased wife's sister married the husband of that sister, a widower, contrary to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, s. 2,⁷ which makes such a marriage void, it was held that bigamy had been committed, notwithstanding such void marriage,⁸ there being no objection to the first marriage.⁹ And it was also held, that if the person marrying the woman knew that she was a married person, he might be convicted of counselling her to commit this offence.¹⁰ However, where the undue publication

¹ See Tongue v. Tongue, 1 E. F. Moore, 90.

² R. v. Tibshelf, Inhabitants, 1 B. & Adol. 190.

³ 1 B. & Adol. 196.

⁴ R. v. Allison, Russ. & Ry. 109.

⁵ R. v. Edwards, Id. 283. R. v. Penson, 5 C. & P. 412. See also R. v. Billingshurst, 3 M. & S. 250. R. v. Burton-upon-Trent, Id. 537. See as to names, post.

⁶ R. v. Palmer, 1 Russ. C. M. 209, citing 1 Deac. Dig. Cr. L. 147.

⁷ A marriage contracted contrary to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, is void, not merely voidable. R. v. Chad- wick (in error), 17 L. J. M. C. 33; 11 Q. B. 173.

⁸ The prohibited degrees mentioned in this Act are referable to the decision of the Ecclesiastical Court at that time. The degrees prohibited by the law of God in 32 Hen. 8, c. 38, are those enumerated in 25 Hen. 8, c. 22, and 28 Hen. 8, c. 7. R. v. Chadwick (in error), 17 L. J. M. C. 33. Where the witness said she had always lived with her sister, and considered the person in question to be her sister, the proof of relationship was deemed sufficient. R. v. Young and another, 3 Cox, 296.

⁹ R. v. Brawn, 1 Car. & K. 144.

¹⁰ S. C. R. v. Bawn, 1 Cox, 33.

of banns is alleged to be wilful, the guilty knowledge must affect both parties in order to annul the marriage.¹

Banns, 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85.] By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 26, bishops, with the consent of patrons and incumbents, under hand and seal, may, without stamp duty,² license public chapels for the solemnization of marriages; or, after two calendar months' notice in writing, given by the registrar of the diocese, they may do so without such consent. The limits within which persons may be deemed resident, for the purpose of marriage at such chapels, are to be specified in the licence, and likewise the amount, appropriation, and apportionment of the dues.

Marriages, until such licence be revoked, are to be deemed as valid as if celebrated in any church or other chapel, and the other documents relating to such licence are to be deposited in the registry. The 28th section gives the patron or incumbent an appeal to the archbishop. The 29th section directs, that a public notice of such licence is to be affixed in the chapel. The 30th section ordains, that marriages performed in such chapel shall be regulated according to the rites of the church. The 31st section saves the rights of parties to be married at the parish church, or elsewhere, according to law, notwithstanding the licence in favour of such public chapel. The 32nd section gives the power and form of making such licences. In this case, the registers are to be sent to the incumbent of the parish church (sect. 33), and by 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 33, banns may be published in such public chapels so licensed by the bishop as aforesaid, notice to such effect being affixed in the chapel. By the 34th section, all such licences shall be construed to extend to, and authorize marriages in such chapels between parties, one or both of whom is or are resident within the said district. Provided that the banns be not only published in the public chapel as aforesaid, in cases where the parties reside in different ecclesiastical districts, but also in the church or chapel where the marriage is to be solemnized; and if there be no such public chapel, then elsewhere, as if the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, had not passed. It is clear that if the marriage be intended to be solemnized in the public chapel, and the parties are resident in different districts, the banns must likewise be published in the place where the party who does not dwell within the district of the public chapel, is resident.

Licence.] The second mode of contracting marriages in the church is by licence.

By 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 10, it is enacted, that after the 1st of November then next following, no licence shall be granted to solemnize marriage elsewhere than in the parish church, or some public chapel belonging to the parish or chapelry within which the usual place of abode of one of the persons to be married shall have been for the space of fifteen days immediately before the granting of such licence. The 11th section relates to caveats. If a caveat be entered and not withdrawn, the licence cannot issue until the judge, out of whose office it is to proceed, has examined into the matter. The 14th section relates to oaths, which are to be taken before the surrogate (who is himself to take an oath of office and give security):¹—1. In order to prevent fraud and collusion, one of the parties must personally swear before the surrogate, or other authority, that to the best of his or her knowledge, there is no lawful impediment to the marriage. 2. That the abode of one of the parties has been for fifteen days last past within the parish or chapelry where the solemnization is to take place. 3. When either of the parties, not being a widower or a widow, is under twenty-one years of age, that consent under the provisions of the Act has been obtained, unless there is no person to give consent, in which latter case the oath must be to that effect, and the licence may then be granted.

¹ R. v. Wroxton (Inhabitants),
4 B. & Adol. 640.

² 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 32.

The 15th section forbids the giving of any bond or caution by the person applying for the licence; but with respect to the abode, as above mentioned, it is enacted by sect. 26, that after the marriage, no proof need be given of the inhabitancy for the fifteen days required by the oath, nor shall any evidence be received to prove the contrary, in any suit touching the validity of the marriage. By section 19, if the marriage be not had within three months next after the granting of the licence, the minister shall not proceed to solemnize it without a new licence, or the publication of banns. The 33rd section confines the operation of the Act to England.

Under the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 26, marriages may be had in certain chapels, where there is no chapelry, by licence.²

Special licence.] The third mode of celebrating a Church of England marriage is by special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury. This privilege is especially saved to the archbishop by 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 20, and 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 1.

Registrar's certificate.] Lastly, a marriage may take place in a church or episcopal chapel by virtue of the registrar's certificate under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, as we have already shown.³

These are the marriage ceremonies under the respective Acts, according to the ritual of the Established Church.

A chapel was not registered under 15 Vict. c. 31, but proof of the second marriage in it was held sufficient.⁴

¹ Sect. 18.

² As to the confirmation of marriages celebrated in places which were not consecrated at the time of passing the respective Marriage Acts, see 21 Geo. 3, c. 53.

³ Ante.

⁴ R. v. Tilson, 1 Fost. & F. 54.

Dissenting chapels.] We come now more particularly to the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85,¹ as it respects the relief of dissenters. By sect. 4, in any case where it is intended to solemnize marriage according to the rites of the Church of England, otherwise than by licence, special licence, or publication of banns, or according to the usages of Quakers or Jews, or according to any form authorized by the Act,² notice is to be given by one of the parties to the superintendent registrar of the district where the parties have dwelt for not less than seven days then next preceding,³ or, if they dwell in different districts, then to the registrar of each district, stating the name, surname, profession and condition of each party, their dwelling place, and the time of their abode, not being less than seven days, therein, and the church where it is intended to celebrate the marriage. But if the residence have been for more than one calendar month, the statement may be, for one calendar month and upwards. However, by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72, s. 2, marriages may not be solemnized out of the district where the parties dwell, unless one of the parties intending marriage shall declare that to the best of his or her knowledge, there is not within the district in which one of the parties dwells, any registered building in which marriage is solemnized according to the ritual which he or she professes, and the district nearest to the residence of that party in which a building is registered wherein marriage is so solemnized, and the registered building within such district in which it is intended to solemnize the marriage.⁴ By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 6, these notices are to be read for three successive weeks,⁵ at the meetings of guardians, unless a licence shall be sooner granted; provided that if they shall not so meet, it shall be sufficient for the purposes of the Act, that such notices shall be read at any meeting of such guardians which shall be held within twenty-one days from the day of such notice being entered. By sect. 7, after seven days succeeding the entry of such notice, if the marriage is to be by licence, or, after twenty-one days if it is to be solemnized without, the superintendent registrar shall, upon request, issue his certificate,⁶ provided that no lawful impediment should be shown to his satisfaction why such certificate should not issue, and provided the issue shall not have been sooner forbidden,—supposing there shall not be any guardians in the district. By 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 24, the notice of marriage is to be hung up in the office of the superintendent registrar for seven or twenty-one days, according to the circumstances. The particulars of such notice are to be sent to every registrar in the district, and to be open to inspection at all reasonable times. This arrangement, however, is to cease upon the election of a board of guardians, and a clerk to such board.

¹ Refer to 7 Will. 4, c. 1.

² The most material part, as it embraces the dissenters at large.

³ See sect. 25, and 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 1.

⁴ The 3rd section gives the form of notice. The 4th section makes false declarations punishable as perjuries. The 5th section relieves Quakers and Jews from these provisions, and refers them to 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85.

⁵ See sect. 14.

⁶ See 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 1.

Every certificate under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 7, shall set forth the particulars contained in the notice, the day on which the notice was entered, and the fact that seven or fourteen days had elapsed (as the case may be) since the entry of such notice, and that the issue of such certificate has not been forbidden. By sect. 9 any person authorized in that behalf may forbid the issue of the certificate, upon which the notice, and all subsequent proceedings, shall become void. The 11th section enables the superintendent registrar to grant licences for marriage, but they are not to be used in any church or chapel of the establishment, or in any building out of his district. By sect. 12, the certificate of notice must be given before the granting of this licence, unless notice shall have been received by the registrar who grants the licence. One of the parties must then appear personally before the registrar, and make oath, or a solemn affirmation and declaration in lieu of an oath, that there is no lawful impediment to the marriage, as far as he or she believes, that one of the parties has lived within the district for fifteen days immediately before the granting of the licence; and where either of the parties, not being a widower or a widow, shall be under twenty-one years of age, that due consent to such marriage has been obtained, or that there is not any person having authority to give consent, as the case may be. The 13th section permits the lodging of a caveat against the grant of a certificate or licence. The superintendent registrar shall then examine into the matters contained in the caveat, and he may refer the decision to the registrar-general in cases of doubt; and should the registrar refuse the certificate or licence, the party applying for the same may appeal to the registrar-general, who may confirm the refusal, or direct the required document to issue.

By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 37, and 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 5, if the registrar-general shall deem the grounds of the caveat frivolous, and that the licence ought not to be refused, the person entering such caveat shall be liable to the costs of the proceeding; and by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 37, damages may be recovered in a special action on the case by the party against whose marriage the caveat has been vexatiously entered. The certificate of the registrar-general, by 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 5, denoting the frivolousness of the caveat, shall be evidence of the fact in support of such action.

Unless there be a licence, the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 14, prohibits the celebration of the marriage for twenty-one days next after the entry of the notice; and in the case of licence, for seven days from the entry of the notice. By sect. 15, if the marriage shall not take place within three months after the notice, all proceedings shall be void; and a new notice must be had, whether there be a licence or not. By sect. 16, the certificate of the registrar is to be given upon the marriage to the officiating clergyman, and the certificate or licence to the registering officer of the Quakers, or to the officer of a synagogue; and in all other cases it shall be delivered to the registrar present at the marriage. The 18th section then provides for the registry of places of worship for the solemnization of marriages.

Thus, any proprietor or trustee of a separate building certified according to law as a place of religious worship, may apply to the superintendent registrar of the district for the purpose of registry. He is to deliver a certificate signed in duplicate by at least twenty householders to the registrar to the effect that the building has been used for one year as their place of public worship, and that they are desirous of registry, and such certificate must be countersigned by the proprietor or trustee. The registrar-general will then effect the registry, and give a certificate of registry to the proprietor or trustee by whom the certificates are countersigned, and give public notice in some newspaper circulating within the county, and in the "London Gazette." The 19th section directs how a new place of worship, used instead of the old building, shall be registered; and by 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 35, any building licensed and used as a Roman Catholic chapel for the year before registration, shall be taken to be a separate building for the celebration of marriages, notwithstanding that the same shall be under the same roof with any other building, or shall form a part only of a building.

These arrangements being made, the marriage may take place in the registered building with open doors, between eight and twelve in the forenoon, in the presence of some registrar of the district where the building is situate, and two credible witnesses. A form also is given in the clause, and there is a proviso that no lawful impediment shall exist.¹

The next section, the 21st, respects the opinions of those who prefer to celebrate their marriage in a place not consecrated, nor appropriated to public worship; such persons, after due notice and certificate, may be united at the office of the superintendent registrar (which, for the purposes of the Act, shall be taken to be within the district of which it is the registry office, although not locally situated therein), in his presence, and that of some registrar of the district, with open doors, between the hours aforesaid, and using the same form of words given by sect. 20. The neglect of these hours is, it should seem, a fatal omission. It has, at least, been so held with reference to the canonical hours of the church. Charlotte Reilly was tried at Lancaster for bigamy; her first marriage was solemnized by virtue of a licence from the Archbishop of Dublin, which gave authority to marry at the usual time and place, but the ceremony was performed in a private house, and after the canonical hours; upon which the learned judge was of opinion that the marriage was void, and he directed an acquittal.²

By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 25, proof of the residence need not be given after the marriage, in support of its validity, nor can evidence be received to impeach the fact of such residence.

¹ 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 20. See sect. 36. Provision for marriages in the Welsh tongue is made by 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 23. As to district churches, see post.

² R. v. Reilly, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 82, (n.). Smith v. Maxwell, Id. 80. Dalrymple v. Dalrymple, 2 Hag-gard, Consistory Rep. 54.

By sect. 35, marriages had under the Act shall be equally good and cognizable with those contracted according to the church ritual before the passing of the Act.

By 1 Vict. c. 22, s. 9, extra-parochial places may be included within the districts of registrars with the consent of the poor law commissioners. The 10th section treats of the union of districts by the registrar-general, and by sect. 11 he may divide them.

Minors—Law of consent.] We come now to speak of the law of consent, with reference to parties under age. By 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 16, certain persons are named, whose consent is respectively necessary for the purpose of giving effect to the marriage of parties under age, not being widowers nor widows. These are in the first place, the father, or if he be dead, then the guardian or guardians lawfully appointed, of the person under age, or if no guardian, then the mother, if unmarried, and if no mother unmarried, then the guardian or guardians appointed by the Court of Chancery; and such consent is thereby required, unless there be no person authorized to give such consent. The age when consent becomes unnecessary is twenty-one.¹

The 17th section provides for cases where the father, or guardian, or mother may happen to be non compos mentis, or, where the mother or guardian may be beyond sea, or, where the mother or guardian unreasonably, or from undue motives, refuses or withholds consent to a proper marriage. In such a case application may be made by petition to the lord chancellor, or the master of the rolls, or vice chancellor, who are respectively empowered to proceed in a summary way upon such petition. If the marriage proposed shall then appear to be proper, it shall be judicially declared so by the said lord chancellor or other judges, and such judicial declaration shall stand in the room of consent. And by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 10, the like consent shall be required to any marriage in England solemnized by licence, as would by law have been required to marriages solemnized by licence immediately before the passing of the Act, and every person whose consent to a marriage by licence is required by law, is thereby authorized to forbid the issue of the superintendent registrar's certificate, whether the marriage is intended to be by licence or without licence. In Ireland, it seems that a marriage without the consent of parents must be vacated within a year if it be intended to make it null.²

Illegitimate children have been held to come within the old Act 26 Geo. 2, c. 33,³ and the consent of reputed parents has been held

¹ See Russ. & Ry. 50.

³ R. v. Inhabitants of Hodnett,

² See R. v. Jacobs, 1 Moo. C. C. 1 T. R. 96.
140. R. v. Riordan, Car. Cr. L.
255.

insufficient to make the marriage of such illegitimate minors valid. The consent, in such cases, can only be had by a guardian appointed by the Court of Chancery.¹

The cases upon the subject of non-consent fall properly under the head in evidence as to bigamy, to which we refer.²

The statute of 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, it will be observed, speaks of the father as non compos mentis, and then of the mother and guardians as non compos, being beyond sea, or refusing consent unreasonably; consequently, it has been held that this provision does not apply to the case of a father beyond the sea, or who withholds his consent unreasonably, but only in the case of his being non compos mentis.³

By 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 8, ministers shall not be punishable for marrying minors without consent, unless they have notice of the disapproval, and the public dissent of parents or guardians shall operate to make the publication of banns void.

Marriages, when invalid.] We will now shortly sum up the occasions upon which a marriage will be declared invalid:—

1. A neglect to publish the banns in a church or chapel, there being at the same time no licence.
2. An omission to procure a licence, there being no banns.
3. An omission to give notice and procure the registrar's certificate under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85.
4. The absence of the registrar when the presence of that officer is required.
5. The absence of consent where it is required.
6. The celebration of marriage in a wrong place in contravention of the Acts. By 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 22, marriages contracted in disobedience to that Act, are declared null and void to all intents and purposes whatsoever.

By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 42, if any person shall wilfully and knowingly intermarry under the provisions of the Act elsewhere than in the church, chapel, registered building or office, or other place specified in the notice and certificate, or without due notice to the superintendent registrar, or without a certificate of notice duly issued, or without a licence, in case a licence should be necessary under the Act, or in the absence of a registrar or superintendent registrar; where the presence of such a person is necessary, the marriage shall be null and void. A proviso then follows, saving the Act 4 Geo. 4, c. 76.

7. Fraud and collusion of various kinds, especially where both parties are cognizant of the fraud. And by 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 43, in case any valid marriage should be had through any false notice, certificate, or declaration, the attorney-general or the solicitor-general may, notwithstanding, sue for a forfeiture of all estate and interest in any property accruing to the offending party by such marriage.

¹ See R. v. Edmonton, Cald. 435. Priestly v. Hughes, 11 East, 1. Horner v. Liddiard, 1 Russ. C. M. 210.

² Infra in this section.

³ Ex parte an Infant, 3 Myl. & Cr. 471.

8. A lawful impediment, as idiotcy,¹ lunacy,² or consanguinity. Three kinds of illegal marriage were for a long time merely voidable, being a marriage de facto, but by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 54, s. 2, marriages within the prohibited degrees of consanguinity or affinity, are declared absolutely null and void, excepting that marriages of that kind contracted before the passing of the Act are not to be affected by the statute.

District churches.] Some doubts having existed as to the publication of banns in district churches, provision is made for such circumstances by the statute 7 & 8 Vict. c. 56, to which the reader is referred. If there be an alteration in the Acts relating to any subject, it is almost always doubtful whether some circumstance calculated to raise a question of law, may not take place during the interval which elapses between the repeal of the one statute and the full operation of the other. In some cases, the party accused or implicated has the benefit of the change which accrues, in others he becomes himself affected by it. Instances of this appear in considering the law of marriage.³

Defence—Absence.] In order to obtain the benefit of the proviso concerning absence, the defendant must stand in such a position as that his ignorance of the existence of his first wife for seven years preceding the second marriage, must be manifest to the jury. The question is not whether, on the part of the prosecution, he must have known of her being alive, so as to exclude him from the benefit of the proviso, but whether his want of knowledge is so clear to the jury as to bring him within the provision.⁴ The presumption of a death is not to be made. In April, 1831, a person contracted marriage, whose wife was proved at the sessions to have been alive in a colony on the 17th of March, 1831. It was the opinion of the court, that no presumption should be drawn in favour of the ignorance of the husband, notwithstanding the absence, but that the sessions, (or jury, as the case might be,) should draw their conclusion from the evidence.⁵

The prisoner's wife had left him for sixteen years; the second wife proved that she had known the prisoner living for nine years as a single man, and that she had never heard of the first wife,

¹ 3 Inst. 88.

² 1 Com. 438; 15 Geo. 2, c. 30.

³ See R. v. Waully, 1 Moo. C. C. 163. R. v. Birmingham, 8 B. & C. 29. R. v. Delpike, 2 B. & Adol. 226, with reference to marriages in Scotland (the Acts extending only to England). Ireland: R. v. — O. B. 1815. 1 Russ. C. M. 214. R. v. Jacobs, 1 Moo. C. C. 140. Newfoundland: 5 Geo. 4, c. 68. St.

Domingo: R. v. Brampton, 10 East, 282. In the chapel of a British ambassador or minister, or of a British factory abroad, or house of a British subject residing in such factory, or by a chaplain in the British army abroad. See 4 Geo. 4. c. 91.

⁴ R. v. Cullen, 9 C. & P. 681.

⁵ R. v. Inhabitants of Harborne, 4 Nev. & M. 341.

who, nevertheless, was living seventeen miles from the prisoner's place of abode. It was held by Cresswell, J., that this was sufficient evidence to warrant the acquittal of the prisoner.¹

The finding of the jury in a case where the husband had been absent for more than seven years was, that they had no evidence of knowledge on her part that he was alive, but that she might have acquired that knowledge had she chosen to make use of the means. Pollock, C. B., held, that the effect of this finding was, that she did not know he was alive. But other judges considered the finding merely imperfect, and all agreed that the conviction should be quashed.² Upon another occasion the case was this:—The parties had separated by agreement in 1843; the prisoner went through the marriage ceremony in 1855; in 1857, he produced his wife at a trial, showing that the person whom he had married in 1855 was still, as then, a widow. No communication had passed between the prisoner and his wife. The question was left to the jury, whether he knew in 1855 that his wife was alive, and they acquitted him.³

Divorce.] As to the point of divorce, which forms the third exception in the proviso, it is to be remarked that the words are general,—“Any person who at the time of such second marriage shall be divorced from the bond of the first marriage.”⁴ In the last case, the prisoner relied upon a divorce under the seal of the commissary or consistorial court of Scotland; but he was convicted, and the judges affirmed the conviction; consequently, a sentence of divorce pronounced by a foreign court, of competent jurisdiction, would, under such circumstances, and if that view be correct, be available here.

In the case of Lolley, mentioned above, a point was made for the prisoner, that he had not colluded with his wife for the purpose of divorce, inasmuch as she had been excited by his misconduct to institute the proceedings in Scotland. This suggestion was made on account of an insinuation on the part of the prosecution, that the husband had irritated his wife to sue for a divorce. The point, however, was not taken into consideration, because the jury had not found fraud. This absence of collusion was said to distinguish the case from that of the Duchess of Kingston, who had obtained her divorce by fraud. There, a suit of jactitation of marriage was successful, but it was sought on the part of the prosecution, to impeach the sentence on the ground of its having been gained improperly, and the judges were of opinion that it might be so questioned.⁵ A man married two wives in Scotland, according to the Scotch law, being resident at Carlisle; it was found that he was

¹ R. v. Jones, Car. & M. 614.

⁴ See R. v. Lolley, Russ. & Ry.

² R. v. Briggs, 26 L. J. M. C. 7, 237.
Dears. & B. 98.

⁶ R. v. Duchess of Kingston,
Lcach, 146; East, P. C. 468.

³ R. v. Cross, 1 Fost. & F. 510.
Cockburn, C. J. R. v. Briggs was cited for the prisoner.

a British subject : he was held to have been properly convicted in England under the statute.¹ It is no defence to say, in answer to a charge of this nature, that although married according to the Catholic ritual, the prisoner was, in reality, a Protestant. He was married in Ireland by a Catholic priest, and declared himself at the time of the marriage to be a Roman Catholic.² If, on the contrary, the prisoner does not hold himself out to be a Catholic, and there is no evidence to that effect, his allegation of Protestantism may be available.³

Evidence.] The evidence in bigamy has occasioned several decisions. A woman was indicted by the name of Hannah Wilkinson, which turned out not to be her own name, and by which she had never been known, and Park, J., in the absence of other evidence, directed an acquittal. There should have been proof that the woman called herself, or went by, that name. If the banns were published in a wrong name, the marriage might be invalid.⁴ But we have seen that the assumption of a fictitious name upon the second marriage, will not prevent the offence from being complete.⁵ The distinction rests between the first and second marriages. If the first wife be married by a name she was never known to bear, as in Allison's case,⁶ the contract is probably null and void. But it is no defence to allege this mistake or defect with respect to the second wife.⁷ So it was again where the copy of the marriage certificate did not correspond with the christian name of the first wife, as stated in the indictment. It was held, that the prisoner should be acquitted unless a satisfactory explanation could be offered, or unless it were shown that the party in question had gone by both names.⁸

The next point is, whether the acknowledgment of the defendant, without more, is sufficient. And it seems, that at one time it was considered that such an admission had little, if any weight, especially if made before the second marriage, or upon occasions where it could not be said to have been uttered to the party's own prejudice, nor so conceived by him at the time.⁹ It was even questioned whether such evidence should go to a jury. But some of the judges upon one occasion seemed to think, that an acknowledgment would, per se, have been sufficient.¹⁰ And this ruling

¹ R. v. Topping, 25 L. J. M. C. 72.

² R. v. Orgill, 9 C. & P. 80.

³ R. v. Sunderland, 2 Lew. C. C. 109.

⁴ R. v. Drake, 1 Lew. C. C. 25.

⁵ Ante, p. 851.

⁶ Ante, p. 851.

⁷ R. v. Penson, 5 C. & P. 412.

⁸ R. v. Gooding, Car. & M. 297. Whether the prisoner's first wife can be called on his behalf to prove that she was married to another husband, prior to her marriage with the prisoner — qu. ? Alderson, B., inclined to think she might; but, after consulting with Williams, J., refused her evidence, saying, that he would reserve the point. The prisoner, however, was acquitted.

⁹ R. v. Peat, 2 Lew. C. C. 288 ; East, P. C. 471.

¹⁰ R. v. Truman, East, P. C. 470. See R. v. Upton, post.

appears now to be the received opinion. The prisoner made an admission of the first marriage, and it was left to the jury to say, whether what he said was an admission that he had been married according to the law of the country where such marriage was solemnized.¹ So, again, such admissions were held sufficient, without proof that the marriage was celebrated according to the law of the particular country where it took place.² But, combined with other proofs, it was always considered proper to admit the prisoner's acknowledgment as evidence of weight. As when the prisoner made an admission to a witness, and backed his assertion by the copy of a proceeding in a Scotch court, against him and his wife, for having contracted the marriage improperly, the marriage, however, being still good according to the Scotch law. There was also evidence of cohabitation. The judges held the conviction right, and some seem to think that the acknowledgment alone would have been sufficient, and that the paper produced in evidence was only a confirmation of such acknowledgment.³ So it was where the prisoner made a statement before a justice, acknowledging his marriage with his first wife. Erskine, J., left the question to the jury, for here the prisoner's admission had been directed to the very point in issue.⁴ Cohabitation for a considerable time will be evidence of the marriage. As in a case of murder, where it was proved that the prisoner and the deceased had lived together for nearly seven years, that they were spoken of as married persons, and that they mutually mentioned each other under the characters of husband and wife. The judges, upon affirming the conviction for murder, observed, that this would be sufficient evidence for a bishop to certify a marriage upon a plea of neunques accouplez.⁵ So, in a case of uttering forged notes, it appeared that the man and woman had lived together for several months, and it was put to Gibbs, C. B., that the woman was entitled to an acquittal, and upon his expressing an opinion that she was, the counsel for the prosecution acquiesced.⁶ On the other hand, where the second marriage took place at Gretna Green, and the assent of the second wife was not distinctly proved, although the parties lived together afterwards, yet, as the prisoner always addressed the woman by her maiden name, Alderson, B., directed an acquittal.⁷ And the certificate was refused as evidence of the marriage.⁸

In cases where it is intended to show, that the consent of parties or guardians was obtained, in answer to the defence of the prisoner

¹ R. v. Simmonsto, 1 Car. & K. 164. S. C. R. v. Simmonite, 1 Cox, 30. The question of knowledge is for the jury. R. v. Dane, 1 Fost. & F. 323. See R. v. Ellis, Id. 309.

² R. v. Newton, 2 Moo. & Rob. 503.

³ R. v. Truman, East, P. C. 470.

⁴ R. v. Upton, 1 Russ. C. M. 218.

⁵ R. v. Norwood, East, P. C. 337.

⁶ R. v. Atkinson, 1 Russ. C. M. 24.

⁷ R. v. Graham, 2 Lew. C. C. 97.

⁸ S. C.

that he was an infant at the time of the first marriage, the prosecutor must be prepared with evidence to that effect, for the prisoner cannot be called upon to prove a negative. And where the register of the first marriage expressed it to be by licence generally, without mentioning the consent of parents or guardians, and it also appeared that the parents had never been known to have resided in England, the judges considered that a prima facie case had been made out for the prisoner, and that the jury might have found him not guilty.¹ Upon a subsequent occasion, however, Lawrence, J., held at the trial, that the prisoner's marriage must be presumed to be valid, although he had shown himself to have been an infant at the time, unless he could prove the negative, that is, the non-consent of parents or guardians. But the judges held the conviction wrong, as there were no circumstances from whence consent could be presumed.² "It seems, that subsequent countenance from parents or guardians, or other circumstances of a similar kind, might afford ground for presuming the necessary consent."³ However, as the Irish Acts do not acknowledge the necessity of this consent,—in a case where the prisoner had proved himself to be an infant,—it was replied, that there was no law in Ireland which required consent, and the judge held, that it lay on the prisoner to produce such an Act, upon which he was found guilty, and the conviction was affirmed.⁴

We have already seen, that a sentence of jactitation is not sustainable, if obtained by fraud. And it may be further said, that even if not so obtained, it is not conclusive so as to stop the counsel for the crown from proving the marriage in an indictment for polygamy.⁵ As to the evidence of the marriage itself, the best is that given by a party who was present at it. Where such testimony was given in bigamy, the judges held that it was not necessary to prove banns, nor licence, nor registration;⁶ therefore, a lawful canonical marriage need not be shown, when it is competent to prove a marriage de facto.⁷

To prove a Roman Catholic marriage, it was shown that the Rev. — was a catholic priest, and that the marriage took place, according to the custom, at his house; he asked the parties if they were Roman Catholics, and was answered in the affirmative. Part of the ceremony was in English and part in Latin. Having put the questions reciprocally, and received answers from the husband and wife that each would wed the other, he pronounced the marriage valid. It was held that this evidence was sufficient.⁸

But where a Roman Catholic marriage was made the founda-

¹ R. v. James, Russ. & Ry. 17.
R. v. Morton, Id. 19, n.

² R. v. Butler, Russ. & Ry. 61.

³ 1 Russ. C. M. 210, n.

⁴ R. v. Jacobs, 1 Moo. C. C. 140.

⁵ R. v. Duchess of Kingston, Leach, 146; East, P. C. 468.

⁶ R. v. Allison, Russ. & Ry. 109. See also Den. C. C. 273, n.

⁷ 10 East, 287, note (b); 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 632.

⁸ R. v. Orgill, 9 C. P. 80. See R. v. Bathwick, 2 B. & Adol. 639.

tion of an indictment, and it appeared that the ceremony was performed in Latin, which the witnesses did not understand, and, moreover, that the witnesses could not swear to the performance of any ritual, Willes, C. J., directed an acquittal.¹ "After proof of the first marriage, the second wife may be a witness, but it is clear that the true wife cannot be admitted to give evidence against her husband."²

In order to give proof of the law of Scotland respecting marriage, it has been held unnecessary to produce a witness, as of course, who is connected with the profession of the law. A gentleman who stated himself to have been born and educated in Scotland, (where he lived till he was twenty years of age,) and to be acquainted with the law of Scotland, was held to be a sufficient witness.³ But this opinion was overruled in the Sussex peerage case.⁴ However, on a still later occasion, it was left uncertain by Jervis, C. J., whether the presence of a Scotch lawyer would be in all cases necessary, yet, some one conversant with that law is imperatively required. A woman, therefore, who said nothing on that subject, was held clearly incompetent to procure a conviction, by her evidence of a marriage.⁵

Proof that marriages have been solemnized in a certain chapel, without more, is insufficient. It must be shown (i. e. independently of the Registry Act,) that the chapel was one where banns had been usually published before the passing of 26 Geo. 2, c. 33, or, that the chapel was built and consecrated after that Act, and before the statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 92.⁶ Yet a marriage before the registrar is valid, although the chapel may neither have been licensed nor registered.⁷

Under the statutes 6 & 7 Will. 4, cc. 85 and 86, it is sufficient to produce the certificate and show the identity of the parties. The prisoner was indicted for bigamy, and to prove the first marriage the superintendent registrar produced the register returned to him from the registrar. This registrar proved that he was present at the marriage, that it was registered, that the parties signed their names, and that he witnessed it. The superintendent registrar then produced the register of the place where the marriage was solemnized and his certificate. The notice was not produced. It was contended for the prisoner, that evidence should have been given of the first marriage having been celebrated in the registered building specified in the notice and certificate,—that due notice had been given to the superintendent registrar that the certificate of the notice had been duly issued, and that the express

¹ R. v. Lyon, East, P. C. 469.

² 1 Russ. C. M. 218.

³ R. v. Dent, 1 Car. & K. 97.

⁴ 11 Cl. & Fin. 85.

⁵ R. v. Povey, Dears. 32; 22 L. J. M. C. 19. The jury were not justified in presuming a marriage, for they were not told what the ceremony was, and the fact of the prisoner residing for three days in the house of the sister was not holding himself out to the world in the character of a husband.

⁶ R. v. Bowen, 2 Car. & K. 227.

⁷ R. v. Tilson, 1 Fost. & F. 54.

exception in 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 25,¹ tended to establish the necessity of proving in "support of the marriage" the other preliminaries required by the Act. The judges held the conviction in this case correct.² However, it is not necessary to produce the original register.³ Some proof beyond the prisoner's statement of the first marriage seems necessary, although he signs his statement when in custody, and mentions when and where the first marriage took place.⁴ It has also been held that the testimony of a witness present at the marriage, who proved that it took place in the presence of the registrar, in a dissenting chapel, was sufficient to establish the fact of the marriage, and that this was considered good evidence of the chapel being duly registered.⁵ A certificate was produced, not a copy or extract from the registrar's book, but one which had been compared with the book at the office by the witness. This was held by two judges to be evidence of the due registration of the chapel.⁶

Lastly, the statutes 3 & 4 Vict. c. 92, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 25, enable the courts to admit non-parochial registers as evidence of births, baptisms, deaths, burials, and marriages.

Indictment for bigamy.] The indictment usually states that A., on, &c., did marry one B., and had her for his wife, and that being so married he afterwards, and whilst the said wife was living, on, &c.,⁷ he the said A. did feloniously marry one C., against the form, &c.

And it needs not to be alleged that the marriage is still subsisting, if the life of the first wife be averred.⁸ Where E. C. was called a widow in the indictment, but turned out not to be a widow, nor even reputed to be such, the variance was held fatal.⁹

When the trial is had in a county different from that in which the offence was committed, the averment as to custody is indispensable. As where the second marriage took place in Surrey, but the prisoner was apprehended in Middlesex, and there was no averment of that fact, the judge directed that judgment should be arrested.¹⁰ Subsequently, this point came to be much considered. The offence was committed in Cambridgeshire, and the prisoner

¹ Ante.

² R. v. Hawes, Den. 270.

³ Sayer v. Glossop, 2 Car. & K. 694; 12 Jur. 465.

⁴ R. v. Flaherty, 2 Car. & K. 782.

⁵ R. v. Manwaring, Dears. & B. 132; 26 L. J. M. C. 10.

⁶ Id. Pollock, C. B., Willes, J. See R. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & Fin. 534. See further upon bigamy, 1 Hawk. c. 42; East, P. C. 463.

⁷ Or, "whilst the prisoner was so married as aforesaid." Whether such an omission can be cured by any subsequent averment, qu. ? R. v. Apley, 1 Cox, 71. Alderson, B., proposed to take the opinion of the judges on the point. The prisoner was convicted and sentenced to a month's imprisonment; there being averments afterwards, that the former husband was "now alive."

⁸ Murray v. Reg. (in error), 7 Q. B. Rep. 700.

⁹ R. v. Deeley, 1 Moo. C. C. 303, and, probably, not amendable.

¹⁰ R. v. Fraser, 1 Moo. C. C. 407.

was taken in the county of Southampton, but there was no averment either as to his apprehension or custody. It was objected, for the prisoner, that the indictment was insufficient, and, upon argument, Parke, B., observed that a similar objection had been taken and overruled in the case of the Rebels, in 1745.¹ It was answered, that the decision there applied to the trial, not to the indictment, which might have been good. Alderson, B., observed, that R. v. Fraser did not appear to have been much considered, nor to have been argued. After hearing counsel, however, for the prosecution, the judges held the conviction right.² It is said, nevertheless, that the objection could not have been taken in arrest of judgment.

Trial.] We have seen that this offence may be dealt with in the county where the offender shall be apprehended, or be in custody, as if the offence had actually been committed in that county. Where the prisoner was detained for bigamy in Worcestershire, being already in custody upon a charge of larceny, it was said that he could not be taken to have been apprehended in that county for the bigamy, but the judges held his conviction right, for, as being in custody upon a criminal charge, he was liable to be tried where he was imprisoned.³ Elijah Forsyth was charged with bigamy at the Old Bailey. The offence was alleged to have been committed at Manchester; but the warrant for his apprehension in Middlesex was not produced, and no proof of his apprehension in that county was offered, upon which the court decided that they had no jurisdiction to try him, and he was discharged.⁴ The statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1, forbids the justices at sessions and recorders of boroughs from trying cases of "bigamy, and offences against, and relating to, the laws of marriage."

Judgment.] A judgment proceeded on the Irish statute against bigamy (35 Geo. 3, c. 67). The sentence was, that the prisoner be transported for seven years, "pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided." Upon error brought, it was held, that the judgment rested, not upon the statutes ordaining the transportation of offenders, but upon the 35 Geo. 3, c. 67, and consequently that the conclusion was correct, supposing, indeed, that it was necessary to refer to any statute.⁵

¹ Fost. Cr. Law, 12.

² R. v. Whiley, 1 Car. & K. 150. Yet, according to R. v. Whiley, 2 Moo. C. C. 186, the conviction was held wrong. Majority, 8: Lord Denman, C. J.; Tindal, C. J.; Littledale, J.; Bosanquet, J.; Patteson, J.; Gurney, B.; Coleridge, J.; Coltman, J. Minority, 3: Parke, B.; Alderson, B.; Maule, J. But Parke, B., has declared that this report is allowed to have been erroneous, 19 L. J. M. C. 32, and that Lord Denman, C. J., alone held the conviction wrong. Littledale, J. dub. 1 Car. & K. ut supra; and see, S. P. (Forgery), R. v. Smythies, 19 L. J. M. C. 31, where R. v. Whiley was recognized as decisive against the prisoner. Den. 498; and see Id. 500, n.

³ R. v. Gordon, Russ. & Ry. 48.

⁴ R. v. Forsyth, Leach, 826.

⁵ Murray v. Reg. 7 Q. B. 700.

CHAPTER XII.

OF ATTEMPTS TO PROCURE ABORTION.

Attempts to procure abortion.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 58, Every woman, being with child, who, with intent to procure her own miscarriage, shall unlawfully administer to herself any poison or other noxious thing, or shall unlawfully use any instrument or other means whatsoever with the like intent, and whosoever, with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman, whether she be or be not with child, shall unlawfully administer to her or cause to be taken by her any poison or other noxious thing, or shall unlawfully use any instrument or other means whatsoever with the like intent, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude for life or not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.

By sect. 59, whosoever shall unlawfully supply or procure any poison or other noxious thing, or any instrument or thing whatsoever, knowing that the same is intended to be unlawfully used or employed with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman, whether she be or be not with child, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to penal servitude for the term of three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.

It may be observed that the words “quick with child,” and “not being found to be quick with child,” are no longer used in the statutes;¹ consequently it is not essential under this section that the woman should be with child,² and this point will hold, even should it be found negatively that the woman was not with child, which was an objection under the old law.³ And administering a piece of bread with a felonious intent, so as to be a noxious thing, will come within the statute.⁴ The administering of savin on subsequent days may be admitted as proof of the intent, although not as part of the particular offence charged.⁵ Savin, if administered in small quantities, is not a noxious thing.⁶

In a case of administering drugs, the prisoner was charged with administering savin for the purpose of procuring abortion, and the count set forth the administering of six ounces of the decoction of a certain shrub called savin, whereas it turned out in evidence that the preparation given was an infusion. Lawrence, J., held

¹ See 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 13, repealed.

² R. v. Goodhall, Den. 187; 2 Ar. & K. 293; nom. R. v. Goodchild.

³ R. v. Phillips, 3 Campb. 77. R. v. Scudder, 1 Moo. C. C. 216.

⁴ R. v. Coe, 6 C. & P. 403.

⁵ R. v. Calder, 1 Cox, 348.

⁶ R. v. Perry, 2 Cox, 223.

the variance immaterial.¹ In the same case it was objected to the last count, which spoke of "a certain mixture to the jurors unknown, the said mixture being a noxious and destructive thing," that, unless the shrub in question was savin, there was no evidence of the mixture being noxious and destructive. And witnesses had been called for the prisoner to prove that the shrub he had used was not savin; but Lawrence, J., overruled this objection also, observing, that it was immaterial whether the shrub were savin or not;² but the mischievous nature of the thing administered must be alleged. Therefore, where the indictment omitted to state that certain sponge, (the thing administered) was of a deleterious nature, the omission was deemed fatal.³

Indictment.] The indictment states that A., on, &c., unlawfully and feloniously did administer to a certain woman, that is to say, to one B., a large quantity, to wit, — of a certain noxious thing called —, with intent thereby then to cause the miscarriage of the said B., against the form, &c. Second count, a certain noxious thing to the jurors unknown.

CHAPTER XIII.

OF CONCEALMENT OF BIRTH.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 60, if any woman shall be delivered of a child, every person who shall, by any secret disposition of the dead body of the said child, whether such child died before, at, or after its birth, endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour: provided that if any person tried for the murder of any child shall be acquitted thereof, it shall be lawful for the jury by whose verdict such person shall be acquitted to find, in case it shall so appear in evidence, that the child had recently been born, and that such person did, by some secret disposition of the dead body of such child, endeavour to conceal the birth thereof, and thereupon the court may pass such sentence as if such person had been convicted upon an indictment for the concealment of the birth.

Under the old Acts, the mother must have been arraigned for murder, before she could be convicted of concealment, and it became the duty of the grand jury to find the bill for murder, although there might not be any evidence of that crime, if there were some grounds for believing that there had been a concealment. Hence it followed, that an indictment could not be preferred for the concealment as for a substantive offence.¹ But now, the party may be indicted at once for the misdemeanor; or, after a verdict of acquittal for murder, may be charged, under a subsequent inquiry upon the same indictment, with concealment. It makes no difference, however, whether the charge be made upon an indictment or upon the coroner's inquisition, for, as the word "charged" is used generally in the statute 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, and as a coroner's inquisition is certainly a charge, the finding of concealment upon such an arraignment is right, although the bill for murder may have been thrown out by the grand jury. And so it was held by the judges upon a case reserved.² No one except the mother can be convicted of the concealment;³ but a counsellor, aider or abettor, may be convicted.⁴

¹ 3 Campb. 73.

² Id. 75, 76.

³ R. v. Powles, 4 C. & P. 571.

The evidence necessary to support this charge is, that the child is dead,⁵ whether before or after birth needs not to appear;⁶ that the woman failed to give proper publicity to the fact of her delivery, by illegally concealing her situation,⁷ and if the prosecution depends upon the act of secret burying, the secreting must be made clear.⁸ It is not necessary to prove that the infant was born alive, but if there be no foundation at all for the fact of life in the child, the prisoner must then be acquitted. Supposing that the dead offspring were without hair or nails, or that there were any other circumstances from which high presumption adverse to the circumstance of life might arise, the woman may still be convicted of concealment. This was not the rule under the old statute of 21 Jac. 1, for, in favour of life, every presumption was wont to be made to relieve the prisoner from the capital penalty consequent upon concealment.⁹ But under 43 Geo. 3, c. 58, the matter was viewed in a different light. Eliz. Cornwall was charged, together with D. T., with murder. The child was seven months old, and in a

¹ R. v. Parkinson, 1 Russ. C. M. 571.

² R. v. Maynard, Russ. & Ry. 240. R. v. Dobson, 1 Lew. C. C. 43. R. v. Cole, 3 Campb. 371; Leach, 1095.

³ R. v. Wright, 9 C. & P. 754.

⁴ R. v. Shelton, 3 Car. & K. 119.

⁵ R. v. Hopkins, 8 C. & P. 591.

⁶ R. v. Perkins, 1 Lew. C. C. 44. R. v. Davis, 1 Russ. C. M. 574.

⁷ It seems that some act of disposal of the body should appear.

So that where a woman went to the privy for some other purpose than that of delivery, and was delivered of a child unawares, which was suffocated beneath, it was held that she could not be convicted of concealment, although she denied the birth. R. v. Turner, 8 C. & P. 755. R. v. Wilkinson, 3 Burn, Just., by D'Oyly & W., 348. R. v. Nash, 1 Russ. C. M. 574.

⁸ R. v. Derham, 1 Cox, 56.

⁹ See R. v. Peat, East, P. C. 229. R. v. Jefford, East, P. C. 229.

putrid state, so that a conclusion of its having been still-born might have been fairly drawn. The prisoner admitted throwing it down the privy, and D. T. denied all knowledge of the child's birth, although she must have known of it. The prisoner being convicted, it occurred to the judge, that the presumption of the infant's death was so strong as to warrant him in asking the opinion of the judges whether this could be said to be a concealment, and as D. T. evidently knew of the birth, whether her being privy, although an accomplice,¹ would take the case out of the statute. And the judges were unanimous, that the act of throwing the child into the privy was evidence of an endeavour to conceal the birth, and that the conviction was therefore right.² So, where the paramour deposited the body of a child in a field, with the connivance of the woman, she was rightly convicted of concealment, and he of counselling.³ It is a question for the jury. The judge will not stop the case, although the evidence should show that the child might have been smothered in the privy without any apparent intent on the part of the mother.⁴ Then, with reference to the question of publicity, it appears that a disclosure to an accomplice is no defence according to the present law.⁵ But it was once held, that notwithstanding the throwing the child away as above mentioned, if the woman had disclosed her pregnancy to other persons, or had made preparations for her confinement, the offence would not have been committed.⁶ This case, however, which was decided at Stafford, in 1809, must be considered as of doubtful authority, when contrasted with a recent case. The prisoner was charged with murder, together with Robert Hall, the father of the bastard, and it appeared, that with her full knowledge, he had thrown the child into the privy, under very suspicious and discreditable circumstances. But the pregnancy of the woman was known by her mother, and was apparent to other women, and it was proved that a female had been sent for at the commencement of her labour, but that she was too ill to attend. No provision had been made for the birth. The prisoner was convicted, and an argument was permitted before the judges. It was endeavoured on the prisoner's behalf to urge, that here was only an endeavour to conceal the death, the pregnancy having been sufficiently public, and a neighbour sent for in the time of parturition. But the judges affirmed the conviction, being of opinion that the communication thus made to other persons was not a bar, but only evidence for the jury, and however slight the evidence on the other side against the woman might be considered, the verdict of the jury

¹ As in R. v. Peat, under 21 Jac. 1, where Peat, who was heard to call to her mother, indicted as an accomplice, was acquitted of concealment upon this ground. East, P. C. 229.

² R. v. Cornwall, Russ. & Ry. 336.

³ R. v. Bird, 2 Car. & K. 817, and R. v. Wilkinson, ante, p. 869.

⁴ R. v. Coxhead, 1 Car. & K. 623.

⁵ 1 Moo. C. C. 482.

⁶ R. v. Southern, cor. Bayley, J., 1 Russ. C. M. 572.

could not be set aside. But they recommended a pardon.¹ Where the woman admitted having had a child, and had stated she had sent for a surgeon to attend her in her confinement, and it appeared also that the mother of the prisoner had shown the witness, a surgeon, some clothes intended for the child, Park, J., held, that these facts went to negative concealment, and he directed the jury to acquit.² So, where the woman, through fear of her father, threw the child into a bag, which she would otherwise have buried in the churchyard, she was acquitted, the case not being within the Act.³ If the charge be for disposing of the body, it must be a complete act of disposing. Formerly the possession of the body cleared the woman from this particular charge.⁴ But these cases are overruled. A woman hid the body between the bed and the mattress. Several judges held this a disposing within the Act, and that, in order to convict, the body need not be in its ultimate place of deposit.⁵ So, under the bolster.⁶ Nevertheless, Pollock, C. B., dissented in Perry's case, and Martin, B., who tried it subsequently, directed an acquittal where the body of a child was found behind the door of a privy covered with a small cloth, and he said he concurred with the opinion of the chief baron.⁷

Indictment.] The indictment is that A., on, &c., being then big with a [male or female] child, was then delivered of the said child alive, and which said child then instantly died, and that after the child had so died as aforesaid, to wit, on the day and year aforesaid, the said A. did endeavour to conceal the birth thereof by [secretly burying, &c.] the dead body of the said child, against the form, &c. Another count may state that the child was dead at the time of the delivery. If the charge be for disposing, the mode of disposing must be shown.⁸ An indictment stated the means of death, and continued, "did thereby then and there unlawfully dispose of, &c., and endeavour to conceal the birth thereof," without saying, "did thereby endeavour," &c. It was held that "thereby" in the first instance applied to the endeavour as well as the concealment.⁹

Costs.] No costs were allowable upon prosecutions for this offence as a misdemeanor, until 1 Vict. c. 44. But by that statute, the court is empowered to order payment of the costs and expenses, whether any bill of indictment shall or shall not be preferred, together with a compensation to the prosecutor and witnesses for

¹ R. v. Douglas, 1 Moo. C. C. 480; 7 C. & P. 644.

² R. v. Higley, 4 C. & P. 366.

³ R. v. Morris, 2 Cox, 489.

⁴ R. v. Snell, 2 Moo. & Rob. 44. R. v. Ash, Id. 294. R. v. Bell, 294, n. R. v. Jones, 295, n. R. v. Waterage, 1 Cox, 338. R. v. Watkins, 1 Russ. C. M. 574.

⁵ R. v. Goldthorpe, 2 Moo. C. C. 244; Car. & M. 335. R. v. Farnham, 1 Cox, 349.

⁶ R. v. Hughes, 24 L. J. M. C. 137; 4 Cox, 447.

⁷ R. v. Opie, 8 Cox, 312.

⁸ R. v. Hounsell, 2 Moo. & Rob. 292.

⁹ R. v. Coxhead, 1 Car. & K. 623.

their loss of time and trouble, as in cases of felony.¹ By sect. 2, orders for the payment of the money in such cases shall be the same as in cases of felony.²

Trial.] The trial in this case cannot be at the quarter sessions, nor by recorders.³

CHAPTER XIV.

OF UNNATURAL CRIMES.

Unnatural crimes.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 61, whosoever shall be convicted of the abominable crime of buggery, committed either with mankind or with any animal, shall be liable, at the discretion of the court, to be kept in penal servitude for life, or for any term not less than ten years.

By sect. 62, whosoever shall attempt to commit the said abominable crime, or shall be guilty of any assault with intent to commit the same, or of any indecent assault upon any male person, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding ten nor less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour.⁴

And by sect. 63, whenever, upon the trial for any offence punishable under this Act, it may be necessary to prove carnal knowledge, it shall not be necessary to prove the actual emission of seed in order to constitute a carnal knowledge, but the carnal knowledge shall be deemed complete upon proof of penetration only.

Unnatural crimes are sodomy and bestiality. Sodomy is an unnatural connection between the male sex, or between males and females, and bestiality is an unnatural communication between

¹ Sect. 1.

² See further upon this subject, East, P. C. 228; 2 Hale, P. C. 289. Whether it be an indictable offence for a man to secrete a woman big with child by him, in order to prevent her from giving evidence to charge him, quære? See R. v. Chandler, 1 Str. 612; 2 Ld. Raym. 1368; 8 Mod. 336. But the indictment was held bad on demurrer, because the words, "gravidam cum illegitimo," were used, and that cannot be affirmed until the woman be delivered, for non constat but that the parties might be united in lawful wedlock.

³ 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, s. 1.

⁴ See sect. 63,—that penetration is sufficient.

males, females, and beasts.¹ On the one hand, it may be observed, that the act must be in that part where sodomy is usually committed;² and, on the other, it seems that bestiality must be confined to the term "beast." Therefore, emission in a child's mouth was held not to be sodomy.³ Before the 9 Geo. 4, c. 31, s. 15, an offence with a fowl was not bestiality, at least where the fowl was so small that its private parts would not admit those of a man;⁴ but a fowl is an animal, although not a beast, and therefore the objection would not now avail.

The same law regarding penetration prevails here as in rape, and the penetration, without emission in corpore, has been deemed sufficient to support a charge of felony.⁵ So in bestiality.⁶ And if the crime be committed on a child under fourteen, it is felony in the agent only,⁷ whereas if the agent be under fourteen, and the pathic be of years of discretion, it is felony only in the pathic.⁸

Indictment.] The indictment charges, that A., feloniously, and against the order of nature, had a venereal affair with B., and him, the said B., did carnally know, &c.;⁹ and then did with the said B., feloniously, and against the order of nature, commit the abominable crime of buggery. An indictment charged, that the two defendants, in a certain open and public place called, &c., frequented by divers of the liege subjects, &c., unlawfully met together for the purpose and with the intent of committing with each other, openly, lewdly, and indecently, in the said public place, divers nasty, wicked, filthy, lewd, beastly, unnatural, and sodomitical practices, and then and there unlawfully, &c., did commit with each other, in sight of divers of the liege subjects, &c., in the said public place then passing, divers such practices as aforesaid. This was held bad for want of specifying any offence with legal certainty.¹⁰

An indictment for bestiality follows the precedent of sodomy, only mentioning the particular animal instead of B. But it seems that it should go further, and aver that the said A. then and there committed the abominable crime of buggery, &c.¹¹

An indictment charged the offence to have been committed with a certain animal called a "bitch," and it was held sufficiently cer-

¹ East, P. C. 480. R. v. Jellyman, 8 C. & P. 604. Where a man assaulted his own wife in this manner. No complaint having been made for two years in a case of bestiality, Alderson, B., would not permit the case to go on. R. v. Robins, 1 Cox, 114.

² 1 Russ. C. M. 698.

³ R. v. Jacobs, Russ. & Ry. 331.

⁴ R. v. Mulreaty, 1 Russ. C. M. 699.

⁵ R. v. Reeksphear, 1 Moo. C. C. 342; although it was not so formerly. R. v. Parker, 1 Russ. C. M. 681. See further, 1 Hawk. c. 4; East, P. C. 480.

⁶ R. v. Cozins, 6 C. & P. 351, Park, J., where the prisoner being with a ewe, was disturbed before emission.

⁷ East, P. C. 480.

⁸ R. v. Allen, Den. 364; 18 L. J. M. C. 72; 2 Car. & K. 869.

⁹ East, P. C. 480.

¹⁰ R. v. Rowed, 3 Q. B. 180;

2 Gale & D. 518; 6 Jur. 396.

¹¹ See Archbold's Cr. Pl. 568.

874 Making Gunpowder with intent to commit Felony, &c.

tain, although the females of foxes and of some other animals are called bitches as well as the female of the dog.¹

It is not competent to give evidence of unnatural propensities on the part of the prisoner, not even if he have admitted having committed such offence upon a former occasion.²

Verdict.] The verdict in this case might have been, in sodomy, guilty of an assault, under 1 Vict. c. 85, s. 11, but it is so no longer.

But upon a charge of bestiality this verdict could not be given. The prisoner might have been detained, and indicted for a misdemeanor in attempting to commit a felony.³

Mariners guilty of these crimes are punishable with penal servitude, &c., by the judgment of a court-martial.⁴

CHAPTER XV.

OF "MAKING GUNPOWDER WITH INTENT TO COMMIT FELONY, AND OF SEARCHING FOR THE SAME."

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 64, whosoever shall knowingly have in his possession, or make or manufacture, any gunpowder, explosive substance, or any dangerous or noxious thing, or any machine, engine, instrument, or thing, with intent by means thereof to commit, or for the purpose of enabling any other person to commit, any of the felonies in this Act mentioned, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and with or without solitary confinement, and if a male under the age of sixteen years, with or without whipping.

By sect. 65, any justice of the peace of any county⁵ or place in which any such gunpowder, or other explosive, dangerous, or noxious substance or thing, or any such machine, engine, instrument, or thing, is suspected to be made, kept, or carried for the purpose of being used in committing any of the felonies in this Act mentioned, upon reasonable cause assigned upon oath by any person, may issue a warrant under his hand and seal for

¹ R. v. Allen, 1 Car. & K. 495.

² R. v. Cole, 1 Russ. C. M. 700.

³ R. v. Eaton, 8 C. & P. 417.

⁴ 24 & 25 Vict. c. 115, ss. 38, 46, nos. 4-7.

⁵ Liberty is omitted ; whether place will supply the want is very doubtful.

searching, in the daytime, any house, mill, magazine, storehouse, warehouse, shop, cellar, yard, wharf, or other place, or any carriage, waggon, cart, ship, boat, or vessel, in which the same is suspected to be made, kept, or carried for such purpose as herein-before mentioned; and every person acting in the execution of any such warrant shall have, for seizing, removing to proper places, and detaining all such gunpowder, explosive, dangerous, or noxious substances, machines, engines, instruments, or things, found upon such search, which he shall have good cause to suspect to be intended to be used in committing any such offence, and the barrels, packages, cases, and other receptacles in which the same shall be, the same powers and protections which are given to persons searching for unlawful quantities of gunpowder under the warrant of a justice by the Act passed in the session holden in the twenty-third and twenty-fourth years of the reign of her present Majesty, cap. 139,¹ intituled an Act to amend the law concerning the making, keeping, and carriage of gunpowder and compositions of an explosive nature, and concerning the manufacture, sale, and use of fireworks.²

CHAPTER XVI.

OF THE PROCEDURE UNDER THE ACT RELATING TO OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON.

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 66, any constable or peace officer may take into custody, without a warrant, any person whom he shall find lying or loitering in any highway, yard, or other place during the night, and whom he shall have good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any felony in this Act mentioned, and shall take such person as soon as reasonably may be before a justice of the peace.

By sect. 67, in the case of every felony punishable under this Act, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, shall be punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is by this Act punishable; and every accessory after the fact to any felony punishable under this Act (except murder) shall be liable to be imprisoned for any term not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and every accessory after the fact to murder shall be liable to penal servitude for life

¹ Sect. 25.

² As to malicious injury by gunpowder, see 24 & 25 Vict. c. 97, ss. 9, 10.

or not less than three years, or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour; and whosoever shall counsel, aid, or abet the commission of any indictable misdemeanor punishable under this Act shall be liable to be proceeded against, indicted, and punished as a principal offender.

The 68th section provides for the admiralty jurisdiction.

By sect. 69, whenever imprisonment, with or without hard labour, may be awarded for any indictable offence under this Act, the court may sentence the offender to be imprisoned, or to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour, in the common gaol or house of correction.

By sect. 70, whenever solitary confinement may be awarded for any offence under this Act, the court may direct the offender to be kept in solitary confinement for any portion or portions of any imprisonment, or of any imprisonment with hard labour, which the court may award, not exceeding one month at any one time, and not exceeding three months in any one year; and whenever whipping may be awarded for any offence under this Act, the court may sentence the offender to be once privately whipped, and the number of strokes and the instrument with which they shall be inflicted shall be specified by the court in the sentence.

By sect. 71, whenever any person shall be convicted of any indictable misdemeanor punishable under this Act, the court may, if it shall think fit, in addition to or in lieu of any punishment by this Act authorized, fine the offender, and require him to enter into his own recognizances, and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace and being of good behaviour; and in case of any felony punishable under this Act otherwise than with death the court may, if it shall think fit, require the offender to enter into his own recognizances and to find sureties, both or either, for keeping the peace, in addition to any punishment by this Act authorized: provided that no person shall be imprisoned for not finding sureties under this clause for any period exceeding one year.

By sect. 72, the writ of certiorari is taken away, and the warrant of commitment is not to be void by reason of any defect, provided there be an allegation of a valid conviction.

By sect. 73, where any complaint shall be made of any offence against sect. 26 of this Act,¹ or of any bodily injury inflicted upon any person under the age of sixteen years, for which the party committing it is liable to be indicted, and the circumstances of which offence amount, in point of law, to a felony, or an attempt to commit a felony, or an assault with intent to commit a felony, and two justices before whom such complaint is heard shall certify that it is necessary that the prosecution should be conducted by the guardians of the union or place, or, where there are no guardians, by the overseers, such guardians or overseers, as the case may be, upon personal service of such certificate, or a duplicate thereof, upon the clerk of such guardians or upon any one of such overseers, shall conduct the prosecution, and shall pay the costs reasonably and properly incurred by them therein (so far as the same shall not be allowed to them under any order of any court) out of the common fund of the union, or out of the funds in the hands of the guardians or overseers, as the case may be; and, where there is a board of guardians, the clerk or some other officer of the union or place, and, where there is no board of guardians, one of the overseers of the poor, may, if such justices think it necessary for the purposes of public justice, be bound over to prosecute.

¹ Not providing apprentices or servants with food.

Costs.] By sect. 74, where any person shall be convicted on any indictment of any assault, whether with or without battery and wounding, or either of them, such person may, in addition to any sentence, be adjudged to pay to the prosecutor his actual costs of the prosecution, and such moderate allowance for the loss of time as the court shall by affidavit or other inquiry and examination ascertain to be reasonable; and unless such sum shall be sooner paid, the offender shall be imprisoned for any term not exceeding three months, in addition to the term of imprisonment (if any) to which the offender may be sentenced.

By sect. 75, the court may, by warrant under hand and seal, order such sum as shall be so awarded to be levied by distress and sale of the goods and chattels of the offender, and paid to the prosecutor, and that the surplus, if any, arising from such sale, shall be paid to the owner; and in case such sum shall be so levied the imprisonment awarded until payment of such sum shall thereupon cease.

By sect. 76, the summary proceedings in England are directed to be under 11 & 12 Vict. c. 43, and in Ireland under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 93. London and the Metropolitan Police District are saved.

By sect. 77, the costs of any prosecution for misdemeanor under the Act are to be allowed as in cases of felony.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF THE CORONER'S INQUISITION.

We purpose to treat in this place more particularly of the proceedings of the coroner when he takes an inquisition of death;¹ and with

¹ To which his jurisdiction is terferre in cases of fire. He can limited. Therefore he cannot in- only proceed in homicide and super reference to this point, it is of necessity that the inquest should be taken super visum corporis;¹ and formerly, it was a matter of some consideration to settle correctly, before what coroner an inquest should be holden; but as we shall see presently, the coroner of the jurisdiction where the body lies dead is the proper person to take the office. Therefore, if the body cannot be found, or if it be impracticable to disinter it, the coroner must abandon his proceeding, and leave the matter to be investigated in a more solemn manner; i. e., first, before justices of the peace,² and, secondly, before a higher criminal tribunal. Or, it might be, in the first instance, before the Court of King's Bench, if the felony were committed in the county where the court sits,³ that court having supreme control throughout England,⁴ and the Court of King's Bench may make commissions to inquire in other counties.⁵ Or, again, the inquiry may take place before commissioners of oyer and terminer,⁶ but not before a grand jury at the assizes;⁷ and if the coroner should omit or refuse to hold his court the same appeal was resorted to.⁸ But now by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116, s. 5, upon any refusal of a coroner to hold an inquest, the attorney-general may apply to the Court of Queen's Bench, or to a judge in vacation, for a rule calling on the coroner to shew cause why he should not hold the inquest, and if the rule be absolute, it may be with or without costs, and in case of refusal or neglect, the coroner becomes liable to an attachment. Further, it seems that the inquisition should be held upon the whole body; so that where a skull only was dug up and identified, the court stayed the filing of the verdict, there being an affidavit that the person had been dead for five years.⁹ However, if the coroner should not act in strict accordance with his office, but, on the contrary, should persist in taking the inquisition, notwithstanding the defect above mentioned, circumstances may be disclosed which will warrant the court in recording his proceedings. As if it should turn out, upon satisfactory affidavits, that a dishumation of the body could not have been productive of any benefit, nor information to the jury.¹⁰ Here, the court exercised a discretion upon facts arising out of the particular case before them, and so it would be if the body had lain so long in the ground as to make it doubtful whether a view could serve in any way the purposes of justice.¹¹

Jurisdiction.] The question concerning the inquest upon the visum. R. v. Herford, 29 L. J. Q. B. 249. In this case the court also had no doubt that a prohibition would lie to a court of criminal as well as civil jurisdiction.

¹ R. v. Ferrand, 3 B. & Ald. 260; 1 Hawk. c. 27, ss. 11, 12.

² East, P. C. 379.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 27, s. 12.

⁴ 1 Ventr. 182.

⁵ Id.

⁶ Id.

⁷ R. v. Killinghall, 1 Burr. 17.

⁸ See 1 Burr. 18, 19.

⁹ R. v. Bond, Str. 22.

¹⁰ R. v. Causey, 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 24.

¹¹ East, P. C. 379.

body itself, having been mentioned, the consideration arises as to the jurisdiction,—before what coroner the inquiry should proceed, whether before him whose office is where the death has happened, or again, where the body is found, or, whether it should be where the mortal hurt has occurred. There were distinctions and difficulties upon this point. By the statute 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 24, it was settled that the inquisition should be taken in the county where the death should happen. But this Act was held not to apply where the death arose from accidental injury, and it was doubted whether it would extend to a felonious injury committed out of the borough, although the death took place within the borough. And, at all events, the coroner of the borough had no jurisdiction, neither at common law, nor by statute, in cases of misadventure.¹ So, where a body, found in the Medway, within the limits of the coroner for the city of Rochester, was removed into the county of Kent, and there viewed by a jury of the city of Rochester, it was held that an inquisition held by the coroner of the city of Rochester within that city could not be supported.²

With reference to these cases, it is to be noted, that the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 12, has settled the difficulties concerning the injury and death, but it would not cure the defect of the coroner of the city of Rochester viewing the body dehors his jurisdiction. By that Act, sect. 1, the coroner only within whose jurisdiction the body of any person upon whose death an inquest ought to be holden, shall be lying dead, shall hold the inquest, notwithstanding that the cause of death did not arise within the jurisdiction of such coroner, and in the case of any body found dead in the sea, or in any creek, river, or navigable canal, within the flowing of the sea, where there shall be no deputy coroner for the admiralty, the inquest shall be holden only by the coroner having jurisdiction in the place where the body shall be first brought to land.

The death occurred in the county of S.; after death the body was removed to L. The inquest was held by the coroner of L., and a trial for manslaughter took place upon the inquisition. It was held that the inquisition was right, although some observations were made upon the obscurity of the statute.³

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 12, s. 2, it is enacted, that for the purpose of holding coroner's inquests, every detached part of a county, riding, or division,⁴ shall be deemed to be within that county, &c., by which it is wholly surrounded, or where it is surrounded by two or more counties, &c., or within that one with which it has the longest common boundary.

By sect. 3, if a verdict of murder or manslaughter, or accessory

¹ R. v. Great Western Railway Company, 3 Q. B. 333 ; 2 Gale & D. 773. See also R. v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 11 Ad. & El. 128, n.

² R. v. Hinde, 5 Q. B. 944.

³ R. v. Ellis, 2 Car. & K. 470.

⁴ There being some doubt whether coroners appointed expressly for some such detached parts of counties were not superseded by this Act of 6 & 7 Vict., the jurisdiction of such coroners was reserved to them by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, s. 23.

before the fact to any murder, shall be found at any such inquest, the coroner, and the justices of oyer and terminer, and gaol delivery for the county, city, district or place where the inquest shall be holden, and all other persons, shall have the same powers respectively for the commitment, trial, and execution of the sentence, as they now possess for such commitment, &c. within the jurisdiction where the death happened.

However, the inquiry need not take place at the same spot, nor, as it seems, in the same township where the body has been viewed,¹ but it is usual to summon the jury from the immediate neighbourhood; and the coroner may adjourn from place to place, as well as from time to time,² but the real place should be stated in the inquisition.³

The coroner is not compelled to hold two inquisitions, where there are more deaths than one, if the persons deceased were killed by the same cause, and died at the same time.⁴

By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, coroners may appoint a deputy, subject to the approval of the lord chancellor. Nevertheless, such deputy may not act except during the illness of the coroner, or during his absence for some lawful and reasonable cause. And the appointment may be cancelled and revoked by the coroner making it. The fact of the coroner being engaged upon another inquisition, is a sufficient cause of absence, although he may, in fact, be present at a portion of the inquiry which his deputy has conducted.⁵ But after the jury are sworn and the inquiry has commenced, the deputy should go on with the case, notwithstanding the appearance of the coroner.⁶

A coroner was removed by an order under the writs de coronatore amovendo and de coronatore eligendo at the same time for being in confinement out of the county.⁷ Again, the lord chancellor removed a coroner under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116, s. 6, for being intoxicated in the performance of his duty.⁸

Duties in cases of violent or doubtful death.] In cases of violent or doubtful death, it becomes the duty of all persons cognizant of the fact, and likewise that of the officers of the district, to take care that the coroner be speedily informed of the casualty,⁹ and in cases of violence, that the offender be forthwith apprehended, either upon

¹ 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 25.

² 3 Bulstr. 173.

³ East, P. C. 383.

⁴ R. v. West, 1 Gale & D. 481.

⁵ R. v. Perkin, 14 L. J. M. C. 87; 7 Q. B. 165.

⁶ 7 Q. B. ut supra. The inquisition taken before him is not invalid if stated to have been taken before the coroner. It ought to be so described. Id. Thus, by A. B., deputy, &c. Id. Whether the coroner for a borough is a corporate officer within 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, s. 1, is made a question. R. v. Grimshaw, 16 L. J. Q. B. 385; see also 10 Q. B. 747. S. C.

⁷ Ex parte Parnell, 1 Jac. & W. 451.

⁸ In re Ward, 30 L. J. Ch. 775, by petition. See 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, s. 29. And as to the election of coroners, see 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, and 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116.

⁹ East, P. C. 378; 1 Salk. 377.

hue and cry or otherwise.¹ And if such active search be not carried into effect, the person guilty of neglect is punishable by fine and imprisonment.² And, formerly, it was the custom to amerce the vill where such an event took place attended by bloodshed, unless the offender were rendered to justice, and in case of insufficiency on the part of the vill, the hundred was fined, and, in default of the hundred, the county.³ So it would be, if the body were allowed to remain unburied for an unreasonable time before summoning the coroner, even without any ground for suspecting that the deceased had been murdered, or slain by another.⁴ As, for instance, if a prisoner should happen to die, and putrefaction should take place in his body before the inquest is applied for, the gaoler or the township shall be amerced.⁵ And, if the coroner do not appear in a convenient time, he also is liable to fine and imprisonment.⁶ By 1 Hen. 8, c. 7, the forfeiture for each default by such coroner was 40s., concerning which, by sect. 2, justices of the peace and of assize had power to inquire.

By 4 Edw. 1, st. 2, (de officio coronatoris):—

1. When any person is reported to be slain, or suddenly dead, or wounded, the coroner is to assemble a jury from the neighbouring places for the purpose of inquiry,⁷ and in the case of a prisoner dead in gaol, six prisoners should form half the number of jurors, if there should be so many prisoners.⁸

This jury should be at least twelve in number, although they frequently amount to twenty or upwards, although twelve must agree to the verdict,⁹ and the main object of their inquiry must be the violent death, for they cannot rightly take into their consideration any other. And Sir Edward East cites instances where coroners have been punished for deviating from this rule, especially where their own private advantage has been the motive. As in the case of the coroners of Norfolk,¹⁰ and Anglesea,¹¹ who persisted in holding inquests upon persons who had unquestionably perished by shipwreck. So, in Cumberland, the coroner was proved to have been guilty of extortion, in taking a sum of money as a bribe for forbearing to hold an inquest, and the offence was aggravated, because, as the deceased had died in consequence of a fever, the coroner had no authority for his proceeding. He was sentenced to pay a fine of 100*l.*, to be imprisoned for six months, and to be removed from his office.¹²

2. The second branch of inquiry under the statute 4 Edw. 1, has reference to the place where the death happened, as whether it

¹ East, P. C. 377.

² 2 Hawk. c. 12, s. 4.

³ East, P. C. 378.

⁴ Id.

⁵ 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 23.

⁶ 2 Hale, P. C. 58.

⁷ R. v. Crosse, 1 Sid. 204.

⁸ East, P. C. 383.

⁹ East, P. C. 383, In a civil action it will be presumed after verdict that twelve such jurors had agreed upon an inquisition. 4 B. & C. 151; 6 Dowl. & Ry. 188.

¹⁰ East, P. C. 382.

¹¹ R. v. The Coroner of Anglesea, Id.

¹² R. v. Harrison, Id.

took place in any "house, field, bed, town, or tavern, or company, and who were there;" and then the guilty parties are, if possible, to be discovered, together with those who were present at the death, either men or women, and "of what age, if they can speak or have any discretion."

3. The persons then found guilty by the inquisition are to be forthwith committed to gaol; and,

4. Those who are found to have been there, but who are not guilty, are to be attached till the gaol delivery, and their names written on the rolls of the coroners.

5. Again, if the body be found in fields or woods, "it is to be inquired whether he was slain in the same place or not; and,

6. "If brought and laid there, endeavour shall be made to follow their steps which brought the body thither, whether he was brought upon a horse, or in a cart."

7. "It shall be inquired also whether the dead person were known, or else a stranger, and where he lay the night before." And here we may remark, that although the statute 4 Edw. 1, speaks only of persons slain, drowned, or suddenly dead or wounded, the common law jurisdiction of the coroner as to other matters survives, and, therefore, it is that he is warranted in taking inquests upon such as die in prison, from whatever cause their deaths may have arisen.¹ Because, amongst other possible circumstances, the death might be attributed to unreasonable hardships in gaol.² But neither at common law nor by statute is the coroner justified in interfering with any persons except those who are connected with or present at the death, whence it follows, that he cannot deal with accessories after the fact.³ Nor can he interfere, with propriety, to take cognizance of deaths in private families, in cases of apoplexy, unless he is sent for by the peace officers.⁴

8. Further directions are given to the coroner respecting such as have been found guilty of the murder. He is immediately to go to the house of the culprit, and inquire what goods he has, and what corn is in his grange, and, if he be a freeman, how much land he hath, and the annual value thereof, and what corn he hath upon the ground, which land, corn, and goods are to be valued and delivered to the township, which shall be answerable before the justices for all, and the land shall remain in the king's hands, until the lord of the fee have made fine for it. "The relation of the forfeiture is to the stroke so as to forfeit all mesne conveyances."⁵ But in cases of felo de se, goods and chattels only are forfeited. And it is not entirely agreed whether the reference ought to be made to the stroke, or to the inquisition, but it is said that the current of authorities is in favour of the stroke,—whilst Lord Hale would refer it to the death.⁶ "For," says Lord Hale, "suppose a man should give himself a mortal

¹ 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 21.

² Id.

³ Id. s. 26.

⁴ R. v. Kent, Justices, 11 East, 229.

⁵ East, P. C. 388.

⁶ Id. 1 Hawk. c. 27, s. 10;
1 Hale, 414.

stroke, and live eleven months after, how shall he support himself and his family?

The statute then goes on to say, that, at the termination of the inquiry, the bodies of persons dead or slain shall be buried.

The second branch of the Act speaks of such as may be drowned, or who die suddenly, and it is to be inquired whether such were so drowned or slain, or strangled by the sign of a cord tied straight about their necks, or any of their members, or "upon any other hurt found upon their bodies." And if they were not slain, then ought the coroners to attach the finders, and all others in company.² The coroner ought not to exclude testimony offered at his inquest, on the ground that it may tend to criminate the witness.³

Deodands.] As long as deodands were allowed to continue, they were the subject of much difficulty and litigation. The object which seems to have attracted attention in former times to this point, was the purchase of masses for the souls of those who were suddenly snatched away; but, subsequently, the deodand came to be looked upon as the perquisite of the lord of the manor, as well as a medium to avoid purgatory. However, from and after the 1st day of September, 1846, deodands were abolished. Thus, by 9 & 10 Vict. c. 62, there shall (after that day) be no forfeiture of any chattel for or in respect of the same having moved to or caused the death of man; and no coroner's jury sworn to inquire, upon the sight of any dead body, how the deceased came by his death, shall find any forfeiture of any chattel which may have moved to or caused the death of the deceased, or any deodand whatsoever; and it shall not be necessary in any indictment or inquisition for homicide to allege the value of the instrument which caused the death of the decease, or to allege that the same was of no value.⁴

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 93, an action is given to the relations of a deceased party, notwithstanding the death of the person injured through a wrongful act, neglect, or default, and although the

¹ 1 Hale, 414.

² See East, P. C. 381; 2 Hawk. c. 9, ss. 19, 20.

³ Wahley v. Cooke, 4 Exch. 511; 19 L. J. Ex. 91.

⁴ As to the old law, see 1 Hawk. c. 26; East, P. C. 386, &c.; Cro. Jac. 483; Poph. 136; 2 Keb. 719, 806. R. v. Rolfe, Fost. 266. R. v. Grew, Id. 267. S. C. R. v. Grew, Say. Rep. 249. R. v. Stockton and Darlington Railway Company, 8 Dowl. P. C. 516. R. v. Grand Junction Railway Company, 11 Ad. & El. 128; 3 Per. & D. 57.

R. v. Brownlow, 8 D. P. C. 157. R. v. Polwart or Polworth, 1 Q. B. Rep. 818; 1 Gale & D. 211; 9 Dowl. P. C. 1048. R. v. West, 1 Q. B. 826; 1 Gale & D. 481. R. v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 10 Mees. & W. 58; 2 Dowl. (N. S.), 293. R. v. London and Birmingham Railway Company, 1 Dowl. (N. S.), 15. Att. Gen. v. Eastern Counties Railway Company, 3 Rail. Ca. 145; and see 6 & 7 Vict. c. 12, s. 4. which section was repealed by 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101.

death shall have been caused under such circumstances as amount in law to felony.

Of the finding.] Verdicts of coroner's juries are, for the most part, of murder,¹ manslaughter, justifiable homicide, accidental death, died by the visitation of God, insanity, felo de se,—in other words, the death is attributed to violent means, used by the deceased, or by some other person, or to the agency of some inanimate thing, or to the immediate interference of the Deity. Where the cause of death proceeds from the inanimate object, circumstances demanding inquiry might arise, independently of the old question of deodand; as, if a party should be killed in consequence of the bad state of some public work, as a bridge, in which case it shall be ascertained whether the inhabitants were in default, for if so, the township must be amerced.² Where the verdict is felo de se, the forfeiture is confined to goods and chattels, which belong either to the king, or to the lord of the franchise, &c. But a pardon before the finding of the offence in question will save the penalty.³ Felo de se may be, although the party did not intend to kill himself. For if A. endeavour to murder B., and give himself a mortal wound in the attempt, A. becomes a felon of this order, and his goods are forfeited.⁴ But if B. do any act in his own defence, whereby A., the assassin, is killed, A. is not felo de se, although the homicide on B.'s part is justifiable.⁵ Again, it is said, that if A. kill B. at B.'s command or persuasion, B. is not felo de se, because the assent of B. was against the laws both of God and man, although A. would be clearly guilty of murder.⁶ But it is added, that if A. were to be persuaded by B. to buy a deadly poison in order that they might both take it together, for the purpose of mutual self-destruction, and both were then to partake of it, B. would be felo de se, because of his original promotion of the wicked design.⁷

The inquisition.] We come now to the practical details of the inquisition. It has been said that the inquiry must proceed super visum corporis, and that a jury of twelve at the least must be empanelled. It is the coroner's next business to see that all the witnesses who can speak to facts are fully heard, and that the evidence is properly taken. By 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 4, every coroner upon any inquisition before him taken, whereby any person shall be indicted for manslaughter, or murder, or as an accessory to murder before the fact, shall put in writing the evidence given to the jury before him, or as much thereof as shall be material, and shall have authority to bind over by recognizance, all persons who know or declare anything material touching the said manslaughter

¹ See as to the verdict where an inquest was held upon dead bastard children. R. v. Bayley, Car. Cr. L. 243.

² 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 28. R. v. Hall, Al. 51.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 27, s. 9. See also sects. 7 & 8; 3 Mod. 101.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 27, s. 4.

⁵ Id. sect. 5.

⁶ Id. sect. 6.

⁷ Id.

or murder, or offence of being accessory, to appear at the next court of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery, or superior court of a county palatine, or great sessions, where the trial is to be for the purpose of giving evidence. And the coroner is to subscribe the evidence, recognizances, and inquisition, and deliver the same to the officer of the court where the trial is to be, before or at the opening of the court. By sect. 5, the court may, upon examination and proof, in a summary manner, fine the coroner for neglect. And the 6th section extends the provisions of the Act to coroners, not only of counties at large, but also of all their jurisdictions. Moreover, the coroner must entirely confine himself to the examination of witnesses for the prosecution. Scorey, being in search of poachers with his master, an under keeper, was so unfortunate as to strike a man upon the head, upon his refusing to surrender, and to kill him. The coroner would not receive the testimony of the master, but admitted the companion of the slain person to give evidence, and then told the jury to find a verdict of murder, but the jury persisted in their opinion that this was "accidental death," upon which the coroner recorded their verdict, but sent Scorey to gaol, by his warrant on the charge of murder. But the Court of King's Bench, however, admitted the prisoner to bail upon affidavit of the above facts, and granted a rule against the coroner to show cause why an information should not be filed against him.¹ So, the inquisition was quashed, where the coroner refused to hear witnesses on behalf of the administrator to prove the insanity of the deceased, and felo de se was found.² And it is likewise the coroner's strict duty to examine the surgeon, in order that the cause of death may be explained in as satisfactory a manner as possible to the inquest.³ Still, the coroner is not under an obligation to bind over the witnesses for the defence. He ought not to do so, but to confine himself to bind over those for the prosecution; yet, if he should, the clerk of indictments, who has all the names put on the back of the indictment, is not to be blamed, and although all the witnesses on both sides go before the grand jury.⁴ The duty of coroners is to read over to every witness his evidence, and to desire him to sign it.⁵

Medical witnesses.] For some time there was much difficulty and considerable hardship in the case of medical witnesses.⁶ But late Acts of parliament have provided for these inconveniences. By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 89, s. 1,⁷ if it shall appear at any inquest that the deceased was attended at his death or during his last illness by any legally qualified medical practitioner, the coroner may command the attendance of such practitioner, or, if the de-

¹ R. v. Scorey, Leach, 43.

² R. v. Barclee, 2 Sid. 101.

³ R. v. Quinch, 4 C. & P. 571.

⁴ R. v. Taylor, 9 C. & P. 672.

⁵ R. v. Plummer, 1 Car. & K. 600.

⁶ See R. v. Taylor, 5 C. & P. 301.

where the costs of opening a body by the direction of the coroner were refused.

⁷ Not to extend to Scotland: sect. 7.

ceased was not so attended, any such legally qualified person, being at the time in actual practice in or near the place where the death has happened, may be summoned; and the coroner, either in his order for the attendance of the medical witness, or at any time between the issuing of such order and the termination of the inquest, may direct a post-mortem examination, with or without an analysis of the contents of the stomach or intestines, by the medical witness or witnesses summoned, provided, that if it shall be stated upon oath before the coroner, that the death was caused by the improper or negligent treatment of any particular medical practitioner, that person shall not be allowed to perform or assist at the post-mortem examination. By sect. 6, a penalty of 5*l.* is awarded against any such practitioner should he disobey the coroner's order, either upon proof of personal service of the order, or of the receipt of such order in time for attendance, or of service at the residence of such person. Complaint is to be made by the coroner or any two of the jury before any two justices having jurisdiction where the inquest is held, and in default of payment, the penalty may be enforced by distress and sale of the offender's goods, as in other cases of forfeiture.

The 2nd section provides for a case in which the majority of the jury may not be satisfied with the evidence of the medical practitioner or other witnesses. In such a case the said majority may name to the coroner any other practitioner, in writing, duly qualified, and require the coroner to issue his order for the attendance of that person, and for the performance of a post-mortem examination, with or without an analysis, although such an examination might have been previously performed. The coroner who refuses to obey such a request by the jury, and to issue his order, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. The 3rd section regulates the payment of fees to the medical witnesses,¹ and directs that they shall be paid out of the poor's rate. Nevertheless, as to the last provision, it is repealed by 1 Vict. c. 68, s. 2, and such fees are to be paid by the coroner to the medical witness summoned immediately after the termination of the proceedings, and repaid to him out of the county rate or borough fund,² and these payments are compulsory upon justices in quarter sessions. With reference to orders for payment under 25 Geo. 2, c. 29, the Act for remunerating the services of coroners, the justices were the judges of his conduct, and the Court of King's Bench would not interfere with the discretion of the sessions; but there was no such latitude under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 89, and 7 Will. 4 & 1 Vict. c. 68.³ And now by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116, s. 4, the coroner is to be paid by salary instead of fees; and by sect. 3, all provisions of acts as to coroners' fees are repealed.

But, to go on with the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 89. By sect. 4, no fee can be earned for any post-mortem examination which may be instituted without the previous direction of the coroner. And by sect. 5, if any such inquest shall be holden in a public institution, whether supported by endowments or by voluntary subscriptions, the medical officer whose duty it may have been to attend the deceased person, as a medical officer of such institution, shall not be entitled to those fees. The inquisition should be drawn up for the signature of the jurors immediately after the verdict, and it should not be adjourned to a future day.¹ Where he did so adjourn, and then the jury refused to sign, upon which he threatened to commit them, the inquisition was set aside.²

¹ For a post-mortem examination 2*l.* 2*s.*; for attendance otherwise, 1*l.* 1*s.*

² Sects. 2, 3.

³ R. v. Justices of Carmarthenshire, 16 L. J. M. C. 167; 10 Q. B. 796.

Form of inquisition.] Notwithstanding the high opinion which was formerly entertained of the coroner's inquisition, it is not now regarded, at least, in cases of murder and manslaughter, in a much higher light than that of a preliminary inquiry, although it was at one time considered that a finding could scarcely be traversed.³ At the present day, however, although convictions have certainly been obtained upon such an inquisition without an indictment, it is very usual to take exceptions to the record itself, and these objections have usually been made with greater success to inquisitions than to indictments.

However, the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, has stepped in to arrest in a great measure the technical objections which at one time so often prevailed. By sect. 2, no inquisition found upon an inquest, nor judgment recorded thereupon, shall be quashed, stayed, or reversed for want of the averment therein of any matter unnecessary to be proved, nor for the omission of the words, "with force and arms," or, "against the peace," or, "against the form of the statute," nor for the omission or insertion of any other words or expressions of mere form or surplusage, nor for the insertion of the words "upon their oath," instead of the words "upon their oaths," nor for omitting to state the time at which the offence was committed, where time is not the essence of the offence, nor for stating the time imperfectly,⁴ nor because any person or persons mentioned in any such inquisition is or are designated by a name of office or other description or appellation instead of his, her, or their proper name or names, nor by reason of the non-insertion of the names of the jurors in the body of any such inquisition, or of any difference in the spelling of the names of any of the jurors in the body of any such inquisition, and the names subscribed thereto, nor because any juror or jurors shall have set his or their mark or marks to any such inquisition instead of subscribing his or their name or names thereto, nor because any such mark or marks is or are unattested,⁵ provided the name or names of such juror or

¹ R. v. Mallet and another, 1 Cox, 336.

² S. C.

³ 2 Hawk, c. 9, ss. 54, 55.

⁴ See the cases before the statute. R. v. Philips, 1 Str. 261. R. v. Hethersal, 3 Mod. 80. R. v. Huggins, 3 C. & P. 414. R. v. Brown- low, 8 D. P. C. 157; 11 Ad. & El. 119; 3 Per. & D. 52. R. v. Mitchell, 7 C. & P. 800. R. v. Devett and another, 8 C. & P. 639.

⁵ R. v. Bowen, 3 C. & P. 602; R. v. Stockton and Darlington Railway Company, 8 D. P. C. 516.

jurors is or are set forth, nor because any juror or jurors has or have signed his or their christian name or names by means of an initial, or partial signature only, and not at full length,¹ nor because of any erasure or interlineations appearing in any such inquisition, unless the same shall have been proved to have been made therein after the same was signed, nor for want of a proper venue, where the inquest shall appear or purport to have been taken by a coroner of or for a county, riding, city, borough, liberty, division, or place in which it shall appear or purport to have been taken, nor (except only in cases of murder or manslaughter) for or by reason of any such inquisition not being duly sealed,² or written upon parchment,³ nor by reason of any such inquisition having been taken before any deputy, instead of the coroner himself, nor because the coroner and jury did not all view the body at one and the same instant, provided they all viewed the body at the first sitting of the inquest, and in all or any such cases of technical defect, any judge of the courts at Westminster, or judge of assize or gaol delivery, may order an amendment to be made if he shall so think fit.

These technical defects are, therefore,—

1. With reference to certain averments, omissions, and insertions of a technical nature, and to unnecessary proofs.
2. Defects as to time.
3. As to names.
4. Erasures.
5. Venue.
6. Paper or parchment.
7. As to deputy.
8. As to simultaneous view.⁴

Still, matters of form not mentioned in the statute, and not capable of amendment by the court, and matters of substance, remain as before.

Then as to the jurors, if by reason of the religious or other opinions of a juror, the oath should be dispensed with, as where the witness is a Quaker or Moravian, the coroner in setting forth the affirmation, should mention the persuasion of the person making such affirmation.⁵ The signatures of the coroner and jurors are also essential;⁶ and the coroner's clerk ought not to sign in

¹ R. v. Evett, 6 B. & C. 247; R. v. Bennett, 6 C. & P. 179. R. v. Brownlow, ut supra; 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 22.

² See East, P. C. 383.

³ R. v. Beavers and others. See East P. C. 383. "The inquisitions there were only signed by the coroner and foreman of the jury." Id. n. R. v. Gregory, 15 L. J. M. C. 38. where an inquisition taken on paper, but not quashed, was held admissible in evidence, not as an inquisition, but as proof that an inquiry into the subject matter of it had taken place.

⁴ Sect. 3 restricts this Act to England and Wales.

⁵ R. v. Polfield, 2 D. P. C. 469.

⁶ R. v. Norfolk Justices, East, P. C. 383.

the name of the coroner.¹ Though by "E. M., his deputy," is good.² So that it would be a good objection that no jurors' names were appended to the inquisition, should the fact turn out so; although the signatures of twelve out of twenty-three were deemed sufficient.³ And the names ought to correspond with those mentioned in the caption of the inquisition.⁴ Although if several persons have the same christian and surname, it is not necessary to distinguish them in the caption either by abode or addition.⁵ In cases of murder and manslaughter the inquisition should be sealed as well as signed, and written on parchment,⁶ for the excepted cases show a clear conclusion that as to them parchment is still necessary.⁷

The inquisition must be absolute in its finding. Nos certe credimus has been held insufficient.⁸ And in other respects, there should be the same particularity as in an indictment. Thus, the particular circumstances of the case ought fully to appear, such as the nature and manner of a mortal wound.⁹ And it is a principle that the conclusion should be warranted by the premises, so that, in a case of self-drowning, the mode by which the death was accomplished should be explained, "for it is not sufficient to find that a man murdered himself, without showing how."¹⁰ So, where several persons were killed by the fall of a public building, the inquisition was held faulty for want of stating distinctly what part of the materials caused the death, or the precise value of them.¹¹ But the latter objection is now done away with by the statute 9 & 10 Vict. c. 62. A fortiori, if it be not stated that the party died of the fall, wounds, or other injury, the verdict cannot stand.¹² And it has been held that the absence of murdravit vitiated a verdict of wilful murder.¹³ A coroner's jury found, that the death was occasioned by means of a locomotive engine belonging to B., being driven against A., and that the same "did feloniously cast to the ground" the deceased. This was held not to be a sufficient description of the cause of death.¹⁴ Facts, therefore, which the verdict does not warrant, should not be stated, and thus it was that upon one occasion the court quashed a verdict of justifiable homicide.¹⁵ Again, the place where the death happened, or where the

¹ In the matter of Daws, 8 Ad. & El. 936; 1 Per. & D. 146.

² R. v. Perkin, 14 L. J. M. C. 87.

³ See Poph. 202; 1 Lew. C. C. 55.

⁴ R. v. Huggins, 3 C. & P. 414.

⁵ R. v. Nicholas, 7 C. & P. 538.

⁶ East, P. C. 383; 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, s. 2, ut supra.

⁷ R. v. Whalley, 19 L. J. Q. B. 14; 7 Dowl. & L. 317.

⁸ Anon. 12 Mod. 112.

⁹ R. v. Clerk, 1 Salk. 377; 7 Mod. 16.

¹⁰ R. v. Parker, 2 Lev. 140; 3 Salk. 101.

¹¹ R. v. Deputy Steward and Coroner of London, cited, 10 Law Mag. 92, Jerv. Archb. 408.

¹² R. v. Clerk, ut supra.

¹³ R. v. Aldenham, 2 Lev. 152. See 1 Salk. 377.

¹⁴ R. v. Stockton and Darlington Railway Company, 8 D. P. C. 516.

¹⁵ In re Culley, 5 B. & Adol. 230; 2 Nev. & M. 61.

body was found, must be inserted.¹ This means the place where the offence was committed, not the venue, which has been already provided for by the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83.² If the place, however, under any circumstances, appears not to be within the jurisdiction of the coroner, the inquisition will not hold.³ He must also be coroner for the district.⁴ Although coroner in the county is sufficient, without saying coroner for the county.⁵ Therefore, an inquest taken for the liberty of an honour must, on the face of it, appear to have been taken within such honour.⁶

An inquisition charging principals in the second degree with being "feloniously present, then and there abetting," &c., could not be supported, since "feloniously" could not be construed to extend beyond the word "present."⁷ And "so the jurors say," &c. (the concluding averment), requires neither time nor place to be stated.⁸

Amendments.] Besides the amendments now permitted by the statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 83, there were some faults which might have been amended before. But these were chiefly defects of form when the substance had been duly found by the inquest.⁹ Upon some occasions the judges have sent for the coroner into court, for the purpose of amending the inquisition.¹⁰ It is agreed, however, that an amendment as to matters of substance cannot be permitted.¹¹ And the question, therefore, is, what shall be said to be matters of substance. The inquisition stated that A. feloniously drowned himself, without adding, that he thereupon died, but the court held, that his death was a necessary inference from a felonious submersion, and suffered an amendment to that effect.¹² In the same case, it was said by Twisden, J., that murdravit might be introduced as an amendment, but Kelyng was of a different opinion.¹³ So, where the jury had found a cart, as a deodand, to be the property of "Messrs. Williams & Co., in the county of Essex, calico printers," Yates, J., allowed an alteration to "Stephen Williams and Clement Bellamy, of the Poultry, London, linendrapers."¹⁴ But this last case cannot be relied upon as an authority, unless it can be ascertained upon what affidavit the alteration was made, for, upon a more recent occasion, where it was found that the death had been occasioned by a coach and horses, the property of A. & B. & Co., it was held that the verdict

¹ R. v. Evett, 6 B. & C. 247. R. v. Buckler, Dy. 69.

² Sect. 2.

³ R. v. Thorny, Cro. Jac. 276.

⁴ R. v. Dearing, Cro. El. 193.

⁵ R. v. Heydon, 4 Rep. 41.

⁶ R. v. The Coroner for the Liberty of Pomfret Honour, 8 Jur. 910.

⁷ R. v. Nicholas, 7 C. & P. 538.

⁸ S. C.

⁹ 1 Hawk. c. 27, s. 15.

¹⁰ 3 Mod. 101.

¹¹ R. v. Shepherd, 1 Sid. 259; 11 Mod. 271. R. v. Burdy cited.

¹² R. v. Glover, 1 Sid. 259.

¹³ Id.

¹⁴ R. v. Williams and Bellamy, 6 B. & C. 250, n.

could not be altered, upon affidavits that the property was in A. & B. alone.¹

Quashing the inquisition.] The next point is as to the application to quash the inquisition. It will not be quashed for a misdirection to the jury.² It needs not to be made by any one in particular. Where the finding as to one prisoner only is objected to, the rule nisi need not be served upon the others.³ Sometimes the finding is removed by certiorari, and the application also occasionally proceeds from the crown.⁴ Where the verdict was suicide, "whilst suffering under the cruel conduct of A. B.," and the coroner took down this as the finding of the jury, the court would not grant a certiorari in order to quash so much of the finding as was irrelevant.⁵ For an inquisition may be bad as to part, and yet good as to the residue.⁶ But too much time must not be allowed to elapse before the writ is moved for. Eight months were deemed too long a delay, although there were several irregularities, which, however, did not appear on the face of the inquisition, and although it was suggested, that the cause of death had not been duly inquired into.⁷ Sometimes, likewise, the court will put the party objecting to demur, which they consider in general to be the most convenient course.⁸ There are still other causes than those above mentioned, with regard to form and substance on the record, which will operate to vitiate an inquisition. As where the coroner took some of the jury off the inquisition, fearing that they would return a verdict unfavourable to his views.⁹ And sometimes the court will stay the filing until further motion. As where the coroner had dug up a skull five years after the death, and insisted that the skull sufficiently identified the deceased.¹⁰

As soon as the inquisition has been quashed, it is as if there had not been an inquisition, and either a new inquest must be holden, or a writ of melius inquirendum must issue.¹¹ In the first case, the inquiry proceeds super visum corporis; in the other it is

¹ R. v. Evett, 6 B. & C. 247. A venire had been awarded against Evett, and he appeared and demurred to the inquisition.

² R. v. M'Intosh, 7 W. R. 52; 32 L. T. 146.

³ R. v. Mallet and another, 1 Cox, C. C. 336, where the inquisition was quashed as to one only.

⁴ In re Culley, 5 B. & Adol. 230; 2 Nev. & M. 61.

⁵ Ex parte Scratchley, 2 Dowl. & L. 29.

⁶ Ex parte Carruthers, 1 Man. & Ry. M. C. 435.

⁷ In the matter of Daws, 8 Ad. & El. 436; 1 Per. & D. 196.

⁸ R. v. Brownlow, 11 Ad. & El. 119, 128. Lord Denman. 8 D. P. C. 157, 163; 3 Per. & D. 52.

⁹ R. v. Stukely, 12 Mod. 493; Holt's Ca. 167. See also Anon. 1 Ventr. 352.

¹⁰ R. v. Bond, 1 Str. 22.

¹¹ 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 56. Hawkins says here, that a new inquest is to be taken if the inquisition be quashed for a defect in point of form only. But he must be understood to mean where there is no blame attributable to the coroner, because a defect in form is not in general a cause for quashing the verdict.

taken upon affidavit, for the coroner can only take a verdict super-visum, and he is not again to be trusted.¹ And, where the body has been dug up for the second time, it is usual to apply to the court for leave to exhume it for the purpose of a fresh inquest.² And, if possible, those who saw the corpse in the first instance, should be summoned as jurors upon the second occasion.³

The writ of melius inquirendum, a clause for which needs not to be inserted in a rule nisi,⁴ was at first opposed,⁵ but it has long been acquiesced in. It is generally upon an office post mortem, and is directed to the sheriff.⁶ But the court will not grant it without proof of malpractices on the part of the coroner.⁷ Where the jury had found a person non compos mentis, whereas, in truth, he was felo de se, the court appears not to have allowed the writ.⁸ But, on the other hand, there is an instance where the party was found felo de se, whereas he was but non compos, and the court granted a rule nisi for the writ, although the executor might have traversed the inquest.⁹ Yet, again, some few years afterwards, such a writ was, under similar circumstances, denied, and the court advised the administrator to remove the inquisition, and then suggest himself to have been grieved, whereby the matter and truth of the finding might come in question.¹⁰

But no sooner does the coroner's misbehaviour appear, than the writ immediately comes into operation. As where the coroner told the jury that they might find felo de se as a matter of course, although the jury were satisfied of the deceased's lunacy. They found accordingly, but coming to be better informed, they insisted upon signing a fresh inquisition, upon which the coroner returned the first in order to cover the goods. But the court stayed the filing of it, and committed the coroner,¹¹ and had it not been for the second inquisition they would have quashed the first finding, and issued the writ of melius inquirendum. And where the coroner kept the inquisition in his pocket, instead of returning it, the court removed him and fined him 100*l*.¹² By 3 Hen. 7, c. 1, if the coroner do not return his inquisition to the next gaol delivery, he shall forfeit 5*l*. for every default.

There was a committal for murder by magistrates whilst the coroner's jury were sitting. Application was made to the court

¹ R. v. Bunney, 1 Salk. 190; 1073; 2 Show. 199. The case of the coroner of Westminster.

² See R. v. Barclees, 2 Sid. 101.

R. v. Clerk, 1 Salk. 377; per Holt, C. J., Holt's Ca., 167. R. v. Saunders, 1 Str. 167. R. v. Hethersal, 3 Mod. 80; Anon. 1 Str. 533.

³ See 12 Mod. 493; 2 Sid. 101.

⁴ R. v. Mallet and another, 1 Cox, 336.

⁵ R. v. Harleston, Cro. El. 371.

⁶ Per Hale, C. J., 1 Mod. 82.

⁷ R. v. Stanlake, 1 Mod. 82;

¹ Ventr. 181. R. v. Ripley, 2 Str.

1073; 2 Show. 199. The case of the coroner of Westminster.

⁸ R. v. Bunney, 3 Mod. 238.

⁹ R. v. Storke, 3 Keb. 800.

¹⁰ R. v. Ripley alias Oldfield, Tho. Jones, 198.

¹¹ R. v. Wakefield, 1 Str. 69. To the same effect, R. v. Coates, 1 Ch. Burn. 941.

¹² R. v. Lord Buckhurst, 1 Keb. 280. See also 1 Wms. Saund. 355, n. 2.; Id. 362, n. 1; 2 Hawk, c. 9, s. 56, and as to the mode of proceeding against the coroner for misbehaviour, 3 Ch. Burn. 941.

for a habeas corpus to bring up the prisoner, that the witnesses might identify him, but the court would not grant the writ, for he might be identified by the evidence of the witnesses who were examined before the magistrates, or by a witness sent to the prison for that purpose. But Coleridge, J., affirmed that the court had the power to issue such a writ.¹ A coroner may, for the purpose of giving evidence as to a particular fact, use an instrument drawn up by him as an inquisition, whether it be or not a formal or valid inquisition.²

The costs of quashing a coroner's inquisition may be recovered from the coroner.³

An attempt was made to hold a second inquest before the first had been quashed, but the court made the rule absolute for a certiorari to remove the inquisition. The coroner cannot hold a second inquest, unless a melius inquirendum has been awarded, or unless the first be quashed, and he be set in motion by the court.⁴ An inquisition upon a melius inquirendum may be traversed, but not one taken super visum corporis.⁵

SURETY OF THE PEACE.

Surety of the peace is the acknowledging of a recognizance or bond to the king, taken by a competent judge of record, for keeping the peace. And this any justice is entitled to require, either as a minister, in obedience, for example, to a writ of supplicavit, or as a judge by virtue of his commission.⁶ And it should be understood, that if the justice decline to entertain the application, the Court of Queen's Bench is not precluded from interference.⁷ If any one will make it clear to the justice that he has reasonable ground of apprehension, either for his life, or that he may receive some bodily harm from the defendant, the justice may call upon such defendant to find sureties for a certain period to keep the peace towards all the subjects of the crown, and especially towards the complainant. Threats will be sufficient for this purpose, and so if the defendant declare that he will proceed then to do the mischief, it is the same.⁸ A threat to burn the complainant's dwelling comes within the like rule,⁹ and so does a threat to imprison.¹⁰ And it is no defence to allege that an act of grace has passed, and so that the crime in respect of which the imprisonment was threatened, has been pardoned.¹¹ However, a threat against a man's servants, or cattle, seems to be insufficient;¹² and a mere apprehension of a neighbour because of a quarrel, without more, will not warrant this proceeding.¹³ Although it is ¹ In re Cooke, 14 L. J. M. C. 188; 7 Q. B. 653. As to the election of coroner, see 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92.

² R. v. Gregory, 8 Q. B. 508.

³ Foxall v. Barnett, 2 El. & Bl. 928; 23 L. J. Q. B. 7.

⁴ R. v. White and another, 29 L. J. Q. B. 257.

⁵ R. v. Bonny, Carth. 72.

⁶ Dalt. c. 116, p. 267.

⁷ R. v. Mallinson, 16 Q. B. 367.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 6.

⁹ Id.

¹⁰ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 7.

¹¹ R. v. Mendez, 1 Str. 473.

¹² Lamb. 83.

¹³ Dalt. c. 116, p. 269.

added, that there may be a special writ out of chancery directed to the sheriff, commanding him to enforce a surety against damage to the servants or the goods, or, in default, to detain the offender till such surety be found.

A threat to injure the wife or child of a complainant seems to be sufficient to justify sureties.¹ The complaint must be upon oath, and must state that it is not made out of malice nor vexation, and it must relate to a present or future, and not to a past danger,² and an affirmation was held to be insufficient, although now sufficient.³ A partner has been allowed to swear in the Queen's Bench that his business leads him to his house of partnership, and that he is in danger from his partner, although he could not swear unqualifiedly to danger. Articles were allowed.⁴ A justice assaulted a person in April, who did not apply to the Queen's Bench till June; but in the interim the defendant renewed his threats of flogging the exhibitant, should the latter persist in writing to a young lady, a relation of the defendant. In the absence of evidence of the fresh threat, Wightman, J., hesitated, but, the articles being amended, an attachment was ordered to issue.⁵ The justice is the source of the discretion which in general governs these points concerning surety of the peace. When he is satisfied that there is a reasonable foundation for fear of injury or worse mischief, the course is to grant the security demanded.⁶ There was a case where some threats were used towards the complainant, but it was insisted for him that the words were used in a metaphorical sense; nevertheless, there was an information duly made upon oath, and the justice ordered sureties to be found. The court would not interfere with that discretion, and refused a rule to remove the recognizances,⁷ and, by the same rule, the court will not reduce the amount of security ordered by the justice.⁸ Moreover, he is not confined to words or blows, but may interpret looks, tones, or general conduct to be threats, provided it be deposed upon oath that the behaviour complained of amounts to a threat of personal violence. The court, however, will not draw the inference, if the exhibitant fail to state it in the articles.⁹ Yet the nature of the threat needs not to appear on the face of the document, nor the time when it was made.¹⁰ And former conduct may be referred to as evidence of an intention to be mischievous,

¹ Dalt. c. 116, p. 269.

² 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 6; Dalt. c. 116, p. 269; Burn's Just. tit. "Surety of the Peace."

³ In re Aston, 12 Mees. & W. 456. R. v. Green, 1 Str. 527. Hilton v. Byron, 12 Mod. 243. But whether the justice be bound to act upon the oath of the complainant, if he should not think it worthy of credit, is made a query?

⁴ R. v. Mallinson, 16 Q. B. 367; 20 L. J. M. C. 33.

⁵ Ex parte Hulse, 21 L. J. M. C.

21.

⁶ See R. v. Lord Vane, 13 East, 171, n.

⁷ R. v. Tregarthen, 5 B. & Adol. 678; 2 Nev. & M. 379.

⁸ R. v. Holloway, 2 D. P. C. 525.

⁹ R. v. Dunn, 12 Ad. & El. 599; 4 Per. & D. 415.

¹⁰ In re Aston, 12 Mees & W.

456.

should the like be repeated. And it is no answer to say, that the defendant has been previously committed upon similar articles, nor is it against the Habeas Corpus Act, 31 Car. 2, c. 2, s. 6, to commit upon such new articles.¹ The court granted an attachment upon articles, although the exhibitant had only been threatened should he write again to a member of the defendant's family. He had not so written, nor did it appear that he would.² All persons of sane memory, an alien, even an attainted person, may demand these sureties.³ As to an insane person, this bond of surety cannot be granted to him, but it is said that the justice ought to provide for his safety.⁴ But an infant under fourteen may have surety.⁵

A husband may require of his wife that she find sureties, and vice versâ. If a wife should complain that her husband has threatened to beat her outrageously, she is entitled to protection.⁶ She may sue out a supplicavit from the Court of Chancery, that her husband may not beat or evil intreat her, aliter qua causâ regiminis aut castigationis.⁷ A defendant, coming to put in bail, insisted that the recognizance should be so taken as not to convey any admission of the marriage. The woman had exhibited articles of the peace, styling herself the wife of the defendant, setting out acts of cruelty, and the pendency of a suit in the ecclesiastical court for the restitution of conjugal rights. Upon which he was ordered to keep the peace, &c., "and particularly towards H. P. who hath exhibited articles of the peace against him the said J. B., by the name of H. B., wife of him the said James," &c.⁸ And the Court of King's Bench may, in all cases of misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment, require sureties for a limited period. And likewise the judge at the trial. It may stand as part of the sentence. The defendant will be discharged at the end of the limited period, no surety being found. There cannot be an unlimited time and perpetual imprisonment.⁹

The surety of the peace may be had against any one, i. e., of sane mind. If the case be that of an infant, his nearest friend should endeavour to be, or to find surety for him, because the infant cannot be bound,¹⁰ and the same may be said of a feme covert, whose husband would probably interfere, and probably be himself security.

A peeress may demand surety against her husband,¹¹ therefore a peer is not discharged from this liability, provided the remedy be sought in the right place.¹²

¹ S. C.

² R. v. Tollemache, 2 L. & M. Pr. R. 401.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 2.

⁴ R. v. Mackenzie, 3 Burr. 1922; Dalt. c. 117, p. 271.

⁵ Id. c. 117, p. 271.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 4.

⁷ R. v. Lord Vane, 13 East, 172, n.

⁸ R. v. Bambridge, 2 Str. 1231;

⁹ Dunn v. Reg. (in error), 18 L. J. M. C. 41; 12 Q. B. 1026.

¹⁰ 11 Hawk. c. 60, s. 5.

¹¹ See several cases cited in Burn's Justice, tit. "Surety of the Peace."

¹² R. v. Marquis of Carmarthen, Fort. 359.

The mode of compelling sureties is by enforcing the appearance of the offender. Where, therefore, a peer had been arrested upon a warrant of two justices, and bound by recognizance, with two sureties, to keep the peace, the court refused a certiorari to bring up the recognizances, because the applicant (Lord Gifford) was not in custody. Had it become necessary to enforce the recognizances, it might have been tried in another way, but as the case stood, the justices had acted without jurisdiction.¹ So it was where the court of quarter sessions had thought fit to order sureties of the peace in the absence of the party complained against. The recognizances directed were for six months. The parties were apprehended and brought before two justices, upon a warrant, reciting the order of sessions, and the personal service of it, and they then refused to enter into the obligation required. The justices upon this committed them to gaol for the residue of the six months, unless, &c. It was held that the justices had done this without jurisdiction, and the defendants were accordingly discharged.² The surety should consequently be demanded in the presence of the accused, and the warrant to compel his appearance should be under seal; should show at whose suit, and be directed to an indifferent person.³ Care must be taken to invite the accused to find security. A commitment is invalid which proceeds upon a neglect of this kind.⁴ So it is if a penalty be added.⁵ So it was once thought to be if the recognizance and complaint were joint. But, upon one occasion, the Court of King's Bench suffered three women to give joint articles against three men.⁶

A peer or peeress can only be bound over in the courts of Queen's Bench or Chancery.⁷

The articles should be exhibited in the neighbourhood where the parties live. And the court will, therefore, decline to receive the articles unless they have been previously tendered before a neighbouring justice.⁸ Where the defendant was seventy years of age, and unable to travel, the court granted a mandamus to three justices to take security upon articles exhibited in the King's Bench.⁹ So, a justice, at Portsmouth, (or any justice of the county of Hants,) where the matter happened, was empowered by the Court of King's Bench to take the security, an indorsement being made upon the attachment specifying the sums in which the principal and his sureties should be bound.¹⁰

¹ Ex parte Lord Gifford, 1 New. Sess. Ca. 490.

² R. v. Hunts, JJ. in re Aston, 14 L. J. M. C. 99. S. C. nom. R. v. Ashton, 7 Q. B. 169.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 9.

⁴ R. v. Wilks, Id. n.

⁵ 3 Com. Dig. 370.

⁶ R. v. Nettle and others, 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 5, n.

⁷ 4 Com. 253; 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 8, n. 5.

⁸ R. v. Waite, 2 Burr. 780; R. v. A. B. 2 Lord Kenyon, 511.

⁹ R. v. Lewis, 2 Str. 835.

¹⁰ Martha Hutt's case, 2 Burr. 1039; R. v. Bomaster, Id.; 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 233. S. C.

If the process be issued out of the Chancery or King's Bench the motion must be made in open court, accompanied by a declaration in writing, and upon oath, the motion and declaration to be mentioned on the back of the writ. Should the causes in respect of which the process was granted turn out to be untrue, the court may order costs to the party grieved, and commit the defaulter until such costs be paid.¹

As to the warrant, it may be made by the justice to bring the offender before himself only, or before some other justice, since he who makes the warrant is considered the best able to do what is right in the case.²

The next question is, whether any defence can be made to the charge. Upon this point it seems to be agreed, that the truth of the articles cannot be controverted. The defendants proposed to prove, by affidavit, that the complaint was false, but the court said, they could do no more than receive the articles, and hear any objection arising on the face of them.³ This doctrine has been adhered to in more modern times.⁴ The defendants cannot call on the prosecutor to show cause why the articles should not be discharged.⁵ Articles of the peace had been filed, and an attachment issued against the defendant, upon which he proposed to impeach the validity of the articles, and to obtain costs under 21 Jac. 1, c. 8, s. 2, giving notice to the prosecutor. But the court refused to entertain his motion.⁶ Affidavits in contradiction of the articles are not admissible, not even to supply facts said to be suppressed by the complainant, as, for instance, a correspondence. And the correspondence needs not to be set out unless it contain some part of the menace relied upon.⁷

But there may be affidavits in corroboration of the articles, and affidavits in answer. The former need not be entitled. The latter should have the title of the Queen against the defendant.⁸ But the complainant may go too far. Where he came into court the second time, in order to enforce process upon his articles, the court received an affidavit from the defendant, and other affidavits, tending to prove the complainant guilty of gross perjury, upon which he was committed, and subsequently transported.⁹ Explanation has, however, been allowed of such parts of certain articles which were deemed ambiguous.¹⁰ The stat. 56 Geo. 3, c. 100, (an Act for better securing the liberty of the subject,) s. 3, has made no difference as to the law of refusing leave to controvert the truth of

¹ 21 Jac. 1, c. 8, s. 2. See R. v. Mallinson, 16 Q. B. 367.

² 5 Rep. 59.

³ R. v. Lord Vane, 2 Str. 1202; 13 East, 171, n. R. v. Earl Ferrers, 1 Burr. 635. R. v. Doherty, 13 East, 171. R. v. Bringloe, cited by Le Blanc, Id. 174, and n.

⁴ R. v. Dunn, 12 Ad. & El. 599; 4 Per. & D. 415. R. v. Stanhope, 12 Ad. & El. 620, n.

⁵ Ex parte Mallinson, 15 Jur. 746; 16 Q. B. 367.

⁶ R. v. Mallinson, 16 Q. B. 367.

⁷ S. C.

⁸ R. v. Jones, Str. 704.

⁹ R. v. Parnell, 2 Burr. 806.

¹⁰ By Lord Hardwicke. R. v. Bringloe, ut supra.

articles.¹ In a case of articles demanded by reason of a letter, the setting forth of the whole letter was required.²

Nevertheless, if the defendant be not satisfied, he can remove the articles entered into, either at quarter sessions or elsewhere, by certiorari. He may object that the articles were not exhibited upon oath. Although, where other affidavits than that of the exhibitant were put on the same parchment with the articles, and the words, "sworn by the several deponents," appeared at the end, this was held sufficient for the court to consider that the articles themselves had been exhibited upon oath.³ So, the Court of Queen's Bench will examine the articles upon habeas corpus and certiorari, and if, on the face of these, they appear insufficient, the order of sessions on that behalf will be superseded.⁴ The nature of the required recognizance will be regulated by the justice. It is usual to limit the time to a year or six months, but the party may be bound for two years, if thought fit, and although the binding is frequently to the next sessions, yet a warrant is not illegal if it omit all mention of the sessions.⁵ And the number of sureties lies also in the same discretion.⁶ When, however, there may be no reason to the contrary, it is best to bind over, in the case of a general recognizance, to the next sessions.⁷

It has been said, indeed, that the recognizance may be for life, or without expressing a certain time, in which case it shall be understood to be for life.⁸ But it is now the law, that the warrant of commitment must not be general, and that the granting of a warrant, in default of finding sureties for an unlimited time, is illegal; and, moreover, bonâ fides is no defence against an action.⁹ And by 16 Vict. c. 30, s. 3, the power of detention for want of sureties is restricted to twelve months. But this Act has no limit as far as the Court of Queen's Bench is concerned. The Court of King's Bench has required bail for fourteen years, although, upon an understanding that an information was pending against the defendant, they lessened the time to two years.¹⁰ The court are by no means bound to the term of twelve months,¹¹ although, if they should require bail for one year, it seems that they have no power to require it again at the end of the year upon the original complaint.¹² The commitment for want of sureties need not mention the sum in which the party and his sureties are to be bound.¹³

This peace warrant is to be executed by the person to whom it is directed, unless it is directed to the sheriff. He may, by parole,

¹ R. v. Dunn, 12 Ad. & El. 599; 4 Per. & D. 415.

² Id.

³ Id.

⁴ Id.

⁵ Willes v. Bridger, 2 B. & Ald. 278.

⁶ S. C.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 16; 2 B. & Ald. 290, 291; per Abbott, C. J. See post, p. 901.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 15.

⁹ Prickett v. Gratrex, 8 Q. B. 1020. See O'Connell v. Reg. (in error), 11 Cl. & F. 155.

¹⁰ R. v. Bowcs, 1 T. R. 696.

¹¹ Id.

¹² S. C. per Ashhurst, J.

¹³ Prickett v. Gratrex, 2 New. Sess. Ca. 429.

or precept in writing, direct an officer, sworn and known, to send it, but otherwise he must proceed by a precept in writing.¹ Doors may be broken, but admittance must first be requested, and the nature of the charge explained.²

The same may be said where the delinquent is sheltered in the house of another, at all events where the capias is from the King's Bench or Chancery, if not, indeed, upon the warrant of a justice.³ The officer then executes his warrant. If the warrant be special, the party must be brought before the justice who granted it, otherwise he may go before another justice.⁴ It seems, however, that the constable may not legally convey the accused to gaol for refusing to find sureties, unless he so refused before a justice, because that would be to leave too much to the discretion of the constable. So, even before a justice, there should be a second warrant to commit for want of sureties, whatever might have been the opinions in ancient times.⁵

And supposing the hearing and finding of sureties to take place before another justice than him who granted the warrant, such justice should make out a supersedeas.⁶ If it be stated in the warrant that B. was brought up to answer a charge of threats, and that, on due examination he was ordered to find sureties, this is sufficient to show that the justice had heard and adjudicated.⁷

As to the sureties in case of death, since their executors and administrators are liable, there needs not to be any new sureties found.⁸ But there may be new sureties and a new recognizance if the justice was deceived in the sufficiency of the sureties given in the first instance.⁹ When the surety is indebted there must also be a new recognizance.¹⁰ In this last case, however, the defendant must have been previously convicted by due course of law, before he can be so called upon to find fresh sureties.¹¹

Adverting for a moment to the point of supersedeas, just mentioned,¹² it may be remarked that the peace warrant itself may be superseded by the defendant repairing to another justice than him who granted the warrant, and then finding sureties. Or he may do this even before any warrant is granted. The justice before whom the surety has been given will then issue his supersedeas.¹³

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 11.

² 2 Hawk. c. 14, s. 3.

³ Id. s. 2.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 13.

⁵ See Id. s. 12; Dalt. c. 118; 2 Hale, P. C. 112; Burn's Just., tit., "Surety of the Peace."

⁶ Dalt. c. 118, p. 274. The commitment may be to the common gaol under 6 Geo. 1, c. 19, s. 2, which speaks of "vagrants and other criminal offenders, and persons charged with small offences." In re Aston, 12 Mees. & W. 456; 1 New. S. C. 73.

⁷ R. v. Aston, ut supra.

⁸ Dalt. c. 119, p. 278.

⁹ Id.

¹⁰ Lamb. 78.

¹¹ 5 Burn, Just. 1206; citing Crompt. 125; Semble, Fitzherbert, by Crompton. Burn's Just., tit. "Surety of the Peace."

¹² Ante.

¹³ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 14.

Neither the sureties nor the sums in which they are bound need be mentioned in the supersedeas, but it is better to express both.¹

As to the certifying of a recognizance, if the recognizance be taken under a supplicavit, it need not be certified till the justice receives a writ of certiorari for that purpose. But if taken upon a complaint below, it should be certified to the next sessions, under 3 Hen. 7, c. 1, (26,) that the party so bound may be called.²

The last matters to be noticed are, the forfeiture or discharge of the recognizance:—First, there may be a forfeiture if, after having entered into a recognizance to appear at sessions, the defendant absent himself.³ The default must, however, be recorded, and the sessions need not absolutely record the default.⁴ Whether the court can take sureties, in case of sickness, from the friends of the defendant, upon their oath, is made a query by Dalton, who says that he has known it to have been done.⁵

If any violence be committed, whatever it may be, or treason, or an unlawful assembling in terrorem populi, or if there be threats, or to beat, or a challenge to fight, these acts are forfeitures of the recognizance.⁶ And if the party threatened be absent, yet if there be any overt act, as lying in wait, or a threat in the absence of the prosecutor, there may be a forfeiture.⁷ Bare words, not amounting to absolute threats, do not incur this penalty.⁸

A recognizance of the peace is not forfeited by necessary acts of violence. As if A. being under a recognizance to keep the peace towards all the Queen's subjects, &c., beats his child in a moderate manner, or commits an assault as an officer in the discharge of his duty, or uses force in defence of himself or of those belonging to him, or in the necessary defence of others, with many other like instances.⁹

Scire facias in one of the courts at Westminster appears to be the proper remedy in case of a forfeiture, but the sessions cannot entertain any proceeding.¹⁰

Then, lastly, with reference to the discharge of the recognizance, it may be vacated if the party bound appear at the stated time, and there be no complaint of his having violated it. But the defendant must record his appearance, even although the complainant be not present.¹¹

It is also discharged by a forfeiture, or by the death of the complainant, or by the demise of the crown.¹² But the property of the ¹ Dalt. 118, p. 274. Burn's Just., tit. "Surety of the Peace." As to supersedeas in the Chancery or Queen's Bench, see 21 Jac. 1, c. 8, ss. 2, 3; 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 14. Burn's Just. ut supra.

² 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 18.

³ 3 Hen. 7, c. 1, (27.)

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 18.

⁵ Dalt. c. 120, p. 278.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 21.

⁷ Dalt. c. 121, pp. 280, 281.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 22.

⁹ 1 Hawk. c. 60, ss. 23, 24, where several similar cases are mentioned.

¹⁰ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 18.

¹¹ Dalt. c. 120, p. 278.

¹² 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 17.

sureties is not discharged by death, inasmuch as their executors continue liable,¹ and the justice might either issue his liberate upon the death of the complainant, if the defendant were in prison, or the prisoner may go before a justice upon habeas corpus, and offer security, which the said justice may receive.² So, if one be only bound generally, and not especially towards any person, the court may order proclamation, and if no one answers, the bond shall be discharged.³ But if, as is usual, there be an especial binding, it is said that the court may bind over to the next sessions,⁴ although the legality of this practice may be doubted, and it is in fact clearly illegal;⁵ and perhaps a recognizance may be discharged by the release of the party at whose instance it was taken, a certificate of such release being given,⁶ although it is added that as the recognizance is not made to the subject, but to the king, this power of release can hardly exist,⁷ and the king, on the other hand, cannot pardon or release the recognizance, because the subject has a kind of interest in it.⁸ And again, if the justice should take the recognizance during the life of the offender, it is said that neither the king, nor the party, nor the justice can discharge it, and, therefore, the justice "must be well advised how he granteth such surety."⁹

A person committed in default of sureties is not entitled to a copy of the examination under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 114, and 11 & 12 Vict. c. 42, s. 17.¹⁰

Surety for the good behaviour.] A surety of this nature is now so rarely thought of that we will merely refer to the text books.¹¹ It is a difficult process to carry out, and there have not been instances of its use since the time of Lord Coke, at least with any degree of security for the justice. There was a case of Haylock v. Sparke,¹² where a justice, in libel, required surety of the peace, and the court said, that in some cases of libel, surety for the good behaviour might be demanded, and that, here, surety for the good behaviour must have been intended, and that although the proceedings were informal, (being for surety of the peace,) and although there was a great want of discretion in the justice in requiring sureties upon such an occasion, yet, as he had jurisdiction, the verdict in his favour must remain.

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 17.

² Dalt. c. 118, p. 273.

³ Dalt. c. 120, p. 275.

⁴ Id.

⁵ 5 Burn, Just. 1206.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 17.

⁷ Id.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 60, s. 17.

⁹ Dalt. c. 119, p. 276. As to surety for the good behaviour, a proceeding now of rare occurrence, see Burn's Justice, under that title.

¹⁰ Ex parte Humphreys, 19 L. J. M. C. 189. R. v. Herefordshire, JJ. 1 L. & M., Pr. Rep. 323.

¹¹ Dalt. c. 123; 1 Hawk. c. 61; 5 Burn, Just. 1212.

¹² 22 L. J. Q. B. 67.

PART VIII.

Of Offences against the Game Laws.

OFFENCES AGAINST THE GAME LAWS.

Game.] By 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 1, if any person shall, after the passing of this Act, by night, unlawfully take or destroy any game or rabbits in any land, whether open or inclosed, or shall by night unlawfully enter or be in any land, whether open or inclosed, with any gun, net, engine or other instrument, for the purpose of taking or destroying game, such offender shall, upon conviction thereof before two justices of the peace, be committed for the first offence to the common gaol or house of correction for any period not exceeding three calendar months, there to be kept to hard labour, and at the expiration of such period shall find sureties by recognizance, or in Scotland by bond of caution, himself in 10*l.*, and two sureties in 5*l.* each, or one surety in 10*l.*, for his not so offending again for the space of one year next following; and in case of not finding such sureties, shall be further imprisoned and kept to hard labour for the space of six calendar months, unless such sureties are sooner found; and in case such person shall so offend a second time, and shall be thereof convicted before two justices of the peace, he shall be committed to the common gaol or house of correction for any period not exceeding six calendar months, there to be kept to hard labour, and at the expiration of such period shall find sureties by recognizance, or bond as aforesaid, himself in 20*l.*, and two sureties in 10*l.* each, or one surety in 20*l.*, for his not so offending again for the space of two years next following; and in case of not finding such sureties, shall be further imprisoned and kept to hard labour for the space of one year, unless such sureties are sooner found; and in case such person shall so offend a third time, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to be transported beyond seas for seven years,¹ or to imprisonment and hard labour in the common gaol or house of correction not exceeding two years; and in Scotland, if any person shall so offend a first, second, or third time, he shall be liable to be punished in like manner as is hereby provided in each case.

¹ Penal servitude not exceeding three years : 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

By sect. 2, where any person shall be found upon any land committing any such offence as is hereinbefore mentioned, it shall be lawful for the owner or occupier, or for any person having a right or reputed right of free warren or free chase thereon, or for the lord of the manor or reputed manor wherein such land may be situate, and also for any gamekeeper or servant of any of the persons herein mentioned, or any person assisting such gamekeeper or servant, to seize and apprehend such offender upon such land, or in case of pursuit being made, in any other place to which he may have escaped therefrom, and to deliver him, as soon as may be, into the custody of a peace officer, in order to his being conveyed before two justices of the peace; and in case such offender shall assault or offer any violence with any gun, crossbow, fire-arms, bludgeon, stick, club, or any other offensive weapon whatsoever, towards any person hereby authorized to seize and apprehend him, he shall, whether it be his first, second, or any other offence, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable to be transported beyond seas for seven years,¹ or to imprisonment and hard labour in the common gaol or house of correction not exceeding two years; and in Scotland, whenever any person shall so offend, he shall be liable to be punished in like manner.

Sect. 3 gives the power of apprehending for the purpose of summary proceedings; and sect. 4 limits the time for prosecution upon summary conviction or indictment to six and twelve calendar months respectively.

An offence was committed on the 12th of January, 1844. The warrant of commitment bore date 11th December, 1844. The indictment was preferred on the 1st of March, 1845. This was held sufficient evidence of a prosecution within twelve calendar months.² Again, the offence was committed on the 4th of December, 1845. The information and warrant bore date 19th of December, 1845. The apprehension and commitment, 21st of October, 1846. The indictment was preferred, 5th of April, 1847. The judges held the conviction right, on the authority of R. v. Willace.³ Again, the warrant of apprehension was held to be no commencement of proceedings, under the 9 Geo. 4, c. 69.⁴ Whether the preferring of an indictment which was ignored be the commencement of a prosecution of a party upon an indictment preferred four years afterwards, is a question.⁵ Gamekeepers were

¹ Penal servitude not exceeding nor less than seven years.

² R. v. Austin, 1 Car. & K. 621.

³ East, P. C. 186. R. v. Brooks and another, Den. 217; 2 Car. & K. 402.

⁴ R. v. Hull, 2 Fost. & F. 16.

⁵ R. v. Killminster, 7 C. & P. 228. The 5th sect. of 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, contains the form of conviction. Sect. 6 gives an appeal. Sect. 7 takes away the certiorari. Sect. 8, orders the return of convictions to quarter sessions.

out watching, and waited in a turnpike road to apprehend the poachers. An affray ensuing on the road, the keepers were held not to be justified in taking the poachers.¹

By 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, s. 9, if any persons, to the number of three or more together, shall by night unlawfully enter or be in any land, whether open or inclosed, for the purpose of taking or destroying game or rabbits, any of such persons being armed with any gun, crossbow, fire-arms, bludgeon, or any other offensive weapon, each and every of such persons shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be liable to be transported beyond seas for any term not exceeding fourteen years nor less than seven years,² or to imprisonment and hard labour for any term not exceeding three years; and in Scotland any persons so offending shall be liable to be punished in like manner.

The 10th and 11th sections apply to the Scotch jurisdiction.

By sect. 12, night shall be considered to commence at the expiration of the first hour after sunset, and to conclude at the beginning of the first hour after sunrise.³

And by sect. 13, the word "game" shall be deemed to include hares, pheasants, partridges, grouse, heath and moor game, black game, and bustards.

But this description does not include young pheasants hatched by a hen and not becoming wild, for they are the property of the owner; and as game is not property within the meaning of 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, the prisoners were acquitted for the entry on land.⁴

The presence of the defendants upon the land will satisfy the Act without proving the entry. If several be together, but only one enter armed upon the close, the conviction may be supported, notwithstanding the singular number.⁵ This was not so at one time,⁶ but the principle of constructive arming is now recognized, as where the defendants were respectively armed with guns and bludgeons. It was objected, that a constructive arming could not be entertained, but the judges repelled R. v. Davis, and held the conviction right.⁷ With regard to the word "found," the party

¹ R. v. Meadham, 2 Car. & K. 633.

² Penal servitude not exceeding fourteen nor less than three years.

³ "Night" in 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 11, is declared, for the purposes of the Act, to commence and conclude as in burglary. Nevertheless, a person may be apprehended under that Act for night poaching, that being an indictable offence. R. v. Sanderson, 1 Fost. & F. 598.

⁴ R. v. Garnham, 2 Fost. & F. 347; 8 Cox, 451.

⁵ R. v. Kendrick and others, 7 C. & P. 184.

⁶ R. v. Davis and another, 8 C. & P. 759.

⁷ R. v. Goodfellow and others, Den. 81; 1 Car. & K. 724. Cor. Coleridge, J., who overruled the objection that the offensive weapon should have been named in the indictment. Absent: Parke and Platt, Barons; Maule, J. So was R. v. Smith, Russ. & Ry. 368.

needs not to be found armed in the actual close where he entered, and where the entry is charged in the indictment. The defendant was not seen in the wood which he was charged with entering, but he was seen in a neighbouring close. The judges said, that as there was evidence to go to the jury of the defendant's presence in the wood armed, it did not signify that he was found armed, not in the wood, but in land adjoining.¹ Still, a general intent to poach will not suffice. There must have been an intent to destroy game in the particular close.² Although Rolfe, B., thought the offence complete if the defendants were in one close, and were to take the game (by nets, for instance,) in the next.³ But he said he would defer to the authorities. It follows, that when all are united for one common intent, all are guilty, although fewer than three be in the close specified.⁴ Nor does it signify that the land consists of several closes, or that it is in the occupation of different persons. The Act speaks of land, not of close.⁵ The combination, however, must not be presumed aliunde. Two persons remained in a road, and sent a dog into the field adjoining. A third, who had gone out with them armed, went to poach by himself in another place. Here the union between them for the commission of the particular offence was deemed not to have been proved.⁶ Two came out of a coppice, a third came out immediately with a gun and pheasant. Maule, J., was not satisfied, but said he should require proof of association, such as that they were all in company on the previous night.⁷ Where nets were set on the field side of a hedge, upon twigs of trees, so as to be within the field, Alderson, B., said he should hold that an entry had been made.⁸ This ruling, however, of Mr. Baron Alderson was by no means acquiesced in.⁹ And Patteson, J., held that a constructive entering was not sufficient.¹⁰ But R. v. Uezzell, ¹ R. v. Worker, 1 Moo. C. C. 165. There were three counts, and a general verdict of guilty. See R. v. Scotton, 5 Q. B. 493; Dav. & M. 501.

² "There." R. v. Gainer and another, 7 C. & P. 231.

³ R. v. Turner, 3 Cox, 304.

⁴ R. v. Passey, 7 C. & P. 282. R. v. Lockett, Id. 300. R. v. Andrews, 2 M. & Rob. 37. R. v. Whittaker, Den. 310; 2 Car. & K. 636.

⁵ R. v. Uezzell, (or R. v. Easton, Easton being the only one convicted,) 3 Car. & K. 150; Den. & P. 274; 20 L. J. M. C. 192. Acc.: Lord Denman; Wilde, C. J.; Pollock, C. B.; Rolfe, B.; Coltman, Wightman, and Erle, JJ. Five contra, that there must be a bodily entry: Parke, B.; Patteson, Cresswell, JJ.; Platt, B.; Williams, J.

⁶ R. v. Nickless, 8 C. & P. 757. R. v. Dowsell, 6 C. & P. 398.

⁷ R. v. Jones, 2 Cox, 185. It is doubtful whether this ruling of Maule, J., could have been correct. The case was for the jury.

⁸ R. v. Athea, 2 Lew. C. C. 191. R. v. Passey, and R. v. Lockett, supra.

⁹ R. v. Britton, 5 Cox, 180, n. Erskine, J.

¹⁰ R. v. May and another, 5 Cox, 176.

with the decision of five judges, seems to be very powerful as to the settlement of the question. Though "the case was not argued by counsel, and the learned judges who dissented from the judgment in R. v. Whittaker, were not present on this occasion."¹ By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 29, the Act of 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, is extended to persons destroying game or rabbits on any public road, highways, or path, or on the sides thereof, or at the openings, outlets, or gates from any land into any such road, &c.; and the owner or occupier of any land on either side of the road, or the gamekeeper or servant, or assistant, or any other person authorized by the Act of 9 Geo. 4, may seize and apprehend offenders. Under the statute 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 32, s. 30, the entry upon the land must be personal. So that where the defendant sent his dog into a plantation, but remained in the highway with his gun, so far no offence had been committed beyond a trespass. But the dog put up a pheasant and the defendant fired at it, so that he was manifestly in pursuit of game. And as the soil and freehold of the highway is in the owner of the adjoining land, here was an entry by the defendant upon the land, and his conviction before justices was affirmed.²

Under 57 Geo. 3, it was held to be immaterial whether the defendants were armed at the time they were perceived or not. Two men were discovered shooting in a wood, but before they were actually seen they had abandoned their guns, and were creeping away, and the question was, whether they could be said to have been armed when they were discovered. The defendants neither had the possession of their guns, nor had them within reach. But a keeper had seen the flash of one of the guns before the defendants themselves were seen, and independently of this evidence, the fact of these weapons being very near the spot where the parties had been, would tend to confirm the circumstance of their being found armed. The judges held that the defendants had been rightly convicted.³ However, the principle of one being answerable for the act of another upon these occasions must be taken with one qualification, and it is, that a guilty knowledge can be brought home to that other person. Southern was charged under 57 Geo. 3, with being found armed with intent to destroy game, together with one Johnson, and it was proved that Johnson had a loaded pistol; but it also appeared to the satisfaction of the jury that Southern was entirely ignorant of that fact. A verdict of guilty having been returned, the judges held, that upon the facts stated, the defendant Southern could not be legally convicted.⁴

We have said, that the term "offensive weapon" is not sufficiently certain to prevent discussion. It occurs in the law of rob-

¹ 5 Cox, 181, n.

³ R. v. Nash and another,

² R. v. Pratt, Dears. 502; 4 El. & Bl. 860.

Russ. & Ry. 386.

⁴ R. v. Southern, Russ. & Ry. 444.

bery under 1 Vict. c. 87, and also in an Act against smuggling.¹ Under the latter Act it seems that the weapon ought to be one of a dangerous, as well as of an offensive nature. But in the clause connected with robbery, and in that of 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, now under our consideration, the idea of danger or mischief does not appear to be so intimately connected with the weapon as in smuggling transactions. Thus, a crutch was clearly considered to be such a weapon in a case under 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, being in fact, large enough to be called a bludgeon. And it was left to the jury to say whether the defendant had taken out this crutch as an offensive weapon, or for the purpose of using it as a crutch. It appeared that he had been in the habit of walking with it, and he was acquitted.²

But, to show the distinction between cases of this nature and of smuggling;—upon another occasion, where a small stick was the weapon in question, it was submitted to the jury, whether it had been taken out for the purpose of offence. And, as it appeared that the stick had been used in a sudden affray with gamekeepers, it was considered not to be an offensive weapon within the Act.³ A stick is not necessarily an offensive weapon, although used offensively.⁴ Had it, therefore, been taken out premeditatedly for a mischievous purpose, the case might have assumed a different complexion. So, again, if large stones be brought for the purpose of offence, and the jury become satisfied that they are capable of inflicting a serious injury, especially if the person assaulted be near enough to be hurt, the defendant who uses them may be convicted of being armed with “offensive weapons” within the meaning of the 9th section.⁵ And if the sticks on the shoulders of the poachers for the purpose of hanging their dead hares, should be found to be meant for attack or defence as well, they would be “armed.”⁶

It is, moreover, necessary, that the armed persons should have the intent mentioned in the statute. And we shall see by-and-by that the proof as to this intent must be confined to the cases specified in the indictment.⁷

Indictment.] The charge in general is, that the prisoners and divers other evil disposed persons, to the jurors unknown, on, &c., into a certain close of B.,⁸ called —, situate, &c.,⁹ about the hour of eleven in the night¹⁰ of the — day of —, unlawfully did enter the said —, being then and there in company, and

¹ 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 53.

² R. v. Palmer, 1 M. & Rob. 70.

³ R. v. Fry, 2 M. & Rob. 42.

⁴ R. v. Merry, 2 Cox, 240.

⁵ R. v. Grice, 7 C. & P. 803.

⁶ R. v. Turner and others, 3 Cox, 304.

⁷ See R. v. Barham, 1 Moo. C. C. 151.

⁸ In the possession or occupation of. R. v. Mellor, 2 Dowl. P. C. 173.

⁹ R. v. Alsop, 1 Show. 339.

¹⁰ Fletcher v. Calthrop, 6 Q. B. 880; 14 L. J. M. C. 49; qu.? Ex parte Fletcher, 18 L. J. M. C. 16. Lansdell v. Bidwell, Paterson, G. L. 92; 8 J. P. 647.

armed with [guns, &c.,] for the purpose then and there of destroying game,¹ [or rabbits.]

"Unlawfully" is sufficient without showing the means.² The kind of game need not be specified.³

A count for going armed in search of game at night may be joined with one for assaulting a gamekeeper in the execution of his duty, and likewise with a count for assaulting such a person when about to apprehend an offender, as well as with a count for a common assault.⁴ It seems that if some certain description be afforded as to the place in question, it will be sufficient, as if the name of the owner or occupier should be stated, without naming the close, but if the prosecutor should particularize the close, accuracy is imperatively demanded. And if all mention of ownership or description is omitted, the indictment will be clearly insufficient. An indictment under 57 Geo. 3, c. 90, contained two counts, one for entering a certain close, and the other for entering certain inclosed ground. But no names, nor ownership, nor occupation, nor abutments were given. And five learned judges⁵ held, that the defendant was entitled to know to what specific place the evidence was to be directed, the offence being substantially local, and judgment was arrested.⁶ Owen and Prickett were tried and convicted for entering "a certain wood, called the Old Walk," &c., stating the name of the owner, with intent, &c. But it turned out that the name of the place in question was the "Long Walk," and it was objected that this was a fatal variance. And of this opinion were the judges, who held the conviction wrong.⁷ So, upon another occasion, the description of "a certain cover in the parish of A.," was held to be too vague.⁸ So, where the defendants were charged with being in a certain field, with intent, then and there to take game, it was held, that proof must be tendered of their purpose to trespass on that particular field. Barham and others were charged with entering a certain close in the parish of B., in the occupation of Thomas Quaife, with intent then and there to destroy game, &c. They were observed in Brook Land in the first instance, but when found by the keepers, they were in the Hop garden. The defendant when taken had a brace of pheasants in his pockets, and there was little doubt but that the whole party had been shooting in an adjoining wood. It was objected, that there was no evidence of the defendant having entered the Hop garden with intent to kill game, that, in fact, he was probably returning home, and the learned judge left the

¹ Fletcher v. Calthrop, 1 New. S. C. 529.

² R. v. May and another, 5 Cox, 176.

³ Id.

⁴ R. v. Finacane and another, 5 C. & P. 551. R. v. Simpson, 1 Russ. C. M. 481.

⁵ Burrough, Best, Bailey, JJ.; Garrow, and Hullock, BB.; contra: Abbott, C. J.; Holroyd, and Park, JJ.

⁶ R. v. Ridley, Russ. & Ry. 515.

⁷ R. v. Owen and another, 1 Moo. C. C. 118.

⁸ R. v. Crick, 5 C. & P. 508.

matter with the jury, who said, that the defendant was in the pursuit of game when he was found, but they could not say whether in the Hop garden or elsewhere. By this finding, the place mentioned in the indictment was virtually laid out of the question, and the judges accordingly held the conviction wrong, inasmuch as the entry with intent to kill game was confined by the indictment to the close specified, and it became necessary on that account to prove the intent as to that close.¹ Had a general verdict of guilty been returned, as in Worker's case, or had the jury found the entry to have been into the close specified in the indictment, the question, afterwards determined in Worker's case, might have presented itself, and the party, although not seen in the specified close, but, on the contrary, found in another, might, nevertheless, have been held properly convicted. "Of and belonging to W.," is sufficient, "without saying in the occupation of W."²

It has also been more than once since decided, that where a particular close is set out in the indictment, evidence must be given to satisfy the jury that the defendants entered into that same close for the purpose of taking game.³

But it needs not to be stated whether the place was inclosed or not.⁴ We have seen, that the defendants are charged with having been armed in the close specified, and Parke, B., is reported to have said, that in addition to the statement of "being then and there by night as aforesaid armed," it ought to be averred that the defendants were armed. The learned judge, however, said that he should leave the defendants to their writ of error.⁵

It is sufficient to say that the offence was committed by night, without adding an allegation as to the hours of sunset and sunrise. It was once objected, that the indictment had failed to express that the entry of the defendants had been before the expiration of the first hour after sunset, and the first hour before sunrise; but Parke, J., held the count good.⁶ Although the addition of such an allegation has occasionally occurred.⁷ However, it must be alleged that the persons engaged in the transaction were by night armed upon the close mentioned, or land belonging to the prosecutor. And the words "by night," must be so introduced as to govern the whole of the charge. An indictment stated that J. D., &c., on the 17th of December, &c., at, &c., being to the number of three or more persons together, did by night unlawfully enter divers closes, being in the occupation of E. C., and were then and there armed in the said closes, with intent, &c. After convic-

¹ R. v. Barham, 1 Moo. C. C. 151.

² R. v. Riley, 3 Car. & K. 116.

³ R. v. Capewell and another, 5 C. & P. 549. R. v. Gainer and another, 7 C. & P. 231.

⁴ R. v. Andrews, 2 M. & Rob. 37.

⁵ R. v. Wilks and another, 7 C. & P. 811.

⁶ R. v. Riley, 1 Lew. C. C. 149; Id. 154. R. v. Pearson, cor. Guiney, B.

⁷ R. v. Lee and others, Id. 154.

tion, a writ of error was brought, and the judgment was reversed, for the words "by night" were so placed, as to be incapable of reaching over the material averments of the count. "If," said Lord Tenterden, "the words 'by night' had occurred at the beginning of the sentence, they might have governed the whole, or if they had been at the end of the sentence, they might have referred to the whole; but here they are in the middle of the sentence, and are applied to a particular branch of it, and cannot be extended to that which follows. The two members of the sentence are distinct; the first states the entry into the closes by night, but does not state that the defendants were armed, or the intent with which they entered; the second branch states that they were in the closes armed for the purpose of destroying game, but not that they were there by night. Neither of those branches of the sentence contains all that is requisite to constitute an offence within the statute, and the two being distinct, the indictment is bad, and the judgment must be reversed."¹ Had the sentence run thus, "by night did unlawfully enter," &c., it would also have read, "by night were then and there armed." As it stood, the charge virtually was, that J. D., &c., on the 17th of December, by night unlawfully entered a close, and then and there were armed on the day and place aforesaid,² which was manifestly a bad allegation of the offence contemplated by the statute.³

With respect to time generally, where, by mistake, the indictment ran thus, "On the 7th day of October, in the year —," without saying more, it was once objected, that as time in 9 Geo. 4, c. 69, was of the essence of the offence, the defect could not be considered as cured after verdict by 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20. Upon this, Alderson, J., took the opinion of the judges, who held, that the fault was that of time imperfectly stated, and thus cured by verdict.⁴

It is observable, that the 2nd section is confined to persons having rights as owners and occupiers, and to their gamekeepers or servants, or assistants to the gamekeepers and servants. And, therefore, where a person was allowed by the owner of land to preserve the game, his servant was not considered to be within the protection of this 2nd section. So that there being no right in such servant to apprehend an individual in quest of game, it was held to be only manslaughter in the trespasser to kill the servant who was pursuing him in order to his apprehension.⁵ It has also been decided upon this section, that where a demand was made by

¹ Davies v. The King (in error), 10 B. & C. 89. R. v. Merry, 2 Cox, 240.

² See 10 B. & C. 90, 91.

³ It was also objected by the counsel for the defendant in this case, that the hour should have been mentioned; and that the closes were not particularized. 10 B. & C. 90. But it will be noticed, that the closes were stated to be in the occupation of one E. C., and probably that allegation is sufficient. The hour is matter of evidence.

⁴ R. v. Hall and another, 1 Lew. C. C. 232.

⁵ R. v. Addis, 6 C. & P. 388. See R. v. Warner and others, 5 C. & P. 525.

the defendant upon a gamekeeper to give up some wires and pheasants to him, and the defendant accompanied his demand with violence, upon which the gamekeeper gave them up, the jury were instructed to consider whether this interference had not taken place under a bonâ fide impression that the property in question belonged to the defendant.¹

A person who tried to apprehend certain persons for being armed in a preserve at night, was deemed a watcher employed by the head keeper. The keeper had been appointed twenty years before by the owner, but the property was then in the possession of trustees. However, he had been paid by the agent down to the time of the trial. And upon an indictment for wounding with intent to prevent apprehension, this was held a sufficient authority to apprehend.² Evidence, however, of a common intent to poach was not deemed to be evidence of a common intent to wound. The prisoners had escaped into a highway, and the keepers had no intent to arrest them when the assault was committed. This was not an assault under 9 Geo. 4, c. 69.³

Indictment under sect. 2.] This indictment states, that A., on, &c., at the parish of —, in the county of —, a certain close called —, there situate, about the hour of eleven of the night of the said day of —, unlawfully did enter with a certain gun for the purpose of then and there taking and destroying game, and that the said A. afterwards, and before the commission of the offence herein-after mentioned, to wit, on the same day and year aforesaid, at the parish aforesaid, in the county aforesaid, was then and there found by one B., being then and there upon the said close with the intent aforesaid, and that the said B., then and there being the gamekeeper of one C., was then and there about to seize and apprehend the said A. for the offence so committed by him as aforesaid, he the said B. having a lawful right to do so as such gamekeeper, for the cause aforesaid, and that the said A. in and upon the said B., so being such gamekeeper as aforesaid, and so being lawfully authorized to apprehend the said A. as aforesaid, then and there made an assault, and him the said B. did unlawfully beat, offer violence to, and ill-treat, against the form, &c.

An indictment under this section stated, that the defendants were in certain lands of A. by night, armed with guns, for the purpose of destroying game, and that they were, "then and there" in the said lands by night, as aforesaid, found by one W. R., the servant of the said A., then and there having lawful authority to seize and apprehend the said defendants, found, "and that the said defendants assaulted," &c. Here, it will be remarked, that

¹ R. v. Hall, 3 C. & P. 409.

³ R. v. Doddridge and others,

² R. v. Fielding, 2 Car. & K. 8 Cox, 335.
621.

the count merely alleges that the defendants were found by night on certain lands, without mentioning the purpose at the time of their being found. Consequently, they could not be said to have been found in the commission of any offence under the statute 9 Geo. 4, and the indictment was accordingly held bad.¹ The subject of prior convictions has undergone some discussion. The indictment set out the first conviction, and afterwards the second, but it failed to state that the offences therein mentioned had been committed against any statute in particular, and that the instrument for taking the game was not sufficiently set out in alleging the second conviction. But the court said, that these convictions had not been appealed against, that they needed not to have been set out in hæc verba, and that the statement, that the prisoner did by night then and there enter, was amply sufficient.²

¹ R. v. Curnock, 9 C. & P. 730. ² Cureton v. The Queen, 8 Cox, C. C. 481; 30 L. J. M. C. 149.
The reader is referred for the game law as it relates to summary conviction, to 1 Will. 4, c. 32.

The first thing I observed when I stepped out of the train at the station was a sense of relief. The air was fresh and the sun was shining. I had been in the city for several days, and I was finally able to see the world from a different perspective. The people were friendly and the food was delicious. I was in luck. The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck. The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

The first thing I did was to go to the bank and get some money. I had heard that the bank was the best place to go for money, and I was not wrong. The bank was a large building with many windows. I went in and asked the teller for some money. He gave me a bundle of banknotes and I was on my way. I went to the hotel and put my things down. I was tired but happy. I had found a new home. I was in luck.

PART IX.

Of Indictable Offences against Public Justice.

CHAPTER I.

COMPOUNDING OFFENCES AND MISPRISION OF FELONY.

By 18 El. c. 5, s. 3, no informer shall compound without the order or consent of the court¹ where the suit is depending upon pain of a forfeiture of 10*l.*, and he shall for ever be disabled to be plaintiff or informer in any suit or information upon any statute, popular or penal.²

It is said that this statute extends to penal actions where the whole penalty is given to the prosecutor.³ But it has been held that it is limited to informations before the courts at Westminster. And therefore where the defendant was convicted of making a composition with J. H. for an offence against the Coal Acts, the court arrested the judgment.⁴

It is an offence under 18 El. c. 5, s. 3, to compound a penal action, although no process be sued out, nor information laid before a magistrate. The Act applies to all cases of taking a penalty incurred or pretended so to be, without leave of a court at Westminster, or without judgment on conviction.⁵ The same opinion was adhered to in a case where no penalty had been incurred nor information laid, nor process sued out. And the court considered the words, "upon colour or pretence of any matter" of offence to be capable of embracing all such cases.⁶

Judgment of imprisonment, with hard labour, may be passed under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29.

Compounding a felony or misdemeanor.] To compound a felony is an offence of the nature of misdemeanor, and it is a great hindrance to public justice. It is where one not only knows of a felony, ¹ Which cannot be had before plea pleaded. R. v. Collier, 2 D. P. C. 581. Nor, where the crown is concerned, without the consent of the attorney-general. R. v. Gibbs, 3 D. P. C. 345.

² This statute was made perpetual by 27 El. c. 10.

³ 4 Com. by Christian, 133, n. (3.)

⁴ R. v. Crisp and others, 1 B. & Ald. 282. See R. v. Pie, Hutt. 35; 6 East, 140.

⁵ R. v. Gotley, Russ. & R. 84.

⁶ R. v. Best, 2 Moo. C. C. 124; 9 C. & P. 368; see also 27 El. c. 10; 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 443.

but takes his goods again, or other amends, not to prosecute.¹ Nothing, no promise broken, however scandalous the breach, can justify the foregoing of a prosecution upon terms.² But it is not an offence to retake goods, unless some favour be shown to the thief.³ The misdemeanor in question is punishable by fine and imprisonment.⁴ To compound a misdemeanor is likewise, as it should seem, a misdemeanor.⁵ But, after a conviction, a composition does not seem to be looked upon in the same light. For a compromise is often permitted, under such circumstances, with the sanction of the court, as when the defendant is allowed to speak with the prosecutor, before judgment is pronounced, and a less sentence is inflicted if the prosecutor declares himself satisfied.⁶ So, where the chairman of a quarter sessions informed a person convicted of ill-treating his apprentice, that if he would pay forty guineas towards the expenses of the prosecution, he should be imprisoned for six months instead of twelve, a note given by that person was held to be valid. And upon an action brought upon the note, Lord Ellenborough said, that the overseers got no pecuniary benefit to themselves or to the parish, by taking this security, beyond the fair amount of their expenses. The giving of this note did not stifle a public prosecution, nor elude the public interest in bringing such an offender to justice, by way of example to others.⁷ And, of course, if the indictment state that the defendant desisted altogether from prosecuting, and it turn out that the defendant did prosecute to conviction, the judge will direct an acquittal.⁸

By an arrangement fees were divided between the clerk of the borough and the clerk of the peace, who were partners. An indictment was held good under these circumstances, although a pecuniary penalty was also imposed.⁹

Misprision of felony.] If a felony be concealed, or if there be an attempt at such a concealment, the offence is known by the name of misprision, unless there be such circumstances in the case as will make the party accessory after the fact. Thus to observe the commission of a felony silently, without using any endeavours to

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 59, s. 5. See Mo. 8.

² R. v. Daly, 9 C. & P. 342.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 59, s. 7; 3 Inst. 133.

⁴ And if any harbouring or maintenance be afforded to a felon, the party so acting becomes an accessory after the fact.

⁵ See 2 Wils. 349; 5 East, 298, 302, by Lord Ellenborough: contra, 4 Com. by Christian; 433, n. (3.)

⁶ 4 Com. 364.

⁷ Beeley v. Wingfield, 11 East, 46; Baker v. Townsend, 7 Taunt, 422, where certain assaults and a disputed right of possession, together with all matters in dispute between parties were referred. See also, R. v. Rant, Kyd on Awards, 64. R. v. Harding, 2 Salk. 477, which seem to be overruled by this case.

⁸ R. v. Stone and others, 4 C. & P. 379.

⁹ Fox v. Reg. 29 L. J. M. C. 54.

apprehend the culprit, is misprision.¹ So if the person robbed re-take his goods, and then suffer the felon to depart, he will be guilty of misprision or concealment.² And it is said, that the concealment of treasure trove is misprision of felony, being a kind of negative misprision; that which a man knows, but which he does not assent to.³ The judgment for this offence is fine and imprisonment.⁴ But by the statute of Westminster, 3 Edw. 1, c. 9, if the sheriff, coroner, or any other bailiff, for reward, or for prayer, or for fear, or for any manner of affinity, shall conceal, consent, or procure to conceal the felonies done in their liberties, or otherwise will not attach nor arrest felons, or otherwise act for favour, they shall, upon conviction be imprisoned for one year, and after make a grievous fine at the king's pleasure, if they have wherewith; and if they have not, they shall be imprisoned for three years. And by 3 Hen. 7, c. 1, justices shall take inquests concerning such concealments, and shall amerce persons guilty thereof at the sessions.

¹ 2 Hale, P. C. 75; 1 Hawk. c. 59, s. 2.
² Mo. 8.

³ See 4 Com. 121.
⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 59, s. 6.

CHAPTER II.

OF CHAMPERTY, MAINTENANCE, BARRATRY, EMBRACERY, &c.

Champerty is said to be the unlawful maintenance of a suit in consideration of some bargain to have part of the thing in dispute, or some profit out of it.¹ At common law it is punishable by fine and imprisonment; and being an act of maintenance, if done in the face of a court of record, may be visited by an immediate committal.² Champerty, however, is forbidden by statute. As by the statute of Westminster, 1, (3 Edw. 1, c. 25,) which declares that no officers of the king by themselves, or by others, shall maintain pleas, suits, &c., in the king's courts,³ for lands, tenements, or other things,⁴ for to have part or profit thereof, by covenant⁵ made between them. And the sentence is, that the party be punished at the king's pleasure. Again, by the statute of Westminster, 2, (13 Edw. 1, c. 49,) the like punishment is awarded against the chancellor, treasurer, justice, king's counsel, clerk of the chancery or exchequer, justice, or other officer,⁶ or any of the king's house, clerk or lay, who shall receive any church, or advowson, land,⁷ or tenement in fee, by gift or by purchase, or to farm, or by champerty, or otherwise, so long as the thing is in plea, &c. The 28 Edw. 1, c. 11, extends the prohibition to all officers and others.⁸ It also ordains, that no one, upon such covenant, shall give up his right to another, upon pain of forfeiture by the taker, of so much of his land and goods as amounts to the value of the part which he has purchased⁹ for such maintenance. And in order to obtain this, whosoever will may sue for it on behalf of the king before the jus-

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 86, s. 1.

² Id. c. 83, s. 38.

³ The king's courts of record.
1 Hawk. c. 84, s. 3.

⁴ Personal as well as real actions are included. Id. s. 5. And rent growing out of the land. Id. s. 6. But not rent granted out of other lands. Id. Likewise a tenant or defendant is as much within the statute as a demandant or plaintiff: s. 8.

⁵ All kinds of promises and contracts, whether by writing or parole. Id. s. 4.

⁶ The statute was limited to the officers named. 1 Hawk. c. 84, s. 11; but see post, 28 Edw. 1, c. 11.

⁷ Whether they purchase the land bonâ fide, and without maintenance or not, and whether they are or not of affinity to the disputants. 1 Hawk. c. 84, s. 12.

⁸ In any action, whether real, personal, or mixed, or a suit in equity, as it seems. Id. s. 15. A surrender by a lessee to his lessor is not within the Act: s. 17.

⁹ Whether the purchase be for money, or a lease for life or years, or a voluntary gift of land. Id. s. 16.

tices, before whom the plea is. But counsel or pleaders are not to be restrained hereby,¹ nor parents and next friends.²

However, in reading these statutes, it must be understood, that the maintenance is the chief ingredient in the offence. So that if a grant of land in suit be made in consideration of a precedent honest debt, the matter is not tainted by maintenance, and the bargain is good.³ So if the right to an estate be undisputed at the time of the contract, but subsequently litigation becomes necessary, owing to circumstances which have arisen afterwards, the maintenance of a suit to recover this estate is not champerty.⁴ So, if the bargain be made before the suit has been commenced, it is not within the statutes of champerty.⁵ But it may be an offence at common law. The delivery of a gift to an ignorant heir, together with the taking of a bond from him, in order to prosecute suits for the recovery of estates, savours of champerty, if the consideration be inadequate.⁶ So an assignment to navy agents of prize money connected with a depending suit, is champerty.⁷

It is not material that the party suing for the champerty should have suffered any damage by the transaction, nor even that the suit has been determined.⁸ The seller and purchaser made an agreement that the latter should bear the expense of certain suits commenced by the seller for rent, on condition of his having the rents and any sum that could be recovered for dilapidations. The purchaser also was to use the seller's name in any action which might be brought. Judgment was given for the defendant in the King's Bench, and upon error brought in the Exchequer Chamber, it was affirmed. The court said, there was no champerty in an agreement to enable the bonâ fide purchaser of an estate to recover for rent due, or injuries done to it previously to the purchase, more especially where such purchaser was not an officer of the king.⁹ Nor is it champerty for a surety to pay a debt.¹⁰

A creditor having instituted proceedings at law and in equity against a debtor, agreed with the debtor that he would abandon all

¹ Provided the matter be given to the counsellor for his wages, and not in consideration of any precedent bargain after the suit commenced. 1 Hawk. c. 84, s. 19. But a strong presumption of champerty will hang about such an unwise proceeding. Id. See R. v. Penros, a counsel, 2 Inst. 564.

² As a conveyance or promise by a father to his son, or by an ancestor to his heir apparent, since it only gives them the greater encouragement to do what by nature they are bound to do. 1 Hawk. c. 84, s. 18.

³ Id. s. 9.

⁴ Wilson v. Short, 6 Hare, 366.

⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 84, s. 14.

⁶ Strahan v. Brander, 1 Eden. 303.

⁷ Stevens v. Bagwell, 15 Ves. jun. 139. See 3 Ves. jun. 502; 18 Ves. jun. 128; a bond to an attorney from his client set aside. See 2 Sim. & Stu. 244.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 84, s. 7.

⁹ Williams v. Protheroe, 5 Bing. 309; 3 Y. & Jer. 129. See likewise 33 Edw. 1, st. 2 & 3; 4 Edw. 3, c. 11; 20 Edw. 3, cc. 4 & 5; 7 Ric. 2, c. 15; 32 Hen. 8, c. 9.

¹⁰ Palm. 190.

proceedings and give up the securities. On the other hand, the debtor was to give him a lien on securities in the hands of another creditor, with authority to sue that other creditor, and make other arrangements. Had this agreement gone further, with a stipulation that the creditor should maintain the proceedings to be instituted by the debtor against the holder of those other securities, champerty would have been committed, for the debtor would have derived profit from the suit.¹ And if an attorney obtains from his client any securities during the suit, the attorney will be declared a trustee, as the transaction savours of champerty.² So, to purchase an interest which is the subject of a suit is not maintenance, but as soon as the purchaser gives an indemnity for the costs incurred, the transaction becomes illegal and amounts to maintenance.³

A stranger may purchase, pendente lite, but not the attorney, not if he conduct the case without placing his name as attorney on the record.⁴ However, a material distinction has been taken between an assignment of the estate to the attorney as a security for costs, and an absolute purchase. Thus, where the plaintiff in ejectment assigned in this manner after verdict and before judgment, the court would not set aside the deed, which was duly registered as a bill of sale, for here was neither champerty nor maintenance.⁵ Another point is, that litigation is not to be encouraged. "All our cases of maintenance and champerty are founded on the principle that no encouragement should be given to litigation by the introduction of parties to enforce those rights which others are not disposed to enforce."⁶ Thus, an assignment of a right to file a bill in equity for a fraud committed on the party who had assigned was held void, being contrary to sound policy. A demurrer was allowed.⁷

The offence of champerty may be laid in any county at the pleasure of the informer.⁸

Maintenance.] Another misdemeanor against the administration of justice, is maintenance, which is the unlawful taking in hand, or upholding of quarrels or sides, to the disturbance or hindrance of common right.⁹ This kind of maintenance differs from champerty, inasmuch as there is no contract to have any part of the thing in suit.¹⁰ Almost any kind of officious¹¹ assistance may be said to amount to maintenance, whether it be tendered in or out of court.¹² A juror is said to be guilty of maintenance who so-

¹ Wood v. Downes, 18 Ves. 120.

² Hartley v. Russell, 2 Sim. & Stu. 244. See Strahan v. Brander, 1 Eden. 303, and 18 Ves. 127.

³ Harrington v. Long, 2 Myl. & K. 590.

⁴ Simpson v. Lamb, 7 El. & Bl. 84.

⁵ Anderson v. Radcliffe, 28 L. J. Q. B. 32. Affirmed in error, 29 L. J. Q. B. 128.

⁶ By Lord Abinger, 1 Y. & Col. 497. Exch. in Equity.

⁷ Prosser v. Edmonds, 1 Y. & Col. 481.

⁸ 31 El. c. 5, s. 4.

⁹ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 1.

¹⁰ Id. s. 3.

¹¹ Godb. 81.

¹² 1 Hawk. c. 83, ss. 4, 5, 6, 7.

licits the judge to give judgment according to the verdict.¹ But he may exhort his companions to give a just verdict, without incurring this blame.² Even after judgment, a person may be a maintainer, because the party aggrieved by the maintenance might be dissuaded from bringing his writ of error, or attain.³ Unlike the case of champerty, the better opinion seems to be, that money or any other reward given before the commencement of the suit, with an evident design of maintaining the litigation at issue, will constitute maintenance, if the action or defence to the action be prosecuted in consequence.⁴ Although it has been said, that the suit must have previously begun.⁵ Neighbouring advice, given bonâ fide, as to the recovery of a debt, or other matter, will not amount to maintenance, provided it do not appear that there has been an officious intermeddling, which is one chief ingredient in this offence.⁶ Nor can a bare promise to maintain be construed into maintenance,⁷ unless the person promising be of great influence, or unless the promise be made in a public manner, so as to produce the excitement to litigation, which the law disapproves.⁸

Maintenance is an offence, both at common law and by statute. At common law, independently of an action against the person maintaining, there is the remedy by indictment, and judgment of fine and imprisonment follows upon conviction. And a court of record may commit for an act of this nature done in the face of the court.⁹ By 1 Edw. 3, c. 14, and 20 Edw. 3, c. 4, the king's ministers, and the great men of the realm, were especially forbidden from interference in quarrels, by sending letters or otherwise, and all other persons, "great [and] small" were likewise generally warned against the offence.¹⁰ A similar ordinance was made by 1 Ric. 2, c. 4,¹¹ where the king's councillors, officers or servants, as well as all others, are mentioned. The punishment in the case of the greater persons was a pain to be ordained by the king himself; and in the case of the less officers and servants, loss of their places, together with imprisonment and ransom at the king's will; and in the case of other persons, imprisonment or ransom as aforesaid.¹² And by 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, maintenance in general is again forbidden, under a penalty of 10*l.*, one moiety to be paid to the king, and the other to him who will sue for the same by action of debt.¹³

It seems that the apprehension of maintenance will be sufficient

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 9.

² Id. s. 10.

³ Id. s. 13.

⁴ Id. s. 12.

⁵ Id.

⁶ Id. s. 11.

⁷ Cart. Rep. 230, Vaughan, C.J.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 8.

⁹ Id. s. 38.

¹⁰ A court baron is within the statutes. 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 41. But not a suit in a spiritual court, s. 48; Cro. El. 594.

¹¹ See also 3 Edw. 1, cc. 23, 33; 33 Edw. 1, st. 3; 4 Edw. 3, c. 11; 20 Edw. 3, c. 5; 7 Ric. 2, c. 15.

¹² Imprisonment for three years, and fine at the king's pleasure, 33 Edw. 1, st. 3 (Statute of champerty).

¹³ See also 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 45, citing the various statutes concerning liveries or badges of maintenance.

to warrant the suing out of a writ upon the statute 1 Ric. 2.¹ But in an information upon 32 Hen. 8, it must be said, that a plea was depending.² And under 1 Ric. 2, he who barely assists another in taking out an original, which is never returned, is not liable to any action.³ It is immaterial whether the plaintiff be nonsuited, or whether he recovered in the action alleged to have been the subject of maintenance.⁴

Several justifications, however, are admitted by the law in answer to a charge of maintenance. As kindred or affinity.⁵ But although this exception goes so far as to allow even a godfather to counsel and assist his godson, no relation can lay out his money in a cause unless he be the father, the son, or the heir apparent to the party, or the husband of an heiress.⁶ Again, a landlord may maintain his tenant by laying out his money to defend the title or otherwise. But he cannot do this with respect to lands not holden of him.⁷ And it is said, that the lord of a town may maintain the right of inhabitants to a common burying place in an action brought against them, by showing to the jury authentic evidence of their right.⁸ So, a tenant may maintain his lord.⁹ And the tenants of a manor may join together.¹⁰ A master may maintain his servant,¹¹ yet not beyond the amount of his wages in hand.¹² But the master may not speak to the court in favour of the servant's cause.¹³ So if the servant be arrested in an action of debt, the master may assist him with money to effect his enlargement, in order that he may have the benefit of his service.¹⁴ But the rule is limited to personal actions, so that the master cannot help his servant in matters relating to land, unless he have wages in hand belonging to the servant, in which case he may lay them out, with the consent of the latter, on his behalf.¹⁵ A servant, moreover, may maintain his master, provided he be a general servant; but he may not lay out any of his own money to assist his master in a suit, although he may get counsel for his master, and render him any service of that nature.¹⁶ A trustee may maintain to the amount of his trust.¹⁷ Even a neighbour may help another neighbour with counsel, but he must not ad-

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 44.

² Id. s. 49.

³ Id. s. 42. And nul tiel record is a good plea. Id. The word "unlawfully," is necessary in an indictment. Id. s. 47. If a record be made of an information laid upon one of these statutes, as 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, and the indictment conclude contra formam statuti generally, the court cannot properly entertain the charge, because maintenance is made penal by other statutes, as 1 Ric. 2, &c. R. v. Higginson, 1 Ld. Raym. 537. 12 Mod. 322.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 43.

⁵ 1 And. 201.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 26.

⁷ Id. s. 29. See sect. 27.

⁸ Id. s. 28.

⁹ Id. s. 30.

¹⁰ Hob. 92.

¹¹ Mo. 814.

¹² Mo. 6.

¹³ 1 Hawk. c. 84, s. 31.

¹⁴ Id. s. 32.

¹⁵ Id. s. 33.

¹⁶ Id. s. 34.

¹⁷ Mo. 620.

vance money to further his suit.¹ And any one may go to a counsel on behalf of a foreigner who cannot speak English, to inform the counsel concerning his case.² And, again, as a matter of mere charity, money may be given to a poor person, in order to enable him to obtain justice for himself.³

The acts of a counsel or attorney can hardly be called exceptions to the rule concerning maintenance. For they must not work with their own money,⁴ and their interference is particularly sanctioned by the courts where they are concerned. If an attorney, however, should carry on a cause at his own charge with a promise never to expect repayment, he is guilty of this offence;⁵ or if any one should bring an action without the privity of the plaintiff.⁶ So, if a counsellor should contract to receive a sum in gross for his services.⁷ And if any deceitful conduct should be practised by counsel or attorney, the party so acting will be guilty of maintenance. Indeed by the statute of Westminster 1, c. 29, if any serjeant,⁸ pleader, or other, do any manner of deceit or collusion⁹ in the king's court or consent unto it, he shall, being attainted, be imprisoned for a year and a day, and shall not be thenceforth heard to plead in that court for any man. If he be no pleader he shall be imprisoned for a year and a day at the least, and if the trespass require a greater punishment, it shall be at the king's pleasure.

Lastly, there are some circumstances or ties of interest which will form a ground of defence to the charge under our consideration. As where the person in remainder or reversion defends the suit of tenant in tail with his own money.¹⁰ Or the lessor the title of his lessee,¹¹ or the alienee of land in respect of an action brought by the person who sold the inheritance to him.¹² So, the holder of a contingent interest in land may maintain the title although he may never be the better for the contingency;¹³ or the holder of an equitable interest.¹⁴ Commoners, likewise, may maintain those who have common with them. And inhabitants may join to support the right to a way or churchyard.¹⁵ Also, it is said, that he who is bail for another may take care to have his appearance recorded, but that he ought not to intermeddle further.¹⁶

However, as we have seen in champerty, the charge of main-

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 35; and see also sect. 11; Dy. 256.

² 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 37.

³ Id. s. 36; Freem. 71, 81; Godb. 159.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 83, ss. 38, 39; Hob. 67, 117.

⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 40.

⁶ Mar. 47, pl. 76.

⁷ Rep. T. Finch, 75.

⁸ Counsel not sworn are within this Act as well as serjeants who are sworn. 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 42.

⁹ All fraud and falsehood tending to impose upon or abuse the justice of the king's courts are within the purview of the statute: s. 33. As a false plea, s. 37, and see ss. 34, 35, 36.

¹⁰ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 14.

¹¹ Id. s. 15.

¹² Id. s. 16.

¹³ Id. ss. 17, 18. See also ss. 19, 20.

¹⁴ Id. s. 21. See s. 22.

¹⁵ Id. s. 24.

Id. s. 25.

tenance must rest upon a suit to which the party is a stranger. So that the assignee of a bond or other chose in action, made over to him for good consideration in satisfaction of a precedent debt due bonâ fide to him, and not merely in consideration of the intended maintenance, may either maintain the obligee in an action brought by him for the debt, or commence an original action in his name, for he has an equitable interest in the debt.¹

Barratry.] A barrator is a common mover, exciter, or maintainer of vexatious suits or quarrels either in courts or in the county.² A barrator is, therefore, an offender against the due administration of justice, as well as against the public peace. As where a counsellor maliciously abetted the institution of several false actions for debt in a case where the plaintiff was the real debtor.³ The barrator is as much mixed up with controversies concerning lands as with calumnies and other such disquieting proceedings.⁴ And the opinion of Hawkins is, that he is a barrator who brings a number of false actions in his own name without any manner of colour,⁵ although the contrary is said to have been holden.⁶ The words "many suits" are important, because no man can be a barrator in respect of one.⁷ So, an attorney who is not privy to a groundless suit is not a barrator,⁸ although he may be engaged in others. It is the opinion of Hawkins also, that a feme covert may be charged with this offence, although he cites a decision to the contrary.⁹

The defendant in an indictment for barratry must have a copy of the articles intended to be insisted on against him,¹⁰ and the prosecutor must assign particular instances in the indictment;¹¹ and if he prove them, he shall be admitted to prove as many more as he pleases, to aggravate the fine.¹²

The indictment must call the defendant a common barrator,¹³ and must conclude against the peace, &c.¹⁴ Although a conclusion, against the form of the statute, is sufficient notwithstanding the absence of any such statute, except as far as the proceedings and punishment are concerned.¹⁵ So an indictment may be good without averring the offence to have happened at any particular place, because as the misdemeanor consists in the repetition of several ¹ 1 Hawk. c. 83, s. 23. See also subject, 2 Inst. 215.

² 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 1; Jenk. 247. See 8 Rep. 36. The case of barratry.

³ R. v. —, 3 Mod. 98.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 2.

⁵ Id. s. 3.

⁶ Id.

⁷ Id. s. 5.

⁸ Id. s. 4.

⁹ Id. s. 6; 1 Ro. Rep. 39.

¹⁰ R. v. Ward, 12 Mod. 516. R. v. Grove, 5 Mod. 18; 6 Mod.

262; 1 T. R. 754; 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 13.

¹¹ R. v. Cornwall, Mo. 302.

¹² Lord Raym. 490; 1 T. R. 751, 754; 1 New Rep. 95, Heath, J. See, however, 6 Mod. 311, where Holt, C. J., excepts barrator and scold from the rule which requires particular instances to be set forth.

¹³ R. v. Palfrey, Cro. Jac. 527; R. v. Hardwicke, 1 Sid. 282; 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 9.

¹⁴ 1 Sid. 282; 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 12.

¹⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 10.

acts, it must be intended to have happened in several places; wherefore it is said that a trial ought to be by a jury from the body of the county.¹

With respect to the proceedings against barrators and their punishment, it is enacted by 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, that three or four persons shall be assigned in every county for the purpose of restraining offenders, rioters, and all other barrators, and of pursuing and punishing them. And by Hawkins, "It seemeth from these words that justices of the peace, as such, have cognizance of barratry without any other commission; sed quære, for the contrary opinion seems to have been holden in Rolle's Reports."² But it has been held that justices of the peace may try this offence without any special commission of oyer and terminer.³

Judgment.] The judgment for barratry is fine and imprisonment, and to be bound to the good behaviour, and, moreover, if any such offenders be of the profession of the law, they ought to be disabled from practising for the future.⁴

Buying or selling titles.] To buy or sell a doubtful title is a species of maintenance. It is forbidden by the common law and by statute. As by 13 Edw. 1, c. 49, where persons of the king's house are prohibited from buying any title whilst the thing is in dispute, upon pain of the punishment both of buyer and seller at the king's pleasure. So by 1 Ric. 2, c. 9, it was forbidden to make gifts of lands in debate, and such gifts were declared to be of no value. And by 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, the act of bargaining for, buying or selling pretended rights or titles is made punishable by a forfeiture of the whole value of the lands both by the buyer and seller, one-half to go to the king and the other half to him who will sue for the same. But there is a proviso enabling a party in lawful possession to buy the pretended right of another person to the same lands.⁵ And this proviso was necessary, for the rule is, that the offence may be committed whether the title be a good or bad one, or whether the seller be in possession or not, unless his possession be lawful and uncontested.⁶ The offence of buying titles may be laid in any county at the pleasure of the informer.⁷ But it is dangerous to misrecite the statute of Hen. 8.⁸

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 11. R. v. Wells, 1 Ro. Rep. 295. See, however, R. v. Man, Godb. 383.

² 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 8; 2 Ro. Rep. 151. See Yelv. 46.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 81, s. 14. A juror cannot be withdrawn in barratry. R. v. Jeffs, Str. 984. See further upon barratry, R. v. Urlyn, 2 Saund. 308, and note (1) of Wms. Saund. there. Error: reversal of judgment in barratry. And held that no restitution lay to a stranger on the record. R. v. Lever, 1 Show. 261.

⁴ Yelv. 46, recognized in 2 Sir Wm. Bl. 1051; 2 Saund. 308; note (1); and the barrator may be tried on the day when the indictment is found. Jenk. 317; Rice v. Regem, Cro. Jac. 404.

⁵ See 1 Hawk. c. 86, s. 7, &c. for the construction of this statute.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 86, s. 1.

⁷ 31 El. c. 5, s. 4; and see more upon this subject, 1 Hawk. c. 86; Godb. 450. R. v. Hill, 1 And. 76; 2 And. 57; Dy. 52, 74, 374; Mo. 266, 665, 751. Plowd. 77.

⁸ R. v. Hill and another, Cro. Car. 232.

Embracery.] Embracery, denoted as another species of maintenance, is any attempt whatever to corrupt, influence, or instruct a jury, or in any way to incline them to one side by money, promises, letters, threats, or persuasions, whether any verdict be given or not, or the verdict given be true or false.¹ And if money be given after verdict, it is an act of embracery, for jurors might entertain an idea that they would be rewarded for their services, if such were the received practice.² So, if A. give B. a sum of money to be distributed amongst jurors, it is embracery, whether the distribution take place or not.³ So, an attempt to gain over a person to offer himself as a juror, or not to appear in that character, is a misdemeanor,⁴ although it is said that there are circumstances where a person may be requested to appear and give a verdict according to his conscience. And the juror himself will be as criminal if he endeavour to seduce his brethren into a verdict by any practice, except argument, with reference to the case laid before them.⁵ So, where persons by indirect means procured themselves to be sworn on a tales, they were found guilty of embracery, and Hale, C. J., refused to hear any motion to arrest the judgment.⁶ But, of course, the arguments of counsel and the strength of evidence are not embraceries. They are the only legitimate means of influencing the jury, and when practised in open court are entirely lawful.⁷ Nor are allowances for travelling acts of embracery.⁸

The proceedings at common law for this misdemeanor may be by indictment, information, or action.⁹ The judgment is fine and imprisonment.

But embracery is likewise pointed at by the legislature. By 5 Edw. 3, c. 10, if any juror shall take of one party or the other, he shall, upon conviction, be imprisoned and ransomed at the king's will, and shall be incapacitated from serving on any assizes, juries, or inquests. By 34 Edw. 3, c. 8, the complaint against a juror shall be held by bill forthwith, and if the juror be attainted at the suit of other than the party, and be fined, the party suing shall have half the fine, and the parties to the plea shall recover their damages by the assessment of the inquest. Moreover, the attainted juror shall be imprisoned for one year. By 38 Edw. 3, c. 12, which contains further provisions, the forfeiture is declared to be ten times as much as the juror has taken, half for the party suing and half for the king, and if the juror have not sufficient to pay the forfeiture he shall be imprisoned for one year.

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 85, ss. 1, 5.

² Id. s. 3.

³ Id. s. 4.

⁴ Id. s. 6.

⁵ Id. s. 4.

⁶ R. v. Opie and others, 1 Saund. 301. But Mr. Serjeant Williams, in note (1) to p. 442, note (d), fo. ed. where the serjeant observes,

"In my own experience I never knew such a motion refused to be heard." And the present practice, says Serjeant Williams, is to hear such a motion.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 85, s. 1.

⁸ Id. s. 3.

⁹ 1 Hawk. c. 85, s. 7.

Again, the statute 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, inflicts a forfeiture of 10*l.* upon such as "embrace any jurors," one moiety to belong to the king, and the other to him who will sue for the same. By 6 Geo. 4, c. 50, s. 61, if any one be guilty of embracery, or if any juror do wilfully and corruptly consent thereto, he shall be fined and imprisoned. If an act of embracery be not known before the trial of a cause, so that the party whose interests were intended to be prejudiced, has had no opportunity of preventing the evil effects of it by challenging the juror, it will be a good ground to move the court to set aside the verdict.¹

Tampering with witnesses.] It is a great misdemeanor to dissuade a witness from giving his evidence, although the persuasion should not succeed. Upon such an occasion it was excepted that the indictment did not positively aver that there had been an indictment against any one, but the court overruled the objection, thinking it quite sufficient to say that the defendant knowing that such a person had been indicted, did such and such acts, and judgment of fine and imprisonment was given.² And again, where parties had been convicted upon an information for bribing a witness to swear that a certain deed was false, it was unnecessary to aver that the deed in question was true.³ So again, persons conspiring to keep away a witness from giving his testimony, are guilty of conspiracy.⁴

Threatening a prosecutor.] It is likewise a serious misdemeanor and punishable by information, to threaten a prosecutor, as by telling him that he will be hanged; or the court will grant an attachment.⁵

CHAPTER III.

NON-REPAIR OF GAOL AND OBSTRUCTION OF JUSTICES.

Non-repair of a gaol.] If no one were under a legal obligation to repair a gaol, the administration of justice would be defective. The county is usually charged with this liability, but it may also rest upon individuals in respect of their estates. As, for instance, the county gaol of Devonshire was for some time repaired by virtue of a charge upon an estate there. And the Earl of Exeter

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 85, s. 7.

² R. v. Lady Lawley, 2 Str. 904. ² East, 362.

³ R. v. Ireton, Pollexf. 592.

⁴ R. v. Steventon and others,

⁵ R. v. Carroll, 1 Wils. 75.

was indicted for the non-repair of a gaol at Peterborough. In this last case there were six counts, the first stating that the defendant and his predecessors, lords of the liberty, had immemorially been used and accustomed, &c., to repair, whilst the five other counts alleged simply that the defendant and his predecessors had immemorially been used, &c., without mentioning the franchise. The defendant pleaded not guilty to the first count, and demurred to the five last, and the court were quite clear in favour of the demurrer, observing that the lord of a franchise, as such, was not bound to repair the gaol within it without an immemorial usage to charge him as lord of the franchise.¹

Obstructing justices in holding their court.] A rule was granted to show cause why an information should not issue for refusing to let the justices of peace for Worcester hold their sessions in the town hall of that city.²

CHAPTER IV.

LIBEL, &c.

Cases of libel and slander against legal officers are, however, frequently treated as misdemeanors, and prosecuted accordingly.³ But the right principle seems to be, that words spoken to a magistrate are not indictable, unless they tend immediately to a breach of the peace, or are addressed to him in the execution of his office;⁴ and the better opinion is, that words spoken in the absence of a justice are not indictable.⁵ Libel stands upon a different footing, since every published writing which is calculated to bring a person into contempt, and so injure his fair fame in the world, is punishable by indictment or information.⁶ Hence it follows, that some of the old cases which treat words spoken of a justice as indictable misdemeanors cannot now be looked upon with respect as authorities.⁷

¹ R. v. Earl of Exeter, 6 T. R. 373.

² Anon. 2 Barnard. 60.

³ Anon. Lofft. 462.

⁴ See R. v. Bagg, 1 Ro. Rep. 79. R. v. Cranfeild, 5 Mod. 203. R. v. Nun, 10 Mod. 186; R. v. Revel, 1 Str. 420. R. v. Leafe, Andr. 226.

⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 21, s. 13.

⁶ See R. v. Sharpe, Andr. 384.

⁷ See R. v. Baker, 1 Mod. 35. R. v. Darby, 3 Mod. 139; 11 Mod. 167, note (e). Note.—That supposing it to be competent for justices to commit for contempt, the commitment must be for a time

And, indeed, scandalous expressions were not always regarded as indictable, even in more ancient times.¹

But the magistrate is not without redress where the slander is intruded upon him when he is not engaged in his office. He may have an action for such words as the law deems actionable, or he may cause the speaker to be bound over to his good behaviour.² And for such slander uttered behind his back, it seems that suretyship for the good behaviour may be required.³

The defendant was charged with abuse of a justice in the execution of his office, and the court said that the justice might make himself judge and punish immediately; but still, if he should think proper to proceed less summarily by way of indictment,⁴ he might. "The true distinction is, that where the words are spoken in the presence of the justice, there he may commit, but where it is behind his back, the party can be only indicted for a breach of the peace."⁵ So, where the defendant called a magistrate a liar, and accusing him of misconduct, declared he would repeat the language, the court would not grant an information, there appearing no intention of committing a breach of the peace.⁶ And thus, again, where a justice had been slandered, the court denied an information, saying, that it was not the same insult and contempt as if spoken to him in the execution of his office, *which would make it a matter indictable.*⁷ Therefore, the point to be considered is, whether words spoken in the justice's absence might lead to a breach of the peace. One Harrison was indicted for advancing to the bar of the Common Pleas, and saying, whilst the judge was sitting there, "I accuse Mr. Justice Hutton of high treason;" and he was severely fined and imprisoned for the offence.⁸ Here the judge was giving "rules and orders," and thus was in the execution of his office.

certain. R. v. James, 5 B. & Ald. 894.

¹ See Sty. 251, Hil. 1650. R. v. Burford, 1 Ventr. 16. R. v. Langley, 2 Salk. 697. R. v. Wrightson, Id. 698. R. v. Legasley, 1 Hawk. c. 21, s. 13. R. v. Broxham, Id. R. v. Shaftow, 11 Mod. 195. R. v. Granfield, 12 Mod. 98. R. v. Lee, Id. 514. R. v. Penny, 1 Lord Raym. 153. R. v. Pocock, 2 Str. 1157.

² But he may not commit for contempt, unless he be acting as a magistrate. See likewise R. v. Cotton, W. Kel. 133; 2 Barnard. 313, where the defendant was committed for contemptuous language. The court observed, that the usual course was to fine the offender, and to commit him in case of nonpayment; but they would not grant an information against the justice.

³ 1 Ventr. 16; Holt's Ca. 331. But the justice who has been slandered ought not to bind the party over, but he should get one of his brethren to do it for him. 12 Mod. ut supra, by Holt, C. J.; 1 Hawk. c. 21, s. 13.

⁴ As in R. v. Collyer and another, 1 Wils. 332; Say. Rep. 44; and the death of the justice will not work the discharge of the recognizance. R. v. Ellers, Id. 222.

⁵ R. v. Revel, 1 Str. 420. See, however, R. v. Rogers, Holt's Ca. 331.

⁶ Ex parte Chapman, 4 Ad. & El. 773.

⁷ R. v. Pocock, 2 Str. 1157.

⁸ R. v. Harrison, Cro. Car. 503.

This matter was discussed in a comparatively modern case. The defendant said of one G., a justice of Middlesex, that he was a scoundrel and a liar. The words were charged in an indictment preferred against the defendant as having spoken of the prosecutor in his character of justice, and with intent to defame him in that capacity. Lord Ellenborough interposed, and said, that as the words were not spoken to the justice, they were not indictable; and his lordship referred to 2 Salk. 698, and R. v. Pocock, 2 Str. 1157. But as the matter was upon the record, Lord Ellenborough would not direct an acquittal, but left the facts to the jury, who found a verdict of not guilty.¹ Where a defendant was committed and fined at the sessions for saying, "If I cannot have justice at the sessions here, I will have justice elsewhere." Twisden, J., understood the words to savour of an appeal, and he observed, that every subject had a right to demand that privilege, but the other judges were of a different opinion.²

But judges and magistrates are not the only persons connected with the law who may be the subjects of slander. One S. was indicted for speaking evil of a grand jury, who had presented him, imputing perjury to them, and the court held that the charge was valid.³ So, a constable may indict for words spoken to him in the execution of his office, or may have the party bound over to his good behaviour, but the court will not grant an information.⁴

The indictment, however, for slandering officers must set out the words, or the court will not be able to judge whether they were such as would warrant the indictment.⁵

Little need be said concerning libels upon legal officers. They are à fortiori, punishable. And they may be the subjects of indictment, upon publication, in like manner as other libels. As where the defendant printed concerning one R. T., an alderman, that he was "scandalously guilty of telling a lie in divers companies," the court granted an information.⁶ So, where one had been indicted for perjury, and acquitted, upon which he brought an action for a malicious prosecution, and recovered heavy damages, the verdict in his favour being likewise confirmed in the Common Pleas; it was held, that an order entered in the corporation book of Yarmouth, stating that the person who had prosecuted, and against whom damages were recovered, had been actuated by motives of public justice, &c., was a libel reflecting upon the administration of the law. And the court granted an information against twenty persons, being the majority of the corporation present at the making of the order.⁷

Where the indictment charged the defendant with having pub-

¹ R. v. Weltje, 2 Campb. 142.

² R. v. Mayo, 1 Sid. 144; and the man was fined 5*l.* and discharged.

³ R. v. Spiller, 2 Show. 207.

⁴ R. v. Whitfield, Cun. Rep. 100.

⁵ R. v. Bagg, 1 Ro. Rep. 79.
R. v. How, 2 Str. 699.

⁶ R. v. Staples, Andr. 228. See other cases of libels on justices of the peace, R. v. Alderton, 5 B. & Ald. 596, cited. R. v. Holloway and another, Id. cited.

⁷ R. v. Watson and others, 2 T. R. 199.

lished a libel concerning certain magistrates, and the intent was said to defame them, and also to bring the administration of justice into contempt, Bayley, J., told the jury that if they were of opinion that the defendant had published the libel with either of those intentions, they ought to convict him.¹ The allegations were, therefore, divisible, according to the principle usually applicable to the statement of different intents.

CHAPTER V.

MISCONDUCT BY LEGAL OFFICERS.

Misconduct by legal officers.] Another class of misdemeanors against the administration of justice consists in misconduct, either by officers intrusted with the authority of the law, or towards them.

Thus, if a judge were to transgress his powers, and invade the liberty of the subject, or were to be guilty of a gross dereliction of duty, although he might be open to other proceedings, he might still be prosecuted for a misdemeanor.²

By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 43, if any judge, commissioner, registrar, &c., shall fraudulently and wilfully demand, or allow any one to take on his account, any fee, emolument, gratuity, or anything of value, other than is allowed by that Act,³ or any other Act relating to bankruptcy, or under colour of doing anything under such Acts, he shall incur a penalty of 500*l.*, and be incapable of holding any office or place under Her Majesty. The like penalty is awarded by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 94, s. 41, against any master in chancery, or any person holding any situation or employment in the said court, who shall be guilty of similar conduct.

The committal of a person who had used indecent and violent language towards a legal authority was visited by a prosecution by reason of an excess of jurisdiction.⁴ So, where a magistrate is

¹ R. v. Evans, 3 Stark. 35.

² In former days the default of a judge with reference to any matter connected with his oath was thought highly of. See 18 Edw. 3, st. 4; 20 Edw. 3, c. 1; likewise 8 Ric. 2, c. 4, which enacted, that any judge or clerk who should falsely enter pleas, rase rolls, or change verdicts, so as to produce disherison, should be fined and ransomed at the king's will; the prosecution to be within two years after the default, if the party grieved were of age, otherwise within two years afterwards. See also 16 Car. 1, c. 10, s. 6, as to the third offence against that Act (for regulating the privy council and taking away the star chamber) on the part of any chancellor, judge, or other great officer, whose names are enumerated in the Act. These respective statutes still remain unrepealed.

³ An Act to amend the law relating to bankruptcy and insolvency.

⁴ W. Kel. 133.

neglectful of his office, or goes beyond the authority which the law has awarded him, or becomes guilty of corruption in the execution of his employment, or acts in a wilful or tyrannical manner in opposition to justice, he may be tried upon a criminal information, or may be indicted.

In 1780 the lord mayor of London was charged with a breach of duty in not resisting the outrages of the rioters of 1780. It was proved that he failed to read the proclamation ordered by the Riot Act; that he neither restrained nor took the proper steps to apprehend the rioters; that he did not give any order to fire on them; and that he did not make use of the military force under his command. The defendant pleaded fear, and the surprise of the attack; but the court held that no incidents which would not produce a terror sufficient to appal a firm man could be called in aid. For a magistrate has not only the military under his orders, he may likewise call all the king's subjects to his assistance, and at the time of a riot he may even repel force by force before the reading of the proclamation from the Riot Act. The defendant was found guilty.¹ The mayor of Bristol was charged with neglect in not having done his utmost to repress the riots in that city, but he was acquitted. It was held, however, in this case, that he could not be made responsible for not swearing in special constables, under 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41, unless an information on oath had been previously made before him; nor could he be arraigned for an omission in not calling out the posse comitatus if he had given timely notice of the impending riot to the inhabitants. Nor need he marshal nor head the constables or the military, nor accompany the soldiers. The part expected of him is, that he should exhibit that energy which a man of honesty and of ordinary prudence, firmness and activity might reasonably be expected, under the circumstances, to possess. It would not, however, be a defence to plead honesty of intention.²

False process.] By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 57, to forge the seal of any process of the county court, or knowingly to serve or enforce it, or to deliver a paper falsely purporting to be a copy of any summons or process of the court, or to act, or profess to act, under any false colour or pretence of the process of the court, is a felony. Bramwell, B., imagined that there must be a real process or a fraudulent use of real process. But the other judges held, that a mere fictitious process was within the Act.³ Still there must be a process. A notice to produce accounts and memoranda is not a process.⁴ False representations likewise are insufficient. There must be a false instrument.⁵

¹ R. v. Kennett, 5 C. & P. 282, n.

M. C. 188. Bramwell, B., adhered to his opinion, but held himself bound by R. v. Evans.

² R. v. Pinney, 3 B. & Adol. 947; 5 C. & P. 254, 282.

⁴ R. v. Castle, Dears. & B. 363; 27 L. J. M. C. 70.

³ R. v. Evans, Dears. & B. 236; 26 L. J. M. C. 92. R. v. Richmond, Bell. 142; 28 L. J.

⁵ R. v. Myott, 6 Cox, 406.

Acknowledging false recognizances.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 98, s. 34, whosoever, without lawful authority or excuse, the proof to lie on the accused, shall, in the name of any other person, acknowledge any recognizance or bail, or any cognovit actionem, or judgment, or any deed or other instrument, before any court, judge, or other person lawfully authorized in that behalf, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to penal servitude not exceeding seven years, and not less than three years,—or to imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, or solitary confinement. Where bail was put in under feigned names, the offence was held not to be within the old statute, 21 Jac. 1, c. 26,¹ but the bail and the attorney were ordered to be put in the pillory.

CHAPTER VI.

JUSTICES ADMINISTERING UNSTATUTORY OATHS.

Justices administering unstatutory oaths.] By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, s. 13, it shall not be lawful for a justice of the peace or other person to administer, or cause or allow to be administered, or receive or cause or allow to be received, any oath, affidavit, or solemn affirmation touching any matter or thing whereof such justice or other person has not jurisdiction or cognizance by some statute in force at the time being: Provided, that nothing in this section contained shall extend to any oath, affidavit, or solemn affirmation before any justice in any matter or thing touching the preservation of the peace, or the prosecution, trial, or punishment of offences, or touching any proceedings before either of the houses of parliament, or any committee thereof respectively, nor to any oath, affidavit, or affirmation which may be required by the laws of any foreign country to give validity to instruments in writing designed to be used in such foreign countries respectively.

The offence, therefore, is a misdemeanor.

The proceeding against the justice is by indictment. As, where the defendant thought fit to swear witnesses before himself with reference to the ecclesiastical conduct of two of the Bishop of Exeter's clergy.² Yet it was made a question, whether this offence is indictable, although the statute said—"It shall not be lawful," &c.¹ The indictment in this case was held bad, in arrest of judgment, because it failed to set out the deposition, so that the court could not judge whether or not it came within the statute.² It merely stated that "a certain oath or affidavit" was administered,³ and that the defendant had no cognizance nor jurisdiction thereof, and it negatived the proviso in the section. But it seemed to Williams and Coleridge, JJ., that the particulars of the oath needed not to be set out.⁴

¹ Anon. Str. 384. See East, P. C. 1009; Stark. Cr. Pl. 529.

² R. v. Nott, Car. & M. 288.

Frauds against public justice, as the doing of judicial acts in the name of another, are cheats.⁵ So, where the defendant personated a justice's clerk with intent to extort money from several persons, in order to procure their discharge from certain misdemeanors, the court, from a notion that the matter concerned the public justice of the kingdom, would not quash the indictment, but put the defendant to demur to it.⁶ So, the use of a false instrument connected with the administration of the law is punishable. As a counterfeit fine levied by a fictitious person.⁷ Putting in bail in a feigned name.⁸ And uttering a false affidavit to hold to bail, or making or knowingly using it is a misdemeanor, and punishable, whether the instrument be made here or abroad.⁹ So, the execution of a bail bond by a married woman, under the pretence of her being a widow, was held to be a fraud at common law.¹⁰

CHAPTER VII.

DISOBEDIENCE TO ORDERS OF JUDGES, &c.

*Disobedience to orders of judges, &c.*¹¹ To set at nought the command of the judge of a court of record is a very serious offence. Where the misdeed takes place in his presence, he will

¹ R. v. Nott, 4 Q. B. 768 ;
Dav. & M. 1.

² S. C.

³ S. C.

⁴ S. C. 7 Jur. 621.

⁵ East, P. C. 821.

⁶ R. v. Dupee, East, P. C. 1010.

⁷ R. v. Hubert, Cro. Eliz. 531.

⁸ See 1 Str. 384 ; and also Tho. Jones, 64 ; 1 Mod. 46.

⁹ Omealey v. Newell, 8 East, 364.

¹⁰ East, P. C. 821 ; citing R. v. Blackburn, Trem. P. C. 101.

¹¹ A company may be indicted in its name of incorporation for disobedience as well as an individual, and the course seems to be, to remove the indictment by certiorari into the King's Bench, where the defendants must plead by attorney, which they cannot do at the assizes. R. v. Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, 9 C. & P. 469 ; 2 Gale, & D. 236.

impose a fine for the contempt, or commit the party,¹ and for other such neglects an attachment will frequently be issued.² Yet there is no doubt but that the person so misconducting himself is liable to be indicted at common law.

So, in the case of magistrates, a similar proceeding is often resorted to. As where the defendant ventures to disobey an order of sessions. So, two overseers were indicted for not paying over the balance of their accounts to the new churchwardens and overseers.³ And a parish officer for refusing to receive a pauper sent regularly to his parish.⁴ This matter came before the court in another case, where the principal point made was, whether the particular order disobeyed was not punishable by statute as a distinct offence; but no question was made as to the general law of punishment for disobedience.⁵ So, upon a discussion as to the power of justices to compel a person to take an apprentice, the court said, "when we allow them such a power, of necessary consequence, we must allow an indictment for disobedience to their orders."⁶ So, an indictment will lie against the treasurer of a county for not paying the expenses of a witness.⁷ And for not paying over a fine to the county treasurer instead of the borough treasurer, where the borough had no separate grant of quarter sessions, but only a commission of the peace.⁸ So, an indictment will lie for not paying the costs of an appeal against a poor's rate, in conformity with an order.⁹ An indictment stated, that "a true copy of the order was served on the defendants, who then and there had notice of the said order." It was moved to arrest the judgment, but the statement was held sufficient.¹⁰ The order in this case was drawn upon paper from the minutes of the sessions, and was signed by the clerk of the peace. It was then read over to each of the defendants, and the clerk served them at the same time with a true copy. This was held sufficient, and that it was not necessary to give notice to produce the copy served, in order to let in such evidence.¹¹ Still the costs were not then taxed, but they were inserted in the order at an adjourned sessions, yet this was deemed no good objection, because it must be taken that the

¹ See 3 Burr. 1257.

² See R. v. Smithies, 3 T. R. 351. R. v. Edyvean, Id. 352; disobedience to a mandamus. R. v. Wallace, Id. 403; 5 T. R. 159; bad return to habeas corpus, 6 Mod. 97. R. v. Beardmore, 2 Burr. 792. For not carrying a sentence properly into execution.

³ R. v. Bill and another, 2 Burr. 805.

⁴ R. v. Davis, Say. Rep. 163; 2 Burr. 802. R. v. Boys, cited, S. P. Id. See also R. v. Fearnley, 1 T. R. 316.

⁵ R. v. Robinson, 2 Burr. 799; 2 Ld. K. 513. R. v. Bristow, 6

T. R. 168. See also R. v. Turner, 5 Mod. 329; 2 Salk. 474.

⁶ R. v. Gold, 6 Mod. 164; Salk. 381; 1 Russ. C. M. 364; citing 4 Burn. Just., verba Foster, J. See R. v. Shipton, 8 B. & C. 772.

⁷ R. v. Surry Treasurer, 1 Ch. Rep. 650. Or an attachment, but not a mandamus. R. v. Bristow, 6 T. R. 168. R. v. Jeyes, 3 Ad. & El. 416.

⁸ R. v. Dale, Dears. 37; 22 L. J. M. C. 44.

⁹ R. v. Byce, 1 Bott, P. L. 324.

¹⁰ R. v. Mortlock, 2 New. S. C. 108; 7 Q. B. 459.

¹¹ S. C.

parties had assented to that course.¹ So, where surveyors of the highway neglected to obey an order for repair, they were held indictable.² So, again, persons connected with friendly societies have frequently been the subjects of an indictment for this misdemeanor. So it is a misdemeanor to refuse duly to collect and pay over rates in pursuance of a legitimate order. Or to refuse the payment of the costs of prosecutions when directed in like manner. Or to neglect obedience to an order, either to receive or to deliver up a felon, as the case may be. The third offence of disobedience to the orders and regulations of the poor law commissioners, or of contempt towards them as a board, is a misdemeanor, and subjects the party to a fine of not less than 20*l.*, and imprisonment, with or without hard labour.³ A soldier may be indicted for disobedience for not paying a weekly sum for the maintenance of a bastard child, although Pollock, C. B., observed upon the incongruity of the law in this respect.⁴

It is not, however, to be supposed, that defences may not be made successfully to indictments of the nature above mentioned. Where there is no jurisdiction, for example, on the part of the authorities making the order, the judge will direct an acquittal, even although the objection appears on the record.⁵ It is no defence that the justices who had made an order in bastardy are guardians of the union ex officio to which the child would become chargeable if such justices did not attend, nor take any proceedings with reference to such order.⁶ Nor is it any defence that the same case in bastardy was tried at a prior petty sessions, and the order made at such sessions was withdrawn on the ground of its being a nullity on the face of it. A second order was held good under such circumstances, and an indictment for disobedience against the putative father was sustained. A supersedeas of the first order had been issued by the justices, and served upon the defendant, and a tender was made to him of all costs incurred under the first order. The case was argued, and the verdict of guilty was ordered to stand.⁷ And by Parke, B., the first order could not be superseded. It was a nullity.⁸ Whether, had the case

¹ R. v. Mortlock, 2 New. S. C. 108; 7 Q. B. 459. But whether without such consent the costs would have been so inserted, qu.? By Coleridge, J.

² R. v. Balme and another, Cowp. 648.

³ 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76. s. 98. An information under the 97th section of this statute was held bad for want of the word "wilfully," Carpenter v. Mason, 12 Ad. & El. 629; 4 Per. & D. 439.

⁴ R. v. Ferrall, 20 L. J. M. C. 39; Den. & P. 51. Because three calendar months are prescribed for nonpayment under 7 & 8 Vict. c.

101, s. 3, and the term of imprisonment for disobedience at common law is indefinite.

⁵ R. v. Hollis, 2 Stark. 536; where the defendant was indicted for not having removed an encroachment, pursuant to an order founded upon the Building Act.

⁶ R. v. Cant, 2 Moo. C. C. 271. R. v. Brisby, 18 L. J. M. C. 157.

⁷ R. v. Brisby, Den. 406. See R. v. Hinchliffe, 10 Q. B. 356. R. v. Jenkin, Ca. Temp. Hard. 301. R. v. Buck, 18 L. J. M. C. 113.

⁸ Den. 428.

been dismissed, the matter could have been reheard, was questioned by Patteson, J.¹ The question, therefore, whether, if a good order be abandoned, or the case dismissed, there can be a second hearing of the case, seems to be still open. Defences are not unfrequently resorted to to try rights and obligations between different jurisdictions. And, in the case of a ministerial officer, a mandamus, instead of an indictment, will sometimes be allowed, where it is evident that the officer has been put forward as a nominal party.²

Certain defendants were indicted for disobedience in not producing the parish books of rates before some justice of the peace, appointed by their brethren. But the indictment was quashed, for, by Holt, C. J.: the justices cannot refer the examination of the matter to a certain number of themselves, because they are all judges of the fact.³ An order for payment of money to a surgeon has been held bad, and therefore not the subject of an indictment for disobedience.⁴ And where an attorney tore off the items of an order for costs, under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, made at an assize for Anglesey, it was held that the treasurer was justified in refusing to pay the demand. The entire unmutated order should have been exhibited, and the conviction was accordingly annulled.⁵

Friendly societies.] The rules and management of friendly societies have caused some discussion upon this point of disobedience. For accuracy is requisite in propounding orders concerning these societies, and the Acts of parliament must be strictly adhered to. Therefore, where the indictment was for refusing to re-admit a party who had been expelled, and no proof was given that the rules and regulations of the society had been enrolled at the sessions, the court made the rule for entering a verdict of acquittal absolute, for the recital of the order of justices could not be deemed sufficient.⁶ The old Act, 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, gave justices a power to hear and determine complaints, and to make such orders therein as to them shall seem just. Certain justices upon a complaint made, ordered relief to be given to the person applying, and they further adjudged that he should be continued a member of the society. But when the proof of complaint and the order were produced in evidence, it appeared that the individual who considered himself aggrieved, had confined his story to the want of relief, and had not required his re-admission to the society. The defendants being found guilty, a rule was moved for to have a

¹ Den. 432.

² R. v. Wood Ditton Surveyor, 18 L. J. M. C. 218.

³ R. v. Glin and another, 6 Mod. 87; Ca. Sett. 219.

⁴ R. v. Smith, 1 Bott, P. L. 403. See also R. v. West, 2 Ld. R. 1157; where the defendant, although discharged by the Court of King's Bench, was obliged to enter into a recognizance until the validity of the order should be determined.

⁵ R. v. Jones, 2 Moo. C. C. 171; 9 C. & P. 401. See also upon this subject, R. v. Pierce, 3 M. & S. 62.

⁶ R. v. Gilkes and others, 8 B. & C. 439; 2 M. & Ry. 454; S. C. at N. P., 3 C. & P. 52.

new trial, and the court made it absolute, for the justices had only power to adjudicate upon the particular complaint addressed to them.¹ It is, however, no ground of defence to allege that the power of re-admission resides in a committee, so that the defendants, as president and stewards, are consequently not responsible. It was, indeed, held in one case, that it ought to appear by the constitution of the society, that the defendants had the power to restore the complainant.² But upon a late trial, Lord Tenterden observed, that if this answer were admitted, all the Acts regulating these societies might be utterly evaded.³ And Taunton, J., remarked, that the decision in R. v. Inge, was before the passing of 49 Geo. 3, c. 125, an Act to amend the 33 Geo. 3, c. 54.⁴ Therefore, in this last case it was held no good objection to say, that it did not appear upon the evidence that the president had any power to re-admit.⁵ It was likewise held, that an indictment stating that the society had been established under the Act, and the rules duly confirmed, was not invalid because it omitted to say that such rules had been filed, the word "filing" not being mentioned in the section⁶ which gave the justices jurisdiction in cases of complaint.⁷ Nor is it any defence that the parties have ceased to be stewards, where an order is made by justices to reinstate a person who has been excluded. It might be a ground of excuse that they had done their best to effect that object, but entire neglect cannot be justified. In such a case the court held, that if the defendant had shown at the trial, that they had done all they could to restore the party in obedience to the order, they might have given the fact in evidence by way of excuse.⁸ The order must find the party

¹ R. v. Soper and another, 3 B. & C. 857; 5 D. & Ry. 669. The court were also with the defendant upon another ground; the complainant having alleged, according to the indictment, that he had been deprived of the relief he had been entitled to from the stewards of the society for the time being, whereas the proof was that he had only complained of his having been deprived of relief.

² R. v. Inge and another, 2 Smith, Rep. 56.

³ 1 B. & Ald. 870.

⁴ Id.

⁵ R. v. Wade and another, Id. 861.

⁶ 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 15.

⁷ S. C. as above, 1 B. & Ald. 861. Sect. 2 of the stat. 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, directed that duplicates of the rules should be deposited with the clerk of the peace, and filed by him. It was held no objection to urge that these duplicates should have been signed by the clerk as well as the original rules which the Act expressly required to be so signed. S. C.

⁸ R. v. Gash and another, 1 Stark. 441. The society's rules were confirmed in London, but they afterwards held their meetings in Middlesex. It was held that they were an ambulatory body, and thus might change their residence: so that the justices of Middlesex might well have jurisdiction over their proceedings. And it was also considered, that the word "established" in the statute 33 Geo. 3, c. 54, s. 15, did not exclusively mean the place where the society was originally brought together, but might apply to any place where they should think fit to hold their meetings. S. C.

to be an officer. If it be directed to A. B., steward, &c., it is not sufficient. Nor if it recite a complaint upon oath stating the fact. Nor does an order show the applicant to be a member, by reciting a complaint upon oath, in which the party called himself a member, though the order direct certain monies to be paid.¹

By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 63, s. 29, if any person shall give to any member of a friendly society established under this Act or under any of the said repealed Acts, or to any person intending or applying to become a member of such society, a copy of any rules, or of any alterations or amendments of the same, other than those respectively which have been enrolled with any clerk of the peace or certified by the registrar, with a copy of his certificate appended thereto, under colour that the same are binding upon the members of such society, or shall make any alterations in or addition to any of the rules or tables of such society after they shall have been respectively enrolled or certified by the registrar, and shall circulate the same, purporting that they have been duly enrolled or certified under this or any of the said repealed Acts, when they have not been so duly enrolled or certified, every person so offending shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor. And with respect to frauds in withholding money, such offences are punishable upon summary conviction under the 24th section. But the proceeding by indictment is saved, provided that no person shall be indicted if he should have been summarily convicted.

We have said, however, that an indictment for disobedience is sometimes resorted to, for the purpose of trying questions of law. It might in that case be considered almost in the light of a civil action. Not but that the law still looks upon the neglect charged in the light of a misdemeanor, for some person in particular must be fixed with an obligation which exists in point of law, and he is criminally answerable for slighting it, yet it is customary, where an individual or a corporation decline to fulfil a supposed duty for the purpose of obtaining the opinion of the court as to their liability, merely to inflict a nominal fine, should the judicial decision be unfavourable. Thus, where there was a dispute between the justices of Liverpool and of the county of Lancaster, whether the former could commit to the Preston house of correction, the matter came to be tried through the means of an indictment against the governor of the house of correction at Preston, and the points raised were made the subjects of a special verdict.² A similar dispute was brought before the court upon a special case, and was decided upon the particular provisions of a local Act.³ So, where the matter at issue was whether ¹ Day v. King and others, 5 Ad. & El. 359.

² R. v. Houghton, 5 M. & S. 300. The statutes referred to in this case were, 5 Ann. c. 6, s. 2; 6 Geo. 1, c. 19, s. 2; 15 Geo. 2, c. 24; 53 Geo. 3, c. 162. The judgment was given for the crown.

³ R. v. Houghton, 5 M. & S. 311. The statutes referred to were, 51 Geo. 3, c. 143, local and personal, 17 Geo. 2, c. 5. Concerning rogues and vagabonds. Judgment for the defendant.

the Liverpool justices could demand the delivery of prisoners for trial from the governor of Lancaster gaol, the matter was argued for the crown against the governor upon a special case reserved after verdict. And the principle prevailing in this, as well as in other cases of the same kind, seems to have been, that where a borough or other jurisdiction is contributory to the county rate, there is, at common law, a right to enjoy advantages legally incident to such payment. And as the old adage runs thus, "qui sentit commodum, sentire debet et onus," the sentence must be read likewise mutatis mutandis: "they who contribute to the burthen shall partake of the benefit."¹ The court, therefore, construed the stat. 15 Geo. 2, c. 24, which places borough magistrates on a footing with county magistrates, upon the liberal principle above mentioned, and gave judgment for the crown.² So, the costs of a prosecution in the borough court of Liverpool were rightly ordered to be paid by the treasurer of the county of Lancaster, there being no exclusive jurisdiction exercised by the borough, nor any distinct treasurer in the nature of a county treasurer, nor rate similar to a county rate. The borough, on the contrary, contributed, as a part of the county, to the county rate.³ But, where the inferior jurisdiction has exclusive power, and raises a rate in the nature of a county rate, the case is altered, and a verdict of acquittal was ordered to be entered in favour of the treasurer of Kesteven, in Lincolnshire, under such circumstances.⁴ So, where the justices of Leicester borough had an exclusive jurisdiction within the borough, but a concurrent power with the county justices with reference to the liberties of the borough: upon an indictment for not delivering up a prisoner charged with felony, in that part of a parish where the concurrent jurisdiction existed, the court said they could not distinguish the case from R. v. Amos, notwithstanding an argument for the defendants, that in R. v. Amos, the borough magistrates had no exclusive jurisdiction.⁵

The indictment against Mr. Cope stated his refusal to receive a prisoner in wilful and contemptuous disobedience, &c. The warrant in question was directed, not "to the keeper of Newgate," as usual, but "to the keeper of the common gaol in and for the county of Middlesex." In the margin, was "for trial at Clerkenwell." This was the form of the warrants for the new prison at Clerkenwell; Newgate was the common gaol for Middlesex; yet the court held that the non-compliance with the warrant in question was not a wilful and contemptuous disobedience.⁶ In this case it was held, however, that the court of aldermen could not restrict the gaol of Newgate to prisoners for felony, so as to exclude persons committed by the Middlesex magistrates for misdemeanors, and that returns by previous keepers under 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, and

¹ 5 M. & S. 310, by Abbott, J.

⁵ R. v. Musson, 6 B. & C. 74.

² R. v. Amos, 2 B. & Ald. 533.

⁶ R. v. Cope, 7 C. & P. 720;

³ R. v. Johnson, 4 M. & S. 515.

6 Ad. & El. 226.

⁴ R. v. Myers, 6 T. R. 237.

returns by the court of aldermen, were evidence to show how the prison had been used.¹

These indictments, again, come into question occasionally upon discussions relative to the collection of the county rate. As where the justices of Somerset caused the defendant, a constable of Bath, to be indicted for not levying a sum of money within that city, for the purposes of the county rate, according to their order. The case was tried in Dorsetshire, and a verdict was found for the crown. The stat. 55 Geo. 3, c. 51, s. 1, enabled justices to tax any parish or other place within the limits of their commission. They alone had the power of trying felonies within the city of Bath. But that Act exempted liberties or franchises having a separate jurisdiction, and as Bath had a separate jurisdiction, it was contended that it was excluded. But the court said, that the Act must be construed to mean such places as might have a separate jurisdiction coextensive with that possessed by the county justices. Now here the Bath justices had no jurisdiction in cases of felony, and therefore they had not an exclusive separate jurisdiction. It is true that the courts attending prosecutions for felony were ordered by 55 Geo. 3, c. 51,² to be raised by a separate rate in cities, towns corporate, &c.; but those words would only provide for the expenses of the trial. The costs of maintenance in gaol, and other incidental expenses, were not provided for.³ Judgment was given for the crown.⁴

So, the maintenance of the family of a substitute for a militiaman has come into consideration, upon an indictment for disobedience to a justice's order.⁵

Circumstances, indeed, may happen, which entirely put it out of the power of persons to yield obedience to a magistrate's order. As where an Act ordained that a poor-house should be built, and, that after the building, the poor, who were under the management of the overseers, should be transferred to the care of guardians appointed by the Act. The house being built, the overseers of a parish affected by the statute in question refused to obey the order of a justice directing them to relieve a pauper. And the court held they were right, for the jurisdiction of the magistrate was at an end. Judgment of acquittal was given upon a special verdict.⁶

Recital of order.] The order must be carefully recited in the indictment. Where the defendants were charged with refusing to receive a bastard child, the indictments were quashed for want of an averment of the order.⁷ So, in the case of an order of the

¹ R. v. Cope, 7 C. & P. 720 ;
6 Ad. & El. 226.

² Repealed by 15 & 16 Vict. c. 81,
s. 1

³ 5 B. & Ald. 671, by Abbott,
C. J.

⁴ R. v. Clarke, 5 B. & Ald. 665.

⁵ R. v. Willis, 6 T. R. 179.

Upon a special verdict.

⁶ R. v. Keer and another, 5

T. R. 159.

⁷ R. v. Whitehead, 1 Salk. 371.

poor law commissioners, the count omitted to allege that the commissioners had made an order for the defendants, who were overseers, to account to the auditor; and for this reason it was held not sustainable.¹ A recital is not sufficient where such an allegation is wanting.² So it is, again, in the case of a warrant which an overseer or other officer is bound to execute.³ And service of the order must be alleged.⁴ It was considered to be a decisive objection to an indictment against six persons, that it charged a contempt by six persons of an order which was stated to have been served on four only. There ought to have been personal service⁵ on all to whom a contempt of the order might be imputed.⁶ And a request to the defendants that they would perform the duties required, was deemed insufficient to supply the omission.⁷ But a direct allegation of the foundation of the order is not necessary, if there be a positive averment of disobedience. The only defence in such a case is want of jurisdiction. Thus, the foundation of an indictment is the order of sessions, and until the order is shown to be reversed, it must be obeyed.⁸

"By the court," without more, will not support an indictment for disobedience, upon a charge for not obeying an order of restitution; the order should be signed by the justices of assize and proved in the ordinary way.⁹

Attornies and solicitors.] By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, s. 2, unless a person be regularly admitted and enrolled as an attorney or solicitor, he may not act as such, and to disobey the Act in this respect is an indictable misdemeanor. By sect. 35 certain incapacities and penalties are awarded against persons so doing. Here it appears that the prohibition and penalty take effect under different sections, and, therefore, it was held that an indictment would lie; whereas had both been in the same section, the penalty would have superseded the indictment.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Crossley and another, 2 Per. & D. 319; 10 Ad. & El. 132. After verdict an allegation stating an order to have been made by "the poor law commissioners," &c., without naming each commissioner, is good. And the words "duly sent" will suffice, without alleging actual service. S. C. But whether disobedience of an order of the commissioners within sect. 98, be indictable until the third offence, might have been a point. It was, however, not raised. 10 Ad. & El. 138, Patteson, J.

² R. v. Crouchurst, 2 Ld. Raym. 1363. R. v. White and another, Cald. 183.

³ R. v. Burrough, 1 Vent. 305.

⁴ R. v. Moorhouse, Cald. 554; 4 Dougl. 388.

⁵ Unless a particular Act of parliament, as the Poor Law Act, should dispense with personal service. R. v. Crossley, ut supra.

⁶ R. v. Kingston, 8 East, 41.

⁷ Id.

⁸ R. v. Mytton, Cald. 536; 4 Dougl. 333.

⁹ R. v. Sewell, 1 Cox, 255.

¹⁰ R. v. Buchanan, 15 L. J. Q. B. 227; 1 Cox, 200. Judgment being given on demurrer leave to plead was refused, but the facts were allowed to be stated in mitigation.

Church rate.] The facts connected with the rate need not to be set out in an indictment. It is sufficient to say that the rate was duly made and allowed, and that the defendant was duly rated. It would be otherwise as to the offence itself. The count then sets forth the information and the refusal to pay. This is sufficient without entering into the truth of the facts deposed to. The jurisdiction of the justices was made complete by the information. And thus the count would have sufficed, even had the indictment been faulty.

There needs not to be, de facto, a proper rate and a proper demand and refusal. It is, likewise, enough to aver that A. and B. were churchwardens at the time of the refusal, without adding that they were churchwardens at the time of the demand. The warrant mentioned a recital, but did not set out the recital. This was held sufficient. It will be intended that the warrant was served at a reasonable time before appearance. This will be presumed in favour of the justices, and the substance of the order is alone required without the tenor. Nor needs it to be averred that the rate was in force, if that fact can be gathered from the indictment. In this case there were three counts on different rates. One rate only was proved, and consequently judgment was entered for the defendant on two counts, and for the crown on the remaining count.¹

Contemptuous words of the court, &c.] There can be but little doubt than an indictment will lie at common law for speaking contemptuous words concerning a court of justice. But we shall not enlarge upon this, because the usual course is to proceed at once against the offender by attachment, and this course has been very frequently pursued without a rule upon the defendant to show cause.²

CHAPTER VIII.

OF MISCONDUCT BY JUSTICES AND OTHERS.

If a justice discharge a prisoner improperly, or take insufficient bail, he is liable to an information.³ On the other hand, should he ¹ R. v. Bidwell, Den. 222; 2 R. v. Crosse, 6 Mod. 43. R. v. Car. & K. 564. Unitt, 1 Str. 567.

² See 1 Salk. 84. R. v. Jones, Str. 185. R. v. Jermy, Say. Rep. 47. R. v. Kendrick, Id. 114; 2 Str. 1068. ³ R. v. Lediard, Say. Rep. 242. R. v. Clarke, 2 Str. 1216.

violate the liberty of the subject, he may be prosecuted.¹ As if he should proceed against a party without a summons or warrant.² So where a justice took an examination alone in order to make out an order of removal, an information was granted against him;³ and because two other justices signed the order upon that sole examination, without summoning the party or demanding security, the court awarded an information against them, likewise, for returning a falsehood upon the order, which recited that a complaint had been made, and that the party had been examined upon oath.⁴ The conviction or proceeding must, however, be removed before the court will grant an information.⁵ So, where a justice added the name of his father to an order of removal, an information was granted.⁶ So, where he antedated an order.⁷ But an information has been refused against a magistrate for denying to grant his warrant, no corruption being alleged.⁸

Extortion is, of course, a ground for proceeding against a justice.⁹

Corruption or favour¹⁰ is a manifest ground for proceeding against magistrates. This matter has often come before the court, upon the point of granting or withholding licences. The power to award the licence is discretionary with the justice, and the court will not grant an information against that officer because of his refusal to comply with the request of the publican,¹¹ but because of the corrupt motive which actuates him. So that where the defendant withheld licences from those voters who opposed their recommendation of candidates for the representation of Penryn, threatening that they would ruin the publicans who had so acted in opposition to their wishes, an information was readily issued by the court against them.¹² So, where two justices had improperly concurred in granting a licence which had previously been re-

¹ See R. v. Birnie, 1 M. & Rob. 160. R. v. Okey, 8 Mod. 45.

² R. v. Venables, 2 Ld. Raym. 1405. R. v. Allington, Str. 678. R. v. Wykes and others, Andr. 238. R. v. Cotten, W. Kel. 125; R. v. Taylor and another, 2 Sess. Ca. 350. See also 1 Salk. 181. But the appearance of the party will cure the defect of a want of summons. R. v. Johnson, Str. 261. An information has been refused against a party for executing a blank warrant. Anon. 2 Barnard, 198.

³ R. v. Wykes and others, Andr. 238.

⁴ S. C. diss. as to this point, Lee, C. J., because he conceived the two justices to have acted under a mistake.

⁵ R. v. Heber, 2 Str. 905.

⁶ R. v. Howard, 7 Mod. 307.

⁷ 1 Sess. Ca. 59.

⁸ R. v. Nicholls, 8 Mod. 337.

⁹ R. v. Jones, 1 Wils. 7.

¹⁰ R. v. Newton and others, 1 Str. 413.

¹¹ See R. v. Gyles, 180, Andr. where a mandamus was refused; although it was a case in which great hardship and oppression appeared on behalf of the justices. Id.

¹² R. v. Williams, R. v. Davis, 3 Burr. 1317. See also R. v. Baylis and others, Id. 1318. R. v. Hann and another, Id. 1716. R. v. Nottingham Justices, Say. Rep. 216. R. v. Temple, 1 Keb. 727. R. v. Bingham, 1 Ch. Barn. 100.

fused, on the ground of misbehaviour,¹ the court granted an information against one of them, who was the principal, and only discharged the rule against the other without costs, as it appeared that the latter, although deceived by his fellow justice, was not altogether blameless in the transaction.² And the court observed, that an information might be had as well for granting a licence improperly as for refusing one in the same manner.³ So, an information was granted against justices for refusing to relieve persons who were left out of a rate in order to prevent them from voting at elections.⁴ And against a justice who sat as judge in his own cause.⁵ But the absence of corrupt motives puts an end to the proceeding by information against the magistrates,⁶ and also by indictment if they have acted regularly.

Many other cases besides those of dealing with ale licences have occasionally come before the court. As where justices had interfered in an election struggle, and had granted a warrant to distrain for poor rates, in order to serve the purpose alluded to.⁷ So, where a magistrate had committed certain players under the Vagrant Act, upon which other magistrates thought fit to discharge the players upon their appealing and giving bail, the court granted an information against them for having taken upon themselves to supersede a warrant of justice of peace having competent jurisdiction, before the matter had been inquired into at all, and without having any evidence before them.⁸ And by Ashhurst, J., "Though they have denied generally that they acted from any interested motives in this business, yet that is not sufficient, for if they acted from passion or from opposition, that is equally corrupt as if they acted from pecuniary considerations."⁹ So, where a false certificate as to the condition of a highway was given by justices, an indictment against them was successful.¹⁰ And there may have been many other instances.

However, it should be remarked that an entire absence of cor-

¹ If the licence should have been refused for cause, the party applying for the information must allege that he was innocent of the offence charged as the reason for refusal. R. v. Athay, 2 Burr. 653.

² R. v. Holland and another, 1 T. R. 692.

³ R. v. Filewood, Id. cited by the court. R. v. Mercer, 2 Stark. 366.

⁴ R. v. Phelps and others, 2 Ld. Keny. 570.

⁵ R. v. Davis, Lofft. 62.

⁶ R. v. Baylis and others, 3 Burr. 1318. R. v. Young and another, 1 Burr. 557. See also

R. v. Halford, 7 Mod. 193, where an information was denied against a mayor for refusing to hold a borough sessions, there being no proof of wilfulness or corruption. Although costs will not always be awarded to the magistrate. See R. v. Wallis and another, Lofft. 38. And there are many other cases to the same effect.

⁷ R. v. Cozens and another, 2 Dougl. 426.

⁸ R. v. Brooke and others, 2 T. R. 190.

⁹ 2 T. R. 195.

¹⁰ R. v. Mawbey and others, 6 T. R. 619.

rupt motives will not discharge the justice from an indictment, although the court will not grant an information. As where a dispute happened between certain justices of London and of Surrey as to their jurisdiction in granting ale licences. The one party met legally and disposed of the business, upon which the others assembled on a subsequent day for the same object, which was an illegal act, and, accordingly, the latter were held liable to an indictment for their irregularity in granting licences on the second day.¹ And Ashhurst, J., said, that "although the want of corruption might be an answer to an application for an information, which is made to the extraordinary jurisdiction of the court, yet it is no answer to an indictment where the judges are bound by the strict rule of law."²

But a justice is not responsible by indictment for acting without a qualification, inasmuch as the statute has appointed a penalty for that which was no offence at common law, so that the act is not a misdemeanor at common law, but only punishable under the statute.³

Serjeant or pleader.] If any serjeant, pleader, or other, shall do any manner of deceit or collusion in the king's courts, or beguile the court or the party, he shall be imprisoned for a year and a day, or shall receive greater punishment according to the trespass.⁴

Under-sheriff.] An under-sheriff who practises as an attorney is liable to an information, but it must be shown to the court that he did acts which would amount to such practising.⁵

False return to mandamus.] An information will lie for a false return to a mandamus,⁶ or to a habeas corpus,⁷ or for disobedience to that writ.⁸

Riot Act.] But it will not be granted for acting upon emergency without reading the Riot Act,⁹ nor for pretending to read the Riot Act.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Sainsbury and another, 4 T. R. 451. R. v. Fielding, Burr. 720.

² 4 T. R. 457. As to the power of indicting justices for a false return to a mandamus without corrupt or improper motives, see R. v. Lancashire Justices, 1 Dowl. & Ry. 485.

³ R. v. Castle, Cro. Jac. 644. See R. v. Wright, 1 Burr. 543, a particular remedy being pointed out. R. v. Douse, 1 Ld. Raym. 672. R. v. Glass, 3 Salk. 350. See likewise 1 Salk. by Evans, 45, note (a) where the cases are collected. R. v. Watson, 3 Salk. 26. R. v. Edwards, Id. 27; Id. 189;

2 Ld. Raym. 991. R. v. Chatley and another, Say. Rep. 152. R. v. James, R. v. Buck, 2 Str. 679. R. v. Malland, Id. 828. R. v. Bright, 2 Lord Keny. 274.

⁴ 3 Edw. 1, c. 29; and see 6 Mod. 137.

⁵ R. v. Bull, 1 Wils. 93.

⁶ Lofft. 185.

⁷ R. v. Viner, 1 Freem. 522.

⁸ R. v. Falkingham, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 269.

⁹ Anon. Lofft. 253.

¹⁰ R. v. Spriggins, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 2.

Churchwardens and overseers.] If an overseer should corruptly allow a poor's rate, an information will lie against him, or he may be indicted. But the court refused to grant an information where the overseer had made an alteration with the approbation of the justices.¹ And overseers are indictable for not making a rate where it is their duty to do so.² But not for removing a pauper without fraud or menace during the pending of a special case after the order of justices has been confirmed by the court of quarter sessions.³

Juryman.] A juryman who falsely pretends to be another person, in order that he may be sworn in, is guilty of a misdemeanor.⁴

Constables.] A breach of duty by a constable is likewise in many instances punishable by indictment. As where upon the commission of a burglary, the constable refused to make a hue and cry according to a requisition made to him. But it was deemed to be a material exception to the indictment that the place of notice to the constable was not shown,⁵ and that it was not averred to the constable when the warrant was delivered.⁶ So a constable may be indicted for not obeying the warrant of a justice,⁷ or for not returning a warrant.⁸ So, where the defendant suffered a street-walker to escape out of his custody, the judgment for a misdemeanor was confirmed.⁹ And where the constable failed to carry a person to prison whom the justice had committed for further examination, he was held to be indictable, although he produced his prisoner at the time of the next hearing.¹⁰ So, a person may be indicted for not doing his best as constable to apprehend offenders. And a party is subject to such a proceeding for not aiding the constable when he is called upon to give his assistance.¹¹ But this case does not apply to the case of searching for nets or engines used to take game.¹² A watchman likewise might be indicted for a breach of duty.¹³ Where there has been a riot, the proofs are,—1st, that the constable saw a breach of the peace com-

¹ R. v. Barrat, 2 Dougl. 465. Perhaps an information might have gone against the justices. Id.

² R. v. Barlow and others, Ca. Sett. 214.

³ R. v. Cooper, 18 L. J. M. C. 16.

⁴ March, 81, pl. 132.

⁵ R. v. Crouther, Cro. El. 654.

⁶ 1 Freem. 524.

⁷ See R. v. Pawlett, 11 Mod. 114. And it is sufficient to state in the indictment that the party was in due form convicted. R. v. Wyat, 1 Salk. 380. S. C. 2 Lord Raym. 1189.

⁸ R. v. Wyat, Fort. 127.

⁹ R. v. Bootie, 2 Burr. 865. And it was held to be no objection that the indictment did not aver knowledge in the defendant of the party being a street-walker, and that it was not positively averred that the woman was such a disorderly person.

¹⁰ R. v. Johnson, 11 Mod. 62. R. v. Belwood, Id. 79.

¹¹ See 3 Edw. 1, c. 9; 2 Hen. 5, c. 8.

¹² R. v. Wildbore, Comb. 309.

¹³ R. v. Stainford, 5 Mod. 393.

mitted; 2nd, that there was good cause for interference; 3rd, that the defendant was without lawful excuse. It seems to be no excuse that the single aid of the defendant would not have availed against a number of rioters.¹

Commissioners.] An information lies against commissioners who exceed their powers.² But it has been refused against the commissioners of a turnpike road for irregularity.³

CHAPTER IX.

ILLEGAL DISTRESS.

Distresses.] To distrain beasts or sheep for the debt of the king, or any other, whilst another distress can be found sufficient to answer the demand, is a misdemeanor.⁴ And by the same statute, to take great and unreasonable distresses was declared to be punishable by a grievous amercement.⁵ By 52 Hen. 3, c. 1, no distress can be taken without an award of the king's court, upon pain of a fine, according to the trespass. By c. 2 & 4, the like punishment was ordained against such as should take out a distress out of the particular bailiwick or jurisdiction; and by 3 Edw. 1, c. 16, even a more grievous punishment was ordained, if the trespass required it. Again, by 52 Hen. 3, c. 1, such as would not suffer the distresses to be replevied, or should hinder the execution of summonses, attachments, or judgments given in the king's court, were to be punished in like manner. So again, by c. 4, and 3 Edw. 1, c. 16, there is the same penalty against any neighbour for driving a distress out of the county. And by 3 Edw. 1, c. 23, to distrain any foreign person which is of this realm, "for any debt whereof he is not debtor or pledge, is punishable by the grievous punishment."

Malicious impressment.] Malicious impressment is likewise a misdemeanor.⁶

¹ R. v. Brown, Car. & M. 314. Such a person, when acting, is protected, eundo, redeundo et morando. R. v. Phelps, Id. 180.

² R. v. Friar, 1 Ch. Rep. 702.

³ Anon. Lofft. 199.

⁴ 51 Hen. 3, st. 4; 28 Edw. 1, st. 3, c. 12. Except beasts impounded damage feasant.

⁵ See R. v. Leginham, 1 Mod. 71. R. v. Lesingham, Tho. Raym. 205. Semb. S. C.

⁶ 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 19.

CHAPTER X.

MISDEMEANORS COMMITTED AGAINST LEGAL OFFICERS.

Misdemeanors committed against legal officers.] By 1 Ric. 2, c. 13, to procure any indictment by malice against the judges of holy church, or against any other persons meddling according to law, for having cognizance in cases of tithes or other matters pertaining to the spiritual court, is an offence punishable by one year's imprisonment and grievous fine to the king, as in the case of false appeals.¹

Amongst the various misdemeanors of this class, that of obstructing process is not uncommon. As where a sheriff's officer is interrupted in the execution of his duty.² Or a custom-house officer.³ Or a magistrate.⁴ But some act of obstruction must be set forth in the indictment, or the prosecution will fail.⁵ So, obstructing a coroner in the due discharge of his office, is an offence for which an information will be granted.⁶ And it is likewise a misdemeanor to bury a body before the coroner's inquest shall have set upon it.⁷ So, obstructing process for debt within certain districts is punishable as a misdemeanor.⁸ Again, rescuers, whether of goods,⁹ or persons in contravention of law, are very frequently of the nature of misdemeanor. As where the defendants were charged with riotously and routously rising against bailiffs, and rescuing goods levied under a fieri facias.¹⁰ But the indictment ¹ 13 Edw. 1, st. 1, c. 12; 2 Inst. 489.

² R. v. Howe, 6 Esp. 124.

³ R. v. Akers, Id. 125, n.

⁴ R. v. How, 2 Str. 699. See R. v. Eastaff, Gow. Rep. 138, where it was held, that the secretary of state's warrant to keep persons in close and safe custody, enabled a gaoler to refuse any but the visiting magistrates access to prisoners. The defendant was therefore acquitted under the direction of Park, J., for denying such access to a party, who, although in the commission, was not a visiting justice.

⁵ 2 Str. 699.

⁶ R. v. Soleguard and another, Andr. 231. See East, P. C. 378.

⁷ Anon., 7 Mod. 10, per Holt, C.J.

⁸ By 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 27, s. 15, by fine or imprisonment, or both, and a penalty of 50*l.* may likewise be sued for.

⁹ An indictment for rescous need not state the non-consent of the plaintiff. R. v. Hoskins, 12 Mod. 324. And the rescue cannot be returned, where the sheriff has goods taken in execution, so that the rule will go without such return. 2 Barnard. 58. It is usual to say, vi et armis, although there are authorities, both as to the necessity as well as the immateriality of these words. See Fort. 302. R. v. Tucker, Jenk. 315.

¹⁰ R. v. Westbury, 8 Mod. 357.

in this case was adjudged ill, for want of setting forth the writ in full, and mentioning the name of the party whose goods were taken and rescued.¹ So it is indictable to rescue cattle impounded by the hayward. But it is to be understood that the cattle must be in the custody of the law before the responsibility of rescue attaches. And therefore if the hayward take cattle damage feasant in the grounds of an occupier, the rescue is not indictable till the distress reaches the pound; whereas, if the hayward take the cattle in a common or lane, the case is altered, for they are then immediately in the custody of the law, and not of a mere servant of the occupier, as when they are taken in a field.² So the rescue of a distress taken for a church rate is indictable, but the warrant of distress must specify the time when it is to be sold. It will otherwise be bad.³ "Forthwith" is an insufficient satisfaction of not less than four days, nor more than eight days.⁴

The rescue of prisoners charged with misdemeanor is indictable as a misdemeanor.⁵ And the same might be said of other rescues, as from the custody of one of the superior courts. But this is also a great misprision, and may be punished by the forfeiture of goods and of the profits of lands, and by imprisonment for life.⁶ So a rescue from bail is a misdemeanor.⁷ And it makes no difference if a warrant be directed to two, and the arrest be made by one only. Nor does it signify that the bailiff was intimidated by a comparatively harmless instrument, supposing it to have been a pistol.⁸ In fact, every rescue is a misdemeanor, if made from lawful custody.⁹

It is likewise an indictable matter not to aid a constable, but the constable must not select the parties he calls upon to assist him. He has no power to require particular persons to attend him.¹⁰ So, to aid an escape from prison for an offence less than felony is, in most cases, a misdemeanor; and a negligent escape, as of a person going to a prison for an offence, would be indictable at common law.¹¹ So, an escape by the party himself is an indictable offence at common law. So, a violent rescue is, of course, an offence.¹² So, to facilitate the escape of a person when pursued by officers of justice for an offence in respect of which no warrant has

¹ R. v. Westbury, 8 Mod. 357.]

² R. v. Bradshaw, 7 C. & P. 233.

³ R. v. Williams, 2 Car. & K. 1001; Den. 529.

⁴ S. C.

⁵ 1 Russ. C. M. 385, and is likewise punishable by attachment. R. v. Wilkins, 1 Str. 624. R. v. Horsley, 5 T. R. 362. R. v. Elkins, 4 Burr. 2129. See 2 Barnard, 88, 90.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 21, s. 5.

⁷ R. v. Butcher and others, Peake, N. P. C. 170.

⁸ R. v. Bachhouse, Lofft. 61.

⁹ R. v. Almey, 3 Jur. (N. S.), 750, Erle, J.

¹⁰ R. v. Wildbore, Ca. Sett. 214.

¹¹ East, P. C. 378.

¹² But the nature of the offence must be set out. R. v. Freeman, Str. 1226; and the writ described. R. v. Westly and others, 2 Sess. Ca. 96. See Keilw. 194.

been granted, is a misdemeanor. As where the relation of one O., who was pursued by officers for forgery, conveyed him secretly on board a vessel, and actively engaged himself in promoting the escape of O. from England in a West Indian vessel.¹ So, cattle when impounded for damage feasant, is an indictable offence.²

CHAPTER XI.

RETURNING FROM TRANSPORTATION.

Returning from transportation.] By 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 22, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 67, all persons under sentence, &c., of transportation or banishment, or who shall be under agreement to that effect, for life or any number of years, under the provisions of any Act, and shall be afterwards at large without lawful cause, before the expiration of the term, shall be guilty of felony, and liable to be transported for life;³ and previously to such transportation, shall be imprisoned for any term not exceeding four years, with or without hard labour, and may be tried either in the county or place where he shall be apprehended, or in that from whence he was ordered to be transported or banished.

The punishment by penal servitude having superseded that of transportation, it is observable that those who return from any place assigned them under a sentence of penal servitude, incur the same penalty as returned convicts from transportation; and the statute still embraces the ancient offence, because there are still many persons under sentence of transportation whose illegal return is, by the continuance of the original ordinance in this respect, sufficiently provided against.

Under the annual Mutiny Act, all persons ordered to be kept in penal servitude shall be subject to every provision concerning any persons under sentence of penal servitude; and from the time when such order shall be made, every Act in force touching the escape of felons, or their afterwards returning, or their being at large without leave, shall apply to such offenders, and to all persons aiding and abetting, contriving, or assisting in, any escape or intended escape, or returning without leave, of every such offender. But if required, the clerk shall deliver a certificate to the offender containing his christian and surname, his offence, and the place of trial, and the conditions on which the order was made, and this certificate shall be sufficient proof of the conviction and sentence.¹ It is to be remarked, that the regulation extends not merely to persons adjudged to transportation, but likewise to those who receive Her Majesty's mercy upon condition of transportation.

¹ R. v. Buckle, 1 Russ. C. M. 409. But the defendant was acquitted, because the knowledge of O.'s crime was not proved against him. Advertisements offering a large reward for the apprehension of O. had been circulated, but there was no evidence that the defendant had ever seen one of them, nor that he was acquainted with the charge against his relation.

² See R. v. Arnold, 2 Keb. 526.

³ Then by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, penal servitude is substituted for transportation. But by sect. 3, amongst other matters, the punishment of offenders at large without lawful cause before the expiration of their sentence, and all other provisions applicable to persons under sentence of transportation, shall apply to penal servitude, in lieu of transportation.

If it should be thought fit, the convict may be remitted to his former sentence; still, as the Act has these words,—“who shall have agreed or shall agree, to transport or banish himself or herself on certain conditions under the provisions of this or of any former Act,” it is certainly possible that it may please the sovereign to offer a condition of mercy to an offender, and in that case, the old decisions will apply, and may with propriety be briefly noticed. Thus it was clearly held, that if the prisoner had an intention of quitting the kingdom according to the rule prescribed, but through distress of poverty and ill health, had been unable to do so, he might be said to have a lawful excuse;² and whether these impediments have really hindered the person from fulfilling the condition of his pardon, is a question for the jury.³ It lies, however, upon the prisoner to prove his incompetency, and it has been usual upon his failure to do this, not to prosecute him afresh, but to remit him to his former sentence.⁴ In Aickles's case it was made a question, whether the breach of the condition did or not make the whole pardon null and void, but it was not decided.⁵ The party, in capital cases, lay under sentence of death, with a respite of that sentence during pleasure, or became liable to be immediately transported, if his original judgment were one of transportation. There is, however, one other question which, it seems, has not been determined. If one under sentence of transportation, or now, penal servitude for years, be pardoned on condition of transporting himself for that period, and be found at large, the condition being broken, can he be indicted, and suffer penal servitude for life under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 67, and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2, or shall he be merely remitted to his former sentence?

This was the point in Aickles's case, with the exception, that under the old Act, 8 Geo. 3, c. 15, the prisoner was liable to a capital punishment instead of a heavier sentence of transportation.⁶ By 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 23, it shall be sufficient to allege the ¹ 24 Vict. c. 7, s. 18; as to penal servitude in the colonies, s. 19. By s. 20, a sentence of penal servitude may be commuted to imprisonment. So is the Marine Mutiny Act, 24 Vict. c. 8, ss. 23, 24, 28.

² R. v. Aickles, Leach, 390.

³ R. v. Thorpe, Leach, 396, n.

⁴ See R. v. Miller, Id. 74; R. v. Madan, Id. 223; R. v. Aickles, Id. 390.

⁵ Vide supra.

⁶ R. v. Thorpe, Leach, 396, n.

order for transportation without alleging the indictment, trials, pardon, &c. But the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court where such sentence or order for transportation or banishment shall have been passed, shall, at the request of any person on Her Majesty's behalf, give a certificate in writing, signed by him, containing the effect and substance only (omitting the formal part) of every indictment and conviction of such offender, and of the sentence or order for his transportation or banishment, (not taking for the same more than 6s. 8d.,) which certificate shall be sufficient evidence of the conviction and sentence, &c., and every such certificate, if made by the clerk or officer of any court in Great Britain, shall be received in evidence, upon proof of the signature and official character of the person signing the same; and every such certificate, if made by the clerk or officer of any court out of Great Britain, shall be received in evidence if verified by the seal of the court or by the signature of the judge or one of the judges of the court, without further proof. Hence it follows, that although the indictment needs not to allege any offence,¹ &c., the certificate must contain the effect and substance of the indictment and conviction, where a certificate merely stated that the prisoner had been convicted.

Indictment.] The indictment states, that at the general sessions, &c., on, &c., before, &c. A., according to due course of law, was tried, for that he [state the charge], and thereupon by a certain jury of the country before our said Lady the Queen, and the said A. in that behalf then, to wit, on, &c., at, &c., in the court of the said session so holden as aforesaid, he the said A., was duly convicted of the said felony upon the indictment aforesaid, and thereupon the said A., by the above-named justices, &c., assigned, &c., was ordered to be kept in penal servitude for the term of —, as by the record, &c.; and that the said A. afterwards, to wit, on, &c., feloniously and without lawful cause, was at large within this kingdom of Great Britain, before the expiration of the said term of — years, against the form, &c.

Where a certificate merely stated that the prisoner had been convicted of felony, without mentioning the nature of that felony, the judges held it insufficient. The indictment was likewise held faulty, for a similar omission.² Whereas, where the offence was set forth on the face of the certificate, namely, larceny, it was held to be no objection that the sentence was transportation for fourteen years, and so far illegal, the judgment remaining unreversed.³ A certificate was put in which stated that the prisoner had been convicted of two larcenies, and sentenced to two several terms of transportation of seven years each for the said larcenies; this was held sufficient.⁴ The certificate purported to be that of

¹ R. v. Treadwell, 1 Russ. C. M. 451. Sutcliffe, cited Id. 469. And see R. v. Fitzpatrick, Id. 512.

² R. v. Watson, Russ. & Ry. 468, decided on the authority of R. v. ³ R. v. Finney, 2 Car. & K. 774. ⁴ R. v. Russell, 1 Cox, C. C. 81.

I. G., deputy clerk of the peace, for the county of L., and clerk of the courts of general quarter sessions, &c. It appeared in evidence that the clerk of the peace for L. had three deputies, partners, of whom, I. G. was one; each acted as clerk of the peace, and the partners had kept the sessions records at their office for forty years. This proof of the conviction and sentence was held sufficient.¹ So, where the record stood thus,—“At the general quarter sessions of the peace of our Lady the Queen, holden at M., in and for the county of K., on, &c., J. H., late of, &c., was in due form of law tried and convicted on a certain indictment:” this was held sufficient, without any more formal caption.² The word “feloniously” must be used in the indictment, for the words in the old statute were “suffer death as in cases of felony,” and the present has the terms “guilty of felony.”³

A similar certificate is made available by the Mutiny Act. Thus, it shall contain the christian and surname of the offender, his offence, the place where the court was held, before whom he was convicted, and the conditions on which the order of transportation was given. The certificate shall then be sufficient proof of the conviction and sentence of such offender, and also of the terms on which such order for his transportation was given. There is a similar provision in the Marine Mutiny Act.

It was held in Miller's case, that the king's sign manual ought to have been received in evidence upon an indictment for returning from transportation, because, although only significant of the king's intention to pardon, and therefore revocable; yet, as it was an authority for the judge to admit the prisoner to bail, it was evidence of a lawful excuse for his appearing at large.⁴

¹ R. v. Jones, 2 Car. & K. 524.

³ R. v. Horne, 4 Cox, C. C. 263.

² R. v. Horne, 4 Cox, C. C. 263.

⁴ R. v. Miller, Leach, 74; 2

See also R. v. Ambury, 6 Cox, C. Sir Wm. Bl. 797.
C. 263.

CHAPTER XII.

OF RESCUES.

Rescues.] It is said, that whenever the arrest of a felon is lawful, the rescue of him is felony ; and also that, in the case of a rescue from the custody of a private person, the rescuer should have the knowledge of the party being under arrest for felony.¹ By the same rule, the rescue of a person apprehended for treason is treason at common law, as in the case of felony.² By 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 88, s. 1, if any person shall rescue, or aid, &c., in rescuing, any one charged with, suspected of, or committed for felony, then, if the person charged, &c., be convicted of felony, and entitled to clergy, and liable to imprisonment not exceeding one year, the rescuer may be transported for seven years, or imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for a term not less than one year, nor exceeding three years.

The rescue of persons for offences under the Black Act was mitigated as to punishment by 4 Geo. 4, c. 54, s. 1 ; but as the Black Act was repealed by 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, the other Act of Geo. 4, although unrepealed, is superseded.

The rescue of a prisoner from the superior courts is a great misprision, and punishable, at common law, by imprisonment for life, forfeiture of lands for life, and of goods and chattels, though no stroke be given.³ And as to transportation,⁴ any act of rescuing, or attempting or aiding to rescue any one sentenced to transportation or banishment from custody, shall be punishable as if the offender had been himself sentenced to the same term of exile.⁵

A rescue is commonly accomplished either when a person is charged with and committed for felony, or when he is being conveyed to gaol after his conviction, or when he is about to undergo his sentence.

Rescues, therefore, in the popular sense of the word, may be understood to apply to those who are out of prison at the time of the attempt to deliver them ; but it also signifies any attempt to release a party from gaol, if attended with success.

¹ 1 Hale, 606.

² See 1 Russ. C. M. 434.

³ 1 Russ. C. M. 435. See R. v. Lord Thanet and others, East, P. C. 408.

⁴ Now applicable to penal servitude : 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

⁵ 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 22. See 56 Geo. 3, c. 27, ss. 7, 13.

Indictment.] The cases for rescue are rare, and we will, therefore, merely refer to the books on criminal pleading for precedents.¹ The nature and cause of the imprisonment, together with the special circumstances of the case, must in general be set forth;² and it is said to be necessary to use some word importing that the rescue was forcible, and against the will of the officer who had the prisoner in custody.³

Prison-breach.] The law of prison breaking is in a great measure governed by 1 Edw. 2, st. 2, "De frangentibus prisonom." That statute (which is unrepealed) declared, that the offender should not sustain any judgment of life or member, unless the cause for which he was taken and imprisoned required such a judgment, in case of his conviction. This provision seems, at first sight, to respect those only who have been committed for trial, and not such as are convicted of the offences imputed to them, but it is laid down, as a matter beyond doubt, that persons attainted who break prison, are as much guilty as the others who break out before trial.⁴

Prison-breach, as rescue, is still felony at common law, where the original offence is a common law felony, or a felony made capital by statute, but it is only a misdemeanor in respect of offences less than felony at common law, or statutable felonies which are not capital. The common law, says Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, is restrained by the statutes in respect only of imprisonment for offences and capital; when an offence becomes capital, it is as much out of the benefit of the statute as if it had always been so;⁵ and, thence it follows, that it is immaterial whether the offence were capital at the time of the statute 1 Edw. 2, or were made such by subsequent statutes,⁶ provided it were capital at the time of the prison-breach.⁷

However, although a party cannot defend himself against a charge of prison-breach upon a plea, that no felony has, in reality, been committed, seeing that it is a great misdemeanor for a person to shrink from an accusation by those means, it seems that he can relieve himself from a charge of felonious prison-breaking by negating the circumstance of the felony;⁸ and that means the existence of the felony itself. For if a person be accused of a felony, however wrongfully, but which has, in reality, happened, he cannot justify beaking his prison.⁹ The production of the record of acquittal for the felony by the party breaking prison, if he himself was the person acquitted, will probably answer a subsequent charge for breaking prison.¹⁰

¹ Stark. Cr. Pl. 421, 642, 643.

² 1 Russ. C. M. 434.

³ Id.

⁴ 2 Hawk. c. 18, s. 16. See also, as to persons brought into England from abroad in order to be transported. 5 Geo. 4, c. 84, s. 1.

⁵ 2 Hawk. c. 18, s. 13.

⁶ See 2 Hawk. ut supra.

⁷ Id. s. 14.

⁸ Id. s. 15.

⁹ See 2 Hawk. c. 18, ss. 5, 6, 7, and likewise s. 8.

¹⁰ See post.

On the other hand, it may be suggested, that if the commitment be for an offence less than a capital felony, and it turns out upon the trial for breaking prison, that the crime committed was, in reality, capital, the mittimus will not govern the result, and the prisoner may be convicted.¹ There are, however, opinions to the contrary of the last proposition.²

Moreover, a party does not seem to be guilty of a higher offence than felony, if he break prison under a charge of high treason, although the case may be different if he simultaneously assist the escape of others accused of that crime.³

What, a prison.] Any place where liberty is restrained seems to be a prison within the meaning of the law. Thus, the stocks, although the party had not been yet indicted for the felony.⁴ The house of a constable or private person, or other such places, and à fortiori, a common gaol, are prisons for this purpose.⁵

What a breaking.] Further, in order to complete the offence, there must be both a breaking and an escape. A prisoner who leaves the gaol without using violence, cannot be said to have broken his prison,⁶ nor can one who has either failed or forborne to escape, be said to be a prison-breaker, although he may in the first instance, have used violence.⁷ And clearly, if he break his place of confinement in order to save his life, in case of fire, for example, he is not to be considered a transgressor against the law.⁸ And again, if he should actually escape through the medium of others, who break the prison, but without his procurement, however he may be answerable for his escape, he is certainly not guilty of prison breaking.⁹

A very slight degree of force has been deemed sufficient to constitute a breaking. A prisoner who had been confined under a commuted sentence for horse-stealing, tied two ladders together, and placed them against the wall of the yard of the prison; but in making his escape he threw down some of the bricks of the wall; the evidence upon this occasion, likewise, went the length of showing that these bricks were purposely left in a loose condition, so that by their falling, an alarm might quickly be given to the gaoler. It was doubted whether this were prison breaking, or merely an escape, and the opinion of the judges was requested. The judges held it to be a prison breach, but Richardson, J., added, that had there been an escape by only using the ladders, the offence would not have amounted to felony.¹⁰

It is settled, that a person who breaks prison may be charged with that offence before he is convicted of the crime for which he

¹ 2 Hawk. c. 18, s. 15.

² Id.

³ 2 Hawk. c. 18, s. 17. R. v. Bensted, Cro. Car. 583.

⁴ Dy. 99, pl. 60.

⁵ 2 Hawk. c. 18, s. 4.

⁶ 1 Hale, P. C. 611.

⁷ 2 Hawk. c. 18, ss. 9, 12.

⁸ Id. s. 11.

⁹ Id. s. 10.

¹⁰ R. v. Haswell, Russ. & Ry. 458.

was originally imprisoned;¹ and so says Lord Hale, "it differs from the case of a rescue or escape before, and the reason is, because here it is the same person, there they are divers, and therefore, in the latter cases the principal felony shall be first tried."² But if the prisoner should chance to be put upon his trial for the capital felony before he is indicted for the prison breach, and an acquittal should be the result, he becomes immediately in a condition to plead that acquittal in bar to the indictment. And so it was done by Lord Hale in the case of Mrs. Sanford, whom he defended.³

Indictment.] The indictment charges, that A., being a prisoner in Her Majesty's gaol at B., on, &c., wilfully and feloniously did break the said gaol and rescue one C., then and there being in the said gaol, convicted of, [set out the offence] and committed upon, and in execution of the said judgment for the said felony as aforesaid, from and out of the said gaol, so that the said C., by the aid and assistance of him the said A., did then make his escape from and out of the said gaol, and did go at large, against the form, &c.

It is not sufficient to say in an indictment for this offence that the offender feloniously "broke prison;" his case must be specially set forth, so that it may appear that he has been lawfully imprisoned.⁴ Nevertheless, the breaking must be likewise stated, for one of these allegations cannot be introduced without the other.⁵

Aiding escapes.] It is a misdemeanor at common law for a gaoler to suffer an escape.⁶ But the indictment must show a custody on the defendant's part as keeper of the prison,⁷ and that the person escaping had been legally committed. The words "so being such" street-walker were held to be an averment of that fact.⁸ But an indictment which alleged that the party had been charged with high treason was considered sufficient.⁹ The offence, however, as well as the authority, must appear.¹⁰ So that a yeoman warder of the Tower, and a gentleman gaoler, were held punishable for an escape, as officers, not being persons known to the law in that capacity.¹¹ Again, it is an offence at common law to permit an escape, and a person who bribes the constable is

¹ 2 Hawk. c. 18, s. 18.

² 1 Hale, P. C. 611.

³ Id. 612. As to the offence of breaking prison for the second time at Millbank, see ante.

⁴ 2 Hawk. c. 18, s. 20.

⁵ R. v. Burridge, 3 P. Wms. 483.

⁶ R. v. Wright, 1 Ventr. 169.

⁷ R. v. Fells, 5 Mod. 414; S. C. Holt's Ca. 279.

⁸ R. v. Booty, 2 Ld. Keny. 575.

⁹ 5 Mod. 414.

¹⁰ R. v. Plowman, Cro. El. 752. The warrant was to two, and the arrest by one, and it was held good. R. v. Roe and others, 1 Str. 117.

¹¹ 2 Ch. Burn. 6. R. v. Hill and Dod, 1 Russ. C. M. 421. R. v. Rich, Id.

punishable,¹ and it is no defence to say that the prisoner was not confined upon any criminal charge, but otherwise; for example, under remand of the commissioner for the relief of insolvent debtors.² Again, where the defendant harboured one O., his relation, when he was under pursuit by the officers of justice, no objection was made upon general grounds; but the indictment was held not to be sustainable, because it could not be brought home to the defendant that he participated in the knowledge of his relation's guilt.³ An indictment for suffering an escape in a case of forcible entry did not state how the commitment was made, whether upon view of the force by the justices, or upon an indictment found, but by Holt, C. J., it is only inducement, and, after verdict, it shall be intended that the commitment was legal.⁴

An indictment for rescue may be supported upon the certificate of the clerk of the peace vouching that an indictment for a misdemeanor has been found against A.; against whom a warrant is accordingly granted, and who is rescued upon the execution of it.⁵ The proceeding may be by information.⁶

Rescue implies that some kind of force has been used, but the act of aiding an attempt to escape may, evidently, be performed without violence. It is in this latter view that we purpose to consider the subject of escapes in the present section. It is felony at common law to assist a felon to escape out of his lawful custody.⁷ A rule, however, which must be restricted to capital offences; and it has, moreover, been held that a person who aids a convict under sentence of transportation to escape from custody, is, independently of any statutable enactment, an accessory after the fact to the felony.⁸

Nevertheless, the offence of aiding escapes depends, at the present day, in a great measure upon the acts of the legislature.

By 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 43, to aid and assist any prisoner in escaping from gaol, or in the attempt, is felony, and punishable with transportation (now penal servitude) not exceeding fourteen years.⁹

¹ R. v. Vaughan, 1 Wils. 22.

² R. v. Allan, Car. & M. 295.

³ R. v. Buckle, 1 Russ. C. & M. 409. Advertisements had been published, but there was no proof to affect the defendant with notice of any one of them.

⁴ R. v. Wright, 3 Salk. 93.

⁵ R. v. Stokes, 5 C. & P. 148. See also as to rescous, Mar. 67, pl. 165.

⁶ R. v. Gaoler of Shrewsbury, 1 Str. 532.

⁷ 2 Hawk. c. 18, s. 1.

⁸ R. v. Burridge, 3 P. Wms.

483. See also R. v. Scadding, Yelv. 134.

⁹ By sect. 44, in case of a conviction the certificate of the clerk of assize, &c., and proof of the identity of the offender, shall be deemed evidence of the return and fact of the conviction, and of the species and period of the confinement. Moreover, by 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 43, to convey into a prison any mask, visor, &c., instruments or arms fitted for escape, and to deliver the same to a prisoner without consent, shall be deemed a delivery coupled with an intent to further an escape.

Should the party be in the custody of a private individual, it seems necessary that the rescuer should be affected with notice that the arrest was for felony;¹ but if the custody be that of an officer, the rescuer must at his peril take notice of it;² and, it may be added, that a prison at common law, the stocks for instance,³ is one from which a stranger may be guilty of rescuing a criminal.⁴

In treating of prison-breaking, rescues, and returning from transportation, we have so fully noticed several points relating to the prison, the nature of the offence, and other incidental circumstances nearly common to all these matters concerning escapes, that a repetition of them would be unnecessary. The kind of prison is the same;⁵ the contributing to the escape of a traitor is governed by the same rule,⁶ and the same notice in the case of a private person is requisite, as upon the occasions just mentioned; but where the prisoner is charged with assisting the escape of a convict, it is not necessary that he should be proved to have been cognizant of the specific offence of which the person whose escape he has been attempting was convicted.⁷ In this same case it was held, that a conviction for conveying and delivering instruments in prison was good, although the party sought to be delivered had, in fact, been pardoned, for a capital felony of which he had been convicted, and on account of which he was then in gaol.⁸

It is to be noted, that the words in 16 Geo. 2, c. 31, s. 1,⁹ are "for treason, or any felony expressed in the warrant of commitment or detainer;" so that where an indictment was preferred upon that statute, and the commitment appeared to have been "on suspicion only," the charge was not supported.¹⁰

Indictment and evidence.] At common law it is necessary to state that the rescuer, or accessory, knew of the offence of which the prisoner was convicted, or for which he was committed.¹¹ But we have seen that this is not required under the statutes;¹² and under 16 Geo. 2, c. 31, it has been held that an indictment was not informal for want of stating, that the party himself attempted his own escape, for the averment that the prisoners aided and assisted in the attempt, was considered by the judges quite sufficient to show that such an attempt had been made.¹³ Nor, under 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 43, was it necessary to set out

¹ 1 Hale, P. C. 606.

² Id.

³ Dy. 99.

⁴ 2 Hawk. c. 21, s. 1.

⁵ See Id.

⁶ East, P. C. 101.

⁷ R. v. Shaw and others, Russ. & Ry. 526.

⁸ Id.

⁹ This Act is repealed by 4 Geo. 4, c. 64.

¹⁰ R. v. Walker, Leach, 97. R. v. Greeniff, Id. 363; and see Id. 98, n. This objection is now provided against.

¹¹ R. v. Young, 1 Russ. C. M. 440.

¹² R. v. Shaw and others, Russ. & Ry. 526, ante.

¹³ R. v. Tilley and others, Leach, 662. See also R. v. Glover, and R. v. Manlove, Id. 670.

the means employed to effect the escape, for the statute had the words, "by any means whatsoever."¹ The delivery of a key by the prisoner to a turnkey in order to aid in his escape, is within the statute, and supports the indictment.² Nor was it necessary to show that the prosecution was commenced within a year after the offence, as required by the repealed Act, 16 Geo. 2, c. 31, s. 4.³ An indictment charged the defendant as accessory to the escape of a felon by harbouring him. It was objected, that since 1 Edw. 2, st. 2, s. 1, the offence of prison-breach was only a misdemeanor, but the prisoner was acquitted. The judge would otherwise have reserved the point.⁴

When the certificate is once made, it cannot afterwards be impeached in any of its formal parts.⁵ A similar certificate, together with the proof of the identity of the person, is, as we have already seen, sufficient evidence under the statute 4 Geo. 4, c. 64.⁶ And, lastly, it is to be remarked, that although the indictment under some of the statutable provisions referred to need not state any prior conviction nor sentence, the certificate of the clerk of assize, or other officer, must nevertheless give the substance and effect of both the indictment and the conviction of the party whose escape comes in question, although the formal parts may certainly be omitted under the express provisions of such statutes to that effect. The aiding, &c., being a substantive felony, the objection that the principal should be tried before the defendant failed.⁷

By 4 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 44, escapes and prison-breaches may be tried either in the jurisdiction where the offence was committed, or where the party is apprehended or retaken.

Millbank Penitentiary.] By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 26, s. 22, every convict in the Millbank Prison who shall break prison or escape while being conveyed thither, from lawful custody, shall for the second offence be deemed guilty of felony. The first offence is punishable with an additional term of imprisonment not exceeding three years.

By sect. 26, every convict as above may be tried before the Central Criminal Court, or in the county where he shall be taken; and, whether the prosecution be against a convict, or any

¹ Holloway v. The Queen, Den. & P. 287.

² S. C.

³ S. C.

⁴ R. v. Green, 8 Cox, 441. Nevertheless, it is settled that the statute of Edward mitigated the common law which made all prison-breaches felony, and restrained the felonious breach to rescues or escapes for treason and felony. See further as to prisons generally, 4

Geo. 4, c. 64; 5 Geo. 4, c. 84; 13 & 14 Vict. c. 39; 16 & 17 Vict. c. 121; 22 Vict. c. 25, as to the government of convict prisons abroad, and especially ss. 13 to 19, inclusive, as to escapes, rescues, and attempts, &c.

⁵ R. v. Shaw and others, Russ. & Ry. 526.

⁶ Ante.

⁷ Holloway v. The Queen, Den. & P. 287.

other person as accessory, a copy, properly attested, of the order of commitment, with proof of indenture, with the production of the register, shall be sufficient evidence of the facts contained in the register, without the production of any record or conviction, or other proof that such convict had been convicted of felony.

And the said judgment is penal servitude for not less than three years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, and once, twice, or thrice, public or private whipping, if the offender be a male, in addition to the imprisonment.¹ The hard labour, together with solitary confinement, are added at the discretion of the court.²

Rescue from Millbank Penitentiary.] By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 26, s. 23, to rescue any convict during his conveyance to the penitentiary at Millbank, or during his confinement there, or to aid in any such rescue, is made felony.³ By the same section the keeper of convicts there is guilty of felony if he suffer an escape; so it is if any person supplies arms, &c., or in any manner whatever aids in an escape from that prison, though no escape be made;⁴ and a negligent escape is a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine and imprisonment, and a copy of the commitment, together with proof of identity, will be sufficient to make out the charge.⁵

Parkhurst Prison.] Similar provisions are enacted with regard to Parkhurst Prison:⁶

Pentonville.] And Pentonville;⁷ and, so again, as to naval prisons.⁸

Mint offences.] By 9 Geo. 1, c. 28, s. 1,⁹ to resist or oppose any officer executing any process or warrant within Suffolk Place or the Mint, or to rescue any prisoner taken upon any such writ or warrant, or to harbour or conceal any prisoner or person rescuing such prisoner, or to aid and abet such offences, is made felony, and punishable with transportation.¹⁰

Wapping, Stepney—Process.] By 11 Geo. 1, c. 22, s. 2,¹¹ making rescue of any prisoner taken upon process, execution, or extent within Wapping, Stepney, and the places adjacent, &c., or aiding,

¹ 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, ss. 8, 9.

² Sect. 9.

³ And punishable as above.

⁴ Punishable as above.

⁵ Sect. 26.

⁶ 1 & 2 Vict. c. 82. See sects. 12, 13, 14.

⁷ 5 & 6 Vict. c. 29, s. 25. See sects. 28, 31.

⁸ 10 & 11 Vict. c. 62, s. 8.

⁹ This statute is obsolete, but not repealed.

¹⁰ Now penal servitude: 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

¹¹ See n. 9.

&c. in such rescue, is made felony, and punishable with transportation for seven years.¹ But the indictment or information must be filed within six months.

Rescuing murderers.] By 1 Vict. c. 91, s. 1, the rescue or attempt to rescue any person out of prison committed for or convicted of murder, or going to or during execution, is punishable with transportation for life (now penal servitude) or for not less than fifteen years, or imprisonment not exceeding three years;² and to rescue any person going to execution for felony, is a high misdemeanor.

¹ Penal servitude, but the Act is out of date.

² This Act supersedes the 25 Geo. 2, c. 37, s. 9, which is not repealed, and sect. 10 is obsolete, because the murderer is now buried in the gaol, so that no provision against rescue of the corpse seems necessary.

The first part of the history of the United States is the history of the discovery and settlement of the continent. The second part is the history of the growth and development of the country. The third part is the history of the political and social changes that have taken place in the United States. The fourth part is the history of the United States in the world.

The first part of the history of the United States is the history of the discovery and settlement of the continent. The second part is the history of the growth and development of the country. The third part is the history of the political and social changes that have taken place in the United States. The fourth part is the history of the United States in the world.

The first part of the history of the United States is the history of the discovery and settlement of the continent. The second part is the history of the growth and development of the country. The third part is the history of the political and social changes that have taken place in the United States. The fourth part is the history of the United States in the world.

The first part of the history of the United States is the history of the discovery and settlement of the continent. The second part is the history of the growth and development of the country. The third part is the history of the political and social changes that have taken place in the United States. The fourth part is the history of the United States in the world.

The first part of the history of the United States is the history of the discovery and settlement of the continent. The second part is the history of the growth and development of the country. The third part is the history of the political and social changes that have taken place in the United States. The fourth part is the history of the United States in the world.

The first part of the history of the United States is the history of the discovery and settlement of the continent. The second part is the history of the growth and development of the country. The third part is the history of the political and social changes that have taken place in the United States. The fourth part is the history of the United States in the world.

The first part of the history of the United States is the history of the discovery and settlement of the continent. The second part is the history of the growth and development of the country. The third part is the history of the political and social changes that have taken place in the United States. The fourth part is the history of the United States in the world.

PART X.

Of Perjury, Conspiracy, and Extortion.

CHAPTER I.

OF PERJURY AND SUBORNATION OF PERJURY.

The offence of taking a false oath is perjury ; that of procuring another to swear falsely is subornation of perjury.¹ The former consists in a wilful violation of the truth in some matter stated on oath, before a person competent to administer it, in a judicial proceeding, and, at common law, whether material to the issue or not. Perjury, by statute, is capable of the same definition, with this qualification, that the thing sworn must have been material to the issue.²

Subornation is the persuading of another to commit perjury, from whence it must be understood that the false oath is actually taken, otherwise there is no subornation of perjury, although the bare endeavour to incite to such a crime was highly penal at common law.

First, of perjury at common law, or by statute. What shall be said to be perjury. Then what is perjury at common law. Thirdly, what the statutes have enacted with respect to that crime, and, the procedure.

What perjury shall be said to be.] Perjury must be wilful—absolute—corrupt—positive³—an oath which errs through mistake or inadvertency is not perjury.⁴ On the other hand, if a man swear the truth unwittingly, it is now admitted that he is guilty at common law of taking a corrupt oath, although not under the stat. of Eliz.⁵ It is true that the court said, upon one occasion, that there was a difference when one swears to a thing which is true in fact, but which the swearer does not know to be so, and when

¹ See 3 Inst. 164 ; 4 Com. 137 ; statements at variance with each other, one of which must, of necessity, be incorrect. R. v. Jackson, 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 1. 1 Lew. C. C. 270.

² Both false and material by statute. See 8 Ves. jun. 38.

³ See 4 Com. 137.

⁴ As if one should make two

⁵ R. v. Edwards, 2 Russ. C. & M. 518.

one swears wilfully to a falsehood;—the first is perjury before God, and the other is an offence of which the law takes notice.¹ But this was said in an indictment for subornation, which was probably brought upon the statute. At common law the ruling has been otherwise. As in the star chamber, where damages having been awarded to the plaintiff according to the value of his goods, which the defendant had riotously taken away, he caused two men to swear to the value of these goods, who never saw nor knew them, and this was held to be a false oath, and both the procurer and witnesses were sentenced accordingly.² So, where one swore how a will had been revoked in his hearing, when, in fact, the words of revocation were spoken to another in the absence of the witness, it was deemed a corrupt oath within the statute,³ and, therefore, à fortiori, at common law. Again, where one J. S. had done a certain act which he was to prove, but in lieu thereof, another person procured W. R. to swear to this fact in the room of J. S., it was held perjury at common law in W. R.⁴ Again, in former days, cases of inadvertency were sometimes considered by the judges in the light of perjury, although they were wont to pass a lenient sentence; and now, if the court should be satisfied upon affidavit that the falsehood arose from carelessness or inadvertence, they would probably treat the verdict as one against evidence, and grant a new trial, or, if at the trial, would direct an acquittal.⁵ However, it was not always so, since we find, that where one swore that he was servant to J. S., whereas it turned out that he was servant to the servant of J. S. he was convicted of perjury. And, moreover, although it was alleged on his behalf that there was no malice in this case, the court fined him 10*l*. Wild had moved for an abatement, because one Tiler had been fined but 5*l*. in such a case.⁶

Again, one Bellingham had a process to serve from the Court of Wards. He served it on the 9th of the month, but he swore upon the return that he made it on the 8th. It clearly appeared that this was an inadvertent oath, yet he was convicted of perjury,

¹ R. v. Hinton and Brown, 3 Mod. 122.

² R. v. Gurnei, 3 Inst. 166.

³ R. v. Styles, Hetl. 97, cited there in Allen v. Westley. But see 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 22, who takes a distinction between oaths on the statute and at common law in this respect. 3 Inst. 166, acc.

⁴ R. v. Whicksley, 2 Ro. Rep. 244. Palm. 294. Nom. R. v. Ockley and Whitlesbye, 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 2. Mr. Tidd observes, that where there have been mutual dealings between parties, the balance is considered as the debt at law, as well as in equity, so that if a plaintiff were to swear to the sum due to him upon the debtor side only, if it were not a ground for an indictment for perjury, at least, the defendant would be entitled to sue for a malicious arrest.—Tidd's Practice, 7th ed. p. 195.

⁵ See R. v. Burton, 3 Keb. 345; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 2.

⁶ Al. 79.

and fined 10*l*.¹ Then, again, the perjury proved and relied on was, that the defendant had sworn concerning J. S. that he was in London to be arrested. This was material, inasmuch as the issue was on the taking of J. S. by the sheriff. J. S., it appeared, was in Southwark, out of the liberties, at that time. In general acceptance Southwark was held to be a part of London, but the sheriff of London could not have any power to arrest there. The court, upon this occasion, fined the defendant 20*l*. because of inadvertency.² However, it is said, that falsehood which does not strictly amount to perjury, is, nevertheless, a misdemeanor.³ And it should be observed that false swearing cannot be purged by the subsequent withdrawal of the evidence, if that evidence be material to the issue.⁴ And Maule, J., said, that false swearing in a judicial proceeding, in a matter material to that judicial proceeding, was perjury, whether the false oath were or not relevant to the issue then being tried.⁵

Direct.] The perjury charged must be directly fixed upon the point sworn to. A man was examined upon interrogatories in chancery, whether J. S. were of sound mind at the time of his decease. The answer was, that J. S., five days before his death, was not of sane mind. The person examined was indicted for perjury, but it was obvious that J. S. might be insane five days before his death, as the answer stated, and yet might be in his right mind when he died. The indictment was quashed, because the oath was not effectually false.⁶ But, if the evidence be direct, it is sufficient, for an evidence may be very material, and yet not full enough to prove directly the point in question.⁷

Other cases may be furnished to illustrate this point, namely, that no conviction for perjury can take place upon a supposition. Thus, the defendant was procurator-general of the Court of Admiralty, and he resigned that office to H., reserving to himself the emoluments of suits then pending. Subsequently, he treated with the prosecutor, and assigned over to him the rights which he had before reserved, giving the prosecutor a power by deed to prosecute all actions then depending in his, the defendant's name, but to receive the profits on his, the prosecutor's account. Then one U. having become indebted to the prosecutor for business done in the admiralty, the latter sued him in the defendant's name, upon which the defendant made an affidavit to the following effect on a motion to stay proceedings. First, that he had resigned his place to H., and that from that period, he had not authorized any person to sue in his name; and, then, that

¹ R. v. Bellingham, Sty. 126.

² R. v. Lewen, 1 Sid. 405.

³ Ex parte Overton, 2 Rose, B. L. 257.

⁴ R. v. Philpotts, Den. & P. 302; 21 L. J. M. C. 18.

⁵ See Den. & P. 305—307. R.

v. Murray, 1 Fost. & F. 80.

⁶ Palm. 383, citing R. v. Manton, 14 Jac. 1.

⁷ 2 Ld. Raym. 889, by Holt, C. J.

that the action depending against U. had been brought in his name without his authority. Perjury being assigned upon this affidavit, Lord Kenyon inquired whether the perjury would not depend on the construction of this deed. The counsel for the prosecution replied in the affirmative, on which the learned lord directed an acquittal. Had the defendant acted inconsistently with the obligation entered into by his deed, he might have been liable to a civil action, but an indictment for perjury could not be maintained for an injury arising out of a misconception, or mistake in the construction of a clause in a deed. A question would be made as to what passed under the deed from the defendant to the prosecutor. The defendant was then acquitted.¹ And there must not be any uncertainty as to the matter sworn to, so that perjury cannot be assigned upon evidence relating to the value of land, for that is the most uncertain thing in nature.² Nor signed upon an answer in chancery which has denied a promise absolutely void by the statute of frauds.³ Again, a man was indicted for perjury for denying that he had entered into a certain agreement. It was in the case of an agreement alleged by a bill in chancery to have been the defendant's. Abbott, C. J., was of opinion, that as the defendants in equity had pleaded the statute of frauds in their answer, and had thus relied upon an apparent ground for relief, the defendant should be acquitted.⁴

The attorney-general, in support of the prosecution in this instance, cited a case where a defendant, who denied a trust in his answer to a bill, was convicted subsequently for perjury.⁵ But the lord chief justice said, that it did not appear from the short statement of that case, and which was not very distinctly reported, whether the statute of frauds had been pleaded and relied on there.⁶

A. and C. were sworn brokers, and could not accordingly trade in drugs. With B.'s consent they made speculations in his name, B. agreeing to divide the profits and loss with A. and C. A. swore that he did not enter into an agreement with B. and C. jointly, to deal and be a co-partner with them in the trade or business of druggists. Abbott, C. J., held that the indictment was not supported, as the above was not the kind of co-partnership denied by A. upon oath.⁷ Lastly, if a statute create a penalty in respect of mistakes upon oath which are not positive affirmations, an indictment will not lie cumulatively. Thus the 70th section of an Insolvent Act⁸ punishes the omissions of property in the schedule as a misdemeanor; the 71st section inflicts the pains of perjury against false swearers. Lord Tenterden held, in such a case, that the legislature had, in the 70th section, con-

¹ R. v. Crespigny, 1 Esp. 280.

² 3 Mod. 134. See 2 Ld. Raym. 1118.

³ Peake, Add. Ca. 93.

⁴ R. v. Dunston, Ry. & M. N. P. C. 109.

⁵ Bartlett v. Pickersgill, cited,

⁴ Burr. 2255, and 4 East, 577, n.

⁶ R. v. Benesech, Peake, Add. Ca. 93; Ry. & M. 111.

⁷ R. v. Tucker, 2 C. & P. 500.

⁸ 7 Geo. 4, c. 57.

templated the particular case of omissions, and directed an acquittal.¹

It is not the less a perjury because the jury disbelieve the witness, and thus that no mischief ensues. True it is that the party cannot sue him under the statute, because no damage has accrued, but he may be punished at the suit of the king.²

A man was said to have rolled up a declaration in ejectment like a piece of tobacco pipe, to have hid it in his box, and then to have delivered it to the tenant in possession. He swore to the delivery of the declaration upon this, but, we are informed that this could not avail him, for it was equivocation; he was set in the pillory.³ The defendant was charged with having sworn falsely as to his charging no more than 6*d.* a quarter as commission beyond the purchase of certain corn and grain. It was objected, that the defendant's oath might be understood to include collateral expenses, and, therefore, that the perjury could not be called positive and direct. But the indictment was held sufficient.⁴ Moreover, a defendant is not allowed to escape who comes to persuade a jury of false facts under colour of a belief in that which he ventures to affirm. "Mankind had fallen into a mistake," said Lord C. J. De Grey, "by supposing that a person who thinks or believes that a fact is true, cannot be convicted of perjury."⁵ So, again, by Lord Mansfield, "It is certainly true, that a man may be indicted for perjury in swearing that he believes a fact to be true, which he must know to be false."⁶ So, again, the point being moved in C. B., by Walker, Serjeant, Lord Loughborough, and all the judges there, were unanimous that belief was to be considered as an absolute term, and that an indictment might be supported upon it.⁷ So, where the defendant swore that he thought that a writing was not his, when, in truth, he thought that it was. Care, however, must be taken of the proof of the assignment.⁸

So, if a witness should consent to be sworn upon a book which he does not think sacred. As where a Jew had been sworn upon the Gospels as a Christian, and there was a verdict for the plaintiff. A new trial having been moved for upon an affidavit, although the court denied the application, the objection being too late, yet the

¹ R. v. Mudie, 1 Moo. & Rob. 128; 5 C. & P. 23.

² Said per cur. in R. v. Hamper, 2 Leon. 230; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 9.

³ Dict. per Allibone, J., Comb. 62.

⁴ R. v. Atkinson, 2 Russ. C. M. 542.

⁵ R. v. Miller, 2 Sir W. Bl. 881; and see 3 Wils. 427; 1 Leach, 327; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 7.

⁶ R. v. Pedley, 1 Leach, 327; 2 Russ. C. M. 518.

⁷ Suppl. to Vin. Abr. tit. "Perjury," vol. 5, p. 376, A. 2.

⁸ R. v. Schlesinger, 17 L. J. M. C. 29; 10 Q. B. 670. In this case a writ of trial was properly alleged to have been before the sheriff, although the trial was had before the secondary, the sheriff's deputy. And the record of the writ which showed that two issues were joined, proved the allegation that two issues came on to be tried, though the postea showed a finding upon one issue only.

oath was one upon which perjury might be assigned: it imposed on the party taking it a religious and moral obligation.¹ So, where the defendant, a Scotch covenanter, had been sworn, first, in the usual way on the testament, and then, at the desire of the counsel, by holding up his hand according to the ceremony of his own country, Lord Kenyon held the indictment good charging him with having sworn upon the Holy Gospels of God.² So, as to a marksman, if proof be given of the document having been read over to him, and of his knowledge of the contents.³ And where by statute disability on the subject of oaths is removed, the falsehood of affirmations or declarations is made punishable by the penalties of perjury.

Before we quit this general head of our subject, it may be right to advert for a moment to the description of persons who may be convicted of perjury. This might, indeed, be deemed a strange position, were it not that a difference exists between the common law and the statute in respect of persons. For the statute of Eliz. extends to witnesses only in suits between party and party, whereas the common law is universal, and includes every one of competent mind who violates its provision on this behalf. The statute, in truth, makes nothing perjury which was not so before;⁴ it pursues the common law, and adds nothing new excepting the penalty.⁵ Nevertheless, as it confines the description of offenders to perjured witnesses, its provisions have been frequently taken advantage of by parties indicted under it, whose crimes, however punishable at common law, have had no reference to suits between individuals, and, therefore, were not within the statute.

Thus it was that the court held on one occasion, that a man could not be punished under the statute of Eliz. for perjury in his own cause, as in wager of law, but that he ought to be indicted at common law. It was said to have been so adjudged before that time.⁶ So again, where in trespass in an inferior court, the defendant had pleaded his freehold for the purpose of ousting the court of jurisdiction, it was urged, that the defendant might be sworn to the truth of his plea. Twisden, J., denied this, and the court said, that an indictment would not lie for perjury upon such an oath more than upon a wager of law.⁷

At common law, witnesses for the crown might always be indicted for perjury, but they were held irresponsible under the stat. 5 Eliz., as far as the usual proceeding by indictment could affect them.⁸ Nevertheless, an information would lie upon the statute.⁹

¹ Sells v. Hoare, 3 Br. & B. 232.
Richardson, J. A finding upon one issue only.

² R. v. M'Carther, Peake, 155.

³ R. v. Spencer, 1 C. & P. 260.

⁴ By Holt, C. J., Carth. 422.

⁵ By Eyre, J., Id.

⁶ R. v. Sir Robert Miller, Noy. Rep. 128; S. C. Yelv. 120.

⁷ Anon. 1 Ventr. 296.

⁸ See R. v. Price, Cro. Jac. 120; R. v. Lane, 3 Salk. 270; Cro. El. 148. See 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 3. Nannge v. Rowland Ap. Ellis and others, Cro. Jac. 212. S. C. nom. case of Rowland Ap. Eliza. Inst. 164. S. C. nom. R. v. Hugh Manney, 12 Rep. 101.

⁹ 3 Inst. 164.

Jurors, &c.] Persons also, who, although under the sanction of an oath, do not take such a one as relates to evidence, are not punishable in general for perjury. Jurors who give a verdict contrary to the plainest testimony are not guilty of perjury, because they are not sworn to depose the truth, but only to give a true judgment upon the depositions of others.¹ So also, ministers and officers of justice are, in general, dispunishable for a breach of their oaths of office, but there are some occasions upon which they may be convicted, as for specific acts of misconduct at variance with their general oaths.

Bail.] Bail who prevaricate or swear falsely are open to an indictment for perjury. This was distinctly laid down by Abbott, C. J., in a case where Mr. Justice Best had committed two persons for gross equivocation. They were ultimately discharged, but the lord chief justice intimated, that if any one chose to indict them, they were clearly liable to the charge.²

So, if one, brought in upon a contempt, deny all upon oath, it is said that he shall be discharged of the contempt, but that he may be prosecuted for perjury.³

Subornation of perjury.] Secondly, of subornation of perjury. If, says Fleta, a servant be compelled by his master to swear falsely, both are perjured; but he who incites the other to swear, whom he knows to be a false swearer, or who requires, or receives such an oath, is worse than a murderer. For a murderer only kills the body, but this man destroys both the body and soul of the other. Moreover, continues Fleta, he who wittingly hears another using a false oath, and is silent, is also guilty of a transgression.⁴ And the statute of Elizabeth makes this distinction between the crimes of two parties, since the suborner is mulcted 40*l.*, the person suborned 20*l.*, or only half.⁵

Every subornation is a distinct offence.⁶

First, there must be an oath. Thus, by Holt, C. J., a man cannot be guilty of subornation of perjury, unless perjury be actually committed.⁷ And the nature of the oath must be shown.⁸ Secondly, the oath must have taken place wilfully,—in a judicial proceeding,—and, in respect of the issue. Thus Holt, C. J., distinctly laid it down, that if a man be indicted

¹ Vaugh. 152; Gouldsb. 51; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 5. See as to the old writ of attain, now entirely out of use, 3 Inst. 164.

² Curtis v. Smith, 1 Chit. Rep. 116. R. v. Royson, Cro. Car. 146; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 4.

³ R. v. Sims, 12 Mod. 511.

⁴ Flet. lib. 5, cap. 21; cited, 3 Inst. 167.

⁵ 3 Inst. 167; Sav. 46, in pl. 98.

See also 5 Rep. 99; plus peccat author quam actor.

⁶ R. v. Lambert, 12 Mod. 154.

⁷ Shore v. Meddison, Holt's Cases, 536; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 10; 6 Mod. 202, by Powell, J. See likewise, R. v. Turvy and others, Holt's Ca. 364.

⁸ R. v. Hinton and Brown, 3 Mod. 122.

for perjury, and it do not appear what he swears, whether or not it were in a cause depending and material to the issue, the indictment must fail. The court is to judge of the materiality, and they cannot do this if the matter sworn to be not set forth. By the same reason, subornation must be of such a thing as would be perjury if sworn, and so must be shown certainly.¹

Action for imputing subornation.] But although in an action for imputing subornation, it is necessary that the oath proposed to have been suborned should have been such as that the breach of it must have amounted to perjury, it is not required that the oath should have been taken.² Yet, in cases of this sort, the court will lean against the suborner. It is a matter in malam partem, a scandal, and a great imputation.

Some difference of opinion, however, has prevailed amongst learned judges, in cases where words imputing subornation not actionable in themselves, have been used towards official persons. Thus, in an action on the case, for these words, "Your master's witnesses, (that is to say, a justice of the peace,) in such a cause were perjured, and your master is the maintainer and upholder of them," it was moved to arrest the judgment, on the ground that the words were not actionable. Rainsford and Turner, BB., were of that opinion, because the words did not relate to the office of justice, but were spoken as of a private person; and also, because it was not said that he upheld their perjury, but only countenanced their persons. But by Hale, C.B., these words, if true, are a scandal to his office, and upholding, here, can have no other meaning than abetting them in their perjury. But the defendant had judgment, there being two to one for him.³ Again, the words were, "There goes your rare chancellor, (innuendo the plaintiff) to suborn witnesses to swear against the parson." The court were divided: Gould and Powys, JJ., held, that the action lay; Holt, C.J., and Powell, J., on the contrary, that it did not lie.⁴

However, the endeavour to excite to that crime is punishable. Holt, C.J., was heard to say, that he had known one set in the pillory for an attempt to suborn, that being a great offence.⁵ Again, upon a consultation as to the amount of a fine, where there was an endeavour to procure the forgery of a certain writing, Jones, J., said, that this was not subornation of perjury, for there had been no perjury committed, and that this was not so great a crime as subornation of perjury. But he, in common with the rest

¹ The Queen v. Darby, 7 Mod. 101.

² Anon. Cro. Car. 337. Harris v. Dixon, Cro. Jac. 158. It must be confessed, however, that this case is reported in Yelverton with a decidedly opposite issue. Yelv. 72. Prowse v. Cary, Cro. El. 93.

³ Pugh v. Owen, Hardr. 501.

⁴ Walmsley v. Russel, 6 Mod. 200; 2 Salk. 696. See Croford v. Blisse, 2 Bulst. 150.

⁵ Comb. 450; Holt's Cases, 536. The case, probably, was R. v. Tayler and Card, 2 Keb. 399.

of the court, agreed to fine the defendant for his attempt to commit fraud.¹ So, again, the inciting of a witness to give evidence as to a particular fact, when the inciter is ignorant whether it be true or false, is a high misdemeanor.² But it seems that the false oath should be actually taken; and it is worthy of remark, that this is not subornation, because the inciter is assumed not to have known the falsehood of the evidence he may have been recommending.³

Perjury at common law.] Perjury at common law must be wilful and corrupt; the oath must have been taken before a competent authority, and before courts capable of administering such oaths. We shall also speak of perjury by affidavit, of the persons, individually considered, before whom parties may be sworn, and of extrajudicial or idle oaths, which do not, even when broken, warrant the penalties of perjury. It will then be shown that the oath must take place in some judicial proceedings, but that at common law, it need not be concerning a matter immediately material to or bearing upon the issue.

Wilful.] One of the clearest requisites to support a prosecution for perjury is, that the act must be wilful. A man was asked his name at a conventicle, and, upon his answering that he was A., the defendant swore that A. had been at the conventicle, whereas, in fact, the answer was false, but the defendant was ignorant of the deceit. Here the court set aside a verdict for the crown on an information, because there was a "plain mistake."⁴ So where one swore that he had seen and read a certain deed, but this turned out to be only the counterpart.⁵ It was said of a man that he swore through thick and thin, yet this did not impute perjury, and a criminal information was refused.⁶

A competent authority.] Moreover, the oath must be administered by a competent authority.⁷ Therefore, a merely idle oath taken before persons not qualified, or an oath made before individuals in their private capacity, will not warrant proceedings for perjury. Thus it was, that the judges resolved in the star chamber, that a man was not guilty of perjury who swore concerning the title to certain land in the Court of Requests, because there was a want of jurisdiction in that place over real actions.⁸ So it was also where the plaintiff presented the defendant at a visitation, which was no part of his duty, and the defendant having slandered him, the plaintiff brought an action. The judges held, that

¹ R. v. Johnson, 2 Show. 1, 4.

² Ex parte Overton, 2 Rose, B. L. 257.

³ R. v. Edwards, 2 Russ. C. & M. 518, cor. Adams, B.

⁴ R. v. Smith, 2 Show. 165; Sir Tho. Jones, 163.

⁵ R. v. Muscot, 10 Mod. 195, per Parker, C. J.

⁶ R. v. Marshall, 2 Jur. 254.

⁷ 3 Inst. 164, 166; 2 Show. 33; 4 Com. 137.

⁸ R. v. Paine, Yelv. 111; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 4.

the action did not lie, because the plaintiff could not have committed perjury.¹

What courts.] This case naturally leads us to consider before what courts the offence under discussion may be committed, and we will then shortly mention the description of persons competent to administer oaths. First, a false oath in any court of record is punishable at common law, and by the statute of 2 Geo. 2, c. 25.² And, at common law, such a crime, if done in a court not of record, is perjury, and punishable at common law, or by virtue of 2 Geo. 2. A spiritual court, for example, is a court not of record, and yet perjury may happen there. In an action for imputing perjury it was objected, that the consistory court at Exeter was not within 5 Eliz. by reason of its being a spiritual court; but the court observed, that the statute did not alter the liability to punishment, and, consequently, that the common-law penalty attached.³ So, again, upon a similar objection, the court said, that the action well lay, because the ecclesiastical court is a judicial court, and well known;⁴ and it is desirable to add here, that the right to sue under these circumstances is only consistent with a legal indictment and acquittal, supposing that the perjury were made the subject of a charge. In an action for imputing subornation, it was said, that the Bishop of Winchester was not a person before whom perjury might be committed, and that no court had been mentioned. But the judges said, that it was a great imputation, and judgment passed for the plaintiff.⁵ The same point as to perjury in a Court Christian was ruled in the reign of Charles the Second.⁶

However, it must be confessed, that some cases decided about the same time as the former, are contrary to those already cited. Thus, the words, "Thou art perjured, for thou art forsworn in the Bishop of Gloucester's court," was held not to be actionable.⁷ And so again, were these, "Thou art forsworn in Collet court," for it was said, that Collet court could not be presumed to be of record.⁸

So, again, in the hundred court.⁹

¹ Stile v. Heape, Yelv. 72.

² As the Leet, Wild v. Cope-man, Mo. 404. S. C. nom. Wilde v. Cookeman, Noy. 34, Spencer v. Shory, Cro. El. 709; Godb. 179. Corbet v. Hill, the star chamber, Cro. El. 609.

³ Plaice v. Howe, Cro. El. 185, of course before the stat. 2 Geo. 2. Lee v. Secombe, Id. 297.

⁴ Shaw v. Tompson, Cro. El. 609. See also R. v. Dr. Porye, 1 Keb. 545.

⁵ Harris v. Dixon, Cro. Jac. 158. Nevertheless, this case is reported by Yelverton, with a conclusion entirely different, ante, 972; but in 6 Mod. 201, &c., where it was cited by the judges, the report in Croke James was preferred.

⁶ 1 Sid. 454. See also Pole v. Carrel, 2 Ro. Rep. 410; 5 Mod. 348; 1 Lord Raym. 451; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 3.

⁷ Page v. Keble, Cro. Jac. 436.

⁸ Skinner v. Trobe, Id. 190. See however, Walmsley v. Russel, 6 Mod. 200, and the observations of Powys, J., upon these cases at p. 201.

⁹ Gore v. Moorton, Cro. El. 905.

Doctors' Commons.] With respect to perjuries in Doctors' Commons, the point does not seem to be fully settled, whether proceedings can be taken upon such occasions or not. A negro servant was charged with swearing that a young lady had attained the age of twenty-one, whereas, in fact, she was but sixteen at the time in question. He was married to her by virtue of the false oath, which procured him a licence, and the case was reserved for the opinion of the judges, but the prisoner died in Newgate, and no opinion was publicly delivered.¹

However, in a more recent case the judges held, that perjury could not be charged upon a false oath taken before a surrogate to obtain a marriage licence; and as the indictment in this case neither alleged that the defendant took the oath for the purpose of procuring a licence, nor that he did procure one, the judges thought, that no punishment could be inflicted as for a simple misdemeanor.²

With reference to the misdemeanor, the judges now hold, that such a false oath is a misdemeanor, as being made in a public matter, especially after 4 Geo. 4, c. 76. They have declined to say whether it is or is not perjury. It is immaterial whether the marriage ensues or not. And the surrogate has a general power to administer such an oath.³ Whether such an act as this in official matters be accomplished or not, is immaterial, neither needs the intent of the party to be proved, for every step towards the commission of a misdemeanor by an act done, is a misdemeanor.⁴ And if, in such a count, the description of the deponent, and other things material, are alleged to be falsely sworn (but without alleging that fact in an affidavit), proof of the false swearing, as to any one of the things, will sustain the count.⁵

And a clergyman may be indicted for perjury by taking a false oath at his admission to a living, if he have been convicted of simony. The court refused an information upon one occasion, where affidavits were produced showing that the presentation had been simoniacal, because there had been no conviction for the simony.⁶

Statutory oaths.] Where the defendant made a false declaration as to a fire in his house, in order to obtain 15*l.* from a benefit society, it was held, that the rules of a benefit society, which had been put into the indictment, might be regarded as surplusage. For the offence would have been within the statute had no benefit

¹ R. v. Alexander, 1 Leach, 63. R. v. Woodman, Id. 64, n. But the judges in this last case did not communicate their opinion publicly. See R. v. Beck, 2 Stra. 1160. And as to the spiritual court, see Buxton v. Gouch, 3 Salk. 269. 1 Sid. 454.

² R. v. Foster, Russ. & Ry. 459.

³ R. v. Chapman, Den. 432; 18 L. J. M. C. 152; 2 Car. & K. 846.

⁴ S. C.

⁵ 2 Car. & K. 846, ut supra.

⁶ R. v. Lewis, 1 Str. 70.

society existed.¹ Likewise, it was held in this case that evidence might be given of the defendant having sent in a certificate with forged signatures, for this would go to prove the falsehood of the declaration.² The statute reaches declarations generally, and is not limited to the proof of written instruments, &c.³

House of Commons.] The House of Commons has no power to administer an oath upon the general authority of their constitution; but Acts of parliament have been passed from time to time giving power to that house to cause witnesses to be sworn, as in cases of election petitions.

Chancery.] Perjury may be committed by giving an answer into chancery.⁴ So may this offence also be complete by swearing falsely upon interrogatories, yet the indictment should here likewise be preferred at common law, and not upon the statute.⁵

Superior courts.] So again, in any of the superior courts, or at nisi prius. In the caption of an indictment for perjury both the judges of assize were mentioned, but the false oath was alleged to have been taken before one judge only. Eyre, B., expressed some doubt upon this, but the judges were unanimously in favour of the conviction.⁶

So, where at an admiralty session the commission was directed to A., B. and C. and others not named, of whom A., B. and C. were amongst others to be one, the court held that this was a clerical error.⁷ It may be added here, that it is the practice of the Central Criminal Court not to try an indictment for perjury arising out of a civil suit until that suit be determined, unless the court where the suit is pending should think fit to postpone the decision of the case for the purpose of ascertaining the truth of the criminal charge.⁸

And hence justices who declined to entertain proceedings for perjury whilst the cause connected with the alleged false oath was pending in the ecclesiastical court, were held to have acted rightly, and the rule for a mandamus was discharged. In this case, the informant and the person charged were parties to the suit.⁹ The complainant may, if he please, lay his complaint before the grand jury.¹⁰

Court Baron.] So, in a court baron, although it is not a court of record.¹¹ If a man be forsworn in a court baron before the steward,

¹ R. v. Boyne, 1 Car. & K. 65.

² Id. 72.

³ Id. 70.

⁴ Although the fact relate to a thing not charged in the bill, 5 Mod. 348; 3 Inst. 166. S. P. per Hutton, J., Winch. Rep. 3.

⁵ R. v. Sir Robert Miller, Yelv. 120.

⁶ R. v. Alford, 1 Leach, 150; S. C. 14 East, 218, n.

⁷ R. v. Dowlin, 5 T. R. 311.

⁸ R. v. Ashburn, 8 C. & P. 50.

⁹ R. v. Ingham and another, 19 L. J. M. C. 69; 14 Q. B. 396.

¹⁰ S. C.

¹¹ 1 Sid. 454; 1 Mod. 55; 1 Freem. Rep. 506.

this is perjury;¹ and in the principal case, the same doctrine was maintained, although judgment was arrested because the authority of the commissioners of the high commission court was not declared, nor how the party was forsworn.² But, as to the court baron, the perjury, except in the cases of subornation of witnesses, and false oaths by them, must be assigned at common law. For where a bill of perjury tam quam was sued, because the defendant, one of the homage, had presented with other homagers, that the plaintiff had cut down certain trees, which he had not so cut, the judges held, that the proceeding was bad, being upon the stat. of Eliz. which had reference to the testimony of witnesses only.³

County court.] The following evidence was admitted as proof of the jurisdiction of the county court. 1st, by parol testimony of the appearance of the defendant; 2nd, the fact of such appearance as dispensing with any proof of summons; 3rd, the minute book as proof of the proceedings, and evidence, the judge having summary jurisdiction; 4th, the allegation of the constitution of the court by an order in council proved by the judge himself, showing that he had acted in that capacity.⁴ In another case the judge's notes were considered unnecessary, if the witnesses present could prove the matters in question.⁵

The proceedings in a county court were made the subject of an indictment for perjury, but the description of this court was held wrong in every one of three counts. It was said to have been holden before H. M. B. High Sheriff, and the oath to have been sworn before him; 2ndly, before G. B., gent., the county clerk, and the oath, &c.; 3rdly, before G. B., gent., and the suitors who were named, and the oath, &c.; and although it was said that the county clerk was a freeholder, it was held to make no difference.⁶ But it is not necessary to say that the court in which the perjury is alleged, was constituted under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95; and an allegation that the action was pending in the court, and came on to be tried, and that the judge had sufficient and competent authority to administer the oath, was deemed correct.⁷ With regard to the evidence under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 111, the clerk's book, or a certified copy of entries from it, is the best evidence, and not the evidence of the assistant clerk, without more.⁸

Court of sewers.] So, in a court of sewers, being of record. And a false oath, taken before commissioners whose commission is determined by the demise of the crown, is punishable if the commissioners have not previously any notice of the demise,

¹ Winch. 3. Hobart, C. J.

² King v. Bowen, Id. 2.

³ R. v. Matthews, 3 Leon. 201.

⁴ R. v. Ward, 3 Cox, 279.

⁵ R. v. Morgan, 6 Cox, 107.

⁶ R. v. Fellowes, 1 Car. & K. 115.

⁷ Lavey v. Reg. 21 L. J. M. C.

10; Den. & P. 504; 17 Q. B. 496.

⁸ R. v. Rowland, 1 Fost. & F.

72. But see 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 21.

for it is said, that it would be of very ill consequence to make their proceedings wholly void.¹

Sheriff's court.] In an action on the case for words charging the plaintiff with a false oath in the Sheriff's Court, it was objected, that this was not a court of record, but as judgment was ultimately given for the plaintiff, it was clear that the objection did not prevail.²

Council of the marches.] A similar judgment had been previously given for a slander imputing perjury before the council of the Marches in Wales, and the case was relied on by the plaintiff's counsel in Brumrig v. Hanger.³

The courts above mentioned are either courts of record, or courts judicially holden by some title, and not by usurpation. In the latter case, perjury could not be committed; and so it was once resolved by all the judges, that this offence could not take place in the lord's court of copyholds, or in any court holden by usurpation, but that it was otherwise in a court baron, or court leet, which were holden by title.⁴

Inquest of office.] Perjury, moreover, may be committed before an inquest of office. And thus it was held, that a false oath taken before commissioners upon such an occasion, was a great offence, and punishable at common law, though not by the statute of Elizabeth.⁵

Commissioners of bankruptcy.] It was said, upon one occasion, that the clause in 5 Geo. 2, c. 30, s. 16, authorizing the commissioners to examine the bankrupt, gave them power to administer an oath, and, consequently, that an indictment for perjury might be well founded upon a breach of that oath.⁶ But the stat. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 134, s. 189, gives an express power to examine upon oath. At another time it was made a question whether perjury could be assigned upon an affidavit in support of a petition in bankruptcy before the filing of the petition.⁷

A. being adjudged a bankrupt, B. was examined touching his estate, and gave, as it was said, a false account; B. was then in-

¹ Cro. Car. 99; see 16 Vin. Ab. 309, A. 15; 313, C. 6. It was once incidentally asked by the court, whether any one giving his testimony under a commission from a court of equity to examine witnesses in Scotland could be convicted of perjury. Calliand v. Vaughan, 1 B. & P. 210.

² Brumrig v. Hanger and ux. Hardr. 151.

³ Adams v. Flemming, Hob. 283; S. C. Hutt. 324.

⁴ Godb. 179, Mich. 7 Jac. 1, in

C. B. See also as to the Court of Requests, and the old court at Whitehall. 4 Inst. 97, 98; 3 Salk. 269. And the court will exercise a right of committing upon the spot a party apparently guilty of perjury. See R. v. Parnell, 2 Burr. 806.

⁵ R. v. Agar, Mo. 627; Noy. 100. See 4 Inst. 278.

⁶ R. v. Raphael, Mann. N. P. Digest, 232.

⁷ R. v. Dudman, 2 Glyn & J. 389.

dicted for perjury, but it turned out that the petitioning creditor's debt was not of sufficient amount, and the judges held his conviction invalid, although other debts by A. were due, sufficient to have sustained the fiat.¹ Yet he might have been rightly convicted, had he sworn falsely upon the preliminary examination before the adjudication, notwithstanding the insufficiency of the debt;² or had the lord chancellor, by order, substituted a good petitioning creditor.³ A question arose, what was the nature and extent of L.'s connection with M. The words used were, "Mr. M. is not in trade, he is a speculator in anything and everything. I have known Mr. M. about two or three years. He was always a speculator, and never in business." This Mr. M. was a Mr. S. M. L., the father of L., the defendant. L., the defendant, had known him twenty years and upwards. This was considered insufficient, and judgment was arrested.⁴

Two persons were indicted for perjury committed upon an indictment for barratry, and being convicted, judgment was passed upon them. They had, however, brought error, and pointed out objections to the former proceedings as being coram non judice, but the court said, that that circumstance made the proceedings only erroneous, and that while the record stood unreversed, perjury might still be assigned.⁵ Even if reversed, Mr. Serjeant Hawkins makes a quære, whether perjury might not be, nevertheless, assignable.⁶ And it seems clear that, at all events, the party convicted of perjury cannot himself take advantage of any default in the record of the proceedings at which he took the false oath.⁷

Before arbitrators.] A cause was referred by a judge's order, and it was directed, that the witness should be sworn before a judge, or before a commissioner duly authorized. A witness was sworn before a commissioner for taking affidavits, and he was examined vivâ voce before the arbitrator. Gaselee, J., held, that the witness was not indictable for perjury.⁸

There was an indictment for perjury under 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 77. The court held that the proceedings were not sustainable, and the conviction was quashed; for the power here given was not according to the course of the common law; neither by that law nor by statute is the arbitrator warranted in administering an oath.⁹ There is a distinction which must be attended to in perjury, between matters in issue and matters in difference, where the question of materiality comes to be considered.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Ewington, Car. & M. 319; 2 Moo. C. C. 223.

² S. C.

³ 2 Moo. C. C. 227.

⁴ R. v. Legge, 6 Cox, C. C. 220.

⁵ R. v. Serjeant and Annis, 1 Ventr. 181.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 4.

⁷ R. v. Wright, 1 Sid. 148.

⁸ R. v. Hanks, 3 C. & P. 419.

⁹ R. v. Hallett, 20 L. J. M. C.

197; Den. & P. 237.

¹⁰ R. v. Ball, 6 Cox, 360.

Perjury by affidavit.] The subject of perjury by affidavit is very nearly allied to that which has been the last discussed. There was never any doubt but that an indictment might be preferred at common law for an offence of this nature.¹ The affidavit should name all the plaintiffs and the defendants. And also, that a party may be punished for using a false affidavit made abroad, though not for perjury, yet, as for a misdemeanor.² And at common law, it is not necessary in order to maintain the charge, that the affidavit should have been filed of record, or exhibited to the court.³ Thus, where an indictment at common law neglected to mention these particulars, the judges were of opinion, that the guilt or innocence of the defendant could not be said to depend on the circumstances of the use of the affidavit, that it did not signify whether it had or not been used at the trial, and that the use could not be supplied by intendment.⁴ So, where it seemed to be agreed, that from certain omissions in the jurat, an affidavit upon which perjury had been assigned, could not have been received in the Court of Chancery, Littledale, J., said, that the offence was complete at the time of the swearing, notwithstanding the impossibility of making use of the instrument. It appearing, however, that the affidavit was not read over to the defendant, she was acquitted.⁵ So, again, where the defendant had filed a bill for an injunction, and at the same time had made an affidavit of matters which were material to the question, it was urged, that he could not be convicted of perjury, because no motion had ever been made for the injunction, but Lord Tenterden refused to stop the case, observing, that the objection was upon the record, that the crime was, morally, the same, whether the motion were made or not, but the defendant was acquitted.⁶ It seems, that in indictments upon the statute, the production and use of affidavits are essential to sustain the charge, because, as Lord Kenyon observed, an action is there given to the party injured by the false oath.⁷ And several precedents were cited in R. v. Crossley, from Tremaine's Pleas of the Crown, to this effect.⁸ So, in a case before Holt, C. J., also upon the statute, the learned chief justice took notice of the necessity of reading and using the affidavit against the party, for that the bare making of it was not sufficient.⁹

¹ 1 Ro. Rep. 79, per Coke, C. J., 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 21; 8 East, 364, c. 69, s. 21.

² By Lord Ellenborough.

³ R. v. Taylor, Skin. 403; S. C. Holt, 534.

⁴ R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315, one, &c., Lawrence, J., cited, R. v. Atkinson, Easter, 24 Geo. 3, K. B., observing, that the objection was not taken there, p. 320. This case was decided after great research by the judges into the precedents.

⁵ R. v. Hailey, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 94; 1 C. & P. 258.

⁶ R. v. White, Moo. & M. 271. R. v. Crossley, was not referred to either in this or the preceding case.

⁷ 7 T. R. 319.

⁸ R. v. Crossley, Trem. P. C. 136. R. v. Jole, Id. 138. R. v. Brooks, Id. 151, 152. See also R. v. Stone, Id. 148. R. v. Hawkins, Id. 167.

⁹ R. v. Taylor, Holt's Ca. 534. In the case of R. v. Crossley, it became necessary to prove the defendant to have been an attorney, and,

The affidavit should name all the plaintiffs and the defendants; yet if it say, "A. B. against C. D. and others," it seems that perjury may be well assigned upon it.¹ Proof that the person had acted as a commissioner for taking affidavits is prima facie evidence that he is such commissioner, although he may never have seen his commission.² An affidavit of service of notice should have the notice appended to it.³

However, an indictment does not lie for perjury in an affidavit in chancery upon the statute of Eliz., although it does not lie in respect of depositions in chancery.⁴ Nor will it lie in respect of a foreign affidavit,⁵ although it is a very serious misdemeanor to make or use a false affidavit of this kind.⁶

Bastardy.] The prisoner was convicted on an indictment for perjury upon the hearing of an affiliation summons. The woman went to Dolgelly in order to affiliate her child, and left her parents in order to take that step, without any intention of returning, and she went into service. If her place of residence was with her parents, and not Dolgelly, the petty sessional division of Dolgelly had no jurisdiction, and therefore perjury could not have been committed. But the court held the place of residence to have been Dolgelly. Her act in going there was for convenience; it was not fraudulent, nor for the purpose of harassing the defendant.⁷ A summons was taken out in bastardy, but not upon oath, and the summons did not obey the Act. The defendant swore that he had not paid anything for maintenance. The evidence was material, and being contradicted, in an indictment for perjury, it was held, that the defendant had waived any irregularities as to the oath and summons by his appearance.⁸ And it made no difference in another case, that the jury found that the defendant had not within twelve months next after the birth of the child paid for maintenance. He had sworn that he had never paid a farthing. In this case also the oath had been taken before the justice, and the summons followed the Act of parliament.⁹

Convictions have frequently been quashed by reason of the incompetency of the parties who administered the respective oaths, independently of any court.

Legal officers.] A person was indicted for perjury before a surrofor this purpose, the book from the master's office, wherein the names of the attornies of the court are entered, was held [sufficient without producing the roll. 2 Esp. 526.

¹ R. v. Christian, Car. & M. 188. 388.

² R. v. Newton, 1 Car. & K. 469. See R. v. Chapman, 2 Car. & K. 846.

³ R. v. Hudson, 1 Fost. & F. 56.

⁴ R. v. Burton, 3 Keb. 345.

⁵ Musgrave v. Medez, 19 Ves. jun., 652.

⁶ O'Mealy v. Newell, 8 East, 364.

⁷ R. v. Hughes, Dears. & B.

188.

⁸ R. v. Berry, Bell, 46; 28 L. J. M. C. 86.

⁹ R. v. Simmons, Bell, 168; 28 L. J. M. C. 183.

gate in the ecclesiastical court of the consistory of London, and a difficulty as to evidence of the appointment having been disposed of by Lord Ellenborough, it was proposed for the defendant to show that the appointment had not been duly made. The surrogate should have been appointed in the presence of the registrar, or his deputy, or a notary public, but the counsel for the crown urged, that it was too late to press the objection after proof that the office had been executed for twenty years by the surrogate. Lord Ellenborough, however, refused to shut out this evidence, and being of opinion, thereupon, that the appointment had taken place contrary to the canon, he directed an acquittal.¹ So, again, a master in chancery, merely as such, has no power to administer an oath, for he is but a clerk of the court to make writs. But when the allegation is made, that the oath in question was taken in the Court of Chancery, by which it appears to have occurred in a judicial proceeding, the case is altered, and the authority sufficiently appears.² So, in an answer to interrogatories, if one be forsworn in a matter not materially charged in the interrogatories, it is not an offence punishable even at common law, because the officer has no power to administer an oath concerning any things except such as are charged in the interrogatories.³ Nor has a master extraordinary in chancery power to administer an oath in the Court of Admiralty. Unless, indeed, in a cause removed thence into chancery. But in such a case, it would be a misdemeanor to swear falsely.⁴

Justices.] Justices of the peace have no acknowledged right at common law to administer an oath,⁵ but various Acts of parliament have expressly authorized them to do so, and they have exercised the power in question from very early times.⁶ However, no voluntary oath sworn before them extrajudicially could have subjected the party breaking it to an indictment for perjury. It was, indeed, said once by Jeffreys, C. J., that such a charge might be preferred;⁷ but this dictum is at variance with the received law of modern times. In an indictment of perjury, however, for swearing before a justice that J. S. was present at a conventicle, the chief justice before mentioned, and all the court, refused to quash it for a want of power in the magistrate to administer the oath, leaving the party to plead that matter if he chose. And the lord chief justice said that the conventicles were unlawful by the common law, and that justices might punish unlawful assemblies.⁸

So also, it is said, that if one take a false oath before a magis-

¹ R. v. Verelst, 3 Campb. 432.

² See 16 Vin. Ab. 308, A. 6.

³ 1 Sid. 274, per cur.

⁴ R. v. Stone, 23 L. J. M. C. 14; Dears. 251.

⁵ 2 Hawk. c. 8, s. 64.

⁶ See Burn's Justice, tit. "Oaths," upon this subject.

⁷ 1 Ventr. 370.

⁸ Anon. 1 Ventr. 369. The justice was, probably, as much authorized to give the oath in this as in many other cases where the power of doing so would never have been questioned. See Kimersly v. Cooper, Cro. El. 168.

trate, in order to induce him to compel another to find sureties for the peace, he will be guilty of perjury.¹

But upon a charge of perjury for swearing falsely in a case punishable upon summary conviction, the conviction is not receivable in evidence.² Perjury assigned, upon the copy of a deposition in English, signed by the deponent, may be proved by showing a verbal deposition in the Welsh language, for the written deposition is the substance.³ In bastardy, where the magistrates had dismissed the case upon the merits, it was held that the prisoner might be guilty of perjury upon a second hearing of the same case, without reference to any defence on the ground of a prior decision, for the justices had jurisdiction over the subject matter.⁴ Where the deponent swore he was not in a beerhouse, and perjury was assigned, it was held that it was not necessary to prove the landlord to have been the licensed keeper of the house, for the justices had general jurisdiction, and could control the sale of beer on Sundays.⁵

Hence, if the oath alleged to be false take place before an incompetent authority, the obligation is not binding in law, and perjury is not committed. Therefore, an extrajudicial oath, though false, cannot be thus dealt with.⁶ And Mr. Serjeant Hawkins lays it down, that no oath whatsoever in a mere private matter, however wilful and malicious, is punishable as a perjury in a criminal prosecution, for private injuries are to be redressed by private actions. And Lord Kenyon was heard to say, that "he did not know but that a magistrate subjects himself to a criminal information for taking a voluntary extrajudicial affidavit."⁷

So, it is in a court of record, if the court has lost its jurisdiction by reason of the non-compliance of parties with the enactments of the legislature. As where there had been co-plaintiffs in a suit, and one of them died, but without entering any suggestion on the record under 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 11, s. 6. The defendant was indicted for perjury upon the trial, but his counsel urged, that the trial had been extrajudicial, because the statute had not been complied with. There was no suggestion upon the record. Lord Ellenborough observed, that the oath had been taken in an unauthorized cause, and held, that the suit had abated at the time of the trial. The defendant was of course acquitted.⁸ But where a writ of inquiry was returnable into the Common Pleas instead of the King's Bench,

¹ 16 Vin. Ab. 309, A. 15. See Id. 314, D. 1.

² R. v. Goodfellow, Car. & M. 569.

³ R. v. Thomas, 2 Car. & K. 806.

⁴ R. v. Cooke, Den. & P. 462.

⁵ R. v. Kirton, 6 Cox, C. C. 393.

⁶ 16 Vin. Ab. 307, A. 3.

⁷ In Bramah v. The — Fire Insurance Company, 3 Burn's Justice, ed. Chetwynd, p. 532; 4 Com. 137. And see now 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, s. 13, forbidding the use of oaths before magistrates, unless warranted by statute.

⁸ R. v. Cohen, 1 Stark. 511.

and perjury was assigned upon evidence during such an inquisition, the court held that an indictment would lie.¹

*In judicial proceedings.*²] There is another requisite, namely, that the offence should have been committed in some judicial proceeding. Therefore, a breach of the oath of fealty and allegiance, or of oaths taken by officers and ministers of justice, is not punishable as perjury.³ If an officer, however, commit extortion, the breach of his oath, it is said, may serve for aggravation.⁴ But if there be a violation of the oath in any specific instance, the law will attach upon the transgressor. As, if a mayor make a false return.⁵ Or a sheriff, by information, he never having been sworn.⁶ But not a wager of law falsely made.⁷ And if it be suggested, that an affidavit is necessary upon any particular occasion, that fact must be shown to the satisfaction of the court. Where such a practice was alleged as being necessary in the Insolvent Debtor's Court, the production of a printed paper by a witness, purporting to be a copy of the rules of that court, and requiring an affidavit, was held insufficient evidence of the practice.⁸ So, upon affidavit of an interpleader rule. The indictment failed to state that the rule was obtained according to the 1 Will. 4, c. 4, and, therefore, there was no judicial proceeding.⁹

A solicitor complained to the lord chancellor, ore tenus, that he had been arrested on his return home after the hearing of a cause. He was examined before that judge concerning the injury which he had sustained, and perjury was assigned upon his answer. It was objected, that the oath alleged as false had not been made in a judicial proceeding, but the court were quite clear upon the point, and discharged the rule for arresting the judgment.¹⁰

At common law, need not be material to the issue.] With respect to the materiality of the point sworn to, as it regards the issue¹¹ at common law, a man may be convicted, although he be only perjured in circumstance;¹² but upon the statute of Elizabeth the oath must be immediately relevant, with this qualification, that even at common law, the swearing to any impertinent or minute

¹ Pippet v. Hearn, 5 B. & Ald. 634; S. C. 1 D. & Ry. 266.

² See R. v. Millard, Dears. 166; 22 L. J. M. C. 108, on 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, ss. 24, 30.

³ 3 Inst. 166.

⁴ Id. 11 Rep. 98; Palm. 144.

⁵ Noy. 92; Latch. 232.

⁶ R. v. Bronker, Dy. 168. See 3 Keb. 359.

⁷ Gouldsb. 51.

⁸ R. v. Koops, 1 Nev. & P. 828. S. C. 6 Ad. & El. 198.

⁹ R. v. Bishop, Car. & M. 302.

¹⁰ R. v. Aylett, 1 Term. Rep. 63.

¹¹ The sale of a pig, for instance, on the day after "sworn to" alleged may be a material question, although not material to the question to be tried, i. e., whether the pig had or not been sold bonâ fide to the prisoner before the date of the execution. R. v. Altass, 1 Cox, 17.

¹² See 1 Ld. R. 258, per Holt, C. J.; 2 Show. 20, admitted arguendo by the attorney-general, Sir Wm. Jones.

circumstance is not deemed worthy of notice. And this explains the meaning of a passage in Freeman, where it is said, that perjury cannot be in respect of a thing which is altogether foreign, for that if a witness were to swear what clothes he had, or when he saw such a fact done, it would not be perjury at common law.¹

In illustration of the first point, it is laid down, that any false oath is perjury which tends to mislead the court, though it do not in any way affect the principal judgment to be given. As where a person offers himself as bail for another, falsely swearing that his substance is greater than it is.² So, where the witness swore that he had seen thirty or forty of T. S.'s sheep in Mr. Sotherton's close, that he knew them to be such, because they were marked with an (a 5) on the shoulder, and all his sheep were so marked, whereas the sheep were not marked with (a 5). Lea, C. J., and Houghton, J., were of opinion, that the perjury had been well assigned.³ Nevertheless, it does not appear that any judgment was given, and some years afterwards, two persons were charged with having sworn falsely to the same facts as above, when there arose a difference of opinion upon the bench. Hyde, C. J., and Whitlock, J., held, that the perjury had been sufficiently made out, but Doderidge, J., thought, on the contrary, that the swearing was only to the particularity. But Hyde observed, that the indictment was bad, because it had been drawn jointly against two, since the perjury of one was not that of the other; and the attorney-general had a day given him to maintain the indictment.⁴

So perjury may be committed by giving a false answer in chancery, although in a matter not material, or charged in the bill.⁵ As where one exhibited a bill to discover the knowledge of the defendant as to a devise, and whether he did not solicit to prove the will in chancery. He answered that he did not solicit. But upon the trial for perjury, it was proved that he did solicit, although he did not pay the fees, and it was moved to stay the judgment, for want of material reference to the point at issue. But the court was clear that this was perjury, for at common law it might be in a thing not material.⁶ So, if the credit of a witness be in question, and one come forward and swear falsely for the purpose of supporting the testimony, this has been said to be perjury.⁷ So, a man may be indicted at common law for a false affidavit taken before a master in chancery, but not upon the statute.⁸ So, in

¹ 1 Freem. 506. R. v. —, one of the Lord Mountague's witnesses; 1 Ld. Raym. 258; S. P. Gouldsb. 191, per Popham. But Holt, C. J., denied the authority of this last case, in R. v. Greep, Carth. 422; 12 Mod. 141; and held that such a swearing would be perjury. See, however, the observations of Mr. Serjeant Hawkins, post.

² See 16 Vin. Ab. 309, A. 14.

³ 2 Ro. Rep. 368.

⁴ R. v. Jary and King, Palm. 535, and see 16 Vin. Ab. 316, E. 3. 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, s. 8. The case does not seem to have been ultimately decided.

⁵ 1 Sid. 274.

⁶ R. v. Drue, 1 Sid. 274.

⁷ By Holt, C. J., Carth. 422.

⁸ Buxton v. Gouch, 3 Salk. 269.

illustration of this point, it must be further added, that in the nature of the thing an evidence may be very material, and yet not full enough to prove the point in question.¹

It was held by Lord Kenyon, also, that if in answer to a bill filed by A. for the redemption of lands, the equity of which was assigned to him by B., the defendant should swear that he had no notice of the assignment, insisting at the same time on tacking another bond debt due from B. to his mortgage, it would be a material fact upon which perjury might be assigned.² A. having recovered against B., B. sued A. in chancery, stating that a part of the contract had not appeared in the court of law. A. denied this in his answer, and this, if false, amounted to perjury.³ A question, however little connected with the matters at issue, may become material if it affects the credit of the witness, as a question put upon cross-examination.⁴

Examples of idle, impertinent, or trifling matters are, where a party was charged with perjury, for swearing that J. S. drew his dagger, and beat and wounded another. This act was found to have been done with a staff. This was agreed not to be perjury, inasmuch as the beating only was material.⁵ So, where one was asked by the judge whether A. brought such a number of sheep from B. to C. all together, and the answer was, yes; whereas he brought part at one time and part at another. This was held not to be perjury;⁶ and so it was again in the case of the blue coat already cited.⁷ So again, where a witness was asked, whether such a sum of money had been paid for two things then in dispute, to which he answered, "yes," though, in truth, it was paid but for one by agreement.⁸ So, if a witness take an oath that, in coming to town to give evidence, he lay at one inn, whereas, in fact, he lay at another.⁹ A question was made about sealing a deed at D., and whether one J. S. was a witness to it, and defendant swore, that J. S. was 100 miles distant from D. at the time, and, consequently, that he could not witness it. Eyre, J., said, that this was not perjury, because not material to the issue; but Holt, C. J., entertained a different opinion. The judgment, however, was arrested upon another point, with leave to the informer to exhibit a new information, the court being of opinion that the defendant had been guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury. But the case being removed into the House of Lords, by writ of error, the peers, in their turn, reversed the judgment of ¹ By Holt, C. J., 2 Ld. Raym. 889. See also upon this subject, Brown v. Michel, Cro. El. 500.

² R. v. Pepys, Peake, Rep. 138.

³ R. v. Yates, Car. & M. 137.

⁴ R. v. Overton, 2 Moo. 263; Car. & M. 655.

⁵ R. v. Styles, cited, Hetl. 97, by Richardson, C. J., in Allen v. Westley.

⁶ R. v. Laiston, 2 Ro. Rep. 41.

⁷ Ante.

⁸ 2 Ro. Rep. 42, per Houghton, J., cited.

⁹ By Holt, C. J., Comb. 461.

King's Bench without assigning any reason.¹ Parker, C. J., upon a subsequent occasion, made the following observations upon this case of R. v. Griep:—"I have heard a case mentioned in King William's time, where the question being put about the sealing of a deed, it was sworn that the party was at such a time in such a place, and, consequently, could not seal the deed; and upon this oath he was convicted of perjury. But now, though the matter of this oath was but a circumstance, considered in relation to the point in question, upon the trial in which the oath was given, yet it was all his oath, his entire evidence. But if perjury may be committed in matter of circumstance, it must be a material circumstance, a circumstance of that weight, that without it he could not hope to find credit with the jury."²

The same learned judge, when lord chancellor, observed also, that he did not think it would be perjury at law, if the depositions of a witness taken de bene esse were quite contradictory to his depositions in chief, there being no issue joined, as there must be before the taking of the depositions in chief.³ It has also been held, that the reversal of a judgment against B. for perjury upon a writ of error, is no ground of defence for A. upon a trial for perjury alleged to have been committed by him upon B.'s trial, as showing that A.'s evidence could not have been material, and it was also the opinion of the judge, that the allegation of B.'s conviction was not negatived by the subsequent successful appeal.⁴

Error was brought upon a judgment against the defendants for perjury. The indictment stated, that it had become a material question, whether on the occasion of a certain alleged arrest, one J. K. had been touched by J. L. The defendant was charged with having sworn that J. L. put his arms round him, and embraced him: innuendo, that on the occasion to which the evidence applied, J. L. had touched the person of J. K. The court reversed the judgment, being of opinion that the evidence was not in any way connected with the material subject of inquiry. And, moreover, there was no averment of materiality in that part of the indictment which set out the evidence.⁵

Perjury by statute.] The chief Acts upon this subject are 32 Hen. 8, c. 9, and 5 Eliz. c. 9. By the 3rd section of the former Act it is provided, that no person whatever do suborn any witness, by letters, rewards, promises, or any other sinister labour or means, to the procurement or occasion of any manner of perjury by false verdict or otherwise in the chancery, the star chamber, Whitehall, or elsewhere within the king's dominions, or the marches of the same, upon pain of forfeiting 10*l.*, one moiety to be the king's, the other his who may sue for the same by action of debt, bill, plaint, or information, in any of the king's

¹ R. v. Griep, Ld. Raym. 256.

² 10 Mod. 195.

³ 1 P. Wms. 569, Trin. 1719.

⁴ R. v. Meek, 9 C. & P. 513.

⁵ R. v. Nicholl, 1 B. & Adol.

21.

courts, in which action no essoin, protection, wager of law, nor injunction shall be allowed.

This interference on the part of the legislature was followed up by 5 El. c. 9, s. 3,¹—whosoever shall unlawfully and corruptly procure any witness or witnesses by letters, rewards, promises, &c., to commit perjury, by any writ, &c., in any wise touching or concerning any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any goods, &c.,² or in any of the queen's majesty's courts of record, or in any leet, view of frank-pledge or law-day, ancient demesne court, hundred court, court baron, or in the court or courts of the stannary in Devonshire and Cornwall; or shall likewise unlawfully and corruptly procure or suborn any witness or witnesses sworn to testify in perpetuam rei memoriam; every such offender shall forfeit 40*l*.³

The 5th section prescribes the incompetency arising from the infamy of the crime.

Next follows the punishment of such as fall into the temptation of subornation. By sect. 6, the party thus offending is to forfeit 20*l*. and to be imprisoned for six months, without bail or mainprise.⁴ The 8th section gives a moiety of these respective forfeitures to the crown, and the other half to the party grieved, and who will sue for the same in the manner pointed out by the statute of Hen. 8. The 9th section points out the judges who should have authority to hear and determine these matters.⁵ By sect. 10, proclamation of the statute was directed to be made at the assizes twice in the year, to prevent ignorance of the same. Sect. 11 declares, that ecclesiastical and spiritual courts shall not be in any wise affected by the Act, but that offenders may be punished therein as before.⁶ The 12th section related to the serving process upon witnesses, giving a penalty of 10*l*. to be recovered against witnesses neglecting the process, and also such further recompense as the party grieved might have sustained. The action to be brought by the injured party, and the further payment to be at the discretion of the judge of the court.⁷

This Act does not alter the nature of the offence of perjury, but only enlarges the punishment. It respects only such false oaths as are procured or taken in civil suits. This restriction was always conceded by the learned judges.

Again, it is observable, that the statute speaks only of witnesses. An action was brought upon the statute against one for commit-

¹ Sect. 1 recites the statute of Hen. 8, and sect. 2 declares that the crime of perjury has augmented, by reason of the smallness of the penalty.

² The courts mentioned above in 32 Hen. 8.

³ See, as to the increase of punishment, 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, post.

⁴ See sect. 6, and 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, for a further punishment. The pillory was added.

⁵ See sect. 4.

⁶ See 3 Inst. 164.

⁷ R. v. Flower; 5 Rep. 99. R. v. Monday, there cited, as in K. B. Mich. 36 & 37 Eliz. And again, Trin. 39 Eliz.; 3 Inst. 164.

ting wilful perjury in his testimony. The defendant in his defence before the star chamber alleged, that he had been examined as a party and not as a witness. And by Weston, J., if he had been sworn upon his answer, it would not be within the statute, but if examined on the part of the Queen upon interrogatories it is otherwise.¹ So, where a man was indicted for perjury in his answer in the star chamber upon his examination to interrogatories there, he was discharged, because there was no examination as a witness, nor in perpetuam rei memoriam.² So, upon another occasion, it was said by counsel, arguendo, that the case was not within 5 Eliz., for such an offence ought to have been before a jury in giving evidence, or upon some articles.³ The court, however, were against him, probably because they thought that the facts did not bear out the argument of the counsel, the defendant having been convicted of taking a false oath at a court leet.⁴

Then again, as at common law, the oath must have been taken in some judicial proceeding. Therefore, where a man was examined upon certain articles in the star chamber, and being convicted of perjury, the judgment was, that he had falsely and wilfully deposed, it was holden bad for want of stating the matter in which the false oath had been taken, as well as the action, and the defendant was discharged.⁵ So also, an indictment was holden bad which charged a perjury before commissioners out of chancery, because it was not alleged that the commission was under the great seal, or that the officers had power to administer an oath under their commission.⁶

There must appear in proceedings upon the statute to have been a suit depending, for otherwise no party could be prejudiced.⁷

Lastly, (and herein the statute differs from the common law,) the matter sworn must be in some court of record, or court especially mentioned in the Act, and must be material to the issue. Thus, by Popham, C. J., if a man do not depose upon some matter depending in suit in some court of record, he cannot be touched for a perjury upon 5 Eliz. Also, if he be perjured in circumstances, and not in the point in question, it is not material nor punishable by virtue of that statute.⁸

So, where a man was indicted for perjury, he was discharged, because there was no statement how the issue was, nor how the deposition trenched to the point of the issue.⁹

¹ R. v. Sir Robert Miller, Noy. 128, as to the old wager of law, now abolished. 1 Hawk. c. 69, 20.

² R. v. Rither, Cro. El. 148.

³ Godb. 71.

⁴ Godb. 71. See R. v. Matthews, 3 Leon. 201, to the same effect; Dy. 288 (a), S. P. By Wray and other justices.

⁵ R. v. Stedman, Cro. El. 137, S. P. R. v. Thomas, Id.

⁶ R. v. Mandy, 2 Ro. Rep. 427.

⁷ See 2 Russ. C. & M. 654.

⁸ Gouldsb. 191; 11 Rep. 13.

R. v. Mandy, 2 Ro. Rep. 427. S. P. Custodes v. Howel Gwin, Sty. 336; 2 Show. 20. By the att.-gen. arg. 3 Inst. 166.

⁹ R. v. Lane, Cro. El. 148.

So again, in an indictment upon the statute it was agreed, that the charge should strictly pursue the requisites of the Act. For, by Richardson, C. J., and G. Croke, J., there can be no indictment upon this statute, but where it is shown, that the deposition is upon the matter in question, and conducing to the issue, and that the party has been prejudiced by the false oath. The court, however, would not quash the indictment, but directed that the defendant should plead not guilty, upon which it would appear by the evidence, whether the matter he had sworn to were pertinent to the issue or not.¹ The same point was mentioned as law by Lord Mansfield in The King v. Aylett.²

Witnesses for prisoners.] By 1 Ann. st. 2, c. 9, s. 3, it was enacted, that all persons who should be produced as witnesses for prisoners upon any trial for treason or felony, should be sworn in like manner as the witnesses for the crown, and if convicted of wilful perjury, that they should suffer all the penalties prescribed by the law against perjury.

Freeholders' oath.] By 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 1, if any person, taking the freeholders' oath and affirmation, shall thereby commit wilful perjury, and be convicted, or if any person should suborn any freeholder to take such a false oath, and be convicted, each offender shall respectively be subject to the punishments prescribed against perjury by 5 El. c. 9, and 2 Geo. 2, c. 25.

The same law is provided by 11 Geo. 1, c. 18, s. 3, with reference to elections in London.

Courts martial.] The stat. 22 Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 17, prescribes the punishments of 5 Eliz., and 2 Geo. 2, against all persons who are found guilty of perjury, or subornation of perjury, at courts martial.

Municipal corporations.] By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 21, false swearing under that Act, "for the Regulation of Municipal Corporations in England and Wales," and false affirmations, are declared to be perjuries, and punishable accordingly.³

Bankrupts and insolvents.] By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 254, the false oath of a bankrupt under examination, was made punishable with the penalties of perjury, and by 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 71, the like punishment is awarded against persons swearing falsely under the provisions of that Act. But it was not a perjury to swear to the truth of a schedule, in which certain items were omitted, as debts due to the insolvent.¹ For an omission of money received and expended by the insolvent is not within the Act.²

¹ R. v. Sharp, Cro. Car. 352.

² 1 Term Rep. 69.

³ As to the Gen. Inclosure Act, 41 Geo. 3, c. 109, s. 43.

So, that an affidavit made under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, and sworn before a registrar of bankrupts under 5 & 6 Vict. c. 122, (now repealed,) was held to be sworn before a competent authority, and was a material matter upon which perjury might be assigned, although there was no power under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 8, of making the person a bankrupt.³ And an affidavit of debt for a capias under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 3, might be sworn before the writ of summons issued. So that an indictment for perjury upon such an affidavit needed not to allege that an action was pending when the affidavit was made.⁴ By 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 254, if any bankrupt's wife shall give, in any way, false evidence, she shall be guilty of perjury.⁵

Excise and customs.] Several oaths having been imposed by statutes concerning the customs and excise, it is perjury for a party to forswear himself in these respects.

The reader is referred to several Acts of parliament in the note,⁶ but he will be careful to remember that the Oaths Abolition Act (which we shall set out presently) has interfered with several of these oaths by substituting a declaration in lieu of them. It is better to set out the authority to administer the oath by statute in the indictment, though the court will not quash an indictment which fails to show the authority. The defendant may demur, or move in arrest of judgment, or apply to the attorney-general.⁷

Naval and military departments.] There are oaths likewise in the various departments of the naval and military services, the breach of which is punishable.⁸

¹ R. v. Mudie, 1 M. & Rob. 128. S. C. nom. R. v. Moody, 5 C. & P. 23.

² R. v. Marner, Car. & M. 628.

³ R. v. Dunn, 16 L. J. Q. B. 382. Dunn v. Reg. 12 Q. B. 1026.

⁴ King v. Reg. 18 L. J. Q. B. 253. See R. v. Robins, 6 T. R. 626, cited there.

⁵ See also, sect. 255. See 2 Cox, C. C. 267. R. v. Westley, Bell, 193.

⁶ See amongst others, 52 Geo. 3, c. 13, s. 30; 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, s. 31; c. 85, s. 38; 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 51, s. 29; 3 & 4 Vict. c. 87, s. 71; and compare 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, ss. 2, 5, with these Acts.

⁷ R. v. Burnby, 5 Q. B. 548; Dav. & M. 362; 13 L. J. M. C. 29.

⁸ See 11 Geo. 4 & 1 Will. 4, c. 20, ss. 89, 99; 2 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 32, naval civil department. 2 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 45, army prize money; perjury or subornation of perjury. In this latter case, by sect. 46, if the offence be committed out of the realm, it may, nevertheless, be tried in any county in England, as if it had been committed in that county. 2 Will. 4, c. 106, s. 4; half-pay receipt (perjury). See, however, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, s. 2, which substitutes a declaration in several cases, and also see sect. 21.

West Indian colonies.] So under the bill for giving relief to certain colonies in the West Indies.¹

Privy council.] So with reference to oaths or affirmations before the judicial committee of the privy council.²

Slavery.] And again, under the Act for the Abolition of Slavery throughout the British colonies.³ The Spanish Slave Treaty Act in the case of persons wilfully and corruptly giving false evidence.⁴

Poor laws.] So under the poor laws' statute, in the case likewise, of giving false evidence wilfully and corruptly.⁵ But the commissioners are authorized to administer oaths as well as declarations, if they see fit.⁶

Charities.] Again, to give false evidence before the charity commissioners, either upon oath or affirmation, is an act of perjury.⁷

Sale of bread.] So to take any false oath, or make a false affirmation under the sale of bread bill, is punishable as a perjury, either by indictment or information, according to the due course of law.⁸

Tithe commutation.] So under the Tithe Commutation Act, whosoever shall wilfully give false evidence, shall be deemed guilty of perjury; and if any person shall make or subscribe a false affidavit or declaration for the purposes of the Act, he shall suffer the penalties of perjury.⁹

Marriage Act.] So under the Marriage Act, knowingly and wilfully to make any false declaration, or sign any false notice or certificate, required by the Act, for the purpose of procuring any marriage. And any person who shall forbid the issue of any superintendent registrar's certificate by falsely representing himself to be a person whose consent to such marriage is required by law, knowing such representation to be false, shall suffer the penalties of perjury.¹⁰

¹ 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 125, s. 16.

² 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 41, s. 9.

³ 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, s. 42; and to make or subscribe any false declaration under 6 Will. 4, c. 5, s. 8, see Slaves Compensation Acts, is a misdemeanor.

⁴ 6 Will. 4, c. 6, s. 8, not saying whether by oath or affirmation, or otherwise.

⁵ 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 13.

⁶ Sect. 2. See also sect. 109.

⁷ 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 10.

⁸ 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 37, s. 22.

⁹ 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 93.

These expressions, "guilty of perjury," and "suffer the penalties of perjury," must be considered as synonymous.

¹⁰ 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 38.

Births—Registration.] Every person who shall wilfully make or cause to be made, for the purpose of being inserted in any register of birth, death, or marriage, any false statement, touching any of the particulars required by the Act to be known and registered, shall be subject to the same pains and penalties as if he was guilty of perjury.¹

The charge against a defendant was, that he had made a false statement after marriage, to the officiating clergyman, in order to have such statement entered in the marriage register book. It appeared, however, that the statement in question was made to the clerk before the marriage; but that the defendant, when asked, averred the truth of it to the clergyman. It also appeared that the marriage register book was not the book provided by the registrar-general. These points were made for the defendant, and were argued before the judges; but they held the count sufficient, and that the identical book directed by the registrar-general was not necessary in the case;² and the purpose need not be effected.³ But the act must, of course, be intentional.⁴

Election petitions.] By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 98, s. 85, and 15 & 16 Vict. c. 57, s. 13, every person who shall wilfully give any false evidence before any committee or examiner of recognizances, or who shall wilfully swear falsely in any affidavit, shall be liable, on conviction, to the penalties of perjury.⁵

¹ 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, s. 41.

² R. v. Brown, Den. 291; 2 Car. & K. 504.

³ R. v. Mason, 2 Car. & K. 622.

⁴ R. v. Lord Dunboyne, 3 Car. & K. 1. Whether the prosecution must take place within three years, qu.?

⁵ See as to various perjuries,—The Woolwich Lands Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 16—Houses of Parliament, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 7, s. 35—Dean Forest Mines, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 43, s. 73—Imprisonment for Debt, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 100—Custody of Infants, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 54, s. 2—Police Courts Acts, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 71, s. 23—Metropolis Improvement, 2 & 3 Vict. c. 87, s. 71—Marriage Act Amendment, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 72, s. 4—False Returns to Returning Officers, 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 4—Copyhold Enfranchisement, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 94—Election Petitions Trial, 4 & 5 Vict. c. 58, s. 76—Pentonville Prison, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 29, s. 27—Argentine Confederation, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 40, s. 8—Slave Trade Treaties, 5 & 6 Vict. c. 42, s. 7—Millbank, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 25, s. 26—Admiralty Lands, 6 & 7 Vict. c. 58, s. 14—County Coroners, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 92, s. 14—Insolvent Debtors, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 96, s. 40—Joint Stock Companies, 7 & 8 Vict. c. 111, s. 30 (misdemeanor); c. 110, ss. 26, 31 (misdemeanor)—Lands Clauses Consolidation, 8 Vict. c. 18, s. 149—Merchant Seamen 8 Vict. c. 112, s. 22 (misdemeanor)—Joint Stock Banks Regulation, 8 Vict. c. 113, s. 18 (misdemeanor)—Railways Clauses Consolidation, 8 Vict. c. 20, s. 160—Customs Management, 8 & 9 Vict. c. 85, s. 2—Friendly Societies, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 27, ss. 9, 16—Coal-whippers, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 36, s. 37—Battersea Park, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 38, s. 56—Chelsea Bridge, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 39, ss. 41, 103—Small Debts, 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 84—Chancery Oaths and Declarations, 11 Vict. c. 10, s. 3—Joint Stock Companies Winding-up Act, 11 &

Affirmation instead of oath.] Certain dissenters from the Church of England have been, from time to time, relieved from the obligation of taking an oath to which they have entertained religious scruples, but the wilful violation of their affirmation, which was substituted for the oath, has been so far declared to be an offence of the same nature as perjury, as to subject the defendant to the same penalties and forfeitures which are enacted against that crime.¹

By a late statute this relief has been afforded to Quakers and Moravians on criminal as well as civil cases;² the Quaker having been expressly excluded by statute from giving his testimony upon criminal trials. But under the same section, a false affirmation is punishable as perjury. However, it has been found, that certain persons who had seceded from the sects of Quakers and Moravians, were yet still embarrassed by scruples respecting oaths, it was provided that these separatists might make their solemn affirmation and declaration as fully as if they had continued to belong to those

12 Vict. c. 45, s. 113—Marriages in Foreign Countries, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 68, s. 16—Bankruptcy, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 254—Petty Bag, 12 & 13 Vict. c. 109, s. 45—Pirate's Head Money, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 26, s. 6—Coalwhippers, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 78, s. 37—High Peak, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 94, s. 19—Corrupt Practices, Elections, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 57, s. 13—Master in Chancery Abolition, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 80, s. 31—Jurisdiction of Equity, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 86, s. 23—Lunacy Regulations, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 70, s. 57—Arabian Slave Trade, 16 Vict. c. 16, s. 3—New Granada Ditto, 16 Vict. c. 17, s. 4—Whichwood Forest, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 36, s. 33—Whittlebury Forest, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 42, s. 19—Savings Banks Annuities, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 45, s. 32—Customs, 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, ss. 38, 311—Manning the Navy, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 18, s. 54—Charitable Trusts, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 137, s. 13—Manchester and Salford, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 20, s. 27—Admiralty Courts, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 78, s. 9—Encumbered Estates, West Indies, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 117, s. 64—Common Law Procedure, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, ss. 21, 89—Mutiny, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 11, s. 103—Marine Mutiny, passim, 18 & 19

Vict. c. 12, s. 90—Foreign Oaths and Notarial Acts, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 42, s. 4—Woolmer Forest, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 46, s. 20—Grand Juries, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 54, s. 1—Foreign Evidence, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 113, s. 3—Marriage Act, 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, ss. 2, 18—Divorce, 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 50—Encumbered Estates (Ireland), 21 & 22 Vict. c. 72, s. 90—Probate Court, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 34—Divorce, 21 & 22 Vict. c. 108, s. 23—Public Offices, 22 Vict. c. 19, s. 51—Evidence Abroad, 22 Vict. c. 20, s. 2—Evidence (Revenue), 22 & 23 Vict. c. 21, s. 16—Probate Court, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 31, s. 30—Census (Ireland), 23 & 24 Vict. c. 42, s. 11—Ionian Islands Marriages, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 86, s. 9—Surveyor: False Valuation, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 112, s. 15—Government of the Navy, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 123, s. 57—Mutiny Act, 24 Vict. c. 7, s. 96—Bankruptcy and Insolvency (Corrupt Oath or Affirmation before a Registrar), 24 Vict. c. 134, s. 54—Corrupt and False Declarations, 24 Vict. c. 134, s. 145.

¹ 7 & 8 Will. 3, c. 34, s. 3; 8 Geo. 1, c. 6, s. 2; 22 Geo. 2, c. 46, s. 36. See also 12 Geo. 2, c. 13, s. 8.

² 9 Geo. 4, c. 32, s. 1.

denominations of Christians, and liable to the penalty for false swearing.

Declaration instead of oath or affirmation.] An Act was passed in the year 1835, which very considerably lessened the number of oaths in general.¹ A subsequent statute of the same year² repealed the former (it being found necessary to make some amendments), and consolidated the old and new provisions into one law.

By sect. 2 of this last-mentioned Act, in any case where, by any Act or Acts, made or to be made relating to the revenues of customs or excise, the post office, the office of stamps and taxes, the office of woods and forests, land revenues, works, and buildings, the war office, the army pay office, the office of the treasurer of the navy, the accountant-general of the navy or the ordnance, His Majesty's treasury, Chelsea Hospital, Greenwich Hospital, the board of trade, or any of the offices of His Majesty's principal secretary of state, the India board, the office for auditing the public accounts, the national debt office, or any office under the control, direction, or superintendence of the lords commissioners of His Majesty's treasury, or by any official regulation in any department, any oath, solemn affirmation, or affidavit, might, but for the passing of this Act, be required to be taken or made by any person on the doing of any act, matter, or thing, or for the purpose of verifying any book, entry, or return, or for any other purpose whatsoever, it shall be lawful for the lords commissioners of His Majesty's treasury, or any three of them, if they shall so think fit, by writing under their hands and seals, to substitute a declaration to the same effect as the oath, solemn affirmation, or affidavit, which might, but for the passing of this Act, be required to be taken or made; and the person who might under the Act or Acts imposing the same, be required to take or make such oath, solemn affirmation, or affidavit, shall, in presence of the commissioners, collector, other officer, or person empowered by such Act or Acts to administer such oath, solemn affirmation, or affidavit, make and subscribe such declaration, and every such commissioner, collector, or other officer or person, is hereby empowered and required to administer the same accordingly.

By sect. 3, this declaration is to be published in the Gazette, and after the lapse of twenty-one days from the publication, the provisions of the Act are to apply.

And by sect. 4, no oath nor affirmation can after such twenty-one days be administered in respect of the subject-matters in question.

By sect. 8, the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, and all other bodies corporate and politic, and all bodies now authorized to administer any oath, &c., may make statutes, byelaws, or orders, authorizing the substitution of a declaration for an oath,

¹ 5 Will. 4, c. 8.

² 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62.

affirmation, or affidavit, provided that such statute be passed according to the rules of the particular body.

Sect. 9 abolishes oaths of the churchwarden and sidesman, both upon entering and quitting office, and substitutes a declaration upon the commencement of the duties of such office.

Sect. 10 substitutes a declaration for oaths, affirmations, or affidavits taken or used under any highway or turnpike Acts.

Sect. 11 has the same provisions where oaths, &c. were previously required upon the taking out of a patent.

Sect. 12 has reference to the Pawnbrokers' Acts, and likewise substitutes a declaration.

In this case it is not sufficient to prove the handwriting of the justice before whom the declaration is made; it must be shown that he was acting as a magistrate within the district of which he was such justice.¹ In another case, however, it was said that neither the magistrate nor any one present need be called if the proof of guilty knowledge were made out beyond a question. It was also held that two witnesses, as in perjury, were necessary to prove the offence.²

By sect. 14, in lieu of affidavits on oath, to prove the death of any proprietor of any stock or funds transferable at the bank of England, or to prove the identity of the person of any such proprietor, or to remove any other impediment to a transfer, or relating to the loss, mutilation, or defacement of any bank note, bank post bill, a declaration is substituted.

Sect. 15 has the like provision with regard to oaths hereupon required under 6 Geo. 2, c. 7, "An Act for the more easy Recovery of Debts in His Majesty's Colonies and Plantations in America," and also under 54 Geo. 3, c. 15, "An Act for the more Easy Recovery of Debts in His Majesty's Colonies of New South Wales."

By sect. 16, it shall and may be lawful to and for any attesting witness to the execution of any will or codicil, deed or instrument in writing, and to and for any other competent person, to verify and prove the signing, sealing, publication, or delivery of any such will, codicil, deed or instrument in writing, by such declaration in writing made as aforesaid, and every such justice, notary, or other officer, shall be and is hereby authorized and empowered to administer or receive such declaration.

By sect. 17, in all suits now pending, or hereafter to be brought in any court of law or equity, by or on behalf of His Majesty, his heirs and successors, in any of his said majesty's territories, plantations, colonies, possessions, or dependencies, for or relating to any debt or account; His Majesty, his heirs and successors, shall and may prove his and their debts and accounts, and examine his or their witness or witnesses by declaration, in like manner as any subject or subjects is or are empowered or may do by this present Act.

By sect. 18, whereas it may be necessary and proper in many cases not herein specified, to require confirmation of written instruments or allegations, or proof of debts, or of the execution of deeds or other matters; it is further enacted, that it shall and may be lawful for any justice of the peace, notary public, or other officer, now by law authorized to administer an oath, to take and receive the declaration of any person voluntarily making the same before him in the form in the schedule to this Act annexed; and if any declaration so made shall be false or untrue in any material particular, the person wilfully making such false declaration shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.

¹ R. v. Morgan, 1 Cox, 109.

² R. v. Browning, 3 Cox, 437.

Sect. 20 ordains that all declarations, unless otherwise directed by the powers given under the Act, should be in the form prescribed by the annexed schedule. By 1 & 2 Vict. c. 105, all persons, whether jurymen, witnesses, or deponents, are to be bound by the oath each considers binding upon him.

The proceeding against a justice, under sect. 13, is by indictment. As where the defendant thought fit to swear witnesses before himself, with reference to the ecclesiastical conduct of two of the clergy of the Bishop of Exeter.¹ But the indictment was held bad in arrest of judgment, because it failed to set out the deposition, so that the court could not judge whether it was within the Act.² It merely stated that "a certain oath or affidavit" was administered,³ and that the defendant had no cognizance nor jurisdiction thereof, and it negatived the proviso in the section. But it seemed to Coleridge and Williams, Justices, that the particulars of the oath need not be set out.⁴

There are some saving clauses: sect. 6 saves the oath of allegiance in the case of persons appointed to any office. Sect. 7 preserves all oaths, solemn affirmations, and affidavits in any judicial proceeding in any court of justice, or upon any proceeding by way of summary conviction before a magistrate. And sect. 19 declares that the same fees should be paid upon the taking of declarations, as in the case of oaths, affirmations, or affidavits.

By sect. 5, if any persons shall make and subscribe any such declaration as hereinbefore mentioned in lieu of an oath, solemn affirmation, or affidavit, by any Act or Acts relating to the revenues of customs or excise, stamps and taxes, or post office, required to be made on the doing of any act, matter, or thing, or for verifying any book, account, entry, or return, or for any purpose whatsoever, and shall wilfully make therein any false statement as to any material particular, the person making the same shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.⁵

And by sect. 21, in any case where a declaration is substituted for an oath under the authority of this Act, or by virtue of

¹ R. v. Nott, Car. & M. 288.
Yet whether an indictment lies, qy?
⁴ Q. B. 768.

² S. C.

³ S. C.

⁴ 7 Jur. 621; Dav. & M. 1.

⁵ And so punishable accordingly, by fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

any power or authority hereby given, or is directed and authorized to be made and subscribed under the authority of this Act, or by virtue of any power hereby given, any person who shall wilfully and corruptly make and subscribe any such declaration, knowing the same to be untrue in any material particular, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.¹

Of proceedings in perjury.] At common law, the proceeding is by indictment and information, under the statute 5 Eliz., by indictment, information,² and action.

First, the most common and most advisable course is to prefer an indictment at common law, either at the assizes or the Court of King's Bench, at Westminster. Because, notwithstanding that the statute of 5 Eliz. was introduced for the better prevention of the crime, it is much more difficult to procure a conviction upon it than at common law, and as to the punishment which formed so chief a merit of that statute, the Act 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, has amply supplied its place. As to the jurisdiction, by stat. 5 El. c. 9, s. 9, as well the judges of the said courts³ where such perjury shall be committed, as also the justices of assize and gaol delivery, and the justices of peace at their quarter sessions,⁴ shall have power to inquire of all offences contrary to this Act, by inquisition, presentment, bill, or information, or otherwise lawfully to hear and determine the same. And by sect. 13, the statute shall not restrain the authority of any judge having absolute power to punish perjury before the making thereof, so that he set not on the offender less punishment than is contained in this Act. The following case happened upon this section:—A bill of perjury was sued in chancery for a perjury committed there against the form of the statute, and a doubt arose, whether if the defendant would plead not guilty, he should be sworn to his plea, and also answer interrogatories as was usual in the star chamber. It was resolved in the negative by Catlyn, Saunders, Dyer, and Whyddon, unless it had previously and absolute authority, and had been used to examine perjuries in that court before that statute.⁵ The words "might ¹ And punishable by fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court. See R. v. Boynes, 1 Car. & K. 65.

² It was ruled upon one occasion, that the attorney-general might have an information upon perjury supposed to be in advantage of the crown, and that any other person might assign such perjury if he were grieved by it, but that the attorney might though the queen were benefited by it. R. v. Agar, Mo. 627. The course of information by a memorandum, quod re- cordatur, &c., was since 5 Eliz. and begun by Twisden.—1 Keb. 213.

³ Any of the Queen's courts of record, any leet, antient demesne court, hundred court, court baron, or courts of the stannary in Devon or Cornwall.

⁴ But this power is taken away by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 38, and they could not try a perjury at common law. R. v. Bainton, Str. 1088. R. v. Westiness, Id. R. v. Beaumont, Say. Rep. 278. Although it was once thought otherwise. R. v. Gunn, 11 Mod. 66.

⁵ Dy. 288; 3 Inst. 167.

have done and used to do," were expounded strictly; for, being copulative, an anterior usage could not give authority to a court, unless a right existed as well before the statute, and it was so held very shortly after the passing of the Act.¹

By sect. 11 of the statute above referred to, it is also provided that the Act shall not extend to any ecclesiastical court, but that the offenders may be punished by such laws as heretofore in the ecclesiastical courts.

However, notwithstanding this apparent saving, the spiritual courts have no jurisdiction in cases of perjury by statute. "For perjury, concerning any temporal act," says Lord Coke, "the ecclesiastical court has no jurisdiction, and if it be concerning a spiritual matter, the party grieved may sue for the same in the star chamber."²

Information.] The courts will not always grant an information. As where a wife came forward and swore that she had no manner of cause for swearing the peace against her husband, the court refused an information for perjury upon her oath.³ So where a witness was asked whether he had received 800*l.* for passing his accounts. Per Holt, C. J.—This was not a fair question.—It could not have been expected that the witness would have owned himself guilty of bribery; you may indict him, but we will not grant an information.⁴ And the court will not permit a right, as of voting, to be tried by an information for perjury.⁵ A man was indicted for perjury in an affidavit and pleaded guilty. He was then charged with the same offence by one L. upon an information, and the court doubted at first whether they should proceed upon the latter charge. But as his affidavit had charged L. and others with having suborned him to commit perjury, it was thought that he might be tried upon that as another distinct perjury, and he was convicted.⁶

It was doubted whether a witness could be committed for perjury in facie curiæ,⁷ but by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 19, the judges are invested with extensive powers, although they now forbear from exercising them.⁸

¹ R. v. Onslowe, Dy. 243.

² 3 Inst. 164.

³ R. v. Porter and others, 1 Barnard. 52.

⁴ R. v. Dummer, 1 Salk. 374.

⁵ R. v. Weston, 1 Barnard. 56.

⁶ R. v. Maynard, 1 Vent. 182.

⁷ "It was said, a perjury in facie curiæ is punishable by the judge, and such is it if jurors go against their evidence; perhaps a witness may be punished for perjury in facie curiæ (which I will not maintain to be law). But a jury can never be so punished, because the evidence in court is not binding evidence to a jury, as hath been showed."—By Vaughan, C. J., in R. v. Bushell, Vaugh. 152. And in R. v. Thorogood, the defendant having made an affidavit in the Court of Common Pleas, and then subsequently appearing and confessing its falsehood, the court recorded the confession, and ordered him to be set in the pillory. 8 Mod. 179.

⁸ It is considered that the power of a summary committal by the judge operates in terrorem, and discourages the witnesses, and thus becomes a hindrance to justice, especially as a magistrate can be resorted to.

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 19, any judge of the superior courts of law or equity, or of assize, nisi prius, oyer and terminer or gaol delivery, or justices, recorder, deputy recorder, chairman or other judge holding any general or quarter sessions of the peace, or any commissioner of bankruptcy or insolvency, or judge or deputy of any county court, or court of record, or justices in special or petty sessions, or sheriff or his deputy in writs of inquiry or trial from the superior courts,—if he shall think that perjury has been committed in evidence, affidavit, depositions, examination, answer, &c., to direct a prosecution, and commit the person; but bail shall be allowed, with one surety, or more than one,—and also to require persons to be bound over to prosecute or give evidence. The judge will give a certificate to the prosecutor without fee, which shall be the voucher of the prosecutor, and likewise to ensure costs to him upon its production, unless the court at the trial shall refuse them. But no such direction nor certificate shall be given in evidence upon any trial against any person so prosecuted. So is the statute 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17, against vexatious indictments.

Still it must appear that the oath was administered in the course of a judicial proceeding, although the commission and authority need not be alleged.¹ At a meeting for hearing appeals against surcharges for taxes, the defendant was sworn as a witness, and made, it was alleged, a false deposition. It was held, in error, that this was not an oath in a judicial proceeding, and that the statute 23 Geo. 2, c. 11, s. 1, did not help.² It was alleged, that “in the Whitechapel court of Middlesex, holden at, &c., in the county of Middlesex, before J. M., then and there being the judge of the said court, a certain action of contract then pending in the said court between A. L., plaintiff, and R. H., defendant, came on to be tried,” &c., upon which trial A. L. was then and there duly sworn “before the said J. M., being then and there judge of the said court, and then and there having competent and sufficient authority to administer the said oath to the said A. L. in that behalf.” It was held,—1st, that it sufficiently appeared in the indictment, that the court in which the action was tried was held in pursuance of 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, that from the averment of competent authority in the judge to administer the oath, it sufficiently appeared that the judicial proceeding, in the course of which the oath was administered, was one over which the judge had jurisdiction.³ Perjury is one of the offences in the Act against vexatious indictments, which restrains prosecutors not bound by recognizances.⁴

Chancery.] In the Court of Chancery the course seems to have

¹ Overton v. Reg. 4 Q. B. 83; and see 2 Moo. C. C. 266, n.

² S. C.

³ Lavey v. Reg. Den. & P. 504;
21 L. J. M. C. 10; 17 Q. B. 496.

⁴ 22 & 23 Vict. c. 17.

been always, that the chancellor might punish according to his discretion. And thus it was said, that either upon perjury by affidavit, or in an answer, the learned equity judge might direct the offender to be punished.¹ Thus, also, Egerton, C. J., adjudged a person who was palpably perjured, to pay a fine of 20*l.*, to be imprisoned, and to pay 10*l.* costs.² And his lordship cited some cases in support of his right to do this. As where a perjured witness in chancery was adjudged to the pillory and to pay costs.³ So, again, where a witness was ordered to stand in the pillory under such circumstances.⁴ His lordship cited another case, in which a juror swore that he had not 40*s.* in freehold, whereas it appeared that the value of his property of that description was of 4*l.* annually, and justices committed him to the Fleet.⁵ The lord keeper added, that every court might punish perjury appearing before themselves.⁶

The courts, however, are very tender of interposing any difficulties between the finding of a grand jury and the trial for perjury. Thus they will not, in general, quash an indictment, although defective, but will compel the defendant to plead, or, at all events, to demur.⁷

Application was made to the Court of Chancery for leave to amend an answer in a case where it did not appear that the party had any interest in the issue, and, therefore, could not be supposed to have sworn falsely with intention. But the court refused the motion, it being intimated that a prosecution for perjury had been threatened. It was the province of the grand jury to judge of the intention.⁸

Certiorari.] In general, the court will not grant a certiorari at the instance of the defendant to remove an indictment for perjury, nor will they quash it upon motion, but will put the party to plead.⁹ But under some extraordinary circumstances, this indulgence has been permitted. As where the defendant made an affidavit that he had twice paid costs for not going on to trial, the judges having gone away. This was allowed to be a special reason.¹⁰ So, also, where the defendant made an affidavit, that the prosecutor's attorney was under-sheriff of Middlesex, and that he attended the grand jury on finding the bill.¹¹

The effect of a certiorari is not to discharge the defendant out

¹ R. v. The Earl of Oxford, 1 Chanc. Rep. 1, Mich. 13 Jac.

² Bullen v. Bullen and Clerke, Mo. 656.

³ Baskervill v. Gulliam, Id. 657, cited there.

⁴ Pomeroy v. Ford, Id.

⁵ Sir Geo. Calveley v. Rishley, Id.

⁶ Sir Geo. Calveley v. Rishley, Mo. 657.

⁷ 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 25, s. 146.

⁸ 1 Bro. Parl. Ca. 419.

⁹ 1 Sid. 54. R. v. Pusey, 2 Str. 717; 2 Hawk. c. 9, s. 28.

¹⁰ R. v. Morgan, 2 Str. 1049.

¹¹ R. v. Webb, Id. 1068.

of custody, although it will vacate a recognizance of bail. As where the prosecutor removed an indictment for perjury into the King's Bench by certiorari. Buller, J., said, upon an application to deliver the prisoner out of custody on the ground of their being no record before the court, that he must find sureties. Had he been admitted to bail, indeed, the removal of the indictment would have discharged his recognizance.¹

Action.] We now proceed, although the remedy is most rare, to show when an action may be brought under the statute by the party grieved, and what action it is which is prescribed. And the plain meaning of the statute obviously was, that if any one be aggrieved by the false oath of another, he might recover damages for the mischief thereby occasioned. But it seems that some doubt once prevailed as to the power of suing for injuries caused by false affidavits. Thus, Coke, C. J., said that an action would not lie upon the statute for a false affidavit; the party offending might certainly be indicted at common law.² However, Mr. Serjeant Hawkins questions this opinion, observing, that it must, at all events, be confined to such affidavits as are in no way material to the issue before the court. For if the parties be grieved in any way by reason of the perjury, as if a trial were put off, or a judgment or execution set aside in consequence of a false affidavit, the offence, says the learned serjeant, appears not only to be within the meaning, but within the very letter also of the statute.³

In fact, this action has been superseded by the action on the case. Such an action was brought for not producing a paper under a subpœna duces tecum, on a former trial; the defendant had appeared as a witness but would not produce a warrant, which was the subject of the present action, but, on the contrary, swore positively that he neither had it in his possession, nor knew anything of it. The plaintiff was, consequently, nonsuited, and compelled to pay the costs of the action. The attorney-general objected, for the defendant, that the only remedy was an indictment against him for perjury, and that the proper mode of trying his veracity could not be the present. As well might an action be brought against a witness for withholding certain oral testimony, which, it might be imagined, he could have disclosed. But Lord Ellenborough answered, that if a man commit a misdemeanor, the party injured by such an offence is not in every case to be driven to proceed against him criminally, but may maintain a civil action for damages. There were various actions well known in the law (as for maliciously holding to bail, &c.) wherein perjury was imputed to the defendant, for which he was liable to be indicted. A verdict was ultimately found for the plaintiff.⁴

¹ R. v. Richardson, 2 Leach, 560.

² 1 Ro. Rep. 79; see 5 Mod. 348; S. P. as to an indictment.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 69, quod vide. See R. v. Matthews, 3 Leon. 201.

⁴ Amey v. Long, 1 Camp. 14, 16; 9 East, 473.

The word "original" in 18 Eliz. does not mean original writ, but original action, as contradistinguished from proceedings in inferior courts, and the star chamber, where the proceedings were had in a summary way, by libel or complaint.¹

Thirdly, we proceed to mention a few instances in which it has been endeavoured to proceed in a collateral manner, not indeed as a punishment of the parties said to be perjured, but obviously so as to effect them with the crime. It was moved to set aside the allowance of bail upon the ground of an entirely false description of property, but the court refused the rule. The court said, they could and would punish the defendant, or his attorney, if it were possible to connect them with the transaction, but independently of that fact, the plaintiff had no other remedy than an indictment for perjury.² On a subsequent application to set aside the allocatur of bail by reason of perjury, Park, J., said, that the rule, if granted, would operate on the defendant whose conduct had not been called in question, and that he would be affected without even hearing an answer from the bail. The learned judge added, that he did not clearly see on what ground a case in the King's Bench, which was cited (and to which we shall presently advert) proceeded. The only remedy for the plaintiff was by indictment.³

The practice, however, of the Court of King's Bench seems to be different in this respect, although even there the application met at first with no encouragement from the judges. It was moved to set aside the justification of bail on an affidavit charging perjury, when Best, J., said, he never knew an instance of such an application. Ultimately, however, upon a statement by the master, that one of the bail had been rejected in another cause, the rule was granted nisi, and, subsequently, made absolute.⁴ The same course was pursued in the same court upon another occasion.⁵

However, the courts have unanimously refused to stay execution, on the ground of a bill of indictment having been found against the plaintiff's principal witnesses. For, by Lord Ellenborough, this would be a receipt to every person, after verdict and judgment against him, how to delay the fruit of such judgment by indicting some of the plaintiff's witnesses for perjury.⁶

Strong affidavits, imputing perjury, will afford good grounds for

¹ 3 Term Rep. 365, note (a).

² A'Becket v. —, 5 Taunt. 776.

³ Stockham v. French, 1 Bingham. 365; S. P. Shee v. Abbott, 2 B. & B. 619. See, however, Barling v. Waters, 6 Bingham. 423.

⁴ Gould v. Berry, 1 Chit. Rep. 143.

⁵ Brown v. Gillies, Id. 372. It should seem, however, that upon the same principle which requires the oaths of two persons to convict a man of perjury, there ought to be at least two affidavits on these occasions. It may be added, that the bail may be punished if they prevaricate, or commit perjury in facie curiæ. See ante; Anon. 1 Str. 384, where both the bail and the attorney were set in the pillory.

⁶ Warwick v. Bruce, 4 M. & S. 140; Attorney-General v. Wood-

a new trial, but cannot prevail in any other way.¹ But merely finding an indictment will not be sufficient before conviction.²

Pleadings.] The difficulty of setting out the crime of perjury on the record was formerly considerable.³ Thus, an information under the statute first set forth the statute itself, then the pleadings in an ejectment, the issue, the proceedings upon the trial, the evidence both before the perjury as well as that on which the perjury was assigned, and, lastly, the assignments themselves.⁴

A statute was passed in the reign of George the Second for the purpose of remedying the inconvenience.⁵ And by sect. 1 it was declared, that prosecutions for perjury were so difficult that the crime had frequently been committed with impunity, for which reason it was enacted, that in every information or indictment to be prosecuted against any person for wilful and corrupt perjury, it should be sufficient to put forth the substance of the offence charged upon the defendant, and by what court, or, before whom the oath was taken, (averring such court, or person or persons, to have a competent authority to administer the same,) together with the proper averment or averments to falsify the matter or matters wherein the perjury or perjuries might be assigned; without setting forth the bill, answer, information, indictment, declaration, or any part of any record or other proceeding, either in law or equity, other than as aforesaid; and without setting forth the commission or authority of the court, or person or persons before whom the perjury was committed, any law, &c., notwithstanding. And by sect. 2, on every information or indictment for subornation of perjury or for corrupt bargaining or contracting with others to commit wilful and corrupt perjury, it shall be sufficient to set forth the substance of the offence charged upon the defendant, without setting forth the bill, answer, &c., as in sect. 1.

In proceeding on this statute, it was formerly necessary to set the Act itself forth almost literally. Where the statute was recited as speaking of any court of record, the defendant was discharged, because all the courts enumerated in the statute should have been specified.⁶

But now by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 20, in any indictment for perjury the substance of the offence need alone be set forth, and head, 2 Price, 3. Thurtell v. Beaumont, 1 Bingham. 339. See also, Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 4 East, 577, n.

¹ Lister v. Mundell, 1 B. & P. 427. Fabrilus v. Cock, 3 Burr. 1771. And there are many other cases to the like effect.

² Seeley v. Mayhew, 4 Bingham. 561.

³ See Stark. Cr. Pl. vol. i. 112.

⁴ Id. Citing Co. Ent. Inform. 367; Co. Ent. 165, 166; see 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 23. R. v. Drew, 1 Keb. 935.

⁵ 23 Geo. 2, c. 11.

⁶ R. v. Thomas, Cro. El. 137.

by what court, and before whom the oath was taken, without setting forth the bill, &c., or commission or authority of the court. However, where by statute, questions are required to be put, as under the Merchant Seamen's Act, the question put to an applicant for a registry ticket must be averred and proved in the words of the statute.¹

Yet, Lord Kenyon felt himself compelled to say upon one occasion, that the court had reason to lament, in almost all the trials for perjury, that the prosecutor would not avail himself of the Act in question, passed to obviate difficulties in drawing indictments for the offence.²

On one occasion, where an indictment, stating all the continuances on the former prosecution, &c., had been removed into the King's Bench by certiorari, it was referred to the master to see what part of the record was unnecessary, and ordered, that the clerk of the peace should pay the expense incurred by the unnecessary part.³ And his lordship desired that the bar would, for the sake of publicity, take a note of this.⁴

By 9 Geo. 4, c. 15, certain variances between written and printed evidence and the record may be amended, if the court should see fit.⁵

Where perjury was assigned on an affidavit made to set aside a judgment signed since the rules of Hilary Term, 4 Will. 4, and the allegation was, that the judgment had been entered up "in or as of Trinity Term," 5 Will. 4, the judge refused to amend.⁶

Joinder of parties.] It is worthy of attention, that two persons cannot be joined together in the same indictment for perjury. And thus, after several objections the court fastened upon this, saying, that the perjury of the one could not be that of the other.⁷ It was indeed said, in R. v. Chedwick, that an indictment against husband and wife was good, although preferred against both;⁸ but this case stands alone amongst contradictory decisions. As, where six had been included in an indictment for perjury, and four were convicted, the court arrested the judgment, saying, that there might be great inconvenience if the practice were allowed. One might be desirous to have a certiorari, the others not; the jury on

¹ R. v. Knox, 2 Cox, 165.

² 5 T. R. 317. See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, post.

³ R. v. May, 1 Dougl. 194; S. C. Leach, 192.

⁴ Dougl. 194, n. (26).

⁵ R. v. Goffe, 1 Lev. 189. Anon. said to be R. v. Bromley, 1 Ventr. 13; 16 Vin. Ab. 325, J. 21.

⁶ R. v. Cooke, 7 C. & P. 559.

In this case of R. v. Cooke, it was likewise held, that the allegation of the defendant having made his warrant of attorney directed to certain persons, "then and still being attorneys," &c., was proved by putting in the warrant of attorney.

⁷ R. v. Jary and King, Palm. 535; 2 Burr. 985. R. v. Harvey and others, acc. 1 Sess. Ca. 424.

⁸ 1 Keb. 685.

the trial of all might apply evidence to all, which, in fact, might be against one only. Perjury is a separate act in all.¹

Two oaths.] Where the defendant has sworn on a second examination matter directly opposite to his first evidence, the contradictory testimony should be specifically pointed out in an indictment of this sort.

A defendant was convicted of having sworn in the House of Lords diametrically opposite to his previous oath before a committee of the House of Commons, but the indictment omitted to specify in what particulars the perjury consisted, or in which evidence, and the court arrested the judgment. It was admitted, that precedents were to be found of such indictments,² but there being no judicial decision in their favour, Abbott, C. J., would not allow them to prevail as authority. A defendant might be twice put in peril of the punishment of perjury, and perhaps twice convicted and punished on the same subject matter, if such an indictment as this could be sustained; for he could not plead the acquittal or conviction as a bar to an indictment charging perjury in the usual way on either of the depositions.³

Venue.] It has been said, that in indictments the venue in this case is local, but that it is otherwise in informations. Thus, where the perjury was alleged to have happened in Middlesex, but it turned out to have occurred in the Inner Temple, the court mentioned the distinction above laid down. The reporter adds, that the court offered to have the matter found specially; but there being no counsel for the defendant in the information, and the question being raised only per amicum curiæ, the matter went off.⁴

It has been said that perjury committed at the Old Bailey, although before a Middlesex jury, must be tried by a London jury.⁵ So perjury committed at a trial at bar in Westminster-hall from Yorkshire must be tried by a Middlesex jury, although the cause be tried by a Yorkshire jury.⁶ But the judges held, that perjury committed in Gloucester, which is a county of itself, before a jury of the county at large, might be tried by a jury of the county.⁷ And so again, perjury committed at the Worcester quarter sessions, which are held in the county of the city of Worcester, was held rightly tried in the city.⁸

Time and place.] "There must," said Lord Mansfield, in R. v. Aylett, 1 T. R. 69, "be an allegation of time and place, which are sometimes material and necessary, and sometimes not." Where ¹ R. v. Philips and others, 2 Str. 921. See also R. v. Longbottom, 1 Barnard, 314. R. v. Macajah, 2 Barnard, 24.

² 5 B. & Ald. 937, note (a).

³ R. v. Harris, 5 B. & Ald. 926.

⁴ R. v. Maynard, 1 Ventr. 182.

⁵ R. v. Eliz. Canning, 2 Dougl. 794, cited. See 2 Dougl. 797.

⁶ Id.

⁷ R. v. Gough, 2 Dougl. 791.

⁸ R. v. Jones, 6 C. & P. 137.

it was stated that A. was arrested by L. after hearing a cause in chancery, to wit, on the 4th of August, Lord Mansfield held the indictment good; because, supposing the time material, it must have been proved at the hearing, and if not, it might be rejected, being laid under a videlicet.¹ If time be material, it may be proved though laid under a videlicet, and if immaterial, its being laid under a videlicet will not render it material.² If the indictment be founded upon perjury committed at the assizes or sittings, the offence may be laid on the first day of the assizes or sittings, or upon the day when the trial really took place.³ An indictment for perjury stated, that heretofore, to wit, on Monday, the 3rd day of December, in the 28th year, &c., a certain cause came on to be tried. By the nisi prius record it appeared, that the jury were respited until, &c., unless the justices, &c., should first come on Thursday, the 29th day of November, &c. It was objected, that here was a variance, for the cause must be taken to have been tried on the day mentioned in the nisi prius record. But Lord Kenyon overruled the objection, for the day being stated under a videlicet need not be proved exactly as laid.⁴ The allegation of place is no longer necessary.

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 20, the statement as to the court itself is sufficient.⁵

Oath of jury.] The allegation of the oath of the jury before whom the proceedings were heard is indispensable in cases of trial by jury. For want of this statement an indictment has been quashed.⁶

Thus, where an indictment alleged, amongst other things, that F. C. A. and others exhibited their bill in the exchequer against the defendant, it appeared upon the production of the bill itself, that J. C. A., &c., exhibited this bill, and it was submitted, that here was a variance. But Lord Ellenborough, said, that the question then before them, namely, whether F. C. A. did in reality exhibit his bill might be proved by other evidence than the production of the bill, although that certainly was the usual mode of proceeding. Had the indictment professed to set out the tenor of the bill, there would have been clearly a variance. The indictment further stated, that afterwards, to wit, on, &c., comes the said defendant in his own proper person, and exhibits and produces his answer to the aforesaid bill of complaint. This answer, upon producing it, appeared to be entitled, "The answer of R. R. to the bill of complaint of J. C. A.," &c. Upon this, the defendant's

¹ R. v. Aylett, 1 T. R. 63.

² Johnson v. Pickett, E. 25 Geo. 3, B. R. cited, 1 T. R. 68, in the above case.

³ Stark. C. Pl. 122. Per Abbott, C. J., 1819.

⁴ R. v. Payne, 9 East, 158, cited there.

⁵ R. v. Burton, Sty. 153. See

R. v. Deman, 2 Ld. R. 1221. R. v. Eden, 1 Esp. 98. R. v. Lincoln, Russ. & Ry. 421. R. v. Dowlin, 5 T. R. 311.

⁶ R. v. Hinton and Brown, 3 Mod. 122.

counsel again contended for an acquittal, because here was no proof of the allegation of an answer by the defendant to a bill of complaint by F. C. A. But Lord Ellenborough held, that there was nothing in this objection after the former decision. The defendant being found guilty, his counsel moved for a new trial. 1st, because the evidence had been improperly admitted, there being no averment that F. C. A. had exhibited his bill by the name of J. C. A. 2ndly, because, after all, there was a variance, inasmuch as the words "as appears by the record," had been introduced into the indictment, whereas, in fact, extrinsic evidence had been given to show that F. C. A. exhibited his bill, the record proving the direct contrary. But the court were against the motion, holding, that the evidence was admissible, and that the words, as appears by the record, referred to the last antecedent, and could not be incorporated with the prefatory allegation that F. C. A. exhibited his bill.¹ However, the court granted a rule to show cause on the ground that the answer, being improperly entitled, was a nullity, but this ultimately failed, the judges, on consideration, being of opinion that the answer could not be so treated.²

Again, an indictment alleged, that a bill of discovery was filed on the 1st day of December, 1807, but, on the production of the bill, it appeared to have been entitled generally of the preceding Michaelmas Term. The point was taken immediately as a variance, but Lord Ellenborough said, that as the day was not alleged as part of the record, it was sufficient to prove the bill filed on any other day.³

It was alleged, that a suit was depending, and that a commission was issued for the examination of witnesses, and that certain interrogatories were exhibited, and that it was averred, that upon the examination of the said defendant upon the said interrogatories, it became very material to ascertain the truth of the matters alleged to have been sworn to and stated by the said defendant upon his oath in answer to the said ninth interrogatory. The ninth interrogatory was set out. Whether this was a sufficient averment of materiality was not decided.⁴ An indictment stated, that an application had been made by the plaintiff to Lord Denman, C. J., and the other judges of the court, &c. Parke, B., said, that the application could only be made to the court, and ought to have been so stated. There is no jurisdiction.⁵

So, where an indictment stated a trial to have taken place before Sir J. Littledale, &c., but on producing the record, it was silent as to the name of the judge, and the postea stated the trial to have been before Sir C. Abbott, &c.; it was objected, that here was a variance. Sir J. Littledale, in fact, did try the cause. It was answered, that there was no reference to the record, and,

¹ R. v. Roper, 1 Stark. 518.

² 6 M. & S. 327.

³ R. v. Hucks, 1 Stark. 521.

⁴ R. v. Hewens, 9 C. & P. 786.

⁵ R. v. White, 2 Cox, C. C. 232.

therefore, that the name of the judge might be proved dehors. Lord Tenterden refused to stop the case upon this objection, but gave leave to move the point. The defendant, however, had a verdict.¹ And a difference between the nisi prius record and the indictment, as to the day of the trial, was also held immaterial.

So, where perjury was assigned in answer to a bill alleged to have been filed in a particular term, but the copy produced was of a bill amended in a subsequent term by order of the court, it was held to be no variance, the amended bill being part of the original bill.²

So, where the record of a trial had the words "of Westminster," instead of "at Westminster," it was held to be no variance, for the cause was, in fact, so tried, and no county was mentioned in the record.³ So, "within the jurisdiction of this court" was held sufficient, although another court had been referred to in the preceding paragraph, the venue being "Central Criminal Court."⁴

An indictment stated that an action was depending wherein H. K. was the plaintiff, and B. F. the defendant. The judgment when produced began thus—"B. F. sued by the name of L. F., was attached to answer H. K.," &c. Lord Ellenborough held that this was no variance, because, although the indictment did not, as in the judgment, give F. his full description, it gave him his true one.⁵

So, the description of a suit as pending between P. & M. instead of P. and M. the elder, was held not to be a variance.⁶ So W. the younger was named as the plaintiff in a county court in an indictment. The plaint showed the name of W. W. This was no variance. The indictment alleged that certain words were written by J. S. at the house of M. P., in the parish, &c., whereas, &c. The proof was, that the defendant swore that the words were written at the house of M. P., but that he did not describe the situation of the house, nor mention the parish. This was no variance.⁷

So, where the indictment, in setting out a petition, stated, that at several meetings before the commission (of bankrupt) the petitioner declared certain things, but upon the production of the petition it appeared that he had done so before the commissioners, it was considered to be no variance, for the word "commission" may be read as signifying either a trust, or persons invested with a trust.⁸ And by Abbott, C. J., "If the word commission, as there used, was intended to denote the commission itself, it would follow that the several meetings took place before any commission issued; but that is impossible, because in that case the

¹ R. v. Coppard, M. & M. 118; 3 C. & P. 59.

² R. v. Waller, 3 Stark. Ev. 856.

³ R. v. Israel, 3 Dow. & Ry. 234.

⁴ R. v. Satchell, 2 C. x, 137.

⁵ R. v. Windus, 1 Campb. 405, n.

⁶ R. v. Bailey, 7 C. & P. 264.

⁷ R. v. Withers, 4 Cox, 17.

⁸ R. v. Dudman, 4 B. & C. 850; petitioner could not have made his declaration in the hearing of the said assignee."¹

So, where the indictment charged the defendant with having sworn to certain facts, but the deposition being produced, turned out to be joint, his wife having sworn first to the matters in question, it was held, that there was no variance, because it was sufficient for the indictment to state the substance of the defendant's oath.²

The indictment stated that the defendant had sworn she had been in A.'s company from two till half-past four. The evidence was, that she said she had been in his company from eleven till half-past four. Park, J., doubted at first whether the allegation was supported, but upon conferring with Bolland, B., he thought it was.³ At the hearing of an information, it was sworn, that A. was on certain land on a particular Sunday morning. The defendant swore that A. lodged with him, and was not absent on any Sunday morning during the whole time he was his lodger, and that time included this Sunday morning. Pollock, C. B., ruled, that the defendant's attention should have been called to the particular Sunday morning, and that the general allegation was not sufficient.⁴

An assignment was, that the defendant had sworn he had paid all his debts but two. And a second, that certain creditors, naming them, had all been paid in full, besides the excepted two. With respect to this, it might be said, that the first assignment was too general, but if so, that the defendant should have demurred to it. Still it would not be fair, as names had been mentioned, for the prosecutor to go into evidence of the nonpayment of any other creditors than those named. Several creditors were called, who proved, each, the nonpayment of his own debt. It was held, that this, when done, would not warrant a conviction, and that as to the nonpayment of each debt, it was necessary to have the evidence of two witnesses, or of one witness, together with such corroborative testimony as would be equal to the testimony of a second witness.⁵

But where the indictment undertook to recite the record of a trial upon a feigned issue, a variance was committed in substance by alleging the affirmation to have been made by three, whereas it appeared on the record to have been made by four. But Holt, C. J., directed that the defendant should be indicted de novo.⁶

So, where the indictment stated that the defendant gave information that A., being a brewer, &c., did neglect, &c., but the information did not contain the words "being a brewer," the variance was held fatal.⁷

¹ 4 B. & C. 854.

² R. v. Grindall, 2 C. & P. 563.

³ Anon., 1 Lew. C. C. 271.

⁴ R. v. Stolady, 1 Fost. & F. 518.

⁵ R. v. Parker, Car. & M. 639.

⁶ The Queen v. Carter, Holt.

Ca. 347. R. v. Gardner, 9 East, 441, cited by Abbott, arg. and see 4 Burr. 2269.

⁷ R. v. Leesh, 2 Man. & Ry.

119.

So, where an issue was set out in an indictment as having been touching the forfeiture of certain goods, whereas, in fact, it only related to the possession and knowledge that such goods were run goods, it was held to be a fatal variance.¹

If the perjury have arisen in a reply to the evidence of a defendant who was acquitted at the trial, that acquittal need not be stated in the indictment, but secondary evidence of it may be given.²

An indictment reciting an information, stated that a certain issue came on to be tried. The evidence was, that the information contained two counts, and that the defendant had pleaded the general issue to each separately. Lord Kenyon held, that there was no variance. Had the indictment, indeed, said that the perjury was committed on the trial of two issues when there was but one, it would have been fatal.³

County.] It is necessary to allege some county where the false oath was taken. For want of this statement an indictment has been held insufficient.⁴ Error was brought to reverse an outlawry upon the 5 Eliz. for perjury. The defendant had been indicted by the name of N. L. in the parish of Aldgate, but the record did not show in what county Aldgate was. And it was allowed.⁵ Although it was urged, that as the word "Middlesex" was in the margin, the parish should refer thereto.⁶

County aforesaid.] Care must be taken not to refer to the wrong county. In indictments the word "aforesaid" is held to refer to the last antecedent, unless the sense hinders; in actions, to the county in the margin where the action is said to be laid.⁷

An information in Middlesex for subornation of perjury, stated that A., late of —, in the county of Surrey, impleaded B. for that, whereas, he was indebted to him in the parish of St. Clement Danes, in the county aforesaid, and that the cause was duly tried at the sittings in Middlesex. The defendant having been convicted, it was moved to arrest the judgment, because, according to the record, the cause had not been tried before a competent authority. And the objection was held good, inasmuch as the county aforesaid related to Surrey, whereas the parish of St. Clement Danes was in Middlesex, and the judgment was arrested.⁸

So, where an indictment for perjury found at the sessions in Norfolk, stated, that a fine was levied in the Court of Common Pleas at Westminster, in the county of Middlesex, and that the defendant perjured himself at Theed, in the county aforesaid, it was the

¹ R. v. Hawkins, Peake, N. P. C. 8.

² R. v. Browne, M. & M. 315; 3 C. & P. 572.

³ R. v. Jones, Peake, 37.

⁴ R. v. Thomas, Cro. Eliz. 137.

⁵ R. v. Leach, Cro. Jac. 167.

⁶ Cro. Jac. 167.

⁷ 2 Ld. R. 888; 3 Wils. 330.

⁸ The Queen v. Rhodes and Cole, Ld. Raym. 886.

opinion of the court, (although, in fact, they adjourned the case,) that it could not be supported.¹

The averment that the defendant was sworn is material. An indictment was discharged for want of a distinct and full statement that the party had been sworn.²

The authority.] Before the passing of 23 Geo. 2, c. 11, sufficient must have appeared on the record to have shown that the judge had authority, although an express averment was not required. As where it was alleged that the defendant had made a false oath before Master Page, one of the masters of the chancery, it was objected, that there was no mention of judicial proceedings, nor even that any such had been filed of record, and then as the master, merely as such, could not take an oath, that the charge was not sustained. And the court assented to the objection.³

So, again, upon an indictment for perjury, assigned in an affidavit made before Sir Robert Rich, it was objected, amongst other things, that it was not laid that Sir Robert Rich was a master in chancery, and the court allowed the difficulty, and quashed the indictment.⁴

So, under the Beer Act, 1 Will. 4, c. 64, s. 15, it was held necessary to aver that the justices were acting in and for the division or place where the house was situated, but not that the said justices were acting in petty sessions, inasmuch as every meeting of two justices for business is a petty sessions.⁵ And it seems that in such a case a written information would not be necessary.

Again, where a perjury was charged against the defendant for swearing that one A.B. had sworn several oaths before a justice, judgment was arrested for want of an allegation that the oath was sworn in the county for which the justice acted. The jurisdiction of the magistrate to administer the oath did not appear upon the record.⁶ But these objections seem to be cured by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 20.

In a county court case, the indictment stated that the petition was presented under and in pursuance of the several Acts of parliament. Perjury was assigned upon a statement made on oath duly administered on a proceeding upon such petition. "We must take it," said Lord Campbell, "that it was proved at the trial that the prisoner had resided within the district for six calendar months before the filing of his petition." The crown had judgment.⁷

Material to the issue.] It is usual and prudent to allege, where

¹ The Queen v. Gunn, 11 Mod. 66.

² R. v. Dinslow, Cro. Eliz. 105; 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 111.

³ R. v. Ruddy and Howel Gwinn, 16 Vin. Ab. 308, A. 6.

⁴ R. v. Bell, 3 Bulst. 322.

⁵ R. v. Rawlins, 8 C. & P. 439.

⁶ R. v. Wood, 2 Russ. C. M. 632.

⁷ Walker v. Regina (in error), 27 L. J. M. C. 43.

there is any colour at all for such a statement, that certain questions became, and were material, &c. Although (as we have seen) a conviction may be had at common law upon a collateral perjury, in which case it is better to say, that "certain matters then and there arose between the parties," &c.

But, if the proceeding be on the statute 5 Eliz., an allegation as to the materiality of the question becomes indispensable. As, where in a suit in chancery concerning a manor, the defendant swore that the deed of feoffment of the manor was delivered as an escrow. It was said, that the pleading was insufficient, without showing that this oath had reference to the manor in question. It was endeavoured to be answered to this, that the words "manerium prædictum innuendo" would cure the omission. But by the court: A man shall not be punished as a perjurer by an innuendo.¹

So, moreover, even at common law, if the materiality of the question be of the substance of the offence, such parts of the original proceedings must be set forth as will demonstrate that fact. Upon an indictment for perjury, it was attempted to be answered to an objection for want of an allegation of this sort, that the defendant could not have been found guilty unless the materiality had been established in evidence. But the judges declared that they could not take that by intendment or inference—it ought to have been expressly alleged.²

A statement that it became and was material to ascertain "the truth of the matter hereinafter alleged to have been sworn to and stated by the said J. G. upon his oath," is not a good averment of materiality.³ It was averred to be a material question, whether the price of a greyhound was given to the defendant before the 12th of September. The defendant swore that he bought the dog on the 6th of September, and had a receipt before the 12th. The question was, whether the sale of the animal was the only material issue, or whether the receipt and the date, the 12th of September, were also material. The judges held, that both the receipt and the date were material.⁴ Again, the defendant swore that he did not see H. L. at all on the 12th of August. It was averred, that it was material for the justice before whom the defendant appeared as a witness, to know whether this was the fact, i. e., whether the defendant did see H. L., but the indictment failed to add, that it was material in that matter before the justice, &c. Hence it might have been in some other matter at that time, and therefore the allegation was holden insufficient.⁵ Again, before the ¹ The Queen v. Bowles, Cro. Eliz. 428. S. C. cited, 1 Lord Raym. 260. R. v. Sharp, Cro. Car. 352. See also, R. v. Lane, Cro. Eliz. 148. R. v. Wallengen, 1 Sid. 106.

² R. v. M'Keron, 5 T. R. 316. Cor. Buller, J., cited there. S. P.

R. v. Bignold, 2 Russ. C. M. 639.

³ R. v. Goodfellow, Car. & M. 569.

⁴ R. v. Overton, Car. & M. 655.

⁵ R. v. Bartholomew, 1 Car. & K. 366.

coroner,—“It then and there became, upon the taking of the said inquisition, a material question whether A. B. had done the duty of W. P.” This was sufficient.¹ Where the defendant was charged with perjury for swearing that he had not retained the prosecutor nor his attorney, the fact of the retainer was held material in the case, and therefore properly so alleged.² And, in the same case, it was the opinion of the court, that although the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, requires a prior application from the client before the taxation can be proceeded with, yet that this fact need not appear upon the record. Sufficient had been alleged to show jurisdiction in the judge to grant the summons without that addition.³ If the word “month” in the indictment meant “lunar month,” the dates, though laid under a videlicet, might be taken to be the real dates, and thus it appeared that a calendar month, the time required by sect. 37 of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 73, had expired, before the application to refer the bill for taxation.⁴

Still, it seems unnecessary to aver the expiration of the calendar month, because if the summons had issued from a judge of one of the superior courts, it must be contended that he had power to issue a summons in the absence of proof to the contrary.⁵ In an action in the county court, the prisoner swore she had never been tried at the Old Bailey, and had never been in custody at the Thames Police station. This was held material.⁶ The question as to the materiality should be left to the jury.⁷ In a case of divorce, whether the defendant had gone by the name of A. or B. was deemed immaterial.⁸ E. S. had filed a bill against the defendant J. C. and others, and he prayed that the defendant might answer the premises, that the purchase of certain property belonging to the other defendants might be declared fraudulent and void. The indictment stated, that it then and there became a material question, whether J. C. did advise the other defendants that this property should be sold, and that the said J. C. falsely and corruptly swore, and in and by the said answer denied that he had so advised. This count was held bad, upon a motion in arrest of judgment. “Then and there” could not supply the words “in the said suit,” or words to that effect.⁹ So, where the charge was, that a woman had sworn a child to A., but had denied that A. had ever touched her clothes, her oath, that her master said, he would raise her wages and allow her to lie in at his house, if she would swear the child to some other than his nephew, was held not material.¹⁰

And now, by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 20, in every indictment for perjury, or subscribing by oath, &c., the substance alone of

¹ R. v. Kimpton, 2 Cox, 296.

² Ryalls v. Reg. 17 L. J. M. C. 92. Affirmed in error, 18 L. J. M. C. 69. After verdict, the dates might be regarded as surplusage in order to support the indictment. 11 Q. B. 781.

³ S. C.

⁴ S. C.

⁵ S. C.

⁶ R. v. Lavey, 3 Car. & K. 26.

⁷ S. C.

⁸ R. v. Worley, 3 Cox, 535.

⁹ R. v. Cutts, 4 Cox, 435.

¹⁰ R. v. Owen, 6 Cox, 105. R. v. Goddard, 2 Fost. & F. 361.

offence needs to be set forth, and by what court the oath was taken, without stating either commission or authority.

A statement that J. K. was in due form of law tried upon a certain indictment then and there depending against him for murder, and that, at and upon the said trial it then and there became and was made a material question, whether, &c., was deemed sufficient, with the aid of the 23 Geo. 2, to show that the perjury was committed on the trial of J. K., for murder, and that the question on which the perjury was assigned was material on that trial.¹ The means by which a murder has been committed need not be set out in an indictment for perjury.²

Further, the judge will discharge the jury if the averment of materiality be omitted.³ Should the materiality, however, appear on the record without an averment to that effect, it seems to be sufficient, according to an intimation which once fell from Abbott, C. J., in a case where the defendant was convicted.⁴ Under the words "such issue" a charge is sustained, although there are several issues, the perjury assigned being material.⁵

It is observable, however, that the judges themselves interfere upon these occasions, and that counsel ought not to insist upon the invalidity of an indictment in so summary a manner, unless, indeed, it may be to suggest a point upon which there can be no doubt.⁶ In the case just referred to, Lord Tenterden thought the indictment good, notwithstanding the interference of counsel before the trial, and there was a verdict for the crown. It was stated, that issue was joined in a cause of Jacob v. Abraham, and the cause set down for trial, and appointed for a particular day; and that the defendant in that cause, before that day, made an affidavit before Lord Tenterden, C. J., in which he stated that he had a good defence to the action, which he would be able to prove at the trial, and that some of the bills on which it was brought were void for usury, and perjury was then assigned on these allegations. Lord Tenterden thought that the occasion on which the affidavit was intended to be used might be sufficiently collected from the indictment.⁷

The matter—whether, &c.] The main facts of the indictment now begin. First, the question between the parties. This must be accurately stated. To omit it altogether after stating that a question had arisen would make the indictment felo de se. As where upon a charge of a false oath in the star chamber, there was a neglect to show in what matter the defendant had sworn falsely. He was discharged.⁸

¹ R. v. Dowlin, 5 T. R. 311, 318.

² R. v. Lincoln, Russ. & Ry. Rob. 7. 421.

³ R. v. Tremearne, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 147. R. v. Dunn, 1 D. & Ry. 10.

⁴ R. v. Souter, 2 Stark. 423. So was R. v. Harvey, 8 Cox, 99.

⁵ R. v. Smith, 1 Fost. & F. 98.

⁶ R. v. Abraham, 1 Moo. &

⁷ Id.

⁸ R. v. Stedman, Cro. Eliz. 137. S. P. R. v. Lane, Id. 148. S. P.

Poultney v. Wilkinson, Id. 907; 3 Mod. 122.

So, again, in a more recent case, a count alleged that at the trial of the said indictment, the said J. H. by means of the false and material testimony of the said J. P. in the said first count of this inquisition mentioned, was unlawfully and untruly found guilty, that a rule nisi for a new trial was granted, &c., and that thereupon J. S. made an affidavit in writing that what he had sworn at the trial was true; whereas, &c., it was false in the particulars in the said first count of this inquisition assigned and set forth, &c. The defendant having been found guilty, and the judges having intimated that the first count was bad for want of the words, wilfully or corruptly, it was argued, that the count above alluded to was also ineffective, because it contained no assignment of perjury, nor any particular evidence given by the defendant, nor even directly stated that he gave any evidence on the trial with reference to which the affidavit is stated to have been afterwards made. The court concurred in the objection, and arrested the judgment.¹ And by Abbott, C. J., "in the ordinary course of pleading, the first step would have been to charge that there had been a trial, and that the defendant was sworn as a witness; the second, that he swore such and such things; the third, that the matter was false and so on. Here there is no distinct averment that the defendant was sworn as a witness, or of what he swore. But the fact of his having been sworn must be taken by intendment."²

So, where an indictment accused the defendant of having sworn to a false schedule of his effects in the Insolvent Debtors' Court, whereas the said schedule did not contain a full, true, and particular account, &c., the lord chief justice ordered the case to be struck out of the list before all the jury had been sworn, for here were allegations absolutely vague and indefinite; no debt was specified as having been omitted, and, therefore, no information was afforded to the defendant of the particular charges against him.³

But where the prisoner swore falsely to the signing of a particular receipt, and it appeared that the person whose receipt was pretended had signed several similar receipts in the prisoner's presence, the proof was held sufficient. Cockburn, C. J., at first doubted, but afterwards said, that it was only necessary to refer to the receipts incidentally, and as introductory to making out the materiality of the evidence upon which the perjury was assigned.⁴

So, upon a charge of perjury, committed before justices, the indictment stated that the defendant, with a view to injure A. by accusing him of felony, did depose and swear, that A. had put his hand into the defendant's pocket, and had taken out a 5*l.* note;

¹ R. v. Stevens, 5 B. & C. 246.

² 5 B. & C. 250.

³ R. v. Hepper, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 210; 1 C. & P. 608. See also 3 Inst. 167.

⁴ R. v. Webster, Bell, 154; 28

L. J. M. C. 200; 1 Fost. & F. 515.

R. v. Hepper was cited for the prisoner.

it was held that the assignment of perjury upon this could not be sustained. No charge of felony appeared to have been previously made, nor that the defendant then made any charge of felony, nor that any judicial proceeding was pending before the magistrate.¹ Whereas an assignment of perjury, which stated the false oath to have been made upon an information and examination, clearly showed that a charge was pending, and upon such an occasion, Patteson, J., distinguished R. v. Pearson upon this ground. The judges likewise held the conviction correct.²

No prudent practitioner would hesitate to adopt the words, "falsely, wilfully, corruptly, and maliciously." But indictments without those most material words "falsely and corruptly," have occasionally been placed on the record. As in an information upon the statute, where the defendant was charged with having committed voluntarium perjuriam. Per Shute, J.: "This is not enough; it should be corrupté et voluntarié."³ On the other hand, falsé et corruptivé were held insufficient without voluntarié.⁴ Both expressions must be used,⁵ at all events, in an indictment upon the statute; and it would not be safe, perhaps, at this day, to omit them in an indictment at common law, notwithstanding the authority of Cox's case. Upon this last occasion, the words "falsely, maliciously, wickedly, and corruptly" were used, and the charge was at common law. It was moved to arrest the judgment for want of the word "wilfully;" but ten judges met, and were of opinion, that the record was sufficient at common law, because the expressions used implied wilful perjury.⁶ It follows from the foregoing decisions, that should both "wilfully and corruptly" be omitted, the count must necessarily be bad. And in a modern case, the judgment was arrested upon that ground.⁷ "Whether the word 'maliciously'" said Abbott, C. J., "might supply the place of either wilfully or corruptly, it is not necessary to determine, for neither of those words are found in the counts in question, and Cox's case, which has been referred to, proves, at all events, that such counts are insufficient."⁸

It is observable here, that these expressions are twice used, once in this place and again at the conclusion. It is indispensable to employ them in both places.⁹ And the clause, "so the defendant committed," &c., at the end, will not help a former omission.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Pearson, 8 C. & P. 119. S. C. nom. R. v. Richards, 7 D. &

² R. v. Gardiner, 2 Moo. C. C. R. 665.
95; S. C. 8 C. & P. 737.

³ Sav. 43.

⁴ R. v. Lembro and Hamper,
Cro. El. 147. Kitton v. Walters,
Hatl. 12.

⁵ Cro. Jac. 508; 2 Hawk. c. 25,
s. 110.

⁶ R. v. Cox, Leach, 71.

⁷ R. v. Stevens, 5 B. & C. 246.

⁸ 5 B. & C. 250.

⁹ R. v. Thomas, Cro. El. 137.

¹⁰ 3 Inst. 167; Mich. 29 & 30
Eliz.; S. P. 27 El. R. v. Meller,
Id.; S. P. Anon., Cro. El. 201, said to be R. v. Somerland. 16
Vin. Ab. 321, l. 2, in the notes.
See also R. v. Tayler, 1 Show.
190.

Upon another occasion "falsely" was omitted. The count was "feloniously, knowingly, wilfully, and maliciously;" "and so in like manner and form did commit wilful and corrupt perjury." It was held bad.¹

For want of these words "by his proper act," an indictment upon the statute has been holden bad, because both perjury and subornation being mentioned in 5 Eliz., it is necessary that the nature of the perjury should be specified.²

Assignments.] Very considerable accuracy is required in setting forth the assignments. The matters deposed to must be stated in the first instance, and the truth of all these matters must then be negatived. The expression, "in substance and to the effect following" is better than "according to the tenor and effect," because it does not bind the prosecutor to such a verbal minuteness, and it is, therefore, to be preferred. In either case the courts will not suffer a defendant to escape by a mere clerical error. As where the word "understood" in an affidavit was spelt "undertood."³ So, where the indictment had the abbreviations "Mr. and Mrs.," instead of "Mister and Mistress," which words the defendant used.⁴ Or, the words "in manner and form following" may be used. These do not bind the prosecutor to recite instruments verbatim, and, consequently, are not affected by mere omissions and mistakes. The defendant was indicted for perjury in giving his evidence upon an indictment for an assault. This indictment had the words, "whereby his life was greatly despaired of." The indictment for perjury, speaking of the former charge, had these expressions:—"which indictment was presented in manner and form following, that is to say," but it omitted the word "despaired." It was objected hereupon, that the prosecution must fail. Buller, J., however, overruled the objection, observing that this mistake was a mere matter of form, and a substantial recital only was requisite. A rule to show cause why there should not be a new trial was afterwards granted, but it was dropped.⁵

The false oath alleged was, that the defendant "wrote certain words in the presence of D." Now, the presence of D. might be a fact as material as the writing of the words, and, therefore, the assignment above was said to have been well made, and the court would not inquire into the materiality of it.⁶

The rule, nevertheless, extends only to formal omissions or clerical errors. An indictment for perjury before a select committee of the House of Commons concluded the assignments of ¹ R. v. Oxley, 3 Car. & K. 317.

² 3 Inst. 167; but see Cockeril v. Apthorp, 3 Bulst. 147; 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 18.

³ R. v. Beach, Cowp. 229; S. C. Leach, 133.

⁴ R. v. Coppard, 3 C. & P. 59.

⁵ R. v. May, Dougl. 193; Leach, 192.

⁶ R. v. Schlesinger, 17 L. J. M. C. 29; 10 Q. B. 670.

perjury, which were numerous, thus: "whereas, in truth and in fact, the said E. L. did not tell the said J. L. that his lordship had given his assurance that it should be so, or that the said expenses should be secured; and so," &c. The short hand-writer swore that his note upon this matter was, that his "lordship had given his assurance," without more. It was immediately contended, that there was a material variance, for that the representation of the defendant before the committee was substantially different from that attributed to him in the indictment, and Lord Ellenborough entertained the same view of the case. A person giving his assurance generally, and giving his assurance for the performance of a particular stipulation, are allowed to be entirely different; and if a man swear falsely to several material questions, these may be included in distinct counts. The learned lord was decidedly in favour of the defendant.¹

It is no objection that intervening expressions have been left out which do not concern the point. As where an indictment charged the defendant with having sworn to an assault, and with denying that he had said, "Give it him, give it him—it will go in one account." Upon the evidence, these words were proved; but it appeared that other matter had intervened between the statement of the assault and the words in question, and it was objected that here was a variance. But by Abbott, C. J., "it is immaterial; what intervenes does not vary the effect of what is stated."² It was alleged in an assignment of perjury, that the defendant, at the time of effecting the said policy, that is to say, a certain policy of insurance, purporting to have been underwritten by — Kite, by his agent, Meyer, on the 13th of August, 1807, &c., (and by other underwriters specified in the indictment,) well knew, &c. It appeared, however, that the policy had been underwritten by Meyer for Kite on the 15th of August, and Lord Ellenborough held the variance fatal.³ So where it was alleged, that the defendant swore to a particular fact on the day of the date of a particular memorandum, and of making a certain bill of exchange, without averring that these days were the same days. The assignment of perjury was, that this fact did not happen on the day of the date of the memorandum, and the indictment was held bad for uncertainty.⁴ Perjury was assigned on the fact sworn to have been committed at Norwich, and it was averred that the fact was not committed at the said city of Norwich. This was holden to be a variance.⁵

Innuendo.] We have already said that no innuendo shall be allowed to operate against defendants by attempting to explain

¹ R. v. Leefe, Gent. one, &c. Callanan, 6 B. & C. 102; S. C. 2 Campb. 134. ² R. v. Solomon, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 252. And see R. v.

³ R. v. Hucks, 1 Stark. 521.

⁴ R. v. Burraston, 4 Jur. 697.

⁵ R. v. Stone, 1 Show. 335.

facts which are obscurely alleged. It was charged that the defendant had deposed this: Master G. S., about the middle of July, 1681, was at Newnam, and the information then went on to show where Newnam was, but only in the innuendo. And judgment was arrested for this cause, after several arguments.¹ The use of the innuendo is to explain mistakes or ambiguities. An indictment, after assigning perjury concerning an assault, added, "and at the same time threatened to shoot her with a pistol." The information, however, when produced from the Bow Street office had the words "and at the same threatened to shoot her," &c. It was contended that the word time being left out, here was a fatal variance, and Lord Ellenborough acceded to the objection. There should have been an innuendo, for the information might have meant at the same place. The defendant was acquitted.²

If there be no occasion for an innuendo, it may be rejected.³

Lastly, it may be added, that if there be but one good assignment, it is sufficient to warrant a judgment for the crown. This was laid down positively by Holt, C. J., in a case where a general verdict had passed for the crown.⁴ And the usual ending, that so the defendant has committed perjury, must be preserved.⁵ Of course, care must be taken not to say, "against the form," &c., if the thing charged be only a perjury at common law.⁶

Information.] An information at common law is said not to require so much certainty as an indictment, whether the latter be at common law or on the statute. Thus, where the information was for perjury upon interrogatories administered in chancery, it was objected, that it had not been shown in what particular one the defendant had been perjured. But the court overruled the objection, saying, that each perjury was punishable by the common law, although they admitted that greater certainty was requisite under the statute.⁷ And an indictment at common law demands the same certainty as the statute of Eliz.⁸ It is observable, that the judge at the trial is to notice a variance between the information and the record, and that it is not by any means the province of the jury to do so. As where a matter of this sort had been permitted to be found specially, the court said, that the jury could not have any conusance on the subject. The judge at the trial

¹ R. v. Gripe, 1 Lord Raym. 256. R. v. Chedwicke, 1 Keb. 612, 635.

² R. v. Taylor, 1 Campb. 404.

³ In R. v. Aylett, 1 T. R. 70. In Roberts v. Camden, 9 East, 93.

⁴ The Queen v. Rhodes and Cole, 2 Ld. Raym. 886.

⁵ R. v. Read, Tho. Raym. 34. Sid. 66.

⁶ R. v. Bell, 3 Bulstr. 322. As to the effect of the word "knowing," as knowing the matters sworn to be false. See R. v. Lady Lawley, 1 Barnard, 263, 274, 287, 293, 459.

⁷ R. v. Wallengen, 1 Sid. 106.

⁸ Carth. 422, per Holt, C. J.

ought to have determined it. A venire de novo was accordingly awarded.¹

Indictment.—County Court.] An indictment for perjury in the county court, committed by a party examined as a witness on his own behalf, needs not to conclude, contra formam statuti. Martin, B., said it was perjury at common law.² With regard to the bill, it may be observed, in the first place, that an objection that the indictment had stated the bill to have been directed to Robert Lord Henley, &c., whereas in fact it was directed to Sir Robert Henley, Knight, &c., was overruled in R. v. Lookup.³

Answer in Chancery.] The statute 23 Geo. 2, operated to prevent a variance in consequence of a misdescription of the parties to a bill. An indictment stated, that a bill was filed in chancery by one T. against the defendant and another. The bill appeared to have been filed against these persons and the attorney-general. The matters, which were material, lay between the defendant and T. It was objected, that the omission of the attorney had created a fatal variance, but Lord Ellenborough said, that it would have been sufficient if the indictment had even omitted the mention of any other than the defendant. The statute would be entirely defeated should such subtleties prevail.⁴ But in a case where the indictment purported to set out the substance and effect of the bill, and stated an agreement concerning houses, Abbott, C. J., held that the word "house," which appeared in the original bill, disclosed a fatal variance, being a difference in substance from houses, and the defendant was acquitted.⁵

If an answer be imperfectly entitled, it cannot be treated as a mere nullity. An answer was alleged in the indictment as an answer to the bill of J. C. Aberdeen, whereas the person's name was F. C. Aberdeen. The court having decided that the variance between J. C. A. and F. C. A. was not fatal, held also, that the answer above entitled could not be deemed void.⁶

Affidavit to hold to bail.] As to venue:—If an affidavit be assigned as the perjury in answer to an original application in any court, there is no need to show where that court was, there being a venue as to the false oath.⁷

A bill of Middlesex was described wrongly on one occasion, as issuing out of the office of the chief clerk assigned to inrol pleas, &c., and the court refused to consider these words as surplusage, upon which the prosecution was abandoned.⁸

¹ Rex v. Sykes, Tho. Raym. 202. That a party shall not take advantage of errors in the first record, when perjury is assigned upon matters sworn at a trial. See R. v. Wright, 1 Sid. 148; Tho. Raym. 74.

² R. v. Morgan, 6 Cox, 107.

³ Cited, 1 T. R. 240.

⁴ R. v. Benson, 2 Campb. 509. R. v. Powell, cor. Abbott, C. J.; Ry. & M., N. P. C. 101.

⁵ R. v. Spencer, Ry. & M. N. P. C. 97.

⁶ R. v. Roper, 1 Stark. 518.

⁷ R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

⁸ R. v. Schoole, Peake, 112.

If the affidavit be sworn in the country, the expression usually is, "Before E. F., gentleman, then being a commissioner duly authorized and empowered to take and receive affidavits touching and concerning matters and proceedings of or in the court of our said lord the king, before the king himself, to wit, on. &c., at, &c." An indictment charged, that the affidavit was sworn before A. without naming him as a commissioner otherwise than saying at some distance as such commissioner as aforesaid, when the word commissioner had not been before used, and Scarlett moved to arrest the judgment. But the court held that it was not necessary to set out the nature of the authority. It had been alleged that A. had power to administer the oath, and that, together with his name, was sufficient.¹

It is usual to add the words prout patet, and in indictments upon the statute of Eliz. they are necessary, but it has been solemnly decided, that the omission of the prout patet at common law will not vitiate the indictment.²

On the production of an affidavit charged to be false in the indictment, it appeared that the parts set forth were not continuous, but that they were separated by the introduction of other matter. This was pointed out as a variance; but Abbott, C. J., overruled the objection, and the court refused a rule for a new trial.³

The defendant was indicted in Middlesex for perjury committed in an affidavit, and the indictment concluded with a prout patet by the affidavit, as filed at Westminster. He was acquitted, but was again indicted for the same offence, with this difference, that the affidavit was here stated to have been sworn in London, and there was an averment traversing the jurat, and alleging that the defendant was, in fact, sworn in Middlesex. To this charge the defendant pleaded autrefois acquit, and the court gave judgment in his favour, because the jurat was not conclusive evidence of the place of swearing the affidavit, and the whole crime might, consequently, have been tried upon the first indictment.⁴

Indictment for subornation of perjury.] Where the words were, "by sinister means," caused, &c., the court held the allegation sufficient, although the means were not specified.⁵ The words "solicit, persuade," &c., imply that the oath was actually taken, and this is necessary, because there cannot be a subornation without a perjury.⁶ But the attempt to suborn is a heinous offence, and will be severely punished by the court.⁷

Where the indictment charged the defendants and each of them, with a suborning of four witnesses, and each of them, it was objected, that here were several charges joined in one indictment,

¹ R. v. Callanan, 6 B. & C. 102.

² R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

³ R. v. Callanan, 6 B. & C. 102; and see R. v. Solomon, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 252.

⁴ R. v. Emden, 9 East, 437.

⁵ The Queen v. Rhodes and Cole, 2 Ld. Raym. 886.

⁶ 2 Ld. Raym. 886, ut supra. R. v. Hinton & Brown, 3 Mod. 122; The Queen v. Darby, 7 Mod. 101.

⁷ R. v. Johnson, 2 Show. 2. R. v. Tayler and another, 2 Keb. 399.

and likewise, that it was too general to swear that one H. and his brother had committed perjury. The court made a rule to show cause.¹

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 21, in every indictment for subornation of perjury, or for corrupt bargaining, &c., or inciting, &c., unlawfully, wilfully, falsely, fraudulently, deceitfully, maliciously, or corruptly to take, &c., any oath, affirmation, &c., it shall be sufficient when the perjury has been committed, to allege the offence as above, and then to allege that the defendant unlawfully, wilfully, and corruptly, did cause and procure, &c. And when no perjury has been committed, the substance of the offence will suffice without setting forth any of the matters hereinbefore rendered unnecessary to be set forth. And by sect. 22, a certificate containing the substance and effect of the indictment and trial, and signed by the clerk of the court, &c., shall be sufficient evidence of such indictment.

Indictment for perjury before a committee of the House of Commons.] In an indictment for perjury before a committee appointed to try a petition concerning the borough of New Malton, a count stated, that an election took place "by virtue of a certain precept of the high sheriff of the county aforesaid, duly issued to the bailiff of the said borough of New Malton," &c.² The precept of the sheriff being produced at the trial, it appeared to be directed, "To the bailiff of the borough of Malton." Upon this it was objected, that the precept in the indictment being concerning New Malton, there was a variance. But Lord Ellenborough held, that it was not matter of description, and that if the precept was actually issued to the bailiff of the borough of New Malton, it was sufficient, whatever might be the tenor of the direction.³ But the return to the Crown Office stated, that the members, naming them, were returned for the borough of Malton, and the objection was renewed with effect. It was insisted for the prosecution, that the indictment did not profess to set out the tenor of the return, or the manner in which the members were returned, and that the words Malton and New Malton, were used indiscriminately in the journals of the House of Commons. But Lord Ellenborough said, that this averment must be understood as a description of something, and the defendant was accordingly acquitted for this variance.⁴

Indictment for perjury before a magistrate.] The indictment for perjury before a magistrate should state, that the offence was committed upon an information and examination. The words "say, depose, swear, charge," and "give the said justice to be

¹ R. v. Longbotom and another, 1 Barnard. 314; and Giles v. Gwyn was cited, and it was said the indictment there was held bad for the first exception.

² But it is better to say, that an election "came on," &c., without mentioning the precept.

³ R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb. 139.

⁴ R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb. 141. See also R. v. Harris, 5 B. & Ald. 926.

informed," were deemed applicable.¹ On the contrary, where it did not appear that a charge was made or pending, the indictment was held insufficient.² If the perjury be committed at quarter sessions, the chairman is not a competent witness.³

So, to allege, that before M. G., Esq., and T. H. H., clerk, two of the justices, &c., "J. O. came and exhibited a certain information upon oath," was held insufficient, because it did not thereby appear that J. O. was sworn before M. G. and T. H. H.⁴ So, where a deposition is required by statute (as under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 9,) the absence of such deposition will render the proceedings informal, and a witness for the defendants, who was said to have sworn falsely before the justices, was held not rightly convicted of perjury.⁵

Commissioners of assessed taxes.] The indictment alleged a certain notice of appeal to the assessors. The evidence disclosed a notice of appeal to the surveyors of the commission. This was a fatal mistake, because it is necessary to set out all particulars incident to the jurisdiction.⁶

Of evidence in perjury.] It is said that a party may be punished instantly by the court on the evidence, as it were, of his own confession, in facie curiæ. Thus, where a party having sworn to an affidavit in the Court of Common Pleas, appeared in the King's Bench upon a summons, and confessed the falsity of his oath, the court ordered that he should be set in the pillory.⁷ So, bail who prevaricate, may be committed and punished, if the court see fit.⁸

It is important to observe, that throughout all the proceedings for different perjuries, the oath charged against the defendant must be proved to have been deliberately false to the satisfaction of the jury. Mistake, error, inadvertence, are not sufficient grounds for preferring so grave a complaint as perjury.⁹ If a defendant have uttered two contradictory statements upon oath, the course is to point out specifically in the indictment which of the oaths was corrupt, and then to give evidence of the testimony thus given in two ways. This proof will be sufficient without the form of two witnesses, as on other occasions of perjury, and also without showing a corrupt motive, or negating the probability of any mistake. Because, in fact, in such a case the contradiction actually arises on the side of the defendant himself.¹⁰

Witnesses.] The principal observations, however, which we have to make on the general head of evidence apply to witnesses. These

¹ R. v. Gardiner, 2 Moo. C. C. 95; 8 C. & P. 737.

² R. v. Pearson, 8 C. & P. 119.

³ R. v. Gazard, 8 C. & P. 595.

⁴ R. v. Goodfellow, Car. & M. 569.

⁵ R. v. Scotton, 8 Jur. 409.

⁶ Rex. v.—1 Cox, C. C. 50.

⁷ R. v. Thorogood, 8 Mod. 179.

⁸ 1 Chit. Rep. 116.

⁹ See 2 Hawk. c. 69, s. 2, citing authorities; and see also s. 7.

¹⁰ R. v. Knill, 5 B. & A. 923, n. As to averment of identity, see R. v. Bennett, Den. & P. 290.

persons may be considered here in reference,—first, to their number,—secondly, to their competency.

First, it used to be established as a general principle, that two witnesses or proof were necessary to convict a defendant of perjury, and for this simple reason, that there must be a majority of oaths against the accused. Thus, by Parker, C. J., “presumption is ever to be made in favour of innocence, and the oath of the party will have a regard paid to it until disproved. Therefore, to convict a man of perjury, a probable, a credible witness is not enough; but it must be a strong and clear evidence, and more numerous than the evidence given for the defendant, for else there is only oath against oath.”¹ And the court at the Old Bailey laid down this point still more decidedly on one occasion, observing that this must be so upon each assignment of perjury. The law, they said, will not leave it to the jury to determine which oath they will believe, because the person indicted for perjury has already sworn one way.² So, that if there be but oath against oath, the defendant must be acquitted.³ There is an exception, however, to this rule, and it is where the defendant has created evidence against himself. A person named Knill, was convicted of having sworn contradictory oaths, the one before the House of Lords, the other before a committee of the House of Commons. One witness only deposed to the contradictions, yet the court denied a rule nisi for a new trial, because the contradiction had happened through the party’s own agency.⁴ So, where there was one viva voce witness against the defendant, and a document written by himself contradicting his own statement upon oath.⁵ Moreover, two witnesses are not essentially necessary to disprove the fact which has been sworn to, for if a material circumstance be proved by another witness, it may turn the scale, and warrant a conviction.⁶

So, where the defendant swore that certain invoices were produced by him, D. C., C. was the only witness, and he denied the statement, adding, that the defendant had produced other invoices of the dates of which he made a memorandum. This was held

¹ 10 Mod. 194. S. P. R. v. Broughton, 2 Str. 1230. S. P. R. v. Naylock, Suppl. to Vin. Ab. vol. 5, p. 379, K. 3, O. B. 1786. R. v. Browne, M. & M. 318; 3 C. & P. 572. See 2 Lew. C. C. 259.

² R. v. Ledwick, Suppl. to Vin. ut supra, p. 380, O. B. 1788.

³ R. v. Fanshaw, Skin. 327.

⁴ R. v. Knill, 5 B. & A. 929; ante.

⁵ R. v. Mayhew, 6 C. & P. 315.

⁶ R. v. Lee, 2 Russ. C. M. 650. See also R. v. Mudie, 1 Moo. & Rob. 128. The defendant’s account book, given in by him to the Insolvent Debtors’ Court, was put in, and several persons whose names were specified in the indictment as debtors, and omitted in the schedule, appeared in the book as debtors to the defendant, and “paid” was marked to their accounts in the defendant’s writing. These persons were called, and stated that they did not pay until after the petition and schedule. It was objected, that here was merely oath against oath, and Lord Tenterden, though he would not stop the case, thought the point worthy of discussion. The defendant, however, was acquitted upon another ground.

corroborative evidence.¹ And the ruling now is, that every part need not be doubly sworn to. It was sworn by the defendant, that A. was not out of his sight between eight and nine A.M. Assignment upon this, one witness proved, that A. was, in fact, at one place, and another witness proved that A. was, in fact, at another place six miles off between those hours. This was held sufficient.² But where the indictment alleged that the defendant swore that he did not play at cards from between six and seven until nine, and then assigned perjury, by an averment that he did play between six and eight, it was held bad. The defendant might have played at five minutes past six, and yet not have played from between six and seven until nine, for the words "from between six and seven" might be any time short of seven, five minutes or five seconds to that hour.³ The prosecutor swore that the prisoner owed him a quarter's rent; the prisoner denied this upon oath at nisi prius, in June, 1851. The son of the prosecutor swore to an admission by the prisoner, that in August, 1850, he owed three or four quarters' rent. This was held insufficient, for the money might have been paid immediately.⁴ Something must be shown likewise to prove that the oath of the prosecutor is preferable to that of the defendant, upon which perjury has been assigned.⁵

If a defendant makes distinct admissions inconsistent with his innocence, one may be proved by one witness and one by another.⁶ And upon one occasion the defendant was allowed to convict himself without any further proof. As where the question was concerning the presence of certain women at a riot at his mill. He gave information upon oath before a justice, that they were so present, and then, having been tampered with, he swore at the trial that they were not at the riot; and Yates, J., deemed this evidence of itself sufficient, and the defendant was convicted upon it alone, and transported.⁷ However, this case does not seem to have been presented to the notice of a learned judge upon a much more modern inquiry. A witness at sessions contradicted the entire of his deposition before the magistrate, and perjury was assigned accordingly. Gurney, B., held this proof insufficient. In order to convict the defendant, the jury ought to have been satisfied either that the testimony given at the sessions was false according to the charge, or that the deposition was true.⁸ A fortiori if the evidence is only confirmed in some slight particulars, it will

¹ R. v. Webster, 1 Fost. & F. 515.

² R. v. Roberts, 2 Car. & K. 607.

³ R. v. Whitehouse, 3 Cox, 86.

⁴ R. v. Boulter, Den. & P. 396; 3 Car. & K. 236; 21 L. J. M. C. 57.

⁵ S. C.

⁶ R. v. Hook, 27 L. J. M. C. 222; Dears. & B. 606.

⁷ Anon., 2 Russ. C. M. 652. And in this opinion Lord Mansfield, Wilmot and Aston, JJ., concurred. Id. note (u); one oath being said to disprove the other. Id. 545.

⁸ R. v. Wheatland, 8 C. & P. 238.

be insufficient.¹ So where there was the contradictory oath of the prosecutor, but nothing more, excepting the oath of a woman, who counted certain monies agreeably to the evidence of the prosecutor, but whose evidence was not independent of that evidence.² Something more than the oath of one witness will suffice, but it must be independent testimony.³ There needs not be a direct contradiction.⁴

Secondly, we go on to examine the competency of witnesses in perjury,⁵ but many of the following cases are scarcely now applicable by reason of the Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

Where an action had been brought by B. against C., it was held, that C. could not be examined as a witness upon an indictment for perjury against A., who had given evidence at the trial.⁶ And Mr. Noland in a note to Strange, expresses the same opinion, taking a distinction between cases at common law and those upon the statute.⁷ But, on the other hand, Mr. Phillipps observes, that the party injured may be a witness, according to the sense of modern decisions, whether the prosecution be at common law or upon the statute, since, as in an action to recover his moiety, he would be precluded from giving the conviction in evidence, the objection to his competency would seem to be removed.⁸ However, at common law, it was considered, that the party injured might be a witness,⁹ and so it continued to be held, until a notion prevailed that the witness would reap some advantage from the conviction, for instance, that the Court of Chancery would relieve against the consequences of a judgment obtained by perjury. Thus it was said, that in perjury, a person should not be received to give evidence as prosecutor, because he might reap a benefit in case of a verdict for the king.¹⁰ The same law was afterwards laid down where certain defendants in an ejectment were refused as witnesses by the lord chief justice, in an indictment for perjury committed upon the previous trial.¹¹

So, a party who had been compelled to pay a sum of money through the evidence of the defendant, the only witness examined, and who had filed a bill for relief, was rejected, for the Court of Chancery, said Lord Kenyon, upon having this new matter stated in a new or supplemental bill, would direct that the money should be refunded.¹²

So, where a verdict had passed against the prosecutor in consequence of the testimony of the defendant in perjury, Lord Kenyon

¹ R. v. Yates, Car. & M. 132.

² R. v. Braithwaite, 8 Cox, 254, 444.

³ S. C.

⁴ R. v. Towey, 8 Cox, 328.

⁵ R. v. Povey, Lambert, and others, 1 Sid. 237.

⁶ R. v. Bacon, 2 Ro. Ab. 697. See Bull. N. P. 288, et seq.

⁷ 2 Str. 1104, note (1); S. P.

by Sir. W. D. Evans, 1 Salk. 283, note (a).

⁸ Phil. on Ev. 4th ed. p. 120.

⁹ Bull. N. P. 289.

¹⁰ R. v. Whiting, 1 Salk. 283;

1 Ld. Raym. 396.

¹¹ R. v. Ellis, 2 Str. 1104. S. P.

R. v. Newens, 4 Geo. 1, cited there.

R. v. Nunez, 2 Str. 1043. Cas.

T. H. 265.

¹² R. v. Dalby, Peake, 16.

would not suffer the prosecutor to be sworn, he having admitted that he had not paid the debt and costs. It was said, that the bail had been fixed, and would, therefore, be liable at all events, but Lord Kenyon said, that the prosecutor might be relieved in a court of equity against a judgment obtained on the sole evidence of the defendant, in case of a conviction, and the proposed witness was, consequently, rejected.¹

These decisions, however, were at length doubted, and afterwards overturned after considerable discussion. Lord Hardwicke first threw out a hint that R. v. Whiting, upon which the other cases followed, was a case in which the credit, rather than the competency, of the witness was at stake,² and in a few years afterwards, a decision was made the other way. There was an indictment against a defendant for a fraudulent oath supposed to have been taken in chancery, and the prosecutor tendered himself for the purpose of being examined. The chief justice (Sir William Lee) received his testimony, saying, that as no bill of exceptions lay, the prosecutor would otherwise be without remedy, whereas the defendant, if convicted, might move for a new trial. Lee, C. J., said further, that in Nunez's case, the suit in the exchequer was then still pending, whereas here, the suit in equity seemed at an end. The defendant, however, was acquitted, because there was only one witness against him.³ The next case was mentioned by Lord Mansfield in giving judgment upon a question, whether the borrower was competent to prove usury.⁴ The defendant had bought an estate for the plaintiff; he articulated in his own name, and refused to convey, and by his answer denied any trust. The bill was dismissed, and the defendant was indicted for perjury, and convicted on the evidence of the plaintiff in equity confirmed by circumstances, and by the declaration of the defendant. The plaintiff then petitioned for a supplemental bill in nature of a bill of review, stating the conviction, but the petition was dismissed because the conviction was not evidence.⁵ However, the point was finally decided in a solemn manner soon afterwards. The defendant, in an indictment for perjury, had brought an action against the prosecutor, who filed a bill against him in equity for a discovery and an account, and obtained an injunction. The defendant then denied the allegations of the prosecutor, and obtained a dissolution of the injunction, upon which he was indicted for perjury. The cause and the indictment came on to be tried at the same assizes, the indictment standing first, and the court held, that the testimony of the prosecutor should be received, because he could not avail himself of the conviction, either at law or in equity. The court added, that they could not accede

¹ R. v. Eden, 1 Esp. 97.

² Ca. Temp. Hardw. 359; and see Bull. N. P. 283, note (a).

³ R. v. Broughton, 2 Str. 1229.

⁴ Abrahams q. t. v. Bunn, 4 Burr. 2251, and held that he was. This case confirms the overturning of the decision above enumerated.

See R. v. Menetonè, Peake, 12; cited. R. v. D'Faria, Id. 104.

R. v. Pepys, Id. 138.

⁵ Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 4 East, 577, 581; 4 Burr. 2255.

to this objection on the part of the defendant without breaking in upon the authority of Smith v. Prager,¹ and Bent v. Baker,² where it was decided that where a party is not immediately interested in the cause, nor has any interest in the event in support of which the verdict in that cause may be given in evidence by him in any other proceeding instituted by or against him, he is a competent witness. The rule, therefore, which had been obtained for setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial was, accordingly, discharged.³ However, in a later case, where it was clearly admitted that a person who had not paid the debt and costs of a prior action, was not rendered incompetent as a witness for the prosecution, he was, nevertheless, held to be disqualified upon the disclosure of the additional circumstance that he expected the defendant to be a witness against his interest in a similar action coming on for trial after the indictment. This was such an immediate interest as rendered him incompetent.⁴ And, in chancery pending a suit, the complainant's testimony has been rejected.⁵ A. had agreed to indemnify B.'s partners against a suit in chancery which they had instituted against him. A. was indicted for perjury in his answer. Here B. was a good witness against A., notwithstanding the guarantee.⁶

It is no objection to a witness that he has sworn to the fact which he is about to depose to in an indictment for perjury. As where the defendant had filed a cross bill against a witness who, in her answer, had sworn to the very fact she was brought forward to prove upon an indictment. Because her answer would not help her in the Court of Chancery, since other evidence must be adduced there before she could prove her case, and so she could not be said to have an immediate interest in the event of the suit.⁷

Evidence to prove a general indictment for perjury.] The chief points of evidence which tend towards the proof of an indictment for perjury are:—1, the proceedings in which the offence was committed; 2, the oath of the defendant; 3, the matter sworn to; and 4, the assignment of perjury.

First, as to the proceedings.⁸ To show the nature of the cause in which the perjury took place as alleged in the indictment, it is usual to produce the record of the court.⁹ If the trial be for a perjury committed at the assizes or sittings, produce an office copy of the record, or the nisi prius record.¹⁰ The production of

¹ Smith q. t. v. Prager, 7 T. R. 60.

² 3 T. R. 27.

³ R. v. Boston, 4 East, 572; And see Needham v. Smith, 2 Vern. 464; 1 Campb. 10.

⁴ R. v. Hulme, 7 C. & P. 8.

⁵ R. v. Fanshaw, Skin. 327.

⁶ R. v. Yates, Car. & M. 132.

⁷ R. v. Pepys, Peake, N. P. C. 138.

⁸ Note, that all formal proofs must be admitted at the trial, or the judge will direct an acquittal. R. v. Thornhill, 8 C. & P. 575.

⁹ The chancellor will take care that all proper documents in his court shall be produced. See Mont. Bank. C. 214. And so will the lord chief baron, security being given for the safe return of the record. 2 Y. & Jer. 512.

¹⁰ Arch. Crim. Pl. p. 366.

the postea, though no evidence of the verdict, is enough to show that a trial took place, so as to introduce an account of what a witness swore at the trial.¹ So, that where an objection was made that a copy of the final judgment ought to have been produced, it was overruled.²

So also, though no postea be indorsed, but only a minute of a verdict, the nisi prius record is evidence for this purpose, and the examination of one defendant after his acquittal may be proved by parole evidence.³ But if no record is made up, so that it does not appear whether any trial has happened or not, the minutes will not be received, for the main link is wanting in such a case.⁴

It is not competent to travel out of the record, nor to introduce new matter into the proceedings. Therefore, where the defendant was charged with perjury before a magistrate, it was held, that parole evidence could not be brought forward to aid the written deposition by showing other matters sworn to by the defendant upon the same occasion.⁵ But where a document failed to show the presence of certain justices at sessions, by reason of its being faulty as a record, it was held, that parole evidence might be adduced to show the presence of those justices according to the statement made in the indictment.⁶

We must next show that the defendant took an oath. The particular mode of swearing, however, need not be testified, and proof that the party was sworn and examined will satisfy the allegation in the indictment that he was duly sworn, &c.⁷

Thirdly, the matters sworn to must be given in evidence. Should the count allege that the defendant swore certain matters in substance and effect (which is not a desirable or prudent allegation), it must be proved that the defendant swore the whole in substance and effect of that which is set forth in the count as his evidence. For want of being able to do this the count will fail.⁸ And this rule holds, although there be distinct assignments of perjury in that count.⁹ It is moreover necessary to give the whole of the evidence sworn by the defendant referrible to the fact on which the perjury is assigned. For the defendant may have explained an apparent falsity in a subsequent part of his examination. Therefore, if there be two answers in chancery relative to the same matter, it would be competent for the defendant to prove that the second answer contained a satisfactory

¹ Per Pratt, C. J. Str. 162.

² R. v. Minns, R. v. Iles, cited, Bull. N. P. 243.

³ R. v. Browne, M. & M. 315; 3 C. & P. 572. This case shakes the authority of a decision made by Lord Kenyon upon a trial for perjury, where it appeared that the postea had not been indorsed. R. v. Page, 6 Esp. 83.

⁴ The Queen v. Carter, 6 Mod. 168.

⁵ R. v. Wylde, 6 C. & P. 380.

⁶ R. v. Bellamy, Ry. & Moo. N. P. C. 171. See also R. v. Ward, 6 C. & P. 367.

⁷ R. v. Rowley, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 302.

⁸ R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb. 134.

⁹ Id.

explanation of the first, in which case he would be entitled to an acquittal.¹ And Lord Kenyon directed an acquittal where the witness who had taken down the defendant's evidence proved the words on which the perjury was assigned, but could not speak to any other part of his evidence, and his lordship mentioned Carr's case.²

But where the witness stated, that he took no note of the evidence, but that from his duty as attorney's clerk he had paid particular attention, that he would not undertake to say that he had given the whole of the defendant's testimony, but that he would swear that nothing else was said which qualified what he had stated, and that to the best of his recollection he had given all that was material to this inquiry and relating to the transaction in question, Littledale, J., received the evidence, and the prisoner was convicted, and the judges subsequently expressed their approbation of the decision.³

So, where three witnesses stated, that the defendant swore certain matters, but admitted that they did not take down the evidence as it was given, nor did they even profess to relate the whole of the evidence so sworn, the proof was allowed.⁴

So, where an answer on a cross-examination was quite foreign to the general merits of the case, upon an indictment for perjury in this particular, it was held sufficient to prove all the cross-examination, only because that was entirely unconnected with the original examination.⁵

It also lies upon the prosecutor to show that the matters sworn to were material,⁶ or, at all events, bore in some way upon the question at issue; and this proof lies upon the prosecutor, for it will not be taken by intendment.⁷

The statement of a deceased witness being tendered in evidence for the prosecution, certain declarations of the same witness, not upon oath, were proved upon cross-examination, and although these were material to the defendant, they were held to have been properly rejected, not being on oath.⁸ A notice of set-off, intitled in a cause A. B. v. C. D., and signed by C. D.'s attorney, will not satisfy an allegation that a cause was depending between A. B. and C. D.⁹

Lastly, the assignment of perjury must be proved as laid. And this must be done by showing, that the matter sworn to was really false, and not merely supposed to be so from the circumstance of the defendant having written a letter to that effect, or otherwise. The recital of a deed is evidence in other cases, but not to prove

¹ R. v. Carr, 1 Sid. 418; 2 Ves. & B. 258.

² R. v. Jones, Peake, 38.

³ R. v. Rowley, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 299; 1 Moo. C. C. 111.

⁴ R. v. Munton, 3 C. & P. 408.

⁵ R. v. Dowlin, Peake, 170.

⁶ Under the statute they must have been immediately material, but indictments are rarely preferred now on 5 Eliz.

⁷ Supp. to Vin. Ab. vol. 5, p. 379, K. 9. See also R. v. Jary and King, Palm. 382, 535; Ld. Raym. 889.

⁸ R. v. Parker, 3 Dowl. 242.

⁹ R. v. Stoveld, 6 C. & P. 489.

perjury, nor a letter of the party indicted, though sworn to be the handwriting of the defendant.¹

Where perjury was assigned upon a statement by the defendant, that his property qualification was 300*l.* a year, in order to enable him to sit in parliament, it was held, that the jury must be satisfied of the negative of this qualification, and likewise of the guilty knowledge of the defendant respecting it.²

And if one assignment be shown to be good, there must, upon a general verdict, be judgment for the crown,³ unless, indeed, several assignments be crowded together into one count, and there be an allegation that the defendant swore in substance and effect, in which case all the assignments in that count must be proved.⁴

An award made pursuant to an order of nisi prius is not evidence against the defendant, if produced merely as proof that nothing was due to him. The defendant was charged with perjury arising from an application for a capias against the prosecutor for 50*l.* An award was put in showing that nothing was due to the defendant. But the court held, that it had been improperly received in evidence. Not because the truth of the statement was necessarily inconsistent with the defendant's believing it to be true, for the defendant's knowledge of its falsehood would require to be proved by other evidence, but because the decision of the arbitrator in respect of that fact, was no more than a declaration of his opinion, and there was no instance of a declaration of such opinion being received in evidence of a fact against the party to be affected by the proof of it in any criminal case.⁵ In perjury, that A. made B. executor, the probate must be produced; to prove that A. devised real estates, the original will must be brought forward, and one of the attesting witnesses called.⁶ In an indictment for perjury, an averment stated a suit in the prerogative court to dispute the validity of a codicil. The production of the original allegation of both parties, signed by their advocates, with proof of their signatures, and of their acting as advocates in that court, was held sufficient without the caveat. The allegations were produced from the registrar of the court.⁷

Answer in Chancery.] In this case it is necessary to prove:—1. The bill. 2. The answer, and that it was made on oath before a

¹ R. v. Carr, 1 Sid. 418. The defendant was indicted for perjury, he having sworn falsely to his schedule of debts. It was proposed to show, that persons, whose names were not mentioned in the indictment, were also debtors to the defendant, and omitted in the schedule; but Lord Tenterden would not permit it. R. v. Mudie, 1 Moo. & Rob. 128.

² Sir J. E. de Beaumont, 7 C. & P. 17.

³ The Queen v. Rhodes and Cole, 1 Ke. 213.

⁴ See R. v. Buckworth and others, 1 Sid. 377. It is not competent for a defendant to offer evidence to disprove an assignment of perjury upon which the prosecutor offers no evidence. R. v. Hemp, 5 C. & P. 468.

⁵ 17 L. J. Q. B. 187. R. v. Moreau, 11 Q. B. 1028.

⁶ R. v. Turner, 2 Car. & K. 732.

⁷ S. C.

master in chancery. 3. The falsity of the matters contained in the answers.

First, the bill is produced, or an examined copy, and then the answer, but it is worthy of attention, that no copy of the answer can be received. The original of that instrument must always be brought forward in prosecutions for perjury. It is said, however, that, perhaps, a copy might be sufficient to warrant the grand jury in finding the bill of indictment, although the original must, of course, be produced at the trial.¹

A copy of the bill, however, has been admitted, but, if the bill be taken off the file, it is not evidence.²

In proceeding upon an answer to a bill before amendment, the amended bill was put in, and the amendments were proved to have been made by the clerk according to his duty, but the person who actually wrote these corrections was not called. Lord Tenterden held that these proofs were sufficient, and that the amendments were not material to the case.³ But if, upon exceptions, a second answer to a bill be sent in, the defendant has a right to have that also read in order to explain what he had said in his first answer.⁴

Next, it must be shown that the answer was put in upon oath before a master in chancery. And this is done by proving the jurat, and that the name subscribed is the defendant's handwriting. The defendant's signature proves that he was the person who exhibited the answer, and the signature of the master is proof that the person who did exhibit it was regularly sworn to the truth of its contents. Therefore, where the answer purports to be sworn before a master, it is sufficient to prove the handwriting of the master, and that of the defendant.⁵ And so in proving perjury committed in any answer sworn before a baron of the exchequer, you need only prove the handwriting of the baron and that of the defendant.⁶ However, although no proof of identity beyond the facts of a person calling himself A. B. being sworn, and his signing the answer, is necessary,⁷ yet no return of the master will be sufficient without proof of the defendant's oath.⁸ The same law prevails with respect to the proof of depositions in cases of perjury.⁹

It lies upon the defendant to prove that he has been personated, if such should be the case;¹⁰ that is to say, as soon as the evidence of his handwriting, and of that of the master, have been

¹ Chambers v. Robinson, Bull. N. P. 239; Trin. 12 Geo. 1. R. v. Baspoole, 2 Show. 486; as to depositions in chancery.

² R. v. Fanshaw, Skin. 327.

³ R. v. Laycock, 4 C. & P. 326.

⁴ R. v. Carr, 1 Sid. 418; Taylor on Evidence, 598.

⁵ See R. v. Morris, 2 Burr. 1189; S. C. 1 Leach, 50; R. v. Benson, 2 Camp. 508.

⁶ R. v. Nunez, 2 Str. 1043, in marg.

⁷ Bull. N. P. 239. R. v. James, 1 Show. 397. R. v. Morris, 2 Burr. 1189.

⁸ Bull. N. P. 239. Anon. 3 Mod. 116.

⁹ Arch. Crim. Pl. 87.

¹⁰ 2 Burr. 1189.

tendered as above mentioned. The recital of the place in the jurat where the oath is administered is sufficient proof that it was there taken. The third and last proof is the falsity of the answer.¹

Affidavit to hold to bail.] The affidavit sworn by the defendant, and the falsehood of it, are the chief features of evidence necessary to support this indictment. There are, therefore, to be proved,—
1. The affidavit sworn by the defendant. 2. The averments of perjury.

The proper officer will produce the affidavit at the trial, and the handwriting of the defendant must then be proved, or that he was sworn to the contents of the instrument, and also, if under the statute, that the affidavit was in some way used in the prosecution to which it has relation, but not if at common law. And the handwriting of the officer who administered the oath must be proved.² The words “by the court” being shown to be in the handwriting of one of the masters of the court, is evidence of the swearing, without proof that the master was present in court at the time.³

Notwithstanding some ancient opinions to the contrary,⁴ it is now necessary to produce the original affidavit, and, therefore, a copy would be rejected as insufficient. The officer will prove that the indictment in question has been filed of record, although at common law the allegation and proof are unnecessary. But it is otherwise upon the statute, for there it must appear that the affidavit was filed of record.⁵ Next, if the proceeding be on the statute, it must be shown that the affidavit was used;⁶ but the crime is complete at common law, whether any use be made of the affidavit or not;⁷ for the perjury is complete when the affidavit is sworn, and the omission of some formal regulation is immaterial.⁸ But in the case of ordinary documents secondary evidence is admissible.⁹

The statute 23 Geo. 2, c. 11, s. 1, having directed that the authority of the person who administers the oath should be alleged, it must appear, that the officer who administered the oath upon this occasion was acting in his usual capacity, upon which the judge will take notice of his authority. In cases where judicial notice cannot be taken of the power to give oaths, evidence must certainly be adduced to prove that authority.¹⁰ But the appointment need not, in general, be shown, as in the case of a commissioner who takes affidavits in the country, and in many other instances.¹¹

¹ R. v. Spencer, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 97; 1 C. & P. 260.

² 1 C. & P. 260.

³ R. v. Turner, 2 Car. & K. 732.

⁴ See R. v. James, 1 Show. 397.

⁵ R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

⁶ R. and Reg. v. Taylor, Holt, 534.

⁷ R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

⁸ R. v. Spencer, supra.

⁹ R. v. Milne, 2 Fost. & F. 10.

¹⁰ Archb. Crim. Pl. p. 365.

¹¹ See R. v. James, 1 Show. 397. R. v. Verelst, 3 Campb. 432. R.

Judgment.] The production of the book from the judgment office in which the incipitur is entered, will satisfy the allegation that judgment was entered upon an action.¹

Grand jury.] Evidence that the defendant swore differently before the magistrate is not sufficient, because there is no certainty as to which was the true oath, or whether both were alike untrue.² Still, a person may be convicted of perjury for swearing falsely before a grand jury, and a witness, upon the same indictment, and a police officer in the grand jury room may prove the case, for they are not sworn to secrecy like the jury.³

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 111, the clerk of every court holden under this Act shall cause a note of all complaints and summonses, and of all orders, and of all judgments and executions, and returns thereto, and of all fines, and of all other proceedings of the court, to be fairly entered from time to time in a book belonging to the court, which shall be kept at the office of the court; and such entries in the said book, or a copy thereof bearing the seal of the court, and purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the clerk of the court, shall at all times be admitted in all courts and places whatsoever as evidence of such entries, and of the proceeding referred to by such entry or entries, and of the regularity of such proceeding, without any further proof.

Subornation.] In this case the principal evidence will be the perjury and the subornation. Thus, the proceedings before the judge, as stated in the present indictment, must be proved, together with the oath of the person suborned, the matters which he swore to, and the falsehood of them. It was, indeed, attempted upon one occasion to produce the record of conviction as sufficient evidence of the perjury, but the prisoner's⁴ counsel insisted that this would not be conclusive, that the prisoner had a right to controvert the guilt of the individual whom he was charged with having suborned, and that the evidence given on the former trial ought to be submitted to the consideration of the present jury. The recorder entertaining the same opinion, compelled the counsel for the crown to go through the whole case, as though the jury had the question of the original prisoner's guilt solely before them.⁵

Thus it is also in the cases of subornation of perjury before commissioners of bankrupts, and concerning a bastard child, above al-

v. Howard, 1 Moo. & Rob. 187. "I must take it," said Patteson, J., in the last case, "that somebody swore this affidavit before the commissioners;" and the learned judge recognized the authority of the commissioners without proof of the appointment.

¹ R. v. Gordon, Car. & M. 410.

As to the postea (indorsement) see R. v. Page, 2 Esp. 649, n.

² R. v. Hughes, 1 Car. & K. 519.

³ R. v. Hughes, ut supra.

⁴ He was indicted for suborning another to take a false oath concerning a seaman's will.

⁵ R. v. Reilly, 1 Leach, 454, 455, n.

luded to. The proceedings before the proper tribunal, the oath of the defendant, the matters which he has sworn to, and the falsity of them, constitute the necessary evidence to prove the perjury. There is, however, this distinction in cases of perjury before commissioners of bankrupts between the bankrupt himself and third persons, namely, that where the former is indicted for perjury, strict proof of the proceedings is necessary, whereas in the latter case, the adjudication of the commissioners is sufficient to prove the fact of bankruptcy. Thus, in an indictment against a bankrupt for perjury upon his last examination, Lord Ellenborough was disposed to think, that not only the commission of bankruptcy, but also the trading, the debt of the petitioning creditor, and the act of bankruptcy, should have been given in evidence. His lordship said he would save the point for the defendant, who was, however, acquitted on the merits.¹ In an indictment, on the other hand, against a third person who had been examined before commissioners, their declaration of the bankruptcy was held sufficient by Abbott, J.² But, secondly, you must prove the subornation. This is done by showing that the defendant wilfully incited the other person to take the false oath, (which, as we have seen, must, in fact, be taken in order to constitute this offence,) and, it seems, that the bare solicitation of the defendant for this purpose would be evidence for the jury to consider, in the absence of proof to the contrary, whether the defendant had not acted knowingly and corruptly.

It has been held, that a prisoner convicted of taking a false oath, but pardoned before judgment, was a competent witness against the party who had suborned him, being restored to his former competency and credit by virtue of the pardon.³

County Court.] The judge of a county court made the defendant write his name in court, and impounded the signature, together with that of an instrument supposed to have been signed by him. It seems, that upon an indictment for perjury, the jury might look at both signatures.⁴

Perjury before a committee of the House of Commons.] In this case the usual proofs are, the election, the return of the members, and the matters falsely sworn to. Then follow the proof of the assignments by demonstrating the wilful untruths advanced by the defendant.⁵

The following evidence was deemed sufficient to support an indictment for perjury by falsely taking the freeholder's oath at an election for Middlesex. That oath was administered to a person who polled on the second day in the name of J. W. There was

¹ R. v. Punshon, 3 Campb. 96 ; S. C. 223.

² R. v. Raphael, at Devon Lent As. 1818, Mann, N. P. Digest, 232.

³ R. v. Reilly, 1 Leach, 454.

⁴ R. v. Taylor, 6 Cox, C. C.

⁵ See R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb. 134.

no such person as J. W. The defendant, himself no freeholder, voted on that day, and subsequently boasted of the success his fraudulent vote had met with. Not more than one false vote was given on the day in question, and there was no proof that the defendant voted in his own name, or in any other name than that of J. W. This evidence was considered effective for the purpose of inducing the jury to presume that the defendant had voted thus fraudulently in the name of J. W., and the court held, that he had been properly convicted.¹

The allegation in an indictment, that a committee were sworn to "try the matter of the petition" was held good, although the stat. 10 Geo. 3, used the words "to try and determine the merits of the return."²

Insolvent Court.] If the filing of the petition be proved, it will be presumed that the sittings of the Insolvent Court were properly holden. Therefore, although the facts of due notice and filing, and the appointment of a day for examination, were alleged in the indictment, proof of them was deemed unnecessary, nor was it needful to prove that the prisoner was a trader owing less than 300*l.*, he having, in his petition, so stated it.³

Court of Review.] In a case of perjury before the court of review in bankruptcy, the petitioning creditor proved the handwriting of the defendant to the affidavit on which perjury was assigned, and he likewise gave evidence of the trading and act of bankruptcy. A creditor who had not proved his debt likewise gave evidence of the trading and act of bankruptcy; and an assignee proved the act of bankruptcy. These were the principal witnesses, and the judges were of opinion, upon a reserved case, that their testimony was properly received in support of the prosecution.⁴

The high sheriff.] An indictment alleged that a trial took place before the high sheriff; the evidence was, that neither the high sheriff nor the under sheriff were present, but that the assessor executed the writ of trial. The writ was directed to the sheriff, and the postea stated that the trial took place before him. This was held sufficient proof, and the authority of the assessor was deemed well shown, the judge holding that there was no variance.⁵

Bastardy.] The mother's charge is shown by proof of the original order, or by secondary evidence of the order, after a summons to produce it. It is not enough to offer the minutes of the clerk to the justices.⁶

¹ R. v. Price, alias John Wright, 6 East, 323.

² R. v. Dunn, 1 Dowl. & R. 10.

³ R. v. Westley, Bell, 193; 29 L. J. M. C. 35.

⁴ R. v. Keat, 2 Moo. C. C. 24.

⁵ R. v. Dunn, 1 Car. & K. 730.

Diss., Coleridge, Erskine, and Wightman, JJ.; 2 Moo. C. C. 297.

⁶ R. v. Newall, 6 Cox, C. C. 21.

Actions on 5 Eliz. c. 9.] Actions upon the statute of Eliz. by the party who has been aggrieved by perjury, are of such rare occurrence, that very few words will be sufficient upon the subjects of pleading and evidence.

First, he must be the party grieved who brings the suit,¹ and he is not at liberty to join any other with him. Thus, an exception was taken where an action had been taken against three, that a surrender, which had been in question, enured to the use of two of the plaintiffs only, so that the third person was not an injured party, and it was the opinion of Wray and Southcote, JJ., that the writ should abate.² On the other hand, it was said at the bar, upon one occasion, and not denied, that if two parties be grieved, they must join, the one being incompetent to maintain his suit without the other.³

Great accuracy is required in setting out the statute, if it be attempted to do so; but this is not necessary, for where it was moved to arrest the judgment because the plaintiff had omitted the words of the statute in his declaration, the court would not hearken to the objection, but gave judgment for the plaintiff.⁴

The only ground for the objection was, that it ought to have appeared whether the defendant had been guilty of perjury, or of subornation; but as Mr. Serjeant Hawkins has observed, all perjury whatsoever must come under one of those heads, there being no medium, and, therefore, the prosecutor would be equally grieved in either case. He would be placed under the difficulty not only of proving the perjury, if such an objection were to prevail, but also of showing it to be within one of the branches of the distinction, which would be superfluous.⁵

Nevertheless, the words of the statute must be strictly pursued in the allegations of the defendant's oath, and of his tortious intention. Thus it was adjudged that the plaintiff should take nothing by his writ for want of the word, voluntariè, in an action of debt upon the statute.⁶ An action of debt, was brought upon the statute for perjury committed in an action of debt, and the record of this last action was stated to have been as of Hil. 27 Eliz. In truth, the action was brought in Hil. 28 Eliz. and so the "recital did miss the record." It was contended, that here was a fatal variance, inasmuch as the party charged with perjury might thus be doubly proceeded against. But by Coke, arguendo, it is between the same parties, and in the same cause, and a circumstance only is mistaken. Clench, J. It is needful to show in what action the first perjury was committed, for he says in trespass, whereas in truth it was in debt; all is naught. Gawdy, J. If no action be alleged, he cannot sue upon the statute of 5 Eliz.⁷

¹ 3 Bulst. 147.

² Anon. 2 Leon. 12.

³ R. v. Deakins, Hetl. 73.

⁴ Cockerill v. Apthorp, 3 Bulst. 147.

⁵ 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, s. 18.

⁶ Kitton v. Walters, Hetl. 12;

Brookes v. Hall, 2 Ro. Rep. 76.

R. v. Cox, 1 Leach, 71.

⁷ R. v. Dennie and Turner, Godb. 88.

The authority of the judge or commissioner must also appear upon the record. Where it was alleged that the defendant came to R., a master in chancery having authority to take affidavits, &c., and that the defendant made a false affidavit, but did not allege that the affidavit in question was in chancery, in curia cancellariæ, it was held to be no perjury within the statute.¹

Moreover, it must appear upon the face of the declaration, that the party was in reality aggrieved, so that where upon a question concerning the surrender of a copyhold, it was alleged that perjury had been committed, it was held a good exception that the certainty of the copyhold did not appear upon the pleading.²

Trial in perjury generally.] By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 22, on trials for perjury and subornation, a certificate of the indictment and trial on which perjury is assigned shall be sufficient evidence of the trial. The record being duly made up, and the *venire facias*³ complied with by the appearance of a proper jury, the trial commences. But the judge is authorized to refuse the inquiry altogether if the indictment appear unquestionably to be bad. As where it could not be in any way collected from the record that the matters sworn to and alleged as perjuries were material to the question at issue.⁴ So again, where an indictment for perjury had been found at the quarter sessions, and had been removed into the Court of King's Bench by certiorari, because the quarter sessions have no jurisdiction over the offence, Mr. Justice Gaselee refused to try the charge in this instance.⁵ But it is otherwise where the materiality of the thing sworn can be traced on the record, although there be no allegation to that effect. The objection for want of such an allegation is on the record, and can be taken advantage of in arrest of judgment, if necessary.⁶

Verdict.] Upon an indictment containing four counts, the jury found a verdict of guilty of the perjury and misdemeanor aforesaid. The venire was stated on the record—to try whether the defendants were guilty of the perjury and misdemeanor aforesaid. It was held that perjury was nomen collectivum, that, therefore, the venire and verdict applied to all the counts, and that, although a general judgment had been entered, yet that, being for imprisonment only, it was divisible.⁷ In this case, the court said, that *R. v. Powell*⁸ was not in the least interfered with: neither in O'Connell v. Reg. nor in Campbell v. Reg. was it intended to overrule R. v. Powell.⁹

It is not now necessary to produce the record in order to prove

¹ Anon. Lat. 38. Luther v. Holland, Id. 132.

² Anon. 2 Leon. 12.

³ See Doug. 791, 794.

⁴ R. v. Tremearne, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 147.

⁵ R. v. Haynes, Id. 298.

⁶ R. v. Souter, 2 Stark. 423.

⁷ R. v. Ryalls, 17 L. J. M. C. 92. Affirmed in error, 18 L. J. M. C. 69; 11 Q. B. 781.

⁸ 2 B. & Adol. 75.

⁹ 18 L. J. M. C. 69.

a conviction or acquittal, but a certificate under the hand of the clerk of the court is sufficient. Yet, where this certificate was wanting, the caption, the indictment, the indorsement of the verdict and sentence, with the minutes of the trial, were held sufficient to warrant a conviction.¹

Judgment.] The trial being over, and the verdict given,² judgment is entered up according to the finding of the jury. And there was this additional penalty to the statute of Eliz., namely, that the disability formed part of the judgment. Consequently, a pardon under the great seal or sign manual restored the attainted perjurer to his competency, after a conviction at common law, but not so if he had received judgment under the statute 5 Eliz.³ The statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, reaches the case even of perjured persons, and renders them competent.

One R. was convicted of perjury upon the oath of D., but R. subsequently caused D. himself to be convicted of perjury in accusing R. It was thereupon moved, that as judgment had not been given, an entry might be made upon the record that R. was acquitted of the first perjury, but the court said, they could not do that. R. might bring error if he would. However the court restored him to his place of one of their attornies.⁴

The following is an example of an erroneous entry of the intended judgment:—"It is ordered, that the said L. K. be transported, &c.," the mistake being in the word, "ordered," instead of "considered." The defendant brought a writ of error, but the court observed that no judgment had been given, there being merely an order, and they awarded a procedendo to the court below to give judgment on the conviction. In the meantime, they thought that the prisoner might procure bail for his personal appearance to receive that judgment at the next Chester sessions.⁵

New trial.] The judgment being pronounced, the defendant in perjury has three courses open to him for the purpose of avoiding the mischief which he has encountered. He may move for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, or may bring a writ of error.⁶

¹ R. v. Newman, Den. & P. 390; 21 L. J. M. C. 75; 3 Car. & K. 240.

² Which must be, if against the defendant, that he is guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury, otherwise the jury must acquit him. 1 Mod. 351.

³ 2 Salk. 514, 689, 691; Anon. 3 Salk. 155; 1 Ld. Raym. 257.

⁴ R. v. Read, 1 Sid. 217.

⁵ R. v. Kenworthy, 1 B. & C. 711; S. C. 3 D. & Ry. 173.

⁶ It is no ground for postponing the judgment upon a convicted defendant, that the witness against him is indicted for perjury, for giving the very evidence upon which the defendant was found guilty; at least not if the defendant be so interested in the event of the second trial as to become thereby disqualified as a witness. R. v. Haydon, 2 Burr. 1387.

First, as to the new trial. If there be a verdict of acquittal, the courts will not suffer it to be disturbed; but if the jury find for the crown, there are some circumstances, which we shall mention presently, which will induce the granting of another inquiry. Two persons were charged with perjury and acquitted, and after some discussion the judges, except Windham, J., were of opinion that no new trial should be had.¹ And this opinion of Windham, J., was the more strange, because he had himself laid it down two years before, that no new trial could be had in the event of an acquittal for perjury, unless by consent, to which the judges then agreed.²

On the other hand, where a verdict has passed for the crown, it is quite clear that a new trial may be awarded in favour of the defendant. At one time, indeed, it was supposed, that this could not be done without the consent of the king's counsel,³ although the court said, they could not do without such consent in debt upon an information, inasmuch as the party had an interest in that case.⁴ However, some years afterwards, upon a conviction by information for perjury, it turned out, that the false oath had not been taken wilfully, and the court granted a new trial upon motion, mentioning R. v. Sir John Jackson,⁵ and R. v. Fenwick,⁶ as authorities for doing so.⁷

The granting of the new inquiry is, nevertheless, entirely at the discretion of the court, who sometimes will refuse the application, if they should think that the matter has been fully heard. In the case of a trial at bar, it appeared that the jury hesitated very much, and, in fact, found at first a verdict of guilty, but not of wilful and corrupt perjury. They at length pronounced the defendant guilty generally, but some of them said at the time that they were not satisfied that the perjury had been wilful and corrupt. The court held, that when a cause was tried at bar,⁸ a new trial was never granted, for the single reason that the jury went against evidence, but it seems that the matter was adjourned upon the other point.⁹ And it is quite clear, that a judge at the present day would not receive a verdict of guilty accompanied by such a qualification as we find in the preceding case.

Costs.] By 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 23, the costs and expenses of prosecutions in certain cases of misdemeanor may be allowed by the court as in cases of felony; and the offences of perjury and subornation of perjury are included within the last. The prosecutor is entitled to his costs, as prosecutor, though his name be included in a subpœna, and although he be not bound over to prosecute, and his expenses are not thereby limited to such as he has incurred in being a witness.¹

¹ R. v. Fenwick and Holt, 1 Sid. 153. Anon. 1 Lev. 9, 124. R. v. Bowden, 1 Lev. 9, cited there. ² R. v. Williams, 1 Keb. 124. Cited by Windham, J. ³ Read v. Dawson, 1 Sid. 49. ⁴ Id. ⁵ 1 Lev. 10, 124. ⁶ 1 Sid. 149, 153; 1 Keb. 546. 568. ⁷ R. v. Smith, 2 Show. 165. Pemberton, C. J., at first doubting. R. v. Cornelius, 3 Keb. 525. ⁸ But this strictness is no longer kept up. ⁹ R. v. Melling, 5 Mod. 349.

A false affidavit in chancery failed of its effect; moreover, the persons were only interested as executors; yet, an application to set aside a side bar rule for costs, was refused, the case being within 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 11. The defendant had moved an indictment for perjury by certiorari into the Queen's Bench.²

Costs upon a new trial.] The court will not in general allow the defendant the costs of the former prosecution upon the granting of a new trial in cases of perjury. Should the defendant make out a charge of oppression, the court might possibly interfere on his behalf, but not under ordinary circumstances. The prosecutor having removed an indictment into the King's Bench by certiorari, it was moved on behalf of the defendant, that the proceedings should be stayed until the costs of former indictments for the same offence had been paid by the prosecutor. On the first occasion, the judge refused to try the case, by reason of the appearance of manifest imperfections upon the face of the record; and on the second, a new trial was granted, because a minor was sworn and served upon the jury in the room of his father. The prosecutor did not carry that record down again, but preferred a new indictment. By the court.—No case of oppression has been made out by the defendant. His application for a new trial has made further expenses necessary, and it can make no difference to him, as to such expenses, whether he is again tried upon the old or upon a new indictment.³

Arrest of judgment.] Another course which the defendant may avail himself of, is to move in arrest of judgment, if there be a ground for doing so. And he may do this after verdict, or after judgment by default, but not after a failure upon demurrer. Judgment having passed against a defendant by nihil dicit, it was doubted whether he could then move to arrest, but Holt, C. J., observed, that he was not too late, although it was otherwise upon demurrer.⁴

The time for moving in arrest of judgment is when the party is called up for sentence, so that if he be afterwards taken upon a capias on account of the nonpayment of a fine, or otherwise, it will then be too late to insist upon moving as of right. In such a case, Holt, C. J., said, that the court would hear the objections in mitigation of the fine, although they could not allow them in arrest of judgment after the capias.⁵

¹ R. v. Sheering, 7 C. & P. 440.

⁴ The Queen v. Deman, 2 Ld.

² R. v. Major, 21 L. J. M. C. Raym. 1221.

221; Dears. 13.

⁵ The Queen v. Darby, 1 Salk.

³ R. v. Tremearne, 5 B. & C. 78.
761; S. C. 8 Dowl. & Ry. 590.

Further, a defendant can only move in respect of errors on the record of the indictment or information for perjury; he cannot interfere with the prior record on the trial of which the false oath is alleged to have taken place.¹

The judge made an order to amend the postea upon these facts. The judges in summing up altered the order of three assignments and reversed them: upon which the jury found a perverse verdict. The amendment was made from the recollection of the judge. It was held to be erroneous.²

Punishment for perjury.] It seems that, at common law, except in the case of attain of jurors,³ there was not any particular course for the punishment of perjury, but the heinousness of the offence was such, that the star chamber and spiritual courts took cognizance of it,⁴ and, treating it as a high misdemeanor, inflicted a penalty accordingly. And the king's counsel also used to meet occasionally for the same purpose, when they were accustomed to punish for this offence at their discretion.⁵ Before the conquest, indeed, the severity of death was sometimes exercised against this crime, and sometimes offenders were banished. Corporal punishment also, as the cutting out of the tongue, was now and then inflicted; but, subsequently, the rigour of the law gradually declined, till the forfeiture of movables, and an incompetency to bear testimony, were the only known penalties;⁶ and at length, as at the present day, the common law recognized fine and imprisonment,⁷ and "never to bear testimony," to which, both as to perjury and subornation, the statute 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, has added hard labour.

By 5 El. c. 9, s. 3,⁸ all persons who shall corruptly procure any witness by letters, rewards, promises, &c., to commit wilful and corrupt perjury, in any matter depending in suit by writ, action, bill, complaint, or information, concerning lands or hereditaments, goods, debts, or damages in any of the queen's courts of record, &c.⁹ or shall corruptly procure or suborn any witness sworn to testify in perpetuam rei memoriam, such offenders shall, on conviction, forfeit 40*l.* By sect. 6, the crime of perjury, whether committed in consequence of subornation, or by the voluntary act of the false swearer, is made liable to a fine of 20*l.*, and imprisonment for six months, together with incompetency as a witness.

¹ R. v. Wright, 1 Sid. 148.

² R. v. Virrier, 12 Ad. & El. 317; 4 Per. & D. 161.

³ Dy. 242.

⁴ See R. v. Onslowe, Dy. 242. R. v. Spicer and Read, Hob. 62.

⁵ Cro. El. 521.

⁶ 3 Inst. 163, 164; 16 Vin. Ab. 310. B. 1; 4 Comm. 138.

⁷ 3 Inst. 163. R. v. Nureys and another, 1 Sir W. Bl. 416. See R. v. Lookup, 3 Burr. 1901. The pillory was likewise added. See 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 16; 3 Inst. 219. But it was entirely abolished by 1 Vict. c. 23.

⁸ Made perpetual by 29 El. c. 5, and 21 Jac. 1, c. 28, s. 8.

⁹ The queen's courts of chancery or of record, the leet; view of frankpledge or law day; ancient demesne court; hundred court; courts baron; courts of the stannary in Devon and Cornwall.

Lastly, by 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 2,¹ besides the punishments already in force against perjury and subornation, the court, or judge before whom the conviction takes place, may sentence the offender to be sent to some house of correction for seven years, there to be kept to hard labour during all the term, or may award judgment of transportation for seven years. The breaking prison or voluntary escape, or return from transportation, was declared, moreover, to be capital. The transportation or commitment was also expressly declared to be over and above such punishment as should be adjudged to be inflicted agreeably to the laws then in being.

But by sect. 5, no attainder for any offence thereby made felony should work any corruption of blood, loss of dower, or disherison of heirs. By 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 1, for the punishing of perjuries at county elections, the punishments awarded by both the Acts of 5 El. and 2 Geo. 2,² were directed to be inflicted on the offender, and these penalties have since been held to be cumulative. For in a case where the Court of King's Bench had passed sentence upon certain persons convicted of such a perjury, that they should be imprisoned for one calendar month, and then be transported for seven years, that court resolved afterwards to arrest its judgment. For, on consideration, they found that the penalties were cumulative, and Lord Ellenborough observed, that the sentence might be vacated at any time within the same term in which it had been pronounced. Accordingly, the prisoners were fined 20*l.*, and ordered to be imprisoned for six months, and judgment of incompetency as witnesses was added. This is part of the judgment by statute, but at common law it is only the consequence.³ And moreover, that at the end of six months, the prisoners should be transported for six years.⁴

But the court may still punish at common law, without inflicting the punishments prescribed by the 2 Geo. 2, and accordingly, they frequently inflict fine and imprisonment only, without the severer penalty.⁵

Consequences of a conviction and judgment in cases of perjury.]
We come now, in the last place, to explain the consequences which attach upon the parties who are convicted of perjury or subornation. And the most striking evil which fell upon the attainted offender

¹ Made perpetual by 9 Geo. 2, c. 18. This Act does not extend to Scotland, but the crime of perjury is made punishable there by the confiscation of movables, piercing of the tongue, and infamy. In aggravated cases, the judge may, moreover, direct any other punishment which the occasion calls for—1555, c. 47. The Irish Act is 3 Geo. 3, c. 4, s. 2.

² In effect repealed.

³ 2 Salk. 514.

⁴ R. v. Price and others, 6 East, 327.

⁵ Whether surety of the peace can be required in addition, qy? R. v. Dunn, 12 Jur. 99. It was held that surety of the peace for a time certain might be required in all cases of misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment. Dunn v. Reg. (in error), 18 L. J. M. C. 41.

was disability to be examined in any court of record, or elsewhere, as a witness. But the words of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, are too general even to exclude perjurers. It is also a principal cause of challenge to a juror, that he has been convicted of perjury as a witness.¹ But it is necessary to show that the party has had sentence, because there might have been an arrest of judgment.² The statute disables the party from being a witness in any court of record, but it seems that a legal incapacity to bear testimony anywhere arises as a consequence at common law.³

By 5 El. c. 9, s. 5, no person convicted of subornation of perjury, and by sect. 6, no person convicted of perjury shall be received as a witness in any court of record, until his judgment be reversed by attaint or otherwise, and also until damages be recovered by the convicted parties in an action on the case against such as originally procured the judgment to be given against them.

However, the mischief, heavy as it is, ended there. The law did not go the length of preventing such convicts from making affidavits in certain cases for their own benefit, as to set aside a judgment for irregularity. For by Holt, C. J., upon an objection being made to the reading of a defendant's affidavit, because he had been convicted of perjury, "Must he, therefore, suffer all injuries, and have no way to help himself?" Powell, J. You ought to have the record of conviction in your hands when you make this objection. Holt, C. J. If he had, it would be nothing to the purpose.⁴ However, this course can only be allowed to rescue a defendant from the consequences of a charge, and cannot be permitted him in support of a complaint.⁵

By 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, s. 4, if any person convicted of perjury or subornation shall act or practise as an attorney or solicitor, or agent in any suit or action in any court of law or equity in England, the judge or judges where such suit or action is brought shall, upon complaint or information thereof, examine the matter in a summary way in open court, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of such judge or judges that the party has offended contrary to the Act, they shall cause the offender to be transported for seven years.

Pardon.] Probably, the following sentences are merely matters of history, but we must not omit to say that as to the strong words of the statute of 5 Eliz., which inflicted the pain of incompetency as a witness, the better opinion was that a pardon for a perjury at common law would so operate, but that the words of the statute were too strong to allow the beneficial result of a pardon.⁶

"I do not find it clearly settled," says Mr. Serjeant Hawkins,

¹ 16 Vin. Ab. 320, H. 1, citing Trials per Pais, 141, c. 9, 2 Hawk. c. 43, s. 25.

² Cowp. 3, by Lord Mansfield.

³ 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 101.

⁴ R. v. Davis and Carter, Holt. 501.

⁵ Walker v. Kearney, 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 103, and see 2 Str. 1148.

⁶ 2 Salk. 689.

"whether the pardon of a conviction of perjury makes the party a good witness."¹ And formerly it was said, on one or two occasions, that a pardon would not restore the party to his credit,² or to his liberam legem.³ But in this last case, Holt, C. J., spoke of the party as having stood in the pillory, from whence it is clear that the statute of Eliz. operated immediately to destroy the competency, and it does not appear but that in the other case the conviction might have proceeded on the statute. To render the distinction still more clear, it may be added, that a case occurred not many years since, where a person was admitted to bear testimony against a prisoner who had suborned him to take a false oath for the purpose of obtaining prize money, and His Majesty's pardon having been specially granted for that offence, was produced. It is true that he never received judgment, but Wilson, J., who delivered the opinion of the judges in favour of the evidence thus received, distinctly declared that the pardon not only respites the convict from punishment, but entirely absolves him from the crime, and restores him completely to his former competency and credit.⁴ Nevertheless, if there be an Act of parliament pardoning all crimes whatsoever, it should seem, that perjury under the statute of Eliz., will be included. And thus it was said, that one convicted of perjury would be competent to give evidence by reason of the act of oblivion.⁵

Arbitration.] All the matters in difference, whether in perjury or conspiracy, may be referred if verdict of acquittal be taken. It must, however, appear that there has been no attempt to stifle a prosecution.⁶

¹ 2 Hawk. c. 37, s. 52; Id. c. 46, s. 112.

² 1 Sid. 52.

³ 5 Mod. 16, by Holt, C. J.

⁴ R. v. Reilly, 1 Leach, 454, case of Macdaniel.

⁵ 1 Keb. 780.

⁶ R. v. Hardey, 14 Q. B. 529.

CHAPTER II.

OF CONSPIRACY.

Conspiracy.] Conspiracy is a combination and agreement by persons to do some illegal act, or a combination and agreement to effect a legal purpose by illegal means.¹ The conspiracies which we now shall speak of may be designated as public and private. Instances of both kinds are very numerous, but there are certain principles applicable to both which must be adhered to in order to support an indictment against parties for the crime. There must, in the first instance, be a legal foundation for the charge in question, with reference to the particular circumstances which form the subject matter of it. For where the cause of complaint is without legal existence, there cannot be a conspiracy in respect of it. There must, again, be somewhat of certainty in the ground-work of the prosecution, for where the alleged fraud concerns a profit or advantage so precarious as to admit of doubt whether it will, in reality, turn out to be beneficial, the court will not entertain an indictment for conspiracy in regard of it. Again, the mere breach of a civil contract, without a violation of public morals, will not amount to a conspiracy, although several persons may be engaged in a transaction by no means creditable to their character, and may, even virtually, be said to defraud the object of their intrigue. And, we shall see, by and by, that the same principle exists in the case of a civil trespass, unless it is intended to commit a breach of the public peace. If an agreement be entered into to indict or acquit, so as to leave the question of right and wrong indifferent, it is a conspiracy.² So, where certain persons agreed to hiss at the Birmingham Theatre, although one might have hissed without offence.³ So, a combination amongst officers to resign their commissions is a conspiracy. The military service cannot be determined by such a confederacy.⁴

Public frauds.] If people conspire together to defraud the community at large, the rule is general that they may be indicted for such an illegal combination. Thus to endeavour by an united agency to raise the price of necessaries is an example of this rule. Thus, an information was applied for and granted for combining to fix the price of salt.⁵ And the same law would apply in the case of corn or any other commodity.

¹ By Alderson, B., 9 C. & P. 109.

² 9 Rep. 56; 1 Salk. 374. See 33 Edw. 1, st. 3.

³ R. v. Clifford, 2 Campb. 372.

⁴ 3 Burr. 2476.

⁵ R. v. Norris and others, 2 Lord Keny. 300.

If a false rumour be raised for the purpose of raising or lowering the price of government securities, with a fraudulent intent, it is an offence of this nature, for it is a fraud levelled against all who might possibly have anything to do with the funds on the particular day when the trick operates. And it is no excuse to say, that there might not be any purchasers, for it is a principle in conspiracy, that whether the intended evil be successful or not, the character of the crime, and its consequences remain the same. De Berenger and others were convicted of a conspiracy of this nature by spreading reports of the death of Buonaparte during the war, and the likelihood of immediate peace.¹ A conspiracy to defraud the king of his revenue is punishable under this head. As where certain persons entered into a confederacy to impoverish the farmers of excise.² So, where persons united to cheat the crown through the medium of false vouchers.³

Again, combinations on the part of masters to lower the wages of their workmen, and by workmen to raise the price of labour, were, till a modern date, illegal. The journeymen tailors of Cambridge were once convicted of such a conspiracy. And a principle applicable at this day to the subject of conspiracy was recognized upon that occasion, that the refusal to work was not the crime, but the conspiracy to advance the rate of wages. But in connection with this law, there existed, at the same moment, a code which fixed the price of wages, and when the legislature resolved to remove all restrictions from trade, it was also determined to legalize combinations of this nature, provided there should be no intimidation nor violence towards individuals. Accordingly by the 4th section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, the following combined meetings amongst workmen were excluded from prosecution or penalty—such as take place for the sole purpose of consulting upon and determining the rate of wages or prices, which the parties entering into such agreement, or any of them, shall require or demand for his or their work, or the hours of time for which he or they will work in any manufacture, trade, or business, and that persons so meeting for the purposes aforesaid, or entering into such agreement aforesaid, shall not be liable to any prosecution or penalty for so doing, any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding. Mr. Baron Rolfe is reported to have said:—"Those who employ

¹ R. v. De Berenger and others, 3 M. & S. 67. In this case likewise the court took judicial notice of the existence of a war with France, there being so many statutes upon that subject. Id. 69. It was also objected that no person in particular was alleged to have been defrauded; but this omission was held to be quite immaterial, since it was possible that no one had been defrauded. The offence was complete independently of that consideration. And it was objected that there were not any funds of the United Kingdom, as stated in the indictment, the charges for the interest and debt being imposed upon Great Britain and Ireland separately, but this objection was likewise overruled, and judgment was passed.

² R. v. Starling and others, 1 Sid. 174.

³ R. v. Brisac and another, 4 East, 164.

labour may meet and say, we will not give more than such and such a rate, or we will stipulate for such and such a number of hours' work; we will make, in short, regulations beneficial to ourselves as employers, and we agree that we will not take any workmen that require more. On the other hand, the workmen may meet and say, we will not work for less than such and such a sum, and if anybody think to employ us on low wages, we agree we will not work for them. And we agree to form a fund and support one another until we get them to come to proper terms. My opinion is, that if there was no other object than to persuade people that it was their interest not to work except for certain wages, and not to work under certain regulations, complied with in a peaceable way, it was not illegal."¹

Then follows the 5th section for the protection of masters, excluding likewise from prosecution or penalty similar meetings on the part of masters, for the sole purpose of consulting upon and determining the rate of wages or prices which they shall pay to their journeymen or servants, or the hours of work in any manufacture, trade, or business. And agreements for the same purpose, whether verbal or written, are within the same protection.

But no threats, violence, intimidation, or molestation can be lawfully used in respect of these meetings, or any association upon the subject of wages. The 3rd section provides for this case. It is thereby enacted that, if any person shall by violence to the person or property of another, or by threats or intimidation, or by molesting, or in any way obstructing another, force, or endeavour to force, any journeyman, manufacturer, workman, or other person hired or employed in any manufacture, trade, or business, to depart from his hiring, employment, or work, or to return his work before the same shall be finished, or prevent, or endeavour to prevent any journeyman, manufacturer, workman, or other person not being hired or employed, from hiring himself to, or from accepting work or employment from any person or persons, or if any person shall use or employ violence to the person or property of another, or threats or intimidation, or shall molest or in any way obstruct another for the purpose of forcing or inducing such person to belong to any club or association, or to contribute to any common fund, or to pay any fine or penalty, or on account of his not belonging to any particular club or association, or not having contributed, or having refused to contribute, to any common fund, or to pay any fine or penalty, or on account of his not having complied, or of his refusing to comply with any rules, orders, regulations, or resolutions made to obtain an advance, or to reduce the rate of wages, or to lessen or alter the hours of working, or to decrease or alter the quantity of work, or to regulate the mode of carrying on any manufacture, trade or business, or the management thereof; or if any person shall by violence to the person or property of another, or by threats or intimidation, or by molesting facts which are obscurely alleged. It was charged that the defendant had deposed this: Master G. S., about the middle of July, 1681, was at Newnam, and the information then went on to show where Newnam was, but only in the innuendo. And judgment was arrested for this cause, after several arguments.¹ The use of the innuendo is to explain mistakes or ambiguities. An indictment, after assigning perjury concerning an assault, added, "and at the same time threatened to shoot her with a pistol." The information, however, when produced from the Bow Street office had the words "and at the same threatened to shoot her," &c. It was contended that the word time being left out, here was a fatal variance, and Lord Ellenborough acceded to the objection. There should have been an innuendo, for the information might have meant at the same place. The defendant was acquitted.²

¹ In R. v. Selsby and others, cited, Den. & P. 384, n.

If there be no occasion for an innuendo, it may be rejected.³

Lastly, it may be added, that if there be but one good assignment, it is sufficient to warrant a judgment for the crown. This was laid down positively by Holt, C. J., in a case where a general verdict had passed for the crown.⁴ And the usual ending, that so the defendant has committed perjury, must be preserved.⁵ Of course, care must be taken not to say, "against the form," &c., if the thing charged be only a perjury at common law.⁶

Information.] An information at common law is said not to require so much certainty as an indictment, whether the latter be at common law or on the statute. Thus, where the information was for perjury upon interrogatories administered in chancery, it was objected, that it had not been shown in what particular one the defendant had been perjured. But the court overruled the objection, saying, that each perjury was punishable by the common law, although they admitted that greater certainty was requisite under the statute.⁷ And an indictment at common law demands the same certainty as the statute of Eliz.⁸ It is observable, that the judge at the trial is to notice a variance between the information and the record, and that it is not by any means the province of the jury to do so. As where a matter of this sort had been permitted to be found specially, the court said, that the jury could not have any conusance on the subject. The judge at the trial

¹ R. v. Gripe, 1 Lord Raym. 256. R. v. Chedwicke, 1 Keb. 612, 635.

² R. v. Taylor, 1 Campb. 404.

³ In R. v. Aylett, 1 T. R. 70. In Roberts v. Camden, 9 East, 93.

⁴ The Queen v. Rhodes and Cole, 2 Ld. Raym. 886.

⁵ R. v. Read, Tho. Raym. 34. Sid. 66.

⁶ R. v. Bell, 3 Bulstr. 322. As to the effect of the word "knowing," as knowing the matters sworn to be false. See R. v. Lady Lawley, 1 Barnard, 263, 274, 287, 293, 459.

⁷ R. v. Wallengen, 1 Sid. 106.

⁸ Carth. 422, per Holt, C. J.

ought to have determined it. A venire de novo was accordingly awarded.¹

Indictment.—County Court.] An indictment for perjury in the county court, committed by a party examined as a witness on his own behalf, needs not to conclude, contra formam statuti. Martin, B., said it was perjury at common law.² With regard to the bill, it may be observed, in the first place, that an objection that the indictment had stated the bill to have been directed to Robert Lord Henley, &c., whereas in fact it was directed to Sir Robert Henley, Knight, &c., was overruled in R. v. Lookup.³

Answer in Chancery.] The statute 23 Geo. 2, operated to prevent a variance in consequence of a misdescription of the parties to a bill. An indictment stated, that a bill was filed in chancery by one T. against the defendant and another. The bill appeared to have been filed against these persons and the attorney-general. The matters, which were material, lay between the defendant and T. It was objected, that the omission of the attorney had created a fatal variance, but Lord Ellenborough said, that it would have been sufficient if the indictment had even omitted the mention of any other than the defendant. The statute would be entirely defeated should such subtleties prevail.⁴ But in a case where the indictment purported to set out the substance and effect of the bill, and stated an agreement concerning houses, Abbott, C. J., held that the word “house,” which appeared in the original bill, disclosed a fatal variance, being a difference in substance from houses, and the defendant was acquitted.⁵

If an answer be imperfectly entitled, it cannot be treated as a mere nullity. An answer was alleged in the indictment as an answer to the bill of J. C. Aberdeen, whereas the person's name was F. C. Aberdeen. The court having decided that the variance between J. C. A. and F. C. A. was not fatal, held also, that the answer above entitled could not be deemed void.⁶

Affidavit to hold to bail.] As to venue:—If an affidavit be assigned as the perjury in answer to an original application in any court, there is no need to show where that court was, there being a venue as to the false oath.⁷

A bill of Middlesex was described wrongly on one occasion, as issuing out of the office of the chief clerk assigned to inrol pleas, &c., and the court refused to consider these words as surplusage, upon which the prosecution was abandoned.⁸

¹ Rex v. Sykes, Tho. Raym. 202. That a party shall not take advantage of errors in the first record, when perjury is assigned upon matters sworn at a trial. See R. v. Wright, 1 Sid. 148; Tho. Raym. 74.

² R. v. Morgan, 6 Cox, 107.

³ Cited, 1 T. R. 240.

⁴ R. v. Benson, 2 Campb. 509. R. v. Powell, cor. Abbott, C. J.; Ry. & M., N. P. C. 101.

⁵ R. v. Spencer, Ry. & M. N. P. C. 97.

⁶ R. v. Roper, 1 Stark. 518.

⁷ R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

⁸ R. v. Schoole, Peake, 112.

If the affidavit be sworn in the country, the expression usually is, "Before E. F., gentleman, then being a commissioner duly authorized and empowered to take and receive affidavits touching and concerning matters and proceedings of or in the court of our said lord the king, before the king himself, to wit, on. &c., at, &c." An indictment charged, that the affidavit was sworn before A. without naming him as a commissioner otherwise than saying at some distance as such commissioner as aforesaid, when the word commissioner had not been before used, and Scarlett moved to arrest the judgment. But the court held that it was not necessary to set out the nature of the authority. It had been alleged that A. had power to administer the oath, and that, together with his name, was sufficient.¹

It is usual to add the words prout patet, and in indictments upon the statute of Eliz. they are necessary, but it has been solemnly decided, that the omission of the prout patet at common law will not vitiate the indictment.²

On the production of an affidavit charged to be false in the indictment, it appeared that the parts set forth were not continuous, but that they were separated by the introduction of other matter. This was pointed out as a variance; but Abbott, C. J., overruled the objection, and the court refused a rule for a new trial.³

The defendant was indicted in Middlesex for perjury committed in an affidavit, and the indictment concluded with a prout patet by the affidavit, as filed at Westminster. He was acquitted, but was again indicted for the same offence, with this difference, that the affidavit was here stated to have been sworn in London, and there was an averment traversing the jurat, and alleging that the defendant was, in fact, sworn in Middlesex. To this charge the defendant pleaded autrefois acquit, and the court gave judgment in his favour, because the jurat was not conclusive evidence of the place of swearing the affidavit, and the whole crime might, consequently, have been tried upon the first indictment.⁴

Indictment for subornation of perjury.] Where the words were, "by sinister means," caused, &c., the court held the allegation sufficient, although the means were not specified.⁵ The words "solicit, persuade," &c., imply that the oath was actually taken, and this is necessary, because there cannot be a subornation without a perjury.⁶ But the attempt to suborn is a heinous offence, and will be severely punished by the court.⁷

Where the indictment charged the defendants and each of them, with a suborning of four witnesses, and each of them, it was objected, that here were several charges joined in one indictment,

¹ R. v. Callanan, 6 B. & C. 102.

² R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

³ R. v. Callanan, 6 B. & C. 102; and see R. v. Solomon, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 252.

⁴ R. v. Emden, 9 East, 437.

⁵ The Queen v. Rhodes and Cole, 2 Ld. Raym. 886.

⁶ 2 Ld. Raym, 886, ut supra. R. v. Hinton & Brown, 3 Mod. 122; The Queen v. Darby, 7 Mod. 101.

⁷ R. v. Johnson, 2 Show. 2. R. v. Tayler and another, 2 Keb. 399.

and likewise, that it was too general to swear that one H. and his brother had committed perjury. The court made a rule to show cause.¹

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 21, in every indictment for subornation of perjury, or for corrupt bargaining, &c., or inciting, &c., unlawfully, wilfully, falsely, fraudulently, deceitfully, maliciously, or corruptly to take, &c., any oath, affirmation, &c., it shall be sufficient when the perjury has been committed, to allege the offence as above, and then to allege that the defendant unlawfully, wilfully, and corruptly, did cause and procure, &c. And when no perjury has been committed, the substance of the offence will suffice without setting forth any of the matters hereinbefore rendered unnecessary to be set forth. And by sect. 22, a certificate containing the substance and effect of the indictment and trial, and signed by the clerk of the court, &c., shall be sufficient evidence of such indictment.

Indictment for perjury before a committee of the House of Commons.] In an indictment for perjury before a committee appointed to try a petition concerning the borough of New Malton, a count stated, that an election took place "by virtue of a certain precept of the high sheriff of the county aforesaid, duly issued to the bailiff of the said borough of New Malton," &c.² The precept of the sheriff being produced at the trial, it appeared to be directed, "To the bailiff of the borough of Malton." Upon this it was objected, that the precept in the indictment being concerning New Malton, there was a variance. But Lord Ellenborough held, that it was not matter of description, and that if the precept was actually issued to the bailiff of the borough of New Malton, it was sufficient, whatever might be the tenor of the direction.³ But the return to the Crown Office stated, that the members, naming them, were returned for the borough of Malton, and the objection was renewed with effect. It was insisted for the prosecution, that the indictment did not profess to set out the tenor of the return, or the manner in which the members were returned, and that the words Malton and New Malton, were used indiscriminately in the journals of the House of Commons. But Lord Ellenborough said, that this averment must be understood as a description of something, and the defendant was accordingly acquitted for this variance.⁴

Indictment for perjury before a magistrate.] The indictment for perjury before a magistrate should state, that the offence was committed upon an information and examination. The words "say, depose, swear, charge," and "give the said justice to be

¹ R. v. Longbotom and another, 1 Barnard. 314; and Giles v. Gwyn was cited, and it was said the indictment there was held bad for the first exception.

² But it is better to say, that an election "came on," &c., without mentioning the precept.

³ R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb. 139.

⁴ R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb. 141. See also R. v. Harris, 5 B. & Ald. 926.

informed," were deemed applicable.¹ On the contrary, where it did not appear that a charge was made or pending, the indictment was held insufficient.² If the perjury be committed at quarter sessions, the chairman is not a competent witness.³

So, to allege, that before M. G., Esq., and T. H. H., clerk, two of the justices, &c., "J. O. came and exhibited a certain information upon oath," was held insufficient, because it did not thereby appear that J. O. was sworn before M. G. and T. H. H.⁴ So, where a deposition is required by statute (as under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 65, s. 9,) the absence of such deposition will render the proceedings informal, and a witness for the defendants, who was said to have sworn falsely before the justices, was held not rightly convicted of perjury.⁵

Commissioners of assessed taxes.] The indictment alleged a certain notice of appeal to the assessors. The evidence disclosed a notice of appeal to the surveyors of the commission. This was a fatal mistake, because it is necessary to set out all particulars incident to the jurisdiction.⁶

Of evidence in perjury.] It is said that a party may be punished instantly by the court on the evidence, as it were, of his own confession, in facie curiæ. Thus, where a party having sworn to an affidavit in the Court of Common Pleas, appeared in the King's Bench upon a summons, and confessed the falsity of his oath, the court ordered that he should be set in the pillory.⁷ So, bail who prevaricate, may be committed and punished, if the court see fit.⁸

It is important to observe, that throughout all the proceedings for different perjuries, the oath charged against the defendant must be proved to have been deliberately false to the satisfaction of the jury. Mistake, error, inadvertence, are not sufficient grounds for preferring so grave a complaint as perjury.⁹ If a defendant have uttered two contradictory statements upon oath, the course is to point out specifically in the indictment which of the oaths was corrupt, and then to give evidence of the testimony thus given in two ways. This proof will be sufficient without the form of two witnesses, as on other occasions of perjury, and also without showing a corrupt motive, or negating the probability of any mistake. Because, in fact, in such a case the contradiction actually arises on the side of the defendant himself.¹⁰

Witnesses.] The principal observations, however, which we have to make on the general head of evidence apply to witnesses. These

¹ R. v. Gardiner, 2 Moo. C. C. 95; 8 C. & P. 737.

² R. v. Pearson, 8 C. & P. 119.

³ R. v. Gazard, 8 C. & P. 595.

⁴ R. v. Goodfellow, Car. & M. 569.

⁵ R. v. Scotton, 8 Jur. 409.

⁶ Rex. v.—1 Cox, C. C. 50.

⁷ R. v. Thorogood, 8 Mod. 179.

⁸ 1 Chit. Rep. 116.

⁹ See 2 Hawk. c. 69, s. 2, citing authorities; and see also s. 7.

¹⁰ R. v. Knill, 5 B. & A. 929, n. As to averment of identity, see R. v. Bennett, Den. & P. 290.

persons may be considered here in reference,—first, to their number,—secondly, to their competency.

First, it used to be established as a general principle, that two witnesses or proof were necessary to convict a defendant of perjury, and for this simple reason, that there must be a majority of oaths against the accused. Thus, by Parker, C. J., “presumption is ever to be made in favour of innocence, and the oath of the party will have a regard paid to it until disproved. Therefore, to convict a man of perjury, a probable, a credible witness is not enough; but it must be a strong and clear evidence, and more numerous than the evidence given for the defendant, for else there is only oath against oath.”¹ And the court at the Old Bailey laid down this point still more decidedly on one occasion, observing that this must be so upon each assignment of perjury. The law, they said, will not leave it to the jury to determine which oath they will believe, because the person indicted for perjury has already sworn one way.² So, that if there be but oath against oath, the defendant must be acquitted.³ There is an exception, however, to this rule, and it is where the defendant has created evidence against himself. A person named Knill, was convicted of having sworn contradictory oaths, the one before the House of Lords, the other before a committee of the House of Commons. One witness only deposed to the contradictions, yet the court denied a rule nisi for a new trial, because the contradiction had happened through the party’s own agency.⁴ So, where there was one vivâ voce witness against the defendant, and a document written by himself contradicting his own statement upon oath.⁵ Moreover, two witnesses are not essentially necessary to disprove the fact which has been sworn to, for if a material circumstance be proved by another witness, it may turn the scale, and warrant a conviction.⁶

So, where the defendant swore that certain invoices were produced by him, D. C., C. was the only witness, and he denied the statement, adding, that the defendant had produced other invoices of the dates of which he made a memorandum. This was held

¹ 10 Mod. 194. S. P. R. v. Broughton, 2 Str. 1230. S. P. R. v. Naylock, Suppl. to Vin. Ab. vol. 5, p. 379, K. 3, O. B. 1786. R. v. Browne, M. & M. 318; 3 C. & P. 572. See 2 Lew. C. C. 259.

² R. v. Ledwick, Suppl. to Vin. ut supra, p. 380, O. B. 1788.

³ R. v. Fanshaw, Skin. 327.

⁴ R. v. Knill, 5 B. & A. 929; ante.

⁵ R. v. Mayhew, 6 C. & P. 315.

⁶ R. v. Lee, 2 Russ. C. M. 650. See also R. v. Mudie, 1 Moo. & Rob. 128. The defendant’s account book, given in by him to the Insolvent Debtors’ Court, was put in, and several persons whose names were specified in the indictment as debtors, and omitted in the schedule, appeared in the book as debtors to the defendant, and “paid” was marked to their accounts in the defendant’s writing. These persons were called, and stated that they did not pay until after the petition and schedule. It was objected, that here was merely oath against oath, and Lord Tenterden, though he would not stop the case, thought the point worthy of discussion. The defendant, however, was acquitted upon another ground.

corroborative evidence.¹ And the ruling now is, that every part need not be doubly sworn to. It was sworn by the defendant, that A. was not out of his sight between eight and nine A.M. Assignment upon this, one witness proved, that A. was, in fact, at one place, and another witness proved that A. was, in fact, at another place six miles off between those hours. This was held sufficient.² But where the indictment alleged that the defendant swore that he did not play at cards from between six and seven until nine, and then assigned perjury, by an averment that he did play between six and eight, it was held bad. The defendant might have played at five minutes past six, and yet not have played from between six and seven until nine, for the words "from between six and seven" might be any time short of seven, five minutes or five seconds to that hour.³ The prosecutor swore that the prisoner owed him a quarter's rent; the prisoner denied this upon oath at nisi prius, in June, 1851. The son of the prosecutor swore to an admission by the prisoner, that in August, 1850, he owed three or four quarters' rent. This was held insufficient, for the money might have been paid immediately.⁴ Something must be shown likewise to prove that the oath of the prosecutor is preferable to that of the defendant, upon which perjury has been assigned.⁵

If a defendant makes distinct admissions inconsistent with his innocence, one may be proved by one witness and one by another.⁶ And upon one occasion the defendant was allowed to convict himself without any further proof. As where the question was concerning the presence of certain women at a riot at his mill. He gave information upon oath before a justice, that they were so present, and then, having been tampered with, he swore at the trial that they were not at the riot; and Yates, J., deemed this evidence of itself sufficient, and the defendant was convicted upon it alone, and transported.⁷ However, this case does not seem to have been presented to the notice of a learned judge upon a much more modern inquiry. A witness at sessions contradicted the entire of his deposition before the magistrate, and perjury was assigned accordingly. Gurney, B., held this proof insufficient. In order to convict the defendant, the jury ought to have been satisfied either that the testimony given at the sessions was false according to the charge, or that the deposition was true.⁸ A fortiori if the evidence is only confirmed in some slight particulars, it will

¹ R. v. Webster, 1 Fost. & F. 515.

² R. v. Roberts, 2 Car. & K. 607.

³ R. v. Whitehouse, 3 Cox, 86.

⁴ R. v. Boulter, Den. & P. 396; 3 Car. & K. 236; 21 L. J. M. C. 57.

⁵ S. C.

⁶ R. v. Hook, 27 L. J. M. C. 222; Dears. & B. 606.

⁷ Anon., 2 Russ. C. M. 652. And in this opinion Lord Mansfield, Wilmot and Aston, JJ., concurred. Id. note (u); one oath being said to disprove the other. Id. 545.

⁸ R. v. Wheatland, 8 C. & P. 238.

be insufficient.¹ So where there was the contradictory oath of the prosecutor, but nothing more, excepting the oath of a woman, who counted certain monies agreeably to the evidence of the prosecutor, but whose evidence was not independent of that evidence.² Something more than the oath of one witness will suffice, but it must be independent testimony.³ There needs not be a direct contradiction.⁴

Secondly, we go on to examine the competency of witnesses in perjury,⁵ but many of the following cases are scarcely now applicable by reason of the Act 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85.

Where an action had been brought by B. against C., it was held, that C. could not be examined as a witness upon an indictment for perjury against A., who had given evidence at the trial.⁶ And Mr. Noland in a note to Strange, expresses the same opinion, taking a distinction between cases at common law and those upon the statute.⁷ But, on the other hand, Mr. Phillipps observes, that the party injured may be a witness, according to the sense of modern decisions, whether the prosecution be at common law or upon the statute, since, as in an action to recover his moiety, he would be precluded from giving the conviction in evidence, the objection to his competency would seem to be removed.⁸ However, at common law, it was considered, that the party injured might be a witness,⁹ and so it continued to be held, until a notion prevailed that the witness would reap some advantage from the conviction, for instance, that the Court of Chancery would relieve against the consequences of a judgment obtained by perjury. Thus it was said, that in perjury, a person should not be received to give evidence as prosecutor, because he might reap a benefit in case of a verdict for the king.¹⁰ The same law was afterwards laid down where certain defendants in an ejectment were refused as witnesses by the lord chief justice, in an indictment for perjury committed upon the previous trial.¹¹

So, a party who had been compelled to pay a sum of money through the evidence of the defendant, the only witness examined, and who had filed a bill for relief, was rejected, for the Court of Chancery, said Lord Kenyon, upon having this new matter stated in a new or supplemental bill, would direct that the money should be refunded.¹²

So, where a verdict had passed against the prosecutor in consequence of the testimony of the defendant in perjury, Lord Kenyon

¹ R. v. Yates, Car. & M. 132.

² R. v. Braithwaite, 8 Cox, 254, 444.

³ S. C.

⁴ R. v. Towey, 8 Cox, 328.

⁵ R. v. Povey, Lambert, and others, 1 Sid 237.

⁶ R. v. Bacon, 2 Ro. Ab. 697. See Bull. N. P. 288, et seq.

⁷ 2 Str. 1104, note (1); S. P.

by Sir. W. D. Evans, 1 Salk. 283, note (a).

⁸ Phil. on Ev. 4th ed. p. 120.

⁹ Bull. N. P. 289.

¹⁰ R. v. Whiting, 1 Salk. 283;

1 Ld. Raym. 396.

¹¹ R. v. Ellis, 2 Str. 1104. S. P.

R. v. Newens, 4 Geo. 1, cited there.

R. v. Nunez, 2 Str. 1043. Cas.

T. H. 265.

¹² R. v. Dalby, Peake, 16.

would not suffer the prosecutor to be sworn, he having admitted that he had not paid the debt and costs. It was said, that the bail had been fixed, and would, therefore, be liable at all events, but Lord Kenyon said, that the prosecutor might be relieved in a court of equity against a judgment obtained on the sole evidence of the defendant, in case of a conviction, and the proposed witness was, consequently, rejected.¹

These decisions, however, were at length doubted, and afterwards overturned after considerable discussion. Lord Hardwicke first threw out a hint that R. v. Whiting, upon which the other cases followed, was a case in which the credit, rather than the competency, of the witness was at stake,² and in a few years afterwards, a decision was made the other way. There was an indictment against a defendant for a fraudulent oath supposed to have been taken in chancery, and the prosecutor tendered himself for the purpose of being examined. The chief justice (Sir William Lee) received his testimony, saying, that as no bill of exceptions lay, the prosecutor would otherwise be without remedy, whereas the defendant, if convicted, might move for a new trial. Lee, C. J., said further, that in Nunez's case, the suit in the exchequer was then still pending, whereas here, the suit in equity seemed at an end. The defendant, however, was acquitted, because there was only one witness against him.³ The next case was mentioned by Lord Mansfield in giving judgment upon a question, whether the borrower was competent to prove usury.⁴ The defendant had bought an estate for the plaintiff; he articulated in his own name, and refused to convey, and by his answer denied any trust. The bill was dismissed, and the defendant was indicted for perjury, and convicted on the evidence of the plaintiff in equity confirmed by circumstances, and by the declaration of the defendant. The plaintiff then petitioned for a supplemental bill in nature of a bill of review, stating the conviction, but the petition was dismissed because the conviction was not evidence.⁵ However, the point was finally decided in a solemn manner soon afterwards. The defendant, in an indictment for perjury, had brought an action against the prosecutor, who filed a bill against him in equity for a discovery and an account, and obtained an injunction. The defendant then denied the allegations of the prosecutor, and obtained a dissolution of the injunction, upon which he was indicted for perjury. The cause and the indictment came on to be tried at the same assizes, the indictment standing first, and the court held, that the testimony of the prosecutor should be received, because he could not avail himself of the conviction, either at law or in equity. The court added, that they could not accede

¹ R. v. Eden, 1 Esp. 97.

² Ca. Temp. Hardw. 359; and see Bull. N. P. 283, note (a).

³ R. v. Broughton, 2 Str. 1229.

⁴ Abrahams q. t. v. Bunn, 4 Burr. 2251, and held that he was. This case confirms the overturning of the decision above enumerated.

See R. v. Menetonè, Peake, 12; cited. R. v. D'Faria, Id. 104.

R. v. Pepys, Id. 138.

⁵ Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 4 East, 577, 581; 4 Burr. 2255.

to this objection on the part of the defendant without breaking in upon the authority of Smith v. Prager,¹ and Bent v. Baker,² where it was decided that where a party is not immediately interested in the cause, nor has any interest in the event in support of which the verdict in that cause may be given in evidence by him in any other proceeding instituted by or against him, he is a competent witness. The rule, therefore, which had been obtained for setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial was, accordingly, discharged.³ However, in a later case, where it was clearly admitted that a person who had not paid the debt and costs of a prior action, was not rendered incompetent as a witness for the prosecution, he was, nevertheless, held to be disqualified upon the disclosure of the additional circumstance that he expected the defendant to be a witness against his interest in a similar action coming on for trial after the indictment. This was such an immediate interest as rendered him incompetent.⁴ And, in chancery pending a suit, the complainant's testimony has been rejected.⁵ A. had agreed to indemnify B.'s partners against a suit in chancery which they had instituted against him. A. was indicted for perjury in his answer. Here B. was a good witness against A., notwithstanding the guarantee.⁶

It is no objection to a witness that he has sworn to the fact which he is about to depose to in an indictment for perjury. As where the defendant had filed a cross bill against a witness who, in her answer, had sworn to the very fact she was brought forward to prove upon an indictment. Because her answer would not help her in the Court of Chancery, since other evidence must be adduced there before she could prove her case, and so she could not be said to have an immediate interest in the event of the suit.⁷

Evidence to prove a general indictment for perjury.] The chief points of evidence which tend towards the proof of an indictment for perjury are:—1, the proceedings in which the offence was committed; 2, the oath of the defendant; 3, the matter sworn to; and 4, the assignment of perjury.

First, as to the proceedings.⁸ To show the nature of the cause in which the perjury took place as alleged in the indictment, it is usual to produce the record of the court.⁹ If the trial be for a perjury committed at the assizes or sittings, produce an office copy of the record, or the nisi prius record.¹⁰ The production of

¹ Smith q. t. v. Prager, 7 T. R. 60.

² 3 T. R. 27.

³ R. v. Boston, 4 East, 572; And see Needham v. Smith, 2 Vern. 464; 1 Campb. 10.

⁴ R. v. Hulme, 7 C. & P. 8.

⁵ R. v. Fanshaw, Skin. 327.

⁶ R. v. Yates, Car. & M. 132.

⁷ R. v. Pepys, Peake, N. P. C. 138.

⁸ Note, that all formal proofs

must be admitted at the trial, or the judge will direct an acquittal. R. v. Thornhill, 8 C. & P. 575.

⁹ The chancellor will take care that all proper documents in his court shall be produced. See Mont. Bank. C. 214. And so will the lord chief baron, security being given for the safe return of the record. 2 Y. & Jer. 512.

¹⁰ Arch. Crim. Pl. p. 366.

the postea, though no evidence of the verdict, is enough to show that a trial took place, so as to introduce an account of what a witness swore at the trial.¹ So, that where an objection was made that a copy of the final judgment ought to have been produced, it was overruled.²

So also, though no postea be indorsed, but only a minute of a verdict, the nisi prius record is evidence for this purpose, and the examination of one defendant after his acquittal may be proved by parole evidence.³ But if no record is made up, so that it does not appear whether any trial has happened or not, the minutes will not be received, for the main link is wanting in such a case.⁴

It is not competent to travel out of the record, nor to introduce new matter into the proceedings. Therefore, where the defendant was charged with perjury before a magistrate, it was held, that parole evidence could not be brought forward to aid the written deposition by showing other matters sworn to by the defendant upon the same occasion.⁵ But where a document failed to show the presence of certain justices at sessions, by reason of its being faulty as a record, it was held, that parole evidence might be adduced to show the presence of those justices according to the statement made in the indictment.⁶

We must next show that the defendant took an oath. The particular mode of swearing, however, need not be testified, and proof that the party was sworn and examined will satisfy the allegation in the indictment that he was duly sworn, &c.⁷

Thirdly, the matters sworn to must be given in evidence. Should the count allege that the defendant swore certain matters in substance and effect (which is not a desirable or prudent allegation), it must be proved that the defendant swore the whole in substance and effect of that which is set forth in the count as his evidence. For want of being able to do this the count will fail.⁸ And this rule holds, although there be distinct assignments of perjury in that count.⁹ It is moreover necessary to give the whole of the evidence sworn by the defendant referrible to the fact on which the perjury is assigned. For the defendant may have explained an apparent falsity in a subsequent part of his examination. Therefore, if there be two answers in chancery relative to the same matter, it would be competent for the defendant to prove that the second answer contained a satisfactory

¹ Per Pratt, C. J. Str. 162.

² R. v. Minns, R. v. Iles, cited, Bull. N. P. 243.

³ R. v. Browne, M. & M. 315; 3 C. & P. 572. This case shakes the authority of a decision made by Lord Kenyon upon a trial for perjury, where it appeared that the postea had not been indorsed. R. v. Page, 6 Esp. 83.

⁴ The Queen v. Carter, 6 Mod. 168.

⁵ R. v. Wylde, 6 C. & P. 380.

⁶ R. v. Bellamy, Ry. & Moo. N. P. C. 171. See also R. v. Ward, 6 C. & P. 367.

⁷ R. v. Rowley, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 302.

⁸ R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb. 134.

⁹ Id.

explanation of the first, in which case he would be entitled to an acquittal.¹ And Lord Kenyon directed an acquittal where the witness who had taken down the defendant's evidence proved the words on which the perjury was assigned, but could not speak to any other part of his evidence, and his lordship mentioned Carr's case.²

But where the witness stated, that he took no note of the evidence, but that from his duty as attorney's clerk he had paid particular attention, that he would not undertake to say that he had given the whole of the defendant's testimony, but that he would swear that nothing else was said which qualified what he had stated, and that to the best of his recollection he had given all that was material to this inquiry and relating to the transaction in question, Littledale, J., received the evidence, and the prisoner was convicted, and the judges subsequently expressed their approbation of the decision.³

So, where three witnesses stated, that the defendant swore certain matters, but admitted that they did not take down the evidence as it was given, nor did they even profess to relate the whole of the evidence so sworn, the proof was allowed.⁴

So, where an answer on a cross-examination was quite foreign to the general merits of the case, upon an indictment for perjury in this particular, it was held sufficient to prove all the cross-examination, only because that was entirely unconnected with the original examination.⁵

It also lies upon the prosecutor to show that the matters sworn to were material,⁶ or, at all events, bore in some way upon the question at issue; and this proof lies upon the prosecutor, for it will not be taken by intendment.⁷

The statement of a deceased witness being tendered in evidence for the prosecution, certain declarations of the same witness, not upon oath, were proved upon cross-examination, and although these were material to the defendant, they were held to have been properly rejected, not being on oath.⁸ A notice of set-off, intitled in a cause A. B. v. C. D., and signed by C. D.'s attorney, will not satisfy an allegation that a cause was depending between A. B. and C. D.⁹

Lastly, the assignment of perjury must be proved as laid. And this must be done by showing, that the matter sworn to was really false, and not merely supposed to be so from the circumstance of the defendant having written a letter to that effect, or otherwise. The recital of a deed is evidence in other cases, but not to prove

¹ R. v. Carr, 1 Sid. 418; 2 Ves. & B. 258.

² R. v. Jones, Peake, 38.

³ R. v. Rowley, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 299; 1 Moo. C. C. 111.

⁴ R. v. Munton, 3 C. & P. 498.

⁵ R. v. Dowlin, Peake, 170.

⁶ Under the statute they must have been immediately material, but indictments are rarely preferred now on 5 Eliz.

⁷ Supp. to Vin. Ab. vol. 5, p. 379, K. 9. See also R. v. Jary and King, Palm. 382, 535; Ld. Raym. 889.

⁸ R. v. Parker, 3 Dowl. 242.

⁹ R. v. Stoveld, 6 C. & P. 489.

perjury, nor a letter of the party indicted, though sworn to be the handwriting of the defendant.¹

Where perjury was assigned upon a statement by the defendant, that his property qualification was 300*l.* a year, in order to enable him to sit in parliament, it was held, that the jury must be satisfied of the negative of this qualification, and likewise of the guilty knowledge of the defendant respecting it.²

And if one assignment be shown to be good, there must, upon a general verdict, be judgment for the crown,³ unless, indeed, several assignments be crowded together into one count, and there be an allegation that the defendant swore in substance and effect, in which case all the assignments in that count must be proved.⁴

An award made pursuant to an order of nisi prius is not evidence against the defendant, if produced merely as proof that nothing was due to him. The defendant was charged with perjury arising from an application for a capias against the prosecutor for 50*l.* An award was put in showing that nothing was due to the defendant. But the court held, that it had been improperly received in evidence. Not because the truth of the statement was necessarily inconsistent with the defendant's believing it to be true, for the defendant's knowledge of its falsehood would require to be proved by other evidence, but because the decision of the arbitrator in respect of that fact, was no more than a declaration of his opinion, and there was no instance of a declaration of such opinion being received in evidence of a fact against the party to be affected by the proof of it in any criminal case.⁵ In perjury, that A. made B. executor, the probate must be produced; to prove that A. devised real estates, the original will must be brought forward, and one of the attesting witnesses called.⁶ In an indictment for perjury, an averment stated a suit in the prerogative court to dispute the validity of a codicil. The production of the original allegation of both parties, signed by their advocates, with proof of their signatures, and of their acting as advocates in that court, was held sufficient without the caveat. The allegations were produced from the registrar of the court.⁷

Answer in Chancery.] In this case it is necessary to prove:—1. The bill. 2. The answer, and that it was made on oath before a

¹ R. v. Carr, 1 Sid. 418. The defendant was indicted for perjury, he having sworn falsely to his schedule of debts. It was proposed to show, that persons, whose names were not mentioned in the indictment, were also debtors to the defendant, and omitted in the schedule; but Lord Tenterden would not permit it. R. v. Mudie, 1 Moo. & Rob. 128.

² Sir J. E. de Beauvoir, 7 C. & P. 17.

³ The Queen v. Rhodes and Cole, Ld. Raym. 886; 1 Ke. 213.

⁴ See R. v. Buckworth and others, 1 Sid. 377. It is not competent for a defendant to offer evidence to disprove an assignment of perjury upon which the prosecutor offers no evidence. R. v. Hemp, 5 C. & P. 468.

⁵ 17 L. J. Q. B. 187. R. v. Moreau, 11 Q. B. 1028.

⁶ R. v. Turner, 2 Car. & K. 732.

⁷ S. C.

master in chancery. 3. The falsity of the matters contained in the answers.

First, the bill is produced, or an examined copy, and then the answer, but it is worthy of attention, that no copy of the answer can be received. The original of that instrument must always be brought forward in prosecutions for perjury. It is said, however, that, perhaps, a copy might be sufficient to warrant the grand jury in finding the bill of indictment, although the original must, of course, be produced at the trial.¹

A copy of the bill, however, has been admitted, but, if the bill be taken off the file, it is not evidence.²

In proceeding upon an answer to a bill before amendment, the amended bill was put in, and the amendments were proved to have been made by the clerk according to his duty, but the person who actually wrote these corrections was not called. Lord Tenterden held that these proofs were sufficient, and that the amendments were not material to the case.³ But if, upon exceptions, a second answer to a bill be sent in, the defendant has a right to have that also read in order to explain what he had said in his first answer.⁴

Next, it must be shown that the answer was put in upon oath before a master in chancery. And this is done by proving the jurat, and that the name subscribed is the defendant's handwriting. The defendant's signature proves that he was the person who exhibited the answer, and the signature of the master is proof that the person who did exhibit it was regularly sworn to the truth of its contents. Therefore, where the answer purports to be sworn before a master, it is sufficient to prove the handwriting of the master, and that of the defendant.⁵ And so in proving perjury committed in any answer sworn before a baron of the exchequer, you need only prove the handwriting of the baron and that of the defendant.⁶ However, although no proof of identity beyond the facts of a person calling himself A.B. being sworn, and his signing the answer, is necessary,⁷ yet no return of the master will be sufficient without proof of the defendant's oath.⁸ The same law prevails with respect to the proof of depositions in cases of perjury.⁹

It lies upon the defendant to prove that he has been personated, if such should be the case;¹⁰ that is to say, as soon as the evidence of his handwriting, and of that of the master, have been

¹ Chambers v. Robinson, Bull. N. P. 239; Trin. 12 Geo. 1. R. v. Baspoole, 2 Show. 486; as to depositions in chancery.

² R. v. Fanshaw, Skin. 327.

³ R. v. Laycock, 4 C. & P. 326.

⁴ R. v. Carr, 1 Sid. 418; Taylor on Evidence, 598.

⁵ See R. v. Morris, 2 Burr. 1189; S. C. 1 Leach, 50; R. v. Benson, 2 Camp. 508.

⁶ R. v. Nunez, 2 Str. 1043, in marg.

⁷ Bull. N. P. 239. R. v. James, 1 Show. 397. R. v. Morris, 2 Burr. 1189.

⁸ Bull. N. P. 239. Anon. 3 Mod. 116.

⁹ Arch. Crim. Pl. 87.

¹⁰ 2 Burr. 1189.

tendered as above mentioned. The recital of the place in the jurat where the oath is administered is sufficient proof that it was there taken. The third and last proof is the falsity of the answer.¹

Affidavit to hold to bail.] The affidavit sworn by the defendant, and the falsehood of it, are the chief features of evidence necessary to support this indictment. There are, therefore, to be proved,—
1. The affidavit sworn by the defendant. 2. The averments of perjury.

The proper officer will produce the affidavit at the trial, and the handwriting of the defendant must then be proved, or that he was sworn to the contents of the instrument, and also, if under the statute, that the affidavit was in some way used in the prosecution to which it has relation, but not if at common law. And the handwriting of the officer who administered the oath must be proved.² The words “by the court” being shown to be in the handwriting of one of the masters of the court, is evidence of the swearing, without proof that the master was present in court at the time.³

Notwithstanding some ancient opinions to the contrary,⁴ it is now necessary to produce the original affidavit, and, therefore, a copy would be rejected as insufficient. The officer will prove that the indictment in question has been filed of record, although at common law the allegation and proof are unnecessary. But it is otherwise upon the statute, for there it must appear that the affidavit was filed of record.⁵ Next, if the proceeding be on the statute, it must be shown that the affidavit was used;⁶ but the crime is complete at common law, whether any use be made of the affidavit or not;⁷ for the perjury is complete when the affidavit is sworn, and the omission of some formal regulation is immaterial.⁸ But in the case of ordinary documents secondary evidence is admissible.⁹

The statute 23 Geo. 2, c. 11, s. 1, having directed that the authority of the person who administers the oath should be alleged, it must appear, that the officer who administered the oath upon this occasion was acting in his usual capacity, upon which the judge will take notice of his authority. In cases where judicial notice cannot be taken of the power to give oaths, evidence must certainly be adduced to prove that authority.¹⁰ But the appointment need not, in general, be shown, as in the case of a commissioner who takes affidavits in the country, and in many other instances.¹¹

¹ R. v. Spencer, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 97; 1 C. & P. 260.

² 1 C. & P. 260.

³ R. v. Turner, 2 Car. & K. 732.

⁴ See R. v. James, 1 Show. 397.

⁵ R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

⁶ R. and Reg. v. Taylor, Holt, 534.

⁷ R. v. Crossley, 7 T. R. 315.

⁸ R. v. Spencer, supra.

⁹ R. v. Milne, 2 Fost. & F. 10.

¹⁰ Archb. Crim. Pl. p. 365.

¹¹ See R. v. James, 1 Show. 397. R. v. Verelst, 3 Campb. 432. R.

Judgment.] The production of the book from the judgment office in which the incipitur is entered, will satisfy the allegation that judgment was entered upon an action.¹

Grand jury.] Evidence that the defendant swore differently before the magistrate is not sufficient, because there is no certainty as to which was the true oath, or whether both were alike untrue.² Still, a person may be convicted of perjury for swearing falsely before a grand jury, and a witness, upon the same indictment, and a police officer in the grand jury room may prove the case, for they are not sworn to secrecy like the jury.³

By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, s. 111, the clerk of every court holden under this Act shall cause a note of all complaints and summonses, and of all orders, and of all judgments and executions, and returns thereto, and of all fines, and of all other proceedings of the court, to be fairly entered from time to time in a book belonging to the court, which shall be kept at the office of the court; and such entries in the said book, or a copy thereof bearing the seal of the court, and purporting to be signed and certified as a true copy by the clerk of the court, shall at all times be admitted in all courts and places whatsoever as evidence of such entries, and of the proceeding referred to by such entry or entries, and of the regularity of such proceeding, without any further proof.

Subornation.] In this case the principal evidence will be the perjury and the subornation. Thus, the proceedings before the judge, as stated in the present indictment, must be proved, together with the oath of the person suborned, the matters which he swore to, and the falsehood of them. It was, indeed, attempted upon one occasion to produce the record of conviction as sufficient evidence of the perjury, but the prisoner's⁴ counsel insisted that this would not be conclusive, that the prisoner had a right to controvert the guilt of the individual whom he was charged with having suborned, and that the evidence given on the former trial ought to be submitted to the consideration of the present jury. The recorder entertaining the same opinion, compelled the counsel for the crown to go through the whole case, as though the jury had the question of the original prisoner's guilt solely before them.⁵

Thus it is also in the cases of subornation of perjury before commissioners of bankrupts, and concerning a bastard child, above al-

v. Howard, 1 Moo. & Rob. 187. "I must take it," said Patteson, J., in the last case, "that somebody swore this affidavit before the commissioners;" and the learned judge recognized the authority of the commissioners without proof of the appointment.

¹ R. v. Gordon, Car. & M. 410.

As to the postea (indorsement) see R. v. Page, 2 Esp. 649, n.

² R. v. Hughes, 1 Car. & K. 519.

³ R. v. Hughes, ut supra.

⁴ He was indicted for suborning another to take a false oath concerning a seaman's will.

⁵ R. v. Reilly, 1 Leach, 454,

455, n.

luded to. The proceedings before the proper tribunal, the oath of the defendant, the matters which he has sworn to, and the falsity of them, constitute the necessary evidence to prove the perjury. There is, however, this distinction in cases of perjury before commissioners of bankrupts between the bankrupt himself and third persons, namely, that where the former is indicted for perjury, strict proof of the proceedings is necessary, whereas in the latter case, the adjudication of the commissioners is sufficient to prove the fact of bankruptcy. Thus, in an indictment against a bankrupt for perjury upon his last examination, Lord Ellenborough was disposed to think, that not only the commission of bankruptcy, but also the trading, the debt of the petitioning creditor, and the act of bankruptcy, should have been given in evidence. His lordship said he would save the point for the defendant, who was, however, acquitted on the merits.¹ In an indictment, on the other hand, against a third person who had been examined before commissioners, their declaration of the bankruptcy was held sufficient by Abbott, J.² But, secondly, you must prove the subornation. This is done by showing that the defendant wilfully incited the other person to take the false oath, (which, as we have seen, must, in fact, be taken in order to constitute this offence,) and, it seems, that the bare solicitation of the defendant for this purpose would be evidence for the jury to consider, in the absence of proof to the contrary, whether the defendant had not acted knowingly and corruptly.

It has been held, that a prisoner convicted of taking a false oath, but pardoned before judgment, was a competent witness against the party who had suborned him, being restored to his former competency and credit by virtue of the pardon.³

County Court.] The judge of a county court made the defendant write his name in court, and impounded the signature, together with that of an instrument supposed to have been signed by him. It seems, that upon an indictment for perjury, the jury might look at both signatures.⁴

Perjury before a committee of the House of Commons.] In this case the usual proofs are, the election, the return of the members, and the matters falsely sworn to. Then follow the proof of the assignments by demonstrating the wilful untruths advanced by the defendant.⁵

The following evidence was deemed sufficient to support an indictment for perjury by falsely taking the freeholder's oath at an election for Middlesex. That oath was administered to a person who polled on the second day in the name of J. W. There was

¹ R. v. Punshon, 3 Campb. 96 ;
S. C. 223.

² R. v. Raphael, at Devon Lent
As. 1818, Mann, N. P. Digest, 232.

³ R. v. Reilly, 1 Leach, 454.

⁴ R. v. Taylor, 6 Cox, C. C.

⁵ See R. v. Leefe, 2 Campb.
134.

no such person as J. W. The defendant, himself no freeholder, voted on that day, and subsequently boasted of the success his fraudulent vote had met with. Not more than one false vote was given on the day in question, and there was no proof that the defendant voted in his own name, or in any other name than that of J. W. This evidence was considered effective for the purpose of inducing the jury to presume that the defendant had voted thus fraudulently in the name of J. W., and the court held, that he had been properly convicted.¹

The allegation in an indictment, that a committee were sworn to "try the matter of the petition" was held good, although the stat. 10 Geo. 3, used the words "to try and determine the merits of the return."²

Insolvent Court.] If the filing of the petition be proved, it will be presumed that the sittings of the Insolvent Court were properly holden. Therefore, although the facts of due notice and filing, and the appointment of a day for examination, were alleged in the indictment, proof of them was deemed unnecessary, nor was it needful to prove that the prisoner was a trader owing less than 300*l.*, he having, in his petition, so stated it.³

Court of Review.] In a case of perjury before the court of review in bankruptcy, the petitioning creditor proved the handwriting of the defendant to the affidavit on which perjury was assigned, and he likewise gave evidence of the trading and act of bankruptcy. A creditor who had not proved his debt likewise gave evidence of the trading and act of bankruptcy; and an assignee proved the act of bankruptcy. These were the principal witnesses, and the judges were of opinion, upon a reserved case, that their testimony was properly received in support of the prosecution.⁴

The high sheriff.] An indictment alleged that a trial took place before the high sheriff; the evidence was, that neither the high sheriff nor the under sheriff were present, but that the assessor executed the writ of trial. The writ was directed to the sheriff, and the postea stated that the trial took place before him. This was held sufficient proof, and the authority of the assessor was deemed well shown, the judge holding that there was no variance.⁵

Bastardy.] The mother's charge is shown by proof of the original order, or by secondary evidence of the order, after a summons to produce it. It is not enough to offer the minutes of the clerk to the justices.⁶

¹ R. v. Price, alias John Wright, 6 East, 323.

² R. v. Dunn, 1 Dowl. & R. 10.

³ R. v. Westley, Bell, 193; 29 L. J. M. C. 35.

⁴ R. v. Keat, 2 Moo. C. C. 24.

⁵ R. v. Dunn, 1 Car. & K. 730.

Diss., Coleridge, Erskine, and Wightman, JJ.; 2 Moo. C. C. 297.

⁶ R. v. Newall, 6 Cox, C. C. 21.

Actions on 5 Eliz. c. 9.] Actions upon the statute of Eliz. by the party who has been aggrieved by perjury, are of such rare occurrence, that very few words will be sufficient upon the subjects of pleading and evidence.

First, he must be the party grieved who brings the suit,¹ and he is not at liberty to join any other with him. Thus, an exception was taken where an action had been taken against three, that a surrender, which had been in question, enured to the use of two of the plaintiffs only, so that the third person was not an injured party, and it was the opinion of Wray and Southcote, JJ., that the writ should abate.² On the other hand, it was said at the bar, upon one occasion, and not denied, that if two parties be grieved, they must join, the one being incompetent to maintain his suit without the other.³

Great accuracy is required in setting out the statute, if it be attempted to do so; but this is not necessary, for where it was moved to arrest the judgment because the plaintiff had omitted the words of the statute in his declaration, the court would not hearken to the objection, but gave judgment for the plaintiff.⁴

The only ground for the objection was, that it ought to have appeared whether the defendant had been guilty of perjury, or of subornation; but as Mr. Serjeant Hawkins has observed, all perjury whatsoever must come under one of those heads, there being no medium, and, therefore, the prosecutor would be equally grieved in either case. He would be placed under the difficulty not only of proving the perjury, if such an objection were to prevail, but also of showing it to be within one of the branches of the distinction, which would be superfluous.⁵

Nevertheless, the words of the statute must be strictly pursued in the allegations of the defendant's oath, and of his tortious intention. Thus it was adjudged that the plaintiff should take nothing by his writ for want of the word, voluntariè, in an action of debt upon the statute.⁶ An action of debt, was brought upon the statute for perjury committed in an action of debt, and the record of this last action was stated to have been as of Hil. 27 Eliz. In truth, the action was brought in Hil. 28 Eliz. and so the "recital did miss the record." It was contended, that here was a fatal variance, inasmuch as the party charged with perjury might thus be doubly proceeded against. But by Coke, arguendo, it is between the same parties, and in the same cause, and a circumstance only is mistaken. Clench, J. It is needful to show in what action the first perjury was committed, for he says in trespass, whereas in truth it was in debt; all is naught. Gawdy, J. If no action be alleged, he cannot sue upon the statute of 5 Eliz.⁷

¹ 3 Bulst. 147.

² Anon. 2 Leon. 12.

³ R. v. Deakins, Hetl. 73.

⁴ Cockerill v. Apthorp, 3 Bulst. 147.

⁵ 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 69, s. 18.

⁶ Kitton v. Walters, Hetl. 12; Brookes v. Hall, 2 Ro. Rep. 76.

R. v. Cox, 1 Leach, 71.

⁷ R. v. Dennie and Turner, Godb. 88.

The authority of the judge or commissioner must also appear upon the record. Where it was alleged that the defendant came to R., a master in chancery having authority to take affidavits, &c., and that the defendant made a false affidavit, but did not allege that the affidavit in question was in chancery, in curiâ cancellariæ, it was held to be no perjury within the statute.¹

Moreover, it must appear upon the face of the declaration, that the party was in reality aggrieved, so that where upon a question concerning the surrender of a copyhold, it was alleged that perjury had been committed, it was held a good exception that the certainty of the copyhold did not appear upon the pleading.²

Trial in perjury generally.] By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 22, on trials for perjury and subornation, a certificate of the indictment and trial on which perjury is assigned shall be sufficient evidence of the trial. The record being duly made up, and the *venire facias*³ complied with by the appearance of a proper jury, the trial commences. But the judge is authorized to refuse the inquiry altogether if the indictment appear unquestionably to be bad. As where it could not be in any way collected from the record that the matters sworn to and alleged as perjuries were material to the question at issue.⁴ So again, where an indictment for perjury had been found at the quarter sessions, and had been removed into the Court of King's Bench by certiorari, because the quarter sessions have no jurisdiction over the offence, Mr. Justice Gaselee refused to try the charge in this instance.⁵ But it is otherwise where the materiality of the thing sworn can be traced on the record, although there be no allegation to that effect. The objection for want of such an allegation is on the record, and can be taken advantage of in arrest of judgment, if necessary.⁶

Verdict.] Upon an indictment containing four counts, the jury found a verdict of guilty of the perjury and misdemeanor aforesaid. The venire was stated on the record—to try whether the defendants were guilty of the perjury and misdemeanor aforesaid. It was held that perjury was nomen collectivum, that, therefore, the venire and verdict applied to all the counts, and that, although a general judgment had been entered, yet that, being for imprisonment only, it was divisible.⁷ In this case, the court said, that *R. v. Powell*⁸ was not in the least interfered with: neither in O'Connell v. Reg. nor in Campbell v. Reg. was it intended to overrule R. v. Powell.⁹

It is not now necessary to produce the record in order to prove

¹ Anon. Lat. 38. Luther v. Holland, Id. 132.

² Anon. 2 Leon. 12.

³ See Doug. 791, 794.

⁴ R. v. Tremearne, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 147.

⁵ R. v. Haynes, Id. 298.

⁶ R. v. Souter, 2 Stark. 423.

⁷ R. v. Ryalls, 17 L. J. M. C. 92. Affirmed in error, 18 L. J. M. C. 69; 11 Q. B. 781.

⁸ 2 B. & Adol. 75.

⁹ 18 L. J. M. C. 69.

a conviction or acquittal, but a certificate under the hand of the clerk of the court is sufficient. Yet, where this certificate was wanting, the caption, the indictment, the indorsement of the verdict and sentence, with the minutes of the trial, were held sufficient to warrant a conviction.¹

Judgment.] The trial being over, and the verdict given,² judgment is entered up according to the finding of the jury. And there was this additional penalty to the statute of Eliz., namely, that the disability formed part of the judgment. Consequently, a pardon under the great seal or sign manual restored the attainted perjurer to his competency, after a conviction at common law, but not so if he had received judgment under the statute 5 Eliz.³ The statute 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, reaches the case even of perjured persons, and renders them competent.

One R. was convicted of perjury upon the oath of D., but R. subsequently caused D. himself to be convicted of perjury in accusing R. It was thereupon moved, that as judgment had not been given, an entry might be made upon the record that R. was acquitted of the first perjury, but the court said, they could not do that. R. might bring error if he would. However the court restored him to his place of one of their attornies.⁴

The following is an example of an erroneous entry of the intended judgment:—"It is ordered, that the said L. K. be transported, &c.," the mistake being in the word, "ordered," instead of "considered." The defendant brought a writ of error, but the court observed that no judgment had been given, there being merely an order, and they awarded a procedendo to the court below to give judgment on the conviction. In the meantime, they thought that the prisoner might procure bail for his personal appearance to receive that judgment at the next Chester sessions.⁵

New trial.] The judgment being pronounced, the defendant in perjury has three courses open to him for the purpose of avoiding the mischief which he has encountered. He may move for a new trial, or in arrest of judgment, or may bring a writ of error.⁶

¹ R. v. Newman, Den. & P. 390; 21 L. J. M. C. 75; 3 Car. & K. 240.

² Which must be, if against the defendant, that he is guilty of wilful and corrupt perjury, otherwise the jury must acquit him. 1 Mod. 351.

³ 2 Salk. 514, 689, 691; Anon. 3 Salk. 155; 1 Ld. Raym. 257.

⁴ R. v. Read, 1 Sid. 217.

⁵ R. v. Kenworthy, 1 B. & C. 711; S. C. 3 D. & Ry. 173.

⁶ It is no ground for postponing the judgment upon a convicted defendant, that the witness against him is indicted for perjury, for giving the very evidence upon which the defendant was found guilty; at least not if the defendant be so interested in the event of the second trial as to become thereby disqualified as a witness. R. v. Haydon, 2 Burr. 1387.

First, as to the new trial. If there be a verdict of acquittal, the courts will not suffer it to be disturbed; but if the jury find for the crown, there are some circumstances, which we shall mention presently, which will induce the granting of another inquiry. Two persons were charged with perjury and acquitted, and after some discussion the judges, except Windham, J., were of opinion that no new trial should be had.¹ And this opinion of Windham, J., was the more strange, because he had himself laid it down two years before, that no new trial could be had in the event of an acquittal for perjury, unless by consent, to which the judges then agreed.²

On the other hand, where a verdict has passed for the crown, it is quite clear that a new trial may be awarded in favour of the defendant. At one time, indeed, it was supposed, that this could not be done without the consent of the king's counsel,³ although the court said, they could not do without such consent in debt upon an information, inasmuch as the party had an interest in that case.⁴ However, some years afterwards, upon a conviction by information for perjury, it turned out, that the false oath had not been taken wilfully, and the court granted a new trial upon motion, mentioning R. v. Sir John Jackson,⁵ and R. v. Fenwick,⁶ as authorities for doing so.⁷

The granting of the new inquiry is, nevertheless, entirely at the discretion of the court, who sometimes will refuse the application, if they should think that the matter has been fully heard. In the case of a trial at bar, it appeared that the jury hesitated very much, and, in fact, found at first a verdict of guilty, but not of wilful and corrupt perjury. They at length pronounced the defendant guilty generally, but some of them said at the time that they were not satisfied that the perjury had been wilful and corrupt. The court held, that when a cause was tried at bar,⁸ a new trial was never granted, for the single reason that the jury went against evidence, but it seems that the matter was adjourned upon the other point.⁹ And it is quite clear, that a judge at the present day would not receive a verdict of guilty accompanied by such a qualification as we find in the preceding case.

Costs.] By 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 23, the costs and expenses of prosecutions in certain cases of misdemeanor may be allowed by the court as in cases of felony; and the offences of perjury and subornation of perjury are included within the last. The prosecutor is

¹ R. v. Fenwick and Holt, 1 Sid. 153. Anon. 1 Lev. 9, 124. ⁶ 1 Sid. 149, 153; 1 Keb. 546. 568.

R. v. Bowden, 1 Lev. 9, cited there. ⁷ R. v. Smith, 2 Show. 165. Pemberton, C. J., at first doubting.

² R. v. Williams, 1 Keb. 124. Cited by Windham, J. R. v. Cornelius, 3 Keb. 525.

³ Read v. Dawson, 1 Sid. 49. ⁸ But this strictness is no longer kept up.

⁴ Id. ⁹ R. v. Melling, 5 Mod. 349.

⁵ 1 Lev. 10, 124.

entitled to his costs, as prosecutor, though his name be included in a subpœna, and although he be not bound over to prosecute, and his expenses are not thereby limited to such as he has incurred in being a witness.¹

A false affidavit in chancery failed of its effect; moreover, the persons were only interested as executors; yet, an application to set aside a side bar rule for costs, was refused, the case being within 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 11. The defendant had moved an indictment for perjury by certiorari into the Queen's Bench.²

Costs upon a new trial.] The court will not in general allow the defendant the costs of the former prosecution upon the granting of a new trial in cases of perjury. Should the defendant make out a charge of oppression, the court might possibly interfere on his behalf, but not under ordinary circumstances. The prosecutor having removed an indictment into the King's Bench by certiorari, it was moved on behalf of the defendant, that the proceedings should be stayed until the costs of former indictments for the same offence had been paid by the prosecutor. On the first occasion, the judge refused to try the case, by reason of the appearance of manifest imperfections upon the face of the record; and on the second, a new trial was granted, because a minor was sworn and served upon the jury in the room of his father. The prosecutor did not carry that record down again, but preferred a new indictment. By the court.—No case of oppression has been made out by the defendant. His application for a new trial has made further expenses necessary, and it can make no difference to him, as to such expenses, whether he is again tried upon the old or upon a new indictment.³

Arrest of judgment.] Another course which the defendant may avail himself of, is to move in arrest of judgment, if there be a ground for doing so. And he may do this after verdict, or after judgment by default, but not after a failure upon demurrer. Judgment having passed against a defendant by nihil dicit, it was doubted whether he could then move to arrest, but Holt, C. J., observed, that he was not too late, although it was otherwise upon demurrer.⁴

The time for moving in arrest of judgment is when the party is called up for sentence, so that if he be afterwards taken upon a capias on account of the nonpayment of a fine, or otherwise, it will then be too late to insist upon moving as of right. In such a case, Holt, C. J., said, that the court would hear the objections in mitigation of the fine, although they could not allow them in arrest of judgment after the capias.⁵

¹ R. v. Sheering, 7 C. & P. 440.

⁴ The Queen v. Deman, 2 Ld.

² R. v. Major, 21 L. J. M. C. Raym. 1221.

221; Dears. 13.

⁵ The Queen v. Darby, 1 Salk.

³ R. v. Tremearne, 5 B. & C. 78.
761; S. C. 8 Dowl. & Ry. 590.

Further, a defendant can only move in respect of errors on the record of the indictment or information for perjury; he cannot interfere with the prior record on the trial of which the false oath is alleged to have taken place.¹

The judge made an order to amend the postea upon these facts. The judges in summing up altered the order of three assignments and reversed them: upon which the jury found a perverse verdict. The amendment was made from the recollection of the judge. It was held to be erroneous.²

Punishment for perjury.] It seems that, at common law, except in the case of attain of jurors,³ there was not any particular course for the punishment of perjury, but the heinousness of the offence was such, that the star chamber and spiritual courts took cognizance of it,⁴ and, treating it as a high misdemeanor, inflicted a penalty accordingly. And the king's counsel also used to meet occasionally for the same purpose, when they were accustomed to punish for this offence at their discretion.⁵ Before the conquest, indeed, the severity of death was sometimes exercised against this crime, and sometimes offenders were banished. Corporal punishment also, as the cutting out of the tongue, was now and then inflicted; but, subsequently, the rigour of the law gradually declined, till the forfeiture of movables, and an incompetency to bear testimony, were the only known penalties;⁶ and at length, as at the present day, the common law recognized fine and imprisonment,⁷ and "never to bear testimony," to which, both as to perjury and subornation, the statute 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, has added hard labour.

By 5 El. c. 9, s. 3,⁸ all persons who shall corruptly procure any witness by letters, rewards, promises, &c., to commit wilful and corrupt perjury, in any matter depending in suit by writ, action, bill, complaint, or information, concerning lands or hereditaments, goods, debts, or damages in any of the queen's courts of record, &c.⁹ or shall corruptly procure or suborn any witness sworn to testify in perpetuam rei memoriam, such offenders shall, on conviction, forfeit 40*l.* By sect. 6, the crime of perjury, whether committed in consequence of subornation, or by the voluntary act of the false swearer, is made liable to a fine of 20*l.*, and imprisonment for six months, together with incompetency as a witness.

¹ R. v. Wright, 1 Sid. 148.

² R. v. Virrier, 12 Ad. & El. 317; 4 Per. & D. 161.

³ Dy. 242.

⁴ See R. v. Onslowe, Dy. 242. R. v. Spicer and Read, Hob. 62.

⁵ Cro. El. 521.

⁶ 3 Inst. 163, 164; 16 Vin. Ab. 310. B. 1; 4 Comm. 138.

⁷ 3 Inst. 163. R. v. Nureys and another, 1 Sir W. Bl. 416. See R. v. Lookup, 3 Burr. 1901. The pillory was likewise added. See 1 Hawk. c. 69, s. 16; 3 Inst. 219. But it was entirely abolished by 1 Vict. c. 23.

⁸ Made perpetual by 29 El. c. 5, and 21 Jac. 1, c. 28, s. 8.

⁹ The queen's courts of chancery or of record, the leet; view of frankpledge or law day; ancient demesne court; hundred court; courts baron; courts of the stannary in Devon and Cornwall.

Lastly, by 2 Geo. 2, c. 25, s. 2,¹ besides the punishments already in force against perjury and subornation, the court, or judge before whom the conviction takes place, may sentence the offender to be sent to some house of correction for seven years, there to be kept to hard labour during all the term, or may award judgment of transportation for seven years. The breaking prison or voluntary escape, or return from transportation, was declared, moreover, to be capital. The transportation or commitment was also expressly declared to be over and above such punishment as should be adjudged to be inflicted agreeably to the laws then in being.

But by sect. 5, no attainder for any offence thereby made felony should work any corruption of blood, loss of dower, or disherison of heirs. By 18 Geo. 2, c. 18, s. 1, for the punishing of perjuries at county elections, the punishments awarded by both the Acts of 5 El. and 2 Geo. 2,² were directed to be inflicted on the offender, and these penalties have since been held to be cumulative. For in a case where the Court of King's Bench had passed sentence upon certain persons convicted of such a perjury, that they should be imprisoned for one calendar month, and then be transported for seven years, that court resolved afterwards to arrest its judgment. For, on consideration, they found that the penalties were cumulative, and Lord Ellenborough observed, that the sentence might be vacated at any time within the same term in which it had been pronounced. Accordingly, the prisoners were fined 20*l.*, and ordered to be imprisoned for six months, and judgment of incompetency as witnesses was added. This is part of the judgment by statute, but at common law it is only the consequence.³ And moreover, that at the end of six months, the prisoners should be transported for six years.⁴

But the court may still punish at common law, without inflicting the punishments prescribed by the 2 Geo. 2, and accordingly, they frequently inflict fine and imprisonment only, without the severer penalty.⁵

Consequences of a conviction and judgment in cases of perjury.]
We come now, in the last place, to explain the consequences which attach upon the parties who are convicted of perjury or subornation. And the most striking evil which fell upon the attainted offender

¹ Made perpetual by 9 Geo. 2, c. 18. This Act does not extend to Scotland, but the crime of perjury is made punishable there by the confiscation of movables, piercing of the tongue, and infamy. In aggravated cases, the judge may, moreover, direct any other punishment which the occasion calls for—1555, c. 47. The Irish Act is 3 Geo. 3, c. 4, s. 2.

² In effect repealed.

³ 2 Salk. 514.

⁴ R. v. Price and others, 6 East, 327.

⁵ Whether surety of the peace can be required in addition, qy? R. v. Dunn, 12 Jur. 99. It was held that surety of the peace for a time certain might be required in all cases of misdemeanor punishable by imprisonment. Dunn v. Reg. (in error), 18 L. J. M. C. 41.

was disability to be examined in any court of record, or elsewhere, as a witness. But the words of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, s. 1, are too general even to exclude perjurers. It is also a principal cause of challenge to a juror, that he has been convicted of perjury as a witness.¹ But it is necessary to show that the party has had sentence, because there might have been an arrest of judgment.² The statute disables the party from being a witness in any court of record, but it seems that a legal incapacity to bear testimony anywhere arises as a consequence at common law.³

By 5 El. c. 9, s. 5, no person convicted of subornation of perjury, and by sect. 6, no person convicted of perjury shall be received as a witness in any court of record, until his judgment be reversed by attaint or otherwise, and also until damages be recovered by the convicted parties in an action on the case against such as originally procured the judgment to be given against them.

However, the mischief, heavy as it is, ended there. The law did not go the length of preventing such convicts from making affidavits in certain cases for their own benefit, as to set aside a judgment for irregularity. For by Holt, C. J., upon an objection being made to the reading of a defendant's affidavit, because he had been convicted of perjury, "Must he, therefore, suffer all injuries, and have no way to help himself?" Powell, J. You ought to have the record of conviction in your hands when you make this objection. Holt, C. J. If he had, it would be nothing to the purpose.⁴ However, this course can only be allowed to rescue a defendant from the consequences of a charge, and cannot be permitted him in support of a complaint.⁵

By 12 Geo. 1, c. 29, s. 4, if any person convicted of perjury or subornation shall act or practise as an attorney or solicitor, or agent in any suit or action in any court of law or equity in England, the judge or judges where such suit or action is brought shall, upon complaint or information thereof, examine the matter in a summary way in open court, and if it shall appear to the satisfaction of such judge or judges that the party has offended contrary to the Act, they shall cause the offender to be transported for seven years.

Pardon.] Probably, the following sentences are merely matters of history, but we must not omit to say that as to the strong words of the statute of 5 Eliz., which inflicted the pain of incompetency as a witness, the better opinion was that a pardon for a perjury at common law would so operate, but that the words of the statute were too strong to allow the beneficial result of a pardon.⁶

"I do not find it clearly settled," says Mr. Serjeant Hawkins,

¹ 16 Vin. Ab. 320, H. 1, citing Trials per Pais, 141, c. 9, 2 Hawk. c. 43, s. 25.

² Cowp. 3, by Lord Mansfield.

³ 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 101.

⁴ R. v. Davis and Carter, Holt. 501.

⁵ Walker v. Kearney, 2 Hawk. c. 46, s. 103, and see 2 Str. 1148.

⁶ 2 Salk. 689.

"whether the pardon of a conviction of perjury makes the party a good witness."¹ And formerly it was said, on one or two occasions, that a pardon would not restore the party to his credit,² or to his liberam legem.³ But in this last case, Holt, C. J., spoke of the party as having stood in the pillory, from whence it is clear that the statute of Eliz. operated immediately to destroy the competency, and it does not appear but that in the other case the conviction might have proceeded on the statute. To render the distinction still more clear, it may be added, that a case occurred not many years since, where a person was admitted to bear testimony against a prisoner who had suborned him to take a false oath for the purpose of obtaining prize money, and His Majesty's pardon having been specially granted for that offence, was produced. It is true that he never received judgment, but Wilson, J., who delivered the opinion of the judges in favour of the evidence thus received, distinctly declared that the pardon not only respites the convict from punishment, but entirely absolves him from the crime, and restores him completely to his former competency and credit.⁴ Nevertheless, if there be an Act of parliament pardoning all crimes whatsoever, it should seem, that perjury under the statute of Eliz., will be included. And thus it was said, that one convicted of perjury would be competent to give evidence by reason of the act of oblivion.⁵

Arbitration.] All the matters in difference, whether in perjury or conspiracy, may be referred if verdict of acquittal be taken. It must, however, appear that there has been no attempt to stifle a prosecution.⁶

¹ 2 Hawk. c. 37, s. 52 ; Id. c. 46, s. 112.

² 1 Sid. 52.

³ 5 Mod. 16, by Holt, C. J.

⁴ R. v. Reilly, 1 Leach, 454, case of Macdaniel.

⁵ 1 Keb. 780.

⁶ R. v. Hardey, 14 Q. B. 529.

CHAPTER II.

OF CONSPIRACY.

Conspiracy.] Conspiracy is a combination and agreement by persons to do some illegal act, or a combination and agreement to effect a legal purpose by illegal means.¹ The conspiracies which we now shall speak of may be designated as public and private. Instances of both kinds are very numerous, but there are certain principles applicable to both which must be adhered to in order to support an indictment against parties for the crime. There must, in the first instance, be a legal foundation for the charge in question, with reference to the particular circumstances which form the subject matter of it. For where the cause of complaint is without legal existence, there cannot be a conspiracy in respect of it. There must, again, be somewhat of certainty in the ground-work of the prosecution, for where the alleged fraud concerns a profit or advantage so precarious as to admit of doubt whether it will, in reality, turn out to be beneficial, the court will not entertain an indictment for conspiracy in regard of it. Again, the mere breach of a civil contract, without a violation of public morals, will not amount to a conspiracy, although several persons may be engaged in a transaction by no means creditable to their character, and may, even virtually, be said to defraud the object of their intrigue. And, we shall see, by and by, that the same principle exists in the case of a civil trespass, unless it is intended to commit a breach of the public peace. If an agreement be entered into to indict or acquit, so as to leave the question of right and wrong indifferent, it is a conspiracy.² So, where certain persons agreed to hiss at the Birmingham Theatre, although one might have hissed without offence.³ So, a combination amongst officers to resign their commissions is a conspiracy. The military service cannot be determined by such a confederacy.⁴

Public frauds.] If people conspire together to defraud the community at large, the rule is general that they may be indicted for such an illegal combination. Thus to endeavour by an united agency to raise the price of necessaries is an example of this rule. Thus, an information was applied for and granted for combining to fix the price of salt.⁵ And the same law would apply in the case of corn or any other commodity.

¹ By Alderson, B., 9 C. & P. 109.

² 9 Rep. 56; 1 Salk. 374. See 33 Edw. 1, st. 3.

³ R. v. Clifford, 2 Campb. 372.

⁴ 3 Burr. 2476.

⁵ R. v. Norris and others, 2 Lord Keny. 300.

If a false rumour be raised for the purpose of raising or lowering the price of government securities, with a fraudulent intent, it is an offence of this nature, for it is a fraud levelled against all who might possibly have anything to do with the funds on the particular day when the trick operates. And it is no excuse to say, that there might not be any purchasers, for it is a principle in conspiracy, that whether the intended evil be successful or not, the character of the crime, and its consequences remain the same. De Berenger and others were convicted of a conspiracy of this nature by spreading reports of the death of Buonaparte during the war, and the likelihood of immediate peace.¹ A conspiracy to defraud the king of his revenue is punishable under this head. As where certain persons entered into a confederacy to impoverish the farmers of excise.² So, where persons united to cheat the crown through the medium of false vouchers.³

Again, combinations on the part of masters to lower the wages of their workmen, and by workmen to raise the price of labour, were, till a modern date, illegal. The journeymen tailors of Cambridge were once convicted of such a conspiracy. And a principle applicable at this day to the subject of conspiracy was recognized upon that occasion, that the refusal to work was not the crime, but the conspiracy to advance the rate of wages. But in connection with this law, there existed, at the same moment, a code which fixed the price of wages, and when the legislature resolved to remove all restrictions from trade, it was also determined to legalize combinations of this nature, provided there should be no intimidation nor violence towards individuals. Accordingly by the 4th section of 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, the following combined meetings amongst workmen were excluded from prosecution or penalty—such as take place for the sole purpose of consulting upon and determining the rate of wages or prices, which the parties entering into such agreement, or any of them, shall require or demand for his or their work, or the hours of time for which he or they will work in any manufacture, trade, or business, and that persons so meeting for the purposes aforesaid, or entering into such agreement aforesaid, shall not be liable to any prosecution or penalty for so doing, any law or statute to the contrary notwithstanding. Mr. Baron Rolfe is reported to have said:—"Those who employ

¹ R. v. De Berenger and others, 3 M. & S. 67. In this case likewise the court took judicial notice of the existence of a war with France, there being so many statutes upon that subject. Id. 69. It was also objected that no person in particular was alleged to have been defrauded; but this omission was held to be quite immaterial, since it was possible that no one had been defrauded. The offence was complete independently of that consideration. And it was objected that there were not any funds of the United Kingdom, as stated in the indictment, the charges for the interest and debt being imposed upon Great Britain and Ireland separately, but this objection was likewise overruled, and judgment was passed.

² R. v. Starling and others, 1 Sid. 174.

³ R. v. Brisac and another, 4 East, 164.

labour may meet and say, we will not give more than such and such a rate, or we will stipulate for such and such a number of hours' work; we will make, in short, regulations beneficial to ourselves as employers, and we agree that we will not take any workmen that require more. On the other hand, the workmen may meet and say, we will not work for less than such and such a sum, and if anybody think to employ us on low wages, we agree we will not work for them. And we agree to form a fund and support one another until we get them to come to proper terms. My opinion is, that if there was no other object than to persuade people that it was their interest not to work except for certain wages, and not to work under certain regulations, complied with in a peaceable way, it was not illegal."¹

Then follows the 5th section for the protection of masters, excluding likewise from prosecution or penalty similar meetings on the part of masters, for the sole purpose of consulting upon and determining the rate of wages or prices which they shall pay to their journeymen or servants, or the hours of work in any manufacture, trade, or business. And agreements for the same purpose, whether verbal or written, are within the same protection.

But no threats, violence, intimidation, or molestation can be lawfully used in respect of these meetings, or any association upon the subject of wages. The 3rd section provides for this case. It is thereby enacted that, if any person shall by violence to the person or property of another, or by threats or intimidation, or by molesting, or in any way obstructing another, force, or endeavour to force, any journeyman, manufacturer, workman, or other person hired or employed in any manufacture, trade, or business, to depart from his hiring, employment, or work, or to return his work before the same shall be finished, or prevent, or endeavour to prevent any journeyman, manufacturer, workman, or other person not being hired or employed, from hiring himself to, or from accepting work or employment from any person or persons, or if any person shall use or employ violence to the person or property of another, or threats or intimidation, or shall molest or in any way obstruct another for the purpose of forcing or inducing such person to belong to any club or association, or to contribute to any common fund, or to pay any fine or penalty, or on account of his not belonging to any particular club or association, or not having contributed, or having refused to contribute, to any common fund, or to pay any fine or penalty, or on account of his not having complied, or of his refusing to comply with any rules, orders, regulations, or resolutions made to obtain an advance, or to reduce the rate of wages, or to lessen or alter the hours of working, or to decrease or alter the quantity of work, or to regulate the mode of carrying on any manufacture, trade or business, or the management thereof; or if any person shall by violence to the person or property of another, or by threats or intimidation, or by molesting or in any way obstructing another, force or endeavour to force any manufacturer, or person carrying on any trade or business, to make any alteration in his mode of regulating, managing, conducting, or carrying on such manufacture, trade, or business, or to limit the number of his apprentices, or the number or description of his journeymen, workmen, or servants, every person so offending, or aiding, abetting, or assisting therein, being convicted thereof in manner thereafter mentioned, shall be imprisoned only, or shall and may be imprisoned and kept to hard labour for any time not exceeding three calendar months.

¹ In R. v. Selsby and others, cited, Den. & P. 384, n.

This removal of restraint, however, was never intended to enable workmen to dictate to the masters the persons whom they should employ. And, therefore, where the defendants were proved to have entered into an association, for the purpose of procuring the discharge of certain workmen, Patteson, J., told the jury that the statute never contemplated such a meeting as this had been, and he held the compulsion to be clearly illegal.¹ So, where a member of a society was fined for working, by leave of his master, for four days, in a yard where steam machinery was used, and on his refusal to pay, the society struck work, and so compelled the master to discharge the person so refusing: this was held to be a conspiracy.²

Another public fraud is accomplished by brokers at auctions, who arrange amongst themselves to effect biddings under particular circumstances, so as to interfere with a fair competition on the part of the public, and then to divide the goods or supposed profits thus obtained at another place. It is not usual to prosecute persons for this offence, but such a practice has been branded with the character of illegality, and is certainly the subject of an indictment for conspiracy.³

It is manifestly a public fraud for persons to unite together for the purpose of defrauding tradesmen. And, therefore, where the defendants were indicted for conspiring together for the purpose of causing themselves to be reputed persons of considerable property, no question was entertained as to their liability to be tried for this offence. It was an indictment, said Lord Ellenborough, for a conspiracy to carry on the business of common cheats.⁴ So strong, indeed, is the feeling of the court against these general depredators, that where an information was applied for against cheats, and it turned out, that the application was made by other gamblers against their own brethren, the court refused to interfere, and left the complainants to their ordinary remedy by indictment.⁵ So, in a case of a conspiracy to defraud a person at a public-house by a trick, it was no good objection that the prosecutor might have cheated the prisoners if he would.⁶ So, where persons joined to-

¹ R. v. Bykerdyke, 1 Moo. & Rob. 179. See likewise R. v. Eccles, Leach, 274.

² R. v. Newill, 5 Cox, 162.

³ Levi v. Levi, 6 C. & P. 239.

⁴ R. v. Roberts and others, 1 Campb. 399.

⁵ R. v. Peach and others, 1 Burr. 548.

⁶ R. v. Hudson, 8 Cox, 205.

gether in order to defraud any person that they might be able to trick, by means of falsely assuming themselves to be the payees or indorsees of bills of exchange, they were held liable to an indictment for a conspiracy, and were accordingly convicted.¹ So where persons not particularly interested in furthering a fraudulent association, nor having any knowledge of transactions which ended in insolvency, but nevertheless favoured the common design, and were aware of what it must lead to, they were held guilty of conspiracy.² So, although the representation as to the solvency of a trader be oral, and no action lies under 9 Geo. 4, c. 14, s. 16; but there must be collusion with the other person to defraud.³

A conspiracy to issue out a fraudulent commission of bankruptcy is clearly indictable, and the chancellor will direct the proper documents to be laid before the attorney-general for the purpose of a prosecution.⁴ And either an indictment or an information may be adopted.⁵ So a fraudulent representation by bankers, that they have laid out money in the funds, may amount to a conspiracy.⁶

It used to be a common practice for overseers and others to compel marriages under certain circumstances, for the purpose of shifting the burden of a woman's maintenance to another parish. This, although now a rare occurrence, is a public fraud, and punishable as a conspiracy where two or more are concerned in it.⁷ But there must be some duress or compulsion. Where upon an indictment against parish officers, the man and woman swore that they were willing to marry at the time; Buller, J., directed an acquittal, notwithstanding the proof of money having been given to obtain such consent, and of the putative father having been apprehended under a magistrate's warrant, and being in the overseer's custody. For there must be an absence of the voluntary consent, or inclination of the parties;⁸ and it must likewise appear, that the parties were chargeable to the indicting parish. Where, therefore, A. B. was described as a poor man unable to maintain himself and his family, and it turned out that he was a servant in husbandry, and quite of ability to support himself, Ashhurst, J., held that the averment was negatived, and that the inducing a person to marry under such circumstances was not an offence, and an acquittal was directed.⁹ This case has been sustained upon a

¹ R. v. Hevey and others, Leach, 232; East, P. C. 1010.

² R. v. Esdaile and others, 1 Fost. & F. 213.

³ R. v. Timothy and another, 1 Fost. & F. 39.

⁴ Buck. B. C. 422.

⁵ Ex parte Cawthorn, 19 Ves. Jun. 260. See Ex parte Warren, Id. 163.

⁶ 18 Ves. Jun. 203.

⁷ See R. v. Edwards and others,

8 Mod. 320; Say. 260; Anon. 2 Str. 707. R. v. Tarrant, 4 Burr.

2106. R. v. Compton, Cald. 246.

R. v. Upsdale, Id. 247, n. R. v.

Herbert and others, 2 Ld. Keny.

466. R. v. Wilson and others, 1

Wils. 41.

⁸ R. v. Fowler and others, East, P. C. 461.

⁹ R. v. Tanner and others, 1

Esp. 306. It was determined in the same case, that if the party, at the recent occasion, where the principle of consent was recognized, and the use of forcible or fraudulent means, combined with an unwillingness to marry, was laid down to be necessary, in order to constitute the offence. And, at the same time it was determined, that the person must be actually chargeable. The facts of a woman being poor, and unmarried and with child, are not sufficient to show that she is a burden to the parish.¹

Again, a bribe given by overseers, in order to procure a marriage, is illegal.² So again, a conspiracy to let land to a pauper, for the purpose of conferring a settlement upon him, is illegal.³

The issuing of false certificates on the part of magistrates, and others,⁴ either fraudulently, or for the purpose of misleading the court before whom the documents are presentable, is an offence. And, therefore, where certain parties combined to certify that a way was in good repair, in order to deceive the court of quarter sessions, no doubt was entertained of their liability to be tried for conspiracy,⁵ although it was attempted to be argued that the guilty knowledge of non-repair should have been alleged to have existed at the time of the conspiracy.⁶ The justices should have known, said Lord Kenyon, that the road was in repair before they agreed to certify that it was so.⁷

And it is a conspiracy of a very foul nature to accuse a person of a crime, for the purpose of obtaining an advantage or reward upon his conviction,⁸ or to extort money from him.⁹ Nor does it make any difference whether the indictment be actually preferred or not,¹⁰ or whether the party be guilty or not.¹¹ So, to lay an information for penalties, wrongfully and with a fraudulent intent, will amount to a conspiracy.¹² So, an agreement by a witness, who has been bound over to prosecute in misdemeanor, not to appear, is an indictable offence, although the intent was not to defeat justice, but to extricate himself from a scrape.¹³ However, an association time of his removal, was settled in the parish which indicted, it should not be presumed that he had acquired a subsequent settlement. Such proof must be given by the defendants. Id. See also R. v. Flint, Ca. Temp. Hardw. 370.

¹ R. v. Seward, 1 Ad. & El. 706; 3 Nev. & M. 557. And see 11 East, 381.

² R. v. Wright and others, 1 Wils. 41. See also R. v. Bushby, 1 Bott, P. L. 335.

³ 8 Mod. 321, by the court.

⁴ 6 T. R. 635.

⁵ R. v. Mawbey and others, 6 T. R. 619.

⁶ Id. 634.

⁷ R. v. Mawbey and others, 6 T. R. 634.

⁸ R. v. M' Daniel and others, Fost. 131; S. C. Leach, 44. But they were acquitted. See Leach, 45.

⁹ R. v. Timberley and another, 1 Sid. 68. R. v. Best and others, 1 Salk. 174. R. v. Armstrong, 1 Ventr. 305. R. v. Kinnersley and another, 1 Str. 193. R. v. Rispal, 3 Burr. 1320.

¹⁰ See the above cases.

¹¹ R. v. Sir A. Ashley, 12 Rep. 90.

¹² R. v. Biers and another, 1 Ad. & El. 327.

¹³ R. v. Hamp and others, 6 Cox, 167.

for the prosecution of felons is not an illegal confederacy, not although they propose to include political offenders within their rules.¹ By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55, s. 2, costs are given for conspiring to charge any person with felony, or to indict any person for felony, or to conspire to commit any felony.

Private frauds.] Numerous private frauds may be the subjects of indictments for conspiracy: as the suppression of a will;² causing an illiterate person to execute a deed to his prejudice, by reading it over to him in false words;³ cheating at a foot race by a previous combination;⁴ pretending to procure an office for a person upon the payment of a certain sum, whereas, in fact, no such office existed.⁵ So, to combine with another, by personating the master of one of the defendants, and so solemnizing a marriage together, in order to raise a title to the property of the master, was deemed to be an act of fraudulent conspiracy.⁶ So, by false representations to persuade an individual into a marriage, for the sake of a fortune, and so to get him to execute bonds to a stranger.⁷ The same law prevails in cases of enticement from the paternal roof, in order to procure a marriage, or by contriving marriage without the publication of banns.⁸ And it was held no objection, that it was not the eldest son and heir who was seduced from his father's dwelling.⁹ Mackarty and Fordenborough were charged with a cheat, in bartering pretended wine for hats. The liquor turned out to be neither wine, nor even wholesome to drink; and after some consideration, judgment was given for the Queen,¹⁰ on the ground, said Denison, J., in another case, of its being a conspiracy.¹¹ So, obtaining the signature of the prosecutor to an acceptance, although the bill was ready written in the hands of the defendant. And the charge for defrauding the prosecutor of his monies was held good, although the prosecutor had no money, nor intended to take up the acceptance, nor, except for the purpose of accepting, ever had the

¹ R. v. Murray and others, 1 Ch. Burn, 817.

² R. v. Breerton, Noy. Rep. 103; 1 Hawk. c. 71, s. 1.

³ R. v. Skirret and others, 1 Sid. 312.

⁴ R. v. Orbell, 6 Mod. 42. R. v. Absolan, 1 Fost. & F. 498. There may be judgment against one conspirator, although the other or others may be absent or dead. S. C. 12 Mod. 499.

⁵ R. v. Parry and others, 2 Ld. Raym. 865. That a conspiracy to procure an office under government, even without fraud, is indictable, see post. Concerning a conspiracy to give a false account, whereby a fraud was committed, see R. v. Snead, 2 Show. 339.

⁶ R. v. Robinson and another, East, P. C. 1010; S. C. Leach, 37.

⁷ R. v. Allibone and others, Trem. P. C. 97; S. P. Id. 98, 99.

⁸ Priestley v. Lamb, 6 Ves. 421.

⁹ R. v. Green and others, 3 Doug. 36. See several cases cited, Id. 37. R. v. Lord Ossulston and others, S. P. Id. 38.

¹⁰ R. v. Mackarty and another, 2 Ld. R. 1179.

¹¹ 2 Burr. 1129; East, P. C. 824. And see R. v. Macarty, 1 Sir. Wm. Bl. 275.

bill in his hands. In this case an unstamped warrant of attorney given by the defendant to a prosecutor, as a counter security, was admitted in evidence, 1st, as a part of the fraud; and, 2ndly, to confirm the story of the prosecutor.¹ Again, there was a case for using materials for dyeing without the owner's consent. It was held not to be the less a conspiracy because the overt act charged a felony, and the evidence disclosed a felony, as the taking of the materials for dyeing.² A. sold a mare for 39*l.* to B. B. and C. conspired together, and B. got A. to take 27*l.* for her, upon the strength of a representation by C. that she was unsound, and that B. had sold her for 27*l.* Both these statements were false. This was a conspiracy.³ So, a count for a general conspiracy to defraud is supported by overt acts from which a conspiracy may be inferred, without having recourse to the proof of any false pretence. And counts charging conspiracy by representation of an offence to defraud tradesmen, are supported by overt acts from whence a conspiracy may be inferred without having recourse to proof of any false pretence. But counts charging a false pretence by representations of influence and integrity were held not to be supported, because it did not appear that the goods were got by such statements.⁴

Again, it has been held, that to fabricate shares in addition to a limited amount already issued on behalf of a company, is indictable in this manner, although there was originally an imperfection in the formation of the company.⁵ So, if traders dispose of their goods in contemplation of bankruptcy, they are indictable for conspiracy, and a clandestine removal is evidence of the offence; it is an overt act.⁶

And there is this distinction between a false pretence which common care can guard against, and a conspiracy:—in the one case, it is the duty of a person to be awake to an intrigue which he can easily detect;—in the other, ordinary caution will not afford protection.⁷

Upon a survey of the authorities above mentioned, some few principles may be deduced upon the subject of conspiracy generally. First, there must be a combination of two persons,⁸ for although twenty may be included in an indictment for conspiracy, yet, if it should turn out that the matter at issue was worked by one without the concurrence of the rest, the charge falls to the ground. And there must be a union for the purpose of accomplishing the same fraud. So that, however fraudulent the general habits of A. and B. may be, if A. engage himself in working out one fraud, and

¹ R. v. Gompertz, 11 Jur. 209; 2 Cox, 245.

² R. v. Button, 12 Jur. 1017; Q. B. 929.

³ R. v. Carlisle and Brown, 23 L. J. M. C. 109; Dears. 337.

⁴ R. v. Whitehouse, 6 Cox, 38.

⁵ R. v. Mott and others, 2 C. & P. 521. And this is not like a case where the society is in itself illegal. See 1 Campb. 549, n.

⁶ R. v. Hall and others, 1 Fost. & F. 33.

⁷ 2 Burr. 1127, by Ld. Mansfield.

⁸ Sty. 57; 3 T. R. 58, per Buller, J.

B. employ himself in attempting another, neither of them can be convicted of conspiracy in respect of their several frauds.¹ Whereas, if they are labouring to perpetrate the same fraud, both need not be present at the same time during any part of the transaction.² Nor, indeed, is it necessary, that all the conspirators in an illegal transaction should even be acquainted with each other.³ And if A. and B. even were to meet together, and devise a general system of fraud, without agreeing upon the particulars, they would be guilty of a conspiracy.⁴

Secondly, this combination must have reference to some matter which has a legal foundation, or for which a person is criminally responsible, or which affects his character. A man cannot be answerable with reference to an illegal society, nor is such a society without the protection of the law, so as to make a defendant criminally liable for an offence against it. Certain individuals were charged with attempting to deprive one Thompson of the office of secretary to the Philanthropic Annuity Society, and to prosecute him without reasonable or probable cause for obtaining money under false pretences. This society turned out to be an unincorporated company with transferable shares, and it appeared that the secretary had been tried and acquitted for so obtaining subscriptions, on the ground of his having acted with a fraudulent intention. Lord Ellenborough, upon this, directed an acquittal. There was no legal foundation for the matter in question to rest upon: the society was illegal, and to deprive a person of an office in it could not be a crime. Nor was the prisoner indicted for obtaining money upon false pretences without reasonable or probable cause, for he pretended that there was a real society of which he was secretary, whereas no such society existed, and then, although without any fraudulent intention, he did, in effect, obtain money under a false pretence.⁵

It was formerly considered that a man could be charged criminally in respect of that which is only a civil injury. And therefore, where the defendant was indicted for a conspiracy to cheat by selling an unsound and worthless horse with a warranty, Lord Ellenborough said, that an action might be maintained on the warranty for the breach of a civil contract, but that the case did not assume the shape of conspiracy. Had there been evidence of concert between the parties to accomplish a fraud, the case might have been different.⁶ Turner and seven others were charged with conspiracy, for agreeing together to go by night into a certain

¹ See R. v. Hilbers, 2 Chit. Rep. 163.

² R. v. Cope and others, 1 Str. 144. R. v. Lord Grey and others, 9 St. Tr. 127.

³ By Lord Mansfield, 1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 2, in the note. Although some must, in all probability, be respectively acquainted, in order to set the illegal transaction on foot.

⁴ R. v. Gill and another, 2 B. & A. 204.

⁵ R. v. Stratton and others, 1 Campb. 549, n.

⁶ R. v. Pywell and others, 1 Stark. 402.

preserve for hares, in order to snare and take them away, and also for uniting, with large bludgeons, to obstruct any one who might attempt to oppose them. After a verdict of guilty, however, it was moved to arrest the judgment, and Lord Ellenborough said, that the cases of conspiracy against individuals had been pushed far enough, and that he should be sorry "to have it doubted whether persons agreeing to go and sport upon another's ground, in other words, to commit a civil trespass, should be thereby in peril of an indictment for an offence which would subject them to infamous punishment." The rule was made absolute.¹ But upon the trial of an indictment for conspiracy to force workmen to depart from their employment, Erle, J., said,² that R. v. Pynwell had been overruled,³ and Lord Campbell said,⁴ he was satisfied that R. v. Turner was not law.⁵

Again, although perhaps the fact in question may not be one which involves a criminal responsibility, yet if it should affect the character of the prosecutor, an indictment for conspiracy may be entertained. As where the charge was for conspiring to accuse another of taking hair out of a bag, but the taking was not alleged to be felonious. Lord Mansfield observed, that the gist of the offence was the unlawful conspiracy to do an injury to another by a false charge, and whether it be to charge a man with criminal acts, or such only as may affect his reputation, is sufficient.⁶ A fortiori, where the defendants conspired to charge the prosecutor with being the father of a bastard child; for that act it was at least punishable in the spiritual court.⁷ And the acquittal of the party charged does not seem to be necessary to be shown, in order to prove the accusers guilty of conspiracy.⁸

A third principle is thus developed, that is, that the conspiracy itself is the gist of the whole transaction. And hence it is no matter whether the fraud be prosecuted or not for successful issue.⁹ And lastly, it may be remarked, that a lawful object may be attempted by an unlawful association, and illegal means. So that if the purpose of a confederation be not improper, it lies on the prosecutor to show that it has been put in action by a course of

¹ R. v. Turner and others, 13 East, 228.

² 2 Den. & P. 386.

³ R. v. Kenrick, 5 Q. B. 49.

⁴ 2 Den. & P. 388.

⁵ See also 21 L. J. M. C. 83, 84. So also was the opinion of Grose, J., 6 T. R. 636; by Crompton, J., 24 L. J. Q. B. 355, but this law was denied by Lord Campbell, 24 L. J. Q. B. 359.

⁶ R. v. Rispal, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 368; S. C. 3 Burr. 1320.

⁷ R. v. Best, 2 Ld. Raym. 1167.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 2; contra, 3

Inst. 143. See 33 Edw. 1, st. 2; and, of course, on the other hand, an acquittal of a defendant does not make those guilty of conspiracy who have lawfully indicted him. Keilw. 81.

⁹ See R. v. De Berenger and others, 3 M. & S. 67. And herein is the difference between an indictment and an action. The latter will not lie unless the conspiracy be carried into execution. See Savile v. Roberts, 1 Ld. Raym. 378.

irregular conduct. Thus, there is no illegality in persuading certain parties to consent to a marriage, but as soon as it appears that threats or duress have been used for the purpose of compelling such a union, the character of the transaction is altered, and that proceeding, which in itself is lawful, becomes vitiated by the unlawful measures employed to accomplish it.¹

The acquittal in R. v. Pymell proceeded on the ground that the conspirators were not acting in concert, one being ignorant of the fraud. But where two appeared to induce A., of whom B., one of the two, had bought a horse for 39*l.*, to accept 27*l.* for it, on the false representation that a veterinary surgeon had pronounced it unsound, the Court of Criminal Appeal held them guilty of conspiracy. The fraud needs not to be successful. The prosecutor might have recovered the difference in this particular case, but the offence was the same.²

So, before the statute 6 Geo. 4, c. 129, if one man refused to work for certain wages, he was quite at liberty to do so, but if he brought others into an association for that object, he immediately became involved in the guilt of conspiracy.³ It was the application of unlawful means to a lawful act. And even now, if the workman combines with others to use any threat or menace to induce persons to come into his terms, that combination as to wages, which by itself is correct, becomes the medium of a conspiracy.⁴ So, where certain persons went to a debtor, and threatened him with imprisonment if he did not give security for his debt, it was held that as they did this under a false pretence of being officers, the whole party were indictable for conspiracy.⁵

A. died possessed of East Indian stock, leaving a widow. The defendants conspired to obtain the means and power of selling the stock, and exhibited a false affidavit, upon which a grant of administration was obtained. The indictment then charged overt acts of a similar nature, by which the defendants obtained the stock. It seemed to the court that an unlawful conspiracy was sufficiently disclosed, but, at all events, the overt acts themselves constituted a misdemeanor. Although a count which merely charges a conspiracy without any overt act is bad.⁶

*The indictment.*⁷] The indictment for a conspiracy to cheat

¹ See East, P. C. 461, 462; and ante. See also, 2 Str. 866.

² R. v. Carlisle and another, Dears. 337.

³ R. v. Tailors of Cambridge, 8 Mod. 11.

⁴ See also upon this point generally, R. v. Robinson and another, Leach, 37; 3 Burr. 1439. R. v. Best, 1 Salk. 174.

⁵ Bloomfield v. Blake, 6 C. & P. 75. A. was bail for D., and B. and C. were pretended officers.

⁶ Wright v. Reg. (in error), 14 Q. B. 148; 2 Cox, 336.

⁷ In aggravated cases an information will be granted, but the court will not adopt this measure when the parties are poor, or indeed in an ordinary situation of life. And circumstances will weigh with the court either towards granting or refusing an information. See 8 Mod. 320, n. (b); 1 East, P. C. 462.

usually states that the defendants (or if there be only one, that he with certain persons unknown)¹ intending to defraud the prosecutor, did, amongst themselves, conspire² to cheat him, and it is then very common to set out the manner by which the design was effected, or set on foot.³

If the indictment simply charges that the defendants unlawfully, &c., did conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together by divers false pretences and indirect means to cheat and defraud A., it is sufficient.⁴

If it be to cheat him and others, as where an overt act was laid of obtaining goods from B., the word "others" must mean partners. So, that evidence of conspiring to defraud others than partners cannot be admitted: such evidence having been received, the conviction was held wrong.⁵ The overt act must be within the object of the conspiracy. If the prisoners are charged with a conspiracy to defraud such persons as may be desirous of purchasing horses, it must be averred, that the prosecutor, from whom they obtained the money, was willing to have purchased, and did purchase. But the general counts for conspiracy were resorted to, and a verdict of guilty ensued.⁶ Again, although an indictment ended, after setting out certain overt acts, with an averment that the said —, in manner and by the means aforesaid, unlawfully did cheat and defraud the said —, &c., it was held that it was not bad for duplicity; and although an unnecessary way of summing up the overt acts, it was not a charge of obtaining goods under false pretences.⁷

And it may be said, that in all indictments for conspiracies, the gist of the offence being the conspiracy, it is sufficient to allege the combining, and that it was for a fraudulent purpose, together with the means employed to carry that end into execution. Not but that an indictment would be correct upon some occasions without mentioning the means, as where the act attempted to be accomplished is, upon the face of it, illegal and criminal.⁸ Yet

¹ See 1 Hawk. c. 72, s. 8; Chit. C. L. 1141.

² "Conspire" is the usual word, and it would be most imprudent to leave it out, but perhaps a statement that the defendants did the acts charged together, might be tantamount. See East, P. C. 824; 6 East, 133.

³ If the indictment omit the words "on divers other days and times," it is still competent at all events to give evidence of acts done on different days where there is more than one count in the indictment, and so it was held, in a case where the 13th of September was the only day mentioned, and there were two counts for a conspiracy and one for a riot. R. v. Levy and others, 2 Stark. 458, cor. Abbott, C. J.

⁴ R. v. Gompertz, 9 Q. B. 824; 16 L. J. Q. B. 121.

⁵ R. v. Steel, 2 Moo. C. C. 246; Car. & M. 337.

⁶ R. v. Henry and another, 1 Cox, 101.

⁷ R. v. King, 13 L. J. M. C. 118; 7 Q. B. 782.

⁸ As a conspiracy to extort money, R. v. Hollingberry, 4 B. & C. 329; 6 D. & Ry. 345. See R. v. —, 1 Chit. Rep. 698, where the court was applied to to quash an where several circumstances must be taken together, in order to verify the accusation, and the conspiracy becomes a matter of inference to be deduced from those events,¹ it is then necessary to allege one or more overt acts done in prosecution of the plan which forms the subject matter of the indictment.² The point as to the general omission of overt acts has indeed been a matter of objection more than once. Upon one occasion the defendants were indicted for a conspiracy to cheat, and it was urged that no information had been given to the defendants of any specific charge, against which they were to defend themselves. But the court held the indictment correct. And Abbott, C. J., observed, that : s a general resolution to commit frauds was indictable without any particular cheat in immediate prospect, the law could never require that the particular means should be set forth.³ So it was where the defendant and A. were charged with conspiring to defraud B. of his goods and chattels. It was objected that no sufficient conspiracy was alleged without specifying the pretences, and that the indictment failed to use the word "unlawfully." But the court, relying upon R. v. Gill and Henry, overruled the objections, and said that they did not overrule R. v. Biers.⁴

An indictment as follows was held good upon a motion to arrest the judgment. A., &c., being in the employment of B. a dyer, conspired to use his vats in dyeing wool not belonging to themselves, and not intrusted to them for that purpose by B., and thus to get profit to themselves, and deprive B. of his vats, and in pursuance of such conspiracy, the defendants, without leave of B., received materials which they dyed with the vats and dye of B. for various persons for their own profit.⁵

And this was not a new doctrine. Certain defendants were indicted for a conspiracy to hinder a man from working at his trade, and an objection for not setting forth the overt acts was overruled.⁶ In this last case, Willes, J., referred to an authority in Strange, where the matter was fully considered, and the principle above laid down with regard to overt acts recognized by the court.⁷ So a charge of cheating and defrauding the lawful creditors of A. was held insufficient without explanation, but the case was not stopped. But as all these decisions refer to matters obviously illegal in themselves, the qualification we have submitted must be taken into consideration where the deed is not criminal, unless it become such by accompanying circumstances. So that if A., B., and C. be concerned in a system of swindling, and A. and B. become active indictment, because the particular goods of which the prosecutor was said to have been defrauded, were not set out. But the court denied the motion, observing that the gist of the matter was the conspiracy.

¹ See 4 East, 171.

² Stark. C. P. 155.

³ R. v. Gill and another, 2 B. & A. 204.

⁴ Sydserrff v. Reg. 11 Q. B. 245. R. v. Biers went wholly on the one objection to the special counts. Wilde, C. J.

⁵ R. v. Button, 13 L. J. M. C. 19; 11 Q. B. 929.

⁶ R. v. Eccles, Leach, 274; S. C. 3 Dougl. 337.

⁷ 1 Str. 193.

agents in the business, and C. remains behind, it is necessary to recur to some overt act in order to implicate C. It is not illegal for C. to be in the company of A. and B. at particular times, nor for C. to address himself to an individual for the purpose of effecting some minor machinery of the fraud, but when all these incidents become linked together, and are expressed in the indictment as overt acts, the jury can then draw their conclusion, if they please, that C.'s presence with A. and B., and his conversation with other persons, were intended to promote one common design of cheating. So if A. and B. be manifestly connected with a dishonest combination, and C. come forward and do a single act calculated to favour the success of the trick, it would be proper to lay that as an overt act in order to involve C. in the conspiracy; for C. might not, in point of fact, be acquainted either with A. or with B., as the case might happen. So, where the defendants were charged with conspiring to defraud persons of certain merchandises, the count was held bad for want of setting out the means by which the fraud was to be effected. But the court observed, that the names of the persons to be cheated need not be set out.¹

Yet, although the needlessness of setting out the names of the parties to be defrauded was recognized in this case,² the judgment was reversed in error for want of the names of the persons defrauded, or the class intended to be defrauded, and an allegation of overt acts was held not to help the mistake.³ So, if the charge be of a conspiracy to obtain goods under false pretences, the indictment must state to whom the goods belonged.⁴ It is insufficient to say that the defendants conspired to obtain goods from A., and did fraudulently so obtain them, and did defraud A. thereof. This allegation does not show that the goods were the goods of A.⁵ An indictment stated that one of the defendants fraudulently obtained credit from tradesmen, and procured certain goods to be delivered to her, and that they were not paid for. Then the defendants pretended that there was a debt due from the defendant first alluded to to the other defendants. Upon this writs of fieri facias were sued out, and thus the tradesmen were cheated by the conspiracy. It was held that these overt acts supported the charge at all events, and that the concluding allegation did not disclose another offence, namely, that of obtaining goods under false pretences, but was an unnecessary summing up of the whole.⁶ So it was where the defendants deceived the prosecutor, who bought a horse by their false pretences, which were not set out in the indictment.⁷ So it was not necessary to specify the goods, wares, &c., which had not paid customs' dues by reason of a conspiracy.⁸

¹ Peck v. The Queen, 1 Per. & Dav. 508.

² R. v. King, 13 L. J. 118; Dav. & M. 741.

³ King v. Reg. 14 L. J. M. C. 172; 7 Q. B. 782.

⁴ R. v. Parker, 3 Q. B. 292; 2 Gale & D. 709. Held bad in arrest of judgment.

⁵ S. C. 6 Jur. 822.

⁶ R. v. King, Dav. & M. 741; ante, 1058.

⁷ R. v. Kendrick, 12 L. J. M. C. 135; 5 Q. B. 49.

⁸ R. v. Blake, 6 Q. B. 126; overruling R. v. Pywell. See Den. & P. 386, Erle, J.

So, a count was held defective which charged a confederacy to defraud by means of a fraudulent deed of bargain and sale of certain stock in trade, without adding facts to show in what manner the deed was fraudulent.¹ So, in the case of a fraudulent conveyance in contravention of 13 El. c. 5, s. 3, Maule, J., held, that the specific acts which constituted the fraud needed not to be set out. Peck v. The Queen was cited for the prisoner, but the judge answered: "there the act was not unlawful, here the statute has made it unlawful. The sale of merchandise is a lawful act, but the making of a covinous deed is of itself illegal under the statute."²

Enough has been said to show that the gist of these unlawful deeds is the conspiracy, and that, in general, it is not material to set out the overt acts. If the conspiring be well alleged, the requisites demanded by the law in most indictments will be satisfied. And it is more prudent to avoid stating too much, than to hazard an incorrect allegation which might prove fatal upon the ground of its misleading the defendant. As where a charge was alleged in the indictment as having been made at a "general sessions holden before the justices of the great sessions," and the proof was that the issue was joined at "great sessions." So where the indictment spoke of "John Doe, on the demise of W. R. and D. T.," and the proof was "John Doe, plaintiff, on the joint demise, and also on the several demises of W. R. and D. T." These were held to be fatal variances, not being mere allegations, but matters of description.³ Upon the same principle, it is not necessary in an indictment for a conspiracy affecting the public interest, to give the names of any persons who have been defrauded, for the gravamen being the combination for an illegal purpose, perhaps no individual might have sustained injury.⁴ Again, upon the same ground, the innocence of a person charged by conspirators with some crime or offence need not be averred, and the distinction between this case and perjury, where the falsehood of the oath must be alleged, has been recognized.⁵ Innocence will be presumed until the contrary appears.⁶ And, again, the same principle involves the falsehood of the charge. So that although very usual, it is not necessary to say that the defendants did "falsely" conspire. Therefore an indictment which charged the defendants with having wickedly and maliciously conspired, was held sufficient without the addition of "falsely."⁷ And hence it follows that the charge itself need not be averred to be false.⁸ So that it was deemed unnecessary to allege that the prosecutor was not the father of a certain bastard child, or that the child was likely to

¹ Peck v. The Queen, 1 Per. & Dav. 508.

² R. v. Smith, 6 Cox, 81.

³ R. v. Thomas and others, 1 C. & P. 472.

⁴ R. v. De Berenger and others, 3 M. & S. 57.

⁵ R. v. Kinnersley and another, Str. 193.

⁶ R. v. Best, 1 Salk. 174.

⁷ R. v. Spragg and another, 2 Burr. 993.

⁸ R. v. Best, 2 Ld. Raym. 1167.

become chargeable, in an indictment for conspiring to accuse him of fornication.¹ If the defendants were in a situation to have pleaded a conviction for that offence, the indictment would then have been barred.² So upon an indictment for a conspiracy for forcing workmen to leave their employment, it was deemed unnecessary to set forth the means.³

Again, carrying on the same principle, the particular accusation need not be mentioned in the count. And, therefore, upon a general verdict of guilty against two persons for charging the prosecutor with a capital crime, where the first count of the indictment omitted to set forth the particular offence in question, the court rested upon the doctrine so frequently propounded, that the charge could be well enough maintained for the unlawful agreement and conspiracy without more.⁴ Nor need it be said, that the defendants knew that their proceedings were false. Where certain parties published a false certificate as to the repair of a highway, it was held, that they ought to have known the fact to be true which they had agreed to certify as such, and the omission of an allegation of the guilty knowledge was held to be immaterial.⁵

However, notwithstanding the broad ground above commented upon and illustrated,—that the conspiracy is the gist of the matter, and that it is, consequently, unnecessary, as a general principle, to set out the means by which it is worked, and although it is enough to say that the defendants conspired without adding “falsely,” it is, nevertheless, indispensable to place such facts on the record as will in point of law amount to an offence, for uncertainty upon so grave a charge cannot be allowed, much less can defendants be convicted for doing acts which of themselves are harmless. Therefore a charge against persons for conspiring to deprive the prosecutor of the fruits of a verdict is too general, and cannot be supported.⁶ But it is not too uncertain to allege that by means of the conspiracy, the prosecutor had been defrauded of certain goods, without specifying them.⁷

A persuasion by officers or others to induce A. to marry B. is not illegal, and therefore an indictment against such persons for conspiring to effect that union would, alone, be insufficient.⁸ But as to where it is stated upon the record, that the solicitation was accompanied by threats and menaces, the case is altered, for intimidation

¹ R. v. Best, 2 Ld. Raym. 1167. An indictment lies before acquittal, but an action on the case not till afterwards. Id.

² 2 Ld. Raym. 1169.

³ R. v. Rowlands and others, Den. & P. 364; 21 L. J. M. C. 81. In this case three counts charged a conspiracy unlawfully to intimidate, &c. The court gave no opinion as to the goodness of these counts, but recommended a nol. pros., which was done. See Hilton v. Echersley, 24 L. J. Q. B. 353.

⁴ R. v. Spragg and another, 2 Burr. 993. R. v. Taylor and Towlin, Godb. 444.

⁵ R. v. Marcby and others, 6 T. R. 119.

⁶ R. v. Richardson, 1 M. & Rob. 402.

⁷ R. v. —, 1 Chit. Rep. 698.

⁸ R. v. Seward, 3 Nev. & M. 557; 1 Ad. & El. 706; ante.

is of itself illegal. And, although it must, indeed, be proved that the marriage took place against the consent of the parties, yet that fact need not be averred, since the mainspring of the business is the combining with menace. The remainder of the transaction, material as it is, is only matter of evidence.¹ Again, if this confederacy be set on foot, as it commonly was, for the purpose of relieving the parish from the burden of maintaining, it must be averred that the woman was actually chargeable at the time of the marriage.² To say that she was a poor unmarried woman with child, is not equivalent to an averment that she was chargeable.³ And it would likewise be insufficient to allege in an indictment that the woman was merely an inhabitant of the indicting parish. It should be averred that she was last legally settled in the parish from whence she was removed by reason of her marriage.⁴

Upon the trial of an indictment which charged the defendants with conspiring to hinder the prosecutor from taking any apprentices, it turned out in evidence, that no objection had been made by the parties combining to the eight apprentices which the prosecutor already had in his employment, and it was objected, that this was an attempt to prevent more apprentices from being set to work, and not a union against all. But Wood, B., was of opinion that the indictment was valid, and well supported by the evidence, for the effect of the confederacy was to prevent any person from being taught and instructed, and the court consequently confirmed this ruling.⁵

So, where the indictment charged a conspiracy to prevent the workmen of J. G. from continuing to work in a certain colliery, it was held sufficient to prove that a section of the workmen were required by the remainder of the body to abandon the service of J. G.⁶ Had the indictment laid the offence with reference to all the workmen, it might still have been a question whether the conduct of the defendants had not a tendency to destroy the labour of the mine altogether, and so virtually to prevent all the workmen from serving the prosecutor.⁷

In setting forth a conspiracy to embezzle the goods of a bankrupt, it is not sufficient to say that a commission issued, under which the party was duly found and declared to be a bankrupt. The indictment must include the trading, the debt of the petitioning creditor, and the fact of the bankruptcy.⁸ If the overt act be charged to defraud J. G., who was entitled to a sum of money,

¹ R. v. Parkhouse and another, East, P. C. 462.

² See R. v. Inhabitants of Holm, 11 East, 381.

³ R. v. Seward, 3 Nev. & M. 557.

⁴ R. v. Edwards and others, 2 Str. 707.

⁵ R. v. Ferguson and another, 2 Stark. 489.

⁶ R. v. Bykerdike, 1 M. & Rob. 179.

⁷ S. C.

⁸ R. v. Jones and others, 1 Nev. & M. 78; S. C. 4 B. & Adol. 345.

and the jury find that J. G. was not entitled, the verdict of guilty cannot be supported.¹

Joinder.] Counts may be joined in an indictment for conspiracy which do not include a charge of conspiracy, although the judgment respecting each may be different. "Nothing is more familiar," said Lord Ellenborough, upon one occasion, "than such a practice."²

Evidence.] Although we do not purpose to enter particularly into the subject of evidence in discussing every offence known to the criminal law, yet, the points upon this head, both with reference to the witnesses required and the matters of the indictment, have been occasionally so much the subject of legal discussion, as to make it desirable that we should, for a moment, request the reader's attention to them.

It is enough to state in an indictment that the defendants combined to create discontent and disaffection amongst the Queen's subjects, to excite them to hatred of the government, and to stir up jealousies, &c., between different classes, and especially in Ireland. And it was held that it was immaterial to add these words, "to assume and usurp the prerogative of the crown in the establishment of courts for the administration of law."³ But in the same case a count stating that an unlawful assembly was held in order, through intimidation, to procure great changes in the government of the country, was held bad for uncertainty, and the following words were considered to make no difference: "and especially by the means aforesaid, to bring about and accomplish a dissolution of the legislative union now subsisting between Great Britain and Ireland." And the words "unlawfully, maliciously, and seditiously," were also held to make no difference.⁴ Indeed, if it were intended to give the word "intimidation" any effect, it should appear that fear was intended, and upon whom it was meant to operate. The word "intimidation" is not necessarily of bad import.⁵

Witnesses.] The law respecting husband and wife is not relaxed in the case of conspiracy. Where three persons were indicted for procuring the marriage of a ward in chancery, it was proposed to call the wife of one of them, not as a witness for her husband, but on behalf of the other defendant. Lord Ellenborough, however, held, that she was not admissible. The evidence must in some way tend to the prospect of an acquittal upon a joint charge in which her husband was implicated, and the rule is the same whether her evidence were to affect him either mediately or im-

¹ R. v. Dean, 4 Jur. 364.

² 3 M. & S. 550.

³ O'Connell v. Reg. (in error),
11 Cl. & Fin. 155.

⁴ O'Connell v. Reg. (in error),
11 Cl. & F. 155.

⁵ S. C.

mediately.¹ Nor can a defendant who suffers judgment by default be called.²

Three persons, Kroehl, Gibson, and Koech, were involved in a charge of conspiracy, but Koech only, who had no counsel, called a witness in his defence. The witness was examined as to a conversation which took place between himself and another of the defendants, Kroehl. It was proposed for the prosecution to cross-examine the party as to another conversation which had taken place between Kroehl and Koech, and which might affect Kroehl. And Abbott, J., held that this might be done, although it might be a matter for future consideration whether the counsel for the defendant thus affected by the cross-examination should subsequently address the jury upon the new matter. Several conversations, which bore upon the conduct of Kroehl, were then elicited, but the jury acquitted him and convicted the others.³ Upon a question whether an annuity had been paid, the defendant swore it had not been paid. The case was, that the annuity had been paid into the bankers', and as it was found, that B., the prosecutor, had paid money to the bankers by his clerk, it was proposed to ask the clerk,—“At the time you received the money from Mr. B. to pay into the bankers, what did he say about the money?” And the court held, that the question might be put, and that the answer was receivable in evidence against the defendant.⁴ If the counsel for the prosecution declare his intention to offer no evidence against certain defendants, he may apply for their acquittal, in order that he may call them as witnesses, and it is not competent to raise an objection against that course.⁵

Where bankruptcy was alleged as an allegation, it was held, that the subscribing witness to the assignment must be called.⁶

The usual evidence upon an indictment for conspiracy is to show the existence of the illegal combination, and then to connect the defendants with it.⁷ In the year 1792, a confederacy had been formed amongst the journeymen shoemakers for the purpose of raising their wages, and various arrangements were made from time to time for the purpose of furthering this design. It being proposed to bring this general evidence forward, in the first instance, to prove an indictment for a conspiracy to raise wages, the counsel for the defendants objected, that his clients must previously be made parties to the stated combination. But Lord Kenyon admitted the evidence, observing, that men might be implicated in such an association, after the lapse of years from the time of its establishment, and although they might reside at a ¹ R. v. Locker and others, 5 Esp. 107.

² R. v. Lafone and others, 5 Esp. 154.

³ R. v. Kroehl and others, 2 Stark. 343.

⁴ R. v. Hall, 8 C. & P. 358.

⁵ R. v. Rowland and others, Ry. & Moo. N. P. C. 401.

⁶ R. v. Pope and others, 5 C. & P. 208.

⁷ The Queen's case, 2 Brod. & B. 302.

great distance from the place where the general plan was carried on. And his lordship referred to the state trials of 1745, where it became necessary to go into evidence of what was going on in France, Manchester, Scotland, and Ireland, at the same time.¹ And a similar course has been pursued upon many trials for high treason, including those in 1796.² But a common design needs not to be proved in the first instance. The acts of each are evidence against himself, and himself alone, till a conspiracy is proved.³ And proof of the falsity of the charge needs not to be tendered, although the question of bona or mala fides may be left to the jury in the absence of such proof.⁴

Having thus laid before the jury the fact of the existence of an illegal confederation, it becomes the duty of those who conduct the prosecution, to affect the defendants with a guilty knowledge of it, and with acting in concert upon the terms of it. This is done by proving certain overt acts connected with the offence charged upon defendants, and by satisfying the jury that the defendants were in some way or other engaged in union with reference to those acts. And, as to the first point, several of these overt acts taken together, although of themselves insufficient to make out the charge, will furnish a body of evidence fit to be left to the jury, it is from collateral circumstances that the fact of conspiring may be collected.⁵

Certain defendants being accused of representing themselves as persons of property in order to defraud tradesmen, after having proved their false statement as to one tradesman, it was proposed to show that a similar representation had been made to another. Upon objection made, Lord Ellenborough admitted the evidence, laying it down, that cumulative instances were necessary to prove the offence. It was a conspiracy to carry on the business of common cheats, and the same evidence would be allowable in barratry, and even in high treason where the prisoner is charged with having written several traitorous letters, or with having attended at divers consults upon that subject.⁶

Handbills published by a defendant, constitute an overt act of combining, if the cognizance and assent of other defendants be proved.⁷

Having shown the respective overt acts, which are, of course, infinitely varied according to circumstances, the participation of at least two defendants in the fraud must be developed, and the guilty union of all those involved must be shown, in order to pro-

¹ R. v. Hammond and another,
² Esp. 719.

² Id. 720.

³ R. v. Brittain, 3 Cox, 76.

⁴ R. v. Jacobs and others, 1
Cox, 173. The defendant had preferred an indictment. The indictment was preferred on Nov. 22. The averment was that it was so preferred on Nov. 1. This was immaterial, and at all events amendable.

⁵ R. v. Parsons and others, 1
Sir Wm. Bl. 392.

⁶ R. v. Roberts and others, 1
Campb. 399.

⁷ See R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P.
297.

cure the conviction of all. Not that it is absolutely necessary for two defendants to be included in the indictment, for one of the parties to the fraud may have died,¹ or one co-conspirator may not be found, and then the indictment may charge A. B. with having conspired with one C. D., &c. Or, again, various persons to the jurors unknown may have been associated with A. B. in the fraud, and yet A. B. may be indicted, for that he, together with certain unknown persons, did certain acts. But, in general, more defendants than one are found to appear for the purpose of answering this charge.

The ordinary way of showing an illegal confederation amongst defendants is, in addition to any overt act of the transaction in question, to bring them as much together as possible. When the evil conduct, which is the matter of the charge, is brought forward in evidence, it tends considerably to a conviction, to show that all the defendants had a hand in advancing and encouraging the proceeding.

No clearer evidence of illegal union could well be produced. But the chief questions upon this head of proving combination have arisen where the defendants have not been much, if at all, together, and yet, where there has been such a communion amongst them, one with another, respectively, as to leave no doubt of their having been engaged in one common design. Two persons are discovered in the pursuit of the same object by the same means, and that more than once; the one accomplishes one portion of a plan, and the other brings it to a conclusion. It is for the jury to say, whether this is not proof of a conspiracy between the two individuals.² And, we have seen, that it is not necessary for all the conspirators to be acquainted with each other,³ so that such a mutual knowledge need not be proved.

Several persons belonging to one family were found in the employment of making cards, and were detected at the same time in giving money to the apprentices of the king's card-maker for the purpose of putting grease into the paste so as to spoil the cards. They were indicted for a conspiracy to ruin this card-maker, and, although one only was present at the time when the bribe was given, yet, as all had, in their respective turns, offered the money, it was held that they might be convicted without any proof of a previous communication with each other.⁴ The same point was decided upon the trial of a conspiracy for carrying off a young woman.⁵ It has even been held, that if a banker be cognizant of the fraudulent purpose to which a sum of money lodged at his house is to be applied, he may be included in an indictment for conspiracy.⁶ But it must in such a case appear clearly, that he was acquainted with the object of the conspiracy, and of the mode

¹ R. v. Nicols, 13 East, 412, n.

² R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297. 144.

See also R. v. Shellard, 9 C. & P. 277.

³ Ante.

⁴ R. v. Cope and others, 1 Str.

144.

⁵ R. v. Lord Grey and others, 9 St. Tr. 127.

⁶ 2 Campb. 233.

stated in the indictment by which it was to be carried into effect. Therefore, where the charge was for conspiring to obtain a situation for one H., upon payment for a certain sum, which was to be shared amongst all the defendants except the banker, it was held, that proof must be given of the banker's knowledge that each defendant was to have a portion of the amount, and as there was not any evidence to this effect with respect to one S. H., Lord Ellenborough ordered an acquittal of the banker.¹

In conspiracy, it is not necessary to prove an actual conspiracy, nor expressed malice: a conspiracy and malice may be inferred from the circumstances taken together.² And indeed, it has been solemnly decided, that if two persons associate to break the law, no act in pursuance of it needs to be done by the conspirators.³

However, not facts merely, but declarations made at any time or place in pursuance of the plan,⁴ by any one of the conspirators, constitute evidence against all. It was at one time contended, but unsuccessfully, that the rule was limited to acts done.⁵ And it may be noticed, in passing, that both acts and declarations of a co-conspirator are admissible, although he be not tried in company with his associates.⁶

The rule above stated, with respect to declarations, is quite in accordance with that adopted in cases of high treason. But if the declarations are detached, and not made in prosecution of the object of the conspiracy, the case becomes altered, and they cannot be allowed.⁷

Letters and documentary evidence are likewise admissible under the same qualifications, and it does not signify that the letters are not sent.⁸ So, where there was a scheme to accuse the prosecutor of forgery by means of imputing to him the fabrication of a cheque upon the bankers of one of the defendants, a letter written by another defendant, and containing the charge, was given in evidence, together with conversations referring to the cheque in question. However, in the same case it was deemed unnecessary to produce the cheque itself, although it was shown that such a document was in existence.⁹

So, again, the manuscript of a handbill tending to annoy an individual was admitted in evidence as having been published by order of a defendant, whilst, at the same time, it was held sufficient for a witness to state that he received a number of printed copies of that manuscript from the defendant, without producing those

¹ R. v. Pollman and others, 2 Campb. 229.

² R. v. Curril and others, Loft. 156.

³ O'Connell v. Reg. (in error), 11 Cl. & F. 155.

⁴ See East, P. C. 96.

⁵ R. v. Salter and another, 5 Esp. 125; S. P. R. v. Bower, cited, Id. 127. S. P. by Buller, J., R. v. Hardy, cited, Id.

⁶ See 2 Stark. Ev. 411.

⁷ Id. 327.

⁸ 2 Stark. Ev. 326. It is the same rule as in cases of treason. See R. v. Stone, 6 T. R. 527. R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 140.

⁹ R. v. Ford and another, 1 Nev. & M. 776.

copies.¹ Entries in a custom-house ledger, made by one of the defendants, respecting goods which had not paid duty, was held admissible as an act tending to show the object of the conspiracy.² But evidence of a memorandum made of the counterfoil of a cheque after the principal transaction was complete, was held inadmissible.³

When an instrument is brought forward in evidence as part of a fraud, it is observable that the absence of a stamp is quite immaterial.⁴ Whereas, if the instrument be introduced collaterally upon an indictment distinct from the offence, it cannot be received unless it be so stamped.⁵

It has been before remarked, that the success of the confederacy needs not to be proved. The bare attempt at fraud, or to carry an illegal design into execution, is sufficient.⁶ And if a count charges the conspiracy to have been effected by false pretences, it may be rejected as surplusage as to the false pretence if the conspiracy be proved.⁷

Nevertheless, as the acts of one defendant may, as we have shown, be given in evidence to promote the conviction of another, it is certainly competent for any defendant to produce proof of his having been made the dupe of a co-defendant. Thus, letters were received in evidence upon one occasion in order to satisfy the jury that this was the fact.⁸ In this case written correspondence between the parties had been admitted on behalf of the crown, and it was held, that all the correspondence should be laid before the jury, at the desire of one of the defendants, to show how he had been deceived by the other.⁹

It is no defence for a defendant to prove that the original meeting between him and the other defendants was innocent, if they afterwards ally themselves to the illegal object charged in the indictment.¹⁰ And the person who joins in a conspiracy already formed, cannot allege in excuse that fact, because if he comes into the plot, he is equally guilty with the original conspirators.¹¹ The record of acquittal of one defendant is evidence for another defendant subsequently tried.¹²

Trial.] Before the prosecutor proceeds to trial, it may not appear to be irrelevant to call upon him for some account of the charges upon which he means to rely at the hearing of the case, but this power of asking for particulars is confined within very narrow limits. Indeed, Abbott, C. J., observed, upon one oc-

¹ R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297.

² R. v. Blake, 6 Q. B. 126.

³ S. C.

⁴ R. v. Fowle and another, 4 C. & P. 592. The minute book of the court of quarter sessions is not sufficient to prove the finding of a bill.

⁵ R. v. Smyth, 5 C. & P. 201.

⁶ Ante.

⁷ R. v. Yates and another, 6 Cox, 441.

⁸ R. v. Whitehead, 1 C. & P. 67.

⁹ S. C.

¹⁰ R. v. Lee, 2 Stark. Ev. 324.

¹¹ R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 297.

¹² R. v. Tooke, 1 Ch. Burn. 823.

casation, that the only case in which the court would order a particular to be delivered under an indictment for a misdemeanor, was that of barratry, or where a man was charged with being a barrator. "It appears to me," said the learned chief justice, "that the best course for the defendant in this case to take, is to apply to the prosecutor to give him some information as to the particulars upon which he means to rely in support of the indictment. If he refuses, then an application may be made to postpone the trial, in order that this question may be more maturely discussed. But whether discussed or not, the objection now suggested may be matter of very strong observation to the jury on the trial."¹ And the court declined to make a rule for the delivery of such a bill of particulars.² But, upon a subsequent occasion, the court, upon application, where the conspiracy was charged in a general form, ordered such information to be afforded by way of particulars as would be given by a special count. Although they still refrained from directing any statement as to the specific acts with which the defendants were charged, or the times and places where such acts were committed.³

If there be an indictment for felony, and another for conspiracy grounded upon the felony, an acquittal of the felony will induce the judge to direct an acquittal for the conspiracy, if the evidence be the same.⁴

Unlike to perjury, the crime of conspiracy is cognizable at quarter sessions, a conspiracy being a trespass, and tending to a breach of the peace.⁵

With regard to the county where the offence is to be tried, any one may be selected where an overt act of conspiracy has been attempted. Thus, where the indictment was found by a jury of Middlesex, but no proof of an actual conspiracy embracing all the several conspirators was offered in Middlesex, and where the individual actings of some of the conspirators were confined to other counties than Middlesex, the trial was still holden to be rightly had in the latter county upon proof of overt acts done by some of the conspirators there.⁶

So, again, certain persons had entered into a plan to fabricate false vouchers, in order to cheat the crown. One of the conspirators transmitted these fictitious documents to the commissioners of the navy of Middlesex, and this distinct overt act of conspiracy justified the trial in Middlesex.⁷

¹ 1 Chit. 699.

² R. v. —, Id. 698.

³ R. v. Hamilton, 7 C. & P. 448. R. v. Probert and others, Dears. 32, n. R. v. Rycroft and others, 6 Cox, 76.

⁴ R. v. Maudsly and another, 1 Lew. C. C. 51.

⁵ R. v. Rispal, 3 Burr. 1320.

⁶ R. v. Bowes and others, 4

East, 171, cited there; S. C. cited by counsel, arg.; 6 East, 590.

⁷ R. v. Brisac and another, 4 East, 164; S. C. mentioned by Abbott, arg., 6 East, 590. Whether an indictment for conspiracy can be referred, qy? See R. v. Hardy, 19 L. J. Q. B. 196; 14 Q. B. 529. Semble, that if an acquittal be entered the matter may be referred, otherwise not.

Verdict.] A count charged one conspiracy to effect several illegal objects. It was held that the jury might find all or some of the defendants guilty of conspiring to effect one or more of the objects specified.¹ But there were mistakes in entering the following verdict in conspiracy. There were five defendants, and the charge of conspiracy was single. The verdict was, A. and B. guilty generally on counts 1, 2, and 3, except as to certain words in counts 1 and 2. C. and D. guilty on counts 1, 2, and 3, except as to the words, and another charge contained in each count. E., guilty on counts 1 and 2, and of part of count 3. A. B. C. and D., guilty on the 4th count. E. guilty of part of the 4th count. Here there was but one conspiracy, and the jury had found the defendants guilty of several conspiracies on each count. But a nol. pros. against E. would cure the findings on the 4th count.²

An indictment contained several counts, each of which charged a distinct conspiracy. The defendants pleaded Not guilty. One conspiracy only was proved, yet the jury were held competent to convict upon each count, and if the evidence proved the allegation in each, the verdict would be entered accordingly.³ A verdict was found upon an indictment charging the prisoners with conspiring with persons unknown; as, that A. had conspired with B. or C., (both being indicted by name,) "but the jury would not say which." The court held this verdict to be one of acquittal.⁴

A count stating a conspiracy to remove goods from vaults in the Custom House without paying the duties (the vaults being approved vaults), is good without showing how the vaults became approved.⁵ And the offence is conspiracy at common law, and is, therefore, not affected by the repeal of the Customs' Act, 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 36, which was in force at the time of the conspiracy.⁶

Judgment.] The judgment upon a conviction for conspiracy is fine and imprisonment, together, it being a trespass, with sureties for the good behaviour. And a conspiracy to raise the rate of wages is punishable with hard labour, under 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, in addition to fine and imprisonment. But a question was made at one time how far it was competent for the court to pronounce judgment upon one person alone, the other, from various circumstances, being absent at the trial of the convicted conspirators. It was, however, soon determined, that this course might be pursued,⁷ even in a case where the other party might be shortly afterwards tried, and so, by possibility, a contrary verdict might be given, and this decision has been ever since abided by.

¹ O'Connell v. Reg. 11 Cl. & F. 155.

² S. C.

³ R. v. Gompertz, 11 Jur. 204; 9 Q. B. 824.

⁴ R. v. Thompson and others, 20 L. J. M. C. 183; 16 Q. B. 832.

⁵ 15 Jur. 654; 16 Q. B. 832.

⁶ 15 Jur. 654; 20 L. J. M. C. 683; 16 Q. B. 852.

⁷ Jenk. 27. See Id. 31, Bellewe, 108.

A defendant had been convicted of a conspiracy to cheat with false dice, and it was moved that judgment should not be entered till the others came in, for that, if the others were acquitted, no judgment could be given against him. But by Hale, C. J.,—True it is, that if one be acquitted the other cannot be found guilty;¹ yet, if one be found guilty, and the other come not in upon process, or die hanging the suit, judgment shall be upon the verdict against the other. However, the court gave the convicted defendant two or three days in order to bring in the other two, and ordered that the judgment should be stayed in the meanwhile.² James Stamp Sutton Cooke was indicted with three others for a conspiracy. One did not appear. A second, R. S. Cooke, pleaded in abatement. J. S. S. Cooke was put upon his trial with the fourth, who was acquitted. The person who pleaded in abatement was ordered to answer over, upon which he pleaded the general issue, and before his trial judgment was moved for against J. S. S. Cooke. It was then moved to stay the judgment against Cooke, for if the other party were acquitted, Cooke would be virtually acquitted,³ and the cases above cited were distinguished on the ground of the defendants not having pleaded on those occasions, whereas here, R. S. Cooke had pleaded Not guilty. But the court overruled the objection. When J. S. S. Cooke was convicted there was no plea of not guilty by R. S. Cooke upon the record, nor had judgment of respondeat ouster been given upon the demurrer. There might be a repugnancy upon the record if R. S. Cooke were to be acquitted, but the court would not presume that possible event against the verdict. The rule was discharged.⁴

A fortiori, then, one conspirator may be tried and convicted after the death of another, for there cannot then be any repugnancy, nor a possibility of contradictory verdicts. Niccolls and Bygrave were charged with conspiracy, but before the indictment could be preferred, Bygrave died, and an objection was taken, that one could not be convicted of conspiracy, but it was overruled upon the authority of R. v. Kinnersley,⁵ and judgment was given for the king.⁶ And it is no ground for a venire de novo by reason of a mis-trial, if the trial proceeds against both, although one be dead between the time of preparing the indictment and the trial, unless,

¹ R. v. Grimes and another, 3 Mod. 220.

² R. v. Thody, 1 Ventr. 234; S. P. R. v. Horne, cited, 1 Str. 195. A. and H. were charged in this case cum multis aliis, &c. The grand jury ignored the bill as to A., and the conviction of H. was held right, because he had been found guilty of conspiracy cum multis aliis. S. P. R. v. Kinnersley and another, Id. 193.

³ The verdict being "guilty of conspiracy with R. S. Cooke," (the other person who pleaded in abatement).

⁴ R. v. Cooke and others, 5 B. & C. 538; 7 D. & Ry. 673.

⁵ R. v. Niccolls, 2 Str. 1227.

⁶ S. C. 13 East, 412, n., and the same principle has been recognized in the case of a riot. R. v. Scott and another, 3 Burr. 1262.

indeed, the death be suggested upon the record.¹ A new trial will not be refused to one defendant if there be grounds for it, although the rest have been rightly convicted. Nevertheless, all the other defendants must also have a new trial.² Every count, therefore, is to be taken separately. Under an Excise Act (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 53, ss. 82, 84), where the crown neglected to appeal from the decision of the quarter sessions upon three counts on which the defendant had succeeded, but the defendant himself appealed against the fourth, and succeeded in the Court of Exchequer, it was held, that the crown could not open the case again upon the three counts for want of the appeal.³ The officer of excise had been offered to be bribed with a country bank note. Questions were made, whether it were necessary to state that the note was unsatisfied, whether the note was a security.⁴

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29, hard labour is added in cases of conspiracy to cheat or defraud, or to extort money or goods, or falsely to accuse of any crime, or to disturb, pervert or prevent, the course of public justice.

CHAPTER III.

EXTORTION.

Extortion implies a fraud. It imports a taking from a person who would not have given without reluctance. And, in a large sense, it means any oppression under colour of right;⁵ but it is often recognized in a more limited sense, as the taking of money by any officer, or person in authority, by colour of his office, either where none at all is due, or not so much is due, or before it is due. As where persons in power formerly attached the goods of strangers without jurisdiction, an act which by 3 Edw. 1, c. 35, was declared to be a misdemeanor.⁶ It is a rule, that, in extortion,

¹ R. v. Kendrick, 12 L. J. M. C. 165; 5 Q. B. 49; Dav. & M. 208.

² R. v. Gompertz, 9 Q. B. 824; 16 L. J. Q. B. 124.

³ R. v. Gamble, 16 Mees. & W. 384.

⁴ S. C. It depends on the wording of the statute whether the security needs to be stated in the conviction.

⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 68, s. 1.

⁶ See as to extortion by officers of the forest, 7 Ric. 2, c. 4, by which any forest officer taking or imprisoning any man without due indictment, or being taken in the mainour, or trespassing in the forest, or constraining any man to make any obligation or ransom, was punishable by fine and ransom at the king's pleasure. Ecclesiastical officers are punishable for this offence at common law. R. v. Smythe, Palm. 318.

the threat must be such as a man of firm mind cannot be expected to resist. As, where the prosecutor, being first in custody, was told, that unless he would give a certain sum and his note, he should be sent to Newgate, imprisoned, and set in the pillory.¹ In this case, Holt, C. J., said, that every extortion was an actual trespass.² And Lord Ellenborough, in referring to this same law upon a subsequent occasion, observed, that, in R. v. Woodward, there was an actual duress, such as would have avoided a bond under similar circumstances;³ whilst, in delivering his judgment, the lord chief justice remarked, that the distinction lay very strongly between threats made when the party is in custody, and when he is at liberty. So that in the case at that moment before the court, the diversity was acknowledged and relied on. One Southerton had been convicted upon an information filed by the attorney-general, for extorting money under a threat of prosecuting certain medicine vendors for selling their wares without stamps. It was moved to arrest the judgment, inasmuch as the parties must have been cognizant of the law, and, consequently, that they must have been aware of the defendant's inability to institute or relinquish a prosecution. But the court referred to the general principle, whether a firm man must not be presumed to be in a condition to resist such a threat as the present, and after hearing the attorney-general at another day upon this point, they stopped the counsel for the defence, and arrested the judgment upon the suggestion which they themselves had previously thrown out.⁴ But it was added, that an indictment might have been sustained upon 18 El. c. 5, s. 4, an Act against compounding penal actions without leave of the court.⁵ And, by possibility, the charge might have been so laid as to raise the question, whether the defendant could not have been punished for an attempt to commit a statutable misdemeanor.⁶ And, lastly, it was said, that an attempt to stifle a public prosecution against the policy of a statute might have been a proper charge at common law against the defendant, had the indictment contained a statement that the persons threatened were actually guilty of the offence in question.⁷

However, to return to the offence itself: we have said, that any officer or person in authority, to which may be added, any one having a colour of right, is an individual capable of committing extortion. Thus, a ferryman who demands and takes more than his fare for a common passage boat is chargeable with this misdemeanor, for the necessity of the case evidently induces a payment upon compulsion.⁸ Certain justices of the peace, who, instead of taking the fee of 1s. allowed by 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 25, for granting licences to publicans, refused to issue such licences unless 10s. were paid upon each, were deemed guilty of extortion, and heavily

¹ R. v. Woodward and others, 11 Mod. 137; 6 East, 133. S. C. cited.

² 11 Mod. 137.

³ 6 East, 140.

⁴ R. v. Southerton, 6 East, 126.

⁵ R. v. Southerton, 6 East, 140.

⁶ See the same case.

⁷ Id. 142. By Lawrence, J. But the defendant was struck off the rolls of the court. Id. 143.

⁸ R. v. Roberts, 4 Mod. 101.

fined.¹ A churchwarden took a silver cup from a person whom he appointed pew-opener in the gallery of the church, and the court refused to quash an indictment for extortion, saying, that it must be tried whether the cup were corruptly taken, for, perhaps, the churchwarden might have accounted to the parish for it.² So, if a miller should take more than the toll warranted by the custom, he is indictable, especially if there were not any other mill in the neighbourhood where a person could legally grind his corn.³ So, if the lord of a market should occupy the ground with his stalls in such a manner as to compel the inhabitants to hire his stalls for want of room to stand and sell their wares, he is guilty of extortion. On the other hand, if he leave sufficient room, and the neighbours voluntarily hire the stalls, his conduct cannot be deemed to be extorsive.⁴ So, if the clerk of the king's market take extravagant fees from tradesmen, he is guilty of this offence.⁵

The chancellor and registrar of the Bishop of Salisbury forced one T. H. to prove a will in the bishop's court, well knowing that it had been previously proved in the prerogative court of Canterbury, and thus obtained 40s. from T. H. And this act was held to be an extortion by the Court of King's Bench.⁶

By 26 Hen. 8, c. 3, s. 20, any officer of the exchequer who shall take of any archbishop, bishop, &c. any reward as a bribe for making a quietus respecting the tenths, shall make fine to the king and lose his office.

A coroner was guilty of extortion who refused to hold an inquest until his fees had been paid.⁷ A counsellor, it seems, may be guilty of extortion.⁸

An under sheriff refused to execute a fi. fa. unless his shilling-pence were first paid; and the court said, that he might be indicted.⁹ And it was said to be extortion for a sheriff to take a bond for his fee before the suing out of execution.¹⁰ So, where a bailiff agreed to bail a person in consideration of so much money to be received from one of the sureties, it was held, that he could not recover in assumpsit. Both parties were in fault, but in pari delicto, potior est conditio defendentis.¹¹

¹ R. v. Seymour and others, 7 Mod. 382. See R. v. Lloyd, Cunn. Rep. 84, 133. v. Neale and Rowse, 3 Inst. 149; 13 Rep. 24.

² R. v. Eyres, 1 Sid. 307; S. C. 2 Keb. 100.

³ 1 Ld. Raym. 149.

⁴ R. v. Burdett, 1 Ld. Raym. 149.

⁵ R. v. Refit, 7 Mod. 220; S. C. Cunn. Rep. 36; S. C. 4 Barn. 436.

⁶ R. v. Loggen and another, 1 Str. 73; see 3 Leon. 268. The case of a commissary for extorting money for absolution; see also R.

⁷ 3 Inst. 149. But he is now paid by salary; and see 23 & 24 Vict. c. 116, s. 5.

⁸ Holt's Ca. 179.

⁹ Anon. 1 Salk. 330. S. P. R. v. Hescott, Id. The court said that the plaintiff might sue him for not doing his duty, or pay the fees, and then indict him for extortion.

¹⁰ Hutt. 53; Noy. Rep. 76.

¹¹ Stotesbury v. Smith, 2 Burr. 924.

An information was granted against the mayor of Wallingford taking more money for press warrants than was due.¹

The case above concerning bail leads us to illustrate the proposition, that, where a party is in custody, he is most especially within the protection of the law in respect of extortion. In the instances of the ferryman, the justices, the coroner, and so on, the individual from whom the money was demanded could not have derived a legal and necessary benefit unless he had submitted to the fraud, but the principle does not, as we have seen, extend to cases where a party has been threatened with a prosecution for an offence, and is not in custody. As soon, however, as the intended victim becomes under duress, the affair is immediately altered. The defendant in an action for crim. con. had a verdict against him for 200*l.* and wanting to get a release upon payment of a smaller sum, he got a warrant from a justice to apprehend the plaintiff for murder, and then having secured him, entered an arrest for 500*l.* at his own suit in order to extort the release. These facts appearing to the court, they made a rule for him to show cause why an attachment should not issue against him, and the constable, the bailiff, and the justices' clerk were included in the rule.² So, where a gaoler had obtained a note from his prisoner before he would return a habeas corpus directed to him, an attachment was ordered.³ And if more fees be taken than are really due, an indictment for extortion will lie under any circumstances, for this is an evident demand under colour of process.⁴ So a collector of taxes is answerable for taking a larger amount than he ought.⁵ And, moreover, by the stat. of Westminster 1 (3 Edw. 1, c. 26), no sheriff nor other minister of the king, whose office in any way concerns the administration or execution of jus-

¹ R. v. Wing, 1 Sess. C. 915.

² Williams v. Lyons, 8 Mod. 189. For it is no defence on the part of an agent that he has been employed by another. The collector of the post-horse duty demanded of the prosecutor 5*l.* for letting out certain horses without having paid the duty. A promissory note was thereupon given. The collector gave the note to his principal, and relied upon this fact as a defence. But it was held, that he could not avail himself of his principal's participation in his offence. R. v. Higgins, 4 C. & P. 247. There are no accessories in this offence, but he that is assisting is as guilty as the extortioner. By Parker, C. J. 1 Str. 75.

³ R. v. Colvin, 8 Mod. 226. See Stark. P. C. 588, "It is a great misdemeanor." Per cur. R. v. Johnson, 11 Mod. 62. 1 Russ. C. & M. 145, citing Trem. P. C. 111. R. v. Broughton, 13 Rep. 127. But where a gaoler advanced money to a prisoner for his habeas corpus, the latter was remanded upon his refusal in court to repay the gaoler. Comb. 36.

⁴ See R. v. Benson, 1 Sid. 420. R. v. Baines, 2 Ld. Raym. 1265.

⁵ R. v. Orm, 1 Sess. C. 160; S. P. R. v. Atkinson and another, 3 Ld. Raym. 61; S. C. 11 Mod. 79.

tice, (a term which includes escheators, coroners, bailiffs, gaolers, and other inferior officers,) may take any reward excepting that which he is entitled to from the king.¹ No prescription can be set up in opposition to this statute, so that a claim of certain fees by prescription on the part of the clerk of the market for the examination of weights and measures was held to be merely void.² By 55 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 9, any clerk of the court or of assize, &c. who shall exact any fee from prisoners charged with felony or misdemeanor after their acquittal, or discharge by proclamation, or against whom no such bill shall be found, in respect of the discharge of such prisoner, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.³

The indictment against the clerk of assize states, that A., on, &c., then being [clerk of assize], certain fees [gratuity] from one B., to wit, &c., unlawfully did exact, he the said B., being then in prison, [state the circumstances,] against the form, &c.

Also, by 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 62, to demand or receive any sum of money, or other valuable thing, as a gift or present, or under colour thereof, whether for the use of the party receiving it or under a pretence of its being for the use of the East India Company, or any person whatever, such demand being made by a British subject holding or exercising any office or employment under the king, or the company, in the East Indies, shall be deemed to be extortion, and a misdemeanor. The present so received is moreover to be forfeited, or the full value thereof, but the court may, if they should think fit, either order such present to be restored to the person who offered it, or may order it, or any part of it, or of any fine which they shall set upon the offender, to be paid to the prosecutor or informer.

Nevertheless there are some acts which, although they may seem very much to savour of disobedience to the statute of Westminster before mentioned, if not of extortion, have yet been held not to amount to that offence. Thus it has been said, that where a voluntary gift to an officer for his diligence and exertions is united with a custom in such cases, the acceptance of such a present on the part of the officer is not a misdemeanor.⁴ Much less can the taking of reasonable and allowed fees be construed into an offence.⁵ And certain payments, which are called perquisites of right, may also be taken. As the fee of 1s. from every prisoner who is acquitted, which the sheriff demands as his per-

¹ See 1 Russ. C. M. 144. R. v. Mayor of Lynn, 1 Leon. 295.

² 1 Hawk. c. 68, s. 2.

³ And punishable by fine and imprisonment, and incapacity to hold the office. See likewise as to justices' marshals taking more money from persons recovering seisin of land, or gaining their suits, or from jurors, towns, &c., attached upon pleas of the crown, than they ought. 3 Edw. 1, c. 30. To be "grievously punished," i. e. fined and imprisoned.

⁴ 3 Bac. Abr. 108, tit. "Extortion."

⁵ Co. Litt. 368.

quisite.¹ And of the same nature was the fee of 1*d.* which the coroner used to claim from every visne when he came before the justices in eyre.²

It has not been unusual for the collector of a toll gate to demand more than is due from the person seeking to pass through it. And if he should act bonâ fide, or under a mistaken impression of right, a jury would rarely find him guilty of extortion. And if the right to pass be not clearly explained to the toll-gate keeper, he cannot be charged with extortion under any circumstances, because the taking of toll is not in itself a criminal act. Should an exemption, therefore, be the claim which the passenger conceives he has a right to insist upon, it must be notified to the collector of tolls. So that where the prosecutor was compelled to pay 3*d.* for carrying manure, and he remained silent upon the subject, Lord Ellenborough at once held, that an indictment for extortion could not be supported.³ But it should be remarked, that a collector may, under circumstances where the exemption has been duly notified, be convicted of unlawfully demanding toll, although the jury should expressly negative the extorsive character of the transaction.⁴ Indeed, it has not been very uncommon for parties to try the right to toll by preferring an indictment against the keeper of the gate.

An indictment for extortion will not lie for taking an excessive distress, nor will an indictment lie for accusing another of felony, and for robbery by such means;⁵ nor, of course, concerning private matters.⁶

Extortion—Gaolers.] By 55 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 13, any gaoler exacting any fee or gratuity from any prisoner for or on account of the entrance, commitment, or discharge of such prisoner, or who shall detain him for nonpayment thereof, shall be rendered incapable of holding his office, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine and imprisonment.

The cause of the taking ought, therefore, to be mentioned, but if the objection should not be raised on demurrer, it will be too late after verdict to move upon this point, for it will stand on the record, that the defendant extorsively took more than was his due by colour of his office.⁷ Nor is the sum itself at all material in cases where no fee nor payment of any kind was due.⁸ And again, where it becomes necessary to name a sum, and to state that the defendant exceeded that amount in his demand, proof that he extorted 1*s.* is quite sufficient to satisfy a charge for taking twenty;⁹ and any number of acts may be charged in the same in-

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 68, s. 2.

² Id.

³ R. v. Hamlyn, 4 Campb. 379.

⁴ R. v. Adams, 6 M. & S. 52.

⁵ R. v. Stonehouse, 3 Salk. 188.

⁶ R. v. Carre, 2 Keb. 336.

⁷ See R. v. Cover, 1 Sid. 91. R. v. Refit, 7 Mod. 220.

⁸ 1 Str. 75.

⁹ R. v. Burdett, 1 Ld. Raym. 149; 6 T. R. 267.

dictment.¹ Nor, indeed, does it seem to be necessary, although it is usual, to aver that the defendant had no right to act in the manner stated in the count. As where there was an omission to allege that the defendant had no warrant to take the prosecutor to Newgate, the threat having been that the prosecutor should be so taken upon a warrant for perjury.² A fortiori, the offence imputed need not be negatived under such circumstances.³ But, on the other hand, where a fee was due, it must be stated in the indictment;⁴ and the offence must be sufficiently expressed. Where the defendant was charged with taking money by colour of his office as bailiff,⁵ without averring that he was the bailiff, or that he took more than was due to him, the court quashed the indictment.⁶ Therefore the sum must be stated where there exists a right to take certain monies.⁷ So, again, too general a charge will be insufficient; as, where the defendant had been acquitted upon every count excepting one which was general, and alleged that he had, under colour of his office, caused his agents to demand and receive of several other persons several sums of money for examining weights and measures, judgment was arrested for the generality of this charge.⁸ The taking, moreover, must be averred. An extorsive taking constitutes the offence, and not an illegal agreement to take; for a pardon after the agreement, and before the taking, does not pardon the extortion.⁹ And it is further to be remarked, that every taking is a separate offence, so that it is improper to heap together several acts of extortion in one count. A common ferryman was indicted for extorting, at certain times, from divers persons unknown, divers sums of money exceeding the ancient rate and price of passage, that is to say, twopence for carrying over a man and horse, &c. and judgment was stayed for the uncertainty.¹⁰

Joinder.] It has been determined, that where the defendants had no title to take any fees, it could not be an objection to say that they ought to have been separately indicted, or where they took a certain sum in gross and then parted it betwixt them, whilst, on the other hand, if the indictment were for taking more

¹ R. v. Broughton, Trem. P. C. 111.

² 11 Mod. 137.

³ Id.

⁴ R. v. Lake, 3 Leon. 268.

⁵ See R. v. Gower, 1 Keb. 487.

⁶ R. v. Hill, Comb. 64. Although, in general, they will put the defendant to demur in cases of extortion. R. v. Wadsworth, 5 Mod. 13.

⁷ R. v. Tracey, 6 Mod. 31, where a judge was charged with extorting money by force of a forged warrant, knowing it to be forged.

The jury having acquitted him of the forgery, but found him guilty of the rest, upon objection taken, that the forgery was the principal charge, the court quashed the indictment, but ordered the defendant to enter into a recognizance to appear to answer a fresh indictment.

⁸ R. v. Robe, 2 Str. 999.

⁹ 1 Ld. Raym. 149, by Holt, C. J.

¹⁰ R. v. Roberts, 4 Mod. 101; S. C. Carth. 226; S. C. 1 Show. 390. See 2 Burr. 984.

than was due, such an exception might, possibly, be warranted, because that which might be extortion in one would not necessarily amount to that offence in the other.¹ But, in general, two may be indicted for extortion.²

Trial and judgment.] The trial may be in any county, by virtue of 31 El. c. 5, s. 4.³

The sessions have jurisdiction over this misdemeanor, extortion being particularly mentioned in the commission.⁴

The judgment for extortion at common law is fine and imprisonment, together with an incapacity to hold the office in respect of which the exaction has taken place. As where any clerk of assize, clerk of the peace, &c., or their deputies, or other officers, shall exact any fees, upon their discharge, from prisoners charged with felony or misdemeanor, or with being accessory to felony, against whom no bill has been found, or who shall be acquitted, or discharged by proclamation.⁵ So, where any gaoler shall exact any fee or gratuity from any prisoner on account of his entrance, commitment, or discharge, or shall detain him in custody till such fee be paid, he is made liable to similar punishment.⁶ There is an old Act inflicting fine and ransom, and the loss of office at the king's pleasure, for extorsive conduct on the part of the admiral, or his officers, with respect to licences for passing out of the realm;⁷ and another which prescribes a fine to the king, together with loss of the office, against any officer of the exchequer who shall take any manner of reward or thing from any archbishop or bishop, or any other having charge of the collection and payment of tenths, for making their account or quietus est in the exchequer.⁸

By 3 Edw. 1, c. 26, any sheriff or king's officer who shall take any reward to do his office beyond his allowance, shall "yield twice as much,"⁹ and be punished at the king's will. By 1 Hen. 4, c. 11, any sheriff doing any extortion to the people, and being thereof attainted, shall likewise be punished at the king's will, and forfeit double the amount of his exaction.¹⁰ And if the sheriff do not lawfully acquit the king's debtors after payment, he shall be fined and pay thrice as much as he has received.¹¹ So, if the

¹ 1 Str. 75.

² R. v. Atkinson and others, 1 Salk. 382.

³ 2 Hawk. c. 26, s. 50; see also 1 Hawk. c. 68, in the notes at the end, where it seems as though Hawkins had doubted whether the trial could be had in any county.

⁴ 1 Str. 75; 3 Inst. 149, as to extortion by the clergy.

⁵ See 55 Geo. 3, c. 56, s. 9. Note, this Act does not extend to sheriffs.

⁶ 55 Geo. 3, c. 50, s. 13. Note, the Act does not extend to the King's Bench or Fleet prisons, nor to the Marshalsea and Palace courts.

⁷ 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 6.

⁸ Ante, p. 1075.

⁹ For which an action will lie. 3 Com. Dig. 323.

¹⁰ See note above.

¹¹ 31 Hen. 3, st. 4; 3 Edw. 1, c. 19.

sheriff do not let a party see the estreat sealed, and do not tot up that which is paid, he shall be fined, and pay treble damages to the party complaining thereof.¹ So, if the sheriff do not release a distress, if the debtor (i. e. probably the king's debtor) can find able and sufficient surety in respect of the same, he shall be grievously punished.²

By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 110, s. 2, extortion by the registrar, &c. under the Joint Stock Companies Registration Act, is made a misdemeanor. He is prohibited from either demanding or receiving any gratuity or reward beyond his fees.³

¹ 42 Edw. 3, c. 9.

² 28 Edw. 1, st. 3, c. 12. By fine and imprisonment.

³ This Act is, in a great measure, repealed. See 19 & 20 Vict. c. 47, s. 107; 20 & 21 Vict. c. 12, s. 23.

PART XI.

Of Indictable Offences against the Public Peace.

CHAPTER I.

OF UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLIES.

With respect to open demonstrations against the safety of the community, a riot, a rout, and an unlawful assembly, may each, according to their respective circumstances, become misdemeanors against the public safety. The riot, which consists in an assemblage with an unlawful intention and a perpetration of some overt act; the rout, which is the assembling with a wrong motive, but without carrying it into execution, and the unlawful meeting, simply considered, which is a gathering with or without an original intent to do evil,¹ but which may well be deemed illegal by reason of its formidable appearance, may certainly, if allowed to proceed too far, be not only subversive of the public peace of a district, but may likewise threaten the general safety. Still, inasmuch as these disturbances are in their beginnings of a private nature, (for if public and general, they would amount to high treason,) and as they do not, in the majority of cases, advance to a greater degree of annoyance than a temporary injury of the public peace, we will, with the exception of unlawful assemblies, postpone the consideration of them till the next section, which treats more particularly of misdemeanors against the peace. There are other offences, however, independently of riot, which threaten the safety of the community at large. A proposition to hold a convention, a national convention, for example, is clearly illegal, for it is not possible to anticipate with certainty the peaceable result of such a design. And, therefore, where a meeting was called for the purpose of adopting preparatory measures for holding such a convention, it was held to be unlawful, and it was no good defence to allege, that the proclamation had not been read.¹ This was, in fact, an unlawful assembly with an original intention to do a wrongful act.²

¹ Hawkins considers that the such meetings as may be likely to presence of an intention to do raise fears and jealousies. "For wrong, as stated in some defini- no one can foresee what may be tions of an unlawful assembly, is the event of such an assembly." too narrow a meaning, and that 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 9; see also 3 the term should be extended to Stark. 103, 106; 5 C. & P. 154.

There are, however, certain exceptions to the statutes which restrict these meetings—as in the case of election meetings and attendance on business in the case of holding meetings within a mile of Westminster Hall. There are also other exceptions to the general law of illegal meetings and confederacies, and disorderly houses of unlicensed lecturing. Freemasons' lodges—provided there be a certificate and registry of their being held as such—are excepted out of the 39 Geo. 3, c. 79.³ Unless, indeed, after complaint made upon oath that the meetings of any lodge are likely to be injurious to the public peace and good order, the justices at a general sessions shall order the discontinuance of such meetings, in which case the assembly will be deemed unlawful like the rest. Freemasons are likewise protected by 57 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 26, provided that the regulations of 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, be complied with.

Meetings of Quakers, and of societies of a religious or charitable nature only, and where no other matter or business is discussed, are likewise excepted by this clause. And sect. 27 exempts these same meetings of Quakers, &c., from the provisions of 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, concerning divisions, or branch societies.

The exceptions as to lectures are those delivered in the universities by members, and such as are delivered in the halls of the inns of court by persons authorized, and payments to schoolmasters are not to be deemed payments for admission to lectures, within the Act.⁴

Lastly, with respect to unlawful oaths, the Act of 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, was declared not to extend to declarations approved by two justices, and registered with the clerk of the peace;⁵ but since the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, s. 13, which abolishes voluntary oaths before justices, it is doubtful whether these exceptions are now of much interest. Unlawful oaths, it may be remarked, are highly

¹ R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 81.

² "All persons assembled to sow sedition, and bring into contempt the constitution, are in an unlawful assembly. All persons assembled in furtherance of this object are unlawfully assembled too." By Bayley, J., in R. v. Hunt, cited 3 Stark. 103; by Holroyd, J., in Redford v. Birley and others. See R. v. Hunt, 1 Ld.

Keny. 108; all persons countenancing a riot are liable to an information. Indeed, refusing to aid the king is a high misdemeanor. East, P. C. 80; 1 Hawk. c. 22, s. 2.

³ By sect. 5.

⁴ 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, s. 22.

⁵ Sect. 3, and also 57 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 26.

improper at common law, and they are in that view also the subjects of misdemeanor.

Disturbances and seditious meetings, how suppressed.] It is important, in this place, to remark upon the mode of suppressing unlawful assemblies. And it is a good principle that, where the meeting assumes such a character as may fairly be said to raise a foundation for apprehension that the public safety will be endangered, it is not only lawful for any person (whether in an official or private capacity), but it is likewise his duty, to use the most prompt endeavours to suppress such an assembly. It would be natural and reasonable that, in the first instance, relief should be sought from the constituted authorities, and a private person might incur a legal hazard if he neglected to call in the officers of the law, where their aid could have been obtained without risking the main object of his exertions. But should there be no present help from the authorities, or should the occasion be urgent, there is no question but that a private individual, of his own act and deed, ought to counteract a dangerous rising to the utmost of his power. Thus it was held, that men may arm themselves to suppress riots, rebellions, or to resist enemies, and every justice of the peace, sheriff, and other minister, or other subject of the king, where such accident happens, may do it.¹ Whence Hawkins argues that they may arm, and likewise may make use of arms towards the advancement of their loyal design. These remarks are more particularly referrible to cases of treasonable and seditious meetings accompanied by force, or a well-grounded alarm that disturbances are imminent. Such assemblies, of course, "savour of rebellion, for suppressing whereof no remedies can be too sharp or severe."² Therefore, when the Pretender was proclaimed in the country during some races, upon which the better affected inhabitants of the neighbourhood forthwith interposed, and a conflict ensued; an information against the supposed loyalist rioters was refused with costs, although some of their party had in reality committed unwarrantable excesses, for here the safety of the commonwealth had come in question.³ Again, it may very safely be laid down that when the unlawful meeting proceeds to an act of felony, it may be suppressed by a private person forthwith, and with every degree of force within his reach. As if a number of persons were seen in the act of demolishing a house, or committing a robbery, here it is the duty of each man to interpose, taking, in the first place, the assistance of the authorities; but if the occasion be urgent, interfering in his own person to repress with reasonable force the illegal aggression.⁴ Nevertheless, it may be further alleged that there are grounds for supposing that

¹ Case of Armes, Poph. 121, 122; Kel. 76.

² 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 11.

³ R. v. Wigan, Inhab., 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 47.

⁴ See the observations of Heath, J., referring to the riots of 1780, 2 B. & P. 264.

a private person may quell a serious riot or affray, if the matter be of a very aggravated character, but as we are speaking here of violent suppressions by force of arms, it seems more prudent for such an individual to forbear from any uncommon exertion,¹ lest, "under the pretence of keeping the peace [he] cause a more enormous breach of it."² But every citizen may use a moderate degree of energy towards the allaying of a breach of the peace.

If parts of a speech be set out in an indictment as if they had been said continuously, whereas the speech was not so delivered, it was no variance, and it lay on the defendant to show the harmless character or inconsistency of the questions.³

Powers of magistrates.] The powers of a magistrate or peace officer are larger than those of a private person,⁴ and these officers need no particular commission for the purpose of putting down a rebellion.⁵ And as their authority is more extensive, so also is their responsibility. Perhaps they are more heavily answerable in a case of excess of their jurisdiction than others, but they are certainly more open to censure and punishment, where they neglect their duty, than the private man. Thus the lord mayor of London was convicted of neglect of duty for not repelling the outrages of the rioters in 1780.⁶ The mayor of Bristol was tried and acquitted upon an information charging him with having been guilty of a breach of duty by not suppressing the riots in that city.⁷ Indeed, if there be a reasonable ground for alarm, the magistrate must disperse the multitude, or he will be criminally answerable; and so much rests upon his discretion, that he may sometimes use force to break up an unlawful assembly, and the more especially if an immediate riot be reasonably expected to ensue.⁸ A fortiori, if the riot has commenced, the mode of proceeding is for the magistrates to assemble as quickly as possible, for the purpose of learning whether there exist proper grounds for an unusual interposition.⁹ If, after a due investigation, such apprehension would appear to be verified, it becomes necessary that special constables should be sworn in under the provisions of the statute of 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 41. And if these guardians be insufficient, the aid of the military must be invoked, or, unquestionably, according to the discretion of the magistrate or magistrates, the military may be called in before the civil power.¹⁰ It seems to be ¹ A private person may stay persons engaged in mischief from executing their purpose, or may stop others whom he sees coming to join them. 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 11. But it seems that unless it be in a case of actual rebellion or violent outrage, ought not to use an extraordinary degree of force.

² 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 11.

³ Re Crowe, 3 Cox, 123.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 11.

⁵ 2 And. 67.

⁶ R. v. Kennett, 5 C. & P. 282, n.

⁷ R. v. Pinney, 3 B. & Adol. 947.

⁸ R. v. Neale and others, 9 C. & P. 431.

⁹ See 3 Stark. 89.

¹⁰ See Burdett v. Colman, 14 East, 164; 3 Stark. 92.

prudent not to despise professional assistance, but the magistrate must not cling entirely to his legal adviser, for the best help of that kind will not be a defence against a criminal charge,¹ nor will mere honesty of intention operate as an excuse.² But the law, whilst it demands much at the hands of these officers, does not refuse them a full share of protection, and even of allowance, when the case presents on their part a decided and straightforward course of action. Therefore, if a party has done all which can be expected at the hands of a man of ordinary firmness, it is enough, and he becomes entitled to an acquittal, although his labours did not succeed in stemming the evil.³ And he is not bound to swear in special constables unless he is an eye-witness of the scene, or has information upon oath, upon which he may act,⁴ nor need he head the constables, nor go out with the soldiers,⁵ nor call out the posse comitatus,⁶ if he have given timely warning⁷ to the king's subjects of an approaching tumult.⁸

It may be readily collected from the above suggestions that if death ensue by reason of the firing of the soldiers, or the necessary force of the civil power, both the slayers and the magistrates are justified by law.

This power of overruling disturbances is vested in the justices by the common law. Moreover, by 34 Edw. 3, c. 1, justices may arrest, take, and chastise rioters according to their trespass and offence. This may be done by a single justice, who may authorize an arrest by a parole command.⁹ And by 13 Hen. 4, c. 7, the justices and the sheriff, or under sheriff, may come with the power of the county against rioters, and having found them, may record a conviction against them, in the same manner as is contained in the statute of forcible entries.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Pinney, 3 B. & Adol. 947.

² Id.

³ Id.

⁴ Id.

⁵ Id.

⁶ "By making an end of all the feudal tenures, we hardly know what the posse comitatus is, or how it is to be raised, supposing the sheriff wanted to raise it." 3 Stark. 105, per Holroyd, J.

⁷ Timely warnings are—personal application to the inhabitants—employing others to do the same—sending notices to the church, requesting the people to meet the magistrates at a time and place fixed—posting such notices.

⁸ 3 B. & Adol. ut supra.

⁹ 1 Russ. C. M. 287.

¹⁰ See post, Forcible Entry.

CHAPTER II.

SEDITIONOUS LIBELS AND SLANDER.

Seditious libels are also indirect means by which the general tranquillity is sometimes menaced. These publications may be against the monarch, or either house of parliament, or the constitution and government, or the administration of justice. And as it certainly tends to promote an unkindly feeling between two countries, the result of which might be hostile if the ruler of the one were to be at the mercy of a libeller in the other state, it is likewise a seditious act to utter such a publication with reference to a foreign potentate.¹ To write against the person or government of the king is, therefore, a libel; for by lessening him in the esteem of his subjects, such an act may weaken his government or raise jealousies between him and his people.² Thus falsely to assert that the monarch is insane is clearly libellous, and to add to the statement that it proceeds from authority is, if untrue, an aggravation of the offence, and the defendant must take upon himself the charge of proving that authority to the satisfaction of the jury.³ And slander to that effect would likewise be a high misdemeanor. And so again, all words tending to vilify the sovereign are of themselves punishable,⁴ although they be spoken of a dead monarch.⁵ A fortiori, if they were to go the length of denying his right to the crown even in common or unadvised discourse.⁶ And there is an old statute which punishes the tellers or publishers of false news or tales, "whereby discord, occasion of discord or slander, may grow between the king and his people, or the great men of the realm," with imprisonment until they shall ¹ See 7 & 8 Vict. c. 102.

² See R. v. Pine, Cro. Car. 117; Id. 126. R. v. Lawrence, 12 Mod. 311.

³ R. v. Harvey and another, 2 B. & C. 257. Supposing the matters of the libel to be untrue, and that the authority predicated were proved, the character of untruth only would belong to it, and not that of falsehood or criminal untruth. Id. 264, Bayley, J.

⁴ East, P. C. 119; as "Damn the Queen," R. v. Smith, Gilb. Rep. 57; defendant fined 30 marks. See also R. v. Whitmore and another, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 37. Indeed, there is one case where it was held that a treatise on hereditary right constituted a libel, though it contained no reflection upon the existing government. R. v. Bedford, cited, 2 Str. 789.

⁵ R. v. Tayler, 2 Ld. Raym. 879.

⁶ East, P. C. 119.

bring into the court the first author of the tale.¹ These principles, however, do not extend so far as to shut out fair criticism upon the measures or policy of a sovereign. It may be competent for a writer or speaker to allege that the king has taken an erroneous view of a question, whether foreign or domestic, provided there be a careful abstinence from insinuating that the mistake has proceeded from partial or corrupt views, or with an intention to pursue or oppress any individual or class of men. Where the defendants were charged with a libel in the "Morning Chronicle," which contained some equivocal expressions, Lord Ellenborough thought it right to leave the matter to the jury in the light we have just mentioned, and they acquitted the defendants.² In this case also, it was permitted to the defendants to read extracts from another part of the same paper, where the monarch was made the subject of absolute praise, seeing that these extracts would show the intention and mind of the defendant with reference to the specific paragraphs presented to the jury.³ So again, the case of the seven bishops showed that a petition to the king, praying that he would not insist upon obedience to an order which parliament had frequently declared to be illegal,⁴ cannot be viewed in the light of a libel.⁵ A petition to either house of parliament, respectfully worded, comes within the same rule.

House of Commons.] Observations, again, calculated to bring the House of Commons into contempt, are libels, and "it seems," says Mr. Serjeant Russell, "rather to have been the inclination of parliament in modern times to direct prosecutions for such offences in the courts of common law, than to revive the exercise of their own extensive privileges."⁶ Upon one occasion the jury acquitted the defendant, who had written these words: "That the king's government might go on if the lords and commons were lopped off," on the ground of their being metaphorical expressions.⁷

Government and constitution.] The government and constitution are within the especial protection of the law, it being surmised, that any considerable revolution in the system so long recognized would highly endanger the public tranquillity. To endeavour to possess the people with an idea that the government is corruptly administered, as a government, is certainly a libellous attempt.⁸ So when Dr. Drake wrote, "that the late revolu-

¹ 3 Edw. 1, c. 34; 2 Ric. 2, st. 1, c. 5; 12 Ric. 2, c. 11. See R. v. Earl of Northampton, 12 Rep. 132.

² R. v. Lambert and another, 2 Campb. 398.

³ Id. 399, 400.

⁴ The dispensing power.

⁵ Case of the Seven Bishops, 12 St. Tr. 183.

⁶ 1 Russ. C. M. 236. See also R. v. Rainer, 2 Barnard, 293; R. v. Owen, R. v. Stockdale, R. v. Reeves, cited in 1 Russ. 236, n. (q.)

⁷ R. v. Reeves, Peake, Add. Ca. 84.

⁸ See R. v. Tuchin, Holt's Cases, 424.

tion was the destruction of the laws of England," the Court of King's Bench held the publication to be a libel.¹ So an address to the army may be so worded as to be of a pernicious character, and, in that light, a libel upon the government.² So where the defendant uttered these words, "the government consists of three estates, and if a rebellion should happen in the kingdom, unless it be a rebellion against the three estates, it is no rebellion," he was convicted upon an information and fined 1,000*l.*, it being his intention to connect the death of Charles I., and the persons who had adjudged the sentence upon that monarch, with such his discourse.³ So where a person delivered a paper after the sermon to the minister, requiring him to take notice that offences might be perpetrated without the control of the civil magistrates, it was held, that he had published a libel, although no magistrate in particular was mentioned, and it was considered no objection to allege the want of an averment stating that the magistrates had knowingly suffered those vices.⁴ A general dissatisfaction towards the government is proposed as the groundwork of these writings and speeches, a proceeding entirely apart from fair criticism and the due canvassing of political measures,—thus it is that such acts are deemed libellous. To use the language of Hawkins, such a libel has "a direct tendency to breed in the people a dislike of their governors, and incline them to faction and sedition."⁵ So upon the prosecution of a defendant for libelling the Irish administration, and animadverting upon the public conduct and character of certain high officers in that country, Lord Ellenborough observed that "if a publication be calculated to alienate the affections of the people by bringing the government into disesteem, whether the expedient be by ridicule or obloquy, the person so conducting himself is exposed to the inflictions of the law." And the lord chief justice cited Tuchin's case as removing all ambiguity from the question.⁶ So if the paper be calculated to excite tumult it is a libel.⁷ Whilst, on the other hand, if the act complained of, whether it be word or writing, be not in any manner of a seditious tendency, nor in any way calculated to excite sedition, but be merely a temperate and fair act, it cannot be called libellous.⁸ Fantastical prophecies upon arms for the purpose of creating insurrection are punishable: for a second offence, with imprisonment for life and the forfeiture of all goods and chattels, real and personal.⁹ And by 5 El. c. 15, s. 4,

¹ R. v. Drake, 11 Mod. 95; S. C. Holt's Cases, 350; but judgment was given for the defendant upon another ground. S. P. R. v. Nutt, 1 Russ. C. M. 234. R. v. Shebbeare, Holt on Libel, 89.

² See R. v. Johnson, 2 Show. 488.

³ R. v. Harrington, 1 Ventr. 324, 327.

⁴ 4 Bac. Abr. Libel (a) 2, p. 455.

⁵ 1 Hawk. P. C. C. 73, s. 7. See also to the same effect, R. v. Franchlin, 9 St. Tr. 255; W. Kel. 76, 86.

⁶ R. v. Cobbett, Holt on Libel, 114.

⁷ Lofft. 776. R. v. Collins, 9 C. & P. 456. R. v. Lovett, Id. 462.

⁸ R. v. Collins, 9 C. & P. 456.

⁹ 5 El. c. 15, s. 3.

to publish the same by word or deed is made subject to a fine of 10*l.* and one year's imprisonment.

Administration of justice.] There may likewise be libels levelled against the proceedings of the laws as they are administered by his functionaries. An information was filed against the "Independent Whig" for arraigning the conduct of Le Blanc, J., and the jury, upon a trial for the murder of a seaman, which ended in the prisoner's acquittal. It was urged that every one had a right to canvass the proceedings of courts of justice, and that the article complained of was written in the exercise of that right. And Mr. Justice Grose, who tried the information, agreed that it was lawful with decency and candour to discuss the propriety of a verdict, or the decision of a judge, but he added that such an examination must be conducted with decency. Declamation and invective used, not with a view to elucidate the truth, but to injure the characters of individuals, and bring the administration of justice into hatred and contempt, could not be called fair criticism. The libel, so far from being thus carefully composed, was written in an abusive style, and the defendants were found guilty, and were sentenced to three years' imprisonment.¹ This jealousy with regard to the proceedings of courts has gone so far as to include an order made by a corporation and entered in their books within the class of offences above mentioned. So that where the corporation of Yarmouth made such an order and entry applauding one Watson, who had improperly prosecuted a person for perjury, and had in consequence been visited with heavy damages in an action (which action had been subsequently approved of by the Court of Common Pleas), the court held, that the defendants had thereby been guilty of a libel on the public justice of the kingdom, and made the rule for an information absolute. The facts of the corporation having sworn that they had no intention by their order to libel the person acquitted of perjury, and of the book being kept private as the property of the corporation, were deemed to make no difference.²

Foreign princes, ambassadors, &c.] One more species of political libel presents itself here—that which has for its object the calumny of foreign monarchs, or rulers, or their representatives, it being possible that a misunderstanding might arise between such potentates and our own sovereign in consequence of slanderous writings. Thus, an information was exhibited by the attorney-general against the defendant for libelling the French ambassador, the defendant having been himself plenipotentiary, and a conviction succeeded.³ So again, Peltier was tried and convicted for publishing a libel against Bonaparte, when first consul, the tendency of the writing being to suggest the propriety of assassinating him, and to interrupt the friendly relations between the two countries.¹

¹ R. v. White and another, 1 Campb. 359, n. ders against inferior magistrates, see post, sect. vii.

² R. v. Watson and others, 2 T. R. 199. As to libels and slan- ³ R. v. D'Eon, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 510, 516.

Judgment.] The judgment for these libels is fine and imprisonment at the discretion of the court, and all aiders and abettors are principals.

CHAPTER III.

OF RIOT.

A riot, or overt act of an assembly met for an illegal purpose and done in pursuance of that purpose, is one of the most serious disturbances of the public peace.² Three or more must be concerned in this outrage.³ Amongst whom the law will recognize women, but not infants under the age of discretion.⁴ After the age of fourteen years, however, infants may be convicted of riot as well as others.⁵

If speeches of a riotous character be made, the speakers are guilty, although they leave the place before the actual disturbance, provided it occur immediately.⁶

It will be observed also, that one of the incidents of riot is, that its commencement may most generally be traced to some supposed private wrong. As where one armed himself and his friends, in order to prevent an unlawful entry into his close.⁷ So where inhabitants met tumultuously to redress their grievance in being shut out from an accustomed right of common,⁸ or way, or water-course,⁹ or for the purpose of inflicting vengeance upon an ob-

¹ R. v. Peltier, Holt on Libel, 78.

² As if an officer should send for his soldiers to rescue him out of the hands of justice. R. v. Capt. Waters, 1 Freem. 359.

³ 2 Salk. 594; 1 Ld. Raym. 484.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 14.

⁵ R. v. Tanner and others, 2 Ld. Raym. 1284; 1 Hale, 20.

⁶ R. v. Sharpe, 3 Cox, 288.

⁷ R. v. Bp. of Bangor, 1 Russ. C. M. 274.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 6. As by pulling down fences erected by the lord of a manor. R. v. Prynne, 5 Mod. 459; Holt's Ca. 635. S. C. R. v. Abraham and others, Comb. 141, or a cottage built on the waste. R. v. Hallingby and others, Com. Rep. 93.

⁹ R. v. Colson and others, 3 Mod. 72. R. v. Wyvill and others, 7 Mod. 286.

noxious individual,¹ or where bail forcibly enter a man's house, in order to render him ; with other like causes of quarrel. And in furtherance of this illegal undertaking, some degree of violence must take place, either to the person of an individual, or to his possessions.² So that if people think fit to ride about in an unusual manner, armed, for instance, with weapons, they may be guilty of assembling unlawfully, but not of riot, unless they commit some injury.³ So, if there be a meeting for a legal recreation, as at a fair, market, church ale, &c. ; or for a lawful matter of business, as the election of a mayor,⁴ and a sudden dispute arise amongst themselves, which ends in a conflict, the parties may, indeed, be guilty of an affray,⁵ but not of riot, for here is an absence of any original intention, or of a subsequent agreement to disturb the peace ; we say, a subsequent agreement, because it may happen, that upon such an occasion, the persons falling out have previously formed themselves into parties, and with promises of mutual assistance in case of quarrel, have engaged in a fray : here their acts become those of rioters, because by entering into the new confederacy to break the peace, they may be said to have assembled together for that purpose from the time of the confederacy, just as though they had originally come together with an unlawful design.⁶ And so, if some sudden proposal be started at an innocent meeting, to which the parties consent and proceed to execute it, as, for example, to attack a stranger,⁷ it is no defence in case of an indictment for riot, to allege that the first assembly was legal, if the subsequent design should turn out not to be so, and it be executed with violence.⁸ So if a person were at a particular place lawfully,

¹ R. v. Hughes and others, M. & M. 178, n.

² 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 4 ; 3 Inst. 176. Although it once appeared to Holt, J. C., that an assembly might meet together with such circumstances of terror as to be a riot. 2 Salk. 595. The chief justice called it a kind of assault upon the people. Id. And Mansfield, C. J., in Clifford v. Brandon, said, "it is not necessary to constitute this crime, that personal violence should have been committed, or that a house should have been pulled in pieces." "If people endeavour to effect an object by tumult and disorder, they are guilty of a riot." 2 Campb. 370. Lord Coke says, "one may commit a force," 3 Inst. 176. And there may, perhaps, be a misdemeanor in the nature of riot, as the master who exposes his helpless servant to the inclemency of the weather, may be guilty of an offence in the nature of an assault. Perhaps the lord chief justice may be understood to say, that neither personal violence, nor utter destruction of property, would be necessary to constitute this crime. But the other position with regard to the endeavour to effect an object by tumult and disorder may be considered as open to some criticism.

³ R. v. Pugh and others, Holt's Ca. 635 ; 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 4.

⁴ R. v. Corporation of Gram-pound, 2 Ld. Raym. 965 ; see also, R. v. Sir R. Athyns and others, 2 Show. 236.

⁵ R. v. Ellis, 2 Salk. 595 ; 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 4.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 3.

⁷ R. v. Ellis, 2 Salk. 595.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 3.

and then joined an unlawful assembly just meeting on the same spot, it would not acquit him in an indictment for riot to say that he was not privy to the first design.¹

It has been said, indeed, that stage players may be indicted for a riot and illegal assembly,² especially if they cause an extraordinary concourse of people to witness their tricks.³ And it is likewise on record, that in the year 1797, an indictment for riot was drawn by an eminent pleader against certain persons, for kicking about a foot-ball in the town of Kingston,⁴ and thereby causing a common nuisance.⁵ And, certainly, if the design of creating terror were entertained by a number of persons, and the purpose carried into execution in a violent manner, as by kicking the ball against passengers, and thus assaulting the inhabitants, the indictment for a riot was doubtless well conceived. In this respect it is like a premeditated prize fight. Otherwise, assemblies, at wakes or festivals, or meetings for the exercise of common sports and diversions, as bull-baiting,⁶ wrestling, or the like, are said not to be riotous.⁷ And it is difficult to see how stage players can be guilty, at least in modern times, of such acts as will amount to a riot. So far from this, it is laid down, that an assembly of persons met together for the purpose of doing a thing prohibited by statute, is not riotous, if they carry their unlawful act into execution without force.⁸ And the same rule prevails with reference to an act which is forbidden by the common law; as if a party should gather together in order to carry off a piece of timber, to which "one of the company has a pretended right," and should take the wood without circumstances of terror or force.⁹ But these meetings may, nevertheless, be routs or unlawful assemblies, since no man has a right to gain his own by creating a disturbance, or congregating a multitude without the authority of law.¹⁰ To this, it needs hardly be added, that the officers of the law are not indictable for this offence, either in an attempt to preserve the peace, or to execute process.

¹ R. v. Corporation of Gram-pound, Ld. Raym. 965; 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 3; Anon. 6 Mod. 43.

² R. v. Sir A. Ashley, 1 Ro. Rep. 109.

³ 19 Vin. Abr. Riot, A. 8 Marg.

⁴ First count; second count for a nuisance. It was done for the purpose of suppressing an ancient custom of kicking about foot-balls on Shrove Tuesday. 1 Russ. C. & M. 267, note (g).

⁵ 2 Ch. Cr. L. 494.

⁶ But if the bull-bait be only a colourable pretext for outrage, and violence be committed, it will amount to a riot. And if done under circumstances of terror to the public, it will be an affray. See 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 59, s. 3. Thus it is that a prize fight is a riot.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 5.

⁸ Id.

⁹ Id. 6 Mod. 141, per cur. S. P. Anon. 12 Mod. 648. But as soon as terror or undue force is imported into the transaction, the offence of riot accrues, and in this sense the case in Godbolt must be understood. Godb. 438, and see post.

¹⁰ R. v. Stroude, 2 Show. 150; Hob. 92. Cutting down trees, R. v. Harris, Holt's Ca. 353. R. v. Johnson and others, 1 Wils. 325.

But in assembling a force to ensure the execution of process, they must be satisfied that there will be some resistance.¹ Sheriffs, justices, and constables, and under some emergencies a private person, may call together such an assemblage as will suppress a tumult, or hinder a breach of the peace.² The act of a justice in raising the posse under a just apprehension of force in making an entry into, or in the detainer of lands, is cited by Hawkins as an example.³ And the acts of private men, if done in defence of their rights, and without excess, may likewise be said to rest upon legal authority. As where one erected a weir across a navigable river, upon which several assembled with spades, and dug a trench in the land of the man who had made the weir, in order to turn the water, and the better to remove it. It was held, that the parties thus engaged were neither guilty of a forcible entry nor a riot.⁴ So in the case of commoners who abate enclosures.⁵ And of electors who meet to assert their rights.⁶ And likewise of the owner of a house, who arms himself and his friends for the purpose of defending the possession.⁷ For the law permits and authorizes individuals to abate a nuisance in an orderly manner, and with no greater force than may be necessary, and likewise allows them a fair latitude to defend their privileges. So it is again, if one has a right to corn, and he cuts it down without tumult.⁸

It is likewise a misdemeanor to incite persons to commit a riot.

*Indictment.*⁹ The indictment for a riot and assault usually states that A., B., and C., together with other evil-disposed persons¹⁰ unknown to the jurors, unlawfully and riotously assembled to disturb the peace; and it then goes on to describe the particular outrage complained of, as for instance, an assault upon D. in the prosecution of the riot. And it usually concludes with the allega-

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 2.

² Id.

³ Id.

⁴ Dalt. 312. And it is said to be better to send one or two persons only to abate a nuisance, and only with proper tools. For any threatening words, (accompanied with action,) as, "they will do it though they die for it," may give the transaction the colour of riot. Id. citing the same books. Words, signs, or gestures, will give a new feature to the case. A fortiori, a badge, or ensign, for that would be evidence so far of a premeditated plan. 2 Campb. 370.

⁵ 11 Mod. 117; 1 Hawk. c. 65, s. 8.

⁶ 11 Mod. 117.

⁷ R. v. Bishop of Bangor and others, 1 Russ. C. M. 274.

⁸ R. v. Huet and Overie, Godb. 438.

⁹ Where several were indicted for a riot, it was allowed by the court that the greater number might enter into a rule to confess judgment, if their fellows were convicted, and so plead not guilty with that understanding, in order to save expense. The prosecutor would then try his indictment against two or three whom he could name. Anon. 3 Salk. 317. R. v. Middlemore, 6 Mod. 212. See Lofft. 44.

¹⁰ See Holt's Ca. 635.

tion that the defendants then and there did other wrongs against the peace, &c. An allegation of a riotous assembling, as to hinder the election of a mayor, without adding any mention of an unlawful purpose or act, is insufficient.¹ If it be intended to charge the defendants with a tumultuous riot, after stating the assembly, it is customary to add, that they made a great noise and disturbance, and continued to do so for an hour, to the great terror of all the king's subjects, &c. The latter words, or expressions denoting that the people were alarmed at the disturbance,² are indispensable to support this last indictment for a tumult. Twelve persons and upwards were indicted for a riot, but the count omitted to say that it took place under circumstances of terror to the king's liege subjects, and, on that account, it was held that the charge could not be sustained.³ So, where the defendant had cut down hedges in prosecution of a private claim, it was held, that they could not be convicted of riot for want of these words. But the charge against them for an unlawful assembly was deemed sufficient.⁴

It is, moreover, not advisable to leave out the word "riotously." It supplies, indeed, the place of "with force and arms."⁵ It will be remarked, that if the indictment were to state that the defendants had assembled to do a certain unlawful act, and instead of alleging that they came to disturb the peace, and actually did make a noise, &c., were to omit any explanation of the unlawful act, the charge would be insufficient for uncertainty.⁶ And the fact of their having cut down an oak riotously, although mentioned in the indictment, was held not to aid this omission, for this did not cure the defect with reference to the intention.⁷ So, if there be a charge against persons for a riot in endeavouring to gain possession of a house, the property of that house must clearly appear in the count. For otherwise it could not be known whether it belonged to the defendants themselves or not. And if they succeeded, they would not be guilty of an attempt to repossess themselves of their own, if they had carefully abstained from excess.⁸

The words, "with divers other persons to the jurors unknown," may become very material, because in charging A., B., and C. with a riot, if these words be left out, and C. be acquitted, two only remain responsible for an offence which requires the presence of three, and no judgment can be given against the two.⁹

¹ R. v. Solely and others, 11 Mod. 100. R. v. Gulston and others, 2 Ld. Raym. 1210. R. v. North and others, 1 Str. 140.

² In terrorem populi. See 3 Keb. 623.

³ R. v. Hughes, 4 C. & P. 373.

⁴ R. v. Cox and others, Id. 538.

⁵ R. v. Myne and others, 19 Vin. Ab. Riot (D. 11).

⁶ R. v. Gulston and others, ut supra.

⁷ Id.

⁸ R. v. Soley and others, 2 Salk. 594.

⁹ R. v. Sadbury and others, 1 Ld. Raym. 484; S. C. 12 Mod. 262.

Verdict.] A verdict therefore, of not guilty, against all excepting two, negatives the charge.¹ But where six persons had been indicted for a riot, and two were dead before the trial, and then the jury convicted two and acquitted two, the objection would not hold;² for, by Lord Mansfield, they must have been guilty together with those who had never been tried,³ and the jury must be presumed to have taken that matter into their consideration.

It is, moreover, worthy of consideration, that an acquittal of the riot is an acquittal of an assault and battery, if the latter be laid to have been done riotously.⁴ The more ordinary course is to add a second count for a common assault. And, clearly, if one be acquitted of riot, and erroneously found guilty of doing that which is a mere private injury, as breaking down a bank, the judgment must be arrested.⁵ However, where the indictment states that the defendants were riotously and routously assembled, it seems that although there should be an acquittal of the riot for want of the words, "terror to the people," there may, nevertheless, be a conviction for an unlawful assembly.⁶

Costs.] Costs are given by 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 23.⁷

Judgment.] The judgment for a riot at common law is fine and imprisonment, with sureties of the peace if the court should think fit.⁸ And it would be a breach of the articles of the peace, and forfeiture of the recognizance, to make one of an assembly, which, by reason of numbers, the constable could not suppress.⁹ A distinction, however, was made by some old statutes between heinous and petty riots with reference to the punishment. Thus, by 2 Hen. 5, st. 1, c. 8, rioters attainted of great and heinous riots, shall have one whole year's imprisonment at the least, without bail or mainprise. And petty rioters¹⁰ shall have imprisonment, as best shall seem to the king or to his council. But the usual proceeding at common law is adopted at the present day, although the 3 Geo. 4, c. 114, which imposes hard labour, extends likewise to the riots mentioned by statute.

Information.] There are also proceedings in cases of riot, by information,¹¹ and in cases affecting the administration of justice,

¹ 1 Ld. Raym. 484; Poph. 202.

² R. v. Scott and another, 3 Burr. 1262; 2 Sir Wm. Bl. 291, 350; 2 Hawk. c. 47, s. 8.

³ 3 Burr. 1264.

⁴ R. v. Heaps, 2 Salk. 593; S. C. 1 Ld. Raym. 484. See R. v. Hays and others, 2 Sess. Ca. 98.

⁵ R. v. Colson and others, 3 Mod. 72.

⁶ R. v. Cox and others, 4 C. & P. 538.

⁷ See 14 & 15 Vict. c. 53, s. 1.

⁸ The Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere to reduce the amount of security which magistrates may have required for keeping the peace. R. v. Holloway, 2 D. P. C. 525. R. v. Tregarthan, 2 Nev. & M. 379.

⁹ R. v. Blisset and another, 1 Mod. 13.

¹⁰ See 17 Ric. 2, c. 8.

¹¹ See R. v. Berchet and others, 2 Salk. 594.

or upon the election of members of parliament, informations for riots will be granted.¹

Routs and unlawful assemblies.] The law of unlawful assemblies has already been fully treated of, and, with respect to routs, we have not much to say, for although there is a distinction between the rout and the riot, as we have pointed out in the section concerning public safety,² the offence is most generally combined with riot, and is rarely heard of at the present day as a separate misdemeanor. If persons, however, assemble tumultuously, and then proceed, ride, or go forth, or move by instigation of one or several—this is a rout, inasmuch as they move and proceed in rout³ and number.⁴ But where one or two alone create terror, they may be affrayers, but cannot be guilty of a rout.

Judgment.] The judgment for a riotous assembly at common law is fine and imprisonment, and surety of the peace may likewise be required from the defendants. All parties engaged are principals.

Rioters offending against proclamations.] By 1 Geo. 1, stat. 2, c. 5, s. 1,⁵ If twelve or more persons be assembled unlawfully and tumultuously, and, being commanded to disperse peaceably by one or more justices, by proclamation, unlawfully, &c., remain by the space of one hour afterwards, they shall be guilty of felony. The punishment is penal servitude for life, or not less than fifteen years, or imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three years, with solitary confinement, not exceeding one month at one time, nor three months in one year. By sect. 3, persons removing after the hour may be seized and carried before a justice. And all persons endeavouring to apprehend them shall be free if death or harm ensue to the offenders. In considering the enactments against riotous persons not dispersing after proclamation, it is to be observed, that the meeting in question must be unlawful, riotous, and tumultuous. It is not, therefore, in the power of the magistrate absolutely to decide whether the assembly which engages his attention is one within the prohibition of the Riot Act or not, for at the trial of a person charged with an offence against 1 Geo. 1, it must be proved that the gathering was of an illegal character. There may be an unlawful assembly without the intervention of a magistrate and a proclamation, and such an as-

¹ R. v. Kynaston and others, 2 Barnard. 378. R. v. Hunt and others, 1 Ld. Keny. 108. And as to inquisitions by justices, now disused, see 13 Hen. 4, c. 7 (not repealed). R. v. Ingram and others, 2 Salk. 593. R. v. Tempest and others, Tho. Raym. 386. R. v. Pugh and others, 6 Mod. 140.

² Ante.

³ En route.

⁴ 19 Vin. Ab. Riots (A. 2); and see 2 Hawk. c. 65, s. 8.

⁵ Sections 4 and 5 only are repealed.

sembling is a misdemeanor; such an assembly may frequently separate without doing any act of violence.¹ If they excite alarm, and cause an interference by the civil power, their neglect to disperse in an hour, will bring them within the provisions of the statute. If they commit acts of violence and destruction, their conduct is punishable under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 30, s. 8, and 6 Vict. c. 10,² and if it be such as that there would be a riot if the purpose of the parties were to be carried into effect, it is a meeting within 1 Geo. 1.³ A person need not be present during the whole of an hour in order to come within the statute.⁴ It happens occasionally that the Riot Act is read more than once during the same tumult. The second reading, however, does not operate as a discharge from the warning of the first; therefore, when the defendant was proved to have been present at the first reading, it was held by Patteson, J., that the time for remaining could not be counted from the second and third readings, which subsequently took place, but that the proclamation affected him in the first instance.⁵

Indictment.] The indictment for these offences must conform carefully to the statute. Where it is intended to charge the fact of continuing after proclamation made, the proclamation itself must be regarded with attention. We subjoin it, as points have arisen upon it:—"Our sovereign lord the king chargeth and commandeth all persons being assembled, immediately to disperse themselves, and peaceably to depart to their habitations, or to their lawful business, upon the pains contained in the Act of King George, for preventing tumults and riotous assemblies. God save the king." The omission of "God save the king" in the indictment has been held fatal to a capital conviction upon this statute.⁶ Upon another occasion, the words, "the reign of," were added in the count, so that the proclamation seemed to have been "in the Act of the reign of King George," &c. This slight deviation was held to be a material variance;⁷ but it is, probably, no variance to say King George the First instead of King George. The precedents adopt that course. It is very common to conclude the indictment by saying, that the act of remaining took place, "to the great terror and disturbance of the peaceable subjects of our said lord the king," &c. And in misdemeanor this conclusion is necessary; but in an indictment under 1 Geo. 1, it has been held, that to omit the expressions, "in terrorem populi," is not material.⁸

¹ See 5 C. & P. 154.

² See 4 & 5 Vict. c. 56, s. 2.

³ R. v. Woolcock, 5 C. & P. 516.

⁴ R. v. James, 1 Russ. C. M. 277.

⁵ 5 C. & P. 516.

⁶ R. v. Child, 4 C. & P. 442.

⁷ R. v. Woolcock and another, 5 C. & P. 516.

⁸ R. v. James, 5 C. & P. 152. For the indictment, see Stark. Cr. Pl. 668.

CHAPTER IV.

OF AFFRAYS.

An affray may be said to be a public assault, as a private assault is one committed out of the hearing or seeing of any except the parties concerned;¹ and therefore as, in order to satisfy the meaning of a private assault, no blow need be actually inflicted, so a violent and menacing attitude may be, especially if accompanied by threatening words, an outrage upon the public, and so an affray. For no one knows how soon he may become the victim of such an illegal demonstration. And thus an affray may be the act of one individual, although the term is usually applied to the offence which two persons or parties of men commit by fighting in a public place.² Sir John Knight was charged with walking about the street armed with guns, &c., and although he was acquitted upon the information exhibited under the stat. 2 Edw. 3, c. 3, for going about armed, the chief justice said, that this was a great offence at the common law, and on the motion of the attorney-general, the defendant was bound to his good behaviour.³

This statute of 2 Edw. 3, c. 3, although not much heard of at the present day, is nevertheless still in force. It is commonly called the Statute of Northampton, and prohibits all persons except the king's servants in his presence, and persons executing his precepts, or themselves endeavouring to maintain the peace, from going armed, neither in fairs and markets, nor before the king's justices, &c., nor elsewhere, upon pain of forfeiting their armour, and of imprisonment at the king's pleasure.⁴ Various officers are then mentioned as having jurisdiction over this misdemeanor.

An affray, therefore, may, by law, be committed by one person. It is however, commonly the offence of two who fight together in a public spot, and is frequently a misdemeanor done by several wherein the absence of evil intention distinguishes it from a riot. Prize fights, consequently, are affrays. And all present at them are principal offenders.⁵ And, indeed, where the parties, as is very often the case, are the original promoters of the fight, they are guilty of riot, as well as an affray.⁶ And not only are the combatants guilty, together with their seconds, of the riot, but all persons countenancing and abetting the proceeding with a know-

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 1.

² See 1 Russ. C. M. 291.

³ R. v. Sir John Knight, 3 Mod. 117.

⁴ See 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 5. Case of Armes, Poph. 121; Cro. El. 294.

⁵ R. v. Perkins and others, 4 C. & P. 537.

⁶ R. v. Billingham and others, 2 C. & P. 234.

ledge of the transaction must be taken to participate in the original design. Otherwise they would merely be guilty as principals in an affray, for every riot is a fray, although the converse is not the case.

Duels, likewise, are affrays, at all events, when they happen in a place of public resort, for they are in direct breach of the peace, and operate to the terror of the people, inasmuch as no one can clearly foresee to what result so illegal a demonstration may lead; and it can be no defence to allege a satisfaction of a private wrong in answer to the charge. But words alone will not amount to an affray,¹ although they very frequently furnish material evidence as to the character of a particular transaction. And a mere trespass can never be interpreted in such a light, unless such a degree of force be used as will swell it into a public offence; and then although the goods belong to the party taking them, he will be guilty of a breach of the peace;² and, perhaps, a forcible entry, according to the circumstances. An affray may be aggravated in consequence of the dignity of the place where it is committed. As where it happens in the palace yard near the courts of Westminster,³ or in the presence of any of the superior courts of justice.⁴ And, formerly, very severe penalties were enacted against such as should strike or even draw a weapon in any church or churchyard,⁵ but that statute is now no longer in force.⁶

The private person may seize affrayers and those who are coming to aid the disturbance upon his view, and may deliver them to the constable. And if this cannot be done without hurting the affrayer, the person, nevertheless, who interferes is justified in his violence;⁷ and if one of the parties engaged in a fray, or, à fortiori, if a stander-by, be dangerously wounded, the private man may justify a wounding in order to capture his assailant;⁸ and, indeed, he is punishable, if, being a looker on, he do not interfere, and the more especially if death should ensue.⁹

A constable, likewise, upon view, may take the affrayers into custody,¹⁰ and it is said, that he may receive offenders charged by others with a fray and arrested by them.¹¹ And he is bound, at his peril, to do this; and he may even break open doors to preserve the peace, or, upon fresh suit, to take affrayers who have fled into a house in order to escape justice.¹²

Thirdly, a justice of the peace may actively interfere to put down an affray within his view, but he cannot authorize the arrest of any one without a warrant for such an offence committed out of his view. As soon as the offender is brought before him, he can compel him to find sureties to keep the peace.¹³ And

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 2.

² Anon. 3 Slak. 187.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 21, s. 6.

⁴ Id. s. 10.

⁵ 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 4, s. 3.

⁶ Repealed by 9 Geo. 4, c. 31.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 11.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 63, s. 12.

⁹ R. v. Wilburn, Noy. Rep. 50, by Popham, C. J.

¹⁰ 1 Hawk. c. 63, ss. 14, 15.

¹¹ Id. s. 17.

¹² Id. s. 16.

¹³ Id. s. 18; see also s. 19.

if a dangerous wound be inflicted, it is customary for the justice to remand the accused until the fate of the wounded person be known.

Indictment.] The indictment for an affray states, that the defendant or defendants, being unlawfully assembled and arrayed in a warlike manner, did make an affray in a public street to the great terror and disturbance of the king's subjects; and in contempt of, and against the peace of the king, &c.

Judgment.] The judgment is fine and imprisonment for an affray at common law, and the defendant may be called upon to find security for keeping the peace. It may be added, that the aggravated misdemeanor of making an affray in the palace yard, or in an inferior court of justice, is punishable with fine and imprisonment,¹ but not with the loss of the right hand.²

CHAPTER V.

OF CHALLENGES, AND PROVOCATIONS TO CHALLENGE.

Challenges, and provocations to challenge.] Although not amounting to an affray, a challenge to fight, or a provocation to send such a message, is a very high misdemeanor; and persons who were found guilty of this offence have always been severely punished—as, by a fine of 100*l.*, a month's imprisonment, and the finding surety of the peace for seven years, together with a public recantation of their act.³

So, by a fine of 100*l.*, imprisonment for a calendar month, and security to keep the peace for three years;⁴ and the latter was contemplated by the court as a lenient sentence, in consequence of much provocation which the defendant had encountered. For it should be noticed, that circumstances of provocation, although proper topics for a mitigation of punishment, yet afford no defence to an information, as, in case of death, they would be quite inoperative as an answer to an indictment for murder.⁵ Even the threat of being posted for a coward, however irritating, will make no difference.⁶

¹ In the first case, the imprisonment to be at the king's pleasure.

1 Hawk. c. 21, s. 6.

² Id.

³ R. v. Darcy and another, 1 Sid. 186.

⁴ R. v. Rice, 3 East, 581.

⁵ See S. C.

⁶ R. v. Taverner, 1 Ro. Rep. 360; 1 Hale P. C. 452. Great alterations have happened since those days, and now the poster would be considered as a person quite out of date.

The challenge may be by words or by letter, or by dispersing letters or papers containing reflections upon character, and especially if they insinuate a desire to fight.¹ These last publications are libellous letters, and the indictment may be for sending such a letter with intent to provoke a challenge.²

But it is said, that words of abuse will not amount to a challenge,³ although, of course, if the words themselves import such a provocation to a breach of the peace, the case will be different. And where the words are put in writing,⁴ accompanied with an intimation that further proceedings are expected, the court will conclude that a breach of the peace was intended. For an endeavour to provoke a challenge is as much a misdemeanor as the sending of the challenge. The defendant, speaking of an election business, wrote to the prosecutor and used these terms, "that he had behaved like a blackguard;" "I expect to hear from you on this subject," he continued, "and will punctually attend to any appointment you may think proper to make." Upon this an indictment was preferred, the first count of which stated, that the defendant, intending to provoke the prosecutor to fight a duel, sent him a challenge contained in a letter. The second count alleged a like intention, by writing a letter containing malicious and provoking matter. The third count alleged generally a provocation to challenge, without stating the letter. The fourth count alleged the endeavour to stir up a duel as before, and set forth the letter. The verdict was guilty on the fourth count only, and it was moved to arrest the judgment, because the last count did not charge the commission of any misdemeanor, but only an ineffectual provocation to another to commit one, being at most an endeavour only to do that which tended to a breach of the peace. But the court discharged the rule which had been obtained for this purpose, observing, that whether the letter in question were considered as an attempt to procure another to commit a misdemeanor, by a provocation intentionally addressed to that immediate purpose, or as a direct provocation to a challenge, it was in either of these points of view a competent subject of criminal prosecution, so as to sustain the indictment founded thereupon. And the act of sending a challenge being in itself unlawful, the law infers the evil intent, and the allegation of intent need not be further proved by the prosecutor than through the medium of the letter carrying the challenge.⁵

Proceedings.] The proceedings against a defendant for this offence may be by indicting him. But informations are often

¹ Lord Darcy v. Markham, Hob. 120. R. v. Hicks, Id. 215.

² R. v. Williams, 2 Campb. 506. The defendant put the letter into the post in Westminster, addressed to a person in the city of London, and it was held that he might well be indicted in Middlesex.

³ R. v. King, 3 Inst. 180. R. v. Langley, 2 Lord Raym. 1029; 2 Salk. 697.

⁴ 2 Salk. 697; 2 Lord Raym. 1031, per Powell, J.

⁵ R. v. Philipps, 6 East, 464.

resorted to upon these occasions, and the Court of King's Bench is not backward to grant them upon proper affidavits. Still, that court will not be anxious to assist the original sender of the challenge who turns round upon his antagonist, and applies for an information against him for accepting the challenge. Letters having passed between two persons, the one made an application to the court for an information, but upon hearing the affidavits, it was the opinion of the judges, that the applicant himself had been the first challenger, and they said they would have granted cross-informations upon such letters as were produced, but, on the whole they would not give the extraordinary remedy of an information to a man who was evidently the aggressor.¹ Lord Ellenborough mentions a possible contingency, wherein the sending of a provocatory letter may be innocent and even meritorious—as to incite a person known to harbour latent purposes of a malicious and dangerous kind against the writer to send a challenge. Here the object would be to obtain surety of the peace against the dreaded individual; and the noble judge considered that the end could have been justified.² But it would lie on the prosecutor clearly to make out his surmises.³

The court exercise some jealousy respecting informations, notwithstanding their readiness to grant them when the case is properly made out. They consider themselves in the light of a grand jury upon the hearing of an application of this kind. So that where P. applied for such a proceeding against a defendant, supported by an affidavit that the challenge was delivered to the prosecutor by one H., the defendant's acting clerk, the court denied the rule, for the clerk had refused to make his affidavit, and thus a link was wanting to connect the defendant with the transaction. But, they added, that the prosecutor might prefer a bill of indictment against the defendant, and thus procure a subpœna to take H. before the grand jury, in order to get his evidence, which would be to the effect of the defendant having desired him to deliver the hostile message.⁴ Again, it was stated upon affidavit, that A. had intimated his intention, after the settlement of accounts between himself and the prosecutor, to require an apology, or the satisfaction usual amongst gentlemen, from the latter, for certain offensive expressions contained in a letter from the prosecutor to A. C., a relation of A., settled the account; and having said that he had come in consequence of the letter in his hand, delivered a hostile message from A. The court granted the rule upon this against C., but refused it against A., the affidavit being deemed insufficient to connect A. with the challenge.⁵ In setting forth

¹ R. v. Hankey, 1 Burr. 316. Upon one occasion the court granted an information upon the production of copies only of the letters containing the challenge, such copies being verified. R. v. Chappel, 1 Burr. 402.

² 6 East, 475.

³ Id.

⁴ R. v. Willett, 6 T. R. 294.

⁵ R. v. Younghusband, 4 Nev. & M. 850.

the charge, if a statute be mis-recited, the variance will be fatal, although the challenging is an offence at common law.¹

Judgment.] The judgment for these offences of challenging or endeavouring to provoke a hostile meeting, or accepting a challenge, is fine and imprisonment, and surety of the peace, if the court should think fit.²

CHAPTER VI.

OF FORCIBLE ENTRY AND DETAINER.

Forcible entry.] A forcible entry is where a man, considering that he has a title to lands, tenements, or goods, strives to repossess himself of them with force by entering upon the place which he looks upon as his own property, or the house where he expects to find his goods. And a forcible detainer is the case of a man who, having obtained such possession peaceably, employs an illegal force to retain the hold he has acquired. Care, however, must be taken to distinguish between a trespass and a forcible outrage. And much stress has been laid upon the circumstance of making the attack upon a dwelling house, in which case the court will conclude in favour of the prosecutor, because a man's house is his castle. But where the case amounts to a civil injury only, as where trespass or trover can be maintained in respect of it, and there are no aggravating incidents of force, no indictment for such an entry can be maintained. As where the defendant was charged with unlawfully entering a yard, digging the ground, and erecting a shed, and expelling the owner; the court, after much argument, quashed the indictment, being of opinion that the fact did not appear upon the face of the count to be an offence.³ And several cases⁴ were mentioned in the course of the discussion which served to confirm the distinction taken by the judges. On the next day after the determination in R. v. Storr, an indictment for pulling off the thatch of a dwelling house was quashed, for—per cur.—this is only pulling off the thatch.⁵

¹ R. v. Dove, Comb. 477.

Fry, shortly mentioned, Id. 1703.

² R. v. Newdigate, Comb. 10, fined 1000 marks, and to find surety for the good behaviour for three years.

See also Id. 1702. The case of R. v. Dyer, 6 Mod. 96, seems to be overruled by these cases. See 8 T. R. 360.

³ R. v. Storr, 3 Burr. 1699.

⁵ R. v. Atkins, 3 Burr. 1706.

⁴ As R. v. Wightwick, R. v. Gillett, Id. 1707.

So for entering a close.¹ So where the indictment charged the defendant with having with force and arms unlawfully, forcibly, and injuriously seized, taken, and carried away a paper writing, purporting to be a warrant to apprehend the defendant for forgery. Perryn, B., held, that the conviction could not be supported, being only a private trespass, in which neither the king nor the public appeared to have any interest.²

At common law, a person who had no right to lands nor goods was answerable for a breach of the peace in attempting to possess himself of that which was not his own; and if he made an entry into a house for that purpose, he was clearly guilty of a forcible entry. But if one had a right to lands or to goods, and then with violence dispossessed the wrong-doer, it seems that he was guiltless at common law of the offence now under our consideration.³ Nevertheless there are precedents at common law of indictments for a forcible entry,⁴ and the distinction might be very well supported by restraining the prohibition of the common law to entries into a dwelling house,⁵ which has always been considered highly illegal. But it may also be worthy of notice in a more general point of view, that is to say, with reference to the degree of force employed. And thus any degree of force would suffice to establish the case at common law as to the dwelling house, but in closes, or upon the repossession of goods, it might have been necessary to show some circumstances of terror, or, at all events, an excess of force beyond that which the occasion would seem to call for. Thus, Jopson and others were charged with unlawfully assembling to disturb the peace of the king, and being so assembled, with force and arms unlawfully breaking and entering a mine of lead, and unlawfully taking away 60 lbs. weight of that material; and the court refused to quash this indictment, observing that it appeared to be good;⁶ not, perhaps, entirely, because an unlawful assembly was partly charged in the count,⁷ but likewise because there was a far greater manifestation of power than could be necessary in order to redress the wrong which had been done, supposing the object of the defendants to have been lawful. Indeed, it is said in Wilson, that the court conceived the case to have been one which would have justified the introduction of the word "riot" into the indictment.⁸ Whence it may be concluded, that at common law, if there were no excess, an entry to recover goods, or into land, might be justified if such entry were helped by a lawful title, but not into a dwelling house, whatever the amount of force might be. And it is also added by Hawkins, that even now, notwithstanding the statutes, such an entry may

¹ R. v. Blake and fifteen others, 3 Burr. 1731.

² R. v. Gardiner, 1 Russ. C. M. 53, at Sarum, 1780.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 64.

⁴ See 3 Burr. 1700, 1732, and the opinion of Wilmot, J., Id. 1732.

⁵ R. v. Bathurst, Say. Rep. 225; 8 T. R. 358.

⁶ R. v. Jopson and others, Say. Rep. 27; S. C. 1 Wils. 325.

⁷ See Say. Rep. 27, by Lee, C. J.

⁸ 1 Wils. 325.

take place with reference to goods,¹ a proposition to which we will take leave to apply likewise the distinction just above suggested as to excessive force. And in confirmation of this principle as to the dwelling house, a very late decision appears to have recognized the position that the premises need not consist of a dwelling house in order to warrant an indictment for a forcible entry at common law, if the entry be made "with force and arms, and with a strong hand."²

The forbearance of the common law, however, led to frequent dispossessions of property by means of feigned titles, so that it became expedient for the legislature to interfere, and forbid all forcible proceedings to recover lands in respect of which parties might assume a right, whether they should be, in reality, the rightful owners or otherwise; and thus, in effect, to carry out the principle mentioned by Lord Kenyon, that "no one shall with force and violence assert his own title."³

The first statute is 5 Ric. 2, c. 8. And also the king defendeth that none from henceforth make any entry into any lands and tenements but in case where entry is given by the law, and in such case not with strong hand, nor with multitude of people, but only in peaceable and easy manner; and if any man from henceforth do to the contrary, and thereof be duly convict, he shall be punished by imprisonment of his body, and thereof ransomed at the king's will.

This Act of 5 Ric. 2 was sufficient to repress the entry cum manu forti, but it gave the injured party neither damages nor costs, nor even restitution of his property, nor did it provide for the case of one who forcibly detained after having violently entered. The indictment or action was the whole remedy open to the disseised person.⁴ The statute 15 Ric. 2, c. 2, then passed, giving certain powers to justices of the peace respecting forcible entries. By that Act, at all times that such forcible entry shall be made, and complaint thereof cometh to the justices of peace, or to any of them, the same justices or justice shall take sufficient power of the country and go to the place where such force is made, and if they find any that hold such place forcibly after such entry made, they shall be taken and put in the next gaol, there to abide convict by the record of the same justices or justice until they have made fine and ransom to the king, and all the people of the county, as well the sheriffs as other, shall be attendant upon the same justices to go and assist the same justices to arrest such offenders, upon pain of imprisonment and to make fine to the king, and in the same manner it shall be done of them that make such forcible entries in the benefices or offices of holy church.

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 1; and as to an action for forcible entry, it is said, that if the defendant make a title which is found for him, he shall be dismissed without any inquiry as to the force. Id. s. 3. But the doctrine of Hawkins was referred to by Lord Kenyon, in R. v. Wilson, with some degree of doubt.

² R. v. Newlands, 4 Jur. 322.

³ 8 T. R. 361. See 13 Vin. Ab. (A. 1.)

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 7.

The next Act is 4 Hen. 4, c. 8, and by that it appears that forcible entries still continued, especially by the powerful, who disseised their weaker neighbours; and, accordingly, a special assize was given for tenements of any value, without suing to the king. But if the disseisor were attainted of a disseisin, he should then have one year's imprisonment, and yield to the party grieved his double damages, and if convicted of carrying away goods and chattels, should pay damages to the party grieved. Nevertheless, Mr. Serjeant Hawkins points out several defects which still existed. If the entry were peaceful, and the detainer wrongful, the statute, which only extended to a forcible entry and forcible detainer, did not apply; and, secondly, if the offenders were removed before the coming of the justices, the justices had no jurisdiction. Thirdly, no power of restitution was as yet awarded; and fourthly, if the sheriff did not obey the precept of the justices, he was not liable to any forfeiture.¹ Therefore, by 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, reciting 15 Ric. 2, c. 2, (and it did not extend to entries in tenements in peaceable manner, and after holden with force, nor to cases of departure before the arrival of the justices, &c.,) it was ordained, that from henceforth, where any doth make any forcible entry in lands and tenements, or other possessions, or them hold forcibly² after complaint thereof made within the same county where such entry is made to the justices of peace, or to one of them, by the party grieved, the justices or justice so warned within a convenient time shall cause, or one of them shall cause, the said statute duly to be executed, and that at the costs of the party so grieved.

The Act then goes on to establish the jurisdiction of the justices, notwithstanding the previous departure of the trespassers, and enables them to make restitution of the premises, and it then imposes a penalty on the sheriff for neglect of duty. By sect. 6, writs of assize and actions are given to the injured parties, and the jurisdiction of justices is extended to mayors and magistrates of cities, &c., having franchise.³

Provided by sect. 7, that they which keep their possessions with force in any lands and tenements whereof they or their ancestors, or they whose estate they have in such lands and tenements, have continued their possessions in the same by three years or more, be not endamaged by force of this statute.

This proviso by 31 El. c. 11, may be alleged for stay of restitution until that be tried, if the other will deny or traverse the

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 9.

² Both entry and detainer are punishable, although the statute be in the disjunctive. Mar. 8, pl. 12,

³ The Act gives treble damages. but as it only applies to persons having the freehold, termors who sue under the statute of James I. cannot have treble damages and treble costs. Cole and ux. v. Eagle and others, 8 B. & C. 409. But in matters connected with the freehold, not only the costs assessed by the jury, but those de incremento likewise, shall be trebled, and the party may be fined, though fined before upon an indictment for the same offence. Rollston v. Chambers, 1 Leon. 282.

same, and if the verdict be unfavourable to the persons indicted, they shall pay costs and damages to the party disseised.

It is worthy of remark, that there must be both forcible entry and forcible detainer to justify a conviction under 5 Ric. 2, and 8 Hen. 6.¹

Entry.—Nature of the force.] Several questions have arisen in order to the due exposition of these Acts. But many of the decisions are equally applicable to indictments at common law and by statute, and it may, therefore, be not inconvenient to blend them together, taking care to specify particularly those which rest upon the legislative provisions alone. The nature of the force, whether towards the entry or upon the detainer, is a very material question. At common law, the evidence must be such as to create a public breach of the peace, at least where any property except a dwelling house is invaded. But it would seem, that a less amount of force would satisfy the statutes, although Lord Kenyon has observed that the point has not been anywhere decided.² The probability is, that circumstances of terror are necessary to support the indictment at common law, and of such a public nature as would support a charge of riot, but that under the statutes it would merely suffice to prove such force as might require an individual to find surety of the peace. Therefore, if a man be beaten in order to gain his expulsion from the lands, the force is evidently sufficient.³ So if the doors of a house be broken, or other violence committed, it will be an entry within the statutes.⁴ And it would be no defence for A. to affirm that he did nothing more than break the door, for that two or three hours afterwards the actual entry into the house was made by B., his companion, peaceably, and without a weapon.⁵ And by Yelverton, J., the putting back of the bolt with his hand, or drawing up of the latch, is such an entry, to which the court agreed.⁶ However, this latter opinion must be understood of an entry accompanied by terror, as with a strong hand, a multitude of people, &c., and not as of itself, without further violence or alarm. It would be a mere trespass.⁷ And it has been holden, that to enter by the window, or to open a door with a key, without more, would not be forcible.⁸ And it is particularly to be remarked, that these acts of breaking, &c., are not in any manner qualified by the absence of the party from his house, and so it was held where armed men introduced themselves into a dwelling at a time when no one was there.⁹ Although if a man were entirely to abandon his possession of land, taking with him his children and

¹ Atwood v. Jolliffe, 3 New. S. C. 116.

² 8 T. R. 360.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 26.

⁴ Id.

⁵ Beade v. Orme, Noy. 136.

⁶ Id. 137; S. P. Mo. 656.

⁷ See 1 Hawk. c. 64, ss. 25, 26.

⁸ 2 Ro. Rep. 2. So breaking a pane of glass and entering. R. v. Smyth and others, 1 M. & Rob. 155.

⁹ Pollard v. Moreton, Mo. 656.

servants, and merely leaving his cattle, an entry under such circumstances would hardly be deemed forcible.¹

These cases of assault and violence to the premises are instances of actual force. And not much unlike them is the entry mentioned by Hawkins, where one laid hold of the proprietor when he was from home, and then sent persons to take quiet possession of the dwelling. This was held not to be a forcible entry, but the learned serjeant is of opinion that it clearly was, for the act was done with an immediate intent to enter, and whether the force be upon or off the land, it seems equally within the statute.² But there are many circumstances which operate upon the mind so as to induce an individual to give up his possession. These may amount to forcible entries without striking a blow or breaking a lock. As if a man should use considerable menace, either by speech or behaviour, and especially if he be weaponed,³ or accompanied by a number of attendants, or should threaten to kill, maim, or beat the person in possession, or say that he will keep his hold of the property in spite of all men.⁴

This is a show of force which compels the proprietor to withdraw his men from his close, in order to avert the apparent consequences.⁵ And it would not serve as a defence to an indictment upon 5 Ric. 2, c. 8, or 15 Ric. 2, c. 2, to say that the party never quitted his possession,⁶ if the claim were made with the violence above mentioned, because those acts treat the forcible entry itself as a misdemeanor. And if after a peaceable entry, the aggressor were forcibly to carry off a man's goods, this also might be a forcible act against the statutes, though not at common law.⁷ And so if one entered peaceably into a close, and then terrified the owner by threats so as to effect his expulsion, the entry would be construed to be forcible.⁸ But a mere threat to spoil goods, or destroy cattle, or do any damage which is not personal, is not a force at common law, nor under the statutes.⁹

So if A. under a colour of a title, go over the land attended, or without attendants, armed or unarmed, in his way to church or market, but without making any claim, he is not within these provisions of the law.

Detainer. — Nature of the force.] The landlord is, in the eye of the law, the legal possessor of the property withheld; and, therefore, it is not surprising to find, that a termor who holds his pre-

¹ 3 Bac. Abr. Forcible Entry, (B.) This means a total, not a temporary abandonment, such, probably as would negative a charge of burglary in a dwelling house.

² 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 26.

³ And the weapons may be seized for the king's use, and the party imprisoned for that alone. 2 Edw. 3, c. 3; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 5.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 27.

⁵ Milner v. Maclean, 2 C. & P. 17.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 21.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 26.

⁸ See Bac. Abr. For. En. (B.) Lamb. Eir. 134.

⁹ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 28.

mises with weapons and force against his landlord, is guilty of a detainer. As where a tenant kept possession of land, against Sir George Snigge,¹ his landlord, with a drum, guns, and halberts. Here he was deemed to have the possession of his lessor, the term being expired, and was fined 500*l.* in the star chamber for the offence.²

It may, indeed, be assumed as a general principle, that the "same circumstances of violence and terror which will make an entry forcible, will make a detainer forcible also."³ So that if one should keep an unusual number of people in his house, or unusual weapons, or threaten to do some bodily hurt to the former possessor if he dare return, the person so conducting himself is certainly guilty of a forcible detainer.⁴ So it is, if one should place men at a distance from the house, in order to assault any one who might attempt to re-enter, or forestall the way of the dis-seisee with force so that he dares not enter, or should shut his doors against a justice coming to view the force, and distinctly refuse to let him come in.⁵ So if a lessee should keep arms in his house to oppose the lessor in re-entering, though no entry be attempted, or if a lessee at will should employ a force to detain, or a mortgagor after forfeiture of the mortgage; or a lessee should forcibly resist a distress for rent, or forestall or refuse it, the same law will prevail.⁶ But a bare refusal to leave a house, or continuing therein in spite of the owner, without circumstances of terror, can hardly be called a detainer of this description, for want of sufficient force.⁷

Other entries not forcible.] There are some few circumstances, however, connected with this subject, which do not so much refer to the amount of force as to the lawfulness of the entry itself. As if one went to distrain for rent, and expecting resistance, should take others with him for the sake not of violence, but of protection. Here an act which might, under some circumstances, be deemed a forcible entry, would be justified perhaps by the occasion. But an excess of authority, or even making the distress forcibly, would create the misdemeanor.⁸ So, if a landlord should break the door of his late tenant, after the expiration of the term, when no one is within, and thus resume possession, this is not a forcible entry;⁹ but he may not, under such circumstances, dispossess the tenant by force, whilst the latter is in the house or on the premises.¹⁰

¹ A baron of the exchequer.

² Snigge v. Shirton, Cro. Jac. 99.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 30.

⁴ Id., "though no attempt be made to re-enter."

⁵ Id. Lamb. 136, 137.

⁶ 4 Com. Dig. F. Det. (B. 1.)

⁷ 3 Hawk. c. 64, s. 30.

⁸ 3 Bac. Ab. F. En. (B.)

⁹ Turner v. Meymott, 1 Bing. 158. Acc. Taunton v. Costar, 7 T. R. 431. But see Newton v. Harland, 1 Man. & Gr. 644.

¹⁰ 7 T. R. 432, by Lord Kenyon.

Other detainers not forcible.] So upon the subject of detainers, we have seen, that a bare refusal to leave the premises, or even a dwelling house, cannot be called a forcible detainer, for the principal ingredient is wanting.¹ So, we have likewise set out in a former page² the proviso in 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, which averts the penalty due for a forcible detainer, if the disseisor remain in possession for three years.³ So a mere denial of possession, even by tenant at will, is no such detainer; nor is the act of shutting the door against the re-entry such a force as will amount to that offence.⁴ So, if the entry were not merely peaceful, but lawful, the detainer cannot be forcible.⁵

Who may be guilty of these offences.] Two questions present themselves to us after the discussion of the point of force—first, as to the parties who may be guilty of these offences, and next, the kind of property, as well as the nature of the possession, which may be the subjects of them. And this first head is not offered for the purpose of mentioning the ordinary cases of infancy or insanity, although an infant arrived at years of discretion may certainly be convicted of a forcible entry, nor with reference to principal and accessory, but in respect of several relations which persons bear to each other, and to the public, as baron and feme, joint tenant, the real owner of the inheritance, &c. And as to the owner, it is quite agreed that if A. give the bare custody of his house to B., he cannot be called a forcible disseisor if he eject B. upon his refusal to surrender possession, let the force needful for that object be never so great.⁶ So A. cannot be guilty of a forcible entry or detainer, by keeping out a commoner from A.'s own land.⁷

But it is not so well settled, that tenant at will can be so far identified with tenant by sufferance in these respects, as to make him liable to be so amoved by the landlord with impunity.⁸ But if the possession be once “clearly and absolutely” gained by the intruder, the landlord himself must then forbear, according to law, to enter by force, even although he might have held the property in question for twenty years.⁹ Whilst the disseisor, in his turn, if he should remain for twenty years in possession, would still be affected by a defeasible title, and his continuing in possession would amount in judgment of law to a new entry.¹⁰

Joint tenant.] Secondly, a joint tenant may be said to offend

¹ Supra.

² Ante, p. 230.

³ See 11 Mod. 43; 7 Mod. 138.

⁴ 4 Com. Dig. F. Det. (B.)

⁵ R. v. Oakley, 1 Nev. & M. 58; 4 B. & Adol. 307. R. v. Wilson, 5 Nev. & M. 164.

⁶ Dame Russell v. Countess de Nottingham, 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 32; Mo. 786. Indictment for a riot.

⁷ R. v. Sydnham and Parr, Cro. Car. 486.

⁸ See post in this section.

⁹ Dy. 141.

¹⁰ Delaber v. Lyster, 1 Hawk. c. 64, ss. 23, 34, 53. He must apply to a justice who will remove the force, and commit the offender. 1 Hawk. c. 64, ss. 17, 18.

against the purport of these statutes, when he ejects his companion. For notwithstanding his being seised per my et per tout, so that he cannot be punished by an action of trespass at common law, yet it is said that such his lawfulness of entry by no means excuses the violence, or lessens the injury done to his companion.¹ He thus comes within the equity of these provisions, and is guilty not only of a forcible detainer if he hold possession, but of the entry itself. And thus Jones, J., held, upon an exception to an indictment, that if a man were tenant in common with the king, a stranger could enter vi et armis into a moiety.² And although, upon another occasion, the same judge doubted as to parceners, Doderidge, J., put the case of the half before division as being in effect of one thing only, and not separated from the whole as after a division, and he mentioned joint tenants and tenants in common as examples. And the court held generally, that there might well be an entry into the moiety of a manor.³ And upon a more modern occasion, it was held for clear law, that one joint tenant might indict his fellow for a forcible entry.⁴

Feme covert.] A feme covert may be guilty within the intention of the statutes, in respect of such violence as may be done by herself, but not of others by her command, inasmuch as she is deemed by law incompetent to enforce such command, and it is therefore void.⁵

Infant.] And the like observations will apply to an infant arrived at years of discretion.⁶ And the feme covert may suffer imprisonment for such her offence, but not so the infant by virtue of the statutes, because he shall not be subject to corporal punishment by force of the general words of any statute wherein he is not expressly named.⁷

But at common law both feme and infant may be guilty of a forcible entry and detainer, as it should seem, and the infant be punished with imprisonment as well as the wife. Ann Smyth and others were charged with a forcible entry into a dwelling house, which was her husband's. There was a count on the statute and one at common law; and by Lord Tenterden, "although a wife certainly cannot commit a trespass on the property of her husband, I am by no means satisfied, that if she comes with strong hand, she may not be indictable for a forcible entry, which proceeds on a breach of the public peace." "There must be actual force, or such show of force as may prevent resistance." The defendants were acquitted.⁸

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 33.

² Palm. 419.

³ R. v. Beverley, Latch. 224.

⁴ R. v. Marrow, Ca. Temp. H. 174.

⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 64; s. 35; see also Co. Litt. 357 (b).

⁶ 1 Hawk. ut supra.

⁷ See 1 Hale, 21; 1 Hawk. ut supra.

⁸ R. v. Smyth and others, 1 Moo. & Rob. 155; 5 C. & P. 201. As to the count at common law, see 8 T. R. 364, by Lord Kenyon; and note of the editors, 1 M. & Rob. 159.

One individual.] A riot must be by three, and as affray is commonly understood to be with two,¹ but a forcible entry may well be by one. As if A. should arm himself, and invade the dwelling of a lone woman, and so eject her under circumstances of terror; for here is a combination of violence and a breach of the peace. And so likewise might be the detainer. The misdemeanors, to use the words of Hawkins, "may be committed by a single person, as well as by twenty."²

Nature of the property, and possession, which may respectively be the subjects of these offences.] Secondly, we have to advert for a moment to the nature of the property which may be the subject of these misdemeanors, and likewise to the quality of estate which may be affected by them. And first, as under 15 Ric. 2, the justices may convict upon view, it follows that there cannot be a forcible detainer of any tenement, wherein there cannot be a precedent forcible entry, for the justices have no power over any detainer which does not follow the entry.³

Property.] Hence it is, that a way is not the subject of an offence within these statutes; for a way is but an easement,⁴ and as there can be no entry, there cannot be a detainer. But it might be a forcible entry as against the lord of the manor, or other individual in whom the freehold reposes during the servitude of the road, for the owner of the property need not be present at the time of the disseisin. So in the case of a common, which is not an easement but a profit à prendre in alieno solo, there might, by possibility, be a forcible entry as regards the lord of the manor, but not so in respect of the commoner, for he has no interest in the soil beyond the depasturing or turves.⁵ And if it be said, that the disseisin of a common is punishable, this must be understood of a detainer at common law which is cognizable by the assizes as a public breach of the peace and without restitution.⁶ So an office seems not to be within these laws as to the entry, though it may be as to the detainer at common law.⁷ But tithes and rent rest upon a different foundation. They issue out of the realty, and so savour thereof, as to be in this respect of the nature of land. And thus an indictment lies both at common law and by the statutes, for a forcible disturbance of rent, and likewise under the statutes, with reference to tithes.⁸

The words "offices of the church," are to be found in 15 Ric. 2.

¹ Although one only may commit the offence.

² 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 29.

³ Id. s. 31.

⁴ R. v. Holmes, 1 Mod. 73.

⁵ See 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 31.

⁶ See Cro. Car. 486; 1 Hawk. ut supra.

⁷ See R. v. Lady Russell, Cro. Jac. 17; 1 Hawk. ut supra.

⁸ See 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 31; Cro. Car. 201. Anon. 13 Vin. Ab. For. En. c. 4.

Hence churches and vicarage houses are within the laws of forcible entry.¹ There may be a forcible entry into a close.²

Possession.] Clearly he who is seised of the freehold is within the protection of these statutes, and of the common law, and if the title be stated, it needs not to be proved.³ And so is a tenant for years. And a copyhold tenant. But these last-mentioned tenants for years, and by copy, were not within the Acts we have hitherto set out, as to the restitution of their possession.⁴ It is true, that if their lord or lessor were disseised, as well as themselves,⁵ the court would award them restitution, but not so, if they were put out by their own landlord,⁶ or, indeed any other, for such a tenant had no freehold.⁷ Therefore, by 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, tenants for years, and by copy of court roll, guardians by knight's service, tenants by elegit,⁸ statute merchant and staple—of lands or tenements, were included within the provisions of those statutes, which enabled judges and justices to award restitution, and accordingly, copyholders were recognized without further scruple.⁹

But tenant by the verge, tenant at will, and tenant by sufferance, are not mentioned in this Act of James. And although Hawkins points out that tenant by the verge would be within the meaning, if not the words of the statute, seeing that he has no other evidence of his title than the copy of court roll;¹⁰ yet Jones and Whitlock, JJ., had previously holden, that tenant by the verge was not within 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, and they would not allow the Act to be taken in an equitable view.¹¹ The judges above mentioned, indeed, looked upon this tenant as a tenant at will, and it is not settled whether such a person would be considered to be within the equity of these Acts. However, the justices may remove the force, and commit the offender in the case of tenant by the verge.¹²

With regard to tenant at will, Morton, J., in the reign of Car. 2, cited an opinion, that both he and tenant at sufferance were within the law of these misdemeanors.¹³ But the court denied that, and Kelyng, C. J., had previously remarked, that no force could be on a tenant at will, but "it must be for years, or a freehold."¹⁴ Hawkins, however, subjoins a quære to this with respect

¹ R. v. March and others, 1 Sid. 101; R. v. Larking and others, 1 Lev. 90, as to the church. R. v. Baude, as to the vicarage house.

² R. v. Nicholls, 2 Ld. Ken. 512.

³ R. v. Child and others, 2 Cox, 102.

⁴ 13 Vin. Ab. F. En. (D. 1.) Sav. 68.

As where A. caused himself to be disseised in order to rid himself of B. his customary tenant, who had committed a forfeiture. Restitution was awarded to B., for there was an expulsion in this case. R. v. Sir A. Nowell, Yelv. 81.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 15.

⁷ Id.

⁸ See Sav. 68.

⁹ R. v. Plowden and others, Poph. 205. R. v. Hardy, Tho. Raym. 67.

¹⁰ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 17.

¹¹ R. v. Stacy, Latch. 182.

¹² 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 18.

¹³ R. v. Westly and another, 2 Keb. 495.

¹⁴ Id. See also R. v. Dorny, 1 Salk. 260.

to the landlord,¹ and, possibly, the courts, which of late years have preferred to liken the tenant at will more to a yearly tenant than one at sufferance, might be disposed to extend the protection of the statutes as far as they could, without breaking in upon the statute of James, or the rules of the common law. But tenant at sufferance is universally excluded from these considerations. It is said to have been frequently so adjudged.² So where the objection was that the estate did not appear, it was added, that if the party were tenant at sufferance, the indictment would not lie.³

Proceedings.—Restitution—Re-restitution.] We have now discussed the questions of entry and detainer, and the nature of the force required; we have mentioned the persons who may commit the misdemeanors under consideration, and the property as well as the possession in respect of which they may happen, and we now proceed to the method which the common law and statutes have ordained for the punishment and redress of the grievances. In other words, the remedies by view or inquisition, by indictment or information, by action, and subsequently, by restitution, are the next subjects to which we direct the reader's attention.

View.—Judgment.] The most limited of these remedies is that by record of view.

By 15 Ric. 2, c. 2, justices, or one justice,⁴ upon complaint made of a forcible entry, may take sufficient power of the county, and go to the place where the force is, and having found the offenders in the act of a forcible detainer, may commit⁵ them to the next gaol, convict by the record⁶ of the same justices or justice, until they make fine and ransom, and the people of the county and the sheriff shall assist, on pain of imprisonment and fine.

The fine, however, must be set by the justices.

Where parties were committed until they should pay their fine, but no sum was fixed, the conviction was, of course, quashed.⁷ Whilst, on the other hand, if a fine be set, the judgment must be, that the defendant be committed till the fine be paid.⁸ The like

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 32.

² R. v. Depuke, 11 Mod. 273.

³ R. v. Dorny, 12 Mod. 417; see also 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 34.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 7.

⁵ This means "must," and it should be done eo instante; Anon. 11 Mod. 52; and if they neglect, neither the sessions nor the Court of Queen's Bench can do so; Mo. 848.

⁶ Which is not traversable on view. And justices have no concern with the possession. R. v. Brown, 12 Mod. 516; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 8.

⁷ 2 Ld. Raym. 1514. R. v. Ellwell and others, 3 Ld. Raym. 360; R. v. Layton, 1 Salk. 450. See R. v. Layton, 1 Salk. 353.

⁸ R. v. Hord, Say. 176; conviction quashed. See also 12 Mod. 495.

remedy was ordained by the same statute against forcible entries into benefices, or offices of holy church.

The subsequent statutes, 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, and 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, although they give more extensive remedies, do not take away, or abridge the proceeding by view; yet considerable care should be taken by magistrates before they pronounce their judgment in a case of this nature. If they were to see, as it were, inopinate, a forcible entry into premises, they might convict at once, perhaps, at the instance of the complainant, without further evidence. But such a singular occurrence of events is almost impossible, and it therefore becomes the duty of justices to hear evidence. For otherwise it is very truly questioned how, in the case of a forcible detainer, to which their conviction upon view must alone relate, for the reason above given, they can come to a right conclusion, unless they have testimony to satisfy them that the entry was unlawful. And thus it was, that a conviction under 8 Hen. 6, stating an information and complaint of an unlawful ejection, and forcible detainer, where the justices recorded their view of the forcible detainer, was held invalid, inasmuch as there was no evidence that the entry had been unlawful.¹ For there cannot be a forcible detainer without such an illegal entry.² The conviction, however, ought to show, as it seems, that the defendant was summoned, or that he had an opportunity of defending himself.³ And, although it may not be necessary to set forth the particular facts presented to the view of the justices,⁴ such facts as will warrant the conviction, or the unlawful detainer, ought probably to appear.⁵

Should the defendant, upon a conviction upon view, be disposed to make a defence to the charge, he is allowed a traverse in the nature of an appeal, and the matter is then tried.

The defendant must have legal notice of a charge of this nature. Therefore, when a conviction stated that the justices had convicted A. upon view, and then alleged that complaint was made of a forcible entry by A. upon which evidence upon oath was received against A. &c., but failed to say that A. had been summoned, the conviction was held bad, and it was considered insufficient to say, that A. had had notice of the complaint, that A. received the notice, but that he said nothing; A. should have been summoned.⁶

Inquisition.—Judgment.] Another remedy is provided by 8 Hen. 6, c. 9. For the same justice or justices who might take the view may, by that act, have authority to inquire, by the people of

¹ R. v. Wilson, 5 Nev. & M. 164.

² R. v. Oakley, 1 Nev. & M. 58; S. C. 4 B. & Adol. 307.

³ Semble, per Lord Denman, C.J., 3 Ad. & El. 826; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 60; 11 Mod. 42.

⁴ R. v. Wilson, 3 Nev. & M. 753.

⁵ 3 Ad. & El. 825, per Lord Denman.

⁶ Atwood v. Jolliffe, 3 New. S. C. 116.

the same county,¹ of such as make forcible entries, and also of those who hold the same with force. This inquiry may take place in some good town next to the tenements so entered, or in some other convenient place, at the discretion of the justices. "And if it be found, that any doth contrary to this statute, then the justices or justice shall cause to reseise the lands and tenements, and shall put the party in full possession as before."

Thus, under 8 Hen. 6, although the entry were peaceable, the justices are empowered to inquire concerning the forcible detainer. And the Act, moreover, enables them to take an inquisition whether the intruders be "present, or else departed before the coming of the justices or justice;" and the power of restitution is added, with enactments making it compulsory on the sheriff to obey the precepts of the justices.

Much care is necessary in taking an inquisition, and it should be observed, that if a conviction be held invalid, an inquisition founded upon it will likewise fail. But the court will not quash an inquisition, because of the illegality of a conviction, without hearing the objections respectively applicable to each, for the one might be dependent on the other.² An inquisition, however, which stated an unlawful entry and detainer, but omitted to add that any complaint had been made by the prosecutor, or by what authority the jury had been summoned, was held, of itself, to be void.³ In this case, a traverse had been tendered to the magistrates upon conviction, and they had summoned a jury to try the alleged force, who pronounced a verdict of guilty, and the justices then ordered restitution. A return was made of the conviction and inquisition into the Court of King's Bench, when both were quashed. So, again, an inquisition was quashed, for want of stating the nature of the estate possessed by the party deforced.⁴

So where no mention was made of the place from whence the jury had come, and it was not even stated that they were of the county, the inquisition was quashed;⁵ but not where the inquisition omitted to say that they were "then and there" sworn.⁶ It needs scarcely be added, that no restitution will be made till the traverse be tried,⁷ and that the defendant ought to have an opportunity of answering the charge, so that an award of restitution cannot be legally made in his absence.⁸

But this proceeding by inquisition, like that upon view, is not of common occurrence, so that it may pass on to the most ordinary

¹ The jury should come from the neighbourhood. R. v. Crofts, 2 Ld. Raym. 926.

² R. v. Wilson, 3 Ad. & El. 817; 2 Nev. & M. 635, 852.

³ Id.

⁴ R. v. Bowser, 8 Dowl. P. C. 128.

⁵ R. v. Crofts, 2 Ld. Raym. 926.

⁶ R. v. Waite, 4 Mod. 248. A jurat saying "sworn and charged upon oath," without the words "to inquire for the body in the county," has been held good. R. v. Watton, 6 Mod. 95; R. v. Hayes, 1 Show. 272.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 58.

⁸ Id. s. 60.

course of redress under these circumstances,—by indictment at the sessions.

The most usual remedy, then, which is adopted with regard to this class of misdemeanors, is by indictment; and this may be either at common law,¹ or by statute. At common law, however, such a measure of violence must appear upon the face of the record as will amount to a public breach of the peace, so that where no such breach was alleged, nor riot, nor unlawful assembly, it was held that the charge could not be sustained, that the number of the defendants said to have been engaged in the transaction made no difference, and that the words “force and arms” were insufficient to denote the evidence presumed by the law.²

A forcible detainer after a quiet entry would likewise seem to be a misdemeanor at common law, if it be such as to cause a public breach of the peace.³

Judgment at common law.] The judgment for these misdemeanors at common law is fine and imprisonment.

The statutes, however, are for the most part resorted to when it is proposed to indict for these respective offences, because a writ of restitution is given by one of them—the 8 Hen. 6, c. 9. And although the stat. 5 Ric. 2, c. 8, has no mention of this restitution of reseisin, an indictment may still be framed upon its provisions, because the stat. 8 Hen. 6 will provide for the subsequent restitution, if the expulsion be duly alleged. If it were desired to proceed for a forcible entry and detainer, the stat. 15 Ric. 2, c. 2, would certainly apply; but the latter Act yields in usefulness to the 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, which embraces a detainer after a peaceful entry. If, therefore, the entry be forcible, and the possession withheld, the indictment would probably be drawn under 5 Ric. 2, c. 8, and if the entry were not forcible, but there should, nevertheless, be a detainer, the count would rest upon 8 Hen. 6, c. 9. It will be remembered also, that if the forcible entry or detainer be made by three or more, an indictment for a riot may be sustained against the offenders. But it may be remarked, that an indictment for forcible entry quashed will not survive as an indictment for riot.⁴

Indictment at common law.] An indictment at common law for the misdemeanor under consideration commonly states that A. and B., with others, with force and arms, and with a strong hand, unlawfully did enter⁵ into the premises in question, which premises were at the time⁶ in the peaceable possession of C., and ¹ R. v. Bathurst, Say. Rep. 225; R. v. Blake and others, 3 Burr. 1731; Id. 1732, per Wilmot, J. R. v. Wilson and others, 8 T. R. 357.

² R. v. Blake and others, 3 Burr. 1732.

³ See as to the count at common law, post.

⁴ R. v. Eden, Cro. El. 697.

⁵ Restitution was awarded by the opinion of three judges against Doderidge, J., where the detainer was stated to be forcible, but the entry was alleged singly, without saying whether forcible or otherwise. Earl of Salisbury v. Sir A. Ashley, Palm. 194.

⁶ See R. v. Hobson, Hetl. 73.

that the same persons in a like violent manner expelled and put out C. from his possession, and that C. has been kept out of possession by the defendants, and still is so kept out, to the great damage of C., &c.

An indictment on 5 Ric. 2 is not dissimilar from that at common law, but it seems that a less amount of violence than an actual breach of the peace will be sufficient to maintain it, and the conclusion is, of course, against the form of the statute.¹ But the count, upon 8 Hen. 6, c. 9,² which is the most to be recommended, affirms that the defendants unlawfully, with a strong hand, and without judgment recovered, did disseise the owner of the premises, and did keep him out,³ until the taking of the inquisition, &c. And if it be intended to charge a forcible detainer only, the unlawful entry should be alleged, together with the expulsion, and afterwards, that the defendants, with force and arms, and with a strong hand, did keep out C., &c. And lastly, if the provisions of 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, regarding lessees for years or copyholders ousted by their lessor or lord, be made available, care must be taken to insert a proper description of the premises. In taking up the several phrases of these indictments as they meet the eye, it may be remarked, that although at common law such a force ought to be shown as will amount to a breach of the peace, the words "with a strong hand" will be sufficient to make out a charge, either at common law, or upon the statutes. Thus where the defendants were indicted for entering into a certain mill, "with force and arms, unlawfully, and with a strong hand," a demurrer was put in on the ground that a private trespass, and not a public breach of the peace, had been alleged, but the court were clearly of opinion that the words "manu forti" meant a higher degree of force than "vi et armis;" that they imported something criminal, and that a breach of the peace was manifestly implied by them. Judgment for the crown was accordingly given upon those counts which contained such words, and for the defendants upon two counts, where "manu forti" did not appear.⁴ And the same words will, of course, be enough to satisfy a count upon the statutes which contemplate a less degree of force than an actual violation of the peace. But the omission of "manu forti" would be highly unsafe in an indictment upon the statutes, even though other words of strong import should be used to express the same meaning. For if a prosecutor be content with alleging force and arms without ¹ It need not be shown that the justices before whom the indictment was taken had authority to hear felonies and trespasses. Palm. 277; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 36. See also R. v. Simmons and others, Al. 49.

² It is better not to recite the statute. See R. v. Farnam, 2 Leon. 186.

³ See Jenk. 118.

⁴ R. v. Wilson and others, 8 T.

Rep. 357. See R. v. Baude, Cro. Jac. 41, which was referred to by Lawrence, J., in R. v. Wilson, 8 T. R. 362, for the purpose of showing that "manu forti" was sufficient in an indictment upon 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, because numerous objections were made to the indictment upon that occasion, and yet not one as to the degree of force.

more, he does no more than complain of a civil trespass, and his count will be quashed.¹ And the only exception to the rule is the case of forcible entry into a dwelling house, "for a dwelling house is of great regard in the eye of the common law." So that where the defendant was indicted for that he unlawfully and injuriously, with force and arms, did enter into the dwelling house of the prosecutor, the count was held good, and judgment was given for the king.² And this case has been adverted to as recognizing a sound distinction.³ The place where the force happened must be described with certainty.⁴

The next matter worthy of importance is the statement of the premises in question,⁵ and of the possession which has been interrupted. The prosecutor, therefore, alleges that he was seised⁶ in his demesne as of fee, or of a freehold then being in the tenure and occupation of one C., or of a certain messuage for a certain term of years,⁷ whereof — years were then to come, and are still unexpired,⁸ &c. For want of setting forth the nature of the estate, indictments have been frequently quashed,⁹ and the reasons assigned are, that the defendant may know the special charge against him, and that the court may know whether any one of the statutes relative to forcible entries extends to the estate from which the expulsion was.¹⁰ And thus "tenement" is too uncertain.¹¹ And again, the prosecutor might be but tenant at will, and so not within the Acts.¹² And although an indictment upon 8 Hen. 6 was once held good by Doderidge and Chamberlain, JJ., which did not express the nature of the property,¹³ yet it may be said upon that, that the words of the charge were that the owner was seised and possessed until the parties indicted disseised him, and the court said, that these terms implied a frank tenement.¹⁴ And, à fortiori, where mention of seisin was altogether left out, the indictment was ¹ R. v. Storr, 3 Burr. 1698; S. P. R. v. Atkins, Id. 1703; R. v. Gillett, Id.; R. v. Blake, Id. 1731; R. v. Lock, 1 Freem. 523; R. v. Deacon and others, Ry. & Moo. N. P. C. 27. See also Sty. 135. R. v. Harris, 11 Mod. 113; R. v. Baker and others, Id. 235; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 44. From whence it seems that R. v. Dyer, 6 Mod. 96, where the court refused to quash an indictment upon 5 Ric. 2, which wanted these words, is of doubtful authority.

² R. v. Bathurst, Say. Rep. 225.

³ 3 Burr. 1732; 8 T. R. 362.

⁴ R. v. Banks, 1 Sess. Ca. 357.

⁵ See R. v. Farnam, 2 Leon. [186.

⁶ Seised or possessed where not fatal to the charge. R. v. Ellis, Cro. Jac. 634.

⁷ The words "of years" should be carefully preserved. R. v. Johnson, 1 Freem. 524.

⁸ Or of a copyhold, describing it. The term must be described as still enduring. R. v. Benson and others, 1 Keb. 901.

⁹ See several authorities to this effect, in 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 37; 3 Bulst. 71.

¹⁰ 1 Ventr. 89; Anon. Id. 306. R. v. Wannop, Say. Rep. 142; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 38.

¹¹ Ro. Rep. 46. So a "rood of land," 1 Bulst. 201.

¹² R. v. March and others, 1 Sid. 101. R. v. Griffith and others, 3 Salk. 169. R. v. Depuke, 11 Mod. 273. R. v. Dorny, 1 Salk. 260.

¹³ R. v. Emmot and others, Palm. 277.

¹⁴ Id.

held bad.¹ But where the nature of the premises appears on the record, together with an averment of seisin, the court will award restitution, although the seisin be not very technically expressed. As where the defendants were charged with entering into a mesuage of W. P., he the said W. P. being then and there also seised thereof, the court in this case awarded restitution, notwithstanding the objection that W. P. might have been seised pur autre vie, and that he ought to have been mentioned as being seised as of fee or of freehold. For the rule of law is, that a life in being shall be presumed to continue until the contrary be shown, and as no averment could have been placed on the record which would show the existence of cestui que vie when the writ was prayed, the general statement of seisin must, of course, embrace all circumstances.² However, as a description of the premises is essential for the purpose of obtaining restitution,³ it may be doubted whether the authority of the case in Palmer can go, at all events, further than to warrant the mere conviction of the parties for the forcible entry, without the restoring remedy. But seisin, or possession, being duly alleged, the particular estate or title need not be set out,⁴ and it is not necessary to add, that the prosecutor continued seised.⁵ And the number of acres, or whether they were arable, meadow, or pasture, need not be stated.⁶

So, under 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, accuracy is required in describing the estate. For where the lease was for so many years, if J. S. should so long live, and the indictment omitted to aver the existence of the life, Roll, C. J. ordered that it should be quashed for that error.⁷ So to say—possessed of a certain term, without adding—of years;⁸ or to say, “disseised,” for that cannot be of a term or a copyhold.⁹ The course is to say, that the tenant of the ¹ R. v. Taylor, 7 Mod. 123. It does not seem absolutely necessary to raise seisin if possession of the freehold be stated, because the injury is to the possession; but in R. v. Taylor neither seisin nor possession was alleged. See Stark. Cr. Pl. 445, note (z).

² R. v. Hoare and others, 6 M. & S. 266. See likewise to the same effect, R. v. Lloyd and others, Caldec. 415, where freehold was alleged, but not proved: yet upon the proof of force and possession, the judgment was sustained. 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 38.

³ Stark. Cr. Pl. 445, note (u).

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 38. See Sty. 147.

⁵ R. v. Dillon and others, 2 Ch. Rep. 314.

⁶ R. v. Ashpernon, 2 Leon. 184. It was also objected, that the time of the unlawful assembly only, and not that of the entry, was alleged, but the court said they would intend that both happened at the same time.

⁷ R. v. Bray, Sty. 147.

⁸ R. v. Holmes, 1 Mod. 73; 1 Ventr. 306; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 38.

⁹ R. v. Hardy, 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 39; Thos. Raym. 67. A house taken by a woman who lives apart from her husband is rightly described as the husband's house. It was clearly so held by Lord Tenterden, where the husband had entered for the purpose of restoring possession to the owner, and the wife then entered, as it was alleged, with strong hand, to regain her possession. R. v. Smyth and others, 1 Moo. & Rob. 155; 5 C. & P. 203.

freehold was ousted, and then that the lessee for years was expelled.¹ It is, moreover, proper to show that the place was the freehold of the party ejected at the time of the force, so that the word "then" must be made use of, and "being the freehold of E. F.," without more, is insufficient.² Although to allege that the locus in quo was "then and yet" the freehold of E. F. cannot be permitted, inasmuch as it would be inconsistent with that part of the count which states that the wrong-doer still keeps the party out.³

Having sufficiently asserted the entry,⁴ and the nature of the possession invaded, it is indispensable to mention the expulsion.⁵ There must, in other words, be an allegation of seisin and disseisin⁶ where the prosecutor has been removed from his freehold. And the conclusion of a disseisin cannot be a matter of inference.⁷ Where, indeed, the ejectment complained of is of a tenant for years, or of a copyholder, seisin cannot be stated, because a copyholder has no freehold, and the distinction between this case and indictments⁸ for expulsion from freehold has been more than once recognized. And it is also unwise to aver too much, for where it was said that the possession of A. B., a farmer, was entered upon, and that R. F. was disseised, the indictment was held faulty, for want of saying that A. B., the farmer, had been likewise disseised. Had the pleader foreborne to call A. B. farmer, the case had been otherwise, because no title would have been found in any other but in him who was found to be disseised, but finding the woman to be a farmer (an estate known and certain) it became necessary to show her expulsion.⁹ And as the word "then" has been shown to be of importance in stating the possession of the freehold, it must also be employed in setting out the expulsion.¹⁰ Lastly, the continuance of the disseisin must be expressly averred, because it would be a repugnancy to award restitution to one who never was in possession, and in vain to award it to one who does not appear to have lost it.¹¹

¹ R. v. Waite, 4 Mod. 248.

² R. v. Poynts, Cro. Jac. 214. R. v. Bridge, Id. 639, where "adhuc" seems to be wrongly put for "ad tunc;" S. P. R. v. Wogan, Comb. 288. R. v. Fenton and others, Yelv. 27.

³ R. v. Hayes, 1 Show. 272; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 39.

⁴ See 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 40.

⁵ Id. c. 64, s. 41. "Then and there" are not indispensable in stating the expulsion, nor an identity of place, because both these circumstances must follow upon the entry and disseisin. Id. s. 42.

⁶ The word "disseise" includes an unlawful expulsion. Andrews v. Lord Cromwell, Cro. Jac. 31. R. v. Watts, Noy. Rep. 125; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 43. Wroth v. Capel, 3 Leon. 102. See R. v. Lord Cromwell, Yelv. 15.

⁷ R. v. Dorny, 1 Salk. 260. R. v. Griffith and others, 3 Salk. 169. R. v. Taylor, 7 Mod. 123.

⁸ Poph. 205.

⁹ Freiston v. Shillito, Yelv. 165. See Godb. 45.

¹⁰ R. v. Baude, Cro. Jac. 41.

¹¹ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 41. See Say. Rep. 225. Ry. & Moo. N. P. C. 27.

Where there is no doubt as to the entry, but it is questionable whether the detainer can be proved, or vice versâ, the indictment may be drawn accordingly.¹ But if both entry and detainer be alleged, and the jury omit to find as to one, the court will hold the entire charge ill laid. As where the jury found the detainer only, it was moved that a peaceable entry ought in such a case to have been found likewise, and the court were of that opinion, and awarded re-restitution of the property which had been restored.² Whereas if no mention at all had been made of the entry, it would have been sufficient.³ So where the jury gave a verdict as to both points, and found the detainer peaceable, the court referred to Ford's case as making the distinction, and held the indictment good.⁴ However, it seems that the grand jury cannot make a division of this nature, because they ought to find the truth or falsehood of the whole of the bill, and therefore, where they found a peaceable entry and forcible detainer, a restitution awarded thereupon by justices was set aside.⁵

Pleas.] In answer to this charge of forcible entry and detainer, it is, of course, competent to plead not guilty, which puts the violence in issue,⁶ but the provisions of 31 El. c. 11, already adverted to in a former page, must be pleaded.⁷ By that Act, there is to be no restitution if the person indicted has had the occupation, or been in quiet possession of the premises, for three whole years next before the day of the indictment. And the plea need not set forth the title or estate, for the materiality of the issue is in the possession.⁸ This allegation so pleaded operates (like a general traverse of the force) in stay of the restitution,⁹ and is capable of being denied or traversed by the prosecutor, and so brought to trial. Indeed, if the justices should refuse to accept the traverse thus tendered, the court will award re-restitution upon a writ of certiorari.¹⁰ Defendants, however, should be well assured before they avail themselves of this plea, under 31 El. c. 11, inasmuch as they cannot place not guilty and the possession for three years upon the same record. The statute, it may be naturally concluded, was not intended to protect the tenant from holding out against his landlord, for the possession of the former is that of the lessor.¹¹

¹ See Andrews v. Lord Cromwell, Cro. Jac. 31; Stark, Cr. Pl. 445, note (t).

² R. v. Ford, Cro. Jac. 151.

³ R. v. Sir W. Fitzwilliam, Id. 49; S. C. Cro. El. 915; S. C. Yelv. 32.

⁴ R. v. Sadler, 1 Sid. 99.

⁵ R. v. Serjant, 1 Sid. 414; S. C. 1 Ventr. 23. See further, 2 Bulst. 121, 258.

⁶ And the plea must be in writing; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 58.

⁷ 1 Salk. 553.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 56.

⁹ R. v. Harris, 1 Salk. 260; S. C. 1 Ld. Raym. 440. R. v. Burgess, 1 Keb. 538, 343. See Dy. 122 (6); 1 Ventr. 264. R. v. Winter, 2 Salk. 588. Id. citing R. v. Sir R. Bray.

¹⁰ R. v. Stacey and others, 1 Sid. 287. R. v. Bengough, 3 Salk. 170.

¹¹ See Godb. 45.

The Act contemplated cases where the estate should be continued, and a termor who kept out the reversioner with weapons was held clearly guilty of a forcible detainer.¹ The plea should be tendered immediately, whether it be of not guilty, or under 31 El. And upon one occasion, where the time for pleading was discussed in the Court of King's Bench, the rule was, that unless the defendant should plead or demur within two days, and if he plead, to take notice of trial within term, then let restitution be awarded.²

Restitution.] Where the indictment or inquisition is proceeded with upon the statute of 8 Hen. 6, c. 9,³ we have seen that restitution may be awarded.⁴ And it is observable that the possession of visible and corporeal tenements only are contemplated by the statute, so that rent⁵ or common is not within its provision. And the reason is, because there cannot be disseisin of such property; such things being mere creatures of the law, and always deemed to be in the possession of those whom the law adjudges to have a right to such possession.⁶ But the persons who disturb incorporeal rights may be punished under 15 Ric. 2, c. 2,⁷ or may be sued by action for the damage caused by the interruption. And tithes have been held subjects for restitution. Further, it is not competent to re-

¹ Snigge v. Shirton, Cro. Jac. 199.

² R. v. Marrow, Ca. Temp. Hardw. 174. It may be noticed here, that the person ejected cannot be a witness to prove the case which he prosecutes. It was so held upon an indictment under 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, where Vaughan, B., permitted the tenant for years and his wife to give evidence. Their evidence was material, and a verdict of guilty ensued. The court observed, that both husband and wife were interested in the event, because a conviction would entitle them to a judgment of restitution; and the public would sustain no injury, because the remedy by indictment at common law still remained. The rule for a new trial was accordingly made absolute. R. v. Williams, 9 B. & C. 549; 4 M. & Ry. 471. The same point was ruled by Little-dale, J., where the wife of the prosecutor of an indictment on 21 Jac. 1, c. 15, was called as a witness, and objected to on the ground of her husband's interest. R. v. Beavan and others, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 242. The statute 31 E. 1. gives costs against defendants who plead the possession of three years unsuccessfully in express terms. R. v. Good-enough, 2 Ld. Raym. 1036.

³ As to termors and copyholders, see 21 Jac. c. 15. That lessee for years should sue in the name of the reversioner for restitution, and lessee for years of a copyholder by licence in the name of the lord, see R. v. Sir M. Arundell, 13 Vin. Ab. 387. Restitution is made to him in reversion, and not to the lessee for years, for he who is disseised may be restored, and then the lessee may re-enter. R. v. Sover, 1 Leon. 327.

⁴ The judge of assize will sometimes award restitution if a bill of indictment be found, R. v. Hake, 4 M. & Ry. 483, n., but it lies in his discretion to do so. R. v. Harland and others, 8 Ad. & El. 826; 1 Per. & D. 93; 2 Moo. & Rob. 141.

⁵ But semble, that rent is within these statutes. See ante.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 45. See Co. Litt. 323.

⁷ 1 Hawk. ut supra.

store premises to any one who was not in the actual possession of them, so that a mere seisin in law would not afford a ground for the remedy.¹ And Mr. Serjeant Hawkins is of opinion, that if a disseisee were to re-enter peaceably upon the disseisor, he might be found guilty of a forcible detainer, and so that the disseisor might have restitution, although it might be said, that the latter had, in judgment of law, no possession at all.² Nor again can restitution be awarded against any one who had been three years in possession of a lawful estate. This provision was introduced by 31 El. c. 11, for the purpose of quieting the enjoyment of property held for so long a time. So that if A. being entitled to a certain messuage were to enter upon his rightful possession, whether peaceably or otherwise, and were to continue for three years unmolested, he could not be amoved by virtue of 8 Hen. 6, c. 9, or 21 Jac. 1, c. 15.³ But if A. were wrongfully to gain access to this messuage, and thus were to acquire the character of the disseisor, he could not then plead the statute of Eliz. in bar of restitution as against the disseisee, because he would not have, as against the latter, the groundwork of a legal estate. The maxim "In pari delicto, potior est conditio possidentis," might indeed protect him against the intrusion of a stranger whom he might have disseised and kept out for three years, but the disseisee with a lawful title, and with or without laches as to his right of entry, was considered to have a sufficient claim to restitution, notwithstanding the 31 El. c. 11.⁴ And it has already been shown, that the possession of land under a lease for more than three years, will not make the tenant guiltless of a detainer after the expiration of the term.⁵ And even if a man be restored to premises, having been three years in possession, he cannot until three years more have elapsed, be able to justify a forcible detainer.⁶ Again, there will be not any restitution if the complainant has permitted a long season to elapse before he has applied for redress. Three years after a conviction before justices of the peace have been considered too long a period.⁷ Indeed, the meaning of the Act being to afford a present remedy,⁸ restitution ought to be awarded immediately, and therefore it is that a private justice may put the statute in execution without delaying the restitution till the quarter sessions.⁹ And the court upon this occasion gave judgment for re-restitution.¹⁰ A traverse of the force operates likewise as a supersedeas to the restitution.¹¹

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 46.

² Id. s. 47.

³ And a plea of possession for three years will postpone restitution until the matter be tried. R. v. Ellis, 1 Freem. 377.

⁴ See 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 54. See also ss. 55 and 57.

⁵ Snigge v. Shirton, Cro. Jac. 199.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 53. See R. v. Weshbourne, 4 Leon. 49.

⁷ R. v. Harris, 12 Mod. 268.

⁸ R. v. Harnisse, 5 Mod. 443.

⁹ R. v. Ellis, 1 Freem. 377.

¹⁰ R. v. Harris, 3 Salk. 313; Carth. 496; where the time is said to have been two years and a half.

¹¹ R. v. Winter, 2 Salk. 587. See, however, Dy. 122.

Mandamus.] The court will not grant a mandamus to justices under 5 Ric. 2, sess. 1, c. 8.¹

Restitution, by what justices.] It seems to be a good principle that this restitution² cannot take place by any authority except that of the justices before whom the inquest has been found.³ And thus it is that justices of gaol delivery cannot grant such a writ unless where the indictment has been found before them, although they may inquire concerning the forcible entry, and fine the offenders.⁴ And the jurisdiction of the quarter sessions is acknowledged, because as the justices have power to reseise, they may as well exercise that right in court as out of it.⁵ But the superior Court of King's Bench is an exception to the rule, because the judges there must have a right of putting into execution the remedy which the writ of certiorari removes from the inferior tribunal.⁶ Although that court will not reverse the decree of a judge at the assizes refusing to award restitution after an indictment for a forcible entry had been found by the grand jury; nor will they enter into the question whether the judge has decided rightly or not.⁷

Certiorari.] And, therefore, we come to the change of jurisdiction which is effected in the manner just related. This proceeding, whether a traverse of the force or a three years' possession be the point at issue, retards the restitution till the truth of the plea be inquired into. And as we have seen that the defendant must not linger in his pleading, although the writ of certiorari has issued from the prosecutor,⁸ so he must hasten to trial, or abide the

¹ Ex parte Davy, 6 Jur. 949.

² The justice or justices may execute the writ in person, or direct the sheriff to do it, and the Court of King's Bench would at once issue a mandate to the sheriff for that purpose. And it is said, that the sheriff or justices may break open doors for this purpose. See 1 Russ. C. M. 294. And we have seen that the sheriff is bound by the statute to obey the orders thus imposed on him by the justices. Indeed, he may be amerced if he return that he could not make restitution by reason of resistance. 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 52. It is a misdemeanor (15 Ric. 2, c. 2, punishable by fine and imprisonment) in the proper officer if he be not attendant upon such justices in their procedure.

³ Jenk. 221; Dy. 187.

⁴ See Sav. 68; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 51. See also Holt's Ca. 402.

⁵ 1 Russ. C. M. 314.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 51. A pardon of the force would likewise bar restitution, but the crown would not, probably, interfere in that manner at the present day, unless under very especial circumstances. See R. v. Fawcett, 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 64; Yelv. 99. But the pardon would not bar a restitution by action. R. v. Fawcett, Noy. Rep. 119.

⁷ R. v. Harland, 1 Per. & Dav. 93; 8 Ad. & El. 826; 2 Moo. & Rob. 141.

⁸ Ante.

alternative of a restitution.¹ And it is a great misdemeanor in justices to proceed to restore after the writ delivered. As where there was an indictment and certiorari, and then a second indictment and another certiorari before restitution executed. But restitution was made notwithstanding, the justices not having granted their supersedeas. The court reprimanded the justices to whom the writ of certiorari was delivered, and set aside the restitution.² But the justices are not in contempt if they proceed without notice of such a writ.³ And if there be a new forcible detainer pending the certiorari, the justices may record the force.⁴ It is no ground for arresting the writ that the jury have found a part of the indictment to be false, if they have also found so much true as will warrant the restitution. As where upon an indictment for a forcible entry and detainer, the jury found the entry peaceful and the detainer forcible.⁵

This writ of certiorari may be had in respect of all proceedings, from the indictment or inquisition to the conviction and award of restitution.⁶ If the justices, however, do not return the information and evidence touching the entry upon a writ requiring them to return all the proceedings, the court will not grant a mandamus to compel them, especially if there be no affidavit showing that the evidence had been received.⁷

There shall be a second writ of restitution without a fresh inquiry, if the first be defeated by fresh force immediately after its execution, but this second writ must be applied for within a reasonable time.⁸ There can be no view without consent in criminal prosecutions.⁹

Re-restitution.] If, after the award of restitution, justices should come to the conclusion that their judgment has proceeded upon wrong grounds, or if the Court of King's Bench should be of opinion upon a certiorari, that the conviction of the justices should be quashed, the premises restored must again change hands. In the first case, this new process is called a supersedeas, and may be carried into execution by two or even one of those who have awarded the restitution,¹⁰ and when ordered by the Court of King's Bench it is called re-restitution.¹¹ The party accused of the forcible entry and detainer then becomes the possessor of the property to which he has laid claim. If a justice neglect to hold his

¹ R. v. Marrow, Ca. Temp. Hardw. 174.

² R. v. Fitzwilliam, Yelv. 32; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 62. R. v. Spelman, 1 Keb. 93.

³ 1 Hawk. ut supra. See 1 Keb. 93, where the court suspended a writ of restitution till the case had been tried.

⁴ R. v. Kneller, 1 Salk. 151.

⁵ R. v. Sadler, 1 Sid. 97, 99; 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 59.

⁶ See also 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 33, as to the writ of certiorari.

⁷ R. v. Wilson, 1 Ad. & El. 627.

⁸ R. v. Harris, 1 Ld. Raym. 482.

⁹ R. v. Redman, 1 Ld. Keny. 384, moved by defendant.

¹⁰ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 61.

¹¹ See 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 63.

inquest, or if he do not certify his restitution, the Court of King's Bench will inquire and award re-restitution.¹ At one time it seems that it was discretionary with the judges to send out this second writ. They were accustomed to decide according to all the circumstances of the case, whether the defendant appeared to have some right to the tenements in question which he had lost by the restitution granted to the prosecutor, and when the affirmative occurred, a second restitution was the usual consequence.² Thus it was said that although the defendant is not entitled ex merito justitiæ to re-restitution when an inquisition of a forcible entry is quashed, it is nevertheless usual to give it under such circumstances.³ And the same thing has been affirmed regarding the quashing of an indictment, or a verdict for the defendant upon a traverse.⁴ And Holt, C. J., took a distinction upon one occasion between cases where the first destitution appears to the court to have been just, and where tortious. That learned judge observed, that upon the quashing of an inquisition, the re-restitution was discretionary if the restitution appeared to have been just, but that if the prosecutor had been wrongfully put into possession by the justices, that the court were then bound to reinstate the defendant.⁵ And this holding obtained where it appeared to the court that a stranger had recovered possession of the same land in the lord's court. The traverse being found for the defendant, and it being the opinion of the judges that he had been unjustly amoved by the prosecutor's suit of restitution, they awarded him re-restitution.⁶ But in later cases the Court of King's Bench has felt itself under an obligation to award the return of the premises to the defendant after conviction quashed, and so it was held, even where an affidavit was made that the title of the party, who was a lessee, had expired since the conviction.⁷ And again, in a very modern case, where both the inquisition and conviction were quashed, the court considered that they must give re-restitution as a consequence of quashing the conviction without inquiring into the legal or equitable claims of the respective parties.⁸ And Lord Denman, C. J., after referring to the supposed discretion above mentioned, observed, that it would be highly inconvenient if the question of title were to be inquired into upon affidavit.⁹ Perhaps, however, a case of fraud might operate with the court. As where the lessor of premises arrested his lessee, and then forcibly entered the mesuage upon a pretence of forfeiture. The inquisition being quashed, the lessor prayed re-restitution, but the motion was denied, because here was a fair title standing out which ought not to be set aside by sinister means.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Lady Lovelace, Comb. 260, 262.

² 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 65.

³ Comb. 328.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 65.

⁵ 1 Ld. Raym. 483.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 64, s. 66.

⁷ R. v. Jones, Str. 474. See also R. v. Ford and others, Yelv. 99.

⁸ R. v. Wilson, 3 Ad. & El. 817.

⁹ Id. 837.

¹⁰ R. v. Toslin and others, 2 Salk. 517. "Otherwise had no title appeared." S. C.

Judgment under the statutes.] It may be just remarked, that in addition to the restitution, the judgment under the statutes 5 Ric. 2, and 15 Ric. 2, is imprisonment and ransom at the king's will, which will is not extrajudicial, but such as declared by the judges, his representatives.¹

It is said, that as far as the fine is concerned, the conviction cannot be quashed upon motion, if the fine be set, but that it is otherwise if the justices omit to fine,² but the authority of this case may be questioned, for there seems to be no good reason for departing from the usual rule with reference to convictions, where the certiorari is not taken away; and that rule would enable the defendant to remove a conviction under 5 Ric. 2, or 15 Ric. 2, into the King's Bench for the purpose of quashing it.

Writ of error.] The defendant may however resort to his writ of error if he should see fit.³

CHAPTER VII.

OF LIBEL AND SLANDER.

In treating of libel and slander, we will consider, first, what is, if published, a libel. Secondly, what shall be said to constitute the offence—as publication, evil intention, &c. Thirdly, what shall be called an indictable slander; and, fourthly, what are the usual defences which have been resorted to in these cases.

What a libel.] Libels are writings whose tendency is to produce a disturbance of the public peace. And there is in the nature of such writings a union of private injury to the party libelled or to his representatives with a public wrong, so that whilst the offence redounds to the general inconvenience, the ingredient of ill-will is likewise discovered in the composition which is the subject of complaint. Libels are recognized as against the Christian religion,—(and it will be remembered that he who speaks evil of Christianity maligns also the Divine Being, who is the author of that creed)—against morals,—which are founded upon the law of God—against the monarch—the two houses of parliament—the constitution generally—the government for the time being—the magistracy and the administration of justice, (for he who libels the executive reflects upon the officers of justice)—against foreign potentates

¹ 4 Com. 121. See also R. v. Challoner, 1 Keb. 585.

² R. v. Layton, 2 Salk. 450.

³ See 2 Salk. Id.

and ambassadors, and persons of distinction abroad—and, lastly, against individuals. All libels concerning these persons, or matters, have a tendency, directly or indirectly, to disturb public tranquillity, and each of them, again, is more or less tainted with malice or ill-will towards the person or thing libelled.

Libels against foreign persons and governments, and individuals, will form the subjects of this division.

Libels against individuals.] The libel may consist in defamation, expressed either in printing or writing, signs or pictures; and tending either to blacken the memory of one who is dead, or the reputation of one who is alive, and expose him to public hatred, contempt, or ridicule.¹ Thus, it appears, that not only are the characters of the living the subjects of libel, but those also of the dead. For the publication is calculated to provoke a breach of the public peace. “It stirs up others of the same family, blood, or society, to revenge,² by provoking them to vindicate the memory of the deceased, and to wipe off that stain which the reflections on the ancestor may cast upon them.”³ As where the defendant, in giving an account of Sir C. Nicoll’s death, stated, that “he could not be called a friend to his country, for he changed his principles for a red riband, and voted for that pernicious project, the excise.” This Lord Kenyon conceived to be a libel, being done with a view to vilify the memory of the deceased, and to injure his posterity.⁴ But there must be a tendency of this nature, and it must be so laid in the indictment, or judgment will be arrested.⁵ To confine ourselves then to libels upon the living, it may be remarked, that a direct calumny is, of course, a ground for indictment. As to write of a man that he has the itch.⁶ So where it was stated in a ludicrous paragraph, that a nobleman had married an actress, and appeared with her at the theatre.⁷ So to impute a want of courage to an officer in the navy is a libel, or to designate him as a man of an incendiary disposition.⁸ So to write of a man as having been guilty of hypocrisy and falsehood.⁹ So to impute to a Protestant bishop an attempt to convert Catholic priests.¹⁰ So to write ill things of a person who had been unsuccessful in a lawsuit.¹¹ The mayor of Northampton sent to Lord Halifax a licence to keep a public house, and this act was deemed libellous towards a person of quality.¹² So it is libellous to impute criminal conduct to any one,¹³

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 73, ss. 1, 2.

² Case de libellis famosis, 5 Rep. 125.

³ 4 T. R. 128, by Lord Kenyon, and see 1 Hawk. 73, s. 3; 4 Taunt. 364, Mansfield, C. J.

⁴ R. v. Critchley, 4 T. R. 128, 129, cited. R. v. Walter, 3 Esp. 21.

⁵ R. v. Topham, 4 T. R. 126.

⁶ 2 Wils. 403.

⁷ R. v. Kinnersley, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 294.

⁸ R. v. Smollet, Holt on Libel, 224; 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 269.

⁹ 4 Taunt. 355. See also R. v. Sir B. Hicks, Poph. 139; Hob. 215.

¹⁰ 5 Bing. 17.

¹¹ 2 Barnard. 84. See 2 B. & Ald. 685.

¹² R. v. Mayor of Northampton, 1 Str. 422.

¹³ R. v. Benfield and another, 2 Barr. 980.

as that he has insulted persons in a scandalous and barefaced manner.¹ So to publish anything in derogation of a man in his trade or business.² As that an apothecary had counterfeited a physician and had taken fees,³ or that the prosecutor had been guilty of cheating.⁴ So where the defendant wrote to the mayor of Richmond, concerning the town clerk, that his consummate malice and wickedness against the defendant and his family would make him do anything ever so vile.⁵ So where persons in general are advised to be cautious of the plaintiff, a gunsmith, since he never made the experiment he proposed, except out of a leathern gun, (thereby intimating that the plaintiff had been guilty of a falsehood), the court held the advertisement to be a libel.⁶ So where the printer of a newspaper represented the bishop of Kerry to be a bankrupt, the court granted an information.⁷ So where the defendant employed a man to carry about a placard containing the words, "Beware of mock auctions, of swindlers, and pickpockets," the court granted an information at the instance of the owner of the auction room, being satisfied that the auctions were properly conducted, and that the plaintiff could not have an impartial trial by indictment.⁸

College of Physicians.] Another breach of public order may be said to exist in contemptuous conduct to persons in official situations. As, where the defendant was charged with using abusive language to the president and censors of the college of physicians, and likewise with writing libellous letters, together with other enormities. He was found guilty upon an information for these offences.⁹

Every individual affected by a libel need not be mentioned. As in a case where certain trustees of a parish prosecuted the defendants for libel, it was held sufficient to specify some of the parties.¹⁰

¹ Clement v. Chives, 9 B. & C. 172; S. C. 4 Man. & Ry. 127.

² R. v. Pownell, W. Kel. 58. Rule to show cause why an information should not go for writing a letter, and designating the complainant as a scoundrel in the execution of his office.

³ R. v. — cited, Andr. 229.

⁴ R. v. Saunders, Tho. Raym. 201.

⁵ R. v. Waite, 1 Wils. 22.

⁶ 2 Str. 898.

⁷ R. v. —, Hil. 1812, 1 Russ. C. M. 241.

⁸ Ex parte Genese, Collyer's Stat. 365, n.

⁹ R. v. Campbell, 1 Campb. 91. In this case, it was averred that the court to whom the contempt was offered, consisted of certain members of the college, and a byelaw was given in evidence showing that such members were sufficient for the holding of a court; and it was averred that the quorum were present. Lord Ellenborough held this proof sufficient, although it was objected that other members might assist at the court, and that it was not certain that the presence of these particular members was necessary for the formation of a court. As to the offence of practising without a certificate from the apothecaries' company, see 55 Geo. 3, c. 194. R. v. Clapham, 4 C. & P. 29.

¹⁰ R. v. Griffin and others, 2 Barnard. 368.

And it is even enough to mention one person belonging to a company, (as an East India director,) in order to warrant an information.¹ So where it was imputed to the clergy at Durham, that through their agency none of the bells of the churches there tolled upon the occasion of the death of Queen Caroline, the court made the rule for an information absolute, although it was urged that this was the application of an unknown private prosecutor, and there was no affidavit that the publication was untrue.² Indeed, the rule goes further, and will not permit a body of men to be libelled as a nation. For where an account of the Jews was printed tending to make people believe them so barbarous as to burn a woman and her child, because it was begot by a Christian, an information was granted by the court.³ But where a writing inveighs against mankind in general, or against a body to whose detriment no particular prejudice can reasonably arise, or against a class at large, as men of the gown, it is not a libel.⁴ And if the indictment state the libel to have been published to the disparagement of certain liege subjects, &c., to the jurors unknown, judgment will be arrested, for the jurors not knowing the persons who are affected by the libel, it cannot be said to be prejudicial to any one in particular,⁵ although as soon as the general criticism comes to touch upon character, it becomes open to the charge of libel.⁶ So if an advertisement be published in a newspaper bonâ fide, and for the purpose of obtaining information, it is not a libel, although it convey an imputation injurious to an individual.⁷ A printer cannot be convicted of a libel for publishing a writing at the request of a husband for the purpose of reclaiming his wife.⁸ And that is not a libel which is not so without the help of an innuendo.⁹

But this rule concerning unpleasant imputations is not to be carried so far as to fetter society in the exercise of that rightful freedom which enables men to sift the character of their fellows without malice. And, therefore, where a paper was exhibited at a club-room, stating that the plaintiffs were excluded from the room as persons whom the proprietors and annual subscribers did not think it proper to associate with, the court gave judgment for the defendants upon demurrer. For here was no impeachment of the plaintiffs' moral character, nor any imputation beyond the fact of the defendants not deeming the plaintiffs proper persons for their society.¹⁰ So where a person was expelled from a Quaker's

¹ R. v. Jenour, 7 Mod. 400.
"Whereas an East India director has raised the price of green tea to an extravagant rate," &c. See also R. v. Knut, 2 Barnard. 114.

² R. v. Williams, 5 B. & Ald. 595; 1 D. & Ry. 197.

³ R. v. Osbourne. The Jews' case cited; 2 Barnard. 138, 166. See also 2 Swanst. 503, n.

⁴ R. v. Alme and another, 3 Salk. 224.

⁵ R. v. Orme and another, 1 Ld. Raym. 486.

⁶ R. v. Gathercole, 2 Lew. 237.

⁷ Delany v. Jones, 4 Esp. 191.

⁸ R. v. Masters, Say. Rep. 122.

⁹ R. v. Alderton, Id. 280.

¹⁰ 1 Price, 11; 5 Esp. 109.

meeting, the reason being assigned in writing in the books of the society, it was held that no libel had been thereby published.¹

Again, if a fair comment be made upon a place of public amusement, it is no libel. Or upon a literary work,² provided that the writer do not step out of his way to defame or vilify the author's character, in which case the ordinary doctrine of libel will apply.³ Nor is it libellous to criticise a painting, although the word "daub" be used, if the comment be made with honesty and without malice.⁴ Nor is matter of history published without slanderous intention a libel, as where, in ancient times, a clergyman represented one G. as a perjured person, who had great plagues, and who was killed by the hand of God; whereas, in truth, G. had never been plagued, and was himself present at the sermon.⁵ Again, the interests of society are so united as to make it of importance, that the due temperate investigation of a fact should not be deemed libellous. And therefore an advertisement inserted bonâ fide by the defendant respecting the plaintiff, in order to discover if he had another wife living when he married, was held by Lord Ellenborough to be no libel, and the more especially as the publication was at the instigation of the plaintiff's wife.⁶ So a confidential communication, respecting the character of a servant is not a libel,⁷ unless it be tinged with malice.⁸ Nor such a communication to parties, charging the plaintiff, a solicitor, with mismanagement of the concern intrusted to him.⁹ Subject to the same rule are explanations, when made bonâ fide, of an event which has taken place, or of a charge made against a person. As where a paper praying for redress, and containing an imputation of fraud against a captain, was directed to certain officers: it was held, that as there was no intention to asperse the prosecutor, the representation of an injury, drawn up in a proper way, could not afford grounds for a charge of libel.¹⁰ So if A. make an affidavit, and B. deny it by affidavit, saying that A. has sworn falsely against him, the said B., it is not a libel, for there must of necessity be a contradiction.¹¹ So where a person wrote a volume which had for its object the redress of grievances at Greenwich Hospital, the defendant was held dispunishable, although there were sharp reflections in the book upon some public officers, and upon Lord Sandwich in particular.¹² And letters sent to a father respecting the faults of his children, or expostulations in private letters to a

¹ R. v. Hart, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 386.

² See 1 Campb. 355; M. & M. 74.

³ 7 C. & P. 621.

⁴ Thompson v. Shackell, Moo. & M. 187.

⁵ Cro. Jac. 91.

⁶ 4 Esp. 191. See R. v. Elms, Andr. 229, cited; 4 Bing. 162.

⁷ 1 T. R. 110; Bull, N. P. 8; and see 5 Esp. 13.

⁸ 3 B. & P. 587.

⁹ 1 Camp. 267. See 2 Stark. 297.

¹⁰ R. v. Bayley, 5 B. & Ald. 647; 5 B. & Ald. 642.

¹¹ 2 Burr. 807.

¹² R. v. Baillie, Holt on Libel, 173.

friend concerning vices, are not libels.¹ It must, however, be always understood, that such communications or letters as the foregoing must not contain abusive or provoking language, for that at once creates a tendency to disturb the public peace; and, moreover, it is apt to induce the party to disclose it to his friends, and thus produces, to use the words of Lord Bacon, a compulsory publication, for which the defendant must answer.²

Again, no presentment of a grand jury can be a libel, nor articles of the peace exhibited before a justice, for it would be a great discouragement to suitors to subject them to public prosecutions in respect of their applications to a court of justice.³ Nor an affidavit exhibited in a court of justice by a defendant in his own excuse.⁴ So where the president of a court martial in delivering a judgment of acquittal, declared that the prosecutor, in falsely calumniating the accused, had been guilty of conduct highly injurious to the service, Mansfield, C. J., at once nonsuited the plaintiff, and his lordship's direction was held right.⁵ Again, the publication of proceedings in our courts of justice is, in the main, allowable. But the account given must be fair and honest, and if the writer should think fit to add or prefix to the statement any comment or expression of his own, he must do so at his peril. Therefore where the defendant thought fit to head his relation of an action with these words, "shameful conduct of an attorney," it was held, that his pleas of justification were insufficient, because he had not confined himself to that which actually passed in court, and judgment was given for the plaintiff non obstante veredicto.⁶ So where false copies of a prohibition to the bishop of Chester was dispersed throughout the kingdom by one W., a churchwarden, the court held the act in question to be a most seditious libel.⁷ But the rule goes yet further. We have seen⁸ that a defendant was convicted of publishing a blasphemous libel, although she only professed to give an account of her husband's defence to an information for a similar offence. Whence the principle may be obtained, that if any publication of the proceedings of courts of justice be wantonly made, so as to produce an injury to the morals of others, or a disturbance of the public peace, it must be considered as a libel. And the same doctrine will apply to the case of defamatory matter unnecessarily published with reference to particular individuals. It is true, that some doubt at one time existed, whether the fact of the proceedings in question having actually happened in court, were not of itself a sufficient defence,⁹ but this point has been since canvassed. Lord

¹ See 2 Brownl. 151.

² Poph. 140; R. v. Summers and another, 1 Lev. 139; see 12 Rep. 35.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 8.

⁴ R. v. Lediard, Say. Rep. 112.

⁵ 2 New Rep. 341.

⁶ 3 B. & Ald. 702.

⁷ 2 Mod. 119; 8 T. R. 297; S. P. 3 B. & C. 556; 6 Bingh. 213.

⁸ Ante.

⁹ See 1 B. & P. 525; 8 T. R. 298; 4 B. & A. 605; 3 B. & C. 582.

Ellenborough and Grose, J., declared upon one occasion, that the common notion of publishing everything which might transpire in a court of justice must be taken with some grains of allowance.¹ "It often happens," said Lord Ellenborough, "that circumstances necessary for the sake of public justice to be disclosed by a witness in a judicial inquiry are very distressing to the feelings of individuals on whom they reflect; and if such circumstances were afterwards wantonly published, I should hesitate to say that such unnecessary publication was not libellous, merely because the matter had been given in evidence in a court of justice."² And Bayley, J., subsequently said in another case, "It has been argued, that the proceedings of courts of justice are open to publication. Against that, as an unqualified proposition, I enter my protest."³ The learned judge then put the question of blasphemous matter, the reiteration of which might be injurious to the public mind. The case of Mary Carlile followed this direction, where a criminal information was granted against the defendant for publishing, amongst other things, her husband's defence.⁴ And by Abbott, C. J., "there can be no doubt in the mind of the court, or of any person acquainted with the law of the country, that, if in the course of a trial it becomes necessary for the purpose of justice that matters of a defamatory nature should be publicly read, it does not, therefore, follow, that it is competent to any person under the pretence of publishing that trial, to re-utter that defamatory matter."⁵ These observations of the chief justice seem to be general, and calculated to embrace not only blasphemous publications, but any writing whose tendency is unnecessarily injurious or defamatory. It should seem likewise that a want of jurisdiction in a particular court will not make an absolutely groundless prosecution the less a libel, although there have been opinions to the contrary.⁶ Ex parte proceedings, a fortiori, must not be unadvisedly published. As where the printers of the "Sussex Journal" published the evidence connected with a transaction between an excise officer and a smuggler, previous to the trial of the former for murder in shooting the smuggler. The attorney-general having filed an information against the printers, Heath, J., refused to allow their counsel to urge this kind of publication as a defence, for it was ex parte, and made by the prosecutor only. And the learned judge held, that the mere publication of ex parte evidence, before a trial, was of itself highly criminal.⁷ "The necessary tendency of such a libel is to traduce and defame

¹ 7 East, 503.

² Id.

³ 1 M. & S. 281; S. P. by Tindal, C. J.; 6 Bingham, 213.

⁴ R. v. Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 167.

⁵ 3 B. & Ald. 168.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 8.

⁷ R. v. Lee and another, 5 Esp.

123; S. P. R. v. Fisher and others, 2 Campb. 563. And if the matters complained of be not brought before the magistrate in his judicial character, there is still greater reason for calling the publication a libel. 3 B. & C. 24; see 7 East, 493; 4 B. & Ald. 605.

the prosecutor,¹ and to prejudice him in the minds of his countrymen, and to cause it to be believed that he is guilty of the [crime]² laid to his charge, and to deprive him of the benefit of an impartial trial."³ So an extrajudicial affidavit must not be promulgated without due consideration, and the magistrate's clerk who writes out the affidavit will be answerable for the consequences.⁴ So again, a scandalous affidavit, containing imputations upon an individual, or a scandalous petition to the House of Lords, ought not to be published, seeing that they tend to a breach of the public peace.⁵ But simply to state the charge, and the result of the examination, as that the justice directed the defendant to enter into recognizances, is not libellous; for here there is no statement of evidence, nor any comment, but merely the history of the proceedings.⁶ So, again, during a trial, if the judge think fit to interdict the publication of evidence, the defendant may be fined for a contempt of court,⁷ and there can be but little doubt that such publications would be libellous, if they contained reflections upon an individual. So where the defendant published certain evidence given during the sitting of a coroner's jury, together with comments unfavourable to the accused parties, the court did not hesitate to make the rule for a criminal information absolute.⁸ One judge fined the defendant during his defence for disrespectful observations concerning the Christian religion and other indecorous behaviour. The court unanimously upheld the right to fine.⁹

We now come to a very important class of privileged publications, which are those connected with the houses of parliament. But the right of free publication of these proceedings by order of the house in cases where their publicity would have the effect of throwing discredit upon an individual, seems to have been allowed on some occasions, although questioned at other times. In the days of James II., indeed, a former speaker of the House of Commons was compelled to pay no less a sum than 10,000*l.* for publishing Dangerfield's Narrative.¹⁰ But this decision was commented upon by some modern judges with great severity,¹¹ and its authority was at an end. And it had been held previously that the printing of a false and scandalous petition to the House of Commons, which reflected upon the character of an individual, and delivering copies of it to the members of the committee, was

¹ Of the indictment for libel.

² An assault.

³ 2 Campb. 571, by Lord Ellenborough.

⁴ 3 Campb. 212, by Wood, B.; see 8 C. & P. 444. But voluntary affidavits are now forbidden in most cases, by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 62, s. 13.

⁵ R. v. Salisbury, 1 Ld. Raym. 341.

⁶ 3 B. & C. 556.

⁷ R. v. Clement, 4 B. & Ald. 218.

⁸ R. v. Fleet, 1 B. & Ald. 379.

⁹ R. v. Dawson, 4 B. & Ald. 329. Best, J.: The fines were heavy. It is not desirable to fine if it can be avoided.

¹⁰ R. v. Williams, 2 Show. 471; S. C. Comb. 18.

¹¹ By Lord Kenyon, 8 T. R. 296; and Grose, J. Id. 297.

not the subject of the action of libel, though had the delivery been to others than members it would have been otherwise.¹ During the time of Lord Kenyon, the question was again raised, upon the application of Horne Tooke for an information against the defendant, who had published a report of the committee of secrecy of the House of Commons, which contained imputations upon Tooke's character. And although it was attempted to be argued that the House of Commons had no authority to order such a publication as the present, the judges discharged the rule, without calling upon the counsel against it.² Then followed some observations of Lord Ellenborough, in R. v. Creevey, where the lord chief justice remarked that he was not prepared to say that to circulate a copy of that which was prepared for the use of members was legitimate, and that it could not be made the ground of prosecution if it contained matter of injurious tendency to the character of an individual.³

The learning, however, upon this point was exhausted in the famous case of Stockdale v. Hansard. There the defendant pleaded that the defamatory matter charged was part of a document which had been laid before the house by their order, and had thus become part of the proceedings of the house, and which was subsequently printed and published by the defendant under the like order. He likewise stated a resolution of the house, that the power of publishing any of its proceedings which it might deem necessary or conducive to the public interest, was an essential incident to the constitutional functions of parliament, and to the commons in particular. But the court gave judgment for the plaintiff upon demurrer, and they deemed themselves quite competent to determine whether the plea could be supported by virtue of the privileges claimed.⁴ And now, by 3 Vict. c. 9, s. 1, any defendant in any civil or criminal proceeding in respect of any report, paper, votes, or proceedings of either house of parliament, as such house of parliament may deem fit or necessary to be published, and so published by such defendant, or his servant, under the authority of parliament, may bring before the court where such proceeding has been commenced, or before any judge of the same court, (if one of the superior courts at Westminster,) first giving twenty-four hours' notice to the prosecutor or plaintiff, a certificate under the hand of the lord chancellor, or lord keeper, or the speaker of the House of Lords, or the clerk of the parliaments, or the speaker of the House of Commons, or clerk of the same house, stating that such report, or other proceeding, was published by the defendant, or his servant, by order or under the authority of the House of Lords or Commons, together with an affidavit verifying such certificate, upon which the proceedings shall be forthwith stayed, and every writ and process determined. The 2nd section affords the like protection to the

¹ Lake v. King, 1 Saund. 131.

² R. v. Wright, 8 T. R. 293.

³ 1 M. & S. 278.

⁴ 9 Ad. & El. 1; 2 Per. & D. 1.

publication of a copy published in like manner. The 3rd section enables any person to give in evidence under the general issue such report, &c., in answer to any proceeding for publishing an extract from, or abstract of, such report, and to show that such extract or abstract was published bonâ fide and without malice; and if such shall be the opinion of the jury, a verdict of not guilty shall be entered for the defendant. The 4th section contains a proviso, that nothing in the Act contained shall be construed, directly or indirectly, by implication or otherwise, to affect the privileges of parliament in any manner whatsoever. This statute, however, it will be observed, does not authorize a publication of reports or papers independently of the authority of parliament. And, therefore, a person who ventures upon the publication of proceedings without such order will do so at his peril; and if he spread abroad defamatory matter, or remarks calculated to prejudice an individual, he will stand in jeopardy of a prosecution for libel.

By the same rule, a member of the house cannot publish his own speeches without risk, if he have reflected upon character in his address, although within the walls of the house he is protected by his privilege, subject to the rules of that assembly. And thus it was held that Mr. Creevey, who was found guilty upon an indictment for libel for publishing a speech delivered in the House of Commons, and reflecting upon the prosecutor as an informer, could not justify this act, nor mitigate it upon the pleas of having given a correct account and of having done so in consequence of an incorrect statement in his speech in other newspapers. He was subsequently fined 100*l*.¹ The same doctrine attaches to a speech delivered in the House of Lords. Lord Abingdon sent the copy of a speech he made in that house to several of the public papers, and had it printed at his own expense. That speech reflected very much upon the professional character of an attorney, and an information being filed against that nobleman for a libel, he was convicted, and sentenced to fine and imprisonment, and no attempt seems to have been made to disturb the verdict.²

Libels against foreigners of distinction.] There does not appear to be any authority for saying that a writing which reflects upon a private individual, being a foreigner, and residing in a foreign country, is a libel punishable by our law. But the principle seems to be, that if persons abroad were liable to be libelled here with impunity, the pacific relations which should exist between neighbouring states would be in danger of interruption. And Lord Ellenborough laid it down generally, that independently of the consideration above mentioned, to vilify and defame foreigners of distinction must be held libellous.³ Thus, again, to represent a foreign potentate as a tyrant is within the rule just suggested.⁴

¹ R. v. Creevey, 1 M. & S. 273.

³ R. v. Peltier, Holt on Lib. 78.

² R. v. Lord Abingdon, 1 Esp. 226.

⁴ R. v. Vint, 1801; 1 Russ. C. M. 246.

So a writing imputing ignorance to the French ambassador at the British court, and with having used arts to prejudice the interests of the defendant at Versailles, was deemed libellous, and the defendant was convicted.¹ And, again, where the Queen of France was represented as the leader of a faction, and other severe reflections were passed upon her conduct, the court held that the writer was guilty of libel.²

Mode of publication.] The manner of preparing the libel for publication has likewise occasionally come into question, as well as the matter. As if one should copy out a libel, being neither the contriver nor the composer, such a person is guilty equally with the original maker.³ And a sign or picture has even been deemed as offensive a libel as though the abuse had been in writing.⁴ Or a type or figure.⁵ Or the expression of a name by one or two letters, so that no one can mistake the person meant.⁶

So an allegory, a publication in hieroglyphics, a rebus or anagram, may be libellous, and the court shall be allowed to judge of the meaning of such writings as well as other persons.⁷ And words shall be taken not in too lenient a sense, but in that meaning which properly belongs to them, and which they were intended to convey.⁸

But the principal topic of discussion has been whether merely writing a paper which, if published, would be a libel, is of itself a libellous act. And it certainly appears to have been the inclination of the mind of Abbott, C. J., when giving judgment in R. v. Burdett, that it would be so.⁹ The point, indeed, came in question upon that occasion, and was fully discussed, but it became unnecessary to decide it. Holroyd, J., forbore from expressing any opinion upon this difficult question.¹⁰ And Bayley, J., likewise concluded his judgment by carefully abstaining from saying more than that he should be prepared to give his opinion whenever such an exigency shall arise.¹¹ It is not, however, to be supposed that the matter had not undergone much previous discussion. A case is cited by Lord Coke, where a party was convicted of making a libel in writing, and in the same place the expressions "a

¹ R. v. D'Eon, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 510.

² R. v. Lord G. Gordon, Holt, Libel, 77.

³ 2 Salk. 417, 419; 4 B. & Ald. 656.

⁴ See 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 2; 2 Campb. 511. If a picture be referred to in the letter-press, the printer is liable, though another hand than that of the printer composed the picture. 7 C. & P. 369.

⁵ By Lord Ellenborough, Holt on Lib. 114.

⁶ R. v. Hurt, 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 5. And an affidavit of some friend should state that he has read the libel, and understands and believes it to mean the party.

⁷ Holt on Lib. 235, 236.

⁸ See 5 East, 463.

⁹ 4 B. & Ald. 159.

¹⁰ Id. 135.

¹¹ Id. 158; see 3 B. & Ald. 717; 4 B. & Ald. 95, where the arguments are collected.

libeller, or publisher of a libel," are to be found,¹ as though a plain distinction might be made between the two; and another case is likewise mentioned in 3 Inst.,² where a party confessed to the writing, and not to the publishing, and judgment was given against him. Then, again, it was said that the contriver, the procurer, and the malicious publisher were respectively guilty of libel,³ whence it might seem that the writer would be guilty of writing as a distinct offence.⁴

The next case is where a clergyman at Bristol was charged with composing, making, writing, and publishing a libel. The jury acquitted him of the publishing, and found a special verdict, stating that he was the writer, and that a person unknown both to him and to the jury dictated the libel while the clergyman wrote: the court held him to be guilty of libel. They said that he who dictated could not be indicted for making the libel, because he did not write it, so that if the defendant could not be punished, the crime would be without punishment.⁵ In another report of the same case, it is said that the making of a libel is an offence, though it be never published, but it was adjourned, and no judgment appears to have been given.⁶ Very speedily after this the case came again to be considered. The defendant being charged with this misdemeanor, the jury found him guilty of writing and collecting libels, and not guilty as to the residue of the indictment, which would include publishing. And it was moved to arrest the judgment, because the jury had found the defendant guilty of that which was rather a folly than a crime. But the court thought otherwise, and the defendant was fined.⁷ So where it was shown that the manuscript of a libel was in the handwriting of the defendant, and the printing and the publication were proved, but it did not appear that the defendant directed the publication, Littledale, J., left the matter with the jury, upon the authority of R. v. Beare, and Lamb's case, and a verdict of guilty was pronounced.⁸ Again, where the defendant, a printer's servant, assisted in composing a libel for the press, by preparing the type for printing, Raymond, C. J., directed an acquittal as to the publication, and advised the jury to convict the defendant of the printing if they believed the evidence; and he was accordingly found guilty and punished.⁹ And another case was cited by Holroyd, J., in R. v. Burdett, as being to the same effect.¹⁰

Then, on the other hand, it has been said, that R. v. Pain is of doubtful authority, no judgment having been pronounced.¹¹ And R. v. Beare has likewise been arraigned as contrary to the opinions of eminent judges, and the current of subsequent de-

¹ 3 Inst. 174.

² Id.

³ R. v. Lamb, 9 Rep. 59.

⁴ See also S. C. Mo. 813.

⁵ R. v. Paine, Carth. 405.

⁶ 5 Mod. 163.

⁷ R. v. Bear, Carth. 407; cited by Abbott, C. J.; 3 B. & Ald. 719.

⁸ R. v. Lovett, 9 C. & P. 462.

⁹ R. v. Knell, 1 Barnard. 305.

¹⁰ 4 B. & Ald. 136.

¹¹ Id. 100.

cisions,¹ and the reasoning of the judges in that case has been said to be very unsatisfactory.² The opinion of Lord Camden has been cited as adverse to Beare's case, in his judgment given in Entick v. Carrington.³ And the silence of Comyns, C.B., who must have been fully aware of the case of R. v. Beare, has been relied upon as showing that he did not adopt the doctrine, that bare writing, without publication, is a crime.⁴ R. v. Knell has been said to fail in the proof required from it, because in that case the libel had been published afterwards, though not by the defendant, and perhaps the printer might have been considered in the light of an accessory to the publication.⁵ The opinion of Hawkins, in his definition of libel, has also been mentioned as unfavourable to the doctrine now under discussion.⁶ And Blackstone's sentiments have been referred to as hostile to this same doctrine.⁷

It is not very easy to predict the issue of a trial upon this point, although there is reason to believe that the inclination of the judges in R. v. Burdett was in favour of the decision in R. v. Beare, and therefore, friendly to the doctrine that writing without publication is a libel.⁸

Clearly, however, the clerk who draws an indictment, or the student who takes notes in court, cannot be drawn into jeopardy.⁹

However, the mere possession of a libel is not, under many circumstances, an offence. As if one should take a copy of the libel in order to ground ulterior proceedings. So where the defendant's lodgings were searched by virtue of an information, and two libels were found there, the opinion of the court was, that the defendant had not committed the crime charged against him, which was, that he had caused to be framed, printed, and published a scandalous libel. For the possession of a libel, and the non-delivery of it to a magistrate, were only punishable in the star chamber, unless there were a malicious publication, although in the case before us the defendant had not given any account of the libel.¹⁰

Possession, however, of a known libel is evidence of its being published by some one.¹¹ And, therefore, if a letter be written by A. to B. containing scandalous matter, A. is clearly a publisher of the libel.¹² So a count stating the possession of an obscene libel with intent to publish it was held bad.¹³

What shall be said to constitute the offence.] To read a libel is not a publication, nor to hear it read, nor to laugh at it when read,

¹ 3 B. & Ald. 719.

² Id. 720.

³ Id. 727, citing 19 St. T. 1072 (Howell).

⁴ Id.

⁵ Id. 728.

⁶ Id. 730, citing 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 1.

⁷ 3 B. & Ald. 731.

⁸ See likewise R. v. Fitton and another, 2 Keb. 502.

⁹ 3 Campb. 212, Wood, B.; 2 Salk. 417, Holt, C. J.

¹⁰ Anon. 1 Ventr. 18. See 12 Mod. 220.

¹¹ 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 13.

¹² 12 Rep. 35.

¹³ R. v. Rosenstein, 2 C. & P. 414.

but if the hearer or reader should repeat it in the hearing of others, or should read it aloud to others with a knowledge of its libellous character, he then becomes guilty of an unlawful publication. "For every one who shall be convicted ought to be contriver, procurer, or publisher, knowing it to be a libel."¹ Hawkins, however, doubts whether the repetition of a libel in merriment is not a publication, on the ground that jests are not to be endured, and that the injury to the reputation of the party grieved is in no way lessened by the merriment of him who makes so light of it.² And if the defendant be proved to have lent or shown the writing to another, he is guilty,³ unless he have done so by mistake.⁴ So if he publicly commend it.⁵ And it seems that there must be an openness or publicity in the transaction, which will not be satisfied by a private reading in the presence of a friend, although that is certainly a communication of the libel from A. to B.⁶ The plaintiff was made the subject of a caricature, and the evidence was that a witness went to the defendant's house to see the picture, when the defendant pointed out the figure of the plaintiff, together with that of other persons ridiculed. Lord Ellenborough held that this was not a publication.⁷ But where a libellous picture was publicly exhibited, Lord Ellenborough admitted the declarations of spectators with reference to particular figures to prove the resemblances of these figures to the parties libelled.⁸

Another ingredient necessary to constitute the offence of libel is the evil intention of the party. This is usually a matter of inference drawn from the libel itself.⁹ If in a public controversy where both parties publish matters concerning each other, one gets beyond the other in severity, saying, as to his opponent, that malice "overcame his sense of truth and honesty," the question of malice arises. Still these expressions, however rash, were only natural; they lost the malicious taint, and were privileged.¹⁰ And it is observable that the law will imply malice when the libel is without excuse. As where the defendant wrote, "It is with the deepest concern we have to state that the malady under which His Majesty labours is of an alarming description. It is from authority we speak." The jury asked whether malicious intention was necessary to constitute a libel, and were answered by Abbott, C. J., that a man must be intended to do what his act is calculated to effect, upon which they pronounced a verdict of guilty, and the court upheld this ruling of the judge.¹¹

¹ R. v. Lamb, 9 Rep. 59. See 5 Mod. 165; 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 13.

² 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 14.

³ 1 Russ. C. M. 249.

⁴ 5 Mod. 167.

⁵ R. v. Eades, 2 Show. 468.

⁶ See 5 Mod. 165, in marg.

⁷ 3 Campb. 323.

⁸ 2 Campb. 512.

⁹ See in R. v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 2667. R. v. Topham, 4 T. R. 126. R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 95.

¹⁰ Hibbs v. Wilkinson, 1 Fost. & F. 608, Erle, J.

¹¹ R. v. Harvey and another, 2 B. & C. 257; S. C. 3 D. & Ry. 464. See 5 M. & Ry. 251.

Slander.] Next as to indictable slander.¹ It has been laid down that an action for slander may be maintained when the words impute to a man a crime for which he is punishable by law.² As that he has an infectious disorder; or when they speak offensively of him in his office, profession or business.³ But an indictment or information cannot be successfully prosecuted for words, unless they directly tend to a breach of the peace, as if they convey a challenge to fight.⁴ A magistrate may, indeed, bind over to the good behaviour a person who abuses him to his face whilst he is in the execution of his office, or he may commit him for contempt, but neither an indictment nor any other criminal proceeding can be enforced for mere words.⁵ And even where it is alleged that words import a challenge, or other breach of the peace, the matter must be very clear. The defendant said, "this is no justice of the peace's business, you shall not try this matter, have a care what you do, I have blood in me, if I had you in another place." He was convicted upon an indictment at the sessions, but upon arrest of judgment, the court said, that these words did not convey any necessary intendment of a challenge.⁶ And in another report of the same case,⁷ it is said that judgment was arrested for another reason,—because the indictment failed to allege the charge in respect of which the defendant spoke the words in the first instance, since it might not have been a matter within the jurisdiction of justices, and then it could not be a misdemeanor to speak in deprivation of an authority. Again: "your worship speaks to me here, but you dare not do so in another place." An indictment for these words was quashed on motion.⁸

A magistrate is not liable to punishment for words spoken in the execution of his office.⁹

Defences to libel and slander.] The law of libel has been materially changed by 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96.

By sect. 1, the offer of an apology is admissible in evidence in mitigation of damages.

By sect. 2, in actions against proprietors or publishers of newspapers, it may be pleaded that the insertion was made without malice and without gross negligence, and that they had published, or had offered to publish, a full apology. Also, the defendant

¹ Slander and defamation are the same. Therefore the court would not quash a writ de ex cap., because the charge was in the disjunctive for "slander or defamation." R. v. Kent, W. Kel. 132.

² But not an indictment. R. v. Cave, 2 Ld. Raym. 857.

³ B. & C. 33; by Bayley, J., with reference to actions, which seem in this respect to correspond with indictments.

⁴ 2 Salk. 697; 3 Salk. 190. See other instances, Gregory v. Reg. (in error), 15 Jur. 74.

⁵ See post, as to libels and slanders concerning magistrates.

⁶ R. v. Nun, 10 Mod. 186.

⁷ Gilb. Rep. 36, 40.

⁸ R. v. Walden, 12 Mod. 414.

⁹ R. v. Skinner, Lofft. 55. But the court will censure any intemperate language which he may happen to make use of in answering a criminal information. R. v. Burn, 7 Ad. & El. 190.

may pay into court a sum of money by way of amends for the injury sustained.

By sect. 3, to publish or threaten to publish any libel, or propose to abstain from printing, &c., or directly or indirectly to offer to prevent publication of a libel with a view to extort, or to obtain any office of profit or trust, is punishable with imprisonment, with or without hard labour, not exceeding three years. But the law concerning threatening letters, or writings, is left unaltered. The evidence was that an information would be laid against the prosecutor for an offence against the post-horse duties; that the defendants could and would prevent it upon payment of so much money. This evidence was held insufficient to warrant a conviction under the section.¹

By sect. 4, if any person shall publish any defamatory libel knowing it to be false, he shall suffer imprisonment not exceeding two years, and may also be fined at the discretion of the court.

And if the knowledge of falsehood be not charged, but yet if such a libel should appear, the punishments by sect. 5 shall be fine or imprisonment, or both, the imprisonment not to exceed one year.

By sect. 6, the truth of the matters charged may be inquired into, but they shall not serve as a defence unless their publication were for the public benefit. And the defendant must, in that case, plead his justification and the matter of public benefit, and why beneficial. Upon this the prosecutor may reply generally. Then, upon conviction, the court may take into consideration whether the defendant's guilt were aggravated or mitigated by his plea. Then follow provisos that without such plea the truth of the matters cannot be inquired into; that the defendant may plead not guilty in addition, and that nothing shall prejudice any defence under his plea of not guilty, which may now be made in any action, or upon any indictment or information for defamatory words or libel.

By sect. 7, the defendant may, in the case of a publication by an agent, prove that it was so made without his authority, and not for want of due care and caution on his part.

The 8th section gives the defendant costs upon an acquittal for a private libel.²

And by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 75, s. 2, every plea filed under the 2nd section, above mentioned, without payment of amends into court, shall be deemed a nullity.

Ignorance.] Ignorance is no answer, for it is the duty of every man to be cognizant of the law. And if a printer should think fit to suffer a paper to proceed from his press, he must take the responsibility of its contents.³ So, if the libel should come from a bookseller's shop, although there be no proof of privity, knowledge, consent, approbation, or malus animus in the bookseller, the evidence against him is conclusive.⁴ As if a servant should sell it.⁵

¹ R. v. Yates, 6 Cox, 441.

⁴ R. v. Almon, 5 Burr. 2686.

² Scotland is excluded: sect. 10.

⁵ R. v. Dodd, 2 Sess. Ca. 33.

³ Lofft. 544, 780.

For "nothing could be more easy than to publish the most virulent papers with the greatest security, if the concealing the purport of them from an illiterate publisher, would make him safe in dispersing them."¹ It is, indeed, said that one of the ingredients of libel is the publication of it knowing it to be a libel, but the law must, of necessity, presume that knowledge on the part of the master, where a libellous paper issues forth at the hands of his servant. Although it may be added, that this liability extends only to transactions in the way of trade. So that, where a customer sent back a bill which had been made out by the defendant's daughter, who returned it with a letter in which the supposed libel was contained, the court would not set aside a nonsuit which the judge had directed. The matter did not happen in the regular course of trade, and this writing could not be considered as coming within the scope of the defendant's authority delegated to his daughter, which was to write bills, and not libels.² There may be grounds for extenuation in a case of ignorance, but if a master so little attends to the conduct of his apprentice or servant, as to become, however innocently, the depository of a libel, he must, according to law, bear his share of the consequences. The rule is exactly the same with regard to the proprietorship of a newspaper. It had been, in the time of Lord Kenyon, the old and received law for above a century, and it was held, therefore, to be no answer to a criminal information, that the publication of a newspaper was entirely conducted by the servants of the defendant.³ So, where a proprietor of the "Morning Journal" lived at a distance of 100 miles from London, and took no part in the publication of the newspaper, and was in fact confined to his house by illness when the paper complained of appeared, Lord Tenterden held him criminally answerable, and he was found guilty together with others.⁴ If, indeed, a party were shut up in close custody, so that he could not possibly investigate the conduct of his servants, it might, indeed, be matter of justification.⁵

Another ground for appealing to the court is, that the author is prepared to give himself up in that character. This is not necessarily a discharge of the printer and publisher, but it will weigh with the court. Therefore, where an attachment was moved for against the publisher of a libel, upon his showing a letter, whereby it appeared that one M. was the author, time was given him to ¹ 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 10. R. v. Nutt, 1 Barnard. 306; Fitzg. 47, where the attorney-general is said to have declined, under similar circumstances, to accept a special verdict. R. v. Strahan, 5 Burr. 2689, cited by Aston, J.; also Moo. & M. 436.

² Harding v. Greening, 8 Taunt. 42.

³ R. v. Walter, 3 Esp. 21.

R. v. Cuthell, M. & M. 435. R. v. Williams, Lofft. 759.

⁴ R. v. Gutch and others, Moo. & M. 433. But he was discharged upon his own recognizance. Id. 438. Ignorance may be a ground for mitigating the punishment. R. v. Williams, Lofft. 759.

⁵ R. v. Woodfall, Lofft. 780; 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 10, n.

make out the proof. And upon the appearance and confession of the author, the rule against the publisher, with whom the printer was joined, was discharged.¹ But it is no defence that there are additions to the alleged facts which the person who requested another to write the libel has communicated, especially when the defendant has expressed his approbation of it.²

Former publications.] Neither can the impunity of other publishers of the same libel be relied upon as matter of defence. It was suggested on the behalf of a defendant that persons had published a paper ten years ago, similar to that which was the subject of the prosecution; but the opinion of Lord Kenyon, C. J., and Ashhurst, J., were unfavourable to the objection, whilst Buller and Grose, JJ., thought they could not entertain it at all, because it did not appear upon the judge's report.³ The defendant received sentence of fine and imprisonment.⁴ And by Lord Kenyon, "the consequence of admitting that evidence would have been, that these persons, who were not only not called upon, but could not have had any opportunity to defend themselves against this charge, might have been pronounced to be guilty."⁵

Truth of libel.] Neither is the alleged truth of the libel any defence to an indictment or information, notwithstanding 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96; for the greater appearance there is of truth in any malicious invective, so much the more provoking it is.⁶ Unless, indeed, the writing be pleaded, and proved to be under sect. 6 a public benefit. So that whether the party libelled be a person of good or ill fame is quite immaterial.⁷ There are, in fact, but two questions in general for the consideration of the jury. 1st, whether the defendant has published the libel; 2ndly, whether the innuendoes be true.⁸ The opinion of the House of Lords upon the passing of the Libel Bill, was decidedly adverse to the reception of truth as a defence.⁹ And where the defendant wished to show in ¹ R. v. Wiatt, 8 Mod. 123. Where the author confessed the libel, "errors of the press and some small variations excepted," Pratt, C. J., admitted the evidence, saying, that he should put it upon the defendant to show that there were material variations. R. v. Hall, 1 Str. 416.

² R. v. Cooper, 1 Cox, 266.

³ But both Buller and Grose, JJ. were manifestly hostile to the objection, so that it may fairly be said to have been overruled by the full court.

⁴ R. v. Holt, 5 T. R. 436.

⁵ T. R. 433. So was R. v. Dr. Newman, Dears. 85, 98; 22 L. J.

Q. B. 156; 1 El. & Bl. 268, under 6 & 7 Vict. c. 96, s. 6.

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 6.

⁷ 5 Rep. 125; Hob. 253.

⁸ R. v. The Dean of St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428, n. by Ld. Mansfield; 4 Doug. 73. R. v. Withers, 3 T. R. 428, by Ld. Kenyon. This defendant, who attempted to excuse himself on the ground of his having been told that the composition in question was libellous, and of his having published it in order to negative the assertion of libel, was held to have aggravated rather than mitigated his guilt. R. v. Shipley, 4 Dougl. 73.

⁹ See 4 B. & Ald. 182.

answer to an indictment for libel, that some of the king's subjects had been killed and wounded by the dragoons in a conflict at Manchester, the bench were unanimous in their judgment that evidence of that nature was properly rejected.¹ And Abbott, C. J., mentioned the case of R. v. Horne, where Lord Mansfield allowed the defendant to call witnesses, as affording no ground for continuing such a course,² but, on the contrary, said the chief justice, "such an instance can, in my opinion, be of no avail against the current of prior and subsequent practice."³

But it is observable, that although the tender of the truth of allegations would not answer an indictment or information, it would be a ground for refusing an information, and leaving the party to his remedy by indictment, that the charges in the libel are not denied.⁴ So that it was customary, upon moving for a criminal information, to produce an affidavit repelling upon oath the truth of the imputations.

It seems that the repetition of oral slander is not justifiable, unless there be some good and reasonable cause for so doing, and, à fortiori, not so, if the repeating proceed from a bad motive.⁵ And even if the name of the author be communicated at the time, the party is still without excuse, unless he have a good ground for reiterating the matter in question.⁶ And in this sense, with this qualification, the passage in Lord Coke should be understood where he says, that one may justify slander, by revealing the name of the original calumniator.⁷

Again, irony is no defence. It is sufficient to say upon this point, that ironical observations of any description will not guard the offender from the consequences of his slanderous disguise. As if one who is known to be a statesman, but no soldier, should be held up as worthy of imitation for his courage, or an officer for his learning, or any other quality in precise opposition to the requisites of a soldier.⁸ If the defendant do not mean to scandalize the prosecutor by his irony, he should show it at the trial.⁹ For if this were not a crime, the defendant might, by contraries, libel any person without punishment.¹⁰ So, where the defendant said of one H., that he would not play the Jew nor the hypocrite, it was considered to mean an ironical imputation of vain glory against H., and the offender was fined 500*l*.¹¹ So, to sing songs from a paper jestingly, to the discredit of the prosecutor's children, is slanderous, and punishable as a libel.¹² So a libel may be published by asking questions.¹³

¹ R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 95; Id. 314. See 2 M. & Ry. 152.

² 4 B. & Ald. 182.

³ Id.

⁴ R. v. Bickerton, 1 Str. 498.

⁵ See 4 B. & Ald. 614, 615.

⁶ Id. 615, by Holroyd, J.

⁷ 12 Rep. 134; 4 B. & Ald. 614, by Holroyd, J.

⁸ See 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 4.

⁹ R. v. Dr. Brown, 11 Mod. 86; The defendant gave every lord a character ironically.

¹⁰ Holt's Ca. 425, by Holt, C. J.

¹¹ R. v. Hicks, Hob. 215. See 2 Str. 898.

¹² R. v. Benfield and another, 2 Burr. 980.

¹³ R. v. Gathercole, 2 Lew. C. C. 255.

There are, however, some circumstances which will justify a person in doing that which, strictly speaking, is in law the publication of a libel. As if A. should deliver a libel by mistake out of his study, not having written it, but merely endowed with the possession of it.¹ So if A. should deliver a letter without a knowledge of its contents, or deliver one paper instead of another.² But it lies upon the defendant to prove these facts to the satisfaction of the jury.

Proceedings.] The most open form of proceeding in cases of criminal prosecutions for libel is by indictment. That course is free to all the king's subjects. Another remedy is by information.³ But in this case it is customary for the court to require the prosecutor to deny upon oath the matter of the libel. So that where it was imputed to an apothecary that he had personated Dr. C., a physician, and had written, and taken his fee, Pratt, C. J., said that although truth was no justification, yet that as the apothecary did not pretend to deny this fact, there was sufficient cause to prevent the interposition of the court in an extraordinary manner, and the rule was discharged.⁴ And if the court should see cause for believing that the charge in question is true, they will probably abstain from granting the extraordinary remedy.⁵ But there are certain circumstances which form an exception to a rule otherwise invariable, and which the court will not depart from without much reason. As if the person libelled should live abroad at a great distance.⁶ Or if the imputation should be general,⁷ or charge treasonable practices and designs against the prosecutor. As where the Duke of Richmond was represented as having opposed in his speeches in parliament any increase of the military strength of the kingdom, for the purpose of advancing the interests of France. In this case the court hesitated very much, and the matter was very fully discussed. The duke only swore that he believed himself to be the person meant in the libel, and that it contained false, scandalous, and malicious aspersions and insinuations against him, but did not deny specifically the charges. The rule was made absolute.⁸ So, where it was said that the Duke of Athol and his family were held in such general abhorrence in the Isle of Man that if he should succeed in obtaining an Act then pending in parliament, a revolt would be occasioned, the court held that no affi-

¹ 5 Mod. 167.

² R. v. Nutt, 4 T. R. 127, cited by Lord Kenyon.

³ It will not be granted for a libel concerning disputed matters in trade. R. v. Roberts, 1 Barnard. 90. But in a case of a charge of felony it was granted. R. v. Lofeild, 2 Barnard. 128. See also Id. 84.

⁴ R. v. Bickerton, 1 Str. 498. R. v. Beharrel, cited in marg.

R. v. Miles, Dougl. 284. See Id. 387 (a) for other cases; also R. v. Webster, 3 T. R. 388; 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 6, n.; R. v. Taylor, 1 Jurist, 53; R. v. Wright, 2 Ch. Rep. 162.

⁵ R. v. Draper, 3 Smith, 396.

⁶ 1 Dougl. 389.

⁷ Id. 390.

⁸ R. v. Haswell, Id. 387.

davit from the duke was necessary.¹ So in the case of a letter imputing unnatural practices, although the complainant did not positively swear to his innocence.² The court will refuse an information if it appear that slanderous words concerning the defendant have been used in the affidavit.³

An attachment for libel likewise has been granted.⁴

The rule for a criminal information in a case of libel must be moved for before the expiration of the second term after the publication, and within a reasonable time during the term, so that cause may be shown within that term. But the prosecutor may say that he had not knowledge of the libel so as to enable him to make an earlier application.⁵ It was held too late in a matter concerning the vindication of character to apply in January respecting a libel published in May, the person libelled not having spoken to the publisher about the matter till November, although he was aware of the libel in July.⁶

A rule for a criminal information for libel being enlarged on condition of the defendant pleading immediately in the event of its being made absolute, the defendant was deemed to be entitled to reasonable time for that purpose.⁷ The court will not restrain a proceeding by indictment because an information is pending for the same libel. Every copy of a libel, when published, subjects the defendant, in strictness, to a distinct prosecution.⁸

Surety for the peace or good behaviour may likewise be required in some cases, especially where the libel has a tendency to disturb the peace. But a justice must be careful, for if he acts too hastily, he may be found wanting in discretion, although he may escape the consequences of the action.⁹

Indictment.] We shall not attempt to go through the various indictments for libel. The common count charges that A. B. contriving to injure the reputation of C. D. and bring him into ridicule, with force and arms, and of malice, did unlawfully write¹⁰ a certain libel of and concerning C. D., containing the false, scandalous, malicious, and defamatory words and matter following.

¹ R. v. Haswell, Dougl. 391, n.

² R. v. Dennison, Loft. 148.

³ R. v. Byrne, 2 Nev. & P. 152; 7 Ad. & El. 190. And again, if a publication be not sworn to, although the affidavits on the other side admit the publication. R. v. Baldwin, 3 Nev. & P. 342, where a statement that the defendant did print and insert a libel in a certain newspaper, a copy of which is annexed, was held insufficient for this purpose. 8 Ad. & El. 168.

⁴ R. v. Wiatt, 8 Mod. 123.

⁵ R. v. Jollie, 1 Nev. & M. 483;

S. C. 4 B. & Adol. 867. See R. v. Hartley, Id. 869, n.

⁶ R. v. Murray, 1 Jurist, 37.

⁷ R. v. Muntz, 2 Jurist, 538.

⁸ R. v. Carlisle, 1 Ch. Rep. 451. An affidavit relating to several indictments must have as many stamps as there are cases to which the affidavit applies. S. C.

⁹ Haylock v. Sparke, 1 El. & Bl. 471; 22 L. J. M. C. 77.

¹⁰ It must not be said "or cause to be written." R. v. Brereton, 8 Mod. 330.

[Here the libel is accurately set out with innuendoes if necessary,¹ which said libel A. B. afterwards sent to one E. F., to the great damage and disgrace of C. D., and against the peace, &c.]

The words "with force and arms" were not necessary,² nor needs the libel to be called false, for the falsehood need not be proved.³ But the words, "of and concerning," cannot be set aside. An indictment charged the defendants with libelling the mayor of Colchester, and the essence of the writing was, that the mayor had practised corruption in granting a licence to retail beer. It was said in the prefatory part that the defendants intended to vilify the mayor, and the innuendoes applied the various portions of the libel to the prosecutor, and concluded to the injury and disgrace of the mayor, &c., but the count neglected to state that the publication was of and concerning the said mayor. It was moved to arrest the judgment upon the authority of R. v. Alderton,⁴ where it had been held that the innuendoes could not supply the want of the averment that the libel had been published of and concerning the prosecutors in that case. And a case in Strange was cited where a similar decision had taken place in the case of an action.⁵ And the court made the rule absolute, Lord Ellenborough observing that R. v. Alderton contained everything except the material words, "of and concerning."⁶ But having placed the words "of and concerning" on the record, the prosecutor will not fail if he does not express all his innuendoes in the most certain manner. As where the defendant was charged with having libelled certain troops, and the only innuendo was applied to the word "dragoons," meaning the said troops,—it was held sufficient without defining more particularly what troops were meant. So the court will expound a libel laid to have been published of and concerning the government, in its plain and ordinary sense, although it be not expressly averred that any act referred to was done by the government or its order.⁷ And "of and concerning" is a sufficient averment that "a false and scandalous libel was published of and concerning His Majesty's government and the employment of his troops," without any further allegations as to the subject matter by way of innuendo or otherwise.⁸

The libel itself must be accurately set forth, and it seems that there are two ways of doing this. One by the tenor, in which the pleader undertakes to set out the words with the greatest precision, ¹ But the technical expressions, "in these words," are not necessary, R. v. Browne, 1 Freem. 524; see Id. 456. Part of the libel may be set out without the residue.

² R. v. Burks, 7 T. R. 4, where several cases were referred to in which vi et armis had been omitted. Trem. 61; R. v. Tutchin, 2 Show. 468; 5 St. Tr. 527, &c.

³ 7 T. R. ut supra.

⁴ Say. Rep. 280; S. C. cited more correctly by De Grey, C. J.; Cowp. 686.

⁵ 2 Str. 934.

⁶ R. v. Marsden, 4 M. & S. 164.

⁷ R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 314.

⁸ R. v. Horne, Cowp. 672. See also Horne v. R. (in error). 4 Bro. P. C. 368. See also Gregory v. Reg. (in error), 15 Jurist, 74.

and the libel given in evidence must agree exactly with that set out in the information; the other, by stating that the defendant made a writing containing, inter alia,¹ the words set out, in which case it would be necessary to set out those only which are material, and a variance would not be fatal unless the sense were altered.² In this manner we must understand, as Mr. Starkie expresses himself, the meaning of Lord Holt, where he says, that if a libel be described by its sense, exactness in words is not so material,³ and not that it is unnecessary to state the words themselves.⁴ Therefore, although, "according to the tenor and effect following" will be sufficient; to say—"according to the effect," without more, would not be good, for the court must judge of the words themselves, and not of the construction which the prosecutor puts upon them.⁵ Therefore, where the libel was recited with the word nor instead of not, the indictment was held faulty.⁶ But a single letter wrongly inserted or omitted, and which does not alter the sense, will not vitiate.⁷ Thus, an indictment for libel so far differs from one prosecuted for slander, inasmuch as words cannot be set out according to their tenor, there being no original to copy from. Words are transient, and vanish in the air as soon as spoken, and therefore an identity is not required;⁸ but nevertheless, this sentence must be understood with the qualification, that certain of the words spoken must be proved and found.⁹ Thus, when the defendant was indicted for speaking ill words to a justice, and obstructing him in the execution of his office, the count was held bad for want of adding what the words were,¹⁰ or how he was obstructed.¹¹ And it seems, moreover, that the charge could not have been sustained unless the slander tended to a breach of the peace.¹² So where the indictment charged that the defendant had said, he is a broken-down justice, a perjured justice, &c., but the proof was that the defendant said, "You are a broken-down justice," &c., the court gave judgment for the defendant, although Lord Kenyon had held at the trial that it was sufficient to prove the substance of the words. And Buller, J., added, that though there was a case in Strange in support of his lordship's opinion, it had been overruled in Lord Mansfield's time, and that he himself had known a variety of nonsuits upon the same objection.¹³ So, where a libel

¹ Where the term "inter alia" was used, but the whole libel was set out except "finis," the court would not arrest the judgment, saying that the time for taking advantage of the objection, if, indeed, it were at all available, was at the trial. R. v. Johnson, 2 Show. 488.

² Stark. Cr. P. 127.

³ 2 Salk. 661.

⁴ Stark. Cr. P. ut supra.

⁵ R. v. Bear, 2 Salk. 417; 1 Ld. Raym. 415, citing R. v. Fuller,

R. v. Young, and Ford v. Bennet, to the same effect. R. v. Sacheverell, 9 Ann. Stark. C. P. 124.

⁶ R. v. Drake, 1 Salk. 660; S. C. 3 Salk. 224; S. C. Holt's Ca. 348, 425.

⁷ Stark. C. P. 132.

⁸ 3 Salk. 225.

⁹ 2 Salk. 661.

¹⁰ R. v. How, 2 Str. 699.

¹¹ S. C. 2 Sess. Ca. 31.

¹² Ante.

¹³ R. v. Berry, 4 T. R. 217.

began, "my sarcastic friend ΜΩΡΟΣ"—and the count omitted the word ΜΩΡΟΣ, it was held defective.¹ So where a libel in a foreign language was translated, instead of being set forth in the original, the court arrested the judgment.²

These observations, however, upon the indictment in cases of libel are not inconsistent with the rule that no more of the writing or of words need be set out than will make the charge good.³ If the defendant would rely on other passages of the publication in order to qualify it, it is for him to do so by his own evidence, and this brings us to consider the mode of introducing two different passages in the same count. This may be done by saying, "In a certain part of the said libel there was and is contained," &c., and "in a certain other part of which said libel there was and is contained," &c.⁴ It is unsafe to depart from such a form as the above, for if passages not continuous in the original libel are set forth continuously in pleading, it is at the peril of the prosecutor, since any alteration of the sense would produce an acquittal.⁵ If the libellous quality of the writing be derived from circumstances extrinsic of the words, the extrinsic facts with reference to which the writing becomes criminal should first be stated. There should then be an averment that the libel relates to these facts, and lastly, innuendoes should be introduced, connecting such parts of the libel as require explanation with the introductory facts previously exhibited upon the record.⁶ So that where proper innuendoes are introduced, the defendant may be convicted of libel although he should not have expressed himself distinctly as to the persons libelled. Thus, by the word "bishops," the bishops of England were understood,⁷ and by "ministers," the ministers of the king of England,⁸ and by certain feigned names members of the royal family may be designated.⁹ The pretender was considered to be pointed at under the appellation of the "little gentleman on the other side of the water."¹⁰ So the "young Sophi,"¹¹ or the "chevalier."¹² So the "navy" was construed to mean the "royal navy," by means of an innuendo.¹³

In setting out the intent, care must be taken to make it consonant with common sense. It is reasonable to suppose that a libel directed to C. concerning B. might bring B. into discredit, but to

¹ Tabart v. Tipper, 1 Campb. 353, cor. Lord Ellenborough.

² 6 T. R. 162. See also R. v. Peltier, Holt, Libel, 78.

³ See Cro. Jac. 407; 8 Mod. 330; Stark. Cr. P. 129, 131.

⁴ See 1 Campb. 353, by Lord Ellenborough.

⁵ Id.

⁶ Stark. Cr. P. 132; Cowp. 684, by De Grey, C. J. See also 8 East, 427; Stark. C. P. 134, 135.

⁷ R. v. Baxter, 3 Mod. 69.

⁸ Stark. C. P. 136.

⁹ R. v. Clerk, 1 Barnard. K. B. 304.

¹⁰ Anon. 11 Mod. 99; "Innuendo the Prince of Wales," Holt, C. J., thought the meaning clear without the help of this innuendo. Id.

¹¹ 1 Barnard. ut supra.

¹² R. v. Mathews, 9 St. Tr. 679.

¹³ Stark. Cr. P. 137, citing 5 St. Tr. 528.

send a writing to B. himself may not always have that result. Therefore, where the defendant was charged with sending a libel to the prosecutor with intent to injure him in his profession of solicitor, Abbott, J., held that the indictment could not be supported. The intention might have been laid to provoke the prosecutor, and excite him to break the peace, but the libel sent, as this had been, direct to the prosecutor, could not have the effect of disparaging him as a professional man in the eyes of the world, who knew nothing of the publication.¹ Where, however, the letter, on the face of it, denotes a tendency to break the peace, the mere sending is a publication.² The learned judge also said, that where a libel is sent to the wife, it ought to be alleged as sent with intent to disturb the domestic harmony of the parties.³

Where an indictment concluded in malum exemplum inhabitantium, it was adjudged ill.⁴

Evidence.] We have seen, that two material points are in issue, the publication, and the truth of the innuendoes.⁵ If it be designed to charge the publication of a libellous letter to an individual, proof should be given of the delivery of the letter to the prosecutor.⁶ If there be a difficulty as to the handwriting, persons cognizant of the hand of the writer should be brought forward. But it is not competent to compare the libel in question with other writings supposed to have been the work of the same person. Comparison of hands is not evidence, although an individual accustomed to penmanship may be called for the prosecution to show that the paper tendered in evidence was the production of a feigned hand.⁷ However, letters may be read in explanation of other writings without proof of handwriting. As where the charge was for publishing a libellous placard: the prosecutor had received anonymous letters, and the placard was published concerning them. It was asked in this placard, whether the prosecutor had not received warning, and he understood that to refer to the letters, and said, he should not have understood the placard but for the letters. Upon this they were allowed to be read as above stated.⁸ Proof of the delivery of a sealed letter is evidence of publication, other circumstances being brought home to the writer, although the letter be opened in another county than that wherein it was originally delivered.⁹ So, where a libel in the defendant's handwriting was duly traced by the post from London to Scotland, and was produced at the trial with the proper post marks and the seal broken, it was held evidence of publication.¹⁰ So,

¹ R. v. Wegener, 2 Stark. 245.

² R. v. Brooke, 7 Cox, 251.

³ 2 Stark. ut supra.

⁴ R. v. Baker, 1 Mod. 35.

⁵ R. v. Withers, see 3 T. R. 428.

⁶ See R. v. Sir B. Hicks, Poph. 139. R. v. Summers and another,

1 Lev. 139. Phillips v. Jansen,

2 Esp. 624; 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 11.

⁷ R. v. Cator, 4 Esp. 117.

⁸ R. v. Fane, 5 C. & P. 213.

⁹ R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 95. See also R. v. Johnson, 7 East, 65, and post.

¹⁰ Warren v. Warren, 1 Cr. M. & R. 250.

where the defendant directed a letter to Berkshire, which the prosecutor received in Middlesex, the court held the publication sufficient, for the defendant having once put the paper into circulation must be taken to have published it in that place in which it was delivered to the person to whom it was addressed.¹ But the Islington twopenny-post mark was held insufficient to prove that the letter had been put into the post in Middlesex, because the post mark might have been forged.²

Proof that a libel has been stolen seems to be no evidence of publication.³

What a person said at a meeting nearly a year before the publishing of the supposed libel was not allowed to be asked in cross-examination.⁴ A. and B. were indicted separately for publishing the same libel; by consent, the evidence on A.'s trial was read over on B.'s trial from the judge's notes, B. being allowed to cross-examine the witnesses.⁵ It is a sufficient publication to send a letter to a wife accusing her husband of felony, and threatening to expose him if he did not return certain goods.⁶

Where the libel complained of has been published in a newspaper, the statute 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, must be consulted in order to facilitate the mode of proceeding against the offender. By sect. 6 of that Act, no person shall print or publish, nor cause, &c. any newspaper before there shall be delivered to the commissioners of stamps and taxes, or to the proper officer at the head office for stamps in Westminster, Edinburgh, or Dublin respectively, or to the distributor of stamps or other proper officer appointed by the said commissioners for the purpose in the district where the newspaper is intended to be published, a declaration by the proprietor, setting forth the correct title of the newspaper, and of the printing house thereof, and likewise of the house where it is intended to be published, together with the true name, addition, and place of abode of the printer, publisher and proprietor, whether such proprietor be resident here or abroad. Should there be more than two proprietors, exclusively of the printer and publisher, the names, &c. of two resident proprietors, whose interests shall not be respectively less than those of any other resident proprietor, together with the amount of their interests, must be inserted, and such declaration shall be signed by the printer and publisher, and by all the proprietors resident in the kingdom. A fresh declaration must be made whenever the proprietorship of the newspaper becomes changed so as to alter the proportionate amount of the shares; or whenever any change takes place with respect to the

¹ R. v. Watson, 1 Campb. 215.

² R. v. Watson, 1 Campb. 215. See, however, R. v. Plummer, Russ. & Ry. 264. And it was clearly held in the case just cited, that the words "post paid, 2s." were not evidence of there being an inclosure.

³ 3 Ch. Burn. 730. Carrying a libel to the printer seems, under some circumstances, to be no publication. R. v. Eden, Loft. 72.

⁴ R. v. Collins, 9 C. & P. 456.

⁵ R. v. Lovett, Id. 462.

⁶ Wenman v. Ash, 22 L. J. M. C. 199.

printer, publisher, or proprietor; or whenever the title of the paper is altered, or the printing office or place of publication; or whenever such commissioners as aforesaid shall require such a declaration to be made, signed, and delivered, after due notice to the printer, publisher, or proprietors, or at the place of printing or publication; and such declaration may be made before any commissioner or officer of stamp duties, or other person appointed by the commissioners, who are authorized to receive such declaration. To make a false declaration is a misdemeanor. By sect. 7, a penalty of 50*l.* is imposed for a default in not making the declaration above required. The 8th section directs, that the declaration shall be filed, and that a certified copy shall be admitted as conclusive evidence against the parties who have made it, unless it be proved that any such person became lunatic, or had signed a declaration of his having ceased to be the printer, publisher, or a proprietor of the newspaper, or that there had been a new declaration, in which the person sought to be affected on such trial did not join. The commissioners are to deliver the certified copies, and after the production of the declaration so certified together with a newspaper entitled in accordance with such declaration, it shall not be necessary to prove a purchase of such newspaper. The penalty for a false certificate, by whomsoever given, is 100*l.* By sect. 9, service of process at the printing or publishing office shall be deemed good service against any person named in the declaration as printer, publisher, or proprietor. Sect. 10 directs that the titles of newspapers shall be entered in a book, to which all persons may have gratuitous access. Sect. 12 contains a proviso exempting the printers and publishers of the London and Dublin Gazettes from making the declaration alluded to. Sect. 13 ordains, that copies of newspapers, signed by the printer or publisher, together with the place of abode of the printer or publisher, shall be delivered to the commissioners of stamps, under a penalty of 20*l.*; and that such copies shall be evidence against the printer, publisher, or proprietor, if applied for within two years after the publication.¹

This statute supersedes the 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, which was repealed by it. Under that Act of Geo. 3 it was held, that it ought to have appeared upon the affidavit that the distributor had authority from the commissioners to take it, and, in default of that proof, Lord Ellenborough required evidence aliunde.² And it should seem

¹ As to what shall be called a newspaper, see schedule A. of the Act. And note, that so much of the Act 60 Geo. 3 and 1 Geo. 4, c. 9, is repealed by this statute as subjects any newspaper, or other paper or pamphlet, to any stamp duty. As to the duties on pamphlets, not being newspapers, see sect. 21 of 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76. And as to the partial repeal of the schedule in 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, see 16 & 17 Vict. c. 71. See also 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 73, ss. 2, 3. The bond given at the Stamp Office for the payment of duties, was formerly the usual evidence of publication. See R. v. Topham, 4 T. R. 126. Then followed the stat. 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, requiring an affidavit, which is now exchanged for a declaration.

² R. v. White, 3 Campb. 100.

that similar testimony should be ready to authenticate the declaration necessary under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76. It should, however, be remembered, that if it be not competent to prove the publication under the statute, the prosecutor may resort to the common law, for the Act was only passed to facilitate conviction, not to shut out any other mode of proceeding. Therefore, in default of a certified copy, the original declaration, signed by the defendant, and stating him to be printer, publisher, or proprietor, may, it seems, be tendered, together with a copy of the newspaper in question, purchased or otherwise duly obtained.¹

It is no objection to urge that the particular copy offered in evidence has never been published. Though not stamped according to the Act of parliament, the paper may be produced. The publisher, indeed, would be liable to a penalty, but the newspaper is not the less receivable in proof of a libel.²

It may be added, that in a late case before the new Act, the rule adopted in actions was held applicable to criminal informations;—that upon the production of the Stamp Office affidavit,³ the newspaper, if corresponding with it in title and in the name of the printer and publisher and place of publication, might be read in evidence as published by the parties named therein, without further proof.⁴

Where the place of printing was called Union Street, Castle Street, in the affidavit, and Union Buildings, John Street, in the newspaper, the court would not allow the rule to be enlarged in order to show by supplemental affidavits that the places were identical. The court, moreover, will take notice of this correspondence and connection, although the paper be not annexed to nor expressly identified by any affidavit.⁵

The identity of the newspaper must appear. Therefore, unless the rule be drawn up on reading the newspaper, and unless the newspaper be filed, the court will discharge the rule for an information, although it may have been duly granted upon the production of a certified copy from the Stamp Office.⁶

The delivery of a newspaper containing the libel to the officer of the Stamp Office is of itself a publication; for the officer would, at all events, himself have an opportunity of reading the libel. A rule for a new trial was, therefore, refused.⁷

Thus far concerning the evidence required to prove libels conveyed through letters and newspapers. The particular proofs demanded respectively for the conviction of different offenders vary in each case, and, perhaps, cannot be said to fall within the scope

¹ R. v. White, 3 Campb. 100.

² R. v. Pearce, Peake, N. P. C. 75.

³ And now in the declaration.

⁴ R. v. Donnison and another, 4 B. & Adol. 698.

⁵ R. v. Franceys, 2 Ad. & El.

49; 4 Nev. & M. 251. The rule affects the proprietor or publisher only.

⁶ R. v. Woolmer and another, 4 P. & Dav. 137.

⁷ R. v. Amphlett, 4 B. & C. 35;

6 D. & Ry. 125.

of a work not especially dedicated to evidence, or to the consideration of the subject of libel. Some passages, however, in the progress of a criminal prosecution for this misdemeanor may, nevertheless, be useful and interesting. As, where the libel had reference to riot and outrages upon property, boasting that one Gen. Ludd had done much in Nottingham and the neighbourhood, &c. In this case the king's proclamation was admitted to show that deeds of violence had been perpetrated in certain districts, and the court considered the evidence quite proper, the document referred to being an act of state. The preambles to two Acts of parliament reciting those outrages and proposing to remedy them, were likewise received with equal approbation. And it was also held, that proof of the name of Gen. Ludd, being that of a fictitious person, was sufficient to sustain an averment that the outrages in question had taken place under the direction of a supposed and unknown person.¹ So a Gazette is evidence to show that certain addresses have been presented to the king, and an averment to that effect is supported by that proof.² But depositions taken before a magistrate in the absence of the defendant, cannot be permitted to be read upon the trial of the party for the misdemeanor, for he could not avail himself of the privilege of cross-examination.³

The libel itself must be produced and read, and if the defendant published it by exhibiting its contents, and then returning it to his own custody, parole evidence may be given of it upon his refusal to deliver it up for the purposes of evidence.⁴ And for the purpose of corroboration, other libels, written by the same person, upon the same subject, may be received in evidence.⁵

Should it be impossible to understand a libel without reference to other papers, those other papers may be read for the prosecution, and without proof of the handwriting.⁶

The defendant asked an editor to show up K., and he afterwards remarked on the story, and expressed his approbation of the article when it came out. This was held sufficient evidence

¹ R. v. Sutton, 4 M. & S. 532. In, and in the neighbourhood of N., were held, in this case, to be divisible averments, so that there was no need of proof that the outrages were committed both in and in the neighbourhood, and a distance of 14 or 15 miles would satisfy the word "neighbourhood." The judge also said, that the jury were at liberty to refer to their own personal knowledge if they saw any of those acts committed. And this was considered not by any means a misdirection.

² R. v. Holt, 5 T. R. 436.

³ R. v. Paine, 5 Mod. 163.

⁴ 2 T. R. 201. A., a printer, delivered a paper to his servant, who took it to the servant of the defendant, an editor. A. and his servant proved this, but it was insufficient to connect the defendant, through his servant, with the paper, in the absence of more direct proof. R. v. Pearce, Peake, N. P. C. 76.

⁵ R. v. Pearce, Peake, N. P. C. 75.

⁶ R. v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 213.

to show that the defendant authorized the publication of the story, and it did not signify that the editor had, in fact, heard the story before the defendant told it.¹

An information for a libel alleged that, a person unknown had committed a murder on G., and that H. had been charged with it. The libel was then set out, and the information charged, that the murder was imputed by the libel to C. The libel, as set out, spoke of the murder of G., and that H. had been charged with it. It was held, that the inducement was proved by evidence that a person had been murdered, that H. was charged with the murder, and that on an inquest held, the witnesses called the dead person by the name of G.²

It is, of course, not competent for the defendant to prove the truth or falsehood of a libel upon the trial of an indictment or information, but evidence to show that the libel does not apply to the transaction referred to by the pleading is admissible. If, however, it be admitted that the transactions have happened, and that the libel related to them, the defendant cannot go into proof of the justice of the connection between the libel and these transactions, for that would be to admit the question of truth or falsehood.³

Upon a criminal information for a libel, importing neglect of duty to magistrates during a riot, Patteson, J., refused to let the defendant prove that there was in fact a riot, and that a pistol was fired at the people.⁴ Upon an information, the plea stated, that the prosecutor, who had been a Dominican, had earned the reputation of a scandalous friar. The defendant was allowed to ask his witnesses as to the prosecutor's moral character.⁵

Trial.] Some discussion has taken place as to the proper venue in libel. Setting aside the question whether merely writing a libel is a misdemeanor,⁶ it seems to be a rule that wherever the publication has taken place, the venue may be safely laid.⁷ Whence it follows, that if the defendant should have propounded his libellous paper in two counties, he may be proceeded against in either. A defendant's acknowledgment is the best evidence of his having published in the county where the venue is laid. As where expressions were used by the defendant in his letter, denoting that he had sent certain other letters to Cobbett's Register, in Middlesex. These other letters being proved to be in the defendant's handwriting, and being the subjects of the libel, it was held that the jury might find a publication in Middlesex by the

¹ R. v. Cooper, 8 Q. B. 533.

² R. v. Gregory, Id. 508.

³ R. v. Grant and others, 5 B. & Adol. 1081; 3 Nev. & M. 106.

⁴ R. v. Brigstock, 6 C. & P. 184.

⁵ R. v. Newman, 3 Car. & K. 252.

⁶ See 3 B. & Ald. 717; 4 B. &

Ald. 95. As well as the question, whether if publication be necessary as well as writing, the venue can be laid in any county except that where the publication takes place.

⁷ R. v. The Seven Bishops, 12 St. Tr. 354; 12 How. St. Tr. 183.

procurement of the defendant.¹ So, where a defendant wrote a libel in one county, and consented to its publication in another.² But owning a signature without more, conveys no proof as to the county.³ If a letter be proved to have been put into the post in the county of A. directed to a person in the county of B., it is clear that the trial may take place in either county. As where a libel is written in London, and forwarded by post to Exeter.⁴ So, where a libellous letter was sealed up and put into the post in Westminster, addressed to a person in the city of London, it was held (upon due proof no doubt of the posting of the letter,) that there was a sufficient publication in Middlesex.⁵ And we have seen, that if the party to whom the letter is addressed should happen to receive it in the county where the venue is laid, the trial cannot be set aside because the libel was directed to another county.⁶ So, under the old Act, 38 Geo. 3, c. 78, the affidavit of names of the printer, publisher, and proprietor of a newspaper was deemed sufficient evidence that the paper was published in the county where the printing was alleged in such paper to have taken place.⁷ The Court of King's Bench, however, has gone one step further than entertaining the confession of a defendant, and the ordinary proof. They have called presumption in aid to establish the fact of publication in a particular county. Sir F. Burdett was prosecuted for a libel, and the venue was laid in Leicestershire. The letter containing the libel was dated in L.⁸ and was received in Middlesex by one B., from a gentleman who was not called as a witness, and who was, moreover, not proved to have been in Leicestershire. Satisfactory proof of the defendant's handwriting was given, and it was shown that he himself was in L. about the time of the delivery of the libel in M. It was objected, that there was no proof of a publication in L. But Best, C. J., thought there was, and the jury, in obedience to the directions of the judge, found the defendant guilty. This point was fully discussed upon a motion for a new trial, and Abbott, C. J., Holroyd and Best, JJ., held, that there was a sufficient publication in the county of Leicester, not only by reason of the presumptions arising from extrinsic evidence coupled with the contents of the libel, but likewise from the want of contrary evidence within the knowledge and power of the defendant (and of which he must be supposed to be cognizant), in order to weaken or rebut these presumptions against him. Bayley, J., thought that the presumptions could not be entertained, unless the gentleman, who was not called as a witness, had appeared to have been in L. at the time, or there had been reason to doubt

¹ R. v. Johnson, 7 East, 65.

² 12 St. Trials, 331.

³ R. v. The Seven Bishops, 12 How. St. T. 183.

⁴ 12 How. St. Tr. 332.

⁵ R. v. Williams, 2 Camp. 506.

⁶ R. v. Watson, ante.

⁷ R. v. Hart and another, 10 East, 94.

⁸ Which is said to be evidence of its having been written in L.; 4 B. & Ald. 124, by Best, citing R. v. Dr. Hensey.

that the defendant or any of his agents had been instrumental in concealing the mode by which the paper had come to the hands of B. The rule, however, for a new trial was discharged, there being three opinions against one.¹

Verdict.] The charges of composing, printing, and publishing are divisible, so that there may be a verdict of guilty as to one or more, and in like manner an acquittal. As where the defendant was charged with composing, printing, and publishing in one count, and with printing and publishing, and publishing only in others. There was no evidence that he had composed the libel, and an acquittal was claimed for him on the first count, but Lord Ellenborough was quite clear to the contrary, observing that it was invariably enough to prove so much of the indictment as would show that the defendant had committed a substantive crime therein specified.² So, upon an indictment for printing and publishing, the defendant was convicted of printing only.³ So, the defendant upon another occasion was convicted of composing and publishing, and acquitted of printing.⁴ But where the jury found Woodfall guilty of publishing and printing only, there being no other charge, the court awarded a venire de novo;⁵ and by Lord Mansfield, "where there are more charges than one, guilty of some only is an acquittal as to the rest;" and "clearly there can be no judgment of acquittal, because the fact found by the jury is the very crime they were to try."⁶

By 32 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 1, on every trial by indictment or information for the making and publishing any libel where the issue is between the king and the defendant, the jury sworn to try the issue may give a general issue of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter put in issue upon such indictment or information, and shall not be required or directed by the court or judge before whom such indictment or information shall be tried, to find the defendant guilty merely on the proof of the publication by such

¹ R. v. Burdett, Bart., 3 B. & Ald. 717; 4 B. & Ald. 95. See also R. v. Sir M. Lopez, cited by Holroyd, J., 4 B. & Ald. 141.

² R. v. Hunt, 2 Campb. 583. Verdict, Not guilty.

³ R. v. Knell, 1 Barnard. K. B. 305.

⁴ R. v. Williams, 2 Camp. 646.

⁵ R. v. Woodfall, 5 Burr. 2661.

⁶ 5 Burr. 2668. — If there be reason to suspect that a mistake has occurred when the jury have delivered their verdict, as that all had not agreed when their foreman pronounced the verdict, affidavits of bystanders may be received to explain the facts, but certainly not an affidavit of any of the jury who tried the cause. Independently, however, of such affidavits of bystanders, if the court see reason that all the jury did not in reality hear the verdict of their foreman so as to be in a condition to express their dissent, they will grant a new trial. But they will not vacate the verdict, and permit the same jury to try the cause over again; for the court has no process by which it can order the same twelve persons to be assembled again to rehear the case and reconsider their verdict. R. v. Wooler, 6 M. & S. 366.

defendant of the paper charged to be a libel, and of the sense ascribed to the same in such indictment or information. But by sect. 2, the court or judge before whom the trial is had shall, according to his discretion, give an opinion and directions to the jury in the matter in issue as in other criminal cases; and by sect. 3, the jury may give a special verdict notwithstanding, as in other criminal cases. Sect. 4 enables the defendant to move in arrest of judgment, as he might have done before the passing of the Act. Acting upon the second section of this statute, the judges still instruct the jury upon the law of libel, and require them to adopt the law so laid down, unless they should be satisfied that the judicial direction is wrong.¹

Costs.] The defendant was allowed to recover costs upon a criminal information, although the only plea upon the record was Not guilty, and the judge had certified as to reasonable cause under 4 & 5 Wm. & M. c. 18, s. 3.² The judge cannot order the taxation of the clerk of assize to be reviewed after the expiration of his commission.³

Judgment.] The judgment at common law is fine or imprisonment, or both together, with suretyship to keep the peace, but in measuring out the punishment the court will have regard to several circumstances. It is matter of mitigation that the party lives at a distance, whilst his servant directs the publication of the newspaper in which the libel is contained, and that he takes no part in the publication.⁴ It is likewise a mitigating fact, that the defendant actually read a statement of certain facts in newspapers, where his libel purported to have been written in consequence of his having read such accounts, but an affidavit of the truth of those facts was refused.⁵ And the court will receive an affidavit that the defendant believed the charges to be true, if reasonable grounds for that belief be set forth.⁶ So provocation may be a ground for mitigation.⁷ The conduct of the defendant generally after the trial, may be considered with a view to mitigation.⁸ So that the court will give him an opportunity of answering affidavits brought against him by way of aggravation,⁹ and will even advise a defendant to offer extenuating circumstances for their consideration if he attempt to justify his conduct. For they will not suffer him to urge the truth of his libel as a ground for ¹ R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 115, 131, 146, 147, 183. See R. v. Dean of St. Asaph, 3 T. R. 428; 1784, before the statute. 4 Dougl. 73.

² R. v. Latimer, 20 L. J. Q. B. 129; 15 Q. B. 1077.

³ R. v. Newhouse, 22 L. J. Q. B. 127, Erle, J.

⁴ See R. v. Gutch and others, Loft. 780; Moo. & Malk. 433.

⁵ R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 414.

⁶ R. v. Halpin, 9 B. & C. 65.

⁷ Either by writing or by words, 7 C. & P. 395; 2 Bingh. N. C. 437. See also 1 M. & Rob. 449; 7 Ad. & El. 223.

⁸ 3 T. R. 432, by Lord Kenyon.

⁹ R. v. Withers, Id. 428.

mitigation.¹ The court will allow a defendant to explain his reasons by affidavit, for having made allegations in his plea of justification, although no proof of such allegations was given at the time. They are receivable in mitigation of punishment. But a document purporting to be an official record of the conviction of the prosecutor before a foreign police court, must not be annexed. It would put the prosecutor on his trial without giving him the power of making any defence.² It is rather an aggravating consequence of his fault to do so, and it may be remarked that the court will hear topics of aggravation in respect of the defendant's conduct after conviction, as well as matters of excuse. So that an affidavit with a pamphlet annexed, written by the defendant after the trial, and which was more libellous than that proved at the trial, was admitted in aggravation.³ Although care will be taken not to inflict a greater punishment than the principal offence will warrant.⁴ So a repetition of slander may lay a foundation for a more severe sentence. Whereas, on the other hand, an affidavit that the defendant has stopped the sale, may operate in mitigation.⁵ But it is not enough for the prosecutor to state in his affidavit that he heard a third person, who refused to join in the affidavit, state this, and that the defendant repeated the libellous matter to the third person. Even if the affidavit had gone on to say, that such third person was under the control and influence of the defendant, Lord Ellenborough doubted whether he should have been disposed to receive it, although such an affidavit was admitted in Archer's case,⁶ for an assault. And both Lord Ellenborough and Grose, JJ., seemed to cast a doubt upon the authority of Archer's case.⁷ Where the defendant was under a recognizance to appear and receive judgment; but it was agreed that he should not be punished if he discontinued his libels, the court would not pass judgment on him with the other defendants in the absence of proof that he had published fresh libels since the recognizance.⁸ All persons connected with this misdemeanor are principals, and may receive judgment accordingly.⁹

Judgment may be passed upon a defendant in his absence under some circumstances. As where a person was convicted of publishing a libel, and was committed to prison, but the prosecutor showed no disposition to bring him up for judgment. The defendant then made an affidavit, setting out the circumstances, and

¹ R. v. Finnerty, 4 B. & Ald. 320. R. v. Bradley, cited, 2 M. & Ry. 152; R. v. Halpin, 9 B. & C. 65; S. C. on the authority of R. v. Finnerty, 4 M. & Ry. 8. "In R. v. Draper, Easter term, 1809, the court received such affidavits, but I believe it was with the consent of the prosecutor." By Best, J., 4 B. & Ald. 321.

² R. v. Dr. Newman, Dears. 125, 130.

³ R. v. Withers, 3 T. R. 428.

⁴ Id. 432, by Lord Kenyon.

⁵ R. v. Hone, 3 Ch. Burn. 741, citing 3 Ch. Cr. L. 877, n.

⁶ 2 T. R. 203, n.

⁷ R. v. Pinkerton, 2 East, 356.

⁸ R. v. Richardson and others, 8 Dowl. P. C. 511.

⁹ R. v. Drake, Holt's Ca. 426.

that he was unable to procure bail, upon which a rule nisi was made upon the prosecutor, to show cause why judgment should not be pronounced upon the defendant in his absence, unless the prosecutor would undertake to bring him up for judgment during the term. This rule was subsequently made absolute after hearing counsel.¹

A motion was made after judgment, upon one occasion, that the court would direct the original letters which had been proved at the trial, to be delivered up by the prosecutor, and deposited with the officer of the court. But the judges said that they had hardly any authority to grant such a motion, as the prosecutor was out of court, but independently of that circumstance, they deemed the motion unprecedented, and not fit to be entertained.²

¹ R. v. Boltz, 5 B. & C. 334. further upon the subject of libel, 1

² R. v. Cator, 2 East, 361. See Hawk, c. 73.

PART XII.

Of Indictable Offences respecting Religion and Morals.

CHAPTER I.

DISTURBING MINISTERS AND CONGREGATIONS.

By 1 Wm. & M. c. 18, s. 18, if any person shall maliciously or contemptuously come into any cathedral or parish church, chapel, or other congregation permitted by the Act, and disquiet or disturb the same, or misuse any preacher or teacher, such person, upon proof before a justice, by two or more sufficient witnesses, shall be bound with two sureties in the sum of 50*l.*,¹ and in default thereof, shall be committed to the general or quarter sessions, and, upon conviction there, shall be fined 20*l.* to the use of the king, &c. By 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, s. 12, this fine is raised to 40*l.* in the case of Protestant dissenters. By 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59, s. 2, Jews are placed upon the same footing as Protestant dissenters. By sect. 4, all laws relating to religious assemblies shall apply generally, for the protection of all meetings, assemblies, or congregations lawfully assembled for religious worship.²

Protection is afforded to preachers and teachers of the Roman Catholic religion by 31 Geo. 3, c. 32, s. 10; and the fine for disturbing their places of worship is 20*l.* Sect. 14 of this latter Act, however, excepts Quakers, but they are, nevertheless, protected by the statute 1 Wm. & M., c. 18, before mentioned.

It was objected in an indictment on the Toleration Act,³ for disturbing Protestant dissenters, that German Lutherans, being foreigners, were not within its provisions, but Lord Kenyon intimated his opinion clearly against the objection, and it was not pressed. It was likewise held to be no defence that the disturbance took place in consequence of a disputed right to the office of clerk.⁴ And upon conviction, the Court of King's Bench were quite satisfied that it was a case which needed not, of necessity, to be tried at the quarter sessions, but might well be removed by certiorari.⁵

¹ That is, to appear at the quarter sessions.

² See 18 & 19 Vict. c. 81, s. 1; 19 & 20 Vict. c. 119, s. 24.

³ 1 Wm. & M. c. 18.

⁴ R. v. Hube and others, Peake's Cases, 132.

⁵ R. v. Hube and others, Peake, ut supra. And see ante.

The question, however, as to the certiorari was raised again some years afterwards, and upon the new statute, 52 Geo. 3, c. 155. In that case, Lord Ellenborough confessed he was struck with the passage which enacts that the offender, upon conviction of the said offence at the general or quarter sessions, should suffer the penalty of 40*l*. So that it might seem to be a condition precedent to try at the sessions. But his lordship then went on to say that, upon consideration, he concurred with the decision in R. v. Hube. And Le Blanc, J., added, that unless the defendant could show that if the proceedings had been before the quarter sessions, they could not have been sustained, the argument on his behalf would be at an end, for all the incidents of the common law attached to an indictment at sessions, and one of these is the certiorari. Judgment was accordingly given against him.¹

It should not be forgotten, nevertheless, that the act of disturbing a congregation may be treated as a misdemeanor at common law. And the proceedings may be either by indictment or information.² Thus, where such an information had been granted for a misdemeanor in obstructing divine service in Pewsey church, and insulting the rector, Lord Mansfield took occasion to say, that Methodists had a right to the protection of this court, if interrupted in their decent and quiet devotion; and likewise dissenters from the Established Church, if so disturbed.³

The statute 1 Wm. & M. c. 18, s. 18, seems to have been insufficiently considered in the enactments upon the subject which have been enumerated. Great difficulties, therefore, were experienced in enforcing that and similar Acts.

Trespass was brought for false imprisonment. The plaintiff having persisted in reading a notice in church, was taken into custody, and detained for an hour. He obtained a verdict, and the court refused to set it aside; for, as the plaintiff read the notice during an interval of the service, he could not be said to have come within 1 Mar. st. 2, c. 3; neither was his case within 1 Wm. & M., c. 18, because there the offence must have been done wilfully, notoriously, and of purpose.⁴

This old and almost obsolete Act has revived lately. It was recognized by Lord Tenterden in Williams v. Glenister. It was actually put in force against an unfortunate Dorsetshire labourer, who was punished under its provisions. One justice may commit the offender under these provisions, till within six days he can be brought before two justices, who may commit him for three months, and further, to the next quarter sessions, when, upon his repentance, he may be discharged upon giving surety for one year for his ¹ R. v. Wadley, 4 M. & S. 508. See 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 33, s. 1.

² A certiorari to remove such an indictment at common law was refused upon one occasion (1 Keb. 491), but the court will exercise their discretion. See 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 33, s. 1.

³ R. v. Wroughton, 3 Burr. 1683. The rule for the information was, however, discharged upon the merits.

⁴ Williams v. Glenister, 2 B. & C. 699.

good behaviour. If he do not repent he may be committed till he do so repent. This Act is said to be repealed as to disturbing the prayers, by 1 El. c. 2, s. 9, which prescribes a forfeiture of 100 marks upon an indictment as to the prayers, but not as to the preacher. For the second offence, under 1 Eliz., the penalty is 400 marks. The third offence is punishable with imprisonment for life and forfeiture of goods and chattels. If the 100 marks be not paid within six weeks after conviction, the offender shall suffer six weeks' imprisonment. (Sect. 12.) The like upon the second commission, with twelve months' imprisonment. (Sect. 13.) The Dorsetshire labourer was punished under the Act of Mary. He expressed his sorrow at the quarter sessions (Easter, 1851), after having lain in gaol for some months, and was then discharged. But there are other grievances. The justices at sessions have no power to mitigate the fines of 20*l.* and 40*l.* Hence, it is very rare to find a case remitted to the sessions. The justices either prefer to inflict a fine upon their own responsibility, which is illegal, or they require sureties, which may, probably, be right. However, under the 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, in default of sufficient distress, there is a power to imprison for a term not exceeding three months. And there is another grievance. Under the Act 1 Wm. & M. c. 18, there must have been a preconcerted intention to disturb, which cannot be easily proved; whereas, under 52 Geo. 3, c. 155, the mere disturbance is sufficient. Therefore the Dissenter is better protected than the Establishment. Nevertheless, there might have been proceedings in the ecclesiastical courts until the year 1860, and it has been said that the plaintiff in Williams v. Glenister was proceeded against there after his successful verdict, and that he incurred considerable expense. But now, by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 32, s. 2, any person guilty of riotous, violent, or indecent behaviour in England and Ireland in any cathedral church, parish or district church or chapel of the Church of England and Ireland, or in any chapel of any religious denomination, or in England in any place of religious worship certified under 18 & 19 Vict. c. 81, whether during the celebration of divine service or at any other time, or in any church-yard or burial ground, or who shall molest, disturb, vex, or trouble, or by any other unlawful means disquiet, or misuse, any preacher duly authorized, &c., or any clergyman in holy orders ministering or celebrating any sacrament, or any divine service, rite, or office, in any cathedral, &c., or in any church-yard or burial ground, shall, on conviction before two justices, be liable to a penalty of not more than 5*l.*, or may be committed for a term not exceeding two months. By sect. 3, the constable or churchwarden may apprehend immediately after the offence. Sect. 4 gives a right of appeal. Sect. 5 repeals 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 4, as far as relates to persons not in holy orders. And sect. 6 saves the statutes 1 Mar. sess. 2, c. 3, 1 Eliz. c. 2, and 1 Wm. & M., c. 18, s. 18. Of course the punishment by commitment is alone available, because no machinery is constructed for recovering the penalty of 5*l.*¹

¹ See also Glover v. Hynde, 1 Mod. 168.

CHAPTER II.

CONGE D'ELIRE.

By 25 Hen. 8, c. 20, the appointment of the archbishops and bishops is vested in the crown. And by sect. 7, if the prior and convent of any monastery, or the dean and chapter of any cathedral church, shall disobey the royal mandate to elect, they shall incur the penalties of a præmunire under 25 Edw. 3 and 16 Ric. 2.

CHAPTER III.

CLERGY MAKING CANONS WITHOUT THE CONSENT OF THE CROWN.

It might be inconvenient to have an ecclesiastical code of laws in opposition to the common or statute law. And thus by 25 Hen. 8, c. 19, s. 1,¹ any of the clergy who shall presume to attempt, allege, claim, or put in use any constitutions, ordinances, provincial or synodal, or any other canons; or enacting, promulgating, or executing any such canons, constitutions, &c., by whatever name they may be called in their convocations, unless the same clergy may have the king's most royal assent and licence to make, promulge, and execute such canons, constitutions, and ordinances, provincial or synodal, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and imprisoned, and fined at the king's will.²

¹ Confirmed by 1 Eliz. c. 1, s. 6.

² Which means, at the will of the king's justices.

CHAPTER IV.

FALSE RECITALS IN ECCLESIASTICAL LEASES.

By 6 Will. 4, c. 20, s. 3, to introduce any false recitals into ecclesiastical leases is punishable as a misdemeanor, and, in addition, the offender shall pay to any person suing for the same the full sum of 500*l.*, or, at the option of such person, five years improved annual value of the hereditaments comprised in the lease.

CHAPTER V.

OFFENCES CONCERNING REGISTERS OF BIRTHS, &c.

These offences consist chiefly in false particulars, forgery, false entries, damages to books, and illegal certificates. The 41st section of the 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, ordains that the wilful giving of false particulars to be inserted in any register of birth, death, or marriage, shall be visited by the penalties of perjury.

The charge against a defendant was, that he had made a false statement after marriage, to the officiating clergyman, in order to have such statement entered in the marriage register book. It appeared, however, that the statement in question was made to the clerk before the marriage; but that the defendant averred the truth of it after marriage, when asked by the clergyman. It also appeared that the marriage register book was not the book provided by the registrar-general. These points were made for the prisoner, and were argued before the judges; but the judges held the count sufficient, and that the identical book directed by the registrar-general was not necessary in this case,¹ and the purpose need not be effected;² but the Act must, of course, be intentional.³

¹ R. v. Brown, Den. 291; 2 Whether the prosecution must
Car. & K. 504. take place within three years, qu.?

² R. v. Mason, 2 Car. & K. 622. Contra, R. v. Dr. Bruce, Al. 50.

³ R. v. Dunboyne, 3 Car. & K. 1. R. v. Moore, Tho. Jones, 159.

CHAPTER VI.

JESUITS.

By 10 Geo. 4, c. 7, s. 29, if any jesuit or member of any religious order, community, or society, of the Church of Rome, bound by monastic or religious vows, shall come (without licence) into the realm; or, having obtained such licence from the secretary of state to remain there,¹ shall not depart from the United Kingdom within twenty days after the expiration of such licence, or of its revocation after notice given to him, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be banished for life.² And if, after sentence of banishment, such person shall be found at large, without lawful excuse, after the end of three calendar months from the time of the sentence, he shall be likewise deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be transported for life.³ And the offence of being admitted or becoming a jesuit, or brother, or member of any such religious order, community, or society as aforesaid,⁴ is made punishable in like manner.⁵

And if a jesuit or member of any religious order, community, or society of the Church of Rome, bound by monastic or religious vows, within any part of the United Kingdom, shall admit any person to become a regular ecclesiastic, or brother, or member of any such religious order, &c., or aid or consent thereto, or shall administer or cause to be administered, or aid or assist, &c., in taking any oath, vow, or engagement purporting or intended to bind the person taking the same to the rules, ordinances, or ceremonies of such religious order, &c., he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor,⁶ and be punishable by fine and imprisonment.

¹ Under the same Act.

² By sect. 31.

³ By sect. 36.

⁴ By sect. 29.

⁵ By sect. 34.

⁶ 10 Geo. 4, c. 7, s. 33.

CHAPTER VII.

OF BLASPHEMY, &c.

The law regards several acts which are in opposition to the established religion of the country as misdemeanors; and conduct which has a plain tendency to subvert public morals is likewise viewed with disapprobation, and deemed to be the subject of punishment. Offences against the state religion may consist in libels or slander, as blasphemous writings and speeches, abuse or ridicule of the Christian religion, contempt of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, expressed either by words or otherwise, impeachment of the divine authority of the Scriptures, and, in the case of ministers, derogatory observations on the Book of Common Prayer. There are also other misdeeds, as neglecting the ordinary prayer, sabbath-breaking, swearing, &c.¹ Very many misdemeanors to the detriment of public morals are likewise to be met with in our books. Such are gaming, adultery, acts tending to prostitution, indecencies of various kinds, and many other circumstances which have a tendency to lower the standard of proper conduct. We will examine this list in the order which has been mentioned. And first, with reference to those acts of ill-behaviour which are committed against the settled religion of the country.

Blasphemy.] It may be said, that blasphemy is one of those offences which the law views with much displeasure. Thus to deny the being or providence of God is punishable under this head.² So to speak of Jesus Christ in terms of contumely or reproach is not permitted by the common law, and persons who have erred in this manner have been the subjects of severe punishment.³ It was, indeed, urged as a defence upon one occasion, that as the 53 Geo. 3 had relieved persons from penalties who denied the divinity of Jesus Christ, a publication in support of such a position was not a libel; but to this it was replied by the court, that the defendant had gone further than this by declaring that the Saviour was "an impostor and murderer in principle, and a fanatic," and that the relief contemplated by the statute could never be intended to permit the promulgation of matter which was, at common law, a ¹ By 13 Edw. 1, st. 2, c. 6, it is made a misdemeanor to hold a fair or market in a church-yard. Fine and imprisonment are the punishments.

² 1 Hawk. c. 5, s. 1; 4 Com. 59.

³ R. v. Taylor, 1 Ventr. 293; 3 Keb. 607.

blasphemous libel.¹ So, a blasphemous libel concerning the Old Testament is punishable at common law.² Profaneness on the stage is likewise indictable at common law.³

Judgment at common law.] The judgment for blasphemy at common law⁴ is fine and imprisonment, accompanied by such infamous corporal punishment as the court may think fit to adjudge.⁵ Or these respective punishments may be severally awarded.⁶

The Holy Scriptures.] Although blasphemy, strictly speaking, may be said to relate only to a dishonourable mention of the Deity, it is, nevertheless, very commonly understood to extend to speech or writing in derogation of the Holy Scriptures, so that the Almighty would then be considered as receiving an insult through the medium of a disrespect offered to the book which he has given. And as the Christian religion is a very chief principle in the Holy Scriptures, an attack upon that religion is frequently looked upon in the light of a blasphemous misdemeanor. All profane scoffing at the Bible, or exposing it to contempt or ridicule is, accordingly, held to be punishable in like manner as blasphemy at common law.⁷ So, to say that "religion is a cheat" is punishable; it is to dissolve all those obligations whereby civil obligations are preserved.⁸

And notwithstanding this statute, it has been clearly held, that the proceeding for blasphemy at common law remains untouched.⁹ And upon a modern occasion, *R. v. Robinson*¹⁰ was referred to as an express authority, to show that where a matter is unlawful at the common law, the punishment prescribed by a statute in respect of that matter is cumulative,¹¹ and, consequently, the conviction for a blasphemous libel was confirmed, although there was no count

¹ R. v. Waddington, 1 B. & C. 26. See also R. v. Akenhead, 3 Meriv. 682, n., in Scotland, cited there. Judgment of Lord Eldon, C., in Att.-Gen. v. Pearson, Id. 435, 408.

² R. v. Hetherington, 5 Jur. 229. And see to the same effect, R. v. Caton, 1 Russ. C. M. 231.

³ 11 Mod. 142. By 3 Jac. 1, c. 21, if any person shall in any stage play, interlude, show, &c., jestingly or profanely speak or use the holy name of God, or of Christ Jesus, or of the Trinity, he shall forfeit 10*l.*, half to the king, and half to him that shall sue.

⁴ Which continued in full force notwithstanding the statute of William. R. v. Paine, 1 East, P. C. 5.

⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 5, s. 6, and it should seem that the party may be bound over to his good behaviour.

⁶ The pillory being abolished, whipping only remains as a corporal penalty. See as to the old law with respect to the denial of the Holy Trinity, 1 Wm. & M. c. 18, s. 17; 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 32; 53 Geo. 3, c. 160. R. v. Hall, Str. 486; Id. 790.

⁷ 1 Hawk. c. 5, s. 2.

⁸ R. v. Taylor, 1 Ventr. 293; 3 Keb. 607, Hale, C. J.

⁹ R. v. Woolston, Fitzg. 64.

¹⁰ 2 Burr. 799.

¹¹ 3 B. & Ald. 163, 164.

on the statute of Will. 3.¹ In the case of R. v. Woolston, likewise, it was declared by the court, that they would not suffer it to be debated whether to write against Christianity in general was not an offence punishable in the temporal courts at common law.² And they added, that they would not allow even of an indirect attack upon that worship; so that the defendant's suggestion, that the intent of his book went only to disprove the literal meaning of the miracles, and merely as striking against one received proof of Jesus being the Messiah, was deemed quite inadmissible as a defence; for the very foundation of the religion was threatened by such an attempt.³ So again, the reiteration of a blasphemous libel was at once discountenanced by the court, notwithstanding the pretext of legality in publishing a correct account of proceedings in a court of justice.⁴ And it was subsequently observed in another case, that if the name of the Redeemer was suffered to be traduced, and his holy religion treated with contempt, the solemnity of an oath, on which the due administration of justice depended, would be destroyed.⁵ So, words of contumely are said to be indictable, as tending to a breach of the peace, as "your religion is a new religion," &c.⁶

Personating the Saviour, or suffering worship to be paid to the defendant, has been likewise deemed an offence of this nature;⁷ and religious impostors who pretend to extraordinary commissions, and so terrify or abuse the people with false denunciations of judgments, are offenders of a similar character.⁸ However, it has long been acknowledged, that disputes by learned men upon controverted points are not to be deemed blasphemies.⁹ And the distinction recognized by the law seems to be between such discussions as are carried on dispassionately and with decency, and those which treat so serious a matter with offensive levity.¹⁰ Yet, nevertheless, doctrines which have immediately a tendency to subvert Christianity cannot be entitled to this indulgence, with whatever tenderness they may be promulgated, for they would savour of that "malicious and mischievous intention which is the broad boundary between right and wrong."¹¹ The judgment for these last-mentioned offences in the nature of blasphemy is the same which has already been related in a former page.¹² And it may be

¹ R. v. Carlile, Id. 161. See 1 Wms. Saund. 135 (a), note (4).

² R. v. Woolston, Str. 834. Conviction on four informations for blasphemous discourses on the miracles of our Saviour. R. v. Annet, cited, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 395. R. v. Williams, 26 How. St. Tr. 656. R. v. Eaton, mentioned, 3 B. & Ald. 162.

³ Fitzg. 66.

⁴ R. v. Mary Carlile, 3 B. & Ald. 167.

⁵ R. v. Williams, Holt on Libel, 69, note (e).

⁶ 1 Hawk. c. 5, s. 5.

⁷ R. v. Naylor, 2 St. Tr. 265.

⁸ 1 Hawk. c. 5, s. 3.

⁹ Str. 834.

¹⁰ 3 Merivale, 376, note (a).

¹¹ See Stark. ut supra.

¹² Ante.

further remarked, that in case of a second conviction, the defendant might until lately have been punished with banishment, and with transportation, if he had neglected to banish himself;¹ but, by a more recent Act,² this sentence of banishment is abrogated, and the offence, upon a second conviction, remains, as on the first occasion, a very high misdemeanor, and punishable accordingly. However, the judge may still, under 60 Geo. 3 and 1 Geo. 4, c. 8, make his order for the seizure and detainer of all copies of blasphemous and seditious libels in the possession of a convicted defendant, or any other person for his use, such person being also named in the order, for the statute has undergone no repeal in that respect.

Forms of worship.] A public disrespect to the forms of worship belonging to the Established Church, and, à fortiori, if done by one of the ministers of religion, is punishable as a misdemeanor.

These faults are not at present noticed with the same rigour as in former times; perhaps, indeed, some of them may not be of such frequent occurrence, so that a brief mention of them will be sufficient for our purpose. By 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 1,³ to treat the sacrament of the Lord's Supper with dishonour, in any way whatsoever, is made punishable upon a conviction at the quarter sessions, with fine and imprisonment.⁴ But the indictment must be preferred within three months next after the offence.⁵

Again, by 1 El. c. 2, ss. 9, 10, 11, to speak in any way in derogation of the Common Prayer Book, whether in plays, songs, or otherwise, or to compel any minister, or procure him to say any common prayer, or minister any sacrament, in any other form than that prescribed in the Common Prayer Book of the Church of England, or to interrupt the saying of any such prayer, or ministering of any sacrament, is made punishable, for the first offence, upon conviction, by a fine of 100 marks, and of 400 for the second. By sect. 12 & 13, upon default of payment, the party shall, for the first offence, be imprisoned for six months, and for twelve in respect of the second. For the third offence, he shall forfeit his goods and chattels, and be imprisoned for life.⁶ This Act, however, does not ¹ 60 Geo. 3 and 1 Geo. 4, c. 8.

² 11 Geo. 4 and 1 Will. 4, c. 73; and a similar provision was made with respect to Scotland by 7 Will. 4, c. 5.

³ Repealed by 1 Mar. c. 2, but revived by 1 El. c. 1, s. 14, and confirmed by 13 & 14 Car. 2, c. 4, s. 24.

⁴ Three justices, at the least, one being of the quorum, must be present.

⁵ 1 Edw. 6, c. 1, s. 5. The Act uses the words "fine and ransom," and it appears from Co. Litt. 127 (a), that these terms are but as one; and the case in Dy. 232, which mentions the ransom as being treble the amount of the fine, must be understood to mean where a fine was set nominally and the ransom adjudged accordingly.

⁶ Where the party died within six weeks, it was made a question, whether, as his election to pay the fine or suffer imprisonment was gone, his executors should continue liable to the forfeiture. See affect Roman Catholics since the 31 Geo. 3, c. 32, s. 3, and 7 & 8 Vict. c. 102.¹

So again, with reference to spiritual persons, if any parson, vicar, &c. shall refuse to use the common prayer in a church, or use any other form, or speak in derogation thereof, he shall, for the first offence, lose one year's profit of his spiritual promotions, and suffer six months' imprisonment; for the second, shall be deprived; and for a third, shall be deprived and suffer imprisonment for life.² If the party have no spiritual promotion, he shall, for his first offence be imprisoned for one year, and for the second, be imprisoned for life.³ But the prosecution for these respective offences must be at the next general sessions to be holden before justices of oyer and terminer, or justices of assize, next after the offence committed.⁴

Justices of the peace at their quarter sessions had power, under 23 El. c. 1, s. 8, to inquire concerning these last-mentioned misdemeanors; but this jurisdiction was subsequently withdrawn by the introduction of other forms under later statutes which did not revive the authority of magistrates.⁵

It was soon held, that a priest or minister, whether he had the cure of souls or not, was equally within the statute 1 El. c. 2.⁶ But it was a part of the offence, that other prayers were used in lieu of the common prayers. The defendant, a clergyman, was charged with this offence under 1 Eliz., and the indictment charged him with using other prayers, and in another manner than that which is mentioned in the Common Prayer Book; but the court held the count bad, for the indictment should have said, that the defendant used other forms and prayers instead of those enjoined, which were neglected by him; for, otherwise, every parson using prayers before his sermon other than that required by the Book of Common Prayer might be indicted.⁷

It may be remarked here, that the sentence of deprivation prescribed in respect of the second offence in these respects, does not restrain the ecclesiastical court from awarding that judgment in the first instance. It was so determined by the Court of King's Bench in an action of trespass brought by a clerk in orders against the defendant, a servant of the ecclesiastical commission.⁸

R. v. Sir E. Walgrave, Dy. 203, 231. See also R. v. Horne, Gouldsb. 162; Hob. 97.

¹ And see 9 & 10 Vict. c. 59, s. 1.

² 1 El. c. 2, ss. 4, 5, 6. See also 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1.

³ Id. ss. 7, 8. See likewise 2 & 3 Edw. 6, c. 1.

⁴ 1 El. c. 2, s. 20.

⁵ R. v. Sparks, 3 Mod. 78.

⁶ Dy. 203.

⁷ R. v. Sparks, 3 Mod. 78; 2 Show. 447.

⁸ Cawdry v. Atton, Poph. 59; 5 Rep. 1.

CHAPTER VIII.

OF SABBATH-BREAKING.

Sabbath-breaking.] Many statutes have been passed from time to time with respect to the violation of the Lord's day or Sabbath, but those which are chiefly applicable at the present time relate, for the most part, to the exercise of certain trades on that festival, and to the suing out of civil process. The acts of parliament which treated an omission to go to church, or suffering absence in others, as misdemeanors,¹ no longer threaten the community; and even those statutes which forbid trading are very rarely enforced by indictment, and are not very popular when used as the instruments of penalties. It is only when these acts are regarded in the light of misdemeanors by the prosecutor, and so punishable by indictment, that we have to deal with them in this undertaking, and by reason of the rarity of the proceeding, we shall be brief upon this head of Sabbath-breaking.

The principle seems to be, that an indictment will not lie at common law unless the act of trading can be viewed under the character of a nuisance, and by this clue the different precedents and cases may be safely reconciled. Thus, it is said, that there is a form of indictment which calls the defendant a common Sabbath-breaker and profaner of the Lord's day, and for having kept public and open shop, and exposed meat to sale to divers persons unknown.² And the usual course is affirmed in books of authority to be an indictment for a nuisance, where the offence will bear that aspect.³ Whereas, on the other hand, if the matter be not considered as a public mischief, the authorities tend the other way; and, therefore, it is laid down, that to sell meat on a Sunday is not an offence at common law, so that an indictment must conclude against the form of the statute.⁴ And so it was held, upon one occasion, where the court, upon demurrer, gave judgment for the defendant.⁵ And the same law might well apply to a baker, whose exercise of his trade on a Sunday might be productive of that general annoyance which is understood by the term "nuisance."

But an indictment will lie upon the statute respecting these offences. Thus, by 3 Car. 1, c. 2, every butcher who shall kill or sell any victual upon the Lord's day shall forfeit 6s. 8d. And, although a pecuniary forfeiture is attached to the offence, together with the jurisdiction of magistrates who are to inquire summarily

¹ See 1 Hawk. chap. 10, 11.

² East, P. C. 5.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 6, s. 6, citing C. C. C. 372.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 6, s. 6; 3 Car. 1, c. 2, s. 2.

⁵ R. v. Brotherton, Str. 702.

into the matter, an indictment will lie, nevertheless, according to the express words of the Act.

By 29 Car. 2, c. 7, s. 2, no tradesman, artificer, workman, labourer, or other person whatsoever, shall do or exercise any worldly labour, &c., on the Lord's day (works of necessity and charity only excepted); provided that nothing in the Act shall extend to prohibit the dressing of meat in families, or dressing or selling meat in inns, &c., for such as otherwise cannot be provided; nor to crying milk before nine in the morning nor after four in the afternoon. The time for prosecution is limited to ten days after the offence committed.

The stress of this statute seems, in a great measure, to have fallen upon bakers; and before the 34 Geo. 3, c. 61, there was some discussion as to the works of necessity mentioned in the 29 Car. 2, and likewise as to the proviso at the conclusion of the third clause.

There was an indictment against one S., for not executing a justice's warrant upon a common baker for exercising his trade on a Sunday, and the court recognized the principle at once, that the charge could not be sustained in respect of necessities,¹ as puddings and pies, although it might be good for baking bread,² evidently because that might have been done on the Saturday. And this doctrine was maintained upon a subsequent occasion.

A motion was made for an information against a justice who had refused to receive a charge against a baker for exercising his trade on a Sunday; and the court observed, that this was an attempt to punish a person for baking pies, puddings, and meat for dinner, but not saying a word about bread, which is the business of a baker's ordinary calling; they were, accordingly, of opinion that this Act of baking pies, &c., was not within the Act, and the rule was discharged with costs.³

In conformity with the same principle, it seems that the baking of rolls on a Sunday would have been holden to be within 29 Car. 2, had not the conviction been untenable upon another ground.⁴ But still it was pressed upon the court in another case, that R. v. Cox turned upon the exception introduced into the statute with respect to necessity and charity, and that it could not be supposed that a baker who should work for his customers on a Sunday could come within that exception.

John Younger was seen baking for several persons, who were by no means in poor circumstances, and it being the Lord's day when he was so occupied, an information was laid against him, and the magistrate convicted him. But the court were quite clear in favour of the baker. "Thirty-four years," said Lord Kenyon, "have nearly passed since the decision of R. v. Cox, which in-

¹ The word "unnecessary" is manifestly misprinted for "necessary." 11 Mod. 114.

² R. v. Pawlett, 11 Mod. 114.

³ R. v. Cox, 2 Burr. 785. See Cowp. 643.

⁴ Crepps v. Durden and others, Cowp. 649.

formed the public that all bakers have a right to do what is imputed to this defendant as an offence." "I agree," added the lord chief justice, "with Mr. J. Foster, that I am for an observation of the Sabbath, but not for a pharisaical observation of it." The conviction was quashed.¹

Shortly after this the stat. 34 Geo. 3, c. 61, passed, and bakers were thereby forbidden to make, bake, or expose to sale, any bread or rolls of any sort or kind, or to bake any meat, puddings, pies, or tarts, or in any other manner to exercise their trade on the Lord's day. Except the selling of bread or baking meat, puddings or pies only, on the Lord's day, before nine in the forenoon and one in the afternoon.²

Swearing. Drunkenness.] Swearing and drunkenness are likewise offences against religion, but they are not usually treated as misdemeanors, being punishable before a magistrate by way of summary conviction.³ Nevertheless, if it be determined to proceed by indictment against such, the charge should not be that the defendant was a common drunkard, or a common frequenter of tippling houses, for that language would be too loose.⁴

¹ R. v. Younger, 5 T. R. 449.

² See further as to convictions upon 29 Car. 2, c. 7; 1 Hawk. c. 6, ss. 9, 10. As to the sale of mackerel on Sundays, see 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 24, s. 14. Fish carriages, 2 Geo. 3, c. 15. Fairs and markets on Sunday (the four Sundays in harvest excepted out of the Act), 27 Hen. 6, c. 5, repealed by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 23; 1 Hawk. c. 6, ss. 1, 2, 11,

19. Public sports, 1 Car. 1, c. 1; 1 Hawk. c. 6, s. 4; 4 Com. 63. Debating societies, 21 Geo. 3, c. 49; 1 Hawk. c. 6, ss. 5, 12, 13, 14. Carriers, 3 Car. 1, c. 2. Watermen, 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 21, s. 13. And see generally, 1 Hawk. c. 6.

³ See 1 Hawk. c. 6, s. 23, et seq.

⁴ R. v. Buckbridge, 7 Mod. 52.

CHAPTER IX.

OF INDICTABLE OFFENCES CONCERNING MARRIAGE NOT HITHERTO MENTIONED.

Marriage under age at common law.] At common law it seems, that although there may be a doubt as to the validity of an indictment for marrying a woman under age, without the consent of the father or guardian,¹ the act of carrying away such infants by violence, deceit, or any corrupt practice, or even by ordinary blandishments,² and, à fortiori, for any improper or immoral purpose, must certainly be deemed an offence.³

Undue solemnization of marriage.] By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, s. 39, every person who, after the said 1st day of March, shall knowingly and wilfully solemnize any marriage in England, except by special licence, in any other place than a church or chapel in which marriages may be solemnized according to the rites of the Church of England, or than the registered building or office specified in the notice and certificate as aforesaid, shall be guilty of felony (except in the case of a marriage between two of the Society of Friends, commonly called Quakers, according to the usages of the said society, or between two persons professing the Jewish religion, according to the usages of the Jews); and every person who in any such registered building or office shall knowingly and wilfully solemnize any marriage in the absence of a registrar of the district in which such registered building or office is situated shall be guilty of felony; and every person who shall knowingly and wilfully solemnize any marriage in England after the said 1st day of March (except by licence) within twenty-one days after the entry of the notice to the superintendent registrar as aforesaid, or, if the marriage is by licence, within seven days after such entry, or after three calendar months after such entry, shall be guilty of felony.

By 4 Geo. 4, c. 76, s. 21, if any person shall, from and after the said 1st day of November, solemnize matrimony in any other place than a church or such public chapel wherein banns may be lawfully published, or at any other time than between the hours of eight and twelve in the forenoon, unless by special licence from the Archbishop of Canterbury, or shall solemnize matrimony without due publication of banns, unless licence of marriage be first had and obtained from some person or persons having authority to grant the same; or if any person, falsely pretending to be in holy orders, shall solemnize matrimony according to the rites

¹ See 4 Mod. 145, per Holt, C. J.

² R. v. Twisleton and others, 1 Leo. 257.

³ East, P. C. 458, 459.

of the Church of England; every person knowingly and wilfully so offending, and being lawfully convicted thereof, shall be deemed and adjudged to be guilty of felony, and shall be transported for the space of fourteen years, according to the laws in force for transportation for felons; provided that all prosecutions for such felony shall be commenced within the space of three years after the offence committed.

The indictment must contain the words "knowingly and wilfully," and it would be as well to negative the special or other licence, although, strictly speaking, it would lie on the defendant to prove the licence.

Seduction.] Nor is seduction by any means an inferior misdemeanor at common law. An information was preferred against certain defendants for carrying away a young woman for the purpose of marriage, and it was objected, that no artifice had been used, excepting the ordinary compliments which usually take place amongst young people; but the court directed a verdict of guilty, even although some encouragement had evidently proceeded from the girl.¹ If such a decision could be come to in the case of a marriage, it is clear that the more grave crime of seduction cannot be justified by pleading that no other means than address and compliment were employed. So, again, the defendant was fined for seducing and lying with the wife of another, but the court would not allow him to be charged with an action as well as punished by a penalty.² And wherever conspiracy has been made use of to effect the sinister design, no doubt has been entertained of the defendant's liability. As in the well-known case of Lord Grey, who contrived that Lady H. Berkeley should be taken away at night from her father's house, and against his consent, for the purpose of cohabiting with him. Several persons were indicted together with Lord Grey for a conspiracy at common law, and the defendants were found guilty, notwithstanding the absence of any artifice, and the admission of the lady, who was examined as a witness, that she left her father's house willingly, and concurred in all the measures taken for her departure and concealment.³

The defendant, Sir Francis Delaval, and others, were concerned in obtaining a female apprentice, to be assigned over to Sir F. D., for the purpose of being kept by him. The transaction took place with the consent of the apprentice, but the court made the rule absolute for an information at common law against the defendant, Sir Francis Bates, the master of the girl, and the attorney who prepared the indentures.⁴

¹ R. v. Twisleton and others,
1 Lev. 257; 1 Sid. 387; 1 Hawk.
c. 41, s. 10.

² R. v. Johnson, Comb. 377.

³ R. v. Lord Grey and others,
3 St. Tr. 519; East, P. C. 460.

⁴ R. v. Delaval and others, 3
Burr. 1434; 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 410, 439.

So where a man had fraudulently assigned his wife to another, Lord Hardwicke directed a prosecution, the act being against public decency and good manners.¹ The words "being above the age of fourteen" are sufficient. "Being" is a sufficient averment of the facts which follow.² A fortiori where there has not been consent.³

Enticing a person of fortune to an improper marriage.] It seems, again, to be an offence to persuade a party under age to contract an improper marriage, and the nullity of the union in the case of a minor would not furnish any excuse for the common law misdemeanor.

The council of the Marches in Wales granted an information for this offence in 15 Car. 1, and the parties were fined, but a doubt was raised in the King's Bench whether that court had jurisdiction, and the defendants were bailed.⁴

This point was argued at some length upon another occasion, when the court observed that it was lawful to marry, but that if the marriage was obtained by unlawful means, an offence would be committed. But we are informed that no judgment was given.⁵ However, soon afterwards leave was given to file an information against the defendants, for "procuring a gentleman's son to marry a woman of infamous reputation."⁶ So, again, an information was granted against persons who were suspected of using artifices in order to obtain a will from a female who was addicted to liquor, and who was incapable, from intemperate habits, of making one.⁷

Judgment.] The judgment at common law for these offences is fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

Threats by parish officers.] By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 8, if any officer of a union, &c., endeavour to induce any person to contract a marriage by threat or promise respecting any application to be ¹ 3 Burr. 1439, by Lord Mansfield. See also R. v. Sellinger, 12 Mod. 413, where the court refused to quash an indictment for adultery upon motion, but left the defendant to demur.

² R. v. Moore, 2 Lev. 179.

³ R. v. Mears and another, Den. & P. 70; 20 L. J. M. C. 59.

⁴ R. v. Seeles and others, Cro. Car. 557, prisoners upon a habeas corpus. "It is extraordinary," says Professor Christian, "that prosecutions are not instituted against those who publicly sell their wives, and against those who buy them." Notes to 4 Com. 65.

It is believed, however, that the disapprobation of public opinion has done more towards the decrease of these exhibitions than any prosecutions could have effected.

⁵ R. v. Thorp and others, Carth. 384; Comb. 456.

⁶ R. v. Blacket and another, 7 Mod. 39. See also R. v. Pierson and others, Andr. 310, on the st. of Ph. & Mary. R. v. Clarke, 1 Burr. 606.

⁷ R. v. Wright and others, 2 Burr. 1099.

made or order to be enforced respecting a bastard, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Indictment.] The indictment states, that A., on, &c., being then overseer, &c., of the parish of —, did unlawfully endeavour to induce one B. to contract a marriage with C., by threatening [promising that —] [state the threat or promise], against the form, &c.

CHAPTER X.

OF OFFENCES AGAINST DECENCY.

Brothels.] A bawdy-house is held to be a common nuisance,¹ and persons who keep it are liable to be prosecuted for a misdemeanor. A lodger keeping a single room for such immoral purposes is within the rule.² And so is a feme covert, for participating in the government of the house: she may be said, in that sense, to keep it.³ But the bare solicitation of chastity is not indictable.⁴

This conduct of keeping a brothel is narrowly watched by the law. The stat. 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 5, enacts, that if any two inhabitants of a parish, paying scot and lot, do give notice to any constable, or peace officer where there is not any constable, of such parish, of any person keeping a bawdy-house, &c., the constable shall immediately go with such inhabitants before a justice, and upon oath being made by the inhabitants that they believe the contents of the notice to be true, and upon their entering into a recognizance⁵ to give or produce material evidence against such person, shall himself enter into a recognizance⁶ to prosecute with effect at the next sessions or assizes, according to the discretion of the magistrate. All reasonable expenses of the prosecution to be ascertained by two justices, and paid by the overseers, and 10*l.* to be paid to each of such inhabitants in case of conviction; and in default of payment by such overseers, such overseers shall forfeit to the constable double the amount of the sum he may be entitled to for expenses, and

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 74.

² R. v. Pierson, 1 Salk. 382.

³ R. v. Williams, 1 Salk. 384.

⁴ 1 Salk. 382; 2 Ld. Raym.

1: 97.

⁵ Of 30*l.*

⁶ Of 30*l.*

to the inhabitants double the sums of 10*l.* respectively due to them. It is to be observed that the next general or quarter sessions or the next assizes do not exclude the borough jurisdiction.¹

By sect. 6, the person so charged with keeping the house shall be apprehended and bound over, and the justice may take security for the good behaviour of the accused in the mean time, until the indictment shall be found, heard, and determined, or until the grand jury shall throw out the bill.

Sect. 7 imposes a penalty of 20*l.* on the constable who shall neglect, upon the notice given as aforesaid, to go before the justice, or enter into the recognizance, or who shall be wilfully negligent in carrying on the prosecution.

Sect. 8 provides for more easy proof as to the keeping of such a house, and enacts, that any person who shall appear, act, or behave as master or mistress, or as having the care, government, or management of any bawdy-house, &c., shall be deemed and taken to be the keeper thereof, and be punished as such, notwithstanding that he or she shall not, in fact, be the real owner or keeper thereof.

Under sect. 9, any inhabitant of the place may give evidence either for the prosecution² or on behalf of the defendant, notwithstanding his inhabitancy, or his having entered in the recognizance. And sect. 10 takes away the writ of certiorari, whether the prosecution be instituted under ss. 5, 6, of that Act, or in the ordinary course.³ But if the prosecutor should remove the indictment into the Central Criminal Court, under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 16, the statute of Geo. 2 does not apply.⁴

However, by 58 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 7,⁵ reciting the stat. 25 Geo. 2, a copy of the notice which shall be given to such constable shall also be served upon the overseers, or one of them, and they shall have reasonable notice to attend before the justice, and if they shall then and there enter into a recognizance to prosecute the offender, then the constable shall be relieved from entering into the said recognizance; but in the event of their neglect to attend, or refusal to comply with the request, the constable shall, in that case, continue liable to prosecute under the circumstances already mentioned in the Act of 25 Geo. 2, c. 36.

Judgment.] The judgment for this misdemeanor is fine and imprisonment, and such infamous punishment as the court shall think proper to inflict.⁶

¹ R. v. Charles, 31 L. J. M. C. 69; 9 Cox, 18.

² On an indictment of this nature, a female witness swore she was a sailor's wife, and that she had often prostituted herself in that house during her husband's absence out of the realm. Lord Raymond, C. J., said it was an odious piece of evidence, and ought not to be heard. Burn's Just. tit. "Lewdness."

³ R. v. Sanders, 9 Q. B. 235.

⁴ R. v. Brier and others, 19 L. J. M. C. 121. Rule to quash the writ of certiorari and for a procedendo refused.

⁵ This is the only section of the Act which is not repealed.

⁶ 3 Inst. 205; 1 Hawk. c. 74. And surety for good behaviour for a reasonable time may likewise be required.

The stat. 25 Geo. 2, c. 36, s. 2, prescribes a penalty of 100*l.* against such as keep unlicensed houses for music, dancing, &c., and that they shall be otherwise punishable as the law directs in the case of disorderly houses. The gist is the licence. It needs not to be shown that disorderly or improper conduct existed in the house. The defendant had his name over the house as a vintner; another had contracted to supply visitors with refreshments. Neither took any part in the management, although they were sometimes seen in the room. The recorder directed an acquittal.¹

Lewdness.] Very nearly connected with the offence just described are the faults of lewdness and disorderliness.² As the case of Sir C. Sedley, who was fined 2000 marks for indecent conduct in Covent Garden.³ So it is settled that a night-walker, or other such disorderly person may be indicted,⁴ and so likewise the frequenter of a bawdy-house; but it must be shown that the defendant knew the bad character of the place,⁵ and care must be taken to discriminate between matters which partake of the character of lewdness and those which merely relate to disorderly persons.

An indictment for an indecent exposure is not supported unless it be shown that more than one person might have witnessed it. Where no one was in sight at the time excepting L. C., although L. C. saw it, the count was held not to have been proved.⁶ And Parke, B., had ruled the same way in the case of a French master at York in 1830. The learned judge directed the jury to consider whether the defendant was in such a position that the passers-by in the street could have seen him if they had happened to look.⁷ So, in a public urinal, an exposure to a single individual is not indictable.⁸ But where a girl who witnessed an offence of this nature ran and called a policeman and another person, who, themselves, then saw it, the proof was held sufficient.⁹ So, again, a person was indicted at the sessions for an indecent exposure of his person. It appeared, however, that no one was in sight but A. when the offensive act took place, and as the indictment charged the act to have been done in the presence of A. and divers others, it was contended that the judgment must be arrested, or a verdict of Not guilty entered. The indictment, moreover, used the words "expose and ex-

¹ R. v. Wolf and others, 3 Cox, 578.

² See 1 Hawk. c. 5, s. 4; East, P. C. 3.

³ R. v. Sir C. Sedley, 1 Sid. 568. And by 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, every person wilfully, openly, lewdly, and obscenely exposing his person in any street, road, or public highway, or in the view thereof, or in any place of public resort, with intent to insult any female, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, and shall, upon conviction, be committed for a term not exceeding three calendar months, with hard labour. See R. v. Justices of Newcastle, 1 Barn. & Cress. 933. See also 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 58. [Metropolis Police Act.]

⁴ Poph. 208.

⁵ Burn's Just. tit. "Lewdness."

⁶ R. v. Watson, 2 Cox, 376.

⁷ Cited in R. v. Webb, post; Den. 344. Parker, B.

⁸ R. v. Orchard, 3 Cox, 248.

⁹ R. v. Bunyan, 1 Cox, 74. The girl was not called.

hibit," without adding "to the view of," or words to that effect. The court held the evidence defective, and a majority of the judges thought the indictment bad in arrest of judgment, and *Watson's case*¹ was relied upon. And Parke, B., mentioned the case of the French master at York who was tried before him, and that he directed the jury in that case to acquit if they thought that no person except one could have seen the defendant. It did not matter whether passers-by did see, but the question was whether they might have seen had they looked. A verdict of Not guilty was entered in the principal case.² But where the defendant exposed himself in an omnibus where any one might have seen him, the judges held—1, that an omnibus is a public place; 2, that as the defendant might have been seen [in fact he was seen] he was rightly convicted; 3, that the indictment need not conclude ad commune nocumentum.³ A charge of having obscene pictures, with intent to publish, in possession, is not indictable as a misdemeanor,⁴ but the procuring and obtaining them for that purpose is.⁵

It has been held that a woman who ran in a public way naked down to the waist was not indictable, for "nothing appears immodest or unlawful."⁶

An indictment was once preferred against an individual for converting his house into an hospital for taking in and delivering lewd, idle, and disorderly unmarried women, who, after their delivery, went away and deserted their children, whereby such children became chargeable to the parish. It certainly might be desirable that the parish should be indemnified against such casualties, but the court were clear that an indictment could not be sustained, and by Lord Mansfield: "By what law is it criminal to deliver a woman when she is with child?" The rule was, therefore, made absolute to quash the indictment.⁷

Showing a monstrous birth for money seems likewise to have been disapproved of by Lord Chancellor Nottingham.⁸

Judgment.] The sentence for the respective offences mentioned above is fine and imprisonment, together with hard labour.⁹

Obscene libels.] Obscene writings or pictures are highly repudiated at common law. Their tendency to deprave public morals

¹ Supra.

² R. v. Webb, Den. 338; 18 L. J. M. C. 39.

³ R. v. Holmes, 22 L. J. M. C. 122; Dears. 207. Whether the indictment should have said that he exposed his private parts, instead of his person, qu.?

⁴ R. v. Heath was cited as authority for this; ante.

⁵ R. v. Dugdale, Den. & P. 64. R. v. Fuller was cited. S. C. nom.

Dugdale v. Reg. (in error), 22 L. J. M. C. 50; 1 El. & Bl. 425.

⁶ R. v. Gallard, W. Kel. 163.

⁷ R. v. M' Donald, 3 Burr. 1645.

⁸ Herring v. Walround, Ca. in Ch. 1735, p. 110, and in the margin of the book it is said to be a misdemeanor.

⁹ 1 Hawk. c. 5, s. 6; Poph. 208; and, as it should seem, bound over to good behaviour, if thought fit. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29.

cannot be too deeply felt, and we consequently find, that the legislature has not been backward in lending assistance to diminish a nuisance of this description.¹

But we have, in this place, to deal with the offence as a misdemeanor, and so subject to indictment. At one time, nevertheless, it was conceived, that although a crime calculated to shake religion, as profaneness on the stage, was indictable, yet that the writing of an obscene book was punishable only in the spiritual court.² But this opinion was subsequently overruled, after much consideration, in R. v. Curl. The defendant was indicted for printing and publishing an obscene libel, and his counsel urged the case of R. v. Read as an authority in his favour, upon which the court determined to give the matter a full consideration. And, subsequently, they said, that they should have adjudged Read's case otherwise, and gave judgment for the crown.³ No doubt has since been entertained but that such acts as these are misdemeanors.

Judgment.] The judgment is, that the offender be fined and imprisoned, and suffer such corporal punishment as the court may award,⁴ and hard labour is added by 3 Geo. 4, c. 114. And by 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 29, any public selling or exposing for public sale, or to public view, of any obscene book, print, picture, or other indecent exhibition, is punishable with hard labour in addition to any other punishment. And, moreover, by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 83, s. 1, a power of search into premises suspected of having obscene books, &c., is given to magistrates. And proof upon oath must be given that one or more of such books, &c., has been sold, &c., at or in connection with the place, and that the publica-

¹ By 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, every person exposing to view, in any street, road, highway, or public place, any obscene print, picture, or other indecent exhibition, shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond, and liable, upon conviction, to be punished with imprisonment for three calendar months, with hard labour. And by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 38, s. 2, reciting that doubts had arisen whether exposing to public view in the windows of shops in streets, highways, &c., any obscene print, &c., was an offence, it was enacted, that whoever shall expose, or cause to be exposed to public view, in the window or other part of any shop, or other building, situate in any street, road, highway, or public place, any obscene print, &c., shall be deemed to have so exposed the print, &c., within the intent and meaning of 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, and shall be punished accordingly. See likewise 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 54.

² R. v. Read, 11 Mod. 142; S. C. Fort. 98.

³ R. v. Curl, Str. 788. See also Id. 790, R. v. Hill, cited. The defendant went abroad, and was outlawed, being indicted for printing some obscene poems; and by the attorney-general, he would not have done so, if his counsel had thought it no libel. See also R. v. Wilkes, 4 Burr. 2527.

The evidence against the defendant must be exact. Upon a charge of exhibiting a box with an obscene painting on it, it was considered insufficient for the witness to say, "that is the box, or one similar to it." The identical box must be sworn to. R. v. Rosenstein, 2 C. & P. 414.

⁴ 1 Hawk. c. 73, s. 21.

tion in question is a misdemeanor. A power of destruction of the books, &c., is given to the justice upon non-appearance, or satisfaction to the mind of the justice that the article is of an obscene character.

Bathing.] It has been resolved, that bathing in a place of public resort is an offence, being contra bonos mores. As where the defendant bathed upon the east cliff at Brighton, dressing and undressing himself upon the beach. However, as it was the first prosecution in modern times, the court consented to his discharge, upon his entering into a recognizance to appear when called for, to receive sentence.¹ The judgment would otherwise have proceeded as in cases of misdemeanor similar to those which have been lately discussed.

CHAPTER XI.

OF GAMING AND GAMBLING HOUSES.

Both gaming and the keeping of a gambling house are offences punishable by indictment. Gaming accompanied by deceit is a misdemeanor both at common law and by statute, and play beyond a certain sum is made the subject of an indictment by the legislature. And the keeper of a gambling house is likewise obnoxious, at common law as well as by statute, to punishment for his mischievous vocation.

In the first place if a person be guilty of cheating, as by using false dice or cards, he may be indicted, and, upon conviction, fined and imprisoned at the common law.² And although play when practised innocently and as a recreation is said not to be unlawful, yet it should seem, that if the stake be excessive, such play would be deemed gaming, and so a misdemeanor at common law.

By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 17, every person who shall by any fraud or unlawful device, &c., in playing at or with cards, dice, tables,³ or

¹ R. v. Crunden, 2 Campb. 89.

² Anon. 7 Mod. 40, defendant prosecuted by information. See 11 Rep. 87 (b), Cro. Jac. 497; Cro. El. 90. Such a person may be apprehended by a private person, if caught in the act of using false dice, Cro. Car. 234.

³ Games within the old Act, 9 Ann. c. 14, are cricket, 1 Wils. 220; ut semb. 1 Cr. & M. 798: foot races, 2 Wils. 36; Cowp. 281; 1 Younge, 361: horse-racing, Str.

1159; 4 Burr. 2432; 4 T. R. 1;

6 T. R. 499; 2 Bos. & Pul. 51.

See 3 Vict. c. 5, repealing so much of 13 Geo. 2, c. 19, as relates to horse-racing. Wagers on horse-racing, although the race be for a legal plate: 2 Sir Wm. Bl. 706.

And see further as to wagers, Cowp. 282; 6 T. R. 499; 3 Campb. 140; as to billiards. R. v. Bedford, Lofft.

29, 42. See also Burn's Justice, tit. "Gaming" wagers 1 Hawk. c. 92, s. 47, et seq.

in bearing a part in the stakes, &c., or in betting on the side or hands of them that do play, or in wagering on the event of any game, &c., win from any other to himself or another, any sum of money or valuable thing, or shall, at any one time or sitting, win above the sum or value of 10*l.*,¹ shall be deemed guilty of obtaining such money, &c., by a false pretence with an intent to cheat or defraud, and be punishable accordingly.²

By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 4, certain penalties are ordained against the keepers of gaming houses, but there is a proviso that nothing in the Act should prevent any proceeding by indictment against the owner or keeper, or other person having the care or management of a common gaming house. Still, if summarily convicted, the defendant shall not be subject to an indictment, but he is open to an information at common law. Then by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 1, houses, offices, rooms, &c., opened for the purpose of any money or valuable thing being received by the owner, &c., as a consideration for any assurance, &c., to pay or give any money or valuable thing on the event or contingency of any horse race, or other race, fight, game, sport, or exercise, or for securing such payment by some other person, are declared to be common nuisances and contrary to law. Then follows sect. 2, enacting, that every such betting house shall be deemed a gaming house within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. Therefore, although the offence is visited by penalties under this Act of 16 & 17 Vict., it is indictable as a nuisance under 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109. An information charged the keeping of a betting house on Oct. 5, and on divers other days and times between Oct. 5 and Nov. 16. The proof was, that the defendant kept the house on November 8. This was held good by Wightman, J.³ The keeping of a room for betting upon horse-racing is not within the statute.⁴

By sect. 3, upon a bill filed in equity for any sum won, the defendant may be compelled to answer upon oath with respect to any such gain. Sect. 9 excepts the queen's palaces from the operation of the Act during the residence of royalty, provided the play be for ready money.

Under the old Act of 9 Ann. the court would not allow of two proceedings, even upon the same statute, where one had been tried, and might be resorted to a second time. As where an information was moved for against the defendant, upon the prosecutor's affidavit that he had lost 15*l.* to the defendant at one sitting. It was objected, that the prosecutor had already indicted the defendant, and that the grand jury had found the bill, and although to this it

¹ Other sections relate to summary convictions, to the power of magistrates with respect to gaming, &c. And see the stat. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, declaring betting houses a common nuisance.

² Penalties are awarded by various clauses, but the 8 & 9 Vict.

c. 109, shields the defendant from two prosecutions upon that statute in respect of the same act.

³ Onby v. Gee, 30 L. J. M. C. 222.

⁴ R. v. Crawshaw, Bell, 303; 30 L. J. M. C. 58.

was answered, that the indictment had been quashed for insufficiency, yet the court observed, that the grand jury might find another bill, and that there was no reason for their interposition.¹

With regard to the words "any time or sitting," Blackstone, J., observed upon one occasion, that to lose 10*l.* at one time, would be to lose it by a single stake or bet, but that to lose it at one sitting, would be to lose it in a course of play, where the company never parts, though the person may not be actually gaming during the whole time. So that an interval of an hour or two at dinner was held not to be such an interruption as to prevent the sum in question from being considered as won at a single sitting.²

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 5, the Acts against horse-racing were repealed,³ and the stakes or deposit to be paid to the winner of any race, or lawful sport, game, or exercise, or to the owner of any horse engaged in any race, are expressly saved by 16 & 17 Vict. c. 119, s. 6. But by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 109, s. 18, all contracts and agreements, whether by parole or in writing, by way of gaming or wagering, shall be null and void. No suit shall be brought to recover any money or valuable thing alleged to be won upon any wager, or which has been deposited to abide the event of any wager. Then follows a proviso, saving any plate, prize, or sum of money awarded to the winner of any lawful game, sport, pastime, or exercise.⁴

Nevertheless the keeper of a gambling house is punishable both at common law and by statute. It is regarded at common law in the light of a nuisance,⁵ and the attorney-general may take up proceedings, if he should think fit, which a private party has abandoned, and prosecute the offender to judgment.⁶

It has been decided, that rouge et noir is a game punishable by indictment. It was urged on the behalf of a defendant prosecuted for keeping a house where that game was played, that the keeping of a common gaming house was not an offence at common law, and that it only became a nuisance when it drew together a number of people in an inconvenient manner. It was also alleged, that rouge et noir was not a game mentioned in any one of the statutes which prescribe penalties for play. But the court would not entertain the rule for arresting the judgment, being clearly of opinion that the indictment was good, and Holroyd, J., observed, that he should have thought an allegation of the defendants having kept a common gaming house, sufficient.⁷

¹ Bones v. Booth, 2 Sir Wm. Bl. 1226. Anon. 5 Mod. 187. v. Longbotham, 2 Wils. 36. R. v. Darley and others, 1 Stark. 359.

² Under the repealed Act, "losing 10*l.* at any one time or sitting."

⁵ 10 Mod. 336.

³ 13 Geo. 2, c. 19.

⁶ R. v. Wood, 3 B. & Ad. 657. R. v. Oldfield, Id. 659, n.

⁴ See some old cases. Whaley v. Pajot, 2 Bos. & P. 51. Pulling v. Frost, 1 Esp. 235. M'Allister v. Haden, 2 Camp. 438. Lynall

⁷ R. v. Rogier and another, 1 B. & C. 272; 2 D. & Ry. 431; see also Leach, 493, per Grose, J.; 3 B. & C. 507, by Abbott, C. J.

So, a cock-pit has always been considered an unlawful game, and although the indictment was at common law, the court, upon one occasion, fined the defendant 12*l.* according to the measure prescribed by 33 Hen. 8, c. 9, and which, in this respect, is unrepealed (being at the rate of 40*s.* a day), for keeping such a place.¹ And one who suffered "fighting of cocks" in his house, was held properly convicted of a nuisance, by keeping a disorderly house.² And again, Lord Ellenborough refused to try a right to recover four guineas, because the action was founded upon a transaction of this nature.³ So is the law again with regard to bowling, if it be so conducted as to occasion a nuisance.⁴ It must be remarked, that the fraud under the Act must be a fraud during the game. Therefore, fraud to induce play is not sufficient. Still a combination so as to make it appear that the play of A. is less skilful than it really might be, is a conspiracy if the prosecutor be thereby tempted to play.⁵

Judgment.] The judgment at common law for unlawful gaming or keeping a gambling house, is fine and imprisonment, and hard labour is added by 3 Geo. 4, c. 114.

Lotteries.] By 10 & 11 Will. 3, c. 17, s. 4, all lotteries are declared to be "common and public nuisances," and all grants, &c. in respect of the same are "void and against law." The 2nd section imposes a pecuniary penalty, but a public nuisance is an indictable misdemeanor. The same may be said of "little goes," which are "common and public nuisances, and against law."⁶

The defendant kept an eating house, he also sold tickets for "White South Union Weekly Money Club," and "The Great Eastern Money Club." Prizes were drawn, and the fortunate holders received them, and the prizes were delivered by the defendant. The charge was for keeping a house for little goes, lotteries, and horse-racing bets. The court held, that the indictment was not good as to the horse-racing, but good as to the lotteries. "A ticket was purchased at the defendant's house with the expectation of a prize, and the defendant was concerned in delivering the ticket and the prize to the purchaser. The jury were therefore justified in inferring that the defendant kept a lottery." And as the 1st section declared the act of keeping a lottery to be a nuisance, it was clearly indictable, notwithstanding the penalty.⁷ The jury recommended the defendant to mercy, on the ground that he did not know that he was acting contrary to law. That

¹ R. v. Howell, 3 Keb. 465, 510.
And see 11 Rep. 87 (b); S. P., as to the unlawfulness of cock-fighting.

R. v. Medlor, 2 Show. 36.

² R. v. Higginson, 2 Burr. 1223.

³ Squires v. Whishen, 3 Camp.
140.

⁴ 3 Keb. 465.

⁵ R. v. Bailey, on 8 & 9 Vict.
c. 117, 4 Cox, 390.

⁶ 42 Geo. 3, c. 119.

⁷ R. v. Gregory, 5 B. & Adol.
555, was cited by the court.

recommendation did not invalidate the verdict.¹ And because there is a penalty attached, the offence of promoting lotteries is not the less a misdemeanor.²

CHAPTER XII.

SLAVE DEALING.

We have already intimated that slave dealing on the high seas, accompanied by a forcible carrying away of the slave, was made piracy, felony, and robbery, by 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, s. 9. By the same statute, sect. 10, if any person shall deal or trade in, purchase, &c., any slaves, or shall otherwise than as aforesaid (that is, as under sect. 9,) carry away any slaves, or contract for that purpose, or import them, or ship such persons, tranship, embark, receive, detain, or confine them on board, or contract for that purpose, or to ship, tranship, &c., such slaves for the purpose of being imported, or fit out, &c., any vessel for the unlawful purpose aforesaid, or knowingly and wilfully lend or advance, &c., any money, goods or effects, for the like purposes; or in like manner shall have become guarantee or security for agents for similar ends, or shall become a partner, directly or indirectly therein, or ship any money, goods, or effects, to accomplish the same, or take the charge or command of, or navigate, &c., any ship in furtherance of the above concerns, either as captain, master, mate, surgeon, or supercargo, or contract for that purpose, or shall knowingly or wilfully insure, or contract to insure any slaves or property embarked in slave dealing, or shall forge any certificate, certificate of valuation, sentence or decree of condemnation or restitution, copy of sentence or decree of condemnation or restitution, or any receipt (such receipt being required), or any part of any such certificate, or shall knowingly and wilfully utter and publish the same, with a guilty knowledge and intent to defraud the king, shall be and are thereby declared to be felons.

By sect. 2, if any petty officer, seaman, &c., shall knowingly give his services towards the carrying on any objects or contracts relating to the slave trade, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years. And all

¹ R. v. Crawshaw, Bell, 303. horse-racing, but they were not 30 L. J. M. C. 58; 8 Cox, 330. considered sufficient to uphold an ² R. v. Crawshaw, 30 L. J. M. indictment for nuisance.

C. 58. There were some counts for procurers, counsellors, aiders and abettors of such acts are made liable to the same punishment.¹

By sect. 48, offences committed within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, are to be dealt with according to 28 Hen. 8, c. 15, or 11 & 12 Will. 3, c. 7, or 46 Geo. 3, c. 54, and 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 36. By 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, s. 49, all offences against the Act which are committed out of the admiralty jurisdiction, and not within the local jurisdiction of any ordinary court of a British colony competent to try the offence, may be prosecuted by virtue of a commission issued under 46 Geo. 3, c. 54. And by sect. 50, all offences committed against the Act may be inquired of, tried, determined, and dealt with, as if the same had been respectively committed within the body of the county of Middlesex.

Serva and others were indicted at Exeter for murder on the high seas. The Felicidade was a Brazilian schooner, and was certainly a slaver. Orders were given by the captain upon the station to capture this vessel, if she appeared to be fitted up for the slave trade. The Felicidade was accordingly captured, and all the crew, except the prisoner Majavel, and three of the others, were put on board of the king's ship. The Felicidade was then manned with British seamen, and sent in pursuit of another vessel. The Echo, a Brazilian brigantine, was the name of this vessel, and she also surrendered. Serva, the prisoner, was on board of the Echo, and there the officer found 434 slaves. Serva was told he was to be taken for violating the slave treaties. On the next morning, a midshipman and nine British seamen were put on board the Felicidade to take charge of her; and, amongst others, the prisoners. But these prisoners immediately rose, and destroyed the midshipman and the nine seamen. It was insisted for the prisoners, that the capture both of the "Felicidade" and of the Echo were illegal, and several cases were cited. But Platt, B., thought that the Felicidade was in the lawful custody of His Majesty's officers, and that all on board the vessel were within the admiralty jurisdiction, and the jury found the prisoners guilty of murder. However, the case was reserved for the judges, and it was again argued; the last time by civilians. The prisoners' counsel said, that the force used was in order to regain liberty. If there were no legal capture, there was no corpus delicti. Now in the case of the Felicidade, the search was lawful, but the detention unlawful, for she had no slaves on board. In the case of the Echo the search was unlawful, although the detention might, per se, have been lawful, for the conditions precedent prescribed by the convention had not been performed. The judges were not unanimous, but eleven² held the conviction wrong.³ First, because there was a want of jurisdiction in an English court

¹ As to the trial, &c. see ss. 48, 49, 50, 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 36.

² Tindal, C. J.; Pollock, C. B.; Parke, B.; Alderson, B.; Patteson, J.; Williams, J.; Coltman, J.; Maule, J.; Rolfe, B.; Wightman, J.; Erle, J.

³ R. v. Serva and others, Den. C. C. 104; 2 Car. & K. 53.

to try an offence committed on board the Felicidade; secondly, because if the lawful possession of that vessel by the British crown, through its officers, would be sufficient to give jurisdiction, there was no evidence brought before the court at the trial to show that the possession was lawful.¹ Lord Denman, C. J., held that the possession of the Brazilian vessel by the British officers was a lawful possession under a seizure made whilst the vessel was employed in the slave trade, and thence, that the jurisdiction to try the case at Exeter,² grew out of the possession of the vessel under the general authority of the crown.³ Platt, B., thought that during the detention of the Felicidade, she was in the lawful possession of Her Majesty, and as much within the admiralty jurisdiction as the ship which captured her.⁴

The prisoner was charged with slave dealing. He pleaded auterfois acquit. It was objected, however, to the indictment, that it was bad in substance. The court held the plea bad, and proceeded to consider the objections to the indictment. As to the last four counts, it was admitted by the crown that the words "knowingly and wilfully" were essential, and that this omission was fatal. It remained, therefore, to consider whether the first four counts could stand. The objection was, that each charged distinct felonies, such as, to fit out, man, navigate, equip, despatch, use or employ, any ship or vessel, in order to accomplish the acts forbidden by the statute. As each count charged the prisoner with having done all the acts before mentioned, it was argued that the respective counts were bad for duplicity. But the court held, that one felony only was charged in each count, the whole being alleged to have been done to accomplish one and the same single object. Another objection was, that the counts were bad for want of negating the exceptions in the statute of Geo. 4. But the court said, that the subsequent Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 73, s. 12, had virtually repeated the exceptions in the former statute, and, moreover, the offences were charged as having been done after the passing of the repealing statute.⁵

Another objection was, that there was no allegation that the prisoner was a British subject, nor, that the offence was committed within Her Majesty's dominions. However, each count stated the offence to have been committed at London, within the jurisdiction of the Central Criminal Court.⁶

Judgment.] The judgment under 5 Geo. 4, c. 113, s. 12, is confinement not exceeding fourteen years, with hard labour for a term not exceeding five nor less than three years. Procurers, counsellors, aiders, and abettors, are included by the statute, but accessories after the fact are punishable under 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 28, ss. 8, 9.⁷

¹ Den. 154.

² Under 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 36, s. 22; and 7 Vict. c. 2, ss. 1, 3, 4.

³ Den. C. C. 155.

⁴ Den. 156.

⁵ R. v. Jennings, 1 Cox, C. C. 116.

⁶ S. C.

⁷ See Lonsdale, p. 36, n.

CHAPTER XIII.

OF ATTEMPTS TO COMMIT FELONY, &c.

Attempts and solicitations to commit crimes are, where not otherwise provided for by the legislature, indictable misdemeanors at common law. As an attempt to commit felony or misdemeanor, whether such misdemeanor be statutable or at common law.¹ An attempt to commit felony is punishable by hard labour, in addition to fine and imprisonment.² Drunkenness is no excuse for an attempt to commit suicide, although it may be evidence to show the intent of an act.³

Solicitations are equally illegal and punishable. As to commit an unnatural crime.⁴ And it is not necessary to negative in the indictment the commission of the crime, for the bare inciting is sufficient, being an act of itself. And, again, there was the like rule upon an indictment against the defendant for an attempt to suborn a person to commit perjury.⁵

By 14 & 15 Vict. c. 100, s. 9, persons charged with felony or misdemeanor may be convicted of the attempt upon the same indictment. But there shall be no prosecution for the same attempt. By sect. 12, no person shall be entitled to an acquittal for misdemeanor if the offence turn out to be felony, but the court may discharge the jury at their discretion. And no person shall be charged with felony upon the same facts, if convicted of misdemeanor.⁶ But an acquittal for murder does not bar an indictment for administering poison, by virtue of this section.⁷

Keys are implements of housebreaking within the 58th section of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96,⁸ and there should be a comma between "pick-lock" and "key."⁹ The indictment needs not to allege that the prisoner had the implements with intent to commit felony, nor is it necessary to prove that fact at the trial.¹⁰

So, again, soliciting by bribes, although they be not accepted, is an offence. And likewise soliciting a servant to steal his master's goods, although it be not laid in the indictment that the servant stole the goods, or that any act was done excepting the solicitation.¹¹

¹ R. v. Roderick, 7 C. & P. 795.
R. v. Butler, 6 C. & P. 368. R.
v. Scholefield, Cald. 397. See Russ.
& Ry. 107. R. v. Martin, 9 C. &
 P. 215. Not an intention, but an attempt.

² 3 Geo. 4, c. 114.

³ R. v. Doody, 4 Cox, 465.

⁴ 2 Ch. C. L. 50.

⁵ 2 East, 14, 17, 22, at Shrewsbury, cor. Adams, B.

⁶ See R. v. Shott, ante.

⁷ R. v. Connell, 6 Cox, 178.

⁸ The cases below were decided under 14 & 15 Vict. c. 19, s. 1, repealed.

⁹ R. v. Oldham, Den. & P. 472;
 21 L. J. M. C. 134.

¹⁰ S. P. R. v. Bailey, Dears. l.
 244. R. v. S — — and ux. 5 Cox,
 279; 23 L. J. M. C. 13.

¹¹ R. v. Higgins, 2 East, 5. R. v.
Daniel, 1 Salk. 380. R. v. Colling- wood, 3 Salk. 42; 2 L. R. 1116.

The soliciting of any person to commit a misdemeanor under the Post Office Act is a misdemeanor, and punishable with two years' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement.¹

Cruelty to children, servants, and helpless persons.] Cruelty is also an offence against public morals. As, where a master neglects to provide sufficient sustenance for his servant. But the indictment must allege that the party was of tender years, and under the defendant's control and dominion. For want of such a statement, a charge of this nature has been considered defective upon more than one occasion.² Although Lawrence, J., expressed his opinion in R. v. Ridley, that nonfeasance, with regard to food and clothing towards a child of tender years, was a misdemeanor.³

Judgment.] The judgment is fine and imprisonment.

CHAPTER XIV.

OF STEALING DEAD BODIES.

The offence of taking up dead bodies, either for the purposes of dissection or for profit, is considered to be an act of great indecency,⁴ and it is a misdemeanor at common law.⁵ But there may be a lawful custody of dead subjects for scientific purposes, which ¹ 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 36. Provided such confinement do not exceed one month at a time, nor three months in one year.

² R. v. Ridley, 2 Campb. 650. Id. 652, case at Exeter, cor. Le Blanc, J. This is the case of R. v. Friend and ux. Russ. & Ry. 20. The wife was acquitted upon two indictments, and the husband convicted on both, and sentence of imprisonment was passed upon him, but as the objection presented to the judges related not so much to the indictment as to the evidence adduced in support of it, they thought it best to adjourn the final decision, and so allow the defendant to undergo the whole of his sentence, although they considered the indictment defective for want of the allegation as to tender years mentioned in the text. Chambre, J., thought that this was not in any manner an indictable offence, being founded wholly on contract. Id. 22.

³ 2 Campb. 653. See also the case of an overseer who refused to provide necessary food for a pauper. R. v. Booth, Russ. & Ry. 47, n. See 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 26.

⁴ 4 Com. 236.

⁵ It is said that sixteen attempts at the least have been made in parliament to make this offence felony.

is calculated to work well for society, and the legislature has prescribed certain rules for the possession of bodies, which are designed to confine the practice of receiving such bodies within due limits, and, at the same time, not to offend against the feelings of the multitude.¹ However, although the unlawful taking of bodies from the grave is a misdemeanor, yet if the shroud, or other covering, or any property placed with the corpse, be taken away by the parties, the offence, as far as the chattels are concerned, is felony. And in such a case, the shroud, or coffin, &c., may be laid in the executors or other persons who buried the deceased, or, under some circumstances, in persons unknown.²

Upon one occasion, it was attempted to be argued in a case of misdemeanor of this nature, that it was one of ecclesiastical cognizance, if, indeed, it could be treated as a crime in any respect. The indictment charged a surgeon with entering a burying ground and taking a coffin out of the earth, from which it was alleged that the defendant took a dead body and carried it away for the purpose of dissecting it. And it was moved to arrest the judgment. But the court said, that common decency required that the practice should be put a stop to; that it was cognizable in a criminal court, as being highly indecorous, and contra bonos mores, and that the practice at the Old Bailey had been to try and punish such offences, and the defendant was fined five marks.³ The like decision was come to where the offence was committed for the sake of gain and profit. The indictment charged that the defendant, a certain dead body of a person unknown, lately before deceased, wilfully, unlawfully, and indecently did take and carry away, with intent to sell and dispose of the same for gain and profit. The evidence was that the defendant had taken a body from some burial ground, but from what particular place was uncertain. He was found guilty, and it was so clear that the indictment well lay, that no case was reserved.⁴ A person took away the body of his mother from the burial ground of dissenters, in order, through filial affection, to bury it with that of his father, then lately dead. He was held to have committed a misdemeanor.⁵

Judgment.] The judgment for this misdemeanor is fine or imprisonment, or both, at the discretion of the court.

¹ See the statute 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 75; and R. v. Feist, 27 L. J. M. C. 164; Dears. & B. 590.

² R. v. Haynes, 12 Rep. 113; East, P. C. 652; see also Id. 654.

³ R. v. Lynn, 2 T. R. 733; S. C. Leach, 497.

⁴ R. v. Gilles, 1 Russ. C. M. 415; S. C. Russ. & Ry. 366, n. This case was mentioned privately to the judge of the King's Bench, who intimated the opinion stated in the text. S. P. R. v. Cundick, 1 Dowl.

N. P. C. 13, where the defendant had illegally sold the body of a capital criminal. In this case the indictment was drawn in the form of a declaration or assumpsit, but the court held it good, the main points being rightly placed on the record.

⁵ R. v. Sharpe, Dears. & B. 160; 26 L. J. M. C. 47. But he was only fined 1s. and discharged. The cases of Lynn, Gilles, and Cundick were cited.

CHAPTER XV.

OF THE PURCHASE AND SALE OF OFFICES.

Purchase and sale of offices.] The sale or purchase of offices is looked upon as highly inexcusable. There is no doubt but that such an offence is punishable at common law. And thus Hawkins says, that the taking or giving a reward for offices of a public nature is bribery.¹ And, again, where it was objected upon an indictment for a conspiracy, that it was not a misdemeanor at common law to buy or sell the office of coast waiter, Lord Ellenborough observed, that it would be very difficult to argue after reading the case of R. v. Vaughan, in Burrow, that such an act was not a misdemeanor. It must be debated upon arrest of judgment, or upon a writ of error, and Grose, J., expressed himself without doubt to the same effect.²

The sale of offices has always been a ground for prosecution.³ This conduct was early forbidden by the legislature.⁴ The statute, however, which declares both sale and purchase to be misdemeanors, is the 49 Geo. 3, c. 126. By that Act, sect. 3, if any person shall sell or bargain for the sale of, or receive, have, or take any money, fee, gratuity, loan of money, reward or profit, directly or indirectly, or any promise, agreement, covenant, contract, bond or assurance, or shall by any device or means contract or agree to receive or have any money, &c.; or shall purchase or bargain for the purchase of, or give or pay any money, &c.; or make or enter into any promise, &c., to give or pay any money, &c.; or shall by any way, &c., contract or agree to give or pay any money, &c., directly or indirectly, for any office, commission, place, or employment specified or described in the said recited Act,⁵ or this Act,⁶ or for any deputation thereto, or any part,

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 67, s. 3.

² R. v. Pollman and others, 2 Campb. 229.

³ Noy. Rep. 102; Mo. 781.

⁴ By 12 Ric. 2, c. 2, in the case of chancellors, &c., who should appoint justices, sheriffs, escheators, &c. or other officers or ministers of the king. By 4 Hen. 4, c. 5, in the case of sheriffs, who are forbidden to let their bailiwicks to farm. By 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16.

⁵ That is to say,—5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, repealed; and the offices are,—49 Geo. 3, c. 126, s. 2,—any office, or the deputation thereof, concerning the administration of justice, or the receipt, controlment, or payment of the king's treasure, rent, revenue, &c.; or the customs, or custom houses, or the keeping of towns, castles, and fortresses, or any clerkship in a court of record where justice is to be administered. This Act is repealed as to offices in the customs only, by 6 Geo. 4, c. 105.

⁶ That is to say,—sect. 1,—offices in Scotland and Ireland,—all offices in the gift of the crown, or appointed by the crown. All commissions, civil, naval, or military. All places parcel, or participation of the profits thereof, or for any appointment or nomination thereto or resignation thereof, or for any consent to such appointment, nomination, or resignation, he shall be guilty, together with all such as wilfully and knowingly aid and abet the same, of a misdemeanor. By sect. 4, the like offence is declared in respect of any person who shall, in like manner make bargains, either by receiving or paying money, &c., for any interest or solicitation, or negotiation relating to such office, &c.; or shall, for or in expectation of any gain, &c., solicit, recommend, or negotiate in any manner for any person touching a nomination or appointment to such office. A cadetship is within the statute, and it was held well described in an indictment, as "office, commission, place, and employment."¹

And by sect. 5, persons opening or keeping any house, room, office, or place for soliciting, transacting, or negotiating such appointments, &c., or who shall knowingly aid, abet, or assist therein, shall be deemed and adjudged guilty of a misdemeanor. Exceptions to the rule are however enacted by sect. 7,² provided there be no advertisements, nor printed proposals; nor any bribe of any kind whatsoever relating to the same. And again, by sect. 9, offices particularly specified by 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, are excepted,³ and offices legally saleable before the passing of the 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, and in the gift of any person, by virtue of any office or of which any person is or shall be possessed under any patent or appointment for his life, and all promises, &c., which were valid before the passing of the Act, and acts done in pursuance thereof. Sect. 10 saves all legal deputations to offices, and all agreements, &c., lawfully made in respect of any allowance, salary, or payment by or to such principal or deputy respectively, out of the fees or profits of such offices. Sect. 11 excepts annual payments of fees due to former possessors of offices and agreements, &c., relating thereto, provided that the amount thereof be stated in each particular commission. Sect. 12 excepted certain offices in Ireland.⁴

and deputations belonging to the treasury, the secretary of state, the admiralty, the ordnance, the commander-in-chief, secretary-at-war, paymaster of the forces, the India board, excise, the treasurer of the navy, the commissioners of the navy, the commissioners of transports, the commissary-general, the store-keeper-general, and also to the principal officers of any public department or office in the kingdom, or the king's dominions here or abroad; and also to the East India Company.

¹ R. v. Charettie, 18 L. J. M. C. 100; 13 Q. B. 447.

² Commissions in the board of gentlemen pensioners, or yeomen of the guard. The marshalsea, the palace court, army commissions.

³ Offices whereof a person is seised in any estate of inheritance, or parkership, or keeping of any park, house, manor, garden, chase, forest: sect. 4. And sect. 7 saved harmless the chief justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, and the justices of assize; but alterations have been made in some respects with regard to these functionaries.

⁴ Sect. 13 directs the punishment of these misdemeanors in Scotland.

Under 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 62, it was held that the defendant might be charged with receiving a sum of money as a gift or present in the words of the statute, without mentioning the rupees alleged to have been accepted as a bribe, as Madras, Bombay, or Sicca rupees. And the money need not be called the money of the person from whom it was received, nor of any other person; nor need it be said that the money was received exclusively, or under colour of the defendant's office or employment; nor for whose use such money was received.¹ This case was carried into the Exchequer Chamber in error, where the court affirmed the conviction, and held the indictment well preferred, as the statute 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, applied to offences abroad as well as in England. The judgment was under 33 Geo. 3, that the defendant should be fined in, and forfeit 766*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, the full value of the gift, and be imprisoned till payment of such fine and forfeiture. Upon this judgment, it was held in the Exchequer Chamber that the gift being money, the money was forfeited, and the court had no option. Secondly, that as the jury had found the value of the gift, i. e. 8000 rupees to be worth 766*l.* 13*s.* 4*d.*, it was rightly estimated as the value at the time of its receipt. Thirdly, that the sentence of imprisonment until, &c. was correct.² By 15 & 16 Vict. c. 87, s. 3, it is a misdemeanor for any officer in Chancery to receive any gratuities. He is to be fined 500*l.*, to be removed, and to be incapacitated from ever thereafter holding any office, &c. By sect. 4, any such offender may be prosecuted by information by the attorney-general, or by a criminal information in the Queen's Bench, or by indictment.³

Indictment.] A count which alleged the offence to be that the defendant did unlawfully and corruptly contract with D. N. to procure an appointment to a certain office, &c., was held bad for setting out the offence. The contract must be to receive money or profit in order to come within the Act.⁴

Trial.] By 49 Geo. 3, c. 126, s. 14, all offences committed against that Act and 5 & 6 Edw. 6, c. 16, (now repealed,) by any governor, lieutenant-governor, or person having the chief command, civil or military, in any of His Majesty's dominions, colonies, or plantations, or his or their secretary or secretaries, may be prosecuted in the Court of King's Bench, in like manner as any crime, &c., committed by any person holding a public employment abroad, might be prosecuted under 42 Geo. 3, c. 85.

¹ Douglas v. The Queen, 13 Q. B. 74.

² S. C.

³ S. C.

⁴ Day v. The Queen, 2 Cox, 178.

CHAPTER XVI.

OTHER OFFENCES.

Unlawful oaths.] It has been already shown in a former section, that oaths which are inconsistent with the public safety are the subjects of misdemeanor. The like may be said of such oaths as are inimical to public trade. And it may here be added, that any oaths which do not fall under the heads already treated of, and which are, nevertheless, against public convenience, are also entitled to be ranked as matters of misdemeanor. Therefore, where certain night poachers were sworn to keep secret a scheme which was proposed to them, it was made the subject of an indictment to administer such an oath. And it was considered sufficient to say that the oath was to do an illegal act, without showing what the act was. And in the same case it was held immaterial to prove that the parties were sworn upon a Testament.¹

Conspiracy.] Certain conspiracies likewise, which militate against the public convenience, but which are neither mala in se, nor mala prohibita, may be mentioned here. As if an agreement be entered into to indict or acquit, so as to leave the question of right or wrong entirely indifferent.² So, where certain persons agreed to hiss at the Birmingham theatre, it was deemed to be an illegal confederacy, although one might clearly have hissed without offence.³ So, a combination amongst officers to resign their commissions is a conspiracy. The military service cannot be determined by such a confederacy.⁴

¹ Broadribb and others, 6 C. & P. 571.

² 9 Rep. 56; 1 Salk. 374; see 33 Edw. 1, stat. 3.

³ Anon. 2 Russ. C. M. 556. See also S. P. 2 Campb. 372, in the case of Macklin, the comedian, who indicted certain persons for hissing him whenever he appeared upon the stage. R. v. Clifford and others, 2 Campb. 227, against whom a criminal information was granted for a conspiracy to disturb the performances at Covent Garden theatre.

⁴ 3 Burr. 2476.

CHAPTER XVII.

OF BRIBERY AND RECEIVING BRIBES.

Bribery.] Very heavy punishments are awarded by the legislature against such as tamper with the parliamentary franchise. The usual proceeding is by information. The old Act, 2 Geo. 2, c. 24, prescribed two years as the limit of the time for prosecution, and as the punishment by way of penalty was not warded off by the judgment upon indictment or information,¹ the court would not aid an attempt to inflict the double pain. And although informations were at one period granted by the court within the two years, yet it was subsequently resolved, that an information ought not in general to be allowed, and especially after a judgment for the penalty, and that whilst the person is liable to that judgment, the extraordinary interposition ought to be withheld.² But the court entertained no doubt of their jurisdiction to permit such an information, as at common law,³ in addition to the penalties of the statute.⁴ It was the same thing as though the defendants had been convicted upon an indictment.⁵ And where there has been a conviction upon an indictment, the court will adjourn the passing of their sentence until the two years shall have elapsed, upon the defendant's entering into a recognizance. It was arranged upon one occasion, that the defendant should be bound in his own bond in 100*l.* to appear at the expiration of that period.⁶ As soon as the time had expired, however, the defendant was brought up, and received judgment of fine and imprisonment.⁷ And an information will not be granted until the same period has elapsed.⁸ It was totally immaterial, under the statute 2 Geo. 2, whether the party bribed had a right to vote or not, by reason of the words "claim to have" in that Act of parliament; but this point does not seem to have been decided at common law.⁹ So again, an information will lie for endeavouring to

¹ Sir Wm. Bl. 524.

² R. v. Pitt and R. v. Mead,
3 Burr. 1335; S.C. 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 380.

³ See R. v. Taylor, 12 Mod. 314.

⁴ 3 Burr. 1339.

⁵ Id.

⁶ R. v. Heydon, Id. 1359, 1389;
1 Sir Wm. Bl. 351, 356, 404.

⁷ Id. 1389. Although he stood convicted on the testimony of a single witness, whom he had himself indicted for perjury. But the court said, that all the witnesses to be brought forward upon the trial for perjury (except one), as well as Heydon himself, had been examined on Heydon's trial, and they added, that he could not be examined by reason of interest, and so they would not defer their judgment; S. C. See also Id. 1440.

⁸ R. v. Robinson, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 541.

⁹ 4 Burr. 1591. See further upon this subject, 1 Hawk. c. 67, s. 9, &c.

corrupt an elector to vote at the election of mayor, although no money be paid.¹

The 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102, however, repeals several Acts and provisions respecting bribery at elections, and amongst others, the 2 Geo. 2, c. 24, for the most part, and by sect. 2 makes the following acts misdemeanors:—1. Directly or indirectly giving, lending, &c. any money or valuable consideration to voters, or to induce or refrain from a vote. 2. Directly or indirectly giving, &c. any office, &c. in like manner. 3. Directly or indirectly making any gift, loan, &c. in order to induce a person to procure a return, or a vote. 4. The receiver or procurer as above. 5. Advancing or paying, &c. money for the purpose of bribery, or discharging or repaying money in like manner. The punishment is fine and imprisonment, and, moreover, a penalty of 100*l.* may be recoverable in respect thereof, with full costs of suit, by any person who will sue. Bonâ fide legal expenses are excluded. By sect. 3, voters guilty of corrupt practices upon, during, or after the election shall be alike guilty, and moreover, forfeit 10*l.*, recoverable as aforesaid.

By sect. 5, directly or indirectly using or threatening any force, &c., or threats of harm, or intimidation with reference to voters; or abduction, duress, or fraud, so as to interfere with the franchise, or compel, &c. any voter to give or refrain from his vote, is made a misdemeanor, accompanied by a forfeiture of 50*l.* as above. Again, by sect. 15, every election auditor must make a declaration, &c.; if he do any act wilfully contrary thereto, he becomes guilty of a misdemeanor.²

Other cases.] But bribery may be committed in many other matters connected with public affairs and the administration of justice. And thus the defendant who promised one H. 500*l.* as a compensation for his vote, in the election of certain members of a corporation, was held to be guilty of this offence.³ And, again, in a case concerning the election of a mayor, informations for bribery were allowed to be filed against both the contending parties.⁴ So a bribe offered to a jurymen, in order to influence his verdict, whether accepted or not, may be made the subject of an information.⁵ So where the defendant, who was clerk to an agent

¹ R. v. Cripland, 11 Mod. 357. And procuring one to personate a voter is a misdemeanor. R. v. Marsh, 6 Ad. & El. 236.

² Whether sect. 14, as to limitations, applies to informations as well as to penalties, qu.? 8 Cox, 425. See ss. 9, 12, 13, 35.—Sect. 10, costs of prosecution. Sect. 14, limitation of actions or prosecutions to one year. The 36th section declares a person, guilty of bribery by himself or his agents, incapacitated from sitting in that parliament. See also 21 & 22 Vict. c. 87.

³ R. v. Plympton, 2 Ld. Raym. 1377. It was deemed sufficient to allege, that H. had a right to vote without setting out the enabling clauses of the corporation charter.

⁴ R. v. Mayor of Tiverton, 8 Mod. 186.

⁵ R. v. Young, cited, 2 East, 14, 16.

for French prisoners, took bribes in order to procure the exchange of some of them out of their turn, he was visited, upon conviction, with a heavy punishment.¹ So, under 33 Geo. 3, c. 52, s. 62, to demand or receive any sum of money, or other valuable thing, as a gift or present, or under colour thereof, by any British subject holding office or employment under the crown, or the East India Company, shall be deemed and taken to be an extortion and a misdemeanor at law, and the offender shall forfeit the whole gift or present, or the full value thereof.²

So if an attorney should receive a bribe, he may be punished; and any undue reward for anything either against justice, or exceeding the fair measure of a reward, is a bribe.³ So if a commissioner for the examination of witnesses were to take a bribe, it would be a breach of trust, and he might be indicted and fined at the common law.⁴ And, of course, judicial bribery is a most grievous offence, whether the judge be swayed by the temptation, or refuse to accept the tender.⁵ Bribery, on the part of officers of the customs or excise, or officers of the army, navy, or marines, duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, is punishable by a pecuniary penalty; and an attempt to bribe such a person is an undoubted misdemeanor.⁶ So again, the court were quite clear that the defendant, who attempted to induce a privy councillor to give him a situation, by offering 5,000*l.* for that purpose, was guilty of misdemeanor.⁷

¹ R. v. Beale, cited, 1 East, 183.

² See upon this statute, R. v. Stevens and another, 5 East, 244.

³ Hob. 9.

⁴ Cro. Jac. 65.

⁵ See 3 Inst. 147; 4 Burr. 2500.

⁶ R. v. Cassano, 5 Esp. 231. But the defendant was acquitted, because the averment was,—“Delivered at a quay or wharf, appointed for the landing of certain goods,” whereas the order was to deliver them at the king's warehouse, which, not being a quay or wharf, became thus the subject of a variance. So, again, R. v. Everett, 8 B. & C. 114; 1 M. & Ry. 35. But the defendant was held entitled to have the judgment arrested for want of an allegation that the officer was a person whose duty it was to make seizures of goods liable to forfeiture, because every person employed in the service of the customs is not so authorized.

⁷ R. v. Vaughan, 4 Burr. 2494.

The first of these is the fact that the United States is a young nation, and that its history is a history of growth and expansion. The second is the fact that the United States is a nation of immigrants, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these immigrants. The third is the fact that the United States is a nation of free men, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these free men. The fourth is the fact that the United States is a nation of law, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these laws. The fifth is the fact that the United States is a nation of peace, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these peace.

The sixth is the fact that the United States is a nation of progress, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these progress. The seventh is the fact that the United States is a nation of justice, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these justice. The eighth is the fact that the United States is a nation of liberty, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these liberty. The ninth is the fact that the United States is a nation of equality, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these equality. The tenth is the fact that the United States is a nation of unity, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these unity.

The eleventh is the fact that the United States is a nation of strength, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these strength. The twelfth is the fact that the United States is a nation of wisdom, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these wisdom. The thirteenth is the fact that the United States is a nation of courage, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these courage. The fourteenth is the fact that the United States is a nation of faith, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these faith. The fifteenth is the fact that the United States is a nation of hope, and that its history is a history of the struggle for the rights of these hope.

PART XIII.

Of Indictable Offences against Public Trade.

CHAPTER I.

FORESTALLING, &c.

THE common law and the legislature have at times recognized many acts as prejudicial to commerce in general, and have marked them with the character of misdemeanors. The offences known by the names of engrossing and forestalling, although now abolished, were obnoxious to the common law, and punishable by indictment. The common law likewise views with displeasure any attempt to deceive by fraudulent exhibitions of goods, so as to give them a different appearance from their real value or composition, and the legislature has inflicted penalties for this misdeed.

All oaths taken by secret associations or societies are declared to be unlawful by statute, and such, therefore, which may be the fruits of private meetings, in order to raise wages, or compel regulations respecting work, &c. are illegal. The payment of wages otherwise than in coin is likewise, for the third offence, a misdemeanor. It seems also, that if a mayor or other officer corruptly refuse to confirm the freedom of the borough upon a person who has earned it, or become entitled to it, he may be proceeded against by information; for the freedom is one of the rewards belonging to industry, and it is to the disparagement of trade to withhold it, but this is not an offence punishable by indictment.¹ Nor is it the subject of an indictment to keep an open shop in a city contrary to immemorial custom.² Nor to exercise a trade, contrary to the byelaws of a borough.³

Forestalling, &c.] It has been said that forestalling and engrossing were punishable at common law. They were formerly subject to imprisonment and the pillory by statute, but by 12 Geo. 3, c. 71, the Acts upon this head were repealed, and the matter was again left to the operation of the common law. And now by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 24, all the offences of badgering, engrossing, forestalling and regrating were abolished, and all proceedings and prosecutions inhibited for the future. By sect. 2, numerous statutes on the subject were repealed. But by sect. 3, the offence of knowingly and fraudulently spreading or conspiring to spread false rumours, in order to enhance or decry the price of any goods; and of preventing or endeavouring to prevent by force or threat, any goods, &c. from being brought into any fair or market, are retained as though the Act had not been made.

¹ R. v. Atkinson, 3 Salk. 188.

³ R. v. Sharples, 4 T. R. 777.

² R. v. George, 3 Salk. 188.

Forestalling consisted in enhancing the common price of merchandise, or in using means to that effect, as by spreading false rumours, buying things or going to market¹ before the usual hour of the market, buying and selling the same thing in the same market, &c.² Wherefore it is that corn cannot be sold in the sheaf at common law.³

Engrossing was the getting into possession of large quantities of provisions, as fish,⁴ with intent to sell them again at an unreasonable profit.⁵ Regrating, a species of huckstery, was the buying and selling again in the same market, or within four miles thereof.⁶ The great case upon the subject was that of a Kent merchant, who was tried at Worcester for endeavouring in that city to raise the price of hops at market. The defendant found the market there very slack. The price had been 15*l.* and 16*l.* per cwt. but it had declined to 11*l.* and 13*l.* per cwt. The defendant said that this fall was owing to a prosecution which had been instituted against him, that the charge had been abandoned, and that hops must rise again. Further, he said that the stock of hops in the hands of the brewers was nearly exhausted, so that they must soon come to him or to the hop planters for hops, that hops would be at 20*l.* per cwt. and that the planters might depend on his help to keep up the price. The defendant then entered into contracts, by which he would become the purchaser of one-fifth of the produce of Worcestershire and Herefordshire, at a much higher price than that at which hops were when he arrived at Worcester: telling the hop-dealers at the same time that they had better with-

¹ Therefore an indictment charging the purchase of goods coming towards the market will be insufficient. R. v. Patchin, Gilb. Rep. 276.

² 1 Hawk. c. 80, s. 1.

³ Id. s. 4, clearly not in the market itself, Holt's Ca. 325.

⁴ R. v. Penn, Cro. Car. 314.

⁵ And the quantity engrossed should be stated in the indictment. R. v. Foster, 1 Ld. Raym. 475; engrossing wild fowl. Apples have been held by the barons of the exchequer not to be within the statute of 5 Edw. 6, c. 14. R. v. Baron and Boys, 13 Rep. 18.

⁶ See R. v. Rushby, 13 Rep. 529. But the defendant had been previously convicted before Lord Kenyon of the offence of regrating 30 quarters of oats, and the learned chief justice expressed a strong opinion, though it was strenuously urged on his behalf by Law, that one partner could not be held criminally answerable for the act of another partner, and it was proved that the act of regrating in question was done against the defendant's express order and consent by his partner. R. v. Rusby, Peake's Add. Ca. 189.

hold their hops from market, or not to sell them at a less price than he offered to give. The defendant succeeded in raising the value of hops from 13*l.* to 15*l.* per cwt. in a very short time. The reports he had thus promulgated appeared to be without foundation. Being convicted upon an information filed by leave of the court, who clearly recognized the conduct of the defendant as a misdemeanor at common law, he was fined 500*l.*, and sentenced to a month's imprisonment. But the prosecution by indictment against him had not been abandoned, as the defendant incorrectly declared in the Worcester market. This charge against him was for engrossing hops at Maidstone, and being convicted in London before Lord Kenyon, he was fined 500*l.* more, and sentenced to three months' imprisonment, it being considered that his offence had been aggravated by his neglect of the first proceedings which were taken against him.¹ Soon afterwards, a person was indicted for engrossing a great quantity of fish, geese, and ducks, with intent to sell the same again, but, as no quantity was specified, judgment was given in his favour upon demurrer.²

CHAPTER II.

MONOPOLIES.

Monopolies are also offensive to the common law, and those who engage in them are liable to fine and imprisonment. The monopoly arises by patent from the king, whereas engrossing is the act of the subject. But certain patents are legalized in the case of new inventions, with restrictions as to their term, and others concerning printing, saltpetre, &c. are likewise made exceptions.³ And although there is not much fear of jeopardy at the present day from such an event, it appears that an undue abatement of the price of our native commodities, as wool, &c., is punishable by fine and ransom.⁴

The statute 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, s. 18, was passed to restrain the raising of sums of money by small subscriptions, in other words, to discourage bubble companies. This Act is so far repealed, but ¹ R. v. Waddington, 1 East, 583. R. v. Gouldsburrough, Winch. 143; second case, Id. 167. The defendant had likewise suffered some imprisonment when he was called upon to receive his first sentence.

² See also R. v. Gilbert, 1 East,

5, by Hobart, C. J.; 1 Ro. Rep. 134. R. v. Copeland, Comb. 3.

³ See 3 Inst. 195, &c.; 1 Hawk. c. 79; 21 Jac. 1, c. 3.

⁴ 3 Inst. 181, 196; 4 Com. 158.

as analogous cases are sometimes useful, we have retained the four authorities on the subject.

It was not easy to convict upon this statute. Upon one occasion a question was made, whether the mere raising of a large sum by subscription, and making shares transferable, were unlawful, without reference to the tendency of the particular facts likely to come before the court and the jury. But it seemed to be considered an offence within the Act, that subscriptions were invited by holding out false and illegal conditions. The court, however, would not grant an information in the particular case, because the statute had not been acted upon for a great length of time, and the application was made by a private relator who had not been deluded by the scheme.¹

Again, the defendants were charged with making subscriptions towards raising a great sum of money for the purpose of buying corn, grinding it, making bread, and dealing in or distributing flour and bread. They were also charged with presuming to act as a corporate body, and pretending to raise a transferable and assignable stock. Other counts varied the mode of setting out the misdemeanors imputed. The jury found a special verdict, from whence it appeared that this was a company known by the name of "The Birmingham Corn and Bread Company," instituted for the purpose of supplying Birmingham and its neighbourhood with provisions during a time of scarcity. The jury further found that the company was beneficial to the inhabitants at large, but that, at the time of the verdict, the bakers and millers were injured by it.² The court, after hearing argument upon the subject, gave judgment for the defendants; for, first, the special verdict negatived the nuisance as to the time mentioned in the indictment, by using the word "is," by which the time of finding the verdict must be intended. And secondly, the particular facts complained of were not only not found to be nuisances, but the contrary, and as they did not come within any of the specific grievances pointed out by 6 Geo. 1, c. 18, the defendants could not come within the fair sense and meaning of any of the prohibitions.³

So again, where fifty persons agreed to raise 200 shares, at 210*l.* each, by small monthly subscriptions, for building houses for each other, the engagement being at an end as soon as the money should be paid, the court held that there was no illegality in the undertaking. And it made no difference that these persons were not to employ any others than their own tradesmen, or that the shares might be sold and transferred, because the purchaser was to be approved of by the society, and to become a party to the original articles. And if it were alleged that numbers joining in such undertakings might work a prejudice to the community, it might be at once replied, that the jury would take that

¹ R. v. Dodd, 9 East, 516.

² The words of the verdict were, "it is prejudicial," &c.

³ R. v. Webb and others, 14 East,

406. See 4 Taunt. 587; 3 M. & S. 488.

point into their consideration, and weigh it in deliberating upon their verdict.¹

The common law would, without doubt, punish an attempt to impose false goods upon the market. But the legislature has interfered on several occasions, and has particularly pointed out certain frauds against trade, visiting them with pecuniary penalties.² At common law, an offence of this nature would be a misdemeanor, and punished accordingly.³

CHAPTER III.

UNLAWFUL OATHS.

By 39 Geo. 3, c. 79, s. 2, all societies where unlawful oaths shall be taken within the intent and meaning of 37 Geo. 3, c. 123, or any oath not required nor authorized by law—and every society where the names of the members shall be kept secret from the society at large—and branch societies, acting separately from each other, but yet composing altogether one society—shall be deemed guilty of the like unlawful confederacy. Sect. 3 excepts declarations approved by two justices, and registered with the clerk of the peace, provided such approbation be confirmed at the quarter sessions. Sect. 4 excepts former members who do not continue members of such societies after the passing of the Act. And sects. 5, 6, and 7, relate to freemasons, who are likewise excepted upon certain conditions. Then by sect. 8, the proceedings against offenders is declared to be either before a justice, who may impose a penalty of 20*l.*, or by indictment. The judgment in this latter case is transportation for seven years, or imprisonment not exceeding two years. Sect. 9 empowers the justice or court to mitigate the punishment, if by fine or imprisonment, to one-third of such fine or imprisonment. Sect. 10 declares that the defendant shall not be punished by both modes of proceeding. And, by sect. 11, offenders may be indicted, as heretofore, if not prosecuted under the Act.

¹ Pratt v. Hutchinson (on demurrer), 15 East, 511. The plea did not allege that the society was prejudicial to the public at large. See Buck v. Buck, 1 Campb. 547. Kempson v. Saunders, 4 Bingh. 5; Duvergier v. Fellows, 5 Bingh. 248. Josephs v. Pebrer, 3 B. & C. 639; 5 D. & Ry. 542.

² See R. v. Pack, 6 T. R. 374. R. v. Reason, Id. 375, on 7 Geo. 2, c. 19, s. 2, for colouring hops with the vapour of the sulphur and brimstone. R. v. Jukes, 8 T. R. 536, 542, 625, on 36 Geo. 3, c. 60, s. 2. For falsely marking buttons with the word "gilt," knowing the same not to be gilt. 1 Eliz. c. 12, s. 1. Concerning deceitful practices with linen cloth, so as to make it look better than it really is. Punishment, one month's imprisonment, fine and forfeiture.

³ See ante, "False Pretences."

It is an offence against this statute to enter into an engagement not to make buttons under a certain price.¹ Certain night poachers were sworn to keep secret a scheme proposed to them. This was an indictable offence, and the indictment was correct, without showing what the illegal scheme was.²

By 57 Geo. 3, c. 19, s. 25, all Spencean clubs, and every other society where unlawful oaths, contrary to 37 Geo. 3, c. 123, and 52 Geo. 3, c. 104, are permitted, or where any illegal oath is taken, or any test or declaration, whether by words, signs, or otherwise, or any society employing any committee, delegate, &c., to confer with any other society, or to induce persons to become members thereof, shall be deemed unlawful combinations and confederacies within 39 Geo. 3, c. 79; and all persons corresponding with such societies, shall be considered equally guilty.

Sections 26 and 27 except Freemasons' lodges and declarations approved by magistrates under 39 Geo. 3, c. 79; and, likewise, meetings of Quakers, or for charitable purposes.³

¹ R. v. Ball and others, 6 C. & P. 6 C. & P. 571. And it was immaterial to show whether they had been sworn upon a Testament.
563. See R. v. Nield and others, 6 East, 417, upon the repealed statute, 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 106.

³ These acts are fully set out,

² R. v. Broadribb and others, ante, p. 349.

CHAPTER IV.

PAYMENT OF WAGES OTHERWISE THAN IN COIN.

By 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37, s. 9, any employer entering into a contract, or making any payment declared illegal by the Act, which forbids such payment otherwise than in the current coin of the realm to certain artificers,¹ shall, for the third offence,² be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 100*l*.

¹ In iron manufactories. Working mines of coal, iron, stone, limestone, salt rock. Working stone, slate, or clay; making salt, bricks, tiles, or quarries. Nails, &c., or articles of hardware made of iron or steel. Plated cutlery. Brass, tin, lead, pewter, or other metal, or japanned wares. Making, spinning, throwing, &c. any kinds of woollen, worsted, yarn, stuff, kersey, linen, fustian, cloth, serge, cotton, leather, fur, hemp, flax, mohair, or silk manufactures.

Making or preparing any glass, porcelain, china, or earthenware, or branches, &c. Making any bone, thread, silk, or cotton lace, or lace made of mixed materials. Sect. 20. Not to extend to any domestic servant, nor servant in husbandry. Sect. 21.

² First offence, a penalty before justices not exceeding 10*l*. nor less than 5*l*.; second offence, not exceeding 20*l*. nor less than 10*l*. Sect. 10.

CHAPTER V.

REFUSING FREEDOM.

It has been held, that an information, in the nature of a quo warranto,¹ should go against the mayor of a borough for refusing to admit certain persons to their freedom.² But it was subsequently arranged, that the right should be tried by means of feigned issues.³

However, an information for a conspiracy will not be granted for disfranchising freemen, if corrupt motives be denied.⁴

CHAPTER VI.

SEARCH OF CHINA PASSENGER SHIPS.

By 18 & 19 Vict. c. 104, s. 6, any person hindering a due search under the Act, is made liable to the penalties of misdemeanor. By sect. 7, the master who neglects to comply with the regulations of the Act, or who refuses to fulfil his contract with the passengers, and any person guilty of aiding such neglect or refusal, is liable to the same penalty. Under the Merchant Shipping Act,⁵ false declarations are punishable as misdemeanors.

¹ Not an indictment. See ante, p. 276.

² R. v. Osborn, Com. Rep. 240. By three justices. Eyre, J., contra.

³ Id. 241.

⁴ R. v. Davie and others, Dougl. 588. To the misdemeanors above mentioned in this section, offences against the stat. 5 Eliz. c. 4, respecting terms of apprenticeship, and 23 Geo. 2, c. 13, concerning the seduction of artificers, might have been added. But these statutes have been repealed; the 5 Eliz. by 54 Geo. 3, c. 96, and 23 Geo. 2 by 5 Geo. 4, c. 97, which also repealed the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 56, as to the seduction of colliers from the kingdom. See 3 Campb. 344. Upon 23 Geo. 2, c. 13; 4 Burr. 2026; 6 T. R. 739.

To entice an apprentice from his master is not a misdemeanor, although the court would not quash an indictment for that act, leaving the defendant to demur. R. v. Daniell, 6 Mod. 99. R. v. Kitchenner, 12 Mod. 195. An action upon the case is the proper remedy. Cowp. 54.

⁵ 18 & 19 Vict. c. 91, s. 9.

PART XIV.

Of Indictable Offences against the Public Revenue.

CHAPTER I.

OF SMUGGLING.

THE Act for the prevention of smuggling¹ contains, amongst many felonies, a misdemeanor respecting signals at sea. By that statute no person shall, after sunset, and before sunrise, between September 21 and April 1, or after eight in the evening, and before six in the morning, at any other time in the year, make, aid or assist in making, any signal from any vessel or boat for the purpose of smuggling, or on the coast, or within six miles thereof, for the like purpose. Any person may stop and arrest the offender making such signal, and convey him before a justice. And it shall not be necessary to prove on any indictment or information that any vessel or boat was actually on the coast. And the judgment is, that the offender shall, upon conviction, pay the penalty of 100*l.*, or be imprisoned, at the discretion of the court, for any term not exceeding one year, and be kept to hard labour.²

By sect. 245, it is provided, that if the defendant mean to insist that the signal was not given for the purpose charged, he must himself be prepared to show the fact negatively. And by sect. 246, in order to prevent the making of any such signal, any person may go for that purpose upon any lands without being liable to any indictment, suit, or action, for the same.

In a case upon the 52nd section of the old Act, 6 Geo. 4, c. 108, the indictment had set out that the defendants between sunset on the 8th and sunrise on the 9th of March, i.e., on the morning of the said 9th of March, did make the signal charged as the offence. Proof was given to this effect. But it was objected, that the indictment should have alleged the making of the signal "between ¹ 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 244. This and the following sections are not touched by 18 & 19 Vict. c. 96, s. 44. The stat. 19 Geo. 3, c. 69, against smuggling, was repealed as late only as the session of 1861. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 101.

² The words of the statute are, "The court before whom such offender or offenders shall be convicted." The same term occurred in an old Act, and it was objected for a defendant, that the court before whom, &c., must mean the judge at nisi prius. But per cur. "These words mean the court before whom judgment is given," and the defendant received sentence. R. v. Cock, 4 M. & S. 71.

the 21st day of September and the 1st of April," inasmuch as the prosecutor was not bound to the day laid, but might prove the offence to have been committed on any other day, or in any other month, so that, time being here of the essence of the misdemeanor, it ought to have formed a distinct and substantive averment in the words of the statute. But the court held, that judicial notice must be taken that the day averred in the indictment was, in fact, within the period mentioned in the statute. What burden of proof that throws upon the prisoner, it is not necessary to inquire; upon the face of the indictment the offence is charged upon a day between September and April.¹

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 248, if any persons, to the number of three or more, armed with fire-arms or other offensive weapons, shall within the United Kingdom, or within the limits of any port, harbour, or creek thereof, be assembled in order to be aiding and assisting in the illegal landing, screening, or carrying away of any prohibited goods, or any goods liable to duties, or in rescuing any person apprehended for any felony under this Act, or preventing such apprehension, or in case any persons to the number of three or more so armed as aforesaid, shall within the United Kingdom, or within the limits of any port, &c., be so aiding and assisting, every person so offending, or aiding, abetting, or assisting therein, shall be guilty of felony. By sect. 249, if any person shall maliciously shoot at any vessel or boat belonging to the navy, or in the service of the revenue, within 100 leagues of any port on the coast of the United Kingdom, or shall maliciously shoot at, maim, or dangerously wound any officer of the army, navy, or marines, being duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, and on full pay, or any officer of customs or excise, or any person acting in his aid and assistance, or duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, in the due execution of his office or duty, every person so offending, and every person aiding, abetting, or assisting therein, shall be guilty of felony.

By sect. 250, if any person being in company with more than four other persons, be found with any goods liable to forfeiture, under this or any other Act relating to the customs or excise, or in company with one other person within five miles of the sea coast, or of any navigable river leading therefrom, with such goods, and carrying offensive arms or weapons, or disguised in any way, he shall be guilty of felony. Under sect. 248, the assembling must be deliberate, and for the purpose of committing the forbidden offence. When a number of drunken persons went out from an alehouse, and proceeded to carry away some geneva which was found concealed in a vault, but it did not appear whether the prisoners were armed or not, the prisoners were acquitted, for there was neither a deliberate meeting, nor an armed assembly, and if the meeting had been deliberate, still the prisoners must have been armed to come within the Act. And the attorney-general declined to take a special verdict.¹ Under sects. 248 and 250, there must be some proof that the goods were prohibited or uncustomed; reasonable testimony should be given to this effect, and the matter will then be left with the jury.²

¹ R. v. Brown and others, M. & M. 163.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 305, if in any prosecution under the direction of the commissioners of customs in respect of any goods seized for nonpayment of duties, or any other cause of forfeiture, or for the recovering any penalty or penalties under this or any Act relating to the customs, any dispute shall arise whether the duties of customs or excise have been paid in respect of such goods, or the same have been lawfully imported or lawfully unshipped, or concerning the place from whence such goods were brought, then and in every such case the proof thereof shall be on the defendant in such prosecution.

And by sect. 308, upon the trial of any issue, or upon any judicial hearing or investigation touching any seizure, penalty, or forfeiture, or other proceeding under any law or laws relating to the customs or excise, or incident thereto, where it may be necessary to give proof of any order issued by the commissioners of the treasury, or by the commissioners of customs or inland revenue respectively, the order, or any letter or instructions referring thereto, which shall have been officially received by any officer of customs or excise for his government, and under which he shall have acted as such officer, shall be admitted and taken as sufficient evidence and proof of such order.

Questions have arisen as to what shall be called an offensive weapon. Upon one occasion, a common horsewhip was made the subject of discussion, but, after argument, the court strongly inclined in favour of the prisoner; thus construing the Act strictly. It was offered, however, to the attorney-general to argue the point, but he declining to do so, the prisoner was discharged.³ And large sticks about three feet long, with large knobs at the end, with several prongs, (the natural growth of the stick,) arising out of them, were held not to be offensive weapons, and it occurred to Gould, J., Perryn, B., and the recorder, that these weapons must be such as the law calls dangerous.⁴ So, long poles used by smugglers for the purpose of carrying their tubs of spirits, were held not to be offensive weapons within 6 Geo. 4, c. 108.

Upon the authority of *Ince's case*⁵ one Cosans was acquitted, but the court added, that although it would be difficult to say what should or should not be called an offensive weapon, it would be going a great deal too far to hold, that nothing but guns, pistols, daggers, and instruments of war should be so considered.⁶ Bludgeons, properly so called, clubs, bats, and anything not in com-

¹ R. v. Hutchinson, Leach, 339.
R. v. Spice and another, Id. 343, n.

² R. v. Shelley, Id. 340, n.

³ R. v. Fletcher, Id. 23; 2 Str. 1166.

⁴ R. v. Ince, Leach, 342, n.

⁵ R. v. Noakes, 5 C. & P. 326.

⁶ Id.

mon use for any other purpose than a weapon, the court said, were clearly offensive weapons within the statute.¹ However, although the weapon be offensive, yet if it be snatched up during the heat of an affray, the offence is not complete, for there must be a deliberate arming. It was so held, where the prisoner had accidentally seized a hatchet under these circumstances.² It was once held that if a person were active in perpetrating this offence, he need not be armed,³ but some doubts were subsequently entertained as to the correctness of this doctrine, and it was said to be a material circumstance in each man's case, that he should be armed with an offensive weapon.⁴ Nevertheless, it seems that if one man of a party be armed with an offensive weapon, the remainder, being in company and acting with their associate, will be brought within the provision of the statute. It was so considered in a case of poaching, where the judges held that one being armed, the offence was complete.⁵ Under sect. 64, the shooting must be malicious, and the other offences therein mentioned must be accompanied by malicious conduct.

Rescue of smugglers.] By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 251, if any person shall assault, resist, or obstruct any officer of the army, navy, or marines, employed in the prevention of smuggling and on full pay, or any officer of customs or excise, or any other person duly so employed, in the execution of his duty, or any person aiding him, he shall be transported for seven years,⁶ or suffer imprisonment, with hard labour, not exceeding three years.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 218, if any vessel or boat liable to seizure or examination under any Act or law for the prevention of smuggling, shall not bring to, when required, upon being chased by any vessel or boat within hearing, having the proper pendant and ensign of Her Majesty's ships hoisted, or by any vessel, &c., duly employed for the prevention of smuggling, having a proper pendant hoisted, it shall be lawful for the captain, master, or other person having the charge or command of such vessel, &c., in the navy employed as aforesaid, (first causing a gun to be fired as a signal,) to fire at or into such vessel or boat, and such captain, &c., shall be indemnified and discharged from any indictment, penalty, action, or other proceeding for so doing.

It is evident that the proof of what shall be a proper pendant or ensign is more easy under this enactment than under the Act which required that such a pendant, &c., as should be sanctioned by an order in council, or by a royal proclamation, must have

¹ R. v. Cosans, Leach, 342, n.
See the decisions as to "offensive weapons" upon indictments for robbery.

² R. v. Rose, Leach, 342, n.

³ R. v. Franklyn, Id. 225; Cald. 244.

⁴ Leach, 342, n.

⁵ R. v. Smith and others, Russ. & Ry. 368.

⁶ Penal servitude not exceeding three years: 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

been the pendant, &c., the hoisting of which would have warranted the captain in firing upon the smuggler. In one case, the custom-house vessel had not complied entirely with the direction of the statute 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, (an old Act for the prevention of smuggling,) and, consequently, the return of the fire by a smuggler thus attacked was held not to be a malicious shooting, although two of the custom-house crew were dangerously wounded. And a pardon was recommended on behalf of two prisoners who had been convicted.¹

When the defendant is brought up upon an attachment for rescuing a person arrested on a warrant for obstructing excise officers, the court will allow interrogatories to be put to the defendant, if it be thought fit on the part of the prosecution.²

It is a misdemeanor to obstruct officers of the revenue in the execution of their duty, and the defendants are punishable with fine and imprisonment.³ And, with reference to a search by custom-house officers, it has been said, that the person obstructing them in their search is liable to be proceeded against in cases where an information concerning smuggled goods has been laid, whether smuggled goods are found or not.⁴

In this case, however, the information was probably upon oath, for the writ of assistance conferred upon officers by the old Act of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 53, s. 38, has been held not to authorize them to break open and search houses without probable cause, or without reference to the event.

And, therefore, under 6 Geo. 4, c. 108, s. 40, (a similar clause to the present,) it was determined that an information against persons for assaulting and obstructing officers of the customs in the execution of their duty, cannot be supported, unless, at all events, some reasonable cause of suspicion be shown, as that uncustomed goods were in the house with a guilty knowledge on the part of the defendant. And, perhaps, that knowledge would be presumed from the circumstance of such goods being found in the house.⁵

¹ R. v. Reynolds and another, Russ. & Ry. 465.

² R. v. Horsley, 5 T. R. 362.

³ 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 53, s. 61.

⁴ R. v. Akers, 6 Esp. 125, note. By Lord Kenyon. "But the officers search at their peril." Id. The name of the person giving the information shall not be asked by the defendant's counsel. Id.

⁵ R. v. Watts and another, 1 B. & Adol. 166. That informations may be exhibited before commissioners of excise by another person than the attorney-general, or a revenue officer, see R. v. Ste- verton and others, 2 East, 362.

In this case it was held that the stat. 26 Geo. 3, c. 77, extends only to the superior courts of record.

See also post, sect. 7, Bribery of officers. R. v. Barfoot and others, 13 East, 506. Custom-house officer authorized to seize goods out of the limit of the particular port in respect of which he has received his deputation. What shall be said to be "found on board on the high seas," so as to incur a forfeiture. R. v. Nunn, 8 B. & C. 644; 3 M. & Ry. 75.

By 16 & 17 Vict. c. 107, s. 95, it is made a misdemeanor to take any goods out of a warehouse without paying the duty.

By sect. 303, the time for prosecuting under the Act is limited to three years.

By sect. 304, any indictment or information for any offence under the Act, may be tried in any county in England where the offence is committed in England, and so in Scotland and Ireland, as if the offence had been committed in the county where the indictment or information shall be tried.

By sect. 275, offences on the high seas shall be deemed to have been committed at the place on land into which the offender may be taken or be brought.

By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 93, s. 71, (an Act to regulate the trade of British possessions abroad,) if any person shall by force or violence, assault, resist, oppose, &c., any officer of the customs or navy, or other person employed in his office, or any person aiding, &c., such person, being convicted, shall be adjudged a felon, and shall be proceeded against as such, and shall be punished at the discretion of the court before whom such person shall be tried.

Naval and military stores.] The statute 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, s. 1, expressly excepts the 4 Geo. 4, c. 53, from its repealing clause. By that Act of 4 Geo. 4, which relates to the stealing and embezzlement of naval stores, the stealing or embezzling his Majesty's ammunition, sails, cordage, or naval or military stores, is made punishable by transportation for life, or not less than seven years,¹ or imprisonment for not more than seven years, with or without hard labour. It would seem that the offence is felony, for stealing and embezzling compose an act which causes the offender to be deemed to have feloniously stolen the articles in question, and the Mutiny Acts speak of persons in trust who embezzle military stores as being liable to be transported as felons by the sentence of a court martial. Procurers, counsellors, aiders and abettors, are included within the provisions of the Act of 4 Geo. 4, just mentioned.²

By 55 Geo. 3, c. 108, s. 127, (and similar provisions are annually included in the Mutiny Acts,) persons intrusted with military stores and found guilty of embezzling them, may be tried by a court martial, and transported as felons for life, or for any certain term of years, or may suffer fine, imprisonment, dismissal from the king's service, or civil and military incapacity, at the discretion of the courts, according to the nature and degree of the offence. The loss and damage to the crown may be estimated by the court martial, and recovered in a court of law from the offender, but it is conceived that this latter proceeding applies only where the sentence is less than transportation, because the offence is not directly made felony, but only subjected to transportation as felons are transported.

¹ Penal servitude for life, or not less than three years: 20 & 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

² See 2 Geo. 3, c. 28, s. 13.

Under the old Act, 22 Car. 2, c. 5, an officer might have been convicted of larceny at common law, if the stores taken were of any value, even under 20s., although that Act made the stealing such stores felony when the amount reached 20s.

The prisoner was foreman of a storehouse containing naval stores, and was intrusted with receiving and delivering out the stores when the clerk was absent. The prisoner cut some kersey from a bale, and delivered it to an accomplice to be taken out of the yard. The court directed a verdict against him for larceny at common law, though the value was under 20s.¹

By 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 89, s. 4,² persons defacing or destroying wholly, or in part, the marks upon the king's stores, together with counsellors and procurers, are expressly declared to be guilty of felony, and are made punishable by transportation for fourteen years, in like manner as other felons are directed to be transported by the laws and statutes of this realm. This act of erasing marks is certainly not a receiving, but as it is done for the purpose of concealment, which is usually an accompaniment of receiving, it may be deemed excusable to mention it in this place. By sect. 7, the court before whom any offender is convicted may mitigate the penalty of transportation by ordering a public whipping, fine, and imprisonment,³ or all or any one or more of the said ways and means at the discretion of the court. And by the same section the offender may be imprisoned till payment. The stat. 55 Geo. 3 extends these Acts to all public stores.⁴

By 28 Geo. 3 c. 55, s. 3, receivers of stocking frames, machines, or engines unlawfully sold or disposed of, shall be punished by solitary imprisonment,⁵ in the common gaol or house of correction of the county, &c., where the offence has been committed, without bail or mainprise, for not less than three, nor more than twelve calendar months.⁶

Public stores.] By 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 89, s. 2,⁷ to sell or deliver or receive,⁸ or have⁹ unlawfully any public stores, if the same be

¹ R. v. Thorne, East, P. C. 622. See Mann v. Owen, 9 B. & C. 595; 4 Man. & Ry. 449.

² See 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 41, and sect. 5 of this statute.

³ Without hard labour. R. v. Bridgess, 8 East, 53. Silversides v. Reg., 3 Q. B. 406; 2 Gale & D. 617.

⁴ Cap. 108, sect. 127.

⁵ But the st. 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, enacts, that no such confinement shall exceed one month at a time, nor more than three months in one year.

⁶ Under the 2nd section of the same Act, persons hiring frames and unlawfully selling them, are subject to the like punishment.

⁷ Reciting 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 41, s. 2; 9 Geo. 1, c. 8, ss. 3, 4; 17 Geo. 2, c. 40, s. 10.

⁸ There was a difficulty at one time respecting the connection of the offence of receiving and having in possession, which is now set at rest by 39 & 40 Geo. 3. R. v. Cole, East, P. C. 767.

⁹ See R. v. Cole, East, P. C. 767; S. C. 2 Russ. C. M. 276. And the not new, or one-third worn,¹ is, if the party be not a contractor,² an offence punishable by a forfeiture of 200*l.*³ with costs of suit,⁴ besides whipping⁵ and imprisonment,⁶ or by any or either of these punishments, at the discretion of the court, but the penalty of 200*l.* may be mitigated by the judge or justices.⁷ The following evidence was deemed sufficient to convict the prisoner upon an indictment framed under 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 41, s. 2:—Certain bags were sent to the goods' department of a railway. The prisoner telegraphed to deliver these bags to E. This was not done, but a letter written by the railway officer stating the arrival of the bags, and asking where they were to be delivered, was shown to the prisoner. He directed the clerk in the office to deliver to E. as before. The bags were opened, and were found to contain goods marked with the broad arrow. Bags had been thus forwarded and delivered on other occasions. The court at once affirmed the conviction.⁸ Possession is not sufficient without proof of knowledge.⁹ An allegation that A., on the 19th of May, 1843, not being a contractor, had naval stores in his possession, was sufficient. The date showed A. not to be a contractor, and likewise the illegal possession.¹⁰ The point of knowledge was considered still more recently, and very carefully, in a case reserved by the recorder of Plymouth. The judges of appeal held that mere possession was not sufficient, and R. v. Cohen was recognized.¹¹ But Martin, B.,¹² hazarded an opinion, in which some of the court did not concur, namely, that the goods must be found in the possession of the individual; in other words, that if he should have parted with them before the search, the offence could not be made out. Willes, J., was of another opinion, and, for an obvious reason, regretted that the point, which was not ripe for decision, had been made. But Cockburn, C. J., was entirely opposed to this doctrine, and cited R. v. Santey as precisely in point.¹³ For the prosecution, however, it was said that Wightman, J., had ruled it to be not necessary to show affirmatively that the prisoner had knowledge of the mark of the broad arrow.¹⁴ By 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 89, s. 7, there is a general power of informer was held in this case to be a good witness, for the court might inflict a corporal punishment as well as a pecuniary penalty. S. C. R. v. Peake, 217.

¹ For if new, or not one-third worn, the offence is felony.

² And although he be a contractor, the stores must have come bonâ fide into his possession.

³ See R. v. Haman, 2 Ld. Raym. 1104.

⁴ See R. v. Chapple, 5 T. R. 371, n.

⁵ See R. v. Bland, Leach, 595; S. C. 5 T. R. 570; East, P. C. 760.

⁶ But without hard labour. R. v. Bridges, 1 East, 53.

⁷ Barges, boats, and other craft may be searched, and any person found in possession of marked stores may at once be committed for trial: sect. 12.

⁸ R. v. Sunley, Bell, 145; 8 Cox, 179.

⁹ R. v. Cohen, 8 Cox, 41. R. v. Willmet, 3 Cox, 281.

¹⁰ R. v. Silversides, 3 Q. B. 406; 2 Gale & D. 617.

¹¹ R. v. Sleep, 8 Cox, C. C. 472; Leigh & Cave, 44; 30 L. J. M. C. 170.

¹² Crompton, J., concurred.

¹³ 8 Cox, C. C. 179, ante.

¹⁴ Maids. Sp. As. 1861; 8 Cox, 477.

mitigation.¹ The 11th section of this Act speaks of another misdemeanor upon this head of public stores. Having given certain powers of search and commitment² to commissioners and justices, it goes on to say, that unless the commissioner or justice, on proof of the stores being found in the possession of the party, shall be satisfied, within a reasonable time to be fixed by the commissioner or justice, of their having been honestly come by, and not embezzled or stolen, or if embezzled or stolen, of the defendant's ignorance of the fact, such defendant shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.³ Then follows the 12th section, enacting, that if upon search made under the authority of the commissioners of the navy or other departments, any unmarked stores should be found which might reasonably be supposed to belong to the king, the commissioner or justice may set a time in like manner as under sect. 18, for the defendant to show that the stores so unmarked were not embezzled, or if embezzled, that they were honestly come by, and in default of satisfying the commissioner or justice, the clause goes on to ordain, that the party found in possession of the stores in question shall be guilty of a misdemeanor,⁴ and the barge, &c., shall be forfeited. By sect. 13, the power of stopping suspected persons anywhere is conferred, and a general authority to apprehend offenders is given. By sect. 14, all the stores, &c., and things forfeited are to be returned into His Majesty's warehouses, unless proof be made within three months to the satisfaction of the commissioner or justice, that such stores or other things are the property of other persons. And sect. 15 provides for the sale of the forfeited craft, and for the distribution of the proceeds. The 16th section provides for the jurisdiction of these last-mentioned misdemeanors, (that is to say,) the offences comprised in sections 11 and 12, and inflicts a gradation of penalties. And it will be observed, that these are some of the cases which are recognizable by justices as misdemeanors eo nomine. The forfeiture for the first offence is 40s., for the second 5*l.*, for the third and any subsequent offence 10*l.*, to be levied, in case of nonpayment, by distress and sale; and if no sufficient distress can be found, the offender may be committed for three calendar months, unless the penalty be sooner paid. By sect. 17, the conviction is to be returned to the next sessions, and it is declared to be final. The 18th section, however, gives a summary jurisdiction to a commissioner or justice to dispose of cases of selling and receiving stores not exceeding the value of 20s. in a summary manner, provided that the proceeding takes place within ¹ The 8th, 9th, and 10th sections relate to rewards. But, by sect. 25, the buyer of stores may be protected by a certificate, the forging of which (sect. 26) is made punishable by a penalty of 200*l.*

² There could not be a commitment by the commissioners of the navy under 9 & 10 Will. 3, before an indictment had been preferred and found. R. v. Innell and another, 1 Hawk. c. 89, s. 16.

³ And punishable with fine and imprisonment under sect. 16; see post. See as to a certificate, note (1) above.

⁴ And punishable with fine or imprisonment, under sect. 16; see post. But there might be a certificate authorizing the possession; see note (1) above.

three months after the commission of the offence. The fine upon such occasions, which, under sect. 19, may be mitigated to one-half by the commissioner or justice, is fixed at 10*l.*, to be levied by distress, and the offender may be imprisoned for three months in default of sufficient distress,¹ or he may be imprisoned with hard labour without a fine.² It seems that an appeal will lie, but the court will not discharge a person committed for the offence pending the appeal.³ The 19th section, however, provides for the costs. But the consent of the respective officers of the navy, &c., must be had before this summary jurisdiction can be exercised.⁴ Nevertheless, so that the offender be not twice punished for the same offence, it is provided by sect. 24, that nothing in the Act contained shall prevent the defendant from being prosecuted as a receiver of stolen goods. Sect. 27 provides for the security of prosecutors, if sued by the person whose barge or other craft has been seized. Other sections relate to the form of procedure, and extend the provisions of the statute to Scotland. And 52 Geo. 3, c. 12, extends the Acts upon the subject to Ireland, provided that the consent of the naval storekeeper of the port be had before a summary jurisdiction be exercised by the justice. All public stores were subsequently included within these laws by 55 Geo. 3, c. 127, the stat. 54 Geo. 3, c. 60, having previously extended them to certain descriptions of cordage. Likewise, by 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 75, s. 12, knowingly and wilfully, and with intent to defraud and injure the true owner, &c., to purchase or receive any anchors, cables, or goods, or merchandise, which may have been taken up, weighed, swept for, or taken possession of, (whether the same shall have belonged to any ship, &c., in distress, or any wreck,) is punishable with transportation for seven years,⁵ or fine and imprisonment as for a misdemeanor, unless this statute of 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 75, shall have been complied with.

Witness.] It has been decided by Lord Kenyon that an informer under these statutes may be a witness.⁶ Although the lord chief justice had once rejected such a person on the ground of his being interested in the prospect of a fine.⁷ Subsequently, however, Lord Kenyon came to the conclusion, that as it lay in the discretion of the court to inflict a fine or corporal punishment, the objection could only go to the credit, and not to the competency of the witness.⁸ Before this latter determination, the point had become of some importance, because questions were made as to the person who should be deemed to be the informer. Thus, it was held, that the party upon whose suggestion the seizure was made was the informer, and not the individual who, after the seizures, communi-

¹ Sect. 21 gives an appeal.

² Ex parte Wilmott, 30 L. J. M. C. 161; 2 Will. 4, c. 40, s. 11.

³ Id.

⁴ Sect. 20.

⁵ Penal servitude not exceeding three years. As to accessories, see Lonsdale, 36, 229.

⁶ R. v. Cole, 1 Esp. 169.

⁷ R. v. Blackman, Id. 95.

⁸ R. v. Cole, Id. 169.

cated the fact to the admiralty.¹ So, a peace officer who first discovered the naval stores which were concealed, was considered to be the informer.²

Joinder.] It was said by Lord Ellenborough in giving judgment upon the case of R. v. Johnson, that counts for having in possession new stores, or stores not more than one-third worn, may well be joined with counts for possessing such stores when not new, or more than one-third worn.³

Evidence.] As to the proof of these offences, it is settled, that the fact of possession is not conclusive. And even although the person found to be in possession has not got the certificates which is pointed out by the statute as an indemnity to the buyer, yet other circumstances may still be called into consideration, in order to afford an explanation of the affair. As in the case of the widow who was found in possession of certain canvas which had originally been old sails belonging to His Majesty, and was accordingly prosecuted by the crown. She proved that the stores in question had become her husband's property by virtue of a purchase at a public sale; that her husband was no longer living, and that the canvas had been in use for table linen and sheeting in the family for a considerable time. The counsel for the crown insisted, that this evidence could not avail for want of the certificate, which was particularly mentioned as an excuse for possession of such stores. But Foster, J., left the evidence with the jury, and said that if they should think that the defendant had become possessed of this linen without any fraud or misbehaviour on her part, they should acquit her, and she was accordingly acquitted.⁴ And, upon the authority of this case, Lord Kenyon admitted a defendant to prove that he had purchased the stores mentioned in the indictment against him from a person who might well be presumed to have been possessed of the proper certificate, from the circumstance of that person having frequently been a purchaser at such sales. For it might be inconvenient for the buyer of a whole lot, and not consistent with his safety, to part with his certificate upon the mere sale of a portion of his purchase. The defendant was accordingly acquitted upon this evidence.⁵ Although the lord chief justice laid it down that the onus of proving an innocent possession lay on the defendant as soon as evidence of finding stores with the king's mark in his possession had been offered.⁶ And so, again, it lies on the defendant to show that he is within the exception in the statute concerning contractors, and the prosecutor, although he may have alleged that the defendant was not a contractor, is, nevertheless, under no obligation to prove the regular averment.⁷

¹ R. v. Banks, Id. 144, and the cases of bribery were cited, 4 Burr. 2284, 2464.

² R. v. Blackman, Id. 95.

³ 3 M. & S. 550.

⁴ Anon. East, P. C. 765.

⁵ R. v. Banks, 1 Esp. 145.

⁶ Id.

⁷ R. v. Willis, 1 Hawk. c. 80, s. 17.

By 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 26, every person who, within the metropolitan police district, shall knowingly take in exchange from any seaman or other person, not being the owner or master of any vessel, anything belonging to any vessel lying in the river Thames, or in any of the docks or creeks adjacent thereto, or any part of the cargo of any such vessel, or any stores or articles in charge of the owner or master of any such vessel, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.¹

¹ Punishable with fine and imprisonment.

CHAPTER II.

RECEIVERS OF STOLEN GOODS ON THE THAMES.

By 2 Geo. 3, c. 18, s. 12, to buy or receive any part of the cargo or lading of any ship, or any goods so belonging thereto, with a guilty knowledge, or privately to buy or receive the same by suffering any door, window, or shutter to be left open or unprotected, between sun-setting and sun-rising, for that purpose, or to buy and receive the same in a clandestine manner, is made punishable by transportation for fourteen years,¹ although the principal felon has not been convicted. It seems that this offence would have been deemed felony under 3 Wm. & M., c. 9, s. 4,² without this latter provision, if the principal felon had been convicted. But by sect. 14 the case is made still clearer, for upon discovering two other offenders, a receiver is, by that section, entitled to a pardon for all such felonies. And, agreeably to this construction, the Court of King's Bench refused to bail a person who was charged with receiving part of the cargo belonging to a vessel in the Thames, being of opinion that the offence amounted to felony.³ Nevertheless, the legislature, in passing the 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 89, treated this offence as a misdemeanor, reciting that, by the 2 Geo. 3, it had not been declared to be felony, and then enacting that persons charged under the Act of 2 Geo. 3 should plead to the indictment, without having leave to traverse the same, as is usual in cases of misdemeanors.⁴

Pilots, &c.] Frauds by pilots are dealt with by 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 365. By sect. 366 every pilot who shall endanger a ship wilfully or negligently, or through drunkenness, shall be guilty of misdemeanor.

¹ Penal servitude.

² Repealed.

³ R. v. Wyer, Leach, 480; 2 T. R. 77. By sect. 18 offenders may be apprehended without a warrant.

⁴ See East, P. C. 753; 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 75, s. 12; 2 & 3 Vict. c. 47, s. 26.

CHAPTER III.

POST OFFICE.

The next offence relating to matters connected with the public revenue which we shall mention, is that of stealing letters connected with the post office. The Act for consolidating the laws concerning offences against the post office is general and comprehensive, and avoids the numerous questions which were perpetually arising to embarrass the old repealed statutes.

By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 26, Every person employed under the post office who shall steal a post letter shall be guilty of felony, and if any such post letter so stolen shall contain any chattel or money, the punishment is aggravated.¹ By sect. 27, every person who shall steal from or out of a post letter, any chattel, or money, or valuable security, shall be guilty of felony.² By sect. 28, the stealing of a post letter-bag, or a post letter from a post letter-bag, or a letter from the post office, or from an officer of the post office, or from a mail, and the stopping of a mail with intent to rob or search the same, is made felony.³ By sect. 29, whoever shall steal or unlawfully take away a post letter-bag sent by a post office packet, or a letter out of any such bag, or shall open any such bag unlawfully, shall be guilty of felony.⁴ As soon as the letter reaches the office, the protection of the law begins. A letter was brought to the postmistress containing a 10*l.* note; she took it and put it under a glass. The prisoner took it. This was a post letter within the statute.⁵ It was usual to put letters into pigeon-holes in the post office for private individuals. This happened at Liverpool, and thus, paying a fee, the merchants got their letters sooner than otherwise. These pigeon-holes were held to be still in the post office upon an indictment for larceny.⁶ It will occur to the reader that a charge may be made against a person employed in the post office, for the simple fact of stealing a letter, without reference to his occupation, and as the punishments are, or they were formerly the same, it might be questioned whether the indictment could be sustained:—Expressio unius est exclusio alterius. And it seems, that a person so intrusted cannot be charged under sect. 27, which affects the public at large, but that he may be indicted for offences under sects. 28 and 29, which, although they ¹ In England and Ireland. In Scotland, of a high offence. As to bail in Scotland, see sect. 38.

² See Embezzlement, first offence.

³ In England, &c.

⁴ See, as above.

⁵ R. v. Rogers, 5 Cox, 193.

⁶ R. v. Brett, 2 Russ. C. M. 220.

do indeed respect the people in general, yet contain offences independent of the 27th section. Thus, under the old law, a charge taker and letter carrier was charged with stealing a letter, but the court, referring to that section of the Act which more particularly referred to persons connected with the post office establishment, doubted whether such persons could be guilty of larceny, and the judges came to the same conclusion.¹ But as soon as the letters have passed into other confidential hands, the case will be reached by the 28th and 29th sections, and the servant of the post office will be guilty of larceny. As, under the 52 Geo. 3, c. 143, s. 3, a similar section to the 28th and 29th sections of 1 Vict. c. 36, where the prisoner in the employment of the post office was charged with stealing a letter; here, the carriers for hire employed by the government had possession of the letter, which had left the office; and the judges held, that the servant of the post office, who subsequently took this letter, was guilty of larceny.² The prisoner was engaged in sorting letters for the postmaster gratuitously, when he contrived to steal one containing 1s. This was no part of his business, he being merely the carrier: the judges were clear that he was, nevertheless, a person employed in the post office, and that he was rightly convicted.³ The prisoner was charged in one count with stealing, and in a second, with secreting a letter. The following verdict was submitted to the judges:—"The prisoner having committed a mistake in sorting the letters in question, secreted them in the water-closet, in order to avoid the supposed penalty attached to such mistake;" and it was held that the conviction was good on both counts, and R. v. Cabbage, Russ. & Ry. 292, and R. v. Douglas, 16 L. J. (N. S.) M. C. 116; 17 L. J. 176, were referred to.⁴ There must be a carrying away of the letter out of the office in order to sustain the charge; so that if the letter be opened, and the contents taken out in the room, it would not, probably, be protected by the 28th section of the Act.⁵ Though the stealing of the paper, or of the contents, or part only, would be larceny. As where an inspector put a letter containing a sovereign in the carrier's way to try his honesty, and the carrier took it, but the letter was not put into the office; the judges held the conviction wrong for stealing the letter, but good for larceny by stealing the sovereign.⁶ An inspector delivered a letter at the window of the office to another, and he handed it to two others, who kept it locked up all night, and on the next morning gave it to a sorter, who gave it to the prisoner to sort. The prisoner was held not to have received it in the ordinary course, and R. v. Rathbone

¹ R. v. Pooley, Russ. & Ry. 31; Leach, 904.

² R. v. Brown, Russ. & Ry. 32, n.

³ R. v. Reason, 23 L. J. M. C. 11; Dears. 226. And R. v. Simpson and R. v. Milner, 4 Cox, C. C. 275, 276, were referred to by Jervis, C. J. Doubts had been raised in these cases as to there being an employment under the post office.

⁴ R. v. Wynn, Dears. C. C. 365; 18 L. J. M. C. 51.

⁵ R. v. Pearson, 4 C. & P. 572.

⁶ R. v. Rathbone, 2 Moo. C. C. 242; 1 Car. & M. 220.

was cited as an authority.¹ However, as soon as the letter is deposited in the bag, the 29th section protects it. The punishment is not so heavy as under sect. 28, but the objection as to the carrying away is at an end; and it has been said that the laying down of a letter on the counter of a shop at a receiving house, or the giving it to a person belonging to the shop, is a putting into the post office.² This fact must clearly appear, because, if the letter cannot be clearly traced into the office, it cannot be deemed a post office letter. As where the office was at an inn, and a party sent with a letter, placed it, with the penny to prepay it, upon a table in the passage of the inn: the letter-box was in the passage, and a female servant, who was not authorized to receive letters, said she would give it them. The servant stole the letter, but the offence was considered not to come within the 27th or 28th sections of the Act, because the letter had not become a post letter.³ Nevertheless, a larceny of the letter was committed. So, again, where it was intended to try the honesty of the postmistress, the prosecutor put a letter with some marked money into the bag, but the direction and address were quite fictitious. The postmistress took the money, and denied all knowledge of the letter. This was held not to be a post letter, and the stealing of it not within 1 Vict. c. 36, but it was larceny.⁴

However, the decision of R. v. Gardener has been repudiated by Pollock, C. B., who tried the case; and, accordingly, in a case where there was a fictitious address, with an enclosure of half-a-sovereign, and the letter was dropt into the receiving box, the judges held the conviction of the prisoner (who abstracted the money and kept the letter) right. The judges thought the objection, that the letter was not put in for a legitimate purpose, of no value, and Parke, B., said, that whether the letter could be delivered or not, was quite beside the question. And where a penny was put into a letter, and thence into an unpaid letter box, because the door of the receiving house was shut, it was held that a messenger of the post office might be convicted of stealing the letter, as a letter containing money, though it was not put into the letter for the purpose of being conveyed to the person to whom the letter was addressed.⁵ The post office marks, when proved, are evidence that the letters, at the dates specified, are in the office designated.⁶

Looking again at sect. 28 for a moment, the case of Noah Pearce may be mentioned. He pretended to be the mail guard, and thus obtained from the person who was at the office the bags of letters, which were let down to him by a string, from whence ¹ R. v. Shepherd, 25 L. J. M. C. 52. Verdict, guilty of larceny only, as the money in the letter was marked. Willes, J., acceded reluctantly to R. v. Rathbone.

² R. v. Pearson, ut supra.

³ R. v. Harley, Car. & K. 89, cor. Patteson, J.

⁴ R. v. Gardener, Car. & K. 628. R. v. Young, Den. 194; 2 Car. & K. 446.

⁵ R. v. Mence, Car. & M. 234.

⁶ R. v. Plummer, Russ. & Ry. 264.

he took them, and made off. And this conviction was held right, for his artifice in obtaining the delivery of them, was the same as if he had actually taken them out of the house.¹ So A. representing that he was sent by B. for a letter from the office, would be guilty of larceny, if the original intention be to steal.²

Indictment.] By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 40, the stolen property may be laid in the postmaster-general, and it shall not be necessary to allege in the indictment, or prove upon the trial, that the post letter bag, or post letter, or valuable security, was of any value. The indictment does not materially vary from the ordinary case of larceny, but the particular kind of chattel, money, or valuable security, should be set out.

The form of the post office order is usually,—“Credit the person named in my letter of advice, the sum of £—, and debit the same to this office.” This document is a warrant or order for the payment of money, and does not require a stamp.³

Trial.] By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 37, the trial for any offence against the Post Office Acts, may be in any county or place where the offence shall have been committed, or where the offender shall be apprehended or be in custody, and where the offence respects a mail, or a person engaged in the delivery of a post bag, or letter, or a chattel, money, or valuable security, sent by the post, the trial may be where the prisoner is apprehended or is in custody, or in any county or place where such mail, &c., shall have passed in due course, and in all cases where the side or centre, or other part of a highway, or the side, the bank, the centre, or other part of a river, or canal, or navigation, shall constitute the boundary of two counties, the trial may take place in either of the said counties, through or adjoining to which, or by the boundary of any part of which, the mail or person shall have passed in due course. And by the same clause, every accessory shall be dealt with as a principal, and his trial shall take place in any county or place in which the principal offender may be tried. By sect. 39, offences under the Act, committed within the admiralty jurisdiction, may be tried like any other offence committed within that jurisdiction.

By sect. 26, the stealing of a post office letter is made punishable by transportation for seven years,⁴ or by imprisonment, not exceeding three years, but if the letter stolen should contain

¹ R. v. Pearce, East, P. C. 603.

² R. v. Gillings, 1 Fost. & F. 36.

³ R. v. Gilchrist, 2 Moo. C. C. 233; Car. & M. 224. 1st count: Warrant or advice for the payment of money. 2nd count: Warrants, &c. (as above), commonly called post-office money orders. 3rd count:

Four valuable securities, i. e., four warrants, &c. (as above), commonly called post-office money orders. See also 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96.

⁴ Now penal servitude not exceeding nor less than three years.

any chattel, money, or valuable security, the punishment is transportation for life.

By sect. 27 of this Act, every person who shall steal from a post letter any money, or chattel, or valuable security, shall be transported for life.¹

By sect. 28, whoever shall steal a post letter bag, or a post letter from such a bag, or a post letter from a post office, or from an officer of the post office, or from a mail, or shall stop a mail, with intent to rob and search the same, shall be transported for life.² But, by sect. 41, every person convicted of an offence punishable under the Act with transportation for life, may be transported for a term not exceeding seven years,³ or imprisoned for a term not exceeding four years, with or without hard labour or solitary confinement. Provided, by 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5,⁴ that such confinement do not exceed one month at a time, nor three months in one year.

By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 29, the offence of stealing from a post office packet is made punishable by transportation for fourteen years, but by sect. 41, such persons may likewise be transported for a term not less than seven years,⁵ or be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, &c., for a term not exceeding three years. By sect. 35, in cases of felony under the Post Office Acts, every principal in the second degree, and every accessory before the fact, is punishable in the same manner as the principal in the first degree is punishable under these Acts, and every accessory after the fact (except receivers) shall be imprisoned for a term not exceeding two years.

Post Office embezzlement.] By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 26, every person employed under the post office who shall steal, or for any purpose whatever embezzle,⁶ secrete, or destroy a post letter, shall be guilty of felony in England and Ireland, and in Scotland of a high offence.⁷ And if any such letter shall contain any chattel or money, a heavier punishment (as we shall see presently) is ordained. And by sect. 40, it shall not be necessary to allege, nor to prove upon the trial or otherwise, that any such post letter or valuable security was of any value. But the enclosure of a valuable security, or of money, or of a chattel, must be proved, if such be the case. And a mark of double postage on a letter was not, of itself, deemed evidence of such an enclosure.⁸ Formerly, money was not within the Acts,⁹ but a single bank note was.¹⁰ And an unstamped draft

¹ Penal servitude. Refer to 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 81, and 6 Will. 4, c. 4, which abolished the capital punishment before this statute.

² Penal servitude.

³ Penal servitude not exceeding nor less than three years.

⁴ See 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 42.

⁵ See n. 2.

⁶ As to secreting, see R. v. Wynn, Den. 365.

⁷ As to bail in Scotland, see sect. 38.

⁸ R. v. Plumer, Russ. & Ry. 264.

⁹ R. v. Skutt, Leach, 106.

¹⁰ R. v. Hassel, Id. 1.

was formerly not such an order for the payment of money as would bring a servant of the post office within the Acts, because, without the stamp, it was of no value.¹ Although such a cheque was admitted in evidence for the purpose of showing that the prisoner stole the letter, being thus available for collateral purposes.² Again, where the prisoner was charged with secreting a letter containing sundry promissory notes for 5*l.* each, and it turned out that they were country bank notes paid in London, and not as yet reissued, seven judges against four held, that these were notes within the stat. 7 Geo. 3,³ for, on the face of them, they remained uncanceled, and, as against the makers of them, they were valid and obligatory, so that into whosoever hands they might come for a valuable consideration, they would be productive and available against the makers.⁴ But the particularities above mentioned are rendered needless by the stat. 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 40.

It is to be observed, that the stat. 42 Geo. 3, c. 81, s. 1 (now repealed), expressly mentioned any part or parts of any security or instrument designated by 7 Geo. 3,⁵ and that the present Act has no such words. Still, inasmuch as Moore's case (referred to in the note) was decided before the 42 Geo. 3, it is presumed that no difficulty can arise, because a charge of stealing two letters containing a bank note, would be sufficient to show the stealing of a valuable security. Should the person employed in the post office embezzle one half of a note, and not the other, he would still be liable to transportation for seven years, or rather penal servitude for three years, for stealing the letter. A letter carrier was sent with an unsealed letter containing money, being a post office order. He was employed at the time by a postmistress. He destroyed the letter, did not restore the order, and kept the money. He was held indictable under sect. 26 of this statute.⁶ It is, moreover, observable, that the clause has the words "for any purpose whatsoever," so that it is no longer an objection to say, that the intent was not to steal, but to defraud the revenue of the postage,⁷ and it will be remembered, that to advance the rate of postage to the person receiving the letter is embezzlement, if the demand be acceded to.⁸

¹ R. v. Pooley, Id. 887. Russ. & Ry. 12.

² R. v. Pooley, Russ. & Ry. 31; Leach, 900.

³ C. 50, s. 1.

⁴ R. v. Ranson, Russ. & Ry. 232; Leach, 1090. R. v. West, 26 L. J. M. C. 6.

⁵ See R. v. Moore, Leach, 575. Where the judges held, that a letter carrier who secreted two letters, each containing the half of a bank note, was guilty of a capital offence under 7 Geo. 3, and that an indictment alleging that he having the said two letters containing the said bank note, did secrete the said letters, was good.

⁶ R. v. Bickerstaff, 2 Car. & K. 761.

⁷ R. v. Sloper, Leach, 81. R. v. Howatt, Id. 83, n. R. v. Sharpe, 1 Moo. C. C. 125.

⁸ Ante. See 5 Geo. 3, c. 25, repealed by 1 Vict. c. 32, except as to letters and packets conveyed by the post within the British dominions in America and the West Indies.

It has been held, that a person employed at a receiving house in the post office to clean boots, and assist in the tying up of the letter bag, was not a servant of the office under 52 Geo. 3, c. 143 (now repealed).¹ But a person employed by a postmistress as a receiver, whose weekly salary is repaid to the mistress of the office, is a person employed by the office.² Though, as to a missent letter, it would be otherwise.³ It is no ground for objection, that the officer has not taken the oath nor the declaration,⁴ for the appointment need not be proved.⁵ It lies on the prisoner to negative his appointment. The prisoner, by the orders of the postmaster, went to a magistrate with a paper, and took the oath, showing the paper. This was sufficient proof of his acting as a servant, whatever doubt there might have been otherwise.⁶ A post office letter-carrier was daily in the habit of receiving letters at a place with a penny on each to prepay the postage. He took the letters and pennies to the post office, but no evidence of any appointment was given. The prisoner embezzled some of these pence, and it was held, that there was evidence to go to the jury that the pence had been received by the prisoner by virtue of his employment as a letter-carrier.⁷

Embezzlement of printed papers.] By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 32, for the protection of printed votes and proceedings in parliament, and printed newspapers sent by the post, it is enacted, that every person employed in the post office, who shall steal, or shall for any purpose embezzle, secrete, or destroy, any printed votes or proceedings in parliament, or any printed newspaper, or any other printed paper whatever, sent by the post without covers, or in covers open at the sides, shall, in England and Ireland, be guilty of a misdemeanor, and in Scotland, of a crime and offence; and being convicted thereof, shall suffer such punishment by fine or imprisonment, or by both, as to the court shall seem meet.

By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 25, every person employed by or under the post office, who shall, contrary to his duty, open, or procure or suffer to be opened, a post letter, or shall wilfully detain or delay a post letter, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and be punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both, as the court may think fit: Provided, that nothing shall extend to the opening, detaining, or delaying of a post letter returned for want of a true direction, or by reason that the person is dead, or cannot be found, or shall have refused the same, or refused or neglected to pay the postage thereof;

¹ R. v. Pearson, 4 C. & P. 572.

² R. v. Salisbury, 5 C. & P. 155.

³ R. v. Salisbury, 5 C. & P. 155.

⁴ R. v. Clay, East, P. C. 580; Leach, 3, n.

⁵ R. v. Borrett, 6 C. & P. 124. R. v. Rees, Id. 606.

⁶ R. v. Simpson, 4 Cox, C. C.

275. And R. v. Milner was cited as an authority; Cent. C. C. 1850.

Whether a person quite unconnected with the post office, but merely assisting his master, is a person employed in the post office, qu. ? Semble not. 4 Cox, C. C. 276, Cresswell, J.

⁷ R. v. Townsend, Car. & M.

178.

nor to the opening, detaining, or delaying of a post letter in obedience to an express warrant in writing under the hand of one of the principal secretaries of state.

Receivers, Post Office.] By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 30, with regard to receivers of property sent by the post, and stolen therefrom, it is enacted, that every person who shall receive any post letter, or post letter bag, or any chattel, money, or valuable security, the stealing or taking, or embezzling or secreting whereof shall amount to a felony under the Post Office Acts, with a guilty knowledge, shall be guilty of felony; and the party may be indicted and convicted, either as an accessory after the fact, for a substantive felony, and in the latter case, whether the principal felon shall or shall not have been previously convicted, or shall or shall not be amenable to justice. And any such receiver, howsoever convicted, shall be liable to be transported for life,¹ or, by the 41st section of that statute, for any term not less than seven years,² or suffer imprisonment not exceeding four years, with or without hard labour, &c.

By 3 & 4 Vict. c. 96, s. 30, if any person not lawfully authorized, and without lawful excuse (the proof thereof shall lie on the person accused), shall purchase, or receive, or possess any paper used for postage covers, envelopes, or stamps, and for receiving the impression of the die, plates, or other instruments provided for that purpose, before such paper shall have been duly stamped with such impression, and issued for public use, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be imprisoned for a period of not more than three years, nor less than six calendar months.

Destroying letters.] The offence of destroying letters is punishable under 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 26. The offence of advancing the rate of postage, and not accounting, is an offence under 2 Will. 4, c. 4.³ And embezzling the postage will come under the same statute relating to clerks and servants.⁴

By sect. 31, every person fraudulently retaining a post letter or post letter bag, whether he shall have found it or not, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine and imprisonment, with or without hard labour, &c.⁵

Indictment—Embezzlement.] It is probably correct to state, in an indictment under this Act, that the prisoner was employed in the post office, and that a certain letter came to his possession whilst he was so employed, which letter he feloniously embezzled. And, where the letter contains property, it would be said to be a letter containing a bank note, or money, or a bill of exchange, &c., as the case may be, and would then go on to allege, that the

¹ Penal servitude.

² Penal servitude for three years.

³ Ante.

⁴ Sect. 47.

⁵ Letters and other effects detained by finders in hope of a reward.

prisoner feloniously did secrete, embezzle, or destroy the said letter, &c., according to the circumstances.

By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 40, the property in letters, &c., sent by the post, or in post letter bags, shall be laid in the postmaster-general; and further, it shall be sufficient to state that the offender was employed under the post office, without mentioning the nature or particulars of his employment.¹ And, if by mistake the employment should be stated, it seems, that if the words "person employed in the post office" should occur independently, the unnecessary description of the prisoner might be rejected as surplusage. But the letter must be accurately set out, with reference to the direction, or other matters which may be relevant. However, where the indictment described the letter as "to be delivered to persons using in trade the name and firm of Messrs. B., N., & H.," and it appeared that the firm in question was not in the habit of using the style of "Messrs." before their name in matters of business, it was, nevertheless, held no variance, because the addition of "Messrs." was frequently added to their address in the direction of letters and other papers in their business.² And not only should the superscription of the letter be attended to, but the chattel, money, or valuable security should also be particularly mentioned, although there need be neither allegation nor proof of its being of value. For the prisoner should be acquainted as well with the nature of the property he is charged with embezzling, as with the fact of stealing the identical letter or letters. Where the prisoner was indicted for stealing a certain warrant for the payment of money from a letter, he being a clerk in the post office at Birmingham, it appeared that the thing abstracted was a bank post bill, and the judges held that the indictment was well laid, and that the bill in question might also have been called a draft.³ And if the instrument should, on the face of it, appear to be a note, the signature of the maker need not be proved.⁴ But, notwithstanding the averment as to the nature of the chattel, or security, if any one of the articles, such as promissory notes, be found to have been contained in the embezzled letter, it is sufficient, although the indictment charge the stealing of several such articles or notes.⁵ No purpose need be alleged in the indictment. The words and object of the Act make it clear that no purpose need be stated.⁶

Trial.] The venue with respect to post office offences has already been laid before the reader.⁷

¹ See R. v. Shaw, Leach, 79.
R. v. Ellis, Russ. & Ry. 188. The old objections are thus removed.

² R. v. Dawson, East, P. C.
605.

³ R. v. Willoughby, East, P. C.
581.

⁴ R. v. Ellis, Russ. & Ry.
188.

Russ. & Ry. ut supra.

⁶ R. v. Wynn, Den. 365, 369,
Lord Denman, C. J.

⁷ See 1 Vict. c. 36, ss. 37, 39.

Judgment.] By 1 Vict. c. 36, s. 26, persons employed in the post office, and embezzling, secreting, or destroying a post letter, shall be transported for seven years,¹ or suffer imprisonment not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement (sect. 42), provided, 1 Vict. c. 90, s. 5, that the latter do not exceed one month at a time, nor three months in one year. If the letter shall contain any chattel, money, or valuable security, the punishment is transportation for life,² or, under sect. 41, a more mitigated sentence, as we have already seen.

¹ Penal servitude not exceeding,
nor less than three years.

² Penal servitude.

PART XV.

Of Nuisance.

CHAPTER I.

OFFENSIVE TRADES AND OCCUPATIONS.

We come now to the rather extensive head of nuisance. The common law professes to regard with jealousy the health, the comfort, and the morals of society. And hence a noisome smell, an outrageous noise, or an idle occupation, are alike obnoxious to its ordinances. And so likewise is an obstruction to any thoroughfare, whether by land or water. And it is not a defence to urge that the business carried on is advantageous to the community, or that the pastime complained of is an amusement. It is true that there is a principle which exonerates a tradesman from blame, if persons elect to live near the offensive employment which he pursues ; but, otherwise, it becomes the duty of an individual to exercise a noxious calling in an isolated situation ; and pleasurable enjoyments must be such as have no tendency to injure public morals.

Offensive trades and occupations.] By 26 Geo. 3, c. 71, s. 8, (the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 87, does not repeal the 26 Geo. 3, nor affect its provisions,) if any person keeping or using any slaughtering house or place, shall slaughter any horse, mare, or gelding, foal or filly, ass or mule, or any bull, cow, heifer, ox, calf, sheep, hog, goat, or other cattle, for any other purpose than for butcher's meat ; or shall flay any horse, mare, &c., brought dead to such slaughtering house, or other place, without taking out the licence required by that Act, or shall slaughter such cattle, at other hours¹ than those limited by the Act, or shall not delay to slaughter or kill the same according to the direction of the inspector authorized to prohibit the same, he shall be guilty of felony.

Judgment.] The judgment is transportation for any time not exceeding seven years,² or fine, imprisonment, and such corporal punishment by public or private whipping, as the court shall direct.

¹ See sect. 3.

² Now penal servitude not exceeding three years : 21 Vict. c. 3, s. 2.

By 26 Geo. 3, c. 71, s. 9, it is declared to be a misdemeanor punishable by fine or imprisonment, and public or private whipping, as the court shall direct, for any person keeping a slaughtering house to throw into any lime pit, or immerse in lime, or any preparation thereof, or to rub therewith, or with any corrosive matter, or destroy or bury, the hide or skin of any horse, mare, gelding, &c. slaughtered, killed, or flayed. And, likewise, if there be any other offence under the 26 Geo. 3, c. 71, (the Act which regulates the slaughtering of cattle,) not described as above, the same punishment shall be awarded.

The erection of a soap-boilery to the annoyance of the neighbourhood was adjudged to be a nuisance; because, however honest the trade, if the stench be an annoyance to the neighbours, it cannot be tolerated.¹ So the steeping of hides in water is a nuisance to the neighbouring inhabitants.² The same law was laid down in the case of a brewhouse on Ludgate Hill.³ So to erect a tallow furnace may be said to be a similar offence.⁴ Although if persons come to inhabit in the vicinity of such a business, the case will be different, or if the party should take up his abode at a reasonable distance from the vill, so as to cause only a moderate degree of inconvenience; because the needfulness of the candles may dispense with the noisomeness of the smell.⁵ So the owner of a glasshouse at Lambeth was convicted and fined; and a general pardon which the defendant urged was held to extend to the fine only, and not to the statement of the nuisance.⁶ The defendants erected works at Twickenham for making acid spirit of sulphur, oil of vitriol, &c., and they were compelled to remove their buildings, and submit to a fine of 6s. 8d.⁷ And it is worthy of remark, that if the smell complained of be offensive to the sense, it is sufficient proof for an indictment, without showing it to be injurious to health.⁸ So a steam engine, with a furnace for burning coals, whereby unwholesome smokes and smells arose, was considered to be a nuisance.⁹ So the works of a gas company, by which the fish in a water are destroyed, and the water rendered unfit to drink,¹⁰ are annoyances. So the burning of arsenic was held to come within the rule, for, although it emitted no smell, yet the cattle and the neighbouring trees were proved to have been poisoned by it, and a rule for a new trial was refused.¹¹ But the mere fact of fishermen being thrown out of em-

¹ R. v. Pierce, 2 Show. 327.

² R. v. Pappineau, 2 Str. 686.

³ R. v. Jordan, cited, 2 Show. 327.

⁴ Morley v. Pragnell, Cro. Car. 510. Action on the case. R. v. To-hayles, cited there.

⁵ R. v. Rankett, 16 Vin. Ab. 23.

⁶ R. v. Wilcox, 1 Salk. 458. R. v. Brookes, S. P. Trem. P. C. 195. See Vaugh. 333.

⁷ R. v. White and another, 1 Burr. 333. See 5 Geo. 2, c. 16, an Act for regulating buildings and trades in Blandford.

⁸ R. v. Neil, 2 C. & P. 485.

⁹ R. v. Dewsnap and another, 16 East, 194.

¹⁰ Of which the jury are the competent judges.

¹¹ R. v. Garland, 5 Cox, 165.

ployment is insufficient to sustain the indictment.¹ But a coke oven was held by Heath, J., not to be a nuisance, as it did not affect houses when the windows were shut, so that the general health of the inhabitants was not injured, nor were their dwellings rendered either uncomfortable or untenable.² And, if persons come to the nuisance, the defendant will be entitled to an acquittal,³ unless he be found to have increased the noisomeness of his undertaking. And the same rule prevails if particular trades have been carried on in the same place for a considerable time without interruption; for that which is a nuisance in one situation is not so in another. The defendant was charged with carrying on the business of a melter of kitchen stuff and other grease; but it appeared that much time had elapsed since manufactories equally disagreeable and noxious had existed in the neighbourhood, and Lord Kenyon observed, that the fact of enduring such smells for many years would operate as a consent on the part of the residents, though, had objection been made in time, the law might have considered the matter as a nuisance. The defendant had come into the neighbourhood about four years, and it was a question whether he had increased the unpleasantness of the atmosphere; and Lord Kenyon held, that although such increase might not amount to a nuisance by itself, yet that if the excess made the place disagreeable and uncomfortable, which before was only a little unpleasant, the defendant would be answerable. The jury found the defendant not guilty.⁴ It is, indeed, a proper question for the jury to say whether there has been any increase of nuisance. As, where the defendant carried on the business of a horse-boiler, Lord Tenterden observed to the jury, that there might be no increase of annoyance, although the business itself should have increased, because (as it appeared in evidence) of the improved method of carrying it on, whereas, if the annoyance had increased, the defendants ought to be convicted. Verdict guilty.⁵

Keeping gunpowder in an improper place, so as to be dangerous, is a nuisance at common law.⁶ The act of keeping hogs in ¹ R. v. Medley and others, 6 C. & P. 292, and it is no defence to urge that the directors were ignorant of the evil, or that the original plan was neglected.

² R. v. Davey and another, 5 Esp. 247.

³ R. v. Cross, 2 C. & P. 483. A case of slaughtering horses, where persons built close to the noxious trade.

⁴ R. v. Neville, Peake, 91. In this case Lord Kenyon admitted in evidence a bond from the defendant to the parish officers where he lived before, acknowledging his trade to be a nuisance, and binding himself not to continue it. It was proved that his trade was carried on at the place where he really resided in the same manner as at his former abode.

⁵ R. v. Watts and another, Moo. & Malk. 281. The defendant is not entitled to any compensation if he carry on a trade indictable at common law. R. v. Watts, 2 C. & P. 486.

⁶ Holt's Ca. 499. See 3 & 4 Vict. c. 47, (Metropolis Police Act,) s. 35.

the back streets of London has been held to be a nuisance at common law.¹ If a person disobey a notice to extinguish or screen a light which may be mistaken for a lighthouse, he is guilty of a common nuisance, and besides other penalties may forfeit a sum not exceeding 100*l*.²

There has been an instance of an indictment for dividing a house in a town for poor people to dwell in, the court holding it to be a common nuisance by reason of infection in time of plague.³ But a building erected for the purpose of inoculation has been deemed no nuisance, for the fears of mankind, however reasonable, will not create that offence.⁴ And it seems that an indictment will not lie against a man for the mere act of affording entertainment to vagrants.⁵ Evidence was offered against the defendant of a conviction under 16 & 17 Vict. c. 128, for nuisance of the same character with that for which he was indicted, but the court would not receive it.⁶

CHAPTER II.

GENERAL ANNOYANCES.

Not only are trades and employments which threaten the health of inhabitants abateable as nuisances; such likewise as tend materially to diminish the comfort of a neighbourhood are equally objectionable. The case of the tinman of Clifford's Inn turned upon the fact of his trade being an annoyance to three houses only belonging to the society, so that the noise of his work, although very considerable, could not be called a general grievance.⁷ There would otherwise have scarcely been a question but that such a disturbance would have been held a nuisance. So a common scold is a nuisance, and punishable accordingly.⁸ Scolding once or twice is no great matter; for scolding alone is not the offence, but it is the frequent repetition of it to the disturbance of the neighbourhood which makes it a nuisance:⁹ and two may be charged jointly with scolding, but it must be as common scolds.¹⁰ So a defendant who was convicted of making great noises in the night with a speaking trumpet, and so disturbing the neighbourhood, was fined 5*l*.¹¹ So the placing of effigies in

¹ R. v. Wigg, 1 Salk. 460. R. v. Record, 2 Show. 216.

² 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 415.

³ 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 11.

⁴ 3 Atk. 750; see Id. 21, 726. See R. v. Sutton, 4 Burr. 2116.

⁵ R. v. Langley, 2 Lord Raym. 790.

⁶ R. v. Fairlie, 8 El. & Bl. 486.

⁷ R. v. Lloyd, 4 Esp. 200.

⁸ R. v. Forby, 1 Salk. 266.

⁹ Id. per Holt, C. J. See also 2 Str. 849, 1246.

¹⁰ R. v. Hoskins and others, Holt's Ca. 352. R. v. Taylor, 2 Sess. C. 22.

¹¹ R. v. Smith, 2 Str. 704; 2 Sess. Ca. 6.

the street calculated to draw crowds is an annoyance, and liable to be suppressed.¹ It has been held, however, that the building of a house in a larger manner than before, whereby the street became darker, was not a public nuisance.²

Nuisances having a tendency to corrupt idle persons have been prohibited. Thus, it is said, that Noy came into court and prayed a writ to prohibit a bowling-alley erected near St. Dunstan's church, and had it.³ And a booth erected in the street for rope dancing was adjudged a nuisance, for that it occasioned broils and fightings, and drew rogues to the spot, so that the inhabitants lost things out of their shops every afternoon.⁴ Next, with regard to playhouses, it has been observed, that although not of themselves nuisances, they may become so by drawing persons and coaches and sharpers together.⁵ And it is now necessary to have a licence in order to legalize those places of amusement.⁶ And it is no defence that money is not taken for admission, or that the room is not kept exclusively for that purpose, although a mere temporary or occasional user may not be within the rules.⁷

So an inn may be a nuisance,⁸ and it is, again, the rule to apply for a licence in order to keep such a house of public entertainment.

Pigeon-shooting may be a nuisance, both on account of the shooting and the collection of idle people, as well as the group of persons waiting outside of the ground in order to shoot the pigeons which might fly off. Where such conduct caused great damage and apprehension in the neighbourhood, the defendant was held answerable for it as a nuisance.⁹

Any other acts which may not fall exactly within the cases above referred to, but which, nevertheless, are public annoyances, may be treated as nuisances. Thus, the lord chancellor considered, that to show a being of unnatural and monstrous shape for money would be a misdemeanor.¹⁰ Eavesdroppers, who loiter under walls or windows, or eaves, in order to frame tales of slander according to the discourse they may happen to overhear, are common nuisances.¹¹ So are night-walkers.¹² If a man keep a fierce dog, as a mastiff, and suffer him to go at large

¹ R. v. Carlile, 6 C. & P. 636.

² R. v. Webb, 1 Ld. R. 737.

³ Per Hale, C. J., 1 Mod. 76.

⁴ R. v. Jacob Hall, 1 Mod. 76; S. C. 1 Vent. 169. R. v. Bradford, Comb. 304. It is a nuisance in se, 5 Mod. 142, per Holt, C. J.

⁵ See R. v. Betterton and others, 5 Mod. 142; Skin. 625; S. C. Holt, 538, where a prohibitory writ was issued, but the court took time to advise.

⁶ See R. v. Handy, 6 T. R. 286; 1 Ro. Rep. 109, where Coke said that stageplayers were guilty of a riot, and illegal assembly. 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 7.

⁷ Gregory v. Tuffs, 6 C. & P. 271. Gregory v. Taverner, Id. 280. Under 25 Geo. 3, c. 36.

⁸ Palm. 374.

⁹ R. v. Moore, 3 B. & Adol. 184. As to pigeon-houses, see 16 Vin. Ab. Nuisance, (F. 2,) 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 8.

¹⁰ 2 Chanc. Ca. 110.

¹¹ 4 Comm. 168.

¹² R. v. Wheelhouse, Bendl. 199; Poph. 208.

unmuzzled, it seems that he may be indicted for a misdemeanor, and the more especially if the dog be of a ferocious nature.¹ If a person put gunpowder on board of a ship without notice, he may, perhaps, be indicted for a nuisance.² But an indictment for laying timber so near a chimney as to endanger property was held invalid.³ There is likewise a case where a vicar was indicted for not repairing the fences of the churchyard, by which means swine and other cattle invaded the tombstones, and porch, and the paths leading thereto, to the nuisance of the inhabitants of the parish. The verdict, however, was for the defendant.⁴ So a refusal by the parish priest or minister to bury a dead body is a misdemeanor, punishable by indictment or information.⁵ A new trial being moved for, the court declined to make a precedent, observing that the defendant might be indicted again if the fences continued out of repair since the last indictment;⁶ but Mr. Serjeant Russell makes a quære, as it should seem, to the validity of the charge as a matter of nuisance.⁷ So is the leaving of a dead body unburied in a yard. But the prisoner is not indictable for a mere omission to bury his child, unless he has the means. Where the guardians of the poor offered to lend him 7s., requiring him to sign a document for repayment, which he refused to sign, the court said he was not bound to incur a debt. It was no crime to decline being responsible for money.⁸ So to bring a glandered horse into a public place is a nuisance. Upon a conviction for this offence, it was contended,—1st, that there was no averment in the first count that the defendant knew of the infectious character of glanders. But, by Lord Campbell, “the indictment states that the defendant knew the mare to be glandered; that is enough.”⁹ Furious driving is a nuisance,¹⁰ and so is the conveyance of passengers in boats or other vessels beyond the licensed number, in case one or more of them be drowned.¹¹ It is not a nuisance to inclose a common,¹² or make a dovecote;¹³ but to set up a fair or market illegally is indictable.¹⁴ Nor as it should seem to ring bells.¹⁵

¹ See 3 Ch. C. L. 643.

² See 3 East, 192.

³ R. v. Parr, 2 Sess. Ca. 6. The igniting of the wood, it was said, would endanger the village.

⁴ R. v. Reynell, Clk. 6 East, 315. See however, R. v. Bingley, 1 Sess. Ca. 84.

⁵ R. v. Rev. Mr. Taylor, Willes, 537, n., 538.

⁶ 6 East, 316.

⁷ 1 C. & M. 304, note (z).

⁸ R. v. Vann, 2 Den. & P. 325; 21 L. J. M. C. 39.

⁹ R. v. Henson, Den. & P. 24.

¹⁰ And where injury is inflicted, it is a misdemeanor. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 100, s. 35.

¹¹ 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 75, s. 38. Punishable as a common law misdemeanor.

¹² R. v. Willoughby, Cro. El. 90.

¹³ Poph. 141.

¹⁴ Anon, 6 Mod. 184. R. v. Moor, 12 Mod. 235. R. v. Starkey, 2 Nev. & P. 169.

¹⁵ 21 L. J. Ch. 158. Kindersley, V. C.

CHAPTER III.

PROCEDURE IN NUISANCE.

The proceedings usual in cases of nuisance are by indictment or information, but the Court of Queen's Bench may, by a mandatory writ, prohibit such an annoyance, and the party who disobeys their order to abate the nuisance will subject himself to an attachment.¹ And in the case of the rope-dancer, the court first sent for him, and ordered that he should be indicted, but as he forthwith continued making his booth, they ordered the marshal to bring him into court, and interrogated him. His answers being unsatisfactory, the court required a recognizance of 300*l.* from him that he should cease from building, which being refused, they, as upon their own view, caused a record to be made of the nuisance, committed the offender, and awarded a writ to the sheriff of Middlesex, commanding him to prostrate the building.²

*Indictment.*³ In all indictments for nuisance, the offence must be charged as having been done to the common injury of the king's subjects;⁴ and if the fact be so, the continuance of the nuisance should be stated. It is sufficient to say, that the offensive trade was carried on at the parish of A. near the common highway, without adding in the town or village of B.⁵ But some parish or place must be mentioned.⁶ So, "near the highway, and near certain dwelling houses," was esteemed a sufficient description.⁷ With regard to a common scold, Serjeant Hawkins says, it seems agreed that an indictment against such a person is good, without setting forth the particulars.⁸ And the distinction seems to be, that where the thing is unlawful in its nature, as the keeping of a bawdy-house, &c., the circumstances of the case need not be set forth, whereas if the nuisance be in respect of a fact lawful in itself, as the erecting of an inn, the matters which make the illegality must be stated.⁹ But where it becomes necessary to set out facts, they must be shown with sufficient clearness, else the indictment will be vitiated for generality.¹⁰ An alternation—as he raised, or caused to be raised, a hedge, &c.,—must be avoided.¹¹ And if the nuisance be continuing, it should be so mentioned.¹² If an indictment conclude, "against the form of the statute," in

¹ Bac. Abr. tit. "Nuisance."

² R. v. Jacob Hall, 1 Ventr. 169.

³ If a fact done in one county prove a nuisance to another, it may, as it seems by the common law, be indicted in either county. 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 37.

⁴ R. v. Cooper, Cro. Jac. 382; 1 Ventr. 26; 2 Str. 1246. The case of a scold, see 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 4.

⁵ 1 Burr. 334, 337.

⁶ R. v. Record, 2 Show. 216.

⁷ R. v. Pappineau, 2 Str. 686.

⁸ 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 59.

⁹ 2 Hawk. c. 25, s. 57.

¹⁰ R. v. Taylor, 2 Str. 849.

¹¹ R. v. Stowton, 1 Barnard. 425.

¹² R. v. Stead, 8 T. R. 142.

respect of a nuisance punishable at common law, the conclusion is merely surplusage.¹ And it may be said here, that a summary proceeding before justices,² or a forfeiture under any circumstances, affords no grounds of defence to an indictment.³ Nor again, will any length of time legitimate a nuisance.⁴

Costs.] Where the defendants had been convicted of working a steam engine so as to create a nuisance, it was objected, that the prosecutors were not parties grieved within 5 Wm. & M. c. 11. But Lord Ellenborough said, that although a nuisance might be public, a special grievance could well arise out of the common cause of injury which might press more upon particular individuals than upon others not so immediately within the influence of it, and the rule for setting aside the taxation was discharged.⁵

Moreover, by 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 41, considering that great inconvenience and injury have arisen from the improper construction and negligence of furnaces employed in working steam-engines, and the expenses attending the prosecution of indictments for such nuisances, it is enacted, that the court by which judgment ought to be pronounced in case of conviction on any such indictment, shall and may award such costs as shall be deemed proper and reasonable to the prosecutor, such award to be made either before or at the time of pronouncing final judgment. By sect. 3, however, this provision shall not affect the owners nor proprietors or occupiers of any furnaces of steam engines erected solely for the purpose of working mines of different descriptions, or employed solely in the smelting of ores and minerals, or in the manufacturing of the produce of such ores or minerals, on or immediately adjoining the premises where they are raised.

Judgment.] Besides the usual judgment of fine and imprisonment in cases of misdemeanor, there is likewise in this case a consequence that the nuisance must be abated or dejected. But it is clearly no error to omit this latter judgment when there is nothing to abate. As in the case of steeping sheep skins, where the annoyance was only temporary; and the court took occasion to observe that the house where an offensive trade is carried on must not be pulled down. So of a house, if a portion of it be the nuisance, that part may alone be abated; and if the whole be condemned, the materials must not be wantonly destroyed.⁶ So of a bank; the nuisance of three feet was abated, but no more, the rest of the

¹ 1 Salk. 460.

² R. v. Gregory, 2 Nev. & M. 478.

³ R. v. Wigg, 1 Salk. 460.

⁴ 3 Camp. 227, by Lord Ellenborough. A note of the several acts of nuisance intended to be proved must be furnished by the prosecutor. R. v. Curwood, 3 Ad. & El. 815; 5 Nev. & M. 369. But if the nuisance be permanent, although a rule as to the particulars of the acts of nuisance themselves will be granted, the court will not allow a rule for particulars as to the dates. R. v. Flower and others, 7 Dowl. P. C. 665; 3 Jur. 558.

⁵ R. v. Dewsnap and another, 16 East, 194.

⁶ Sir Wm. Jones, 222.

bank being preserved.¹ The nuisance only need be abated, and there cannot be judgment to abate in the case of a transitory nuisance.² And although the indictment should state a continuing nuisance, and affidavits be produced in confirmation of that fact, the court will not give judgment of abatement, if they should be satisfied upon other grounds, and from other circumstances, that the annoyance has ceased.³ A fortiori, such a judgment will not be allowed if the indictment omit to allege such continuance.⁴ With the consent of the prosecutor, the court will even permit an acquittal, upon an understanding that the nuisance has been abated.⁵ The prosecutor's consent is necessary, because of the expense which he has incurred. So that the rule of the court is not to set a small fine, unless the defendant will consent to go before the master for the purpose of making satisfaction,⁶ unless the matter should relate to a private injury, for then an action might have been brought.⁷ Whilst, on the other hand, the consent of the defendant, when convicted, to pay the prosecutor's costs, will operate to mitigate the fine;⁸ but the court cannot compel a defendant to go before the master for the purpose.⁹

It being admitted, then, that there are occasions when there is something to abate, it may be remarked, that any person may abate a public nuisance,¹⁰ and that it is not necessary to show upon a justification of such an abatement, that as little damage was done as might be.¹¹ So that where a person threw certain materials into the sea, it was held, that he was not bound to abate the nuisance orderly, but that he might well roll away the walls, which were the subjects of annoyance, as he did, into the sea.¹² And where it is said that upon the abatement of a house, it is not lawful to destroy the materials, which remain for the use of the owners,¹³ the meaning is, that no wilful damage is to be committed, and thus the position is not inconsistent with that which has just been laid down. But it is not competent to abate any matter upon the ground of its being likely to become a nuisance.¹⁴ However, it is usual for the defendant to be called upon in the first instance to remove the mischief he has occasioned, at his own expense, and then, if he neglect to abate, a writ goes to the sheriff,

¹ 16 Vin. Ab. Nuisance (A. 2 a.)

² R. v. Pappineau, 2 Str. 686. Fortescue, Aland, J., contra, who thought there should have been judgment to prevent the defendant from steeping the skins again.

³ 13 East, 164.

⁴ R. v. Stead, 7 T. R. 467; 8 T. R. 142.

⁵ R. v. Macmichael, 8 C. & P. 755.

⁶ R. v. Goodman, Say. Rep. 19. S. P. R. v. Dyke. S. P. R. v. Haddock, cited there.

⁷ R. v. Tew and another, Id. 195.

⁸ R. v. Grey, 2 Ld. Keny. 307.

⁹ R. v. Richardson, 6 D. & Ry. 141. The defendant was fined 200l.

¹⁰ 1 Salk. 458; Cro. Car. 184. As a parishioner, who may abate a wall hindering his way to church, or an obstruction in the burial ground, &c., however long it may have remained. Sir Wm. Jones, 222; 16 Vin. Ab. Nuisance (W. 8).

¹¹ 1 Salk. 459; 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 12.

¹² Lodie v. Arnold, 1 Salk. 458.

¹³ Sir Wm. Jones, 222.

¹⁴ 12 Mod. 510.

and the court will raise the fine accordingly, or there may be an attachment.¹ And it may be added, that a second indictment will lie, if the nuisance be not discontinued.² In the case, however, of a wall or other thing which is capable of an easy removal, the sheriff, upon the defendant's default, will abate at once, without an increase of fine.³

By 1 & 2 Geo. 4, c. 41, s. 2 (in the case of steam engines), if it shall appear to the court by which judgment ought to be pronounced, that the grievance may be remedied by altering the construction of the furnace, the court may, without the consent of the prosecutor, make such order as they may see fit for preventing the nuisance in future before final sentence shall be passed.

CHAPTER IV.

NUISANCES—HIGHWAYS.

Highways.] We come now to the consideration of nuisances in public thoroughfares; and first, of obstructions to highways, whether arising from want of repair or otherwise.

An obstruction, in the ordinary sense of the word, signifies an opposition to the passage of the king's subjects along the highway; and whilst the common law visits this offence with an indictment, the Highway Act gives, in many cases, a more summary proceeding before justices for the recovery of penalties.⁴ For it being once admitted that a particular road is a thoroughfare, the proceeding for an obstruction follows of necessity, whence it is that the question of dedication to the public has occasionally arisen as a ground for removing or abating the impediment complained of. On the other hand, the public have been subjected to a qualification of their rights, as in the case of a prescription, fair, or market. The law exercised its functions very early with jealousy with reference to nuisances in the public way. As where a person placed logs of wood, so as to narrow the passage;⁵ and it was considered no excuse to say that the people might have windings and turnings

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 15. S. C. R. v. Gower, 3 Jur. 1076; 8 Dowl. P. C. 102.

² 1 Hawk. c. 76, s. 157; 2 Ro. Ab. (B. 4). R. v. Austin, 1 Ventr. 183, does not seem to militate against this position, because there was not a clear proof that the defendant had set up the posts and rails, so that there could not be a continuing nuisance in respect of what had not been stamped with the legal character of a nuisance.

³ Comb. 10. In addressing the court in aggravation, the provisions of an Act of parliament relating to a private company may be referred to if it be declared to be a public Act, although it be not referred to in any of the affidavits.

⁴ And it is to be noted, that the summary procedure does not invalidate the common law process. R. v. Gregory, 2 Nev. & M. 478.

⁵ 16 Vin. Ab. (B. 1); 1 Hawk. c. 76, s. 144; Cro. Jac. 446.

through the logs.¹ But it is not a nuisance to exercise a right, which is, of necessity, as the unloading of billets in the street, provided the wood be not allowed to remain there for an unreasonable time.² So to unload beer with a similar restriction.³ As soon, however, as a due portion of time has elapsed, the party becomes clearly guilty of nuisance. And, a fortiori, a person cannot defend himself upon an indictment for placing timber in the street on the ground of the narrowness of his premises. The defendant had large pieces of wood sawed into smaller, and then had them carried into his yard. His counsel pleaded that it was an act of necessity, but Lord Ellenborough expressed himself satisfied of the correctness of the charge, and observed that the defendant must remove to a more commodious situation if his premises were too inconvenient for his business.⁴ The same principle of law prevails throughout the decisions. The waggoner at Exeter, who persisted in keeping several waggons during the day and night before his warehouse, in a street thirty-seven feet wide, was deemed guilty of a nuisance. The waggons occupied one-half of the street, so that no carriage could pass on the opposite side, the gutter being in the middle, and through the constant loading and unloading even foot passengers were driven across the way. It seems that the coachmakers in Long Acre had endeavoured to set up a claim similar to this made by the defendant, who was said to be the principal waggoner in the west of England,⁵ but the court declared that he could not carry on any part of his business in the public street to the annoyance of the public.⁶ So again, the proprietor of a Greenwich coach was convicted of a nuisance for permitting his carriages to remain for an unreasonable time in Charing Cross. The length of time during which this practice had prevailed was held to make no difference, for no length of time can legitimate a nuisance.⁷ So a hackney-coach stand may be a nuisance, and the commissioners for paving may remove it if they have the power of directing and regulating the stands.⁸ Every unauthorized obstruction is a nuisance.⁹ Gigs may not be put in the open street on fair days.¹⁰ The stell fishery across the river at Carlisle had been established for a vast number of years, but Mr. Justice Buller held its continuance unlawful, and gave judgment that it should be abated.¹¹ So, if persons were to crowd the footway with poles and handbills in an unreasonable manner, it would be a nuisance, although the mere act of setting one individual on a

¹ 1 Hawk. c. 76, s. 145.

² Id.

³ 3 Camp. 236, per Lord Ellenborough.

⁴ R. v. Jones, 3 Campb. 230.

⁵ 6 East, 429.

⁶ R. v. Russell, Id. 427.

⁷ R. v. Cross, 3 Campb. 224.

The counsel for the defendant urged the case of a rout, but Lord Ellenborough at once observed, that a rout would be a nuisance if coaches were to wait in the street for an unreasonable time.

⁸ R. v. Rawlinson, 4 D. & Ry. M. C. 186.

⁹ 3 Campb. 226; so that ploughing up a footway may be indictable; 6 Mod. 145.

¹⁰ 3 Nev. & M. 580.

¹¹ 3 Campb. 224, by Lord Ellenborough.

footway to distribute bills is not an offence by the general law.¹ So it is to make a noise accompanied by an obstruction.²

So it was held, that throwing skins into a highway, by which a person lost his eye, was not indictable;³ but if the skins had been thrown constantly, or for an unreasonable time, it might have been otherwise. So to make a hoard for the purpose of building or repairing, in such a manner as to encroach unreasonably, would be a nuisance.⁴

To dig a ditch, or to make a hedge across a highway, is clearly an illegal act;⁵ or to inclose a common lane in a forest;⁶ or to build a wall, whereby the way would be straitened;⁷ (as where parishioners pulled down a wall in order to go to church;⁸) or to use such a way unwarrantably, so as to "plough it," according to an expression once used by the court.⁹ So to carry an unreasonable weight upon the road.¹⁰ So to place a gate on the way where no gate was before.¹¹ But if the gate has been time out of mind upon the way, the case has a different complexion;¹² for it might have been so, of necessity, to keep cattle within bounds,¹³ or by composition with the owner of the land when he consented to the thoroughfare,¹⁴ or by licence from the king, and upon a writ of ad quod damnum, and no nuisance found.¹⁵ And although the defendant in James v. Hayward might have opened the gate, yet it was held, that he might lawfully cut it down,¹⁶ a circumstance which shows how amply the public may set themselves free from an impediment to their passage. The defendant placed a five-barred gate with a step in the room of a stone stile two feet high. This was an obstruction.¹⁷ Projections over public ways are obstructions, but local provisions and summary proceedings supersede indictments.¹⁸

By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 141 (The Manchester Improvement Act), s. 30, no houses shall be built with fronts facing each other unless the space separating them be twenty-four feet wide. An exception, however, was made of sites of houses built prior to the Act, one of vacant plots in streets partially built upon on both sides. The owner of land in Manchester built up to his boundary, which was not in a street; afterwards the defendant, owner of the land in

¹ R. v. Sarmon, 1 Burr. 516.

² Webster v. Watts, 17 Q. B. 73; 11 Q. B. 311.

³ R. v. Gill and others, 1 Str. 190.

⁴ 1 B. & Pul. 407, by Eyre, C. J.

⁵ 1 Hawk. c. 76, s. 144; 16 Vin. Ab. Nuisance (A. a.) (10); and anybody may break down the hedge; 16 Vin. Ab. Nuisance, (W. 6).

⁶ R. v. Taylor, W. Jo. 269.

⁷ R. v. Browne, W. Jo. 277.

⁸ Id. 222.

⁹ 6 Mod. 145.

¹⁰ R. v. Egerly, 3 Salk. 183; 1 Freem. 100.

¹¹ James v. Hayward, Cro. Car. 184; S. C. W. Jo. 221.

¹² 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 9.

¹³ R. v. Bliss, Cro. Car. 184, per Croke, J.; 1 Jurist, 960. S. C. See 2 Nev. & P. 464.

¹⁴ 1 Hawk. ut supra.

¹⁵ Cro. Car. 185, per Jones, J.

¹⁶ Id. 184; 2 Salk. 459.

¹⁷ Bateman v. Burge, 6 C. & P. 391. It was urged, but in vain, that gates had been put on other parts of the way.

¹⁸ Woolrych on Ways, 2nd Edit.

front of A.'s houses, built a stable in front of A.'s houses within twenty-four feet. It was argued for the defendant that this section (30) pointed at the erection of new streets. The one in question was not a street. And of that opinion were the court. The statute applied to streets, and this was never, in any acceptation of the term, a street.¹

So, if a bridge be built in a slight or incommodious manner, it is a nuisance, for no person can impose such a burden upon the county as the repair of such an insufficient structure.² It would be making a colourable use of the doctrine of repair.³

Any other act savouring of obstruction or encroachment, or even damage to the way, is the subject of a prosecution. As where a carrier, by overloading, injured the road in consequence of the extraordinary weight of his goods.⁴ So where the defendant removed the gravel and soil upon a brick culvert.⁵ So where an Act forbade the erection of buildings within ten feet of the road, and directed that the footpaths should be deemed part of the road, it was held, that a building erected within ten feet of the footpath was a nuisance and encroachment within the Act.⁶ So to erect pens for pigs or other cattle in the street is a nuisance, unless the fact can be justified under a prescription or grant in respect of a fair or market, or otherwise.⁷ So where an Act gave authority to lay waggon-ways along or across certain roads, provided the roads were kept in repair for twenty yards on each side of the waggon-way, it was held, that where there were not twenty yards of waggon-way on each side, no waggon-way at all was authorized. And where one clause of an Act directed proprietors of a railway to make new roads in lieu of such as their railroad might injure, and another subsequent section gave them a general power of constructing railways without reference to any former limitation, it was held, that this general power was, nevertheless, controlled by the former clause, so that it became necessary for such proprietors to leave a space for the public to use; and it was considered, moreover, that the benefits which the railroads conferred upon trade were not such as could justify the obstruction of the highway.⁸

By an Act an ancient highway was made turnpike. One S. worked collieries by the side of it, and made ways to convey the coals. A new Act passed imposing a penalty on such as should make or continue any tramroad without the consent of the trustees. S. was found guilty of a nuisance, and the verdict was sustained.⁹

¹ R. v. Sidebotham, Bell, 171.

² 2 East, 348, by Lord Ellenborough.

³ Id. 352, by Grose, J.; and see 54 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5. And the justices have jurisdiction over it under 1 Edw. 3, c. 16; 6 Mod. 255.

⁴ March. Rep. 135, pl. 215; Jenk. 284.

⁵ R. v. Knight and others, 7 E. & C. 413; S. C. 1 M. & Ry. 217.

⁶ R. v. Gregory, 2 Nev. & M. 478.

⁷ R. v. Cotterill, 1 B. & Ald. 6. See R. v. Starkey, 7 Ad. & El. 95.

⁸ R. v. Sir J. Morris, 1 B. & Adol. 441.

⁹ R. v. Charlesworth, 16 Q. B. 1012; 5 Cox, 174.

It is no answer to an indictment for obstruction, that the state of the earth rendered it impossible to make a new road. It was so held where a railway company were bound by their Act to make as convenient a road as any which they might happen to meddle with.¹ A trench was opened in a public street for gas; the permission of the highway board and of the lighting commissioners had been obtained. It was admitted that reasonable despatch had been used; this act was, nevertheless, held to be a nuisance.² A tramroad was made on a highway, with the groove sunk in the road, but it did not rise anywhere above the level. Still this was an obstruction.³ An encroachment by inclosure to within fifteen feet of the centre of the way cannot be justified if there has been user by the public or repair by the surveyor, without interruption.⁴

But the frightening of horses, in consequence of the movement of the locomotive engines, is not ground for an indictment, although the railroad be parallel to the road, and, in some places, within some few yards of it. Here the great public utility of the railway obtains its due consideration, and the interference with the rights of the public must be taken to have been contemplated by the legislature.⁵ Still, the public must be allowed free passage. Sir John Morris was indicted for obstructing a road by means of an iron railway. This railway ran for 400 yards along the road, and, in some parts, did not leave space for two carriages. This was deemed an obstruction, notwithstanding the argument of public convenience.⁶

Dedication.] It has, however, been said, that the question of dedication occasionally arises upon these indictments for obstruction, and that the rights of the public are sometimes narrowed, so as to preclude them from preferring indictments which would certainly lie under other circumstances.

First, then, with regard to dedication; it seems that if a person manifestly shows his intention to throw open a street or way to the public, an obstruction of such an easement will be indictable. As where a passage had been left for several years without either a bar or a chain across it, and had been lit at the expense of the city of London: the defendant was convicted of an obstruction.⁷ So where the public had used a footway for fifty years, during the occupation of successive tenants, and with notice to the landlord's steward, which was notice to the landlord.⁸

But if a bar or chain be put up, or any other mark of interruption be exhibited, the presumption of dedication is much lessened,

¹ R. v. Scott, 3 Q. B. 543; 2 Gale & D. 729.

² Ellis v. Sheffield Gas Consumers Company, 23 L.J. Q. B. 42.

³ R. v. Charlesworth, 16 Q. B. 1012.

⁴ R. v. Johnson, 1 Fost. & F. 657.

⁵ R. v. Pease, 4 B. & Adol. 30; 1 Nev. & M. 690.

⁶ R. v. Morris, 1 B. & Adol. 441.

⁷ R. v. Lloyd, 1 Campb. 260; see also 11 East, 375, n.

⁸ R. v. Barr, 4 Campb. 16. See also R. v. Allanson, 1 Lew. C. C. 158; 3 Bing. 447.

if not destroyed,¹ and so likewise if the owner of land evince his determination to allow a qualified right only, a party will become a trespasser for the excess.² And if there be no intention to dedicate visible on the part of the owner, or the public have enjoyed the way for a short time only, the presumption is rebutted.³ These facts are, for the most part, questions for the decision of the jury.⁴

Secondly, as to the limitation of the public right in consequence of a prescriptive privilege elsewhere, it was held, in the case of Rag Fair, that if the place said to have been obstructed were subject to the franchise of a fair and market, or appeared openly to be so, as, for instance, by an enjoyment of twenty years, a man could not be deemed criminal who should come there under a belief that the fair or market was legally instituted. The defendants were accordingly acquitted.⁵

It is no objection to an indictment that other remedies may be had at common law.⁶ The remedy by indictment is positive.⁷ Upon an indictment for nuisance, if it be laid as continuing, the judgment is that it be abated; but if the complaint be merely of the fact, the abatement is not necessary, for non constat that it had not been discontinued at the time of the indictment.⁸ Otherwise, the nuisance must be judicially abated,⁹ and at the loss of the defendant.¹⁰

Indictments for not repairing a highway.] We proceed to another class of obstructions or nuisances, the remedy for which is by indictment. The non-repair of a road is the cause of such a grievance. And it may be safely affirmed, that wherever a way acquires the character of a thoroughfare, this principle of law will apply. And the parties who lie under the obligation to repair, and are thus the subjects of prosecution, are, in the first instance, the inhabitants of the parish or township in which the particular road is situate.¹¹ From this common law liability, unless the burden can be satisfactorily shown to belong to others, or the road be shown to be in good repair, there is not any appeal; so that if through the default of commissioners, or from any other cause, a turnpike road should become ruinous, the necessity for ¹ 5 Taunt. 126; 1 Campb. 263, n.; 5 B. & Ald. 454; 4 B. & C. 474; and it is no defence that the bar has been knocked down without further evidence of dedication; 1 Campb. 262, n.

² 7 B. & C. 257; see also 4 Campb. 189.

³ R. v. Hudson, 2 Str. 909.

⁴ R. v. Wright, 3 B. & Adol. 681.

⁵ R. v. Smith and others, 4 Esp. 111.

⁶ R. v. Scott, 3 Q. B. 543; 2 Gale & D. 729.

⁷ Carth. 194; Bull. N. P. 26 (a).

⁸ R. v. West Riding, JJ., 7 T. R. 467. R. v. Stead, 8 T. R. 142. R. v. Incledon, 13 East, 164.

⁹ 8 T. R. 144.

¹⁰ 14 Vin. Ab. 395.

¹¹ Mar. 26, p. 62. Not the overseers. R. v. Dixon and another, 12 Mod. 198.

repair lies upon the parish. Even where an Act of parliament placed the care of a particular street in the hands of commissioners, and another Act which was passed for paving the streets of the parish excluded the former street from its provisions, the parish was still deemed liable. The tolls constitute an auxiliary fund, and the parish having seen that the road is in good repair, would then be in a condition to seek a remedy even against the commissioners.¹ After conviction, the inhabitants may apply to the court upon motion, under 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 110.² Nothing short of an express exemption will discharge a parish or township. But if there be such an exemption in an Act of parliament, it must prevail; and it was so held in a case where a township successfully resisted a claim made on them by the remainder of a parish, in consequence of a particular provision in a local Act.³ Yet the following clause in a local Act was held insufficient to discharge the township of Little Bolton: "Every person rated or assessed, for the purposes of that Act, in respect of any messuage, &c. within Little Bolton, shall be in respect thereof exonerated from all rates and assessments and performance of statute duty or composition with respect to the repairs of the highways in Little Bolton, or any costs, charges," &c. Judgment was given, though with hesitation, for the crown.⁴ So, where commissioners were authorized to stop up old ways and make new, which, when certified by the justices, were to be repaired by the parish, there being neither order nor certificate, the parish was held liable. The commissioners had, in fact, ordered an inclosure of the common where the way was, and set out a way thirty feet wide with the same terminus, and in the same line as the old way. This was, in effect, the same way.⁵ But where no steps had been taken by the commissioners for putting the road into complete repair, and no declaration of justices appeared as to the repair, nor had any proceedings been taken under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 23, it was held, that the parish was not liable, although they had repaired the way both before and since the award.⁶ This case was, in fact, founded upon R. v. Hatfield,⁷ where the principle of declaration by justices in sessions was laid down. No agreement with other persons will discharge

¹ R. v. St. George, Hanover Square, 3 Campb. 222. R. v. Netherthong, 2 B. & Ald. 179; 1 Ld. Raym. 725.

² Which enables the court to apportion the fine and costs between the trustees and the parish, so as not to endanger the security of the creditors who have advanced their money upon the credit of the tolls. And although the indictment be removed by certiorari, after having been preferred at the assizes, the Court of King's Bench will exercise this jurisdiction of apportionment. R. v. Upper Papworth, 2 East, 413.

³ R. v. Sheffield, 2 T. R. 106.

⁴ Little Bolton v. Reg. 12 L. J. M. C. 104.

⁵ R. v. Cricklade, 14 Q. B. 735.

⁶ R. v. East Hagbourne, Bell, 135.

⁷ 4 Ad. & El. 156. See further, as to liability of a township under an Inclosure Act, R. v. Gate Fulford, 7 Cox, 230.

the parish.¹ Hence it follows, that if the parish will endeavour to release themselves, they must find out some parties or person who ought to stand in their stead,² or they must be in a condition to prove that the road indicted is not a public highway. These two lines of defence are the most usual upon indictments for non-repair. Thus, the inhabitants of Ecclesfield pleaded a prescriptive obligation under which certain districts and divisions were bound by immemorial usage to repair the road in question, "except a certain common highway in the said district of W." This excepted road was proved to have been made under an Inclosure Act about twenty-five years since. It was objected, that the defendants ought to have shown that this way had existed immemorially, being pleaded as an exception to an immemorial obligation, but Wood, B., held the statement sufficient, although it might have been more explicit, and a motion to enter up judgment for the crown, non obstante veredicto, was not successful.³

The inhabitants of Hatfield, on the contrary, being indicted as a township, for non-repair, pleaded not guilty, instead of showing in particular the parties whom they sought to charge, presuming upon the distinction between a township and a parish. But the court held, that as the evidence showed an immemorial custom on the part of Hatfield, to repair all roads within the township, which but for the prescription would be repairable by the parish at large, the township stood in the light of a parish, and could not be discharged without pointing out in a plea the persons who were to take upon themselves the duty which the public required.⁴ And Holroyd, J., noticed a diversity between cases where the indictment charges a special prescription to repair a particular road, and a general prescription to repair all roads. In the former case, the plea of Not guilty might serve; but, in the latter, a more particular designation is indispensable. And the learned judge added, that he remembered the distinction to have been taken in a case before Chambre, J.⁵ So, in charging the township, the immemorial usage is set forth, because it is against common right to call upon a section of the parish; but as soon as the obligation is fixed upon the township commensurately with the parish, the township must bear the burden equally, or show cause why they should be relieved. And hence it was, that where the division of Great Broughton, in the parish of Bridekirk, was indicted in the common form, judgment was arrested for want of a reason upon the face of the record why the special obligation had accrued.⁶ Nevertheless, where an Act of parliament imposes the burden of repair, the parish, although not delivered from their common law

¹ 1 Ventr. 90. R. v. Mayor of Liverpool, 3 East, 86.

² R. v. Eastington, 5 Ad. & El. 765; 1 Nev. & P. 193.

³ 1 Stark. 393. R. v. Ecclesfield, 1 B. & Ald. 348.

⁴ R. v. Hatfield, 4 B. & Ald. 75.

⁵ Id. 80.

⁶ R. v. Great Broughton, 5 Burr. 2700. R. v. Linkfield Street, 2 T. R. 514, cited. R. v. Penderryn, Id. 513.

liability, may take advantage of this mode of defence under the general issue.¹

It is, however, to be noticed, that the consideration for the liability incurred by parties foreign to the parish at large, need not be set out in the special plea by the parish. It is only when the road is without the boundary of the parish or township indicted, that a consideration should appear on the record. Thus a plea charging a particular district or division was held good without the mention of consideration.² And it is no objection that the words "which but for such a custom would be repairable by the parish at large," are left out.³ The road needs not to be shown to be an ancient highway if a custom be proved against a township of repairing all the roads within it.⁴ But where the inhabitants of a parish pleaded that the inhabitants of another parish had been accustomed to repair, the plea was held bad for want of consideration.⁵ Although by prescription one parish may certainly be bound to repair the way in another.⁶

Repair ratione tenuræ, &c.] A parish, however, may discharge itself in other ways than by imputing repair to another township, or denying the existence of the highway. For it may be suggested, that a party is liable by reason of his tenure of certain lands to do the required amendment, or showing a consideration, by prescription; or again, by reason of his having at some time encroached upon the road. And a consideration evidently appears upon the face of these pleas which charge the repair ratione tenuræ or clausuræ. The person thus called upon by reason of tenure,⁷ cannot defend himself upon the ground of allowing his land to lie fresh,⁸ or of opening an inclosure, for he is bound in perpetuity.⁹ And where the abbot of S. charged all his lands for the repair of a way, it was held, that not only those which had

¹ R. v. St. George, Hanover Square, 3 Campb. 222; see 4 B. & Adol. 109.

² R. v. Ecclesfield, 1 B. & Ald. 348.

³ R. v. Heage, Inhabitants, 2 Q. B. 128; 1 Gale & D. 548.

⁴ R. v. Barnoldswick, 4 Q. B. 499; 3 Gale & D. 455.

⁵ R. v. St. Giles's, Cambridge, 5 M. & S. 260. See R. v. Bp. Auckland, 1 Ald. & El. 744. R. v. Scarisbrick, 1 Nev. & P. 582; S. C. 6 Ad. & E. 509. It is, however, no objection that three townships are charged conjointly. R. v. Bp. Auckland, ut supra. If a highway should be in two parishes, the justices at a special sessions shall apportion the part to be repaired by each parish or person liable ratione tenuræ, or otherwise. But the person so liable may appear and make his objection before the justices, if he shall not be satisfied, and they shall determine upon the same. 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 58, 59; see also sects. 60 and 61, and likewise sect. 92. See as to a highway in two counties, 5 T. R. 498, and post, in this section.

⁶ 12 Mod. 409.

⁷ See instances of indictments for non-repair ratione tenuræ, Palm. 389.

⁸ Palm. 389; 5 Esp. 219; 3 Campb. 444, &c.; 1 Str. 187.

⁹ 2 Saund. 160.

been set apart originally for the purpose were liable, but likewise all lands which the abbot might have since acquired.¹

Where it is sought to enforce the claim of repair by prescription, a consideration must be shown, or by the receipt of toll, or other profit; and this, although the ancestor may have done the repair, for the act of the ancestor cannot charge the heir without profit.² And the road must be of public utility. For occasional repairs done by an adjoining occupier will not make him liable to repair the whole road along his line, any more than an individual would be bound by repairing the road before his gate.³ Moreover it is to be remarked, that this liability by tenure is not extinguished by an alteration in the line of road, so as entirely to discharge the individual. But under recent statutes it may be changed for a pecuniary compensation to the parish. As under the Turnpike Act,⁴ where it is ordained, that two justices shall apportion the amount of road which has been widened, altered, diverted, or turned, and with the consent of the parties liable, shall discharge their liability altogether, upon payment of a gross or annual sum, as may be found convenient. Under the new Highways Act⁵ this conversion of liability is made absolute. For roads repairable ratione tenuræ are placed at once under the care of the surveyor, when such roads come to be widened, enlarged, turned, or diverted. The roads, however, are to be viewed by two justices, who are to report to the special sessions, and the justices at special sessions shall fix an annual sum in gross, to be paid in lieu of the repairs formerly due by the individual.

And by a previous clause, (sect. 62,) any person liable ratione tenuræ or otherwise, may, with the consent of the inhabitants in vestry, obtain the opinion of justices at special sessions, as to the propriety of exchanging his obligation for an annual payment, or the payment of a sum in gross. And if the justices decide for the changing, the road shall be repaired by the parish for the future. Should the gross sum exceed 100*l.*, it is to be vested in the funds, and the interest applied to the repair of the roads within the parish. If under 100*l.*, the gross sum, or any part thereof, is to be applied at once towards the repairs, with the consent of the vestry, and of such justices at special sessions. An encroachment by the sea will, for the time, suspend the liability to repair ratione tenuræ.⁶

Repair by reason of encroachment.] A liability to repair may, again, arise by reason of encroachment. The rule seems to be, that if one inclose land on one side, the other side being anciently inclosed, he shall be compelled to repair all the way; but only half the way, if there should be no ancient inclosure; and clearly, if he

¹ R. v. Buckeridge, 4 Mod. 48.

² 13 Rep. 33; Sty. 400.

³ R. v. Allanson, 1 Lew. C. C. 158, Hullock, B.

⁴ 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 68.

⁵ 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 93.

⁶ Bamber v. Reg. (in error), 5 Q. B. 279; Dav. & M. 367. R. v. Hornsea, 23 L. J. M. C. 59; Dears. 291.

inclose both sides, he becomes liable to the reparation of the whole way. Still, the obligation endures only so long as the inclosure is continued.² Although, as we have seen, a person cannot discharge himself from an obligation ratione tenuræ by opening an inclosure.³ And, therefore, if the party would seek to be relieved from his burden by reason of his inclosure, he must restore the land he has acquired, to the road. So that, in order to carry out his object, he would put the way into repair, so far as it had been interfered with by the encroachment, and would then leave it to the trustees or parishioners. But where, not content with throwing open the inclosure, and repairing the road once, the defendant continually did acts of repair for twenty-five years, Heath, J., held that he had manifested a sense of liability by his act, and he was found guilty upon an indictment.⁴

During the continuance of the inclosure, the state of the road must not only be no less useful than before, but there must likewise be a good and sufficient way. So that, where the defendant had made the passage better than before, but it was still so narrow as that neither a cart nor a carriage could pass, but horses only, the court decided, that he must put the road into a perfect and ample condition.⁵ However, the law above set forth does not apply in cases of inclosure by virtue of an Act of parliament, or where an inclosure takes place in consequence of the writ ad quod damnum, unless, in the latter case, it be in respect of lands in another parish than that in which the road originally lay. For the inclosure under an Act of parliament cannot be likened to a voluntary inclosure, but may rather be called a parliamentary ad quod damnum.⁶ And under the writ ad quod damnum, as the parish can bear no further expense in respect of the old road, the inhabitants ought, for the future, to repair the new. Whereas, if the road were in another parish, the inhabitants of that other parish would not be relieved from the repair of the old way, because they could never have been liable to the repair of it, and in that case, the party inclosing under an ad quod damnum must be subjected to the burden. The heir may be indicted for the continuance of an encroachment, although he do no new act, the continuance being a new nuisance.⁷ However, where all traces of a highway were lost, proof of that fact was held to be a good answer to an indictment.⁸

Defence.—No highway.] Secondly, a parish may allege as a defence, that the way in question is not a highway, and that, of course, is an ample answer to an indictment. So, that a church

¹ 1 Sid. 464.

² 2 Saund. 160.

³ Ante.

⁴ R. v. Skinner, 5 Esp. 219.

⁵ R. v. Sir E. Duncomb, Cro. Car. 366.

⁶ R. v. Flecknow, 1 Burr. 461;

² Ld. Keny. 261. See to the same effect, Ex parte Vennor, 3 Atk. 772.

⁷ 16 Vin. Ab., Nuisance, B. 4.

⁸ Anon. Midland circuit, Dears. 304.

path "for all the parishioners of D." cannot be the object of an indictment.¹ And here, again, questions as to dedication have arisen, because in the event of an insufficient dedication, and, à fortiori, if there were none at all, the parish could not be charged with the non-repair of that which, at best, must be deemed but a private way. Before the late Act for consolidating the law upon the subject of highways, contradictory decisions had taken place as to the necessity of acquiescence on the part of the parish in a dedication or adoption by the parish of a road so dedicated. For some time it was considered, that acts of adoption or acquiescence must appear on the side of the parish,² but upon a subsequent occasion, two judges against one³ held that a way was repairable by the parish when used by and dedicated to the public, without any other sanction.⁴

Now, however, by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 23, circumstances which constitute a public road repairable upon a dedication, or under an Inclosure Act,⁵ by the inhabitants at large of each parish, are set forth. First, the person intending to dedicate must give three months' notice in writing to the surveyor of such his intention, describing the situation and extent of the way. He must then show that the way is made in a substantial manner, and of the width required by the Act, and to the satisfaction of the surveyor and any two justices of the division where the highway is situate. The justices then certify as to the substantial state and width at the expense of the party requiring the view, and the certificate is enrolled at the quarter sessions. Upon which, after the public have used the road, and the person dedicating it has kept it in repair for twelve months, it shall thereafter be repaired by the parish. Nevertheless, the surveyor must previously, upon the receipt of the above notice, summon a vestry, and if such vestry shall be adverse to the dedication, any one justice may summon the party proposing to make the new highway to the next special sessions, and the question shall be there determined by the justices. A parish, therefore, may defend itself on the score of undue dedication. The words in the section "made or hereafter to be made" mean roads framed or made, but not entirely dedicated. Roads fully dedicated at the time of the passing of the Act are not within its operation.⁶ If the way be stated to be immemorial, and ¹ R. v. Thrower, 1 Ventr. 280. But if "for all the parishioners of D." were omitted, and the sentence were "a common footway to the church of —," it would be good. R. v. Hebborne, 1 Hawk. c. 76, s. 238; Poph. 206.

² R. v. St. Benedict, 4 B. & A. 447. R. v. Paddington Vestry, 9 B. & C. 456. See also R. v. Edmonton, 1 M. & Rob. 24. R. v. Mellor, 1 B. & Adol. 32.

³ Denman, C. J., Parke, J., — Diss.—Littledale, J.

⁴ R. v. Leake, 2 Nev. & M. 583.

⁵ The Act embraces roads or occupation ways, made or to be made, or roads set out or to be set out as private driftways or horse-paths under Inclosure Acts.

⁶ R. v. Westmark, 2 Moo. & Rob. 305.

it turns out that it was extinguished sixty years before an indictment under an Inclosure Act, the indictment is not supported, although the public may have used the way since.¹

So, again, it is a sufficient answer by the parish to say that commissioners of inclosure have set out the road indicted as a private road.² And under an Inclosure Act, the words "poor and other rates" were held not to include highway rates.³ So, it would be quite sufficient to allege that a road had not been finished according to the provisions of the Act of parliament under whose authority it had been commenced.⁴ And, clearly, where a way is stopped by an order of justices, the public liability in respect of it is at an end.

So, where the road intended was from A. to C., but an intermediate part from A. to B. had been finished and repaired for twenty or thirty years, it was held that no indictment would lie till the whole should be complete. And it made no difference, that the road joined another public road at B., which last road was complete.⁵ So, in the case of a branch road to C. from a road marked A. B., the branch must be finished before the public can be called upon to repair.⁶ And it may be a defence to allege that there is another road in good repair equally convenient to the public, although the distance be somewhat greater, provided the public make little or no use of the way indicted.⁷

But it would not be a defence to urge the existence of an inclosure award which placed the road in another parish, unless proof be given that the notices required by the Act had been given by the commissioners, especially where the usage has not been according to the award. For the continuance of repair by the inhabitants of the indicted parish where the road originally was, would raise a presumption that the due notices had not been given.⁸

Nor again, that a water, being an ancient highway, had changed its course; for the highway continues in the new channel as it did in the old.⁹ Nor can the public be deprived of a highway except by express words. So, that an old towing-path was considered to remain liable to public user, although some alteration had been made in the use of it by an Act of parliament for private purposes.¹⁰

And where a road is changed or in any way altered by an Act

¹ R. v. Westmark, 2 Moo. & Rob. 305.

² R. v. Cottingham, 6 T. R. 20. R. v. Richards and others, 8 T. R. 634. R. v. Enfield, 3 Chit. Burn, 82.

³ R. v. Midville, 4 Q. B. 140; 3 Gale & D. 522.

⁴ R. v. Cumberworth, 3 B. & Adol. 108, Littledale, J., dub. As that eleven miles and a half only were completed out of twelve.

⁵ R. v. Edge Lane, 4 Ad. & El. 723; 6 Nev. & M. 81.

⁶ 1 R. v. Cumberworth, 4 Ad. & El. 731; 1 Nev. & P. 197.

⁷ R. v. Steyning, Say. Rep. 92.

⁸ R. v. Haslingfield, 2 M. & S. 558.

⁹ 1 Hawk. c. 76, s. 4.

¹⁰ R. v. Tippet, 3 B. & Ald. 193.

of parliament, it is usual to designate it as a public highway after such alteration, and, consequently, it is repairable by the parish.¹ And by sect. 92 of the Highway Act, where a highway shall have been turned or diverted under the provisions of that statute, the parish, or other party liable to the repair of the old highway, shall repair the new without reference to its parochial locality.

There is one other defence which has occasionally been brought forward,—that a parish need not make a road better than its immemorial condition. But this mode of meeting an indictment must, of necessity, become less and less applicable by reason of the improvements required by recent Acts of parliament. As that public ways should be of a certain width,² and that justices should order narrower ways to be widened upon compensation made to the owners of adjoining lands.³ These two clauses seem to give full authority to improve a road so as virtually to make the defence above mentioned of rare occurrence. For, instead of indicting the parish for not maintaining a sufficient width of road, (a proceeding which might probably fail), the surveyor would be indicted for disobedience to the Act of parliament, unless it were thought proper to resort to the general clause of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50,⁴ for the recovery of a penalty against him.

Nevertheless, where the road cannot be widened by reason of the interposition of private property, and the justices do not perform their duty by requiring the widening of highways under the 82nd section of the above Act, it is impossible that an indictment might be adventured, and in such a case, the defence of an immemorial condition might still be interposed. As, where a parish was indicted for allowing a road to be so muddy and narrow that people could hardly pass along.⁵ So it was said, that a person need not repair beyond the original state of the road.⁶ So, where a public way crossed the bed of a river which washed over it at every tide, leaving a deposit of mud, it was held, that the parish could not be bound to make it good, if from the nature of things the repair would be ineffectual, but the jury thought otherwise, and found a verdict of guilty.⁷

Fences.] The fences adjoining to a road must be repaired by the owners of land, and trustees who had turned a road through an inclosure, and had repaired the neighbouring fences for many ¹ See the Highway Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, ss. 85, 86.

² 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 80.

³ Id. s. 82.

⁴ Sect. 20.

⁵ R. v. Stretford, 2 Ld. Raym. 1169.

⁶ 1 Salk. 359; 6 Mod. 163.

⁷ R. v. Landulph, 1 M. & Rob. 393. "Where two parishes are separated by a river, and there is no positive evidence of the boundary line between them, it is to be presumed to coincide with the middle line of the channel." By Patteson, J., 1 M. & Rob. 393.

years, were held not liable to continue such repairs.¹ If no such fences previously existed, the parish is not liable to be called to account for not putting up guard fences, upon an allegation that the king's subjects could not pass, "as they were wont to do."²

Proceedings.] It has been sufficiently apparent from the matters already laid before the reader, that the proceeding by indictment is the more ordinary remedy employed to compel a parish to repair. But an information may likewise be applied for,³ and the court will grant it under certain circumstances. As, where there is a difficulty in procuring persons to take necessary steps against the parish. So, again, where the grand jury refused to find a bill for the non-repair of a road.⁴ But the grand jury must be shown to have been guilty of a gross misbehaviour in not finding the bill, and, therefore, where it appeared that the road in question was but of little value to the public, the court refused an information.⁵ And per cur.: "There is another reason why the court ought never to give leave to file an information for not repairing a highway, unless it be a case of great enormity, namely, that the fine set on a conviction upon an information for not repairing a highway, cannot be expended in repairing the highway, whereas the fine set on a conviction upon an indictment for not repairing a highway, is always to be expended in the repair of the highway."⁶

So, again, where the trustees of a road exceed their power, although not from corruption or partiality. And here the information will go not to punish them criminally, since the fine would be nominal, but for the purpose of making them rectify the mistake.⁷

The 94th and 95th sections of 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, however, have pointed out a method of compelling the repair of highways. For by sect. 94, in case of a want of reparation, the surveyor or other person liable is to be summoned before the justices at special sessions,⁸ and the justices may convict such surveyor or other person, and proceed accordingly to order the repairs. But by sect. 95, if the obligation to repair be disputed, the justices may order a bill of indictment to be preferred at the next assizes or sessions, and the necessary witnesses to be subpoenaed, and the costs shall be directed by the judge or justices to be paid out of ¹ R. v. Llandilo, 2 T. R. 232; S. P. Winter v. Charter, 3 Y. & Jer. 308. See also R. v. Whitney, 7 C. & P. 208. With respect to highways at the end of bridges, see post, "Bridges." See further as to highways, 1 Hawk. c. 76.

² R. v. Whitney, 7 C. & P. 208.

³ See Anon. 2 Barnard. 54.

⁴ R. v. Walbourne, W. Kel. 63.

⁵ R. v. Steyning, Say. Rep. 92.

⁶ Id. 93.

⁷ R. v. Rogers and others, 2 Ld. Keny. 373.

⁸ Who, as it seems, must be the surveyor of the district, or some person so locally connected. See R. v. Fylingdales, 1 M. & Ry. 176.

the highway rate,—provided that such indictment may be removed into the Court of Queen's Bench by certiorari.¹

Sometimes, though very rarely, the Court of Chancery has interfered. As where the attorney-general filed an information in that court in order to settle a right. The lord chancellor, upon this, directed that proceedings upon an indictment should be stayed, until the question as to the right had been determined in chancery.²

Indictment for non-repair against parish.] It is usual in an indictment against a parish to state that there was and is a common king's highway leading from A. towards and unto B. for all persons to pass with their horses, coaches, carts, and carriages. It then alleges that a portion of this way is out of repair, stating the length and breadth of the bad road, so that the horses, &c., cannot pass without danger; to the great damage, &c.³ The indictment concludes by averring that the parish of C. ought to repair and amend the same.

In observing for a moment upon this form, it may be said, that the highway need not be alleged as having existed from time immemorial.⁴ But it is of consequence to state the termini of the way with much correctness, if, indeed, it be judged right to mention them at all, for, strictly speaking, as a highway is infinite, the omission of termini would not be fatal.⁵ Still, having set them out, a misdescription may be dangerous. It has been held, that an indictment for stopping a way at D., leading from D. to S. was faulty, because D. was excluded by the word "from".⁶ So the words "from Roxeth-place house to Stroud gate," exclude both these places.⁷ So, where the road was stated as leading from Hatley towards and unto Gamlingay, the court made the rule absolute for arresting the judgment against the inhabitants of Gamlingay.⁸ It is true, that in a much more modern case than the above, Lord Tenterden declared, that his mind was not satisfied with the decision of the court in R. v. Gamlingay to the effect that the words "from" and "to" were necessarily exclusive.⁹ But, nevertheless, a speculation upon the probable opinion

¹ The court will not grant this writ, however, upon an affidavit that difficult questions of law may arise at the sessions. R. v. Leeds, 5 Dowl. N. P. C. 123. Some specific difficulty must be pointed out. R. v. Jowl, 1 Nev. & P. 28; 5 Dowl. N. P. C. 435.

² 9 Mod. 273.

³ Not of all the inhabitants, but of all the king's liege people. R. v. Thorowgood, 1 Mod. 107. R. v. Hayward, Cro. El. 148.

⁴ Say. Rep. 167.

⁵ And see 3 T. R. 514, Lord Kenyon.

⁶ R. v. Halsey, 2 Ro. Ab. 81; Latch. 183; S. C. Noy. Rep. 90.

⁷ R. v. Harrow, per cur., 4 Burr. 2092. And in the same case it was deemed no good objection that the indictment described the way as leading from a hamlet, instead of from a vill or town.

⁸ R. v. Gamlingay, 3 T. R. 513; Leach, 528. S. P. R. v. Botfield, Car. & M. 151, in the case of obstructing a road.

⁹ 7 B. & C. 415. See also Phillips v. Davies, 2 Anstr. 572, where the Court of Exchequer held that "from" might be taken inclusively. 12 Mod. 109.

of future judges would hardly justify the hazard of departing from the usual accuracy required in indictments of this nature. The case just referred to was where a culvert had been damaged, and the statement was, that the culvert passed along the highway in the parish of S., opposite to S. mill, in a certain king's common highway there, leading from S. to H. It was contended, that it did not sufficiently appear that the road obstructed was in the parish of S., and R. v. Gamlingay was relied upon. But the court said, that there was a distinct allegation of the nuisance having been committed in the parish of S., and to construe "to and from" as exclusive in this case, said Lord Tenterden, "would be to make an allegation inconsistent and insensible, which otherwise is perfectly consistent and sensible."¹ On the other hand, it has been again holden on the circuit, that the words "from and through" exclude the terminus.²

Again, to pursue the subject of variance where the termini are expressed in the indictment. A road was described as leading from D. to C. and thence to R. But the proof was that a person must turn back a quarter of a mile from C. before he got into the road indicted, so that the way in question did not lead from D. and C. to R., and accordingly the defendants were acquitted.³ So where it was alleged that a gate had been erected, thereby obstructing a way "from the town of C. to a place called H.," and the obstruction was charged to have been "between the town of C. and H.," it was held that the words from and between excluded the town. Consequently, as the locus in quo was within the limits of the town of C., the indictment could not be sustained.⁴ A way was described as leading from Abingdon to East Hendred. It appeared in evidence that a person intending to reach these termini must go four miles along the Chorlton road, cross the Wantage turnpike road, and then go along another road from the Wantage road and East Hendred. It was objected that the way should have been described as leading from C. road to W. turnpike road. But Erskine, J., held the description right, because by this way a person would go from Abingdon to East Hendred.⁵ But where A. was one terminus and B. the other, it was not considered a valid objection that the road turned backwards at an acute angle, though the part from A. to the angle was an immemorial way, and that from the angle to B. recently dedicated.⁶ It must, nevertheless, be understood, that if the same description will apply to more than one highway, advantage only can be taken of the circumstance by a plea in abatement. As where the road indicted was stated to lead from H. towards and unto U. It was said, that many roads might as well have been stated as leading from Hammersmith to Uxbridge. "But is it not true," said Lord Ellen-

¹ R. v. Knight and others, 7 B. & C. 413.

² R. v. Upton on Severn, 6 C. & P. 133.

³ R. v. Great Camfield, 6 Esp. 136.

⁴ R. v. Fisher, 8 C. & P. 612.

⁵ R. v. Steventon, 1 Car. & K.

⁶ R. v. March. of Downshire,

4 Adol. & El. 232; 5 Nev. & M. 662.

borough, "that it does lead from H. to U., as alleged: had there been five other roads to which the description would have equally applied, you should have pleaded an abatement: the objection cannot be taken under the plea of not guilty.¹

County.] Some county should be mentioned, although it need not be shown in which of two vills of a parish the nuisance exists.² Upon an indictment for stopping a road leading from S. to M. in the county of D., the court quashed the indictment, because it did not appear in what county S. was, as the county of D. referred to M. only.³ But where, upon a charge for erecting a gate at Hornsey, in Middlesex, in a highway leading to Highgate, it was not added that Highgate was in Middlesex, the court said that the venue in the margin, which was Middlesex, should extend to Highgate.⁴

Highway.] The place must be called a highway, not a horse-way,⁵ although it need not of necessity be designated a common highway.⁶

Nature of the way.] The indictment proceeds to describe the nature of the way. And here, again, whatever may be the course of procedure in actions for obstructing a private right of way,⁷ it seems that the omission of the particular right claimed, as for horses, &c., would not be fatal, and more especially if it be a general right.⁸ Whilst, on the other hand, an incorrect description may be productive of a fatal variance. As where the allegation was of a right to pass on foot, or horseback, and in carriages, and the evidence disclosed a right to a footway only; there being no separate count for obstructing a footway, the defendants were acquitted.⁹ And this case differed entirely from Allen v. Ormond, referred to above, because in that case there was a claim of a foot and horse way unto and into a certain public king's highway, and there was a general verdict for the plaintiff, and the court deemed the terminus ad quem sufficiently proved, because here was a public highway for foot passengers.¹⁰ So again, where a way was

¹ R. v. Hammersmith, 1 Stark. 357.

² R. v. Blower, Say. Rep. 119.

³ R. v. Raymond, Noy. Rep. 122.

⁴ R. v. Springal, 1 Bulst. 203.

⁵ R. v. Madox, Cro. El. 63; 4 Leon. 121.

⁶ R. v. Hammond, 10 Mod. 382; Str. 44. Formerly a party was discharged for want of the word "king's" highway. R. v. Keen, 4 Leon. 121.

⁷ See Allan v. Ormond, 8 East, 4.

⁸ R. v. Hatfield, Ca. Temp. Hardw. 316. "I do not remember any authority," said Lord Hardwicke, "that holds it necessary to say it is highway, for this or that particular carriage; for, if it is a common highway, it is a highway for all manner of things," Id.—not merely for carriages; for it had been objected, that it ought to have been shown whether the way were a footway or for carts, or horses, &c., Id.

⁹ R. v. Burgess, Say. Rep. 169.

¹⁰ 8 East, 4. Though it was added, that such a description might be bad upon special demurrer, as not pointing out with certainty what sort of a highway was meant. Id.

mentioned as one for carriages, and the proof was that persons on horseback had gone along it, but there was no proof as to carriages having gone along the whole length, the defendants were acquitted upon a verdict of "not guilty as to carriages," because there should have been a count for horses in order to have supported the indictment.¹ The same parish was again indicted, and the road was called a pack and prime way, in corroboration of which statement the evidence showed a right for carriages to pass along, but this proof was insufficient, and the defendants were acquitted.²

An indictment for obstruction charged that the way interrupted was for all the liege subjects, &c., to go, return, &c., with their horses, coaches, carts, and carriages, in and along the way. It turned out, however, that the road passed under an archway nine feet broad and ten feet high, through which carts of a particular description, loaded in a particular way, could not pass. Upon objection taken, Littledale, J., expressed a doubt on account of the generality of the word "all," but allowed the case to proceed, and a verdict of guilty was found. Upon motion, the court held that the indictment was well sustained, for it was not alleged that there was a way for all carriages, and the rule was refused.³

Length and breadth.] Then as to the statement of the length and breadth, it seems not now to be necessary,⁴ although it is usual to mention these facts, and it might likewise be added, that such precision only would be required in such a statement as might acquaint the parish with the nature of their supposed liability.

"Was and still is at the parish of A., very ruinous," &c.] It must be stated that the way in question is within the indicted parish, otherwise the parish is not bound to repair.⁵ But the court will not quash the indictment.⁶

The indictment concludes by naming the inhabitants in particular who are bound to the reparation of the way, and here care should be taken to mention rightly the persons liable. For where the inhabitants of part of a parish only were charged, because the parish was situate in two counties, and those persons only were proceeded against in whose county the want of repair existed, the

¹ R. v. Weonard's, 5 C. & P. 579.

² R. v. St. Weonard's, 6 C. & P. 582.

³ R. v. Lyon and another, Ry. & Moo. N. P. C. 151; 1 C. & P. 527; 5 D. & Ry. 497.

⁴ R. v. Smith, Say. Rep. 98. R. v. Brookes, Id. 167. R. v. East Lidford, Id. 301, overruling R. v. All Saints, Ca. Temp. Hardw. 105, and other more ancient decisions.

See also Id. 316, where Lord Hardwicke said that the length and breadth must be ascertained in indictments. Formerly the court would estimate the fine according to the length and breadth of the road out of repair, which occasioned the necessity of setting out these matters.

⁵ R. v. Hartford. Cowp. 111.

⁶ R. v. Shelderton, 2 Keb. 221.

court held that the rule for arresting the judgment for the crown must be made absolute, the whole parish being responsible.¹

Where a road lies in two parishes, the indictment should charge the proportionate repair required to be ad medium filum viæ. So that a count, stating a road three miles long and fifteen feet broad to be out of repair, was held insufficient where it turned out that the road was situate in two parishes.²

Indictment against a township, or hamlet, or tithing, &c., for non-repair.] The indictment against a particular division of a parish differs principally from that against the parish itself in the statement of the obligation, which, in the case of the township or other division, is said to be immemorial by virtue of a prescription or custom. For it is not enough to say, that the inhabitants of the district ought to repair and amend, but that they are bound to do so by reason of this custom or prescription.³ Wherefore it is that an averment is universally introduced, alleging that the inhabitants of the district indicted have been from time whereof the memory of man is not to the contrary used and accustomed to repair, &c. An extra-parochial hamlet was indicted for non-repair, but no immemorial obligation was mentioned, nor was it alleged that the hamlet did not form part of a larger district, the inhabitants of which might have been bound to repair. The court accordingly reversed the judgment against the hamlet upon a writ of error brought, for all the facts contained in the indictment might be true, and still there might be a larger district, including the hamlet, liable to repair the road in question.⁴

It is also said that an advantage may be gained by alleging a general custom within the parish for each subdivision to repair, as well as a custom simply for the individual subdivision indicted to repair its own roads, since evidence thereof is admitted in support of the general custom.⁵ However, should there be any exceptions to the rule, they should be alleged, and having made the exception it becomes necessary to show further that the highway in question is not such an exception.⁶ The corporation of Liverpool were indicted for not repairing a highway, and an immemorial usage

¹ R. v. Clifton, 5 T. R. 498. R. v. Cripplegate, Id. 500, cited there, overruling R. v. Weston, 4 Burr. 2507.

² R. v. St. Pancras, Peake, N. P. C. 219. It is hardly necessary to advert to the omission of contrà pacem. After verdict, outlawry, confession, default, or otherwise, no judgment shall be stayed on this account. 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, s. 20. It used to be holden that in the case of a non-feasance, contrà pacem was not necessary, but where there was a misfeasance it ought to appear. R. v. Lady Gresham, Godb. 59, for setting up a gate in Osterley Park. R. v. Leyton, Cro. Car. 584. Setting up a dam.

³ 5 Burr. 2700. R. v. Marton, 2 T. R. 514; Andr. 276.

⁴ R. v. Kingsmoor, 2 B. & C. 190; 3 D. & Ry. 398.

⁵ Stark. Cr. Pl. 698, in the note.

⁶ The pleading, however, need not go on to state by whom the excepted way ought to be amended. R. v. Ecclesfield, 1 Stark. 395.

was laid in the township of Liverpool to repair all ways within their township, except such as ought to be repaired according to the form of the several statutes in that case respectively made. The second count included the highways and public streets. The third count charged the liability as being within the town and parish of Liverpool. The fourth count charged the corporation by virtue of their tenure of an ancient port.¹ The fifth count was for repair ratione tenuræ of lands.² And the sixth contained a similar allegation in respect of a market.³ All these counts contained the same exception mentioned in the first, but in not one of them was it averred that the highway indicted was not within the exceptive clauses of the Acts of parliament. And for this cause justice was arrested. And besides, it was not distinguished whether these statutes were public or private, for if they were the latter, it was necessary to have pleaded them specially.⁴ But the court did not decide upon this point, deeming the other objection to be quite fatal.⁵ So where a plea charged the inhabitants of seven townships with the repair of a highway, and went on to say, that part of the way was in Great Broughton, and the residue in Little Broughton, and that the respective portions ought to be repaired by Great and Little B., independently of the rest of the parish, a special demurrer showing for cause that the plea had failed to distinguish what part of the highway lay within Great B., and what part within Little B., was allowed.⁶ So where an indictment charged three townships with an omission to repair a way situate in a fourth township (all being in the same parish), it was held faulty, and the judgment was arrested for want of showing that the road was not within the defendants' district.⁷ But it was not deemed a good objection that the inhabitants of the three townships were jointly indicted.⁸ There would have been another objection—that no consideration was laid, the law being, that it is not competent to charge a parish or township with the amendment of a road not within the respective boundary of either without laying such a consideration.⁹ So, likewise, it must be stated that the road is one which, but for the custom, the parish would be bound to repair.¹⁰

Trustees.] An indictment will not lie against the trustees of a turnpike road.¹¹

¹ But inhabitants cannot be charged as holding lands by tenure.
² B. & C. 166.

³ Id.

⁴ Id.

⁵ See 1 M. & S. 435, upon this point.

⁶ R. v. Liverpool, 3 East, 86.

⁷ R. v. Bridekirk, 11 East, 304. But leave was given to amend.

⁸ R. v. Bishop Auckland, 1

Adol. & El. 744. R. v. Upton, 6 C. & P. 133.

⁹ 1 Adol. & El. ut supra.

¹⁰ See Id.

¹¹ R. v. Eastington, 1 Nev. & P. 192; 5 Adol. & El. 765. See as to non-repair of a road under an Inclosure Act, Stark. Cr. Pl. 698.

¹² 2 B. & A. 183, by Abbott, C. J.

Indictments ratione tenuræ, clausuræ, &c.] The indictment against A. ratione tenuræ concludes by saying that A.,¹ "by reason of his² tenure of certain lands situate, &c., ought to repair the said highways, &c." The tenure, therefore, is a necessary ingredient,³ and the charge must be in respect of some property.⁴ But a title of prescription need not appear in case of a liability by tenure, there being a plain distinction between tenure and inhabitation, or residence.⁵ And the nature of the estate is also immaterial,⁶ although it was once said that lessee for years would not be liable.⁷ If several parties be indicted for non-repair, as for not keeping the road amended before their doors, the charge must be several, and not joint.⁸ In an indictment for encroachment, the defendant was charged with having, at the township of W., at a highway there, leading from a highway, &c., towards L., by a wall there, encroached, &c. It was objected that the indictment was not sufficiently certain, but the court were of opinion that the words "there," and "said," could only be referred to the highway first mentioned, and the judgment was affirmed.⁹ It has been made a question, whether upon an indictment of this nature, it is sufficient to aver that the inclosure was made whilst the party was in possession of the land assigning.¹⁰

Pleading.] Under the general issue, the parish can only affirm that the place mentioned in the indictment is not a highway, or that there is no foundation at all for the charge, as that there has been sufficient repair done, or that the highway is not in the parish. But a township or particular division of a parish may give evidence of the obligation of other places, or particular persons, under not guilty. And so likewise may an individual indicted for non-repair by reason of tenure or encroachment.¹¹ It follows, that if a parish will seek to deliver its inhabitants from the burden, there must be a special plea, showing in particular who ought to repair,¹² and so if a township choose unnecessarily to ¹ It should be said, late of —, &c. R. v. Lucy, Noy. Rep. 87; but see Cro. El. 148.

² "His" is not now an indispensable word as it was formerly. 1 Str. 187; 1 Ventr. 331, overruling R. v. Corrott, Noy. Rep. 93; 11 Mod. 302.

³ Sty. 400.

⁴ Godb. 400.

⁵ 2 Saund. 158, note (9).

⁶ 1 Salk. 357; 7 Mod. 55.

⁷ 3 Salk. 182. See the note by Evans. An award made under a submission by a tenant of the premises cannot be received as an adjudication, being binding only upon the party making the submission, nor as evidence of reputation, being post litem motam. R. v. Cotton, 3 Campb. 444, by Dampier, J. ⁸ Mar. 45, pl. 71.

⁹ R. v. Wright (in error), 1 Adol. & El. 434; 3 Nev. & M. 892.

¹⁰ R. v. Mawgan, 3 Nev. & P. 502.

¹¹ 2 Saund. 159, note 10.

¹² Which confesses, of course, the fact of the highway, so that the defendant cannot give evidence after pleading thus, that the locus in quo is not a highway R. v. Brown, 11 Mod. 273.

plead special matter, instead of being contented with the general issue, the plea will be void, if it do not specify the persons liable in lieu of such township.¹

Moreover, the special plea must conclude with a traverse of the party's own liability, in the case of a township or particular individual. But a parish should not traverse in this manner, because it would be to traverse matter of law. So, where Sir N. S. was presented for not repairing by reason of the tenure of lands he was said to have encroached upon and inclosed, it was held sufficient for him to traverse his liability by tenure; for had he traversed the encroachment, it would have been matter of law, the tenure being the principal matter.² Under special circumstances an information will be granted.³

View.] On an indictment for not repairing a highway, the court cannot grant a view by consent, though a private person prosecutes.⁴

Costs.] Under the general Act for regulating highways,⁵ the court before whom any indictment shall be preferred,⁶ shall award

¹ See 2 Saund. ut supra.

² R. v. Stoughton, 2 Saund. 158. As to the competency of inhabitants, trustees, &c., to give evidence in cases connected with the repair of highways, see 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 100; 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 137; 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, s. 84; collectors, 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 59. A witness happening to be in court was held bound to answer questions upon an indictment for stopping up a footway, although it were in the form of a civil proceeding. R. v. Sadler and others, 4 C. & P. 218. It is to be observed that a submission upon a matter relating to an indictment for non-repair is revocable at common law, the 9 & 10 Will. 3, c. 5, and 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 42, s. 39, applying to civil proceedings only. R. v. Bardell, 1 Nev. & P. 74; 5 Ad. & El. 619. The court will not grant a new trial in cases of misdemeanors, unless it be for a misdirection of the judge; and, therefore, where the defendants had been acquitted upon an indictment for a nuisance, the court refused the rule moved for on the ground of the verdict being against evidence. R. v. Mann, 4

M. & S. 337; R. v. Burbon, 5 M. & S. 392; R. v. Sutton, 5 B. & Adol. 52. 2 Nev. & M. 57; see 1 Wils. 298; 1 Stark. 516; 1 Ch. Rep. 354. But the judgment in favour of the defendants may be stayed. See post.

³ R. v. Upton St. Leonard's, 10 Q. B. 827.

⁴ R. v. Kingsmill, 1 Sess. Ca. 87. See R. v. Tradgeley and others, Id. 180.

⁵ 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 98. Costs at the discretion of justices are given by other sections, in cases within the jurisdiction of such justices.

⁶ Application need not therefore, of necessity, be made to the judge who tries the indictment, as formerly. R. v. Chadderton, 5 T. R. 272. A certificate that the defence was frivolous has been deemed sufficient, without expressly awarding the costs. R. v. Clifton, 6 T. R. 344. And a rule for arresting the judgment will not retard the operation of the certificate. R. v. St. John's, Margate, 6 M. & S. 130. See also R. v. Salwick, 2 B. & Adol. 136.

costs to the prosecutor, to be paid by the person indicted, if it shall appear to the court that the defence made to the indictment was frivolous or vexatious, whether removed or not by certiorari.¹ And the Court of King's Bench may, under this section, award costs incurred before the removal of the indictment, if it appear to the judge that the defence has been frivolous or vexatious.² By sect. 95, the costs of the prosecution are to be paid from the highways rate. And it seems imperative upon the judge to make the order;³ but Patteson, J., refused to do so, in a case where the defendants were acquitted, on the ground of there being no highway as charged in the indictment.⁴ So, again, where a wall over which a road once passed was washed away by the sea.⁵ And, again, where there had not been a sufficient dedication,⁶ in which cases there was an acquittal, there being no highway. Tindal, C. J., however, disapproved of these cases, and said, that the term "highway" was not to be understood in its strict sense, but as including a road considered to be a highway.⁷ The court would not go into the question of highway or no highway upon the matter of costs.⁸ And, as the certificate in R. v. Heanor was set aside by the Court of Queen's Bench, it may be considered as settled that the opinion of Patteson, J., is the best authority, and that it is not imperative for the judge to award costs. The amount of costs ought to be specified in the order made under sect. 95. If the judge does not ascertain this before the trial, nor subsequently, the Court of Queen's Bench will not enforce it by mandamus.⁹ Perhaps the surveyor might be indicted. The funds out of which the costs should issue ought to be specified, if not the court will set aside the order.¹⁰ The order for the indictment must appear to have been at the special sessions for the division where the highway is situate. If not, an order for costs thus made by the judge¹¹ will be set aside.¹² That it was really so, and that the order of the quarter sessions especially recited it, made no difference.¹³ Yet there needs not to be any express averment on the order, if the fact can be gathered fairly by implication.¹⁴ An order to pay

¹ R. v. Pembridge, 3 Q. B. 901; 3 Gale & D. 603. R. v. Downholland, 2 New. S. C. 177. The court certified for a special jury.

² R. v. Preston, Inhabitants, 7 Dowl. P. C. 593. See R. v. Upper Papworth, 2 East, 413. Alderson, B., had refused these costs at the assizes, thinking that the court where the indictment was preferred, which was the court of quarter sessions, had the sole power of giving costs. S. C. 2 Moo. & Rob. 137.

³ R. v. Yorkill, 9 C. & P. 218.

⁴ R. v. Chedworth, Id. 285.

⁵ R. v. Paul, 2 Moo. & Rob. 307.

⁶ R. v. Challicomb, 2 Moo. & Rob. 309, n.

⁷ R. v. Heanor, Id. 445, n.

⁸ R. v. Downholland, 2 New. S. C. 177.

⁹ R. v. Clark, 5 Q. B. 887; Dav. & M. 687. Whether the amount can be ascertained after the expiration of the commission, qy.?

¹⁰ R. v. Watford, 4 Dowl. & L. 593.

¹¹ R. v. Watford, supra.

¹² R. v. Hickling, 7 Q. B. 880, 899. R. v. Martin, Dav. & M. 386; 2 Q. B. 1037, n.

¹³ R. v. Martin, ut supra.

A., the prosecutor, or his attorney, is not bad because A. was dead when the order was made.¹ The writ of certiorari is, however, saved to the defendant by 5 & 6 Vict. c. 50, s. 95.² After much expense had been incurred in carrying forward a prosecution at sessions, the defendant, who had previously sued out this writ, gave notice of his having done so, and likewise notice of trial, upon which the prosecutor applied for the sessions' costs, under sect. 98 above. But the court were unable to comply with the motion, although these costs had been rendered useless by reason of the defendant's conduct.³ But a procedendo was subsequently awarded in this case.⁴ However, where one inhabitant had removed the writ by certiorari, and entered into the usual recognizances to pay costs, the other inhabitants were not allowed to plead guilty.⁵ If there should be a plea of guilty, the prosecutor will lose the costs, because the indictment is not tried.⁶

Costs, certiorari.] Then, with regard to costs upon the writ of certiorari, the prosecutor is a party grieved within the statute of 5 Wm. & M. c. 11, in this respect: as the constable of the manor within which the highway was situate.⁷ Or inhabitants who have suffered inconvenience from the circumstance of their way being out of repair.⁸ Or a justice of peace.⁹ But where the prosecutor did not apply for these costs until two years after judgment, and so far from having used the way, he declared he did not care about it, the court refused him costs as a party grieved under 5 Wm. & M. although the prosecution had been at his instance and expense.¹⁰ Again, persons dwelling near a steam engine, whose smoke had caused them considerable annoyance, were considered to be parties grieved, so as to be entitled to their costs under this statute of 5 Wm. & M.¹¹ The writ of certiorari, however, cannot be had after conviction. The defendants must not take their chance of succeeding at the sessions, and then come to the court for the purpose of objecting to the indictment.¹² In the case of a private road, it seems that the court cannot entertain the writ, even with consent.¹³

¹ R. v. Watford, ut supra.

² The rule for this purpose is nisi in the first instance. R. v. Leeds, 5 D. P. C. 123. The prosecutor was always considered to be entitled to his writ of certiorari, even without affidavit or recognizance. Cowp. 78; 2 Str. 1209. But see now 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 33, s. 1, which requires that the prosecutor shall have the leave of the court for this purpose. But the crown, whether prosecutor or defendant, is entitled to it. See Say. Rep. 128.

³ R. v. Higgins, 5 D. P. C. 375.

⁴ 5 Ad. & El. 594; S. C. 1 Nev. & P. 50.

⁵ R. v. Luxborough, 1 D. P. C. 527.

⁶ R. v. Vowchurch, 2 Car. & K. 393.

⁷ R. v. Taunton, 3 M. & S. 465.

⁸ R. v. Williamson, 7 T. R. 32. R. v. Taunton, 3 M. & S. 465.

⁹ See R. v. Kettleworth, 5 T. R. 33.

¹⁰ R. v. Incledon, 1 M. & S. 268. The prosecutor was, moreover, a minor when the obstruction commenced, and his name was not on the back of the indictment. See R. v. Commerell and another, 4 M. & S. 203.

¹¹ R. v. Dewsnap and another, 16 East 194.

¹² R. v. Pennegoes, 1 B. & C. 142.

¹³ R. v. Micklethwaite, 4 Burr. 2522.

Staying the judgment.—Judgment.—Consequences of judgment as to the record of convictions and acquittal becoming evidence for and against the parish and others.] It having been found the rule not to grant a new trial in cases of an acquittal for misdemeanor, and it being much doubted whether, even in cases of misdirection, such a proceeding can be adopted,¹ the Court of King's Bench has resorted to the expedient of suspending the judgment in favour of the defendant. As where the county of Middlesex was indicted for the non-repair of a bridge, and the corporation of Kingston were also indicted for the same non-repair. Both cases stood for trial at the same time, and the indictment against the corporation was taken first. The indictment on the one hand, however, and the plea on the other, alleged an immemorial obligation on the part of the bailiffs of Kingston, who were modern officers, so that the corporation were acquitted on their indictment, and the county found guilty on theirs. Had the verdicts been respectively entered up, they would have concluded the county, and therefore the court suspended the judgment until a second indictment against the corporation could be tried. And upon this latter indictment the corporation were convicted.² So, where the inhabitants of Wandsworth were charged with the non-repair of a highway, and a verdict was found in their favour, entirely at variance with the weight of evidence, the court suspended the judgment, in order that the prosecutor might try the question again, without the balance of a judgment against him.³ They, however, imposed a condition upon the prosecutor, that the inhabitants of Wandsworth should be examined at the next trial.⁴

Again, the judgment will sometimes be suspended if the verdict be adverse to the parish or county. As in the case of an indictment for the non-repair of a bridge, where the plea of liability on the part of Mr. Marsack, ratione tenuræ, was not maintained.⁵ But Lord Ellenborough added, that the county must repair without prejudice to their case before the second trial, if the public should require it; and Le Blanc, J., said that the county might proceed to indict the parishes they considered liable.⁶

The judgment is, that the defendants should pay a fine. And the amount of this fine must depend upon the opinion which the court entertain of the state of repair in which the road is, or is likely to be in a short time. For as there cannot be more than one fine upon each indictment, the prosecutor must have recourse to writs of distringas, or to another indictment, if the way be not put into repair.⁷ Should the court be assured of the repair, they

¹ See ante.

² R. v. Middlesex, 1 B. & Ald. 64, n.

³ R. v. Wandsworth, Id. 63. But this, as Lord Ellenborough observed, was indirectly granting a new trial. Id. 65; 2 Ch. Rep. 282.

⁴ 1 B. & Ald. 66.

⁵ R. v. Oxfordshire, 16 East, 223. R. v. Southampton, 2 Ch. Rep. 215. R. v. Sutton, 5 B. & Adol. 52; 2 Nev. & M. 57. It was refused in R. v. Chigwell, 1 B. & Ald. 67, n.

⁶ 16 East, 225.

⁷ R. v. Old Malton, 4 B. & Ald. 470, n.

will set a nominal fine.¹ Otherwise there will be a distringas in infinitum until such amendment be certified.² And one of the tests of repair is that the repaired way is ascertained to be in a condition to stand the winter.³

It would seem from an old case, that an accident on a bad road, as the loss of a horse in consequence of the want of repair, might operate in aggravation of the fine. And thus Roll, C. J., set a fine of 20*l.*, observing that the county suffered by the neglect of the convicted parish.⁴ Moreover, in cases of inclosure, the court will give judgment to abate the encroachment until the ancient way be sufficiently repaired.⁵

The application of the fine imposed after a conviction is declared to be towards the repair of the highways in the indicted parish. No prior repairs by third persons can be indemnified by the fine. Thus, where the defendant repaired the road before payment of the fine, they were held entitled to a stay of proceedings upon the order, and the prosecutors were not allowed to claim on behalf of third parties.⁶ It is to be levied by and paid into the hands of such persons residing in or near the parish as the justices or court shall order. These persons are to account for the money thus delivered to them, or, in default, to forfeit double the sum received. And if any fine, &c., shall be levied on any inhabitant of such parish, he may complain to the justices at a special sessions, and the justices shall make an order upon the surveyor for the payment of the same to the applicant out of the highway rate, within two months after the service of the order.⁷ An application for relief should, however, be made in a reasonable time by the inhabitants. For where eight years had been allowed to elapse before a mandamus was applied for commanding the justices to make a rate for reimbursing certain persons, the court observed that the lateness of the application was fatal to the claim.⁸ This decision was come to, notwithstanding that applications had been made to the magistrates during the interval, that they had ordered an account of the money expended upon repairs only one year before the application, and that it had been the opinion of the justices that the parish had been improperly indicted.⁹

The record of a conviction against the parish is binding upon ¹ See 6 Mod. 163. Sty. 163. But they will not quash an indictment. The defendants must come in and plead guilty. R. v. Lincombe, 2 Ch. Rep. 214. R. v. Loughton, 3 Smith, 575, overruling Palm. 389. And upon a conviction for not repairing ratione tenuræ, the court would not set a small fine until the prosecutor's costs had been paid. R. v. Wingfield, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 602.

² R. v. Cluworth, 6 Mod. 163; S. C., 1 Salk. 358.

³ R. v. Witney, 5 D. P. C. 728.

⁴ R. v. Stoneham, Sty. 366.

⁵ R. v. Hillarsden, 1 Keb. 894.

⁶ R. v. Barnard Castle, 5 Jur. 799.

⁷ 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 96. See R. v. Townshend and another, Dougl. 420.

⁸ R. v. Justices of Lancashire, 12 East, 366.

⁹ Id.

the parish,¹ unless fraud should have intervened, or some other circumstance which would imply that the parish had been surprised. Thus, where the parish of E., consisting of three townships, was indicted for the non-repair of a highway, and C. one of the townships, pleaded an immemorial custom for each township to maintain its own roads, it was held, that C. might adduce evidence to show that upon a former trial and conviction of the parish for not repairing ways in A. township and B. township, pleas of not guilty by A. and B. were pleaded generally for the whole parish with the privity of the inhabitants of C. Subject, however, to this evidence denying knowledge on the part of C. records of convictions against the parish of E. were deemed sufficient prima facie evidence to disprove the custom claimed by the township of C. There was a verdict of guilty.²

But a record of acquittal is not such conclusive evidence, although it is a millstone, to use the words of Lord Ellenborough, the weight of which it is impossible to resist.³ For other parties might indict the parish, and these persons cannot be bound by the former record. The acquittal, indeed, might have proceeded upon the want of proof that the road was out of repair.⁴ An order of justices under 34 Geo. 3, c. 64, as to the division of repair, has been deemed conclusive.⁵

CHAPTER V.

NUISANCES—BRIDGES.

The non-repair of public bridges being a nuisance, is an indictable misdemeanor, and the county is liable in the first instance;⁶ and each county in which a bridge is situated stands in the same position with reference to the repair of bridges, as the parish with reference to highways within its limit. Consequently, if a bridge be out of repair, the county cannot discharge itself without showing that it is not a public bridge, or that it has not been built in a proper manner, in conformity with the provisions of 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, or that some other body of persons or an individual is liable to the reparation demanded. And so strict is this principle, that although trustees be empowered to make and repair bridges, laying out their tolls for this purpose, yet the common law liability attaches no less upon the county, so that al-

¹ R. v. St. Pancras, Peake, N. P. C. 220. in order that the prosecutor might go to a second trial without pre-

² R. v. Eardisland, 2 Campb. 494. judice.

⁴ Mann. Ind. 215.

³ R. v. Wandsworth, 1 B. & Ald. 63. And therefore it was that the court suspended the judgment, ⁵ R. v. Hickling, 7 Q. B. 880.

⁶ 13 Rep. 33; 2 Inst. 700.

though there may be a remedy against the trustees, the county must repair in the first instance.¹

These exceptions, on the part of a county, may be made available, either by way of defence, or at once by indictment against the persons liable.

What a public bridge.] Hence it follows, that a main test of the liability to repair consists in the public nature of the bridge. And in order to satisfy this term of general utility, it is of course necessary that the place in question should be actually a legal bridge. So that if there be no flumen or cursus aquæ, this definition of bridge cannot be sustained, and the county or other persons charged cannot be liable. As where certain supposed bridges mentioned in an indictment appeared to be arches in a causeway adjoining to Chislehampton bridge, and that the arches were more than 300 feet from the main bridge. It was contended for the crown, that the additional arches thus indicted as bridges, were necessary to carry off the floods, and that water needed not at all times run under such arches in order to make them bridges. But the court directed that a verdict should be entered for the defendants. The arches might have been erected, not to improve the passage along the road, but to benefit the owners of the adjoining land. And it was not found as a fact that the arches were built as a highway. Had they been erected at the same time as the main bridge, or had the inhabitants of the county repaired 300 feet beyond these arches, there might have been a strong ground for believing that the arches were part of the main bridge. Judgment for the defendants.² From this, it appears, that the term "bridge" will be satisfied by a flow of water at certain periods, as during gales or otherwise. The case was however brought forward again, when it appeared that there were five arched openings. Two of these were within 300 feet of the bridge, and the county had always repaired them. But the other three were beyond that distance, and these last were the arches concerning which the dispute had arisen. These were of value to the road, by reason of their carrying off the floods, but they were placed over low meadow ground, in a line with the main bridge. The court, again, gave judgment for the defendants. They said that the rule ought to be to hold the words, "flumen vel cursus aquæ," to be water flowing in a channel between banks, more or less defined, although such channel might be occasionally dry. This was not the case with the arches in question, which adjoined low meadow ground, and accordingly, the verdict was entered in favour of the county.³ Whereas, when the county had repaired from time immemorial, and in obedience to several presentments, and there was a constant flow of water under one of the arches, and stagnant water under the other arches, the county was held liable, and R. v. Oxfordshire was distinguished.¹ It is, therefore, a question of fact in each case, whether an arch thrown over the cursus aquæ be a bridge or not. The want of parapets to the arch will not prevent its being considered as a county bridge.²

¹ R. v. Oxfordshire, 4 B. & C. 194; 6 D. & Ry. 231. S. P. R. v. West Riding, 2 East, 342.

² R. v. Oxfordshire, cited, 1 B. & Adol. 297.

³ R. v. Oxfordshire, 1 B. & Adol. 289.

Again, a bridge will not be the less a public bridge, because its utility is confined to certain periods of the year. As if it be necessary to keep such a structure in repair during times of flood.³ So when a bridge was only used with carriages in times of flood, or frosts, when it was unsafe to pass through the neighbouring river, Lord Ellenborough said, it was not necessary that the bridge should have been open at all times, in order to support the indictment. There might have been a highway through the ford, and the people might have gone upon the adjoining land, to the great detriment of the owner when the road was bad. The bridge, therefore, might have originated in the convenience and for the protection of an individual, but still it may be of public right.⁴ So where there were a causeway and bridge, which were only used in case of floods, but which, nevertheless, were always open to the public, Abbott, C. J., held, that the county must repair. The bridge had neither parapets nor rails, nor did it appear that, for the sixty or seventy years of its existence, it had ever been repaired. In very high floods the bridge itself as well as the ford was impassable. Verdict guilty.⁵ Moreover, a change of situation, or of size, or of the nature of the bridge, will not destroy the liability to repair. On the contrary, in some cases, if the alteration should have tended to the convenience of the public, it will rather induce that liability; and even if a bridge altogether new were erected, it was formerly the law, that if such a bridge contributed to the public convenience, the county must repair it. This rule, however, has been altered by an Act of parliament, to which we shall presently invite attention.

Certain townships enlarged a foot bridge to a horse bridge,⁶ and soon afterwards to a carriage bridge, at their own expense. The West Riding, however, was indicted for the non-repair of this bridge. It had never been repaired by the West Riding, and there was another bridge which served for the same road; the issue was, whether these townships had immemorially repaired a carriage ¹ R. v. Derbyshire (Inhabitants), 2 Q. B. 745; 2 Gale & D. 97. R. v. York and North Midland Railway Company, 7 Rail. Ca. 419. Can there be an indictment for not completing a bridge authorized to be built by Act of parliament?

² R. v. Whitney, 4 Nev. & M. 594; S. C. 3 Ad. & El. 69; S. C. 7 C. & P. 288. If a judge at nisi prius be asked whether a particular structure is a bridge, and he say, that according to his view of the facts, he is of opinion that it is not, the verdict cannot be impeached on the ground of misdirection, if that opinion be incorrect. 3 Ad. & El. 69.

³ See 4 Campb. 189.

⁴ R. v. Northamptonshire, 2 M. & S. 262.

⁵ R. v. County of Devon, Ry. & M. N. P. C. 144. See also, R. v. Surrey, 2 Camp. 455.

⁶ It seems that an ancient horse and foot bridge is a bridge which comes within the general obligation to repair. R. v. Salop, 13 East, 95 bridge, and the jury found for the defendants. But the court granted a new trial, for the townships could never be said to have repaired immemorially a carriage bridge, which was of modern construction. And by Buller, J.,—It is true, that by enlargement, a party may not extinguish his liability, but he shall only repair pro rata, otherwise the county must repair all bridges of public utility.¹ So again, where a parish had been liable by prescription to repair an ancient wooden foot bridge, and the trustees of a turnpike road had built a bridge of brick in its room, which had been used by carriages ever since, it was held that the county could not set up a plea of immemorial repair by the parish of this bridge, and a verdict passed against the county.²

Even where it was pleaded by the inhabitants of a riding, that a township had immemorially repaired a certain foot bridge till it was taken down, and that they had since repaired the new bridge erected in lieu thereof, which new bridge was the subject of the indictment, judgment was given for the king against the inhabitants of the riding; for the bridge was of public utility, and constantly used by all persons passing by that road.³

So where a bridge had been built by a private individual, whose tin works could not be carried on without the use of the bridge, but it likewise appeared that the public had constantly used it, Lord Kenyon directed the jury to find for the crown, and no motion was made for a new trial.⁴ So where a party was bound, ratione tenuræ, to repair a carriage bridge, but certain trustees constructed a foot bridge by the side of the carriage bridge, to which it was fastened, and by which it was principally supported, it was held that the county must maintain this foot bridge.⁵ But it seems that it would not be so in the case of a bridge widened, as far as the widened part is concerned. The widening seems to be in the nature of repair, and thus the character of the bridge would not be altered so as to shift the obligation.⁶

It follows, à fortiori, that the destruction of a useful bridge cannot deliver the county from its obligation. Queen Anne built a bridge at Datchet in lieu of a ferry, and the crown repaired this bridge till 1796: It was at length taken down, and the materials were converted to the king's use.⁷ The county of Bucks was then indicted for the non-repair of this bridge, and the court were clearly of opinion that this was a public bridge, and as such repairable by the inhabitants of the shire.⁸

It being admitted then, without reference to any bridge in particular, that it is of public utility, and it being shown, moreover,

¹ R. v. West Riding, 2 East, 353, cited, 2 East, 356. R. v. West Riding, Id. 342; 1 Salk. 359.

² R. v. Surrey, 2 Camp. 455.

⁵ R. v. Middlesex, 3 B. & Adol.

³ R. v. West Riding, 5 Burr. 201.

2594; Sir Wm. Bl. 685. R. v.

Glusburne Bridge, S. P. R. v.

Lancashire, cited, 2 East, 352.

⁴ R. v. County of Glamorgan,

⁶ R. v. East Adderbury, 5 Q.

B. 187; Dav. & M. 324. Lord

Denman, C. J.; Patteson, J.

⁷ See 6 East, 154.

⁸ R. v. Bucks, 12 East, 192.

that a limited user according to the season, or a change in its nature, size, or situation, will not make it the less a public structure, but that, on the contrary, its enlargement or other improvement will rather have a tendency to throw the burden of repair upon the community who use it, we will proceed to set forth what, in reality, may be successfully urged as a defence to an indictment against the county, and, afterwards, who shall be said to be the inhabitants of such county subject to the reparation in question; and lastly, what is the nature of the repair required.

By 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 1, the condition of bridges in the highways was placed under the oversight of justices at their general sessions, who were to take care that the same were reformed, and that the parties liable to repair should be pointed out.¹ By sect. 3, where it cannot be known what hundred, town, parish, or person ought to repair, the inhabitants of the county shall repair, unless the bridge be within a city or town corporate, in which case the city, &c. shall repair. If part of the bridge be in one shire, or city, &c., and the other part in another, the respective shires, cities, &c. shall repair within their several limits.² The statute 1 Anne, s. 1, c. 18, confirms this Act of 22 Hen. 8.

By 14 Geo. 2, c. 33, s. 1, justices may, at their sessions, agree with any person for the purchase of land, in order the more conveniently to enlarge or rebuild a bridge, provided the purchase do not extend beyond one acre of land. The charge³ is to be defrayed from the county rate. Similar provisions will be found in 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 2, together with a provision for impannelling a jury, and assessing compensation in case the owners of such land cannot be treated with; and by 54 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 1, the powers of 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, were extended to any buildings which might be necessary to be purchased for the purposes of the Act.

By 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, s. 5, no bridge thereafter to be erected at

¹ See 2 Inst. 701, 702.

² See R. v. Essex, Tho. Raym. 384. It was a new provision, that a hundred could be charged by prescription. By Powell, J., 2 Ld. Raym. 1251. Where a new district was added to a city, it was held, that the inhabitants of the city generally must nevertheless repair the bridges in the new district. R. v. Justices of St. Peter's Liberty, York, 2 Ld. Raym. 1249. In this case, the writ of mandamus was quashed, because the rate for repair was not rightly made by the justices of the particular district. It ought to have been made by the justices of the city generally. See 2 Inst. 697. It seems, also, that if there be no bridge within the limits of a corporation, they may be charged towards the county repairs. 1 Keb. 687; Skin. 254. See 1 Hawk. c. 77, s. 25. If a bridge be partly within a franchise, and the residue be within a guildable, the repair shall be done in proportion, and so mutatis mutandis. 2 Inst. 701. Supposing that a corporation were dissolved, it has been said, that if the inhabitants were named, the lands would still be chargeable. R. v. Colchester, 2 Keb. 43, indicted for non-repair of a bridge. The rest of this Act relates to the mode of taxation, to the process, and the costs and charges.

³ Not only the purchase money of the land, but likewise the contingent expenses of an abstract of title, the draft of conveyance, &c. By Buller, J., 4 T. R. 596.

the expense of an individual, private person, or corporation, shall be deemed to be a county bridge, or bridge which the inhabitants of a county are liable to repair, unless it be erected in a substantial and commodious manner, under the direction or to the satisfaction of the county surveyor, or other person appointed by justices at their sessions.¹

This Act of 43 Geo. 3 is extended by 54 Geo. 3, c. 90, to bridges and roads at the end thereof, repairable by the inhabitants of hundreds and other general divisions in the nature of hundreds, in like manner as if the same were repairable by counties.² Taking a view, therefore, of these statutes, it appears that more than one line of defence is open to a county indicted for the non-repair of a bridge.

It may, however, be observed in passing, that the statute 22 Hen. 8 was, for the most part, only declaratory of the common law, and, consequently, if any bridge were not to come under the provisions of that Act, and were not excluded by 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, it would still be indictable at common law.

No surer mode of defence could be suggested than that the bridge indicted is not a public way.³ And since the 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, it is an equally good ground of defence that the structure has not been erected under the superintendence of a competent authority. It is, nevertheless, very evident that the statute contemplated new bridges only. Certain trustees built a bridge across a stream, where a culvert would have sufficed. They widened it after the passing of 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, and upon an indictment against the county, it was contended, that this alteration in the width had created a new bridge, so that the intervention of the county surveyor became necessary. But Lord Tenterden remarked, that the case of a bridge widened did not appear to have occurred to the legislature, and the rule prayed for to show cause why a verdict of acquittal should not be entered was refused.⁴ So where a county bridge, which had been washed away, was rebuilt, since the 43 Geo. 3, partly with the same materials, and in the same line of passage as before, without notice to the county surveyor, the court held that it was not a new bridge, and that the county must do the repair.⁵ Trustees having built a bridge, it was contended that they could not be considered as individuals or private persons within the 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, but the court entertained a different opinion, and the county was convicted.⁶

¹ The 7th section excepts bridges, repairable by reason of tenure or prescription, from the provisions of the Act; and adds, that nothing in the Act shall alter or affect the right to repair roads or bridges liable to that obligation.

² See post, 52 Geo. 3, c. 110; 55 Geo. 3, c. 141.

³ Although the bare fact of the bridge having been repaired by private persons, is not of itself entitled to much weight,—R. v. Northamptonshire, 2 M. & S. 262,—“it might, however, be a link in the evidence to show that the passage over the bridge was not of public right, but of sufferance.” Id. 265.

⁴ R. v. Lancashire, 2 B. & Adol. 813.

⁵ R. v. Devonshire, 2 Nev. & M. 212.

⁶ R. v. Derbyshire, 3 B. & Adol. 147.

Another ground of discharge might be, that the bridge in question is absolutely unnecessary, or that there is another bridge equally commodious, although this line of defence would be viewed with jealousy. But where a bridge had been made where a culvert would have been sufficient, the court would not discharge the county, especially as it appeared that the bridge was better for the public.¹

But the chief topic of defence on behalf of a county is the obligation which another body of persons or another individual has encountered to repair the bridge. No one can be compelled to make a bridge where none existed before,² unless it be by Act of parliament. But there may be an immemorial liability to repair it when built; and thus a section of a county, as a hundred, may be charged; or a township, by a similar obligation. Or an individual ratione tenuræ. It was said, indeed, upon one occasion, that a hundred was a limited district, and, therefore, not liable by prescription; but the court paid little attention to this objection. It was added, however, that a township was annexed by statute to the hundred of Oswestry in the time of Hen. 8, (which was the district indicted,) so that the unity being broken, it could not be affirmed that the hundred was liable immemorially. The court, however, repudiated this objection also, for the statute which annexed the township directed that the inhabitants thereof should do everything which the inhabitants of the hundred were bound to do. Judgment was accordingly given for the crown.³

If an abbot and his predecessors have, time out of mind, repaired a bridge, of alms, they are liable to repair.⁴ The lord of a manor may be chargeable by prescription, or by reason of tenure.⁵ And if the lands of the manor come to be divided into several parcels, each alienee, being a tenant of the demesnes or services, is liable to the whole charge in the first instance, although there shall be a contribution afterwards.⁶ A corporation may be liable by prescription, or ratione tenuræ.⁷ But it is scarcely necessary to observe that the respective tenements must be immemorial. Where documents were produced in evidence, showing that a mill, in respect of which the obligation to repair a bridge was said to have arisen, did not exist before the reign of Hen. 8,

¹ R. v. Lancashire, 2 B. & Adol. 813.

² Magna Charta, 9 Hen. 3, c. 15; 2 Inst. 701.

³ R. v. Hundred of Oswestry, 6 M. & S. 361. See R. v. Norwich, 1 Str. 177.

⁴ 10 Edw. 3, 28; 44 Edw. 3, 31; 13 Rep. 33.

⁵ R. v. D. of Bucklugh and others, 1 Salk. 358. 2 Ld. Raym. 792, 804. Nom. R. v. Bucknall.

⁶ 1 Salk. 358; S. P. Sir Wm. Jones, 273, case de Loddon Bridge.

And the lord cannot discharge those who purchase of him from the obligation due to the public, although he himself may be bound. 1 Salk. 358.

⁷ 2 Inst. 709. R. v. Mayor, &c. of Stratford-upon-Avon, 14 East, 348.

A corporation may be bound by usage and prescription, being local, and having a perpetual succession; but a private person cannot be bound by the act of his ancestor without a lien or binding and assets. 2 Inst. 700.

Tindal, C. J., directed an acquittal.¹ And the occupier is liable, in the first instance, for repair ratione tenuræ, although he may demand reimbursement from the owner.²

A person or company may, moreover, be chargeable under an Act of parliament. As, where the proprietors of a navigation were permitted by a special statute to amend and alter any bridges or highways which might hinder their navigation, provided they should leave in the room thereof others as convenient. Forty years since they accordingly destroyed a ford across the river, and built a bridge; and it was contended on their behalf, that as this bridge was of public utility, they could not be held liable to repair it. But the court were of a contrary opinion, and ordered that a verdict should be entered for the county, for the condition originally imposed upon these proprietors was a continuing condition. They could not leave another convenient passage in the highway without making and keeping up a bridge.³

The case of R. v. Kent was forthwith acted upon. A canal company was authorized by Act of parliament to make the river Bain navigable, and, amongst other works, to build bridges. They deepened a ford in pursuance of these plans, and thereby rendered a bridge necessary, which they built at their own expense. They repaired the bridge in the only instance in which it needed repair, and the county had never done any repairs to it. The court, upon an indictment being preferred against the county, could not distinguish this case from R. v. Kent, and a verdict was entered for the county.⁴ The Act, it was observed, only authorized and empowered the company to execute works, it did not compel them;⁵ and they were likewise enabled to discontinue any bridge, amongst other things; whence it at once followed, that the inhabitants of a county could not have by law a permanent burden thrown upon them to repair a bridge of which they had not the permanent use and enjoyment secured to them.⁶ Upon a similar occasion it was contended on the part of the defendants, that in R. v. Kent and R. v. Lindsey it had been found that the respective companies had first built the bridges in question, whereas, in the present case, it did not follow that those who made the Act, although for their own benefit, had likewise built the bridge. Moreover the Act then under consideration neither mentioned bridges nor conditions, but, on the contrary, supposed that the concern might not be beneficial to the undertakers, by reason of the words "in case they shall undertake the same" being introduced. But the court gave judgment for the crown upon an indictment against an individual for non-repair;⁷ for if occasion required that a public highway should be cut through, the duty of those who interrupted

¹ R. v. Hayman, Moo. & M. 401.

² Baker v. Greenhill, 3 Q. B. 148; 2 Gale & D. 435.

³ R. v. Kent, 13 East, 220.

⁴ R. v. Lindsey, in Lincoln, 14 East, 317.

⁵ Id. 322.

⁶ Id.

⁷ R. v. Kerrison, 3 M. & S. 526.

the way was to furnish a substitute to the public by means of a bridge.¹ Indeed, the case might be said to be stronger in favour of the county, for here the highway itself had been cut through, whereas in R. v. Kent the inconvenient ford had been exchanged for a good bridge; but what benefit does the country derive from passing over a bridge instead of the solid highway?² The defendant in the last case had been convicted upon a former trial for the non-repair of this bridge, but the judgment against him was reversed upon error for defects in the indictment, which we shall have an opportunity of noticing hereafter.

A distinction, however, was at one time supposed to exist upon this head with reference to cases where the public convenience coincided with private benefit, independently of any Act of parliament. And it was thought that if the benefit were continuing, the private person would be liable. As, if one should make a cut for the use of his mill, and build a bridge.³ The party might have been guilty of a nuisance in making the cut, which the public might have prevented; but as he continued it for his own benefit, he must be held liable to repair.⁴ Still it was said, that if the public lie by without objecting, and use a bridge, it is evidence of their being willing to adopt it as their own; so that, if it were of public benefit, the burden of sustaining it should be public likewise.⁵ But it is now settled that the repairs of a bridge built by a private person without reference to 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, shall be borne by the county. A miller, about forty years before the trial, erected a mill, by which he deepened the ford. The miller subsequently built a bridge. The ford was inconvenient and even unsafe before the building of the mill, and the water rather increased after the building. The public used the bridge as soon as the miller had built it. And the court held, upon these facts, that the county was liable. Here was no Act of parliament, and the authorities were uniform that if a private person built a bridge, which afterwards becomes of public convenience, the county is bound to repair it.⁶ The court, moreover, cited the case mentioned by North, attorney-general, in an old case to the same effect, with approbation.⁷ It is evident, nevertheless, that if a bridge be not of public utility, or if it be erected in a place where a solid highway or another useful structure existed before, the burden of repair or of any extra improvement must not rest on the county, but upon those who have caused the innovation.

The liability of a county may be suspended under the pro-

¹ R. v. Kerrison, 3 M. & S. 531, Lord Ellenborough.

² Id. 532, Bayley, J.

³ 2 East, 350, citing 1 Ro. Ab. 368.

⁴ 2 East, 350, Lord Ellenborough.

⁵ Id. 348, Lord Ellenborough.

⁶ R. v. Kent, 2 M. & S. 513, where the court said they had referred to the record mentioned in Rolle's Abridgment, and found it had no relation to the right of the mill-owner and the public, as supposed by Lord Rolle. See an extract of the record, 2 M. & S. 520.

⁷ In R. v. Wilts, 1 Salk. 359.

visions of an Act of parliament. As where trustees were authorized to take down and rebuild a bridge over the Tone, taking tolls in respect thereof, which tolls were to cease as soon as the purposes of the Act should be fulfilled. It was held, that the county could not be liable to the repair of the bridge during the continuance of the powers of the Act, which vested the bridge in the trustees.¹

Consideration.] The question of consideration sometimes arises in the case of bridges as well as of ordinary highways. No consideration need appear in the case of those who are bound by a primary obligation, as a county, or a hundred or a township where the liability has arisen beyond time of memory, because the hundred and township stand in the situation of the county in a legal view. But an individual must be charged by virtue of some consideration which appears on the record, or by a legislative enactment which must be set forth. Inasmuch, however, as the obligation in all these instances extends no further than to repair such bridges as are within the county or township, a consideration must be shown if it be sought to impose on them the amendment of a foreign structure. Therefore, where the inhabitants of two parishes were indicted for not repairing a bridge in Wales, and an immemorial obligation by reason of tenure was set forth, it was objected upon a writ of error brought to reverse the judgment against these inhabitants, that there was no averment in the indictment of the bridge being within the town, or that the inhabitants, being charged by reason of tenure, were a body corporate; and the objection was holden fatal. For first, here was no special consideration, supposing that the bridge were without the town; and next, if the bridge were within the town, the defendants could not be liable in their character of inhabitants, by reason of the tenure of lands.²

*Who are inhabitants liable to repair.*³] Every person dwelling in any shire, riding, city, or town corporate, and having lands, &c., where the bridge is, is a person liable to contribute to the repair of it.⁴ So, if he dwell in a foreign county, but have lands in the county where the bridge is situate.⁵ So any corporation or body politic residing in any county, or having lands in a county where the bridge is.⁶ And the corporation may be indicted for

¹ R. v. County of Somerset, 16 East, 305. "If the trustees are dilatory in executing the powers of the Act, I am inclined to think that the court, upon application, would lend its aid to expedite their functions." Id. 308. By Lord Ellenborough. See as to the exoneration of New Sarum from the repair of a bridge, although the bridge was brought by statute within the new limits of the borough. R. v. New Sarum, 7 Q. B. 941.

² R. v. Machynlleth and Pennegoes, 2 B. & C. 166.

³ Inhabitant is the largest word of the kind. 2 Inst. 703; 4 B. & C. 778.

⁴ 2 Inst. 703. See 4 B. & C. 778.

⁵ 2 Inst. 702.

⁶ Id.

misfeasance, ex. gr., for a neglect to repair, or for a breach of duty.¹ It is one of the limited instances in which a corporation is liable by indictment, and not inconsistent with the general principle that it is not so liable.² So the husband of a feme covert is liable to repair.³ So an infant who hath house or lands by descent or purchase.⁴ But this must be interpreted as in the person of his guardian in socage, who is liable if he be in possession.⁵

Nature of the repair required.] The power of justices at sessions, as the representatives of the county in matters of this nature, may be considered with regard to the common law and the statutes which have been made concerning the repair of bridges. First, as to changing the situation of the bridge, there might at common law have been an ad quod damnum writ to do this, or it might have been altered by authority of parliament, but the justices could not effect it by virtue of their authority until the 14 Geo. 2, c. 33.⁶

At common law the county is not even obliged to widen an ancient bridge. Lord Kenyon, indeed, mentioned a case in Cumberland, upon the consideration of which the court strongly intimated, that a bridge, though formerly adequate to the purposes intended, ought to be widened, if the public exigencies required its enlargement.⁷ The case then went to the House of Lords, but Macdonald, C. B., who delivered the opinion of the judges, said, it must be presumed, after verdict, that the over narrowness of the bridge had been occasioned either by some addition having been made to the inside of the battlements, or from some other cause, by which the ancient width of the bridge had been contracted, and, consequently, the general question of liability to widen a bridge could not be entertained upon that record.⁸ However, this obligation to widen was discussed and decided in the negative upon a later occasion; and the court noticed, that the only authority in favour of the proposition was the dictum of Lord Kenyon: Bayley, J., also observing, that, as in R. v. Stretford, the inhabitants of a parish could not be compelled to enlarge a way, so the inhabitants of a county were under no obligation at common law to widen a bridge. Judgment was therefore given for the defendants.⁹

¹ R. v. Birmingham and Gloucester Railway Company, 3 Q. B. 223; 1 Gale & D. 451. R. v. Great Northern Railway Company, 16 L. J. M. C. 16.

² The King of the Two Sicilies v. The Oriental Steam Packet Company, 19 L. J. Ch. 491. Though a corporation was held not to be answerable under the Foreign Enlistment Act. Id. 488.

³ 2 Inst. 702.

⁴ Id.

⁵ R. v. Sutton, 5 Nev. & M. 353; 3 Ad. & El. 597. See likewise 8 Ad. & El. 516. If the guardian be not in possession—quære?

⁶ See 6 Mod. 307; 5 T. R. 283.

⁷ R. v. Cumberland, 6 T. R. 194.

⁸ The County of Cumberland v. The King (in error), 3 Bos. & P. 354. See 2 Campb. 457.

⁹ R. v. County of Devon, 4 B. & C. 670; 7 D. & Ry. 147. R. v. Lincoln, cited, 4 B. & C. 676.

However, although this widening is not compulsory, we have seen that the stat. 14 Geo. 2, c. 33, speaks of enlarging and rebuilding bridges. And Buller, J., observed, upon that Act, that it impliedly gave the power even of altering the position of a bridge to suit the convenience of the public.¹ And by 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, after placing the county surveyor of bridges on the same footing with the parish surveyor of highways with respect to his power of getting materials,² it was enacted by sect. 2, that wherever any bridge repairable by the county should be found to be narrow and incommodious, the justices at quarter sessions might order and direct such bridge to be widened, improved, and made more commodious; and that where any bridge should be found so much decayed as to render the taking of it down expedient, the justices might order it to be rebuilt, either on the old site or elsewhere, provided it were contiguous to or within 200 yards of the former bridge. The 7th section excepts bridges repairable by any person or corporation by reason of tenure or by prescription. The stat. 54 Geo. 3, c. 90, s. 2, extends the powers of the Act 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, to bridges repairable by the inhabitants of hundreds, and other general divisions in the nature of hundreds, except in respect of bridges thereafter to be erected and built. Further, by 55 Geo. 3, c. 143, after giving power to the surveyor to take stones for materials, under certain restrictions, (sect. 1,) and regulating the summoning of juries in case of inability to treat, (sects. 2, 3, 4,) it is enacted by sect. 5, that justices may contract for the repair of any county or hundred bridge for seven years, but not for less than one year, and may order sums of money to be paid for such repair accordingly, without giving public notice at their sessions of such intention to contract; and although no presentment of insufficiency, decay, or want of repair shall have been made. Nevertheless, before any such contract be made, the justices shall cause notice to be given in some public paper circulated in the county, city, riding, hundred, division, town corporate, or liberty, of their intention to contract.³

By 7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 27, s. 17, when any bridge upon a turnpike road ought to be repaired by any particular person, body politic or corporate, by reason of tenure or otherwise, or where any composition has been entered into or made in lieu thereof, such bridges shall be repaired, or composition paid, in such manner as the same were respectively maintained and kept in repair, or paid, before the passing of 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, and 4 Geo. 4, c. 95, or under the provisions of any local turnpike Act.

Highways at the ends of bridges.] The next point to which we invite attention is the repair of that portion of the road which

¹ 5 T. R. 283.

² See also sect. 3.

³ See also 12 Geo. 2, c. 29, s. 14; 52 Geo. 3, c. 110, s. 5; see also Id. ss. 2, 3, 4, as to the superintendence of the repairs, and payment of the money required for them, which is to be paid out of the county rate. 12 Geo. 2, c. 29, s. 1; see 4 T. R. 595.

adjoins a bridge at either end of it. Three hundred feet of road at each end are repairable by the county,¹ or other parties liable to repair the bridge itself, and not by the parish, in the case of all bridges erected before the passing of the late Highways Act, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50.

This provision of 22 Hen. 8, c. 9, was only declaratory of the common law.² It was, indeed, endeavoured upon one occasion, on the part of the West Riding of York, to deny this liability;³ and the case was carried up to the House of Lords, the Court of King's Bench having given judgment against the riding, but, after considerable argument, the judgment below was affirmed.⁴ Indeed, all the statutes recognize this liability, as pointed out by 22 Hen. 8, c. 9. Thus the Act 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18, speaks of the highways at the ends of bridges. The 12 Geo. 2, c. 29, unites the highways adjoining bridges to the mention of bridges. The 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, speaks of roads at the ends of bridges. So, likewise, the 52 Geo. 3, c. 110. The 54 Geo. 3, c. 90, has similar words. And the 55 Geo. 3, c. 143, takes in these roads at the ends of bridges. It is, in fact, an intendment of law, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that the liability extends to 300 feet.⁵ So that a party who is by prescription liable to repair a bridge, must likewise repair the highway at each end to the extent of 300 feet. And it was held to make no difference that the party had only repaired the fabric of the bridge, and that the commissioners under a Turnpike Act had done the only repairs which had been known.⁶ This obligation rests upon the county where the bridge is, although the end of the road may be in another county. But it is worthy of remark, that if a new bridge were built upon the 300 feet of road in the stranger county, the same liability which compelled the repair of the road would not attach to the bridge. There was a bridge in Dorset, and, as it divided that county from Devon, the inhabitants of Dorset repaired the 300 feet on the Devon side. About 150 feet from this bridge, however, was a ford, and an individual built a small bridge over the ford, which was considered as having been adopted by the county of Devon, and as soon as it required repair, the inhabitants of Devonshire were indicted for the omission. But they said that it was an appendage to the bridge in Dorset, and that as Dorset repaired the one, they must take this also, as being within the 300 feet of road. The court, however, were clearly of another opinion, and a rule for setting aside a verdict for the crown was refused.⁷ And Lord Ellenborough said, that in this case each bridge was a substantive bridge in a different county. While the place continued to be a road, it was repairable as part ¹ 22 Hen. 8, c. 22, s. 9; see 2 Inst. 705.

² 43 Ass. pl. 37.

³ R. v. West Riding, 7 East, 588.

⁴ 5 Taunt. 284; 2 Dow. 1.

⁵ R. v. Mayor of Lincoln, 3 Nev. & P. 273; 8 Ad. & El. 65.

⁶ 8 Ad. & El. 65. S. C.

⁷ R. v. County of Devon, 14 East, 477.

of the old bridge [in Dorset], but as soon as a substantive bridge was built on the Devonshire side it became, according to the statute, repairable by the inhabitants of the county in which it was situate.¹

This liability resembles that of highways and bridges in almost all other respects. Thus, a township, when liable from time immemorial to repair this amount of road, stands in the same light as a county; so that no consideration need be stated upon the record. It was once attempted to impeach a plea by the county casting the burden upon a township, on the ground of there being no averment of consideration. But the court was quite clear upon this point, and judgment was given in favour of the plea, and for the defendants.² By the new Act respecting highways,³ however, this obligation is removed from the county or hundred, or township, &c., and placed upon the parish. By sect. 21, if any bridge shall hereafter be built, which by law may be repairable by the county, or by any part thereof, all highways leading to, passing over, and next adjoining, shall be repaired by the parish, person, or corporation, or trustees of a turnpike road, who were before bound to repair the highways. Then follows a proviso, that nothing therein contained should discharge any county, or part of any county, from repairing, or keeping in repair, the walls, banks, or fences of the raised causeways and raised approaches to any such bridge, or the land arches thereof.

Hence it follows, that whilst the hundred or township becomes exonerated, as well as the county, from these repairs, a person liable ratione tenuræ, or otherwise, or a corporation, remains under the obligation. Were it otherwise, a party who ought to repair a portion of ground by reason of his tenure would have been enabled to relieve himself of a liability for which a consideration originally existed, and impose it upon the parish.

Proceedings.] The usual proceeding against defendants for non-repair of bridges is by an indictment, or a presentment.⁴ But presentments are at an end with respect to all bridges except county bridges,⁵ the Highways Act having expressly abolished that mode of proceeding against inhabitants, or other persons, on account of any highway or turnpike road.⁶ Although it should be said that where the stat. 43 Geo. 3, has incorporated the 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, the provisions of the latter Act are preserved, and suffer no repeal by the 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50.⁷ And it should be noticed, that the interpretation clause⁸ of that statute includes

¹ R. v. County of Devon, 14 East, 478.

² R. v. West Riding, 4 B. & Ald. 623.

³ 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50.

⁴ See 2 Inst. 701.

⁵ R. v. Breconshire, JJ., 18 L. J. M. C. 127.

⁶ 5 & 6 Will. c. 50, s. 99. See R. v. Mawgan, 3 Nev. & P. 502. S. C. 8 Ad. & El. 496.

⁷ R. v. Merionethshire, JJ., 6 Q. B. 313. See 3 New. S. C. 434.

⁸ 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 5.

bridges (except county bridges) within the term highways. It might certainly be made a question, whether the words "county bridges" would comprehend such bridges as a hundred or township standing in the place of a county by virtue of immemorial usage ought to repair. Probably the legislature intended that the hundred or other division should be included, and if it be so, the presentment would chiefly be in force in the case of corporations and private individuals.

As to the indictment, it may still be entertained at common law. Moreover the statute 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, enacts, that justices shall direct a bill of indictment to be preferred where the duty or obligation of the repair of a highway is denied. And as the interpretation clause includes bridges, except county bridges, within the term "highways," those which are repairable by persons or corporations will seem to come within this 95th section.

An information will also be granted by the Court of King's Bench under particular circumstances.¹

But an action will not lie.² The plaintiffs brought an action against the county of Devon for an injury done to their waggon by reason of the non-repair of a bridge, which the county ought to have repaired, but the defendants demurred, and the court, after hearing the argument of counsel, gave judgment for them.³

The high constable sometimes presents a public bridge as being out of repair. If, however, he do so, he must go before the grand jury, and give his evidence upon oath. He is not like a justice, whose presentment has, by statute, in some cases, the force of a presentment by a grand jury. Therefore, although it was stated upon affidavit that this practice had prevailed upon the western circuit for forty years, the court made a rule absolute for quashing a presentment made without oath.⁴ A writ of prohibition to justices, commanding them not to pull down an old bridge until the completion of the new, is not a proceeding which the court will sanction. Although it was stated that much inconvenience would ensue from such a removal of the old structure under the circumstances mentioned, the court refused a rule, for there was a remedy by indictment, and they put the case of an order of the magistrate, directing a new bridge to be built on the old site, when the old bridge could not have been continued.⁵

By 22 Hen. 8, c. 5, s. 5, supposing the bridge to be in one shire, and the persons or lands charged in another, or if the bridge be in a city or town corporate, and the persons liable are not within such city or town, the justices of the shire, city, or town may

¹ See R. v. Surrey, 8 Mod. 119. 514; for a nuisance by erecting a swing bridge across the highway. R. v. Norwich, 1 Str. 177. S. C. nom. R. v. Justices of Somerset, 1 M. & Ry. 272.

² Vaugh. 340.

³ Russell v. The Men of Devon, 2 T. R. 667.

⁴ R. v. Bridgwater and Taunton Canal Company, 7 B. & C.

⁵ R. v. Dorset Justices, 15 East, 594.

hear and determine such annoyances, if within the limits of their commissions. And if the annoyance be presented, they may make process into every shire within the realm against such as should repair, and act in every respect as though the persons or lands chargeable had been in the same shire, city, or town where the annoyance existed.

The matters necessary to be presented are, that the bridge is a public bridge, and that it is out of repair, which must be shown in the order for the rule.¹ But where the liability to repair cannot be fixed conveniently, it is said that inquiry should be made by the great inquest for the body of the county at the general quarter sessions, and then, if no person in particular be found liable, a general presentment that the bridge is in decay may be made.²

Indictment.] It is usual to say, upon indicting a public bridge, that a certain bridge called——, &c., in the highway leading from A. to B., being a common highway for all the liege subjects, &c., with horses, carts, and carriages to pass and repass, &c., at their free will and pleasure, on, &c., was and still is in great decay, so that the liege subjects, &c., cannot pass and repass as they have been accustomed, to the great damage, &c.³ and that the inhabitants of the county are liable to repair the bridge in question. If the prosecution be against an individual ratione tenuræ, it must be alleged that the bridge has existed from time immemorial,⁴ and that the person charged by reason of his tenure⁵ of certain lands lying in A., in the said county, is bound to repair and amend the same.⁶

The words, “at their free will and pleasure,” must be omitted or modified, if the right to pass over the bridge be qualified. As where a bar across a bridge was kept locked, except in times of flood. It was attempted by the counsel for the prosecution to justify the indictment, because the words “at all times of the year” were not introduced, and these words, “at their free will and pleasure,” must mean when need and occasion required. But Lord Ellenborough was clearly of opinion, that as the public had only a right to use the bridge in times of flood, the statement contradicted the right proved. The meaning of “free will and pleasure” was, that the public might, at all times and seasons, prefer crossing the bridge with their carts and carriages, to crossing the ford. The defendants were, consequently, acquitted.⁷ This is very different from the case where the bridge was open at all times to the public, but they only used it during floods. In

¹ Andr. Rep. 285.

² 2 Inst. 703. See also 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18, with respect to the order of justices for making a rate. R. v. Middlesex, Andr. Rep. 101, 285.

³ See 2 Leon. 183.

⁴ See R. v. West Riding, 2 East, 353, n.

⁵ These words are necessary, Godb. 346.

⁶ See Stark. C. P. 701.

⁷ R. v. Marquis of Buckingham and others, 4 Campb. 189.

this case the county was held liable.¹ However, it does not seem necessary to say that the bridge is in the highway,² nor that it is a common highway.³ Although the county where the bridge is situate must be stated,⁴ and the nature of the passage, as for horses, carts, or carriages, should be mentioned.⁵ For if the indictment describe the bridge as a public carriage bridge, and likewise for persons to pass and repass on foot, and the proof be that although passengers may use the way on horseback and on foot, they cannot do so with a carriage, the defendants cannot be convicted.⁶ But if the charge be for not repairing a bridge, and it turns out that the bridge has been widened, there is no variance.⁷

The ruinous condition of the bridge forms an essential averment.⁸ But the length of way out of repair is not of so much consequence. So, that where the indictment charged that half of the bridge was out of repair, the court held it sufficient without saying so many feet in length and in breadth.⁹

From the sketch above set out it may be collected that a county may be charged as of common right, but that a hundred, parish, or other section must be stated as under an immemorial obligation to repair. Care must be taken not to encumber this immemorial allegation with facts of modern creation. As a new office,¹⁰ or a bridge of different character from the old one.¹¹ But no other ground of liability than immemorial usage need be brought forward against a parish,¹² and no consideration need appear upon the record unless it be in the case of a corporation or private person, or where the bridge is not within the county or division charged with the repairs.

If a person be charged by virtue of a private Act of parliament, it seems proper to set forth the Act.¹³

In pleading to an indictment, it becomes necessary to show who in particular is bound to fulfil the obligation demanded;¹⁴ and

¹ R. v. Devon, Ry. & M., N. P. C. 144.

² R. v. Spiller, Sty. 108.

³ 6 Mod. 256, note (a). See R. v. Sainthill, 2 Ld. R. 1174.

⁴ R. v. Spiller, Sty. 108.

⁵ R. v. Sainthill, Id.; 2 Ld. Raym. 1174. And in the same case it was added, that if Sir H. Spiller was charged with repair ratione manerii, there should have been an averment of his having been the owner of the manor.

⁶ R. v. Lancashire, 2 Stark. on Ev.

⁷ R. v. East Adderbury, 5 Q. B. 187; Dav. & M. 324. In this case the declarations of inhabitant householders were held admissible for the crown, although the inhabitants were not shown to be rated nor rateable, and without calling them or showing them that they had refused to be examined.

⁸ R. v. Bridges and Nicholls, Godb. 346.

⁹ R. v. Sainthill, 1 Salk. 359. See where there is a limit as to the extent of repair upon the same bridge. R. v. Norwich, 1 Str. 177.

¹⁰ R. v. Middlesex, 1 B. & Ald. 64, n.

¹¹ R. v. Surrey, 2 Campb. 455.

¹² R. v. Hendon, 4 B. & Ald. 628.

¹³ R. v. Kerrison, 1 M. & S. 435.

¹⁴ Case of Langforth Bridge, Cro. Car. 365. R. v. Nottinghamshire, 2 Lev. 112.

if a bridge lie in two parishes, it is of course necessary to cover the whole of the bridge in the plea tendered. Where the county of Essex, therefore, pleaded, that a bridge in D. was out of repair, and that Sir T. F. had been convicted for not repairing it, it was held that judgment must pass for the crown, because the indictment charged the non-repair in two parishes, whereas the plea stated the bridge as being in one parish only. Sir T. F. might, indeed, be bound to repair so much of the bridge as lay in D. parish, but the county might have been bound to the other part.¹

Certiorari.] The statute 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18, s. 5, has taken away the writ of certiorari from defendants in the case of county bridges, and with regard to this the prosecutor must now apply to the court for leave to sue out this writ under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 33, s. 1. We have said that this abolition of the certiorari applies to county bridges only, for it has been determined, that where a private person or parish is charged, and the right to repair will come in question, the Act 5 & 6 Wm. & M., c. 11, has allowed the granting of such a writ.² And after much argument and consideration, the Court of King's Bench, upon another occasion, gave judgment that the statute of Anne had not taken away the writ from the prosecutor,³ and their opinion upon this point was subsequently confirmed by the House of Lords.⁴ But by 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 107, the certiorari in cases of highways is taken away, except in certain cases,⁵ and the interpretation clause of that Act declares that "highways" shall include "bridges," except county bridges, so that the writ may here be said to be at an end in this instance, unless where it is saved by the 5 & 6 Will. 4. And in cases of misdemeanor generally, the statute 16 Vict. c. 30, s. 4, ordains, that except in the case of bodies corporate, no indictment shall be removed by certiorari, unless an affidavit be made that a fair and impartial trial cannot be had, or that some question of law of more than usual difficulty and importance is likely to arise. This clause, however, does not affect the certiorari with regard to highways, because its pre-

¹ R. v. Essex, Tho. Raym. 384. As to the evidence see R. v. Sutton, 3 Nev. & P. 569. S. C. 8 Adol. & El. 516. Presumption of repair, R. v. Lincoln, 8 Adol. & El. 65. With respect to witnesses see 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 100. Likewise, sect. 5 of the same statute. R. v. Hayman, Moo. & Malk. 401. R. v. Bishop Auckland, 1 M. & Rob. 286. A county having been indicted for non-repair, and wishing to throw the burden on a parish, the court would not compel the inhabitants of that parish to allow their parish books and bridge documents to be inspected by the county. R. v. Justices of Buckingham, 8 B. & C. 375; 2 M. & Ry. 403. See R. v. E. Cadogan, 5 B. & Ald. 902. 1 D. & Ry. 559, and likewise the case of Dr. Purnell, 1 Sir Wm. Bl. 37.

² R. v. Inhabitants of Hamworth, 2 Str. 900.

³ R. v. Cumberland, 6 T. R. 194.

⁴ 3 B. & P. 354. 2 Dow. 1. See also 1 Salk. 146; 1 Str. 183.

⁵ Sect. 95.

amble speaks of the establishment of a court of criminal appeal when matters concerning the repair of highways are not cognizable. Where upon an indictment for throwing down a gate, an affidavit stated that the question was, whether the defendants were liable to repair, and that the right to repair would come in issue, Erle, J., refused the writ.¹

Verdict.] If more than one be indicted, and the verdict pass against one only, it shall be sustained. As where Sir T. F. and others were charged ratione tenuræ, and the verdict was, that Sir T. F. only ought to repair.² So where the issue was whether the county should repair a bridge, and the jury found that they ought to repair two arches and-a-half only, the verdict was held good according to 43 Ass. pl. 37, although it was suggested that a bridge was an entire thing.³

Judgment.] The judgment is a fine for non-repair,⁴ which will be proportioned according to the prospect which the court sees of the fulfilment of the obligation. It is to be paid to the treasurer of the county, and applied by the justices towards the building or repairing the bridge.⁵ But one fine only can be imposed upon the same indictment. An order of sessions was made, increasing a fine to the amount of 200*l.* beyond that which had been before imposed. Upon this, a rule was moved for to quash the order, and the court held that the power of sessions was at an end after the first fine, and R. v. Old Malton,⁶ where the same point was determined with reference to a highway, was referred to, and the order was quashed.⁷

Consequences of judgment.] A judgment against the county will be nearly conclusive evidence against them upon another occasion. So, likewise, a judgment against a hundred or parish would have a similar effect, and, therefore it was, that where a plea had been tendered by a county, throwing the onus of repair upon a person ratione tenuræ, but which plea was irregularly set forth, and consequently unavailable, the court decided to stay the judgment upon payment of costs, in order that the county might have an opportunity of bringing forward their case.⁸ But by Lord Ellenborough, the county must repair, without prejudice to their case, if the public exigency require it;⁹ and Le Blanc, J., remarked, that the county might proceed to indict the parties whom they contended to be liable.¹⁰ But if reasonable speed be not used to try the second indictment, judgment will be entered

¹ R. v. Fulford (Inhabitants), 6 Cox, 510.

² R. v. Sir T. Fanshaw, 1 Ventr. 331.

³ Poph. 192.

⁴ Vaugh. 340.

⁵ 1 Ann. st. 1, c. 18, s. 4.

⁶ 4 B. & Ald. 470, in the note.

⁷ R. v. Machynlleth and Pen-negoes, Id. 469.

⁸ R. v. D. of Bucklugh, 1 Salk. 358.

⁹ R. v. Oxfordshire, 16 East, 223.

¹⁰ Id. 125.

up upon the verdict, and, therefore, the court will not suspend the judgment generally, but only until they shall make further order.¹

Fraud or surprise will form an exception to the rule as to this almost conclusive evidence. As where an information was moved for against a county, and it appeared that a parish had obtained a verdict against the county for not repairing a bridge, but though a surprise, the court made the rule absolute for discharging the information. The charge against the parish was that they had immemorially repaired the bridge, that they had been fined for not repairing, and had acquiesced under the charge for many years, and the proof of this was to be found by certificates and other records of the sessions.²

Costs.] By 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 95, costs are expressly awarded in cases of indictments directed by justices. The judge of assize or the justices at quarter sessions may direct them to be paid out of the highways rate. But this clause does not extend to county bridges, which are excepted by sect. 5.³ Still the 43 Geo. 3, c. 59, having adopted the 13 Geo. 3, c. 78, respecting costs, i. e. awarding costs against a frivolous defence, all the provisions of that Act as to penalties, impositions, and other matters, and the power to certify for costs in the case of a county bridge, continue,⁴ and the certificate may be given after the assizes in a case removed by certiorari,⁵ for the Act extends to county bridges. Moreover, by sect. 98, the court before whom any indictment shall be preferred for not repairing highways,⁶ shall award costs to the prosecutor, to be paid by the person indicted, if it shall appear to the said court that the defence made to such indictment was frivolous and vexatious. The costs, upon the removal of an indictment by certiorari, are payable by virtue of 5 & 6 Wm. & M. c. 11.

So, in the case of an information, the Court of King's Bench can direct the payment of costs.⁷

Contribution.] It is a general principle, that where several are liable to a burden, and one or more are charged with the expenses, they shall have contribution from the rest. Therefore, where a manor is held by the service or tenure of repairing a bridge, the tenants who have any portion of the demesne lands in possession are liable to the public for the whole, and are contributory amongst themselves.⁸ And we have seen that the lord cannot discharge the tenants, as far as the public are concerned, although he may bind himself.⁹ But the ancient freehold tenants and copyholders

¹ R. v. Oxfordshire, 16 East, 125.

² R. v. Southampton, 2 Chit. Rep. 215.

³ R. v. Surrey, 8 Mod. 119.

⁴ R. v. Merionethshire, 6 Q. B. 348.

⁵ S. C.

⁶ See also sect. 111.

⁷ Subject to the exception of county bridges, see sect. 5.

⁸ And see further as to costs, 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 97. R. v. New Windsor, 1 Smith, 168.

⁹ Ante.

are not under this obligation, for nothing is part of the manor but the demesnes and services, and not the lands of the tenants.¹ The contribution attaches upon persons holding lands at any time during the continuance of the charge in proportion to the value of the lands. It was held in a late case where an action of assumpsit was brought to recover this contribution.²

Obstructions to bridges.] It is an indictable offence to obstruct the passage of public bridges in like manner as it is an offence to interrupt a highway. And any one may abate, or if the matter be brought into court, the judgment will be that the nuisance shall be destroyed.³ And there may, moreover, be a fine upon such an occasion.

Ferry.] The same doctrines may likewise be applied to the obstruction of a public ferry.

CHAPTER VI.

NUISANCES—NAVIGATION.

Obstructions to docks and to navigation in general.] Again, an obstruction to navigation is an indictable nuisance. So, likewise if a dock or harbour be invaded, the defendant is liable to be punished for the intrusion. As where a person brought a large ship of 300 tons burthen into Billingsgate dock. It was objected that if this were a common dock, it would not be a nuisance for a great ship to come there, a common dock in its nature being free for all ships. But the court thought there might be a common dock for small ships, as there may be a common pack and horseway, and they refused, according to the usual rule, to quash the indictment, being for a nuisance.⁴ With regard to obstructing a navigation, it is not easy to find an excuse or defence for such an act, the case being very strict in preserving the public right, and very reluctant to admit any allegation in answer to a charge for interrupting the public passage. For a navigable river is a common highway for all the king's subjects, so that unless the change be by the authority of parliament, or from some natural cause, it would be very difficult to conceive an occasion where the right would be deemed capable of extinguishment. And it must be a matter of rare occurrence⁵ to discover a ground for abridging or modifying these rights, even although the public convenience might be

¹ Rich v. Barker and others, Hard. 131.

² Dimes v. Arden, 6 Nev. & M. 494.

³ See Vaugh. 340.

⁴ R. v. Leech, 6 Mod. 145.

⁵ As a casualty, or a successful appeal to the writ ad quod damnum.

enhanced by the alteration in some other respect. So that it is not surprising to find several occasions where prosecutions have been successfully instituted for this nuisance of obstructing navigation.

There are various acts which disturb the course of navigation. Diverting the accustomed stream; throwing improper lumber into it; neglect to place buoys; erecting wharves so as to narrow the river; mooring barges, so as to obstruct the channel, &c. And it has been said that the improper diversion of a watercourse is a transgression which the king cannot dispense with.¹ A defendant was charged with building locks on the Thames, and by Holt, C. J., to hinder the course of a navigable river is against Magna Charta.² That statute, indeed, forbade the erection of wears throughout England, excepting on the sea coast. And the 25 Edw. 3, c. 4, s. 4, prohibited the enlargement of mills, wears, and other such annoyances, which obstructed the common passage of boats and ships in great rivers. These provisions were followed by other Acts of parliament.³ All banks, again, which were not defences in the reign of Hen. 2, were declared illegal by Magna Charta.⁴ And in construing the statutes above mentioned concerning wears and mills, the court came to the conclusion that such mills only as had been made in the reign of Edw. 1, or since, were within the prohibition. Unless, indeed, the mills built before that reign had been increased, and in that case they also might be corrected and amended. And it was likewise held, that Magna Charta extended only to kidels, or open wears for taking fish, and, moreover, that the statute of sewers, 23 Hen. 8, had not repealed these Acts of Edw. 3 and Hen. 4.⁵ Wears, locks, and banks, are, therefore, in general, obstructions to navigation. However, where a lock is made by the king's licence, and for the public benefit without any modification or abridgment of the general right, but, on the contrary, with a result beneficial to navigation, it is not a nuisance, although toll may be demanded for passing along the river in consequence of it.⁶ The distinction seems to be where the erection causes an obstruction, and where it advances the public interest without abridging the highway. For no grant from the crown, however legal in itself, can make a nuisance legitimate.⁷

There are several other nuisances. As the erection of a wharf. Where the corporation of London had let a space of ground between high and low water mark for the purpose of wharfage, by which certain public conveniences in the river Thames were considerably interfered with, Abbott, C. J., directed the jury that the

¹ Vaugh. 340.

² R. v. Clark, 12 Mod. 615. See Cro. Car. 132, post.

³ See 4 Hen. 4, c. 11; 1 Hen. 5, c. 2; 12 Edw. 4, c. 7.

⁴ 9 Hen. 3, c. 16.

⁵ R. v. Chester Mill, 10 Rep. 138; 13 Rep. 36; see 2 Inst 38.

⁶ Juxon v. Thornhill, Cro. Car.

⁷ See Williams v. Wilcox, 3 Nev. & P. 606.

public could not be deprived of the benefits they had always enjoyed for the sake of mere private convenience, and a verdict was returned against all the defendants, excepting Lord Grosvenor.¹ So again, a staith, or collection of piles, built for the purpose of lowering and raising coal waggon, became the subject of an indictment for a nuisance; and although the verdict passed in this case for the defendants, in consequence of the direction of Bayley, J., with reference to a point of law, yet, as Lord Tenterden decidedly dissented from this opinion, and one judge gave no opinion, the point may not be considered as finally decided. The case was, that by reason of this staith, an abridgment of the right of passage in the river Tyne occurred, but, on the other hand, the public reaped an advantage by the facility of dropping the coal waggon into the ship and rearing them again. And the direction of Bayley, J., was, that if the erection in question produced a public benefit, and were in a reasonable situation, so as to leave sufficient room for navigation, the jury should acquit the defendants. And the learned judge pointed out as the results of the staith, with respect to the coals, their better condition and cheaper value. Lord Tenterden, without denying the public advantage which might have accrued, on concluding that a verdict ought to be entered for the crown, said, he could not think that the point of public benefit could be taken into consideration upon the indictment under discussion. The chief justice held the question to be whether the navigation and passage of vessels on the river had been injured. And if the attention of the jury had been simply drawn to the necessary obstruction occasioned by the transfer of coals from the river to the sea, and the erection of the staith left in that light, the verdict for the defendants might well stand. But the matter of public benefit having been also presented to the jury, it was the opinion of Lord Tenterden that there should be a new trial. Holroyd, J., however agreeing with Mr. Justice Bayley, the rule for the new trial was discharged.² So the building of a bridge has been held to be lawful although the navigation was obstructed.³ A floating dock, though used for the purpose of repairing ships, has been deemed a public nuisance.⁴ And private stairs from houses standing by the Thames are said to come under the same denomination.⁵ So the mooring of barges in a ¹ R. v. Lord Grosvenor and others, 2 Stark. 511. See also, R. v. The Sutton Pool, 6 B. & C. 572, cited there. Att. Gen. v. Owners of Wharves in Portsmouth Harbour, Id. 573. Att. Gen. v. Britain, Id. 579.

² R. v. Russell and others, 6 B. & C. 566; 9 D. & Ry. 566. It was agreed in this case, when the judge began to sum up, that if a verdict should pass for the defendants, the prosecutor might move for a new trial on the ground of misdirection.

³ R. v. Betts and others, 4 Cox, 211; 16 Q. B. 1022.

⁴ Anon. 1 Russ. C. M. 379.

⁵ Id. citing 5 Bac. Abr. Nuisance, A. But cuts made in the banks for timber are not nuisances if they be no annoyances to the river. Id.

public dock is an obstruction.¹ And in a recent case, the opinion of Lord Tenterden, above expressed in R. v. Russell, seems to have been adopted. The defendant was indicted for erecting an embankment in the water-way of a harbour, and the jury found that the embankment was a nuisance, but that the inconvenience was counterbalanced by the public benefit. It appeared, on the one hand, that the navigation was less free, but, on the other, that the landing of passengers and goods was facilitated, that boats could be better launched in foul weather, and that protection could be more easily afforded to small boats at certain periods. It was held, that this finding amounted to a verdict of guilty.²

It follows, à fortiori, that if the erection of buildings which in some measure tend to the public advantage are nuisances, actual interruptions and positive injuries without such benefit must of necessity be deemed such. As if one should cut down the banks of a public river;³ or put several loads of bricks upon the soil of a navigable stream;⁴ or place logs of timber there;⁵ or throw ballast into havens, roads, and channels, or elsewhere, if the navigation be thereby obstructed.⁶ For an offence may not be the less a misdemeanor at common law, as in this case of throwing ballast, because statutes inflict pecuniary penalties in respect of it. Again, dividing the course of a river is a nuisance;⁷ and so is a neglect to cleanse it on the part of those who are liable, for in this respect it may be likened to a highway out of repair. Those who have ease and passage along the stream are said to be liable in the first instance, and in default of such an easement, those who have the piscary are answerable.⁸ And it is not merely an obstruction to navigation which may happen through a want of cleansing, for the lands of the neighbouring vill may be overflowed through the accumulation of mud or other nuisance, and the public health might, moreover, be endangered in consequence of a similar omission.⁹ Neglect to repair a bank or wall, ratione tenuræ, is indictable in like manner.¹⁰

Neither, again, can a public canal navigation be obstructed, although the act done may be extensively beneficial elsewhere. So that an embankment made by the defendants which, in times of flood, caused the land water to damage the canal banks and obstruct the navigation, was deemed to be a nuisance, although in ¹ 4 M. & S. 101; see also 1 Esp. 252.

² R. v. Ward, 4 Ad. & El. 384; 6 Nev. & M. 38.

³ R. v. Stanton, 2 Show. 30.

⁴ R. v. Haddock, Andr. 137.

⁵ 1 Russ. C. M. 379; citing 5 Bac. Abr. Nuisance, A.

⁶ See 2 Burr. 656.

⁷ Noy. Rep. 103; 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 11.

⁸ 37 Ass. pl. 10; 1 Hawk. c. 75, s. 13.

⁹ R. v. Wharton and others, 12 Mod. 510. See also 13 Rep. 33; 8 B. & C. 795.

¹⁰ R. v. Earl Cadogan, 5 B. & Ald. 902. But the court would not allow the prosecutor to inspect the court rolls of the manor of which the defendant was lord, in order to make out a case for the prosecution.

the event of removing the fenders complained of, several hundreds of acres would be again exposed to inundation.¹ And a distinction was taken between an act of this kind and the right of embanking against the encroachments of the sea as a common enemy.² To say the least, the defence in the one case would be to keep out the water from coming where it had never before come; in the other, the land water is restrained from passing in the way in which, when the occasion happened, it had always been accustomed to pass.³ But a venire de novo was subsequently awarded upon error brought in the exchequer chamber, the judges thinking that the jury ought to have found—whether the raising of these fenders were an ancient and rightful usage—or whether they had had their beginning since the construction of the canal—whether the course of the flood water were not the ancient course—and whether the raising of the fenders had not been occasioned by the construction of an aqueduct.⁴

We have said, that but few defences are available to answer an indictment for obstructing the course of a navigable channel, and that the extinguishment of such a right is far more difficult than a partial abridgment of it. An Act of parliament, however, may accomplish both these results; and, likewise, a writ of ad quod damnum, or a natural cause.

The defendants were indicted for a nuisance in cutting a trench across a highway, under pretence of the way in question being a public navigable stream. It turned out, however, that the road thus interfered with had existed so long as to prevent the state of the channel where the road was made, from being correctly ascertained, and the jury found a verdict of guilty. A new trial being moved for, the learned judges were of opinion that the public right had been destroyed by a natural cause in the present instance, a deposit of silt and mud having blocked up the channel, and they discharged the rule.⁵ And it was agreed that such a public right might likewise be put an end to by an ad quod damnum,⁶ or by an Act of parliament, or by commissioners of sewers,⁷ whose authority rests upon the statute law. And Lord Tenterden some time afterwards remarked, that the want of a writ of ad quod damnum would not be conclusive against a defendant;⁸ whence it follows, that other circumstances may exist capable of creating a change in the public interest. Where, however, an Act of parliament and the right of the public can co-exist,

¹ R. v. Trafford, 1 B. & Adol. 874.

² 1 B. & Adol. 880. R. v. Com. of Sewers for Pagham, 8 B. & C. 355.

³ 1 B. & Adol. 888, Lord Tenterden.

⁴ Trafford v. The King, 8 Bingh. 204; 2 Cr. & Jer. 265; 1 Moo. & Sc. 401.

⁵ R. v. Montague and others, 4 B. & C. 598; 6 D. & Ry. 616.

⁶ See Att. Gen. v. Brittain, 6 B. & C. 579, cited.

⁷ 4 B. & C. ut supra, note (1), per Bayley, Holroyd, and Little-dale, JJ.

⁸ 6 B. & C. 600.

the former will not operate as an extinguishment of the highway. As where part of the river Wye was vested in private persons, and an action was given them for damages done to their rights, but, nevertheless, it was found by a special verdict that the Wye was navigable. In this case judgment was given for the crown against the defendant for cutting down the banks of the river, and thus diverting the watercourse.¹ So where the public had always enjoyed a towing path on the banks of a navigable river; and, subsequently, an Act of parliament converted the river in that part into a floating harbour, so that the path could be used at all times of the tide, it was held, that the right of the public could not be extinguished because other persons had been furnished with an authority to render its exercise more easy and beneficial, and judgment was given for the crown.² Power likewise is given by the highways and turnpike Acts to get materials from any river or brook, provided that the surveyor do not interrupt nor divert the course of the stream, nor get the same within the distance of 150 feet above or below any bridge, nor within the like distance of any dam or wear.³ But the surveyor must not take the sea-beach, where the removal of it would cause any damage or injury by inundation to the lands adjoining, or increased danger of encroachment by the sea.⁴ All pits or holes made in such rivers or brooks must be filled up by the surveyors, under certain penalties for omission.⁵

Again, there may be an excusable abridgment of this right through a casualty. As where a vessel was sunk by an accident, so that the passage along the Thames became obstructed, Lord Kenyon at once took the distinction between misconduct and casualty, and held that the indictment could not be sustained. Perhaps, said his lordship, the expense of removing the vessel might have amounted to more than the whole value of the property. An acquittal was directed.⁶

In a late case, upon an indictment for placing planks in a harbour, where the jury found that through the defendant's works the harbour was in some extreme cases rendered less secure, the court were of opinion, that the consequences were too slight to create a nuisance.⁷ And, of course, temporary repairs cannot be said to be an obstruction.⁸ But the exercise of a right of fishery will not be a defence. The right of a fishery is subservient to the purposes of navigation.⁹ And it will be remembered as a general principle, that no length of time can legitimate a nuisance.¹⁰

¹ R. v. Stanton, 2 Show. 30.

² R. v. Tippet, 3 B. & Ald. 193. See also R. v. Smith and others, Dougl. 441.

³ 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 97; 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 51.

⁴ 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 52.

⁵ 3 Geo. 4, c. 126, s. 99; 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50, s. 55.

⁶ R. v. Watts, 2 Esp. 675. The owner of the sunken vessel, however, ought to place a buoy there. 1 Campb. 515.

⁷ R. v. Tindal, 1 Nev. & P. 719; 6 Ad. & El. 143.

⁸ See 1 Ld. Raym. 386.

⁹ See 1 Camp. 517, n.; 3 Burr. 1768.

¹⁰ See 2 B. & Ald. 662; 2 Br. & Bing. 403.

Proceedings.] The proceedings for these obstructions may be said to consist of indictments, informations at law and in equity,¹ and presentments. They may also be abated, and an injunction is sometimes applied for to a court of equity.² But the court will not grant an information where much time has been allowed to pass without objection to the encroachment, unless a grand jury has refused to find a bill of indictment. Therefore, when fourteen years had elapsed without an application, the court refused the rule.³ An indictment of this nature cannot be referred to arbitration. The court, under such circumstances, refused to make an order for costs in pursuance of an award.⁴

Indictment.] The count for obstructing a navigable river states, that the locus in quo is an ancient river for the king's subjects to navigate, sail, row, &c. at their will and pleasure, without impediment. The indictment then sets forth the obstruction, describing it accurately, and avers its continuance, and then concludes by stating that the river is straitened by the obstruction complained of, to the common nuisance of the king's subjects.⁵ It must not be said, to the common nuisance of the inhabitants.⁶

The termini need not be set out,⁷ for highways have no bounds,⁸ and the court will take notice of the river Thames.⁹

Judgment.] The judgment is fine, together with abatement of the nuisance complained of, and the measure of the fine will be enhanced or mitigated according to the condition of the place where the obstruction has happened. So, that if a defendant exhibit a willingness to repair the evil he has occasioned, his conduct will weigh with the court when they come to apportion the penalty. And although a nuisance is a matter of fact, and so is commonly left to the consideration of a jury, yet if the crown should exhibit an information for a purpresture, and should prove a right to the soil, the court will give judgment to abate a nuisance without the intervention of a jury.¹⁰

Obstructions to public fisheries.] Lastly, there may be an obstruction to a public fishery, although it must be borne in mind that the fishery must yield to the superior claim of navigation, if there should be a collision between the two rights. However,

¹ Att. Gen. v. Richards, 2 Anst. 603, 607. Parmeter, appt. Att. Gen., respt. 1 Dow. 316. Att. Gen. v. Philpot, Id. 608.

² Att. Gen. v. Johnson, 2 Wils. Cha. C. 87, for choking up the bed of the Thames at Millbank.

³ R. v. Green, 1 Lord Keny. 739.

⁴ R. v. Blakemore, 14 Q. B. 544;

⁴ Cox, 332. See R. v. Hardey, ante.

⁵ See also 6 Went, Ind. putting putts in the river Severn.

⁶ R. v. Thorowgood, 1 Mod. 107.

⁷ R. v. Haddock, Andr. 137.

⁸ Id. 145, per Lee, C. J.

⁹ Id. 150, by Chapple, J. See likewise R. v. Sorill, 2 Bulst. 119.

¹⁰ Att. Gen. v. Richards, 2 Austr. 615.

setting this point aside, it is not competent for a person to invade a public right of piscary; and, therefore, where Lord Lonsdale and the corporation of Carlisle erected stells in the Eden, whereby all the fish were stopped in their passage up the river, the court held, that these stells were illegal, and a public nuisance.¹ These obstructions must be abated, as well as those which concern navigation, and some statutes give power to justices to exercise a very summary jurisdiction in cases of obstruction by banks, dams, stanks, nets, &c.

It would not appear to be necessary to state the number of fish lost or injured by an obstruction. It was held in case of stealing carp, that such an enumeration need not take place.²

CHAPTER VII.

NUISANCES—PUBLIC HEALTH.

There may be enumerated under the head of nuisance, acts which are injurious to the health of the community, which are, for the most part, common law misdemeanors, and the legislature has not been wanting to lend assistance in cases of novelty or emergency.

Amongst such offences, those which threaten mischief to the largest number of persons are regarded with the most jealousy. And thus it is that the supposed infection of the plague, the spread of an epidemic disorder, as the cholera, have been viewed with much apprehension, and made the subjects of the strongest enactments. For many years, indeed, the breach of quarantine, or the forty days' probation, was a capital crime, and it was not until the first year of the reign of the present Queen that the statute of James I., prescribing the punishment of death against such infected persons as should go abroad contrary to orders, was repealed.³ But, far from a continuance of such severities, the legislature has reduced the punishment accompanying the violation of quarantine to imprisonment and forfeiture.

Quarantine.] Thus by 6 Geo. 4, c. 78, s. 17, every commander, master, or other person having charge of any vessel, liable to perform quarantine, and on board of which the plague or other infectious disease shall not then have appeared, who shall quit, or allow any person to quit the vessel without licence during quaran-

¹ 7 East, 199, cited by Lord Ellenborough.

² R. v. Wetwang, 1 Lev. 203.

³ It was, however, a clergyable felony, whereas the breach of quarantine was not clergyable. See 26 Geo. 2, c. 6, repealed.

tine, or shall neglect to convey such vessel into the place appointed for quarantine, shall forfeit 400*l.* And pilots, or other persons coming in such vessels and leaving them before the end of quarantine, shall suffer imprisonment for six months, and forfeit 300*l.*¹

This offence, however, is also a misdemeanor at common law. An order in council was made, forbidding persons subject to quarantine from leaving ships coming from infected places, until their time of probation should be at an end. This order was disobeyed by the defendant, and the court was quite clear that as the stat. 26 Geo. 2, c. 6, s. 1,² had not annexed any punishment for neglecting this order, the defendant had been guilty of a common law misdemeanor, and judgment of one year's imprisonment was pronounced.³

And, moreover, Lord Hale is of opinion, that it would be a great misdemeanor at common law if one were to go wilfully abroad in an infected state, and so produce the disease in another person through his conversation.⁴

Cholera.] So, when the cholera broke out in England, the legislature was not backward in providing against the supposed evils of infection.

By 2 Will. 4, c. 10, it was made competent for the privy council to make such orders as might tend to arrest the spread of that disease. And by sect. 3, any person wilfully violating an order so made, or neglecting to obey it, or offering resistance to it, was declared guilty of misdemeanor, and liable to a penalty not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 1*l.*⁵ Provided, that if any person should have paid the penalty, or should have suffered imprisonment for nonpayment, it should not then be lawful to proceed against him as for the misdemeanor.

This Act was renewed by 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 75, until the end of the then next session of parliament, but that time having now expired without a further renewal, the provisions mentioned may be considered as at an end.

Upon the same principle, persons who have exposed their children before the infection of the small pox has abated, have been deemed fully liable to punishment. As where a woman carried her infant along the highway near to certain dwellings whilst the child was labouring under that disease. It was moved to arrest the judgment, but the court was clearly against the defendant, and Le

¹ By sect. 21, any officer or person embezzling goods during quarantine, or being guilty of other neglect or breach of duty, shall lose his office and forfeit 200*l.* And if such person shall wilfully damage any such goods he shall pay 100*l.* damages, together with full costs of suit to the owner.

² Repealed by 45 Geo. 3, c. 10, s. 9, which is itself repealed.

³ R. v. Harris, 4 T. R. 202; S. C. Leach, 549.

⁴ 1 Hale, P. C. 432.

⁵ To be recovered before two justices, by any person who should sue for the same.

Blanc, J., in passing sentence, said, that this Act was a common nuisance, and indictable as such.¹

A precedent is also mentioned of an indictment against an apothecary for keeping a common inoculating house near the church in a town.² And where it was proposed to quash an indictment for keeping a house for inoculation, the court observed that they would not quash as of course indictments for nuisances: the defendant must demur.³ After these decisions it is not surprising to find that an apothecary, who suffered children to be carried along a public street whilst they had the small pox, was declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor. The plea in arrest of judgment, that the defendant was by profession a person qualified to inoculate, had no weight with the court. Lord Ellenborough referred to the terms "unlawfully and injuriously," distinguishing a course of inoculation when practised lawfully and innocently from the public evil created by the exposure. And the defendant was sentenced to be imprisoned for six months.⁴

Mala praxis.] The offence which is called Mala praxis is also a misdemeanor at common law.⁵ And, although Dr. Groenvelt, who was fined and imprisoned by the college of physicians for administering unwholesome pills and medicines, was discharged by the Court of King's Bench under a general pardon, yet they said, that this evil practice was not the less an offence at common law, for there is a violation of the trust which the party has placed in the physician, and it tends directly to the patient's destruction.⁶ But the mere fact of failing to cure the prosecutor of an ulcerated sore throat, according to an undertaking made by the defendant, was held not indictable. It was not a public offence.⁷

Bad food.] We have seen, likewise, in a former page, that the sale of unwholesome provisions is a punishable act,⁸ and although the matter was there treated as a cheat, yet Lord Ellenborough said, that he who deals in a perilous article, must be wary how he deals, otherwise, if he observe not proper caution, he will be responsible.⁹ Victuallers, brewers, and other dealers in victuals are liable, probably, whether cognizant or not of the badness of the provisions. They are also civilly liable without fraud or warrant

¹ R. v. Vantandillo, 4 M. & S. 72. So again, 4 M. & S. 274. By Le Blanc, J. See also R. v. Bunce, Andr. 163.

² 1 Russ. C. M. 114, note (a), citing 2 Chit. C. L. 656.

³ R. v. Sutton, 4 Burr. 2116. This case was recognized by Lord Ellenborough in R. v. Vantandillo, supra.

⁴ R. v. Burnet, 4 M. & S. 272. See also 3 & 4 Vict. c. 29, s. 8.

⁵ 2 Ld. Raym. 214, per cur.

⁶ The patient died in this case of Dr. Groenvelt. R. v. Groenvelt, 1 Ld. Raym. 213; 12 Mod. 119.

³ Salk. 265. See also Groenvelt v. Burwell and others, Com. Rep. 76.

⁷ R. v. Bradford, 1 Salk. 189; Ld. Raym. 366.

⁸ Ante.

⁹ 3 M. & S. 14.

on their part. But the law does not apply to a private person, who happens to sell unwholesome victuals, knowingly or otherwise.¹

Judgment.] It may just be remarked, that the sentence in all the respective cases above mentioned, is fine and imprisonment.

Noisome smells.] In discussing the subject of nuisance hereafter, it will be found that many of these misdemeanors against the public health are also punishable under that head.

So again, a hurtful stink is a nuisance, and likewise the subject of an indictment. As where the defendants were concerned in making acid of sulphur, which corrupted the air. The court entertained no doubt of the validity of the charge, and Dennison, J., mentioned the terms insalubrity and offensiveness as applying to the particular annoyance which had been created.²

Judgment.] The judgment is that the nuisance be removed,³ if that has not been already done, but the defendant may also be fined and imprisoned, if the court see fit, and, indeed, it is usual to impose a nominal fine although the nuisance has been abated.⁴

¹ Bumby v. Rollitt, 16 Mees. & W. 645; 16 Jur. 827. See now, however, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 84.

² R. v. White and another, 1 Burr. 333. See Cro. Car. 510.

³ R. v. Topayle, Cro. Car. 510.

⁴ R. v. White and another, 1 Burr. 333.

PART XVI.

Of other Indictable Offences.

By 52 Hen. 3, c. 23, any farmer making waste or exile of house wood and men during his term, or of anything belonging to his farm, without special licence by writing of covenant, shall yield full damage, and be grievously amerced.

Births, marriages, &c.] Matters connected with births, marriages, and burials, have been considered deserving the attention of the legislature. It is the policy of the law, that births should be not only without concealment, but that a careful registry should be made of all which occur. And thus the parent, or occupier of each house where a birth happens, must, upon request, give information to the registrar respecting the particulars of such birth, within forty-two days after the application made for that purpose.¹ And disobedience to this ordinance is a misdemeanor,² the statute being imperative. Penalties are also awarded, by the statute just referred to, against such as are guilty of neglect or omission in the prosecution of the registry.

An indictment against a clergyman for refusing to marry certain persons, cannot be sustained in the absence of proof that the parties tendered themselves to be married at a time when the ceremony could take place. A demand at 9 P. M. is insufficient.³ And, perhaps, there should have been an averment that the parties were such as could be lawfully married.⁴ Still a refusal to marry under 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 85, (the Act in question,) was held to be a misdemeanor.⁵

Marriages.] The registration of marriages has been provided for by parliament, and certain offences upon this subject are punishable, as we have seen, as felonies or perjuries. The residue are made subject to penalties.⁶

¹ 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, s. 20.

² R. v. Price, 3 P. & Dav. 421.

³ R. v. M. James, Clk. 19 L. J. M. C. 179.

⁴ Id. 182. Alderson, B.

⁵ S. C. Whether a refusal on the ground of want of confirmation, or of a desire to be confirmed, would be sufficient, qu. ?

⁶ See 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86, ss. 42, 43.

Burials.] Omissions to register burials are likewise subjects for a penalty,¹ but they are not misdemeanors, nor does there seem to be any misdemeanor expressly created by the late Act upon that subject. But there is a clause which requires any person present at a death or in attendance during the last illness of the deceased, or the occupier of the house where the death has happened, in case of the death, illness, inability, or default of any such persons as aforesaid, or any inmate in case of the death of the occupier, to give information to the registrar concerning the death, within eight days after a request made for that purpose. And as disobedience to the commands of a statute is a misdemeanor at common law, a default in the particulars above mentioned will subject the offender to the common law punishment.² Omitting to send for the coroner in the case of a violent death, is a misdemeanor. And whoever, after an order in council directing the discontinuance of burying, shall bury any body, or assist therein, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.³ And no body shall be buried in any other parish, under the Metropolis Act, while the ground has been ordered to be closed as aforesaid, (except where a body belonging to a family has been there interred, and the relations desire the interment,) upon pain of misdemeanor.⁴ However, under a later Act, (18 & 19 Vict. c. 128, s. 2,) the offence is punishable by a penalty of 10*l*.

Obstructing burials.] It is a misdemeanor to obstruct the performance of a burial service in an illegal manner. But the nature of the obstruction must be specified. Where the defendant was indicted for such an offence, and for unlawfully preventing a burial by threats and menaces, it was held, that the particular threats should have been set out, and the judgment was arrested. In this case there were two counts. One of them described the minister interrupted as W. C., clerk, and the second designated him as the said W. C. The defendant was convicted on the second count only, and for want of saying more than the said W. C., and showing that W. C. was a clerk, and engaged in the lawful performance of the rites of sepulture, the indictment was held faulty on that ground also, for the court will not make an indictment good by inducement.⁵

Innkeeper and guest.] It is an offence for an innkeeper to refuse admission to a guest. But there may be circumstances which will tend to discharge the defendant from the indictment preferred against him. As, for example, the drunkenness, or indecent, or improper behaviour of the applicant.⁶ Or that there was no room.⁷ Or that the guest refused to tender a reasonable price for his en-

¹ See 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 86.

² Fine and imprisonment.

³ 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, s. 4, within the metropolis. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 134, s. 3, beyond the metropolis.

⁴ 15 & 16 Vict. c. 85, s. 5. The statute 14 & 15 Vict. c. 89, s. 3, seems to be repealed.

⁵ R. v. Cheere, 4 B. & C. 902; 7 Dowl. & Ry. 461.

⁶ R. v. Ivers, 7 C. & P. 213.

⁷ See R. v. White, Dy. 158.

tainment.¹ But it is not an answer to show that no sign was visible, if the party in reality kept an inn,² or that the price of the victuals or lodging was not tendered, if no demand was made by the landlord,³ or that the traveller came on a Sunday, or after the family were gone to bed, or that he refused to disclose the particulars of his name and abode.⁴

The indictment must state, however, that the prosecutor was a traveller; for want of such an allegation the court quashed a count for not receiving one taken ill with the small pox.⁵

Judgment.] The judgment for this misdemeanor is fine and imprisonment.

Negligent burning by servants and others.] It should seem, that wilful neglect by which a fire is occasioned is a great misdemeanor at common law; and by 6 Ann. c. 31, s. 3, and 14 Geo. 3, c. 78, s. 84, a servant who sets fire to a house or outhouses negligently, shall, on conviction before two justices, forfeit 100*l.* to the churchwardens for the benefit of the sufferers, and on refusal to pay, after demand, shall be committed to some workhouse or house of correction for eighteen months, with hard labour.

Misconduct on railroads.] Further, by 3 & 4 Vict. c. 97, s. 14, it is made competent for a justice to commit a person charged with the offences mentioned in the prior section⁶ to the sessions, and such person, upon conviction, shall be imprisoned, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding two years. But the justice may take bail for the appearance of the offender at the sessions.

Refusal of office.] Questions concerning the refusal of office have frequently arisen in the cases of constables,⁷ overseers, and sheriffs, but the rule is general, and applies to all public functionaries, whose duty has a tendency to promote the interests of ¹ 1 Hawk. c. 78, s. 2; 9 Rep. 87.

² Palm. 374; 2 Ro. Rep. 345; Godb. 346; 1 Hawk. c. 78, s. 2.

³ R. v. Ivers, 7 C. & P. 213.

⁴ Id.

⁵ R. v. Luellin, 12 Mod. 445. An action to recover damages for such a refusal will also lie. 1 Hawk. c. 78, s. 2; Palm. 374.

⁶ Sect. 13.—The offences are these:—Any engine driver, guard, porter, or servant, being drunk when employed on the railway. Committing any offence against the byelaws, rules, or regulations of the company. Wilfully or negligently doing or omitting to do any act whereby the life or limb of any person passing along or being upon the railway or the works of the company, shall be or might be injured or endangered, or whereby the passage of any of the engines, carriages, or trains, shall be or might be obstructed or impeded. Offenders may be apprehended at once by any officer or agent of the company, or by any special constable, and persons whom they may call to their assistance.

⁷ Fort. 129.

society.¹ And it is no ground of defence that the office is one which has been created by statute, because an indictment will lie at common law for disobedience to an Act of parliament. Thus a special constable may be indicted.² Hence it follows, that prima facie, a party is always subject to be proceeded against for a refusal of this nature, and it consequently lies upon him to urge reasons why he should not be convicted. The most ordinary pleas are those of exemption by virtue of a licence or other privilege, or by a legal incapacity to perform the required duties. Thus, the defendant claimed to be discharged from serving the office of constable because he was a member of the barbers' company, but Lord Ellenborough held that the exemption sought for was limited to such persons as had been examined by the Bishop of London or Dean of St. Paul's, and licensed to practise surgery according to the provisions of certain statutes of Hen. 8, and the defendant was found guilty upon an indictment.³ So a younger brother of the Trinity House was held liable to serve the office of headborough,⁴ a borsholder⁵—and a watchman⁶—an inspector of lottery offices.⁷ So a captain in the guards was considered bound to serve as constable, for although he might plead personal attendance on the king, yet the more ancient employment of constable must prevail against a later institution.⁸ So likewise a practising physician was held liable upon one occasion;⁹ but the authority of this decision has been doubted,¹⁰ and, at all events, if there be sufficient persons besides to execute the office, and no special custom concerning it, the party may, perhaps, be relieved by the King's Bench,¹¹ and upon this ground, a gentleman of quality will be excused.¹² So, notwithstanding an exemption a person becomes compellable to serve if he be elected for a larger jurisdiction than that comprised in his privilege. As where the defendant had a certificate in respect of all parish offices within the parish of Birmingham, but was subsequently indicted for refusing to take upon himself the duty of constable for the manor of Birmingham, which comprehended the parish of Birmingham and the hamlet of Deritend; the court were of opinion that as the parish and manor in this case were not co-extensive, the defendant must submit to have judgment entered for the crown.¹³ So again, privilege as to a town was deemed to be no discharge in respect of a superior leet.¹⁴ Upon the same principle, tenant in ancient demesne, although discharged from toll, pontage, and ¹ See, as to constables, R. v. Dansey, R. v. Lone, Str. 920; Ca. Sett. 212.

² 9 C. & P. 105, by Alderson, B.

³ R. v. Chapple, 3 Campb. 91.

⁴ R. v. Clarke, 1 T. R. 679.

⁵ At the same time, R. v. Beale, Ca. Sett. 100.

⁶ R. v. Clerke, 1 Keb. 933.

⁷ R. v. Wood, 1 Esp. 359.

⁸ R. v. Vane, 1 Sid. 355; 2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 41.

⁹ R. v. Dr. Pordage, 1 Sid. 431, where the privilege is said to have been allowed. 2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 41.

¹⁰ Comb. 31, by Wythens, J.

¹¹ 2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 41.

¹² R. v. Wright, 1 Keb. 439.

¹³ R. v. Darbishire, 2 Burr. 1182.

¹⁴ R. v. King, 3 Keb. 230.

murage, was held eligible to be high constable, notwithstanding an objection that he would be drawn out of the ancient demesne, for the office of a constable is for the preservation of the peace and government.¹ So, again, it was adjudged upon a special verdict that an inhabitant of a particular leet was liable to serve the office of high constable,² and many years afterwards the same doctrine was adhered to, and the custom to elect a constable in that manner which appeared for the special verdict was held good.³

It was made a question upon one occasion whether a college barber residing at Oxford, in the city, out of college, could be indicted for not taking upon him this office in the city. It was contended, that though he might be a privileged person, yet that as his residence was not within the walls of the college he must still be considered as liable. The verdict being against the defendant the court granted him a new trial upon other grounds, but the case does not appear to have gone before a second jury.⁴ In 2 Jac. 2, it was agreed by the court that a person might be appointed constable although he did not reside within any leet.⁵ It has likewise been held that a naturalized foreigner is not liable to serve the office of constable.⁶ The charge, however, must set forth the authority which elected the constable, and likewise that he had notice of the appointment. For want of these allegations a motion to quash an indictment was allowed.⁷ And the place also where he ought to be sworn has been deemed a material part of the notice.⁸ He must also be said to have been an inhabitant when chosen.⁹ So where a corporation neglected to prescribe for their right to appoint a constable, an indictment was quashed, since a corporation cannot, of common right, elect such an officer.¹⁰

Again, if a person be elected overseer, he is liable to an indictment for refusing to execute that office,¹¹ and although residence is a necessary ingredient in the qualification required for this employment,¹² the payment of rent and taxes, and occupation of premises for the purposes of business, have, nevertheless,

¹ R. v. Bettsworth, 2 Show. 75; 1 Ventr. 344.

² R. v. Jennings, 11 Mod. 215. But the indictment was quashed for want of stating that the court was held at the time prescribed by magna charta. Id. 227.—See also R. v. Boycot, 1 Ld. Keny. 318.

³ R. v. Genge, Cowp. Rep. 13, and it is no defence to urge that the refusal is punishable in the leet. R. v. Lowe, cited, 7 Mod. 411.

⁴ R. v. Routledge, Doug. 531.

⁵ Ca. Sett. 211.

⁶ R. v. De Mierre, 5 Burr. 2788.

⁷ R. v. Harpur, 5 Mod. 96.

R. v. Halford, Comb. 328. S. C. R. v. Prigg, Al. 78.

⁸ R. v. Chute, 1 Keb. 418.

⁹ R. v. Boycot, 1 Lord Keny. 318.

¹⁰ R. v. Bernard, 1 Lord Raym. 94. As to special constables, see 1 Geo. 4, c. 37, repealed. R. v. Vincent, 9 C. & P. 91. R. v. Thomas, 1 Russ. C. M. 145.

¹¹ R. v. Jones and another, 7 Mod. 410; 2 Str. 1146. As, on the other hand, a person is equally liable to punishment who endeavours, by illicit means, to procure the appointment. R. v. Joliffe, 1 East, 154, n.

¹² R. v. Moor, Carth. 161.

been esteemed sufficient evidence of being a resident householder for this purpose.¹ The court, moreover, in the case referred to, remarked, that the defendant had enjoyed one of the privileges of a resident householder, inasmuch as he had voted for a lecturer, a privilege belonging to resident householders only.² An acting justice of the peace and lieutenant of marines was held to be exempt from serving this office, there being others sufficient within the parish.³ An indictment which stated that the defendant was appointed overseer of the parish for the year then next ensuing was held sufficient, without saying "of the poor of the parish," especially as the word "poor" appeared in a former part of the indictment, and the words "year ensuing" were held to mean the overseer's year.⁴

Sheriff.] Again, an indictment will lie for not serving the place of sheriff. And where sentences of excommunication and disabilities for not taking the sacrament were connected with a refusal to serve this office, it was the opinion of the courts at one time that the person so refusing was, nevertheless, answerable under an indictment, because it was his duty to remove the incapacity.⁵ But a different construction subsequently prevailed in the case of conscientious dissenters,⁶ and religious tests are now, for the most part, withdrawn by late Acts of the legislature. In these cases the indictment must show the liability, and how the defendant refused to serve.⁷

A refusal to take office is shown by the defendant's unwillingness to take the proper oaths of office, or otherwise to qualify himself for his appointment,⁸ and, à fortiori, by his express refusal.⁹

There are, notwithstanding, many instances in which the requisition to serve these offices had been successfully resisted on the ground of privileged exemption, non-residence, or otherwise. Thus, with reference to the want of inhabitancy, although an overseer may not be discharged on that ground, a constable can well avail himself of such a defence, being taken to be "conversant where his bed is,"¹⁰ and the distinction is, that the constable's duty consists in personal attendance, and a principal qualification on his part is the circumstance of his being known to the inhabitants of the district. Therefore, where the defendant was not resident in the parish where he was appointed constable, he had judgment

¹ R. v. Poynder, sen., 1 B. & C. 29; Skin. 574. See also R. v. Grosvenor, 2 Str. 1193. Harrison v. Evans, 6 Bro. P. C. 181. See

² S. C.

³ R. v. Gayer, 1 Burr. 245. And so is a constable. R. v. Price, Tho. Jones, 46. Id. note 1.

⁴ R. v. Burder, 4 T. R. 778.

⁵ Attorney-General v. Sir J. Read, 2 Mod. 299.

⁶ R. v. Larewood, 1 Ld. Raym.

⁷ R. v. Sellars, 3 Mod. 167.

⁸ See R. v. Harpur, 5 Mod.

⁹ R. v. Brain, 3 B. & Adol. 614.

¹⁰ See 2 Inst. 122.

upon an indictment after argument, although he occupied a house within the parish, and paid all rates in respect of it. And it was held to be no answer that he could appoint a deputy, for supposing that he could do this without the assent of some other authority, he would not be compellable in consequence to take upon himself an office requiring personal services, especially in the absence of any proof that there was a necessity for his appointment.¹

A licence or privilege is likewise an exemption. As in the case of a surgeon who is discharged by the custom of the realm as well as by the equity of some statutes and the positive enactments of others.² So an attorney or barrister enjoys a privilege of exemption, because of attendance in public courts,³ and these persons are entitled to be free whether there be a special custom to choose constables or not;⁴ and the servants of a member of parliament have been mentioned as equally privileged.⁵ So, again, an alderman of London has been held entitled to his writ of discharge.⁶ And there is a power inherent in the crown to exempt from the office of constable or headborough,⁷ subject only to this modification at common law, that there be a sufficient number of persons left to serve.⁸ So persons of quality are not liable, if this common law doctrine of a want of other sufficient officers do not apply to their cases.

And it is no ground for objecting to the exercise of a privilege that the party has not sued out his writ of privilege. It is enough if he be in a condition to have his writ at the time of the appointment. The court, therefore, in the case of an officer of customs, who had been elected overseer, made the rule absolute for a new trial, where a conviction had taken place under such circumstances, and they would not saddle the defendant with the costs of the trial which had taken place.⁹

The common course of proceeding is by indictment or information, but the court will not always grant the latter remedy, especially where there is a doubt as to the general liability of the individual. Nor, again, where the party is not usually resident within the corporation, nor where there is no ground for imputing obstinacy to him.¹⁰ If the attorney-general should be satisfied that the defendant is exempted, as in the case of a surgeon, he will, if he thinks fit, enter into a noli prosequi. But the Court of Queen's Bench will not interfere by granting a writ of privilege, because a person is appointed who is manifestly disqualified by reason of his holding another employment. Thus Mr. Delamotte, who was a justice of peace, living at Blackheath and in London, was referred

¹ R. v. Adlard, 4 B. & C. 772; S. C. 7 D. & Ry. 340.

² R. v. Pond, Com. Rep. 312.

³ 1 Mod. 22.

⁴ 2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 39.

⁵ 1 Mod. 13; 2 Hawk. c. 10, s. 39.

⁶ R. v. Abdy, Cro. Car. 585.

⁷ 1 T. R. 686, by Buller, J., 1 Sid. 272.

⁸ 1 T. R. ut supra.

⁹ R. v. Warner, 8 T. R. 375.

¹⁰ R. v. Denison, 2 Ld. Keny. 259.

to the sessions upon his appointment as a constable in London, and the writ of privilege was denied.¹

But the sessions cannot commit. They can only direct an indictment to be preferred against the party refusing, and thus a defendant was discharged upon a habeas corpus sued out by him in consequence of a commitment by the justices at sessions.² The court, however, granted an information against a person for refusing the office of sheriff, because it would be nearly a year before the indictment could be tried, and there would, in the meantime, be a hindrance to public justice.³

Breach of duty.] Secondly, as the person appointed to be overseer, constable, or other officer is indictable if he refuse to take office, so if he accept it and do not discharge his employment properly, he is punishable for his misbehaviour. As if he neglect to provide properly for the poor,⁴ or omit to shield them from the weather,⁵ or exact labour from those who cannot work,⁶ or withhold proper medical assistance, and it needs not to be shown that the pauper was in the workhouse, or that he stood previously in want of medical aid,⁷ or refuse to render his accounts,⁸ or neglect to make a proper rate.⁹

An information was filed against one of the members of council at Madras for malversations in office.¹⁰

So an indictment was framed against the defendant as bailiff of the borough of Ilchester, for absenting himself from a corporate meeting, for the election of a new bailiff; but, in this latter case, the prosecution did not succeed for want of proof that the presence of the bailiff was necessary at such an election.¹¹ So an indictment lies for not collecting the poor's rate.¹² So where collectors of taxes made an unequal rate, and applied monies to their own purposes, which they had managed to levy from some whose names they had omitted in their books, they were found guilty

¹ R. v. De la Motte, 2 Str. 698.

² R. v. Crawley, Cro. Car. 567.

³ R. v. Woodrow, 2 T. R. 731.

⁴ R. v. Tawney, 16 Vin. Ab. 415.

⁵ R. v. Wetherill and another, Cald. 432.

⁶ R. v. Winship, Id. 76.

⁷ R. v. Warren, 1 Russ. C. M. 139.

⁸ R. v. Commings and another, 5 Mod. 179.

⁹ R. v. Barlow, 2 Salk. 609.

¹⁰ R. v. Hollond, 5 T. R. 607. In this case, it was held, that the indictment need not show the appointment, if there be a general statement that the defendant is an officer; that each individual of a body is liable in his own person for a breach of duty, although the duty be thrown on the whole body; that it is sufficient to state a wilful breach without calling it corrupt; that it is not necessary to aver a revocation of orders, or that they are in force; nor to allege notice of certain acts which the officer must be presumed to know. It was held, however, that a charge for not prosecuting a war with vigour and decision was too uncertain, though the charge were made in the very words of the order given to the defendant.

¹¹ R. v. Corry, 5 East, 372.

¹² R. v. Brown, 3 Keb. 49.

upon an indictment for misdemeanor.¹ And it has been held, that in an indictment against a person for misconduct to the poor, the names of the poor persons need not be specified.² Every person holding a patent office under the crown, or derivatively from such authority, is liable to be indicted for not discharging his duty.³

So an information against overseers for removing a sick person illegally, was granted with approbation by the court.⁴ So there may be an indictment against a surveyor for a breach of duty.⁵

Judgment.] The judgment for these respective offences of refusals to take office, and breaches of duty, is fine and imprisonment.

Refusing apprentice.] It does not appear to be settled, whether a refusal to receive a parish apprentice is an indictable offence.⁶ A penalty was attached to such a refusal by 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 30, s. 5; and there has been a decision upon appeal to the effect, that a party occupying lands in a parish, is compellable to receive such an apprentice, although he do not reside in the parish.⁷ The court, however, upon considering the validity of an indictment for this act of omission, declined to enter upon the general question, being of opinion that the binding brought before their notice was not one within 43 Eliz. c. 2.⁸

Usury.—Illegal brokerage, &c.] By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90, s. 1, certain Acts against usury are repealed. But by sect. 2, transactions prior to the Act are not to be affected, and by sect. 3, interest payable upon any contract before the passing of the Act, is recoverable as if it had not passed. It is observable that the indictment at common law survives, rare as its use may be. The Act of Victoria only repeals the statutes of usury. It seems that usury, unless to the amount of 40 per cent. (which was called Jewish usury), is not an offence at common law.⁹ But Mr. Serjeant Russell cites an eminent legal opinion in favour of an indictment at common law, where the usury is clear and palpable.¹⁰ But the loan, or the taking of excessive interest, must appear in evidence. The reservation of rent, so as to produce an illegal interest, will not be a defence against usury.¹¹ It is not enough to show a corrupt agreement, without any measures founded upon the illegal contract. Judgment was arrested upon an indictment, by reason of this ¹ R. v. Buck and another, 6 Mod. 306.

² R. v. Wetherill, Cald. 432.

³ R. v. Bembridge, 1 Salk. 380, note (a).

⁴ R. v. Edwards, 8 Mod. 326. R. v. Busbey and others, 2 Barnard. 89.

⁵ R. v. Anderson, 3 Ch. Burn, 104.

⁶ See Str. 1268.

⁷ R. v. Clapp, 3 T. R. 107. See also R. v. Barwick, 7 T. R. 33.

⁸ R. v. Trevilian, Str. 1268.

⁹ Hardr. 420, per Hale, C. B.

¹⁰ 1 Russ. C. M. 458.

¹¹ Cro. Jac. 440. The value of the house in respect of which the corrupt contract was made, need not be stated. Id.

fault, after a verdict for the crown.¹ The corrupt bargain may be stated generally in the indictment.² The indictment must contain all the requisites of a declaration qui tam for usury.³

By 1 Vict. c. 80, no bill or note made payable at or within twelve months after date, or not having more than twelve months to run, shall, by reason of any interest taken or secured thereon, or any agreement to pay, receive, or allow interest in discounting, negotiating, or transferring the same, be void; neither shall the liability of any party to any bill or note be affected by reason of any statute or law in force for the prevention of usury; nor shall any person or body corporate, drawing, accepting, indorsing, or signing any bill or note, or lending or advancing any money, or taking more than the present rate of legal interest for the loan of money on such bill or note, be subject to any penalties under any statute or law relating to usury, or any other penalty or forfeiture.

Illegal brokerage.] Then, as to illegal brokerage: Under the 7th section of the repealed statute, 12 Geo. 3, c. 26, s. 7, one Gillham was indicted for taking more than 10s. in the 100*l.* for brokerage. In this case it was held, that the exact sum taken was not necessary to be proved, the quantum of excess being immaterial; and Lord Kenyon mentioned *R. v. Burdett*⁴ as decisive, where the indictment for taking 20s. extorsively was deemed sufficiently satisfied by proof of taking 1s. in that manner. And with regard to any sum claimed for drawing deeds or writings, it was rightly left to the jury to say, whether the whole transaction were not in fact for the purpose of gaining usurious interest, though a sum might ostensibly be received for another object.⁵

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 90, s. 4, No statute relating to pawnbrokers shall be affected or repealed by that Act.

It is likewise a matter of public convenience that licences, or certificates required by statute, upon many occasions should be punctually obtained. The neglect to procure such instruments is punishable at common law by indictment where there is a prohibitory clause independently of that which prescribes a penalty. But where the Act embraces both the forfeiture and the mode of procedure in one clause, an indictment cannot be maintained. An example of this may be found in a decision upon the 8 & 9 Will. 3, c. 25, concerning hawkers and pedlars.⁶

Aliens.] Disobedience to any Act of parliament is likewise punishable as a breach of public duty: as under the Aliens' Registration Act.⁷ All certificates are required to be given with-

¹ R. v. Upton, 2 Str. 816.

² Cro. Jac. 440.

³ 2 Ch. Cr. L. 549. See also R. v. Sewel, 7 Mod. 118.

⁴ 1 Ld. R. 149.

⁵ R. v. Gillham, 6 T. R. 265.

⁶ R. v. Savage and others, 1 Ld. Raym. 347. A single act of selling does not constitute a hawker. R. v. Little, Burr. 610.

⁷ 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 11, s. 8.

out fee or reward whatsoever; and every person, who shall take any fee or reward of any alien, or other person, for any certificate, &c., shall forfeit 20*l*. Here, as the sentences are not united, strictly speaking, an indictment may be presumed to lie, although it is probable that the question may never be raised, by reason of the more easy course of recurring to the penalty; and, of late, the legislature has often expressly denounced acts in opposition to its ordinances as misdemeanors.

Russian stocks.] The stat. 17 & 18 Vict. c. 123, prohibited dealings in Russian securities created since March 29, 1854, upon pain of a misdemeanor. Several exceptions were added. By sect. 2, the general venue was Middlesex. Sect. 3 saved the offence of treason, but ordained that no person should claim to be acquitted on the ground of his offence amounting to treason; and, by sect. 4, the costs were regulated under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64, and 14 & 15 Vict. c. 55.

Anatomy Act.] Under the Anatomy Act,¹ any person offending against its provisions is declared to be guilty of that offence, and punishable by imprisonment not exceeding three months, or by a fine not exceeding 50*l*.

Insane persons.] By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 23, no disqualified person, as a commissioner, visitor, &c., can act in lunacy without being guilty of a misdemeanor. Persons giving untrue statements are declared guilty of a misdemeanor.² So it is if any one should keep a house for the reception of two or more lunatics without a licence.³ So if a person (other than a pauper) be received without an order and medical certificate, the person receiving and the physician, &c. are guilty of misdemeanor,⁴ except under special circumstances.⁵ The statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 5, allows three days in certain cases before a medical certificate, signed by two persons, need be produced; but after these three days there must be two signatures on pain of a misdemeanor. The 7th section protects paupers. There must be an order and certificate, else the party receiving will be guilty of a misdemeanor. No medical practitioner who is interested in a licensed place can act as a commissioner, visitor, &c. upon pain of a misdemeanor.⁶ And an entry must be according to a set form by the party receiving, upon a similar pain.⁷ It is a misdemeanor to neglect sending a notice of admission to the commissioners or the clerk of the visitors.⁸ So it is in the case of the death, discharge, or removal of the patient, if no notice be given and entry made.⁹ The abuse or ill-treatment of a

¹ 2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 75, s. 18.

² 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 27.

³ Sect. 44.

⁴ 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 4;
16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, ss. 73, 74.

⁵ Which are set out in s. 5.

⁶ 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 23.

⁷ Id. s. 50.

⁸ Id. s. 52.

⁹ Id. s. 54. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 97,
s. 93.

patient is a misdemeanor.¹ By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 59, and 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 14, there is to be a medical visitation book, and every physician, &c. making an untrue entry is guilty of a misdemeanor. The house and every part must be open to the commissioners and visitors under the like penalty.² So it is if full and true answers be not given to those officers.³ By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 78, the commissioners are to make an entry in the patients' book, where they meet with a confined person of doubtful mind, and the same is to be sent to the clerk of the visitors, in order that they may visit the patient. A neglect to send a copy of the commissioners' minute to the clerk, or a neglect of the clerk to communicate the same to two of the visitors, is a misdemeanor. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 90, any person receiving a single lunatic without an order or medical certificate, except one who claims no profit, or a committee, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. By 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 93, any person detaining a lunatic for three days after an order from the lord chancellor directing the removal of such lunatic, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

To give a false certificate, or to give one, not being a medical person, is a misdemeanor.⁴

The words of the statute 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 9, "Having the care and charge of a lunatic," do not apply to a husband who ill-uses his wife being a lunatic. The domestic custody of a lunatic is not within the Act. But the conviction for a common assault was sustained.⁵

By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 114, s. 2, graduates of the University of London are not to be subject to any charge under sect. 13 of the Act just mentioned, i.e. the 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96.

Election of mayor.] By 11 Geo. 1, c. 4, s. 6, any attempt by a mayor, bailiff, or other chief officer of a borough or town corporate to hinder the election of a mayor, by absence upon the proper day, or by preventing the election in any other manner, is made punishable by imprisonment for six months, and disability to hold office in the corporation.⁶

Poor Law Act.] By 4 & 5 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 13, if any person shall wilfully refuse to attend in obedience to any summons of any commissioner, or assistant commissioner, or to give evidence, or shall wilfully alter, suppress, conceal, destroy, or refuse to produce

¹ 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 56.
16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 9. 16 & 17
Vict. c. 97, s. 123.

² 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 63.

³ 8 & 9 Vict. c. 100, s. 64.

⁴ 16 & 17 Vict. c. 96, s. 13.
16 & 17 Vict. c. 97, s. 122.

⁵ Dears. 483; 24 L. J. M. C.
129. R. v. Rundle, 6 Cox, C. C.
549.

⁶ See R. v. Nicholletts, 6 Nev.
& M. 827. Criminal informations against the town clerk of Bridport, for misconduct relating to the election of borough councillors. R. v.
Marsh, 1 Nev. & P. 187. Indictment for soliciting Joseph M. to personate John M. at an election for ward councillors.

any books, contracts, agreements, accounts, and writings, or copies of the same which may be required to be produced before such commissioner, or assistant commissioner, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.¹

Tithes.] So under the Tithes Commutation Act,² if any person shall wilfully refuse to attend in obedience to any lawful summons of any commissioner, or assistant commissioner, or to give evidence, or shall wilfully alter, withhold, destroy, or refuse to produce any book, &c., which may be lawfully required from him, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.³

Copyholds Enfranchisement Act.] So, wilfully to refuse attendance in obedience to a summons under the Copyholds Enfranchisement Act is a misdemeanor, and to withhold evidence is a similar offence.⁴

Ship's registry.] Using or attempting to use a certificate of registry not legally granted is a misdemeanor in the master and owner, and the ship is forfeited. By 17 & 18 Vict. c. 104, s. 103, the concealment of a British or assumption of a foreign character is a misdemeanor, and likewise a false declaration of qualification as to ownership. By sect. 140, making false representations, forging or uttering certificates of competency or service, or making use of such, or lending a true certificate, is a misdemeanor. So, by sect. 164, uttering any entry, or making a false copy of any agreement. So making a false certificate of character, or forging or fraudulently using the same.⁵ By sect. 176, masters making false reports as to the discharge of persons under the Act, or committing frauds in respect of certificates under that section, are guilty of a misdemeanor. The prisoner was in the habit of altering such documents on payment of a reward. He erased letter M. from the character, which signified "middling," and inserted G., which meant "good." This act was held to be a misdemeanor within the section.⁶ So, by sect. 200, forcing a seaman or apprentice on shore, and leaving him there, is a misdemeanor. So, by sect. 207, discharging a seaman illegally, leaving him behind without certain sanctions. Another misdemeanor is a false representation or forgery in support of any application by an owner for extra expenses. So is any misconduct by a master or seaman tending to endanger the ship, or life, or limb.⁷ So, by sect. 284, to destroy, mutilate, or render illegible any entry in any official log book, or make, &c., any fraudulent entry or omission in any such log book, is a misdemeanor. So, by sect. 320, to forge a certificate respecting any passenger steamer.⁸

¹ And punishable with fine and imprisonment.

² 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 71, s. 93.

³ And punishable accordingly, with fine and imprisonment.

⁴ 4 & 5 Vict. c. 35, s. 94.

⁵ Sect. 176.

⁶ R. v. Wilson, Dears. & B. 558, whether forgery at common law, qy.?

⁷ 4 & 5 Vict. c. 55, s. 239.

⁸ Sect. 220.

By sect. 366, any pilot in charge of a ship endangering the ship, or life, or limb, by a breach of duty, or drunkenness, or omitting necessary duty, is declared to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and liable to suspension and dismissal, if qualified. By sect. 518, every misdemeanor under the Act is punishable with fine and imprisonment, with or without hard labour. The costs are given under 7 Geo. 4, c. 64. Upon summary conviction the fine is not to exceed 100*l.*, nor the imprisonment six calendar months, with or without hard labour, and before two justices.¹ By sect. 496, the punishment for forging a false representation in cases of salvage, is imprisonment not exceeding two years, with or without hard labour, or, upon summary conviction, not exceeding six months.

Newspaper stamps.] By 6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 6, if any person shall knowingly and wilfully sign and make a declaration, with the name, addition, or place of abode of the proprietor, publisher, printer, or conductor of the actual printing of any newspaper to which such declaration shall relate, who shall not be a proprietor, printer, or publisher thereof, or from which shall be omitted the name, addition, or place of abode of any proprietor, publisher, printer, or conductor of the actual printing of such newspaper, or shall make any other untrue statement in his declaration, or omit anything required by the Act, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.²

Election writs.] If any person concerned in the transmitting or delivery of any election writ, shall wilfully neglect or delay to deliver such writ, or shall take any fee, or otherwise violate the Act, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.³

Elections.] The stat. 3 Edw. 1, c. 5, threatens with "great forfeitures" such as shall by force of arms, malice, or menace, disturb any from making his free election.

Identity of voter at elections.] By 2 Will. 4, c. 45, s. 58, if any person shall wilfully make a false answer to the questions as to the identity of the voter, the fact of his having voted, or as to the qualification for which his name was originally inserted in the register, he shall be deemed guilty of an indictable misdemeanor, and shall be punished accordingly. The same qualification means the identical, and not a similar qualification in respect of other

¹ See as to the procedure, ss. 518, 519, et seq.

² And punishable with fine and imprisonment.

³ 53 Geo. 3, c. 89, s. 6. And be proceeded against either by indictment or information, and punished by fine and imprisonment, at the discretion of the court.

See also 5 Ric. 2, st. 2, c. 4, as to sheriff omitting cities or boroughs which ought to send members, or being negligent as to his writs. The punishment was amercement. By the same Act, any person, whether archbishop, peer, or other person, absenting himself from a summons to parliament, was to be amerced.

premises of a like description. Nevertheless, if the voter be shown to have possessed property of an equal value, and it appear that he acted bonâ fide, although under a mistaken impression, he ought to be acquitted.¹

So, in order to procure a conviction, it should be shown that the proper officer read over his specific qualification to the voter. It was so held where the voter had changed his residence, but swore that he had the same qualification as before.² By the 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, s. 14, a certified copy is sufficient upon proof of the office of the person signing. The return need not be produced. To prove that a person obstructed was a voter, a book entirely in writing, and signed, was put in. It should have been printed, but although irregular, it was deemed valid.³ It was also held that the decision of the revising barrister was conclusive, even if the list was not signed, and if the barrister had contravened the statute.⁴

But it is not a defence that the voter acted under the advice of an electioneering committee.⁵ A copy of the original register may be given in evidence to prove the charge, and if it resemble the original in respect of the name and description of the defendant, it will be sufficient.⁶

The indictment should state the writ and contain the precept, and that the defendant's name was on the register. Merely to allege, that the defendant appeared as a voter, and swore to his qualification, is insufficient,⁷ and the defect is hardly cured after verdict.⁸ The words of the answer should be proved as alleged.⁹ The father, William Goodman, was on the burgess roll, but had been for a long time absent. The question put was, "Are you the person whose name appears on the burgess roll now in force." Answer, "Yes." The defendant, William Goodman, junior, was acquitted. There was no case.¹⁰ The word "wilfully" cannot be dispensed with in such an indictment. "Falsely and fraudulently" will not suffice.¹¹ And "wilfully" is to be construed in the same way as in an indictment for perjury, and to be supported in the same manner.¹²

A count for falsely, fraudulently, deceitfully, and contrary to

¹ R. v. Dodsworth, 8 C. & P. 218.

² R. v. Lucy, Car. & M. 511.

³ R. v. Clarke, 1 Fost. & F. 654. Byles, J.

⁴ R. v. Colebourne, Id. 655, n. Byles, J.

⁵ R. v. Dodsworth, 8 C. & P. 218.

⁶ S. C.

⁷ R. v. Bowler, 6 Jur. 287; 1 Car. & M. 559.

⁸ S. C.

⁹ S. C.

¹⁰ R. v. Goodman, 1 Fost. & F. 502.

¹¹ R. v. Bent, 2 Car. & K. 179.

¹² R. v. Ellis, Car. & M. 564, 565; 6 Jur. 287. The register stood thus:—"Penkhill, &c., No. ——. Samuel Ellis. A house in Eldon Place." Eldon Place was the only place of that name in the borough. The question—"Have you the same qualification, viz., a house, in Eldon Place?" This was held to be a sufficient specification of particulars.

and in fraud of the said statute, personating, &c., was held bad. It disclosed no offence, neither at common law, nor by statute.¹

Personation of voters.] By 6 & 7 Vict. c. 18, s. 83, knowingly to personate or assume the character of a voter, whether living or dead, although the name assumed be fictitious, is punishable by imprisonment not exceeding two years, with hard labour. By sect. 84, aiders and abettors are to be punished as principals. The writ to the sheriff must be produced, for that is the foundation of the election.²

Personation of corporate officers.] Upon an indictment under 5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 76, s. 34, it is sufficient to show that the offence took place at what purported to be a ward election. Nor needs the due division of the borough into wards be shown, nor that the privy council approved of the division.³

Voters.—11 & 12 Vict. c. 63.] By 11 & 12 Vict. c. 63, (The Public Health Act,) s. 25, certain forms were required for voting at the election of the local board. The defendants filled up the names and marks of the voters, but with their consent, and then placed their own names as attesting witnesses. This was held not to be a forgery at common law.⁴

Voting papers.—University elections.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 53, s. 5, any person falsely or fraudulently signing any voting paper in the name of another, either as voter or witness, whether the other person be living or dead, and any person knowingly so signing, subscribing, &c. any false voting paper, or making any false declaration, or fraudulently altering, defacing, withholding, or abstracting any voting paper, or wilfully making a false answer to questions, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine, or imprisonment not exceeding one year.

Vestries.] By 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 60, s. 11, if any churchwarden, rate collector, overseer, or other parish officer, shall refuse to call meetings under the provisions of the Act, or to take and give the declarations and notices as directed by it, or receive the vote of any ratepayer, or in any manner alter, falsify, conceal, or suppress any vote, the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

Under the Local Management Act, 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 27, churchwardens, &c. refusing to call meetings, or otherwise evading the Act, are guilty of a misdemeanor.

¹ R. v. Bent, Den. 157; 1 Cox, 356.

² R. v. Vaile, 6 Cox, 470.

³ R. v. Thompson, 2 Moo. & Rob. 335.

⁴ R. v. Hartshorn, 6 Cox, 395.

PART XVII.

Of Offences punishable by Courts Martial.

These offences, although not indictable, may, nevertheless, be mentioned in this place, being intimately connected, as to their suppression, with the public safety. By the Mutiny Act,¹ if any person who is or shall be commissioned or in pay as an officer, or who is or shall be listed or in pay as a non-commissioned officer or soldier, shall at any time during the continuance of the Act, begin, excite, cause, or join in any mutiny or sedition in the marines or land forces, or shall not use his utmost endeavours to suppress the same; or coming to the knowledge of any mutiny or intended mutiny, shall not, without delay, give information thereof to his commanding officer, or shall misbehave himself before the enemy; or shall shamefully abandon or deliver up any garrison, fortress, post, or guard committed to his charge, or which he shall be commanded to defend, or shall compel the governor or commanding officer of any garrison, fortress, or post, to deliver up to the enemy, or to abandon the same; or shall speak words or use any other means to induce such governor or commanding officer or others, to misbehave before the enemy, or shamefully to abandon or deliver up any garrison, &c. committed to their respective charge, or which he or they shall be commanded to defend; or shall leave his post before relieved, or shall be found sleeping on his post—or shall hold correspondence with, or give advice or intelligence to any rebel or enemy of Her Majesty, either by letters, messages, signs or tokens, in any manner or way whatsoever; or shall treat or enter into any terms with such rebel or enemy without Her Majesty's licence, or licence of the general or chief commander; or shall strike or shall use or offer any violence against his superior officer, or who being confined in a military prison, shall offer any violence against a visitor or other his superior military officer, being in the execution of his office; or shall desert Her Majesty's service,—all such offenders, whether within the realm or in any other of Her Majesty's dominions, or in foreign parts, upon land or upon the sea, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as by a court martial shall be awarded.¹

¹ 24 Vict. c. 7, s. 15.

From this enactment it appears, that as far as the officer and soldier are concerned, the offence of seducing men in service is capital by the Mutiny Act, for such an offence is certainly the beginning, causing, or exciting of sedition and mutiny. By sect. 39, no person subject to the Act and acquitted or convicted by the civil magistrate, or by verdict of a jury, shall be punished by a court martial for the same offence, otherwise than by cashiering; and by sect. 16, the sentence of death may be commuted by Her Majesty, or by the commander-in-chief of the forces, if the offence happen in the East Indies, to penal servitude for not less than four years, or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement at discretion, provided the latter do not exceed 28 days at one time, nor 85 days in one year. Provisions similar to the above occur in the Marine Mutiny Bill.²

By the articles of war, (22 Geo. 2, c. 33, art. 26,) if any ship belonging to His Majesty be stranded or run upon any rock or sands, or split, or hazarded through wilfulness, negligence, or other defaults in the conduct or steering of it, the person offending shall be punished with death or otherwise, as the court martial shall adjudge.

By 24 Vict. c. 7, s. 17, the embezzlement, fraudulent misapplication, damaging, stealing and receiving of public stores, is made punishable by penal servitude for not less than four years, or fine and imprisonment at discretion, or dismissal from the service, or in the case of a warrant or non-commissioned officer, reduction to the ranks. By sect. 20, a sentence of penal servitude may be commuted for imprisonment, with or without hard labour, and solitary confinement, at discretion.

By sect. 21, if a forfeiture shall be added to penal servitude, it may be enforced, mitigated, or remitted. By sect. 51, every person acting wilfully contrary to the Act in respect of recruiting, shall be liable to a general, district, or camp court martial, and punishable in any other manner than by death and penal servitude.

Unlawful recruiting.—Punishments similar to those above mentioned are ordained by the Marine Mutiny Act.³

By sect. 81, to procure or attempt to procure any soldier to desert, or shall in any way aid in such deserting, is a misdemeanor, and punishable by fine or imprisonment, or both.

The Act for the government of the navy.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 115, s. 2, every flag officer, captain, commander, or officer commanding subject to this Act, who upon signal of battle, or on sight

¹ As to penal servitude, see ss. 21, 22. the United Kingdom, sect. 18, and in the colonies, sect. 19.

² See as to the mode of carrying out the sentence of penalservitude in ³ 24 & 25 Vict. c. 8, ss. 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 69.

of a ship of an enemy which it may be his duty to engage, shall not

- (1.) Use his utmost exertion to bring his ship into action;
- (2.) Or shall not during such action, in his own person and according to his rank, encourage his inferior officers and men to fight courageously;
- (3.) Or who shall surrender his ship to the enemy when capable of making a successful defence, or who in time of action shall improperly withdraw from the fight, shall, if he has acted traitorously, suffer death; if he has acted from cowardice shall suffer death, or be imprisoned, and be also dismissed with disgrace from Her Majesty's service; and if he has acted from negligence, or through other default, he shall be dismissed from Her Majesty's service, with or without disgrace, or shall suffer such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 3, every officer subject to this Act who shall forbear to pursue the chase of any enemy, pirate, or rebel, beaten or flying, or shall not relieve and assist a known friend in view to the utmost of his power, or who shall improperly forsake his station, shall, if he has therein acted traitorously, suffer death; if he has acted from cowardice, suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned; if he has acted from negligence, or through other default, shall be dismissed from Her Majesty's service with disgrace, or shall suffer such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 4, when any action or any service is commanded, every person subject to this Act who shall presume to delay or discourage the said action or service upon any pretence whatsoever, or in the presence or vicinity of the enemy shall desert his post or sleep upon his watch, shall suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 5, every person subject to this Act, and not being a commanding officer, who shall not use his utmost exertions to carry the orders of his superior officers into execution when ordered to prepare for action, or during the action, shall, if he has acted traitorously, suffer death; if he has acted from cowardice shall suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned; and if he has acted from negligence, or through other default, be dismissed from Her Majesty's service, with disgrace, or suffer such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 6, all spies for the enemy shall be deemed to be persons subject to this Act, and shall suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 7, every person subject to this Act who shall traitorously hold—

- (1.) Correspondence with or shall give intelligence to the enemy;
 - (2.) Or fail to make known to the proper authorities any information he may have received from the enemy;
 - (3.) Or who shall relieve the enemy with any supplies,
- shall suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 8, every person subject to this Act who shall, without any treacherous intention, hold any improper communication with the enemy, shall be dismissed from Her Majesty's service, or shall suffer such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 9, every person subject to this Act who shall desert his post or sleep upon his watch, or negligently perform the duty imposed on him, shall be dismissed from Her Majesty's service with disgrace, or shall suffer such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 10, where mutiny is accompanied by violence, every person subject to this Act who shall join therein shall suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned; and every person subject to this Act who shall not use his utmost exertions to suppress such mutiny shall, if he has acted traitorously, suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned; if he has acted from cowardice, shall suffer penal servitude or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned; if he has acted from negligence he shall be dismissed from Her Majesty's service, with disgrace, or suffer such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 11, where a mutiny is not accompanied by violence, the ringleader or ringleaders of such mutiny shall suffer death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned; and all other persons who shall join in such mutiny, or shall not use their utmost exertions to suppress the same, shall suffer imprisonment or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 12, every person subject to this Act who shall endeavour to seduce any other person subject to this Act from his duty or allegiance to Her Majesty, or endeavour to incite him to commit any Act of mutiny, shall suffer death or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 13, every person, not otherwise subject to this Act, who, being on board any ship of Her Majesty, shall endeavour to seduce from his duty or allegiance to Her Majesty any person subject to this Act, shall so far as respects such offence be deemed to be a person subject to this Act, and shall suffer death or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 14, every person subject to this Act who shall make or endeavour to make any mutinous assembly, or shall lead or incite any other person to join in any mutinous assembly, or shall utter any words of sedition or mutiny, shall suffer penal servitude or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 15, every person subject to this Act who shall wilfully conceal any traitorous or mutinous practice or design, or any traitorous or mutinous words spoken against Her Majesty, or any words, practice, or design tending to the hindrance of the service, shall suffer penal servitude or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 16, every person subject to this Act who shall strike or offer to strike or use any violence against his superior officer, being in the execution of his office, shall be punished with death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned; and every person subject to this Act who shall strike or offer to strike or use any violence against his superior officer, not being in the execution of his office, shall be punished with penal servitude or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 17, every person who shall wilfully disobey any lawful command of his superior officer, or shall use threatening or insulting language or behave with contempt to his superior officer, shall be punished with dismissal from Her Majesty's service, with disgrace, or suffer such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 18, every person subject to this Act who shall quarrel or fight with any other person, whether such other person be or be not subject to this Act, or shall use reproachful or provoking speeches or gestures, tending to make any quarrel or disturbance, shall suffer imprisonment or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By sect. 19, every person subject to this Act who shall absent himself from his ship or from the place where his duty requires him to be, without any intention of returning to such ship or place, or who shall at any time, and under any circumstances when absent from his ship, do any act which shows that he has not any intention of returning to such ship or place, shall be deemed to have deserted, and shall be punished accordingly; that is to say,

(1.) If he has deserted to the enemy he shall be punished with death, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned;

(2.) If he has deserted under any other circumstances he shall be punished with penal servitude, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned; and in every such case he shall forfeit all pay, head money, bounty, salvage, prize money, and allowances that have been earned by him, and all annuities, pensions, gratuities, medals, and decorations that may have been granted to him, and also all clothes and effects which he may have left on board the ship or at the place from which he has deserted, unless the tribunal by which he is tried shall otherwise direct.

By sect. 20, every person subject to this Act who shall endeavour to seduce any other person subject to this Act to desert, shall suffer imprisonment, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned.

By 37 Geo. 3, c. 70, which was made perpetual by 57 Geo. 3, c. 7, any person who shall maliciously and wilfully endeavour to seduce any person or persons serving in His Majesty's forces by sea or land from his or their due allegiance to His Majesty, or to incite or stir up any person or persons to commit any act of mutiny, or to make or endeavour to make any mutinous assembly, or to commit any traitorous or mutinous practice whatsoever, shall be adjudged guilty of felony.

By 37 Geo. 3, c. 70, s. 2, if the offence be committed on the high seas, it may be prosecuted and tried as if the said offence had been committed in any county in England before any court of oyer and terminer, or gaol delivery; and if the crime take place in any county, the trial may be had in any other county. The case against John Tierney for endeavouring to seduce James Brown, was made out satisfactorily, provided James Brown could be considered as being at the time of such attempted seduction, a person serving in His Majesty's forces, by sea. Brown was in the sick hospital, and was not entitled to pay, and as he could not be tried by a court martial for any other offence than was contained in the 5th, 34th, and 35th articles of war, (22 Geo. 2, c. 33), it was questioned whether, being liable only to a limited extent, he could be called a person serving within the 37 Geo. 3, c. 70. The conviction, however, was held right.¹ Fuller was convicted of an endeavour to seduce a soldier named Lowe from his allegiance; three objections were taken to the indictment,—first, that the charge being in the 1st count to seduce from duty and allegiance, and in the 2nd to incite to an act of mutiny, and to traitorous and mutinous practices; it was, nevertheless, omitted to aver the means which the prisoner had adopted to accomplish these offences; secondly, that there was no allegation that Fuller knew the person he had attempted to seduce to be a soldier; thirdly, that an endeavour to excite to an act of mutiny, and also to mutinous practices, were two penal offences, and ought not to have been comprised within one count; but after argument, the judges affirmed the conviction. As to the first point, they said that the word “endeavour” was sufficient without any statement of “means;” in the second place, they held that the word “advisedly” was equivalent to “knowingly,” but that, in point of fact, knowledge was necessarily involved in the charge that the prisoner endeavoured to seduce; and thirdly, that the second count could not be objected to, for it contained the parts of one fact of endeavour.²

Judgment.] The judgment for this offence, which was punishable capitally under 37 Geo. 3, c. 70, is by 1 Vict. c. 91, s. 1, declared to be transportation for life, or not less than fifteen years, or imprisonment not exceeding three years, with or without hard labour, &c.

There are other offences,—as profane swearing. (Sect. 23.) Cruelty and scandalous or fraudulent conduct. (Sect. 24.) Hazarding and losing ships. (Sect. 25.) Not taking care of convoy, which may be punished by death or otherwise. (Sect. 26.)³ Taking other goods on board than those for the use of the vessel. (Sect. 28.) Embezzlement of public stores. (Sect. 29.) Burning any dockyard, &c., which may be punished with death or otherwise. (Sect. 30.) Making false musters. (Sect. 31.) Misconduct in hospitals. (Sect. 32.)⁴

¹ R. v. Tierney, Russ. & Ry. 74.

³ See sect. 27.

² R. v. Fuller, Leach, 790; 1 Bos. & P. 180.

⁴ See also sects. 33—36.

Stripping, pillaging, beating, &c., persons taken on board of a prize. (Sect. 37.)

Offences punishable by ordinary law.] By 24 & 25 Vict. c. 115, s. 38, every person subject to this Act who shall be guilty of murder shall suffer death:

If he shall be guilty of manslaughter he shall suffer penal servitude, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned:

If he shall be guilty of sodomy with man or beast he shall suffer penal servitude:

If he shall be guilty of indecent assaults he shall suffer penal servitude, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned:

If he shall be guilty of robbery or theft he shall suffer penal servitude, or such other punishment as is hereinafter mentioned:

If he shall be guilty of any other criminal offence which if committed in England would be punishable by the law of England, he shall, whether the offence be or be not committed in England, be punished either in pursuance of the first part of this Act as an act to the prejudice of good order and naval discipline not otherwise specified, or the offender shall be subject to the same punishment as might be awarded by any ordinary criminal tribunal competent to try the offender, if the offence had been committed in England.

By sect. 39, for all offences specified or referred to in this Act, if committed by any person subject thereto in any harbour, haven, or creek, or on any lake or river, whether in or out of the United Kingdom or anywhere within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, or at any place on shore out of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or in any of Her Majesty's dockyards, victualling yards, steam factory yards, or on any gun wharf, or in any arsenal, barrack, or hospital belonging to Her Majesty, whether in or out of the said United Kingdom, the offender may be tried and punished under this Act, and for all offences hereinbefore specified under the headings "Misconduct in the presence of the enemy," "Communications with the enemy," "Neglect of duty," "Mutiny," "Insubordination," "Desertion and absence without leave," or "Miscellaneous offences," if committed by any person subject to this Act at any place on shore, whether in or out of the said United Kingdom, the offender may be tried and punished under this Act.¹

By sect. 45, the following punishments may be inflicted in Her Majesty's navy:—

- (1.) Death:
- (2.) Penal servitude:
- (3.) Dismissal with disgrace from Her Majesty's service:
- (4.) Imprisonment or corporal punishment:
- (5.) Dismissal from Her Majesty's service:

¹ See "General provisions," sects. 40—41.

- (6.) Forfeiture of seniority as an officer for a specified time, or otherwise :
- (7.) Dismissal from the ship to which the offender belongs :
- (8.) Severe reprimand, or reprimand :
- (9.) Disrating a subordinate or petty officer :
- (10.) Forfeiture of pay, head money, bounty, salvage, prize money, and allowances earned by, and of all annuities, pensions, gratuities, medals, and decorations granted to the offender, or of any one or more of the above particulars ; also, in the case of desertion, of all clothes and effects left by the deserter on board the ship to which he belongs :
- (11.) Such minor punishments as are now inflicted according to the custom of the navy, or may from time to time be allowed by the admiralty :

and each of the above punishments shall be deemed to be inferior in degree to every punishment preceding it in the above scale.

And by sect. 46, the following regulations are hereby made with respect to the infliction of punishments in Her Majesty's navy :

- (1.) The admiralty may, except in case of sentence of death, which shall only be remitted by Her Majesty, suspend, annul, or modify any sentence passed on any person subject to this Act.
- (2.) Judgment of death shall not be passed on any prisoner unless four at least of the officers present at the court martial, where the number does not exceed five, and in other cases a majority of not less than two-thirds of the officers present, concur in the sentence.
- (3.) The punishment of death shall not be inflicted on any prisoner until the sentence has been confirmed by the admiralty or by the commander-in-chief on a foreign station.
- (4.) The punishment of penal servitude may be inflicted for the term of life, or for any other term of not less than three years :
- (5.) The punishment of penal servitude shall in all cases involve dismissal with disgrace from Her Majesty's service :
- (6.) Dismissal with disgrace shall involve in all cases a forfeiture of all pay, head money, bounty, salvage, prize money, and allowances that have been earned by, and of all annuities, pensions, gratuities, medals, and decorations that may have been granted to the offender, and an incapacity to serve Her Majesty again in any military, naval, or civil service ; and may also in all cases be accompanied by a sentence of imprisonment, with or without solitary confinement, not exceeding the periods hereinafter mentioned, and with or without hard labour, for all or any part of the term of imprisonment, and with or without corporal punishment :
- (7.) The punishment of imprisonment may be inflicted for any term not exceeding two years ; it may be accompanied with a direction that the prisoner shall be kept in solitary confinement for any period of such term not exceeding fourteen days at any one time, and not exceeding eighty-four days in any one year, with intervals between the periods of solitary confinement of not less duration than the periods of solitary confinement, and when the imprisonment awarded exceeds eighty-four days, the solitary confinement shall not exceed seven days in any twenty-eight days of the whole imprisonment awarded, with intervals between the periods of solitary confinement of not less duration than such periods, and the punishment of imprisonment may also be accompanied with a direction that the prisoner shall be kept to hard labour for all or any part of the term of imprisonment, or any such direction may apply either to solitary confinement or hard labour only, and corporal punishment may be awarded in addition to any sentence of imprisonment, whether such imprisonment is or is not to be accompanied with solitary confinement and hard labour, or either of them.

The 50th sect. provides for the constitution of courts martial.

The 51st and following sections regulate their proceedings.¹

The 60th section deals with the sentence of penal servitude.²

¹ Limitation of time for proceedings: 24 & 25 Vict. c. 115, s. 47, and see ss. 48, 49.

² See also sects. 61—63.

INDEX.

A.

- ABATEMENT, plea in, 126; not amendable, 67. Amendment of, 67.
- Abduction, 830, 844; of a woman on account of her fortune, 842; indictment, 844; the woman may be a witness, 843. Of a woman under twenty-one years of age, 844; of a girl under sixteen years of age, statute, 845. Of children under ten years, 838.
- Abettors, 79, 603.
- Abominable crime, sending letters threatening to accuse of, 443.
- Abortion, attempts to procure, 762, 867; administering poison to procure miscarriage, 762, 867; using instruments to procure miscarriage, 867; procuring poison for the purpose of its being used to cause miscarriage, 867.
- Absence of witnesses from court, 231.
- Accessories, 76; how, when more than one principal, 84; evidence, 251.
- Accessories in rape, 837.
- Accessories, punishment of, 875.
- Accessory and principal in forgery, 701.
- Accessory before the fact, 787, 82; punishment of, 602, 875.
- Accessory after the fact, 77, 83; punishment of, 602, 875.
- Accomplices in treason, 327.
- Accomplices, evidence of, 181, 182.
- Accountant-general, forging the name of the, 695; certificates, &c. of, 695.
- Accusing or threatening to accuse a man of an infamous crime with intent to extort money from him, 443.
- Acknowledgment of false recognizance, 933.
- Acquittal, 276.
- Acquittal of one defendant, to enable him to give evidence for a co-defendant, 181.
- Acquittal on the ground of insanity, 118, 250.
- Action on account of death caused by wrongful act or default, 883.
- Action for imputing subornation of perjury, 972.
- Acts of parliament, printing same purporting to be printed by Queen's printers, and uttering the same, 699.
- Addressing jury, 169, 246.
- Adhering to the Queen's enemies, what, 315.
- Adjournment of trial, 151, 258.
- Administering poison, &c., to procure miscarriage, 762, 867.
- Administering poison, with intent to murder, 788; so as to endanger life, 805; with intent to injure or annoy, 806.

Index.

- Administering unlawful oaths, 933.
Administration of justice, libels on, 1091 ; frauds on, 934.
Admiralty, trial of indictable offences under Larceny Act, committed within jurisdiction, 398. Slave dealing, 1192.
Admiralty, court of, forgery of signatures of judge or officers of, or seals, 700.
Adulterated food, &c., selling, 609.
Adulterer, killing of, by husband, 765.
Adulterer, larceny by, 388.
Advertising for stolen property, taking rewards for, 406.
Affidavit to ground an application for an information, 141.
Affidavit, how proved, and in what cases evidence, 220.
Affidavit, perjury by, 980.
Affidavits in aggravation, 285 ; in mitigation, 286.
Affirmation of jurors, 86.
Affirmation, when admissible in criminal cases, 179 ; form of, 179. If false, it is punishable as perjury, 179, 995.
Affray, what, 1100 ; indictment for, 1102 ; punishment, 1102.
"Against the form of the statute," use of in indictments, 94.
Agent applying to his own use money or securities intrusted to him for a specific purpose, statute, 509 ; indictment, 510. Converting to his own use any chattel, security, or power of attorney intrusted to him for safe custody, or for any special purpose, 509. Selling, negotiating, &c., property intrusted to him for safe custody, 509.
Agent or factor, pledging goods of his principal intrusted to him for sale, 511 ; indictment, 513.
Agistment of cattle, 392.
Aggravated assaults, 828.
Aggravated robberies, 439.
Aggravation, affidavits in, 285.
"Against the peace," use of in indictments, 94.
Agricultural machinery, destroying, &c., 575.
Aiders and abettors, who are, 79.
Aiding foreign powers, 356 ; prisoners of war to escape, 359.
Aiding prisoners to escape, 958.
Alarming the Queen, 346.
Alibi, defence of, 251.
Aliens, right to a jury de medietate, 160.
Aliens Registration Act, 1314.
Allegations in indictment, what sufficient, 603.
Allegiance, who bound to, 308.
Alpaca, stealing, 479.
Alteration of judgment, 289.
Ambassadors, libels on, 1091.
Amending coroner's inquisition, 890.
Amendment of an indictment, or information, 65 ; of record, 284 ; coroner's inquest, 890.
Amendments, in the discretion of the judge, whether they may be made, 65 ; not a plea in abatement, 67.
Anatomy Act, 1315.
Anglers, when punishable, 416 ; their tackle, 416.
Animals, in what cases larceny may be committed of them, 367.
Animals, killing or maiming, &c., 590.
Animals, feræ naturæ, 414.
Annoyances, what are, 1240.

Index.

- Answer, to criminal information, 143.
Answering witnesses called for defence, 252.
Appearance, how enforced, 1.
Appearance, how compelled, 503.
Apples, stealing, 389.
Application of forfeitures, 604.
Appointment, how proved, 219.
Apothecaries' certificates, when evidence, 219.
Apprehension of offenders, rewards for, 265; law if the person be killed, 265.
Apprehension of offenders without warrant, 603.
Apprehension of loiterers on highways, &c., 602, 875.
Apprentices, neglecting to provide with necessary food, &c., 806.
Aqueducts, pulling down or otherwise destroying, 586.
Arbitrators, evidence of, 187.
Arbitrators, perjury before, 977.
Army prize money, forgery as to, 710.
Arraignment, 117.
Array, challenge of, 152.
Arrest of judgment, 267.
Arrest, under a warrant, 602; without warrant, 603.
Arrest, refusing to aid constable, 950.
Arrest, upon warrant, 2; on suspicion, 3; on a Sunday, 5; where, 6; breaking doors to effect, 6; to be without unnecessary force, 16; in foreign countries, 8; without warrant, 13, 16; by private persons, 16; under Poaching Act, 16; colonies, 16; on the high seas, 16.
Arrest, under a warrant, 4; time of, 5; place, 5; how, 6; in foreign countries, 8; without a warrant, 8, 13; by private persons, 9, 12; for assault, 11; of poachers, 14; in the colonies, 16; high seas, 16.
Arrest of judgment, 267; pardon may be pleaded, 268.
Arresting, obstructing, &c. clergymen in discharge of their duties, 1165.
Arson, what is, 555, 564; at common law, 566. Setting fire to a church or chapel, 556; indictment, 558. Setting fire to a house, some person being therein, 556. Setting fire to a house, stable, coach-house, outhouse, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malt-house, hop-oast, barn, or granary, or to any building or erection used in carrying on any trade or manufacture, or any branch thereof, 556. Setting fire to station, engine-house, &c., dock or harbour, 556. Setting fire to county, poor law, or college buildings, 556; nature of the building, 559. Setting fire to a coal mine, statute, 582. Setting fire to a ship, with intent to destroy it, 594. Setting fire to a ship, 594. Setting fire to stacks of corn, grain, pulse, tares, straw, haulm, stubble, furze, heath, fern, hay, turf, peat, coals, charcoal, or wood, or any steer of wood, statutes, 578. Setting fire to crops of corn, grain, or pulse, or any part of a wood, coppice, or plantation of trees, or heath, gorse, furze, or fern, 577. Setting fire to ships of war, dockyard, &c., 597.
Art, works of, &c., destroying or damaging, 589.
Articles of war, 1324; when evidence, 218.
Asportation, in larceny, 362; in robbery, 432.
Assault, with intent to rob, 436; aggravated assaults, 828.
Assault, common, and battery, 817, 821; defence to, 821; certificate of dismissal of complaint, 829; occasioning bodily harm, 830.

Index.

Assault, with intent to rob, 431, 436; being armed, 439.
Assault, arrest for, 11.
Assaults, on clergymen, 811; magistrates, 812; peace officers, 812; to obstruct sale of grain, 816; on seamen, &c., 816.
Assaults upon the Queen, 346.
Assemblies, when unlawful, 349.
Asses, within the meaning of the statute against killing cattle, 591.
Assignment of counsel, 172.
Assignment of perjury, 1018.
Assignment, fraudulent, 612.
Assisting the Queen's enemies, 355.
Assize, commission of, when to be opened, 41.
Attachment against a witness for disobedience to a subpoena, 257.
Attainder, 299.
Attempt to commit felony or misdemeanor may be found on indictment for commission thereof, 1194.
Attempting to set fire to buildings, 557.
Attempts to commit crimes, 1194.
Attempts to murder, 787.
Attendance of witnesses, how compelled, 254.
Attorney, privileged from giving evidence against his client, in what cases, 233, 234.
Attorney applying to his own use money or securities intrusted to him for a specific purpose, 509; indictment for, 510. Converting to his own use any chattel, security, or power of attorney intrusted to him for safe custody, or for any special purpose, 509. Selling, negotiating, &c. property intrusted to him for safe custody, 509.
Attorney, not to act unless admitted and enrolled, 942.
Attorney, power of, frauds by persons intrusted with, 511.
Autrefois acquit, plea of, 128, 276.
Autrefois convict, plea as to, 132.
Averments, 96.

B.

Backing warrant, 5.
Bail by the judges, 27.
Bail, when demandable, 20; upon postponement of trial, 21; excessive bail, 21; estreating, 23; on remand, 24.
Bail on indictment, 20; fresh bail, 21; sureties, 21; after conviction of misdemeanor, 287.
Bailee, larceny by, 381, 402.
Bank, entry in the books of, when evidence, 268.
Bank of England or Ireland, embezzlement by officers and servants of, 504.
Bank of the sea, or of a river, canal, or marsh, cutting or breaking down, whereby lands are overflowed or damaged, 585. Cutting off, drawing up, or removing piles, chalk, or materials, &c., from, 585.
Bank note paper, searching for, 646.
Bank note, plates for, searching for, 646.
Bank notes, forgery of. Forging and uttering a bank note, 645; indictment, 650; having a forged bank note in possession, 654. Foreign bills or notes, 653.
Bank notes, forgery of, 645.

Index.

- Banker, frauds by, 509 ; applying to his own use money or securities intrusted to him for a specific purpose, 509 ; indictment, 510 ; converting to his own use any chattel, security, or power of attorney, intrusted to him for safe custody, or for any special purpose, 509 ; indictment, 510. Selling, negotiating, &c., any property intrusted to him for safe custody, statute, 509.
- Bankrupt, frauds by, 624 ; perjury by, 978.
- Bankrupt laws, offences against, 623 ; for not surrendering, 623 ; not discovering property, 623 ; trial, 631.
- Bankruptcy, perjury before commissioners of, 978.
- Bankruptcy court, forging signatures of officers or seals of court, 699.
- Bankrupts taking false oath, 990.
- Bankrupts destroying, mutilating, falsifying, &c., their books, &c., 624.
- Baptism, forging entry of, 696.
- Barge, stealing from, in port, or in a river or canal, statute, 480 ; indictment, 480.
- Barn, setting fire to, 556 ; riotously demolishing, pulling down, or destroying, or beginning to do so, 570 ; indictment, 573.
- Baron and feme, 72 ; larceny by, 388.
- Barratry, 924.
- Barrister, privileged from giving evidence against his client, in what cases, 233, 234.
- Bastardy, disobedience of order in, 941 ; perjury in cases of, 981.
- Bathing in public, 1187.
- Battery, 817.
- Bawdy-house, keeping, 1182 ; punishment, 283.
- Beast (not the subject of larceny at common law), stealing, 415 ; having possession of, or of the skin thereof, 415.
- Bench warrant, 3.
- Benefit of clergy abolished, 97.
- Bestiality, 872 ; attempt to commit, 872.
- Bigamy, 848 ; evidence on the part of the prosecution, 861 ; evidence for the defendant, 859.
- Bill of exceptions, in criminal cases, 258.
- Bill of exchange, stealing, 389, 419 ; forging and uttering a bill of exchange, 659. Fraudulently inducing persons to accept, &c., 517.
- Bill for money or the payment of money, stealing, 419.
- Bird (not the subject of larceny at common law), stealing, punishment, 415. Having possession of, or of the plumage thereof, punishment, 415. Injuries to, 590.
- Birth, forgeries connected with, 696 ; falsity of registers, 1169 ; must be registered, 1305.
- Birth, concealment of, 868.
- Births, marriages, and deaths, forging registers of, 696 ; offences in relation thereto, 1169, 1305.
- Blank warrant, 2.
- Blasphemy, 1171.
- Boat, stealing from, in port, or in a river or canal, statutes, 480 ; indictment, 480.
- Bond . forging and uttering a bond, 654 ; stealing a bond, 419 ; indictment, 421.
- Bonds, stealing, 389.
- Books, fraudulently destroying or mutilating, by officers of public companies or bodies corporate, 589.
- Borough, hindering election of mayor of, 1316.

Index.

- Borough, refusing freedom in, 1212.
Boundaries of counties, offences committed on, where tried, 56.
Boundaries as connected with venue, 56.
Breach of prison, 956; Millbank Penitentiary, 961.
Breaking, what, in burglary, 450; actual, 450; constructive, 450.
Breaking and entering a church or chapel, and stealing therein, 450; indictment, 451. Breaking out of a church or chapel, 450; house, &c., 450.
Breaking and entering a building within the curtilage, and stealing therein, 468; indictment, 469. Curtilage, what is, 468.
Breaking doors to arrest without a warrant, 12.
Bribery, 1201.
Bribery at parliamentary elections, 1201; in other cases, 1202.
Bridge. Indictment for not repairing a bridge, 1273.
Bridge, pulling down or destroying, 586; plea to indictment, 132. Injury with intent to render dangerous or impassable, 586.
British ambassador, forging seal, &c. of, 716.
British colonies, judgments of the courts in, how proved, 220.
Broker, applying to his own use money or securities intrusted to him for a specific purpose, 509; indictment, 510. Converting to his own use any chattel, security, or power of attorney, intrusted to him for safe custody, or for a special purpose, 509. Selling, negotiating, &c., property intrusted to him for safe custody, 509.
Brokerage, when illegal, 1314.
Brothels, keeping, 1182.
Bubble companies, restraint of, 1207.
Buildings, injuries to, by tenants, 574.
Bull, stealing, 407.
Buoy-rope, cutting away, casting adrift, removing, altering, defacing, sinking, &c., or injuring or concealing, 595.
Burglary, 450. Indictment, 451, 464. Indictment for burglary by breaking out of a house, 453. Entry, 456; plea, 457; indictment, 464; trial, 467.
Burglary in a church, 450.
Burglary, place where it may be committed, 457.
Burial ground, stealing fixtures in, 425.
Burials, offences in relation to, 1306.
Burials, forging registers of, 696; destroying or injuring, 697.
Burning ships, 593; with intent to prejudice the underwriters, 593; attempting to set fire, 594; by gunpowder, 594; damaging otherwise, 594.
Burning, by negligence of servants, 1307.
Buying and selling coin at a lower value, 733.
Byelaws, forging, 699.

C.

- Calf, stealing, 407.
Calling back witnesses to be re-examined, 257.
Canal, lock, sluice, floodgate, or other work on, throwing down, levelling, or destroying, 585; opening floodgates, or doing other injury to canals, with intent and so as to obstruct the navigation, 585; obstructing navigation, 1296.
Canal bank or wall, cutting and breaking down, whereby lands are overflowed or damaged, or are in danger of being so, 585. Cutting off, drawing up, or removing piles, chalk, or materials, &c., fixed in the ground, or used to secure any canal, bank, or wall, 585.

Index.

- Canal, vessel, barge, or boat on, stealing from, 480.
Cannel coal, injuries to mines of, 582.
Canons, clergy making, without consent of the crown, 1168.
Capital offences, reference to under former law as to forgery, 702.
Caption of depositions, 211.
Cards, frauds by playing, 530, 618, 1187; forgery of wrappers of, 714.
Carelessness, when it will amount to murder, 759.
Carnal knowledge defined, 830.
Carnally knowing a girl under ten years, 838. Carnally knowing a girl between the ages of ten and twelve, 841.
Carriage, furiously driving, 811.
Carrier, larceny by, 381.
Case reserved, 271.
Cats, stealing, 389.
Cattle—horse, mare, gelding, colt, or filly, bull, cow, ox, heifer, or calf, ram, ewe, sheep, or lamb, stealing, 407; indictment, 408. Killing with intent to steal the carcase or skin, or any part of the cattle so killed, 590. Killing, maiming, or wounding any cattle, 590.
Caution to prisoners, how given, 18.
Cellar, whether included under word "house" in arson, 560.
Central Criminal Court, jurisdiction of, 63.
Central Criminal Court, trial at, of offences committed beyond its jurisdiction, 113; offences within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty, triable at the, 783.
Certificate for special jury does not apply to criminal cases, 66.
Certificate of dismissal of complaint for an assault, 829.
Certificates as to orphan girls, making false, 618.
Certificates in cases of assault, 829.
Certificates of baptism, of burial, or of marriage, forgery of, 696.
Certifying false documents, 622.
Certiorari, 99; to what courts, 99; for what causes, 100; when refused, 102.
Certiorari, must be accurate, 103; how carried out, 103; recognizance, 103, 113; how, when one defendant only applies for writ, 104; bodies corporate, 105; in felony absolute in first instance, 106; nisi in misdemeanors, 106; limitation, as to time, 106; quashing writ, 107; costs, 108; recovery of them, 111; supersedeas, 112; time for applying for writ, 112; Central Criminal Court, 112; carrying down the record, 115; traverse, 115.
Certiorari, when it will not lie, 876.
Certiorari, in indictment for perjury, 1001.
Challenge of jurors, 152; when, 152; by whom, 156; trial of it, 157.
Challenge of grand juror, 42.
Challenge to fight, 1102; proceedings, 1103.
Challenges in trials for treason, 334.
Champerty, 918.
Chance medley, 774.
Chancery, answers, &c. in, when evidence, 218.
Chancery, forging signatures of officers of court of, or seals, 700.
Chancery, perjury before court of, 976, 982, 985, 1000, 1021, 1032.
Changing venue, 64.
Chapel, breaking, entering, and stealing, &c. in, 450, 470; setting fire to, 556; destroying, 570.

Index.

- Character, evidence as to, 229. Evidence as to the character of a witness, 251 ; of prisoner, 236.
- Character, witness called to, 170. Character, giving false to servants, 619.
- Chattels, which are the subject of larceny, 388.
- Cheating, 375, 607 ; obtaining goods by false pretences, 516 ; indictment, 530 ; punishment, 283 ; what false pretences are within the statute, 518 ; at cards or dice, 1187.
- Cheats, 607 ; at common law, 608.
- Chelsea Hospital, obtaining pensions by means of false certificates, 620.
- Cheque upon a banker, forging a, statute, 670 ; altering, &c., crossings on, 659.
- Child, capability of, to commit murder, 760.
- Children, aggravated assaults on, 828.
- Children, concealing the birth of, 868.
- Children, cruelty to, 1195.
- Children, exposing, whereby life is endangered, 807 ; to inclemency of weather, when an assault, 818.
- Children, evidence of, 177.
- Children, negligence towards, causing death, 766.
- Child-stealing : stealing, decoying, or enticing away a child, 847 ; indictment, 847 ; punishment, 847.
- Chimney-sweepers, employing children as, a misdemeanor, 818.
- China passenger ships, searching, 1212.
- Chinese, how sworn as a witness, 179.
- Choke, attempting to, with intent to commit any indictable offence, 805.
- Cholera, 1301.
- Chloroform, using, for the purpose of committing any indictable offence, 805.
- Christian names, how stated in indictments, 90.
- Church or chapel, breaking and entering, and stealing in, 450 ; indictment, 464 ; breaking and entering with intent to commit felony, 470. Setting fire to, 556. Riotously demolishing, pulling down, or destroying, or beginning to do so, 570 ; indictment, 573.
- Church rate, jurisdiction of justices as to, 943.
- Churchwardens, when they may be indicted, 947.
- Cinque ports, commission, how directed, 54.
- Clergy, benefit of, abolished, 97 ; restrained from making canons, 1168.
- Clergymen, obstructing, &c., in discharge of their duties, 811 ; indictment, 812.
- Clergymen, taking false oath on admission to a living, 975.
- Clerks, embezzlement by, 485 ; larceny by, 482 ; of assize, guilty of extortion, 1077.
- Clipping coin, 723.
- Clubs, when unlawful, 350.
- Coach-house, setting fire to, 556. Riotously demolishing, pulling down, or destroying, or beginning to do so, 570 ; indictment for, 573.
- Coal, stealing, 430 ; injuries to mines of, 582.
- Cock-fighting, 1190.
- Codicil, stealing, 422.
- Co-heiress abduction of, 841.
- Coin of the realm, offences relating to the, 719 ; current coin, counterfeit coin, definition of, 719. Counterfeiting gold and silver coin, 720 ; indictment, 721. Colouring coin, statute, 720. Indictment for colouring metal, 721 ; filing and altering coin, 723 ; punishment, 723. Impairing gold and silver coin,

Index.

- statute, 723 ; indictment, 723 ; punishment, 723. Defacing coin, statute, 723. Copper coin, 723. Buying or selling coin at a lower rate than by its denomination it imports, 732 ; indictment, 734. Importing counterfeit coin, 733 ; exporting counterfeit coin, 733 ; indictment, 734. Uttering counterfeit coin, 725, 731 ; indictment, 728 ; uttering accompanied by possession of other counterfeit coin, or followed by a second uttering, 725 ; uttering after former conviction, 725. Having in possession three or more pieces of counterfeit coin, statute, 726. Coining tools, for making a puncheon, &c., for coining, 734. Conveying coining tools and coin out of the mint, 735. Cutting, when false, 739.
- Coin : making or counterfeiting foreign coin, 724 ; uttering false foreign or English, 731 ; being in possession of filings or clippings of, 732 ; counterfeiting, &c. copper coin, 723 ; procedure in coinage offences, 740.
- Collectors of taxes, assaults on, 815.
- College buildings, setting fire to, 556.
- College of Physicians, libel against, 1182.
- Colonies, arrest in, 16.
- Colonies, British judgments in the courts of, how proved, 220 ; sending false coin into, 733.
- Colonies, importing false coin into, 733 ; trial in of murders and felonies, 783.
- Colt, stealing, 407.
- Combinations, assaults in pursuance of, to raise wages, 817.
- Combinations, when unlawful, 350.
- Commissions of assize, when to be opened, 41.
- Commissioners exceeding their powers, information against, 948.
- Commissioners of bankruptcy, perjury before, 978.
- Committal, for nonpayment of penalties, &c., 604.
- Commitment of accused, 24 ; to what gaol, 25 ; expenses of, 26 ; when not to be void by reason of defects therein, 27 ; of dangerous lunatics, 27.
- Commitment, 24 ; for contempt, 187.
- Commitment for contempt of court, 188.
- Common assault and battery, 817.
- Companies, public, fraudulent appropriation of property by directors or officers of, &c., 514 ; keeping fraudulent accounts, 515 ; destroying or mutilating books, 514.
- Comparison of handwriting, in what cases evidence, § 239 ; when not, 316.
- Compassing the Queen's death, 309, 316.
- Compensation to persons apprehending offenders, 265 ; how if the person apprehended be killed, 265.
- Competency of witness, time for objecting to, 187.
- Compounding action, 151 ; felony, 915. Taking a reward for the recovery of stolen property, indictment, 405.
- Concealing the birth of a child by secret burying, &c., 868.
- Concealing wills, codicils, or other testamentary instruments, 422.
- Confession, kinds of, 188 ; when made in open court, 124 ; upon an examination before magistrates, 197 ; must be taken down in writing, 199 ; or to any other person, 197. Effect of, 202. Papist to Protestant clergyman, 234.
- Congé d' elire*, 1168.
- Confederacies, when unlawful, 350.
- Confirmation of evidence, 182.

Index.

- Congregations assembled for public worship, disturbing, 1165.
Conies, stealing, 389 ; unlawfully killing, &c., 413.
Consent to marriage of minors, 857.
Conspiracies neither mala in se nor mala prohibita, 1200.
Conspiracy, what, 1047. Public frauds, 1047 ; private frauds, 1053.
 Conspiracy to charge a man with a crime, 808 ; punishment, 283.
 Indictment, 1057. Evidence, 1064 ; trial, 1069.
Conspiracy, assault in pursuance of, to raise the rate of wages, 817.
Constable, when indictable for misconduct in office, 947. Larceny and embezzlement by, 502.
Constables refusing office, 1307.
Constructive treason, 310, 344.
Consul, forging seal, &c. of, 716.
Contempt of court, 943.
Contempt of court, commitment for, 688.
Contradicting witness, 170.
Conveyances, making fraudulent, 622.
Conviction, 280 ; for a first offence, 604.
Conviction, effect of discharge from, 604.
Convictions, when evidence, 218.
Copper coin, falsely making or counterfeiting, 723.
Copy of indictment, 277.
Corn, stealing, 389.
Coroner, examinations before, return of to court, 167 ; evidence by, 200.
Coroner's inquisition, 877 ; jurisdiction, 878 ; duties in cases of violent or doubtful death, 880 ; deodands abolished, 883 ; the finding, 884 ; the inquisition, 884 ; form of, 887 ; medical witnesses, 885 ; amending inquisition, 890 ; quashing it, 891 ; appointment of deputy,
 880 ; removal of coroner from his office, 880.
Corporal punishment, 289.
Corporation books, entries in, when evidence, 218.
Corporations, forging documents of, 699.
Corroboration of evidence, 183.
Corruption of blood, 337.
Corruption, by justices, 944.
Costs upon an information, 142, 146 ; of a prosecution, 275 ; of prosecutions for misdemeanors under Larceny Act, 400 ; for misdemeanors under Malicious Injuries Act, 606.
Costs of special jury, 163.
Costs, in prosecutions for misdemeanors, 702.
Costs before trial, 52 ; on certiorari, 108, 109 ; of prisoners removed to Newgate, 115.
Cotton goods in the loom, &c. or in any stage, &c. of manufacture, cutting, breaking, or destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy or render useless, 479 ; indictment, 479 ; punishment, 479.
Council of the Marches, perjury before, 978.
Counsel, assignment of, 172.
Counsel, privileged from giving evidence against his client, 187 ; how, in collateral matters, 187.
Counsel, for prisoners, 166 ; right to begin, 275 ; right to reply, 168, 170 ; precedency of, 169 ; practice, 246 ; rules as to, 286.
Counterfeiting coin, 719.
Counting-house, breaking and entering and stealing therein, 470 ; indictment, 471.

Index.

- Counts, joinder of several offences in several, 96; addition of to indictments, 97, 173; when superfluous, 98, 122.
- County buildings, setting fire to, 556; riotously destroying, 570.
- County court, perjury before, 977.
- County court, issuing false process of, 932.
- County, goods provided for and at the expense of, how described in an indictment, 91.
- Court baron, perjury before, 976.
- Court of sewers, perjury before, 977.
- Court rolls, forging of, 693.
- Courts, before what, perjury can be committed, 974.
- Courts-martial, 1321.
- Courts-martial, perjury before, 990.
- Cow, stealing, 407.
- Criminal appeal court, 272.
- Criminal informations, generally, 134; for what causes, 134, 136; mode of proceeding, 138; cannot be moved for by a private person, 138; where filed, 140; when to be moved for, 140; affidavit and jurat, 141; filing, 142; answer, 143, 149; pleading, 144; punishment by infliction of costs, 146; venue, 148; other matters, 149; compounding, 151; entry of records, 151; issue, 151; discretion of judge as to trying indictment, 151.
- Crops of corn, grain, or pulse, setting fire to, 577; indictment, 580.
- Cross examination of witnesses, 168, 224, 231; on depositions, 168.
- Crown, challenge of jurors by, 155.
- Crown Office subpœna, 257.
- Crossed cheques, alteration of, 659.
- Cruelty to children and servants, 1195.
- Cultivated roots, destroying, &c., 579.
- Curtilage, what is, 468. Breaking and entering a building within, and stealing therein, 468; indictment, 469.
- Custom-house officers, shooting at, 1214.
- Customs, forgeries relating to, 707.
- Customs, officers of, embezzling or wasting goods, &c., 507.
- Customs, oaths imposed by Acts relating to, 991.
- Cutting false coin, 739.

D.

- Damaging, &c., works of art, 589.
- Dead bodies, stealing, 1195.
- Deaf and dumb person pleading, 117; may be a witness, 177.
- Death, judgment of, 281.
- Deaths, forging registers of, 696; offences in relation to, 1169, 1305.
- Declaration instead of oath or affirmation, 995.
- Deed, forgery of, statutes, 654.
- Deed or other writing, evidence of title to real estate, stealing, 422; indictment, 422; forgery of, 654.
- Deer, coursing, hunting, snaring, or carrying away, killing, wounding, or attempting to kill or wound, in inclosed part of any forest, &c., or in inclosed land where deer are usually kept, 411; indictment, 413; being in possession of, 411; setting snares for, 412.
- Defacing coin, 723; when false, 739.
- Defacing marks on public stores, 1219.
- Defective venue, 63.
- Defects, formal, may be amended, 71; certain defects shall not vitiate an indictment, 71.

Index.

- Defence, evidence for, 245.
Defence in forma pauperis, 124.
Defilement of a girl under twenty-one years of age, procuring the, 830.
Demanding money with menaces or by force, with intent to steal, 442 ; indictment, 443 ; upon forged instruments, 698.
Demanding money, &c., on forged instruments, 698.
Demurring to indictment, 116, 123.
Deodands, abolition of, 883.
Depositions, how proved, 17, 211 ; admission of in evidence, 208, 231 ; when not, 208 ; of a person who is dead, 210, 214 ; of a person unable to travel, 209 ; how taken, 17 ; right of prisoners to copies of, 17.
Depositions before coroners, 167 ; when evidence, 211, 213 ; how proved, 211.
Deputy coroner, appointment of, 880.
Detainer, forcible, 1105.
Dice, frauds with, 530, 618, 1187.
Die, possession of, when forged, 704 ; forging wrappers of, 705.
Directors of corporate bodies and public companies, frauds, &c., by, 514.
Discharge of jury, 164, 259.
Discharge of prisoners, 278.
Discharge from conviction, effect of, 604.
Discharge of recognizance, 24.
Discrediting witness, 226.
Discretion of judge as to trying indictment, 151.
Disfigure, wounding with intent to, 803.
Disobeying the orders of a judge, 934 ; of justices, 934, 937, 941.
Dissenting chapel, setting fire to, 556.
Dissenting chapels, marriages in, 854.
Distress, how, when illegal, 948.
Disturbances of public peace, suppression of, 1085.
Disturbing public worship, 1165.
Divine worship, place of, breaking, entering, and stealing, &c. in, 450, 470.
Divorce, pleaded in answer to a charge of bigamy, 860.
Dock, stealing from, 480 ; setting fire to buildings connected with, 556 ; other injuries, 585.
Doctors' Commons, perjury in, 975.
Document of title to lands, interpretation of, 361.
Document of title to goods, interpretation of, 361.
Dogs, stealing, 389, 417 ; taking money to restore stolen, 300 ; knowingly being in possession of stolen, 415, 418 ; or the skin thereof, 418 ; injuries to, 590 ; stealing a dog after a previous conviction, 417.
Domestic beasts, stealing, 390, 415.
Doubtful titles, buying or selling, 925.
Drain, damaging banks of, 585.
Drink, selling adulterated, 609.
Driving, furious, 811 ; indictment, 811 ; punishment, 811.
Drown, attempting to, with intent to murder, 789.
Drunkenness, 1178 ; no excuse for crimes, 247 ; for homicide, 747 ; will not exclude a confession, 195.
Ducks, stealing, 390.
Duel, killing in, murder, 748 ; manslaughter, 764.
Dutch Bay Hall Company, forgery as to, 717.
Duty of counsel, 166.
Dwelling house, breaking and entering, and committing felony in,

Index.

450, 470 ; indictment, 450, 471 ; breaking, &c., a building within the curtilage and stealing therein, 468 ; indictment, 469 ; stealing in, some person therein being put in fear, 474, 477 ; punishment, 474 ; stealing to the value of 5*l.* in, 474 ; indictment, 476.
Dwelling house, setting fire to, 556. Setting fire to, some person being therein, 556.
Dwelling house, injuries to, by tenants, 574.
Dying declarations, when received in evidence, 205.

E.

East India bonds, forging, 642.
Ecclesiastical leases, false recitals in, 620, 1169.
Election, where several offences are charged in, 173.
Election petitions, false evidence, regard to, 993.
Election writs, 1318.
Electric telegraph, injuries to, 587 ; attempts, 588.
Embezzlement by clerks or servants, or persons employed in that capacity, 485 ; indictment, 497.
Embezzlement by officers and servants of the Bank of England or Ireland, 504 ; by persons to whom money, or securities for money, &c. shall be issued for the public service, 502 ; by constables, 502.
Embezzlement by bankers, merchants, brokers, attornies, agents or factors, 509.
Embezzlement under Mutiny Acts, 506.
Embezzlement of first fruits, 506.
Embezzling the Queen's stores, 506.
Embracery, 926.
Enchantments, pretending to exercise, 618.
Engine-house, setting fire to, 556 ; being in possession of, for the purpose of committing offences, 601, 874.
England, Bank of, embezzlement by officers of, 504.
England, forging instruments purporting to be payable out of, 700.
Engrossing, 1205.
Entry, what, in burglary, 456.
Entry, forcible, into a freehold, indictment for, 1106.
Error, writ of, 290.
Escape, 956.
Escape from prison, aiding, 950.
Escape of prisoners of war, aiding, 359.
Estreat of recognizances, 23.
Evidence, 117 ; want of understanding, 117 ; of religious belief, 178 ; infamy and interest, 179 ; accomplices, 181 ; king's evidence, 181, 183 ; of jurymen, 187 ; objecting to witnesses, 187 ; committal for contempt, 188 ; mode of examining witnesses, 188 ; confessions, 188 ; when admissible, 190 ; of arbitrators, 187 ; examinations, 204 ; dying declarations, 205 ; depositions, 208 ; letters, 214 ; papers, 215 ; notice to produce documents, 216 ; public documents, 217 ; private documents, 220 ; number of witnesses necessary, 230 ; nature of, 233 ; hearsay, 233 ; privileged communications, 234 ; onus of proof, 236 ; not necessary in extenso, 236 ; character of prisoner, 236 ; of felony, not proof of another, 237 ; variances, 237 ; best evidence, 239 ; handwriting, 239 ; presumptive, 240 ; of medical men, and experts, 242 ; prior conviction, 242 ; where there are two indictments, 244 ; for the defence, 245 ; insanity, 249 ; infamy, 251 ; alibi, 251 ; character, 251 ; principal and accessory, 251 ; in answer, 252.

Index.

- Evidence, in case of treason, 323.
- Evidence before the grand jury, 42, 47.
- Ewe stealing, 407.
- Examination of witnesses in chief, 222 ; cross-examination, 224 ; re-examination, 229 ; right of persons to copies of, 167.
- Examination on the voir dire, 152.
- Examinations before justices, 204.
- Exchequer bills, bonds, or debentures, forging or uttering, 643.
- Excise. Affairs of embezzling or wasting goods, &c., 507 ; false accounts, 618, 619 ; false permits, 619 ; forging moulds, forms, &c., with words " Excise Office" on them, 706 ; forging handwriting of receiver-general of, 707 ; permits, 707 ; oaths imposed by Acts relating to, 991.
- Excusable homicide, 773.
- Execution of sentence, 302.
- Execution of a murderer, at what time to take place, 114.
- Execution of warrant to arrest, 5.
- Ex-officio* information, 134, 150.
- Expenses of witnesses, 256.
- Expenses of commitment, 26 ; before trial, 52.
- Experts, opinions of, in evidence, 242.
- Explosive substances ; manufacturing or having in possession explosive substances for the purpose of committing offences, 601.
- Explosive substances, sending with intent to burn, &c., 569 ; indictment, 569.
- Exporting false coin, 733.
- Exposure of children, 807.
- Extortion, 607 ; what is, 1073 ; by gaolers, 1078 ; by justices, 944. Trial, 1080. Judgment, 1080.
- Extreme unction, custom as to, 206.

F.

- Factor, frauds by, 509.
- Factor or agent pledging for his own use the goods of his principal intrusted to him for sale, 509 ; indictment, 510.
- False accusation, whereby a conviction for murder ensues, 759.
- False characters to servants, &c., giving, 619.
- False dice, 610.
- False document, certifying, 622.
- False news, propagating, 610.
- False permits, fraudulent delivery of, 619.
- False pleading, 618.
- False pretences, obtaining goods, &c. by, 516 ; indictment, 530 ; what pretences are within the statute, 518.
- False process of county court, 932.
- False lights to ships at sea, 594.
- False recognizances, acknowledgment of, 933.
- False return to mandamus, 946.
- False statements as to collection of public revenues, 618, 619.
- Farm buildings, setting fire to, 556.
- Fees, 305.
- Felonies, where tried, 162.
- Felonies against the Queen, 344.
- Felony, compounding, 915.

Index.

- Females, aggravated assaults on, 828.
Females, punishment of, 284.
Fences, live or dead, post, pale, or rail, or stile, or gate, stealing, cutting, breaking, or throwing down, 425, 427 ; unlawful possession of, 428.
Feræ naturæ, animals that are, 414.
Fern, growing, setting fire to, 577.
Ferry, obstructions to, 1293.
Fetters on prisoner when arraigned, 120.
Fight, challenging to, 1102.
Filing informations, 142.
Filly, stealing, 407.
Finding base coin, procedure in such case, 735.
Finding of an indictment, 97.
Fines, 285.
Fireworks, how, if death ensue from, 771.
First conviction, power of justices in such case, 604.
First fruits, embezzlement of, 506.
Fish, taking or destroying, in water situate in land adjoining or belonging to a dwelling house, 415 ; indictment, 416.
Fish, stealing, 389.
Fishery, obstructing, 1299.
Fishpond, or water which is private property, or in which any person has a private right of fishery, breaking or destroying the dam of, 585.
Fitting out vessels of war for foreign states, 357.
Fixtures—glass or woodwork belonging to any building, lead, iron, copper, brass or other metal, or any utensil or fixture, fixed to any building—stealing or ripping, cutting or breaking with intent to steal, 425 ; indictment, 426.
Fixtures, larceny of, by tenants or lodgers, 508.
Fold, setting fire to, 556.
Food, selling adulterated, 609.
Food, sale of unwholesome, 1302.
Forcible entry, 1105 ; nature of the force, 1109, 1110 ; other entries not forcible, 1111, 1112 ; who may be guilty of the offence, 1112 ; joint tenant, 1112 ; feme covert, 1113 ; infant, 1113 ; by an individual, 1114 ; nature of property and possession, 1114, 1115 ; proceedings, restitution, re-restitution, 1116 ; inquisition, 1125, 1128 ; judgment, 1117, 1119, 1130 ; indictment, 1119 ; pleas, 1124 ; certiorari, 1127 ; writ of error, 1130.
Foreign bills or notes, forging, 653.
Foreign coin, making or counterfeiting, 724.
Foreign coin, offences relating to, 724.
Foreign countries, arrest in, 8.
Foreign countries, laws of, when evidence, 218 ; how proved, 220.
Foreign courts, judgments of, when evidence, 218 ; how proved, 220.
Foreign enlistment, 356.
Foreign governments, libels against, 1139.
Foreign princes and ambassadors, libels on, 1091.
Foreigners of distinction, libels against, 1139.
Forestalling, 1205.
Forfeiture, 299.
Forfeitures, application of, 604.
Found property, 364.
Forged die, or counterfeit plate, possession of, 704.
Forged instruments, demanding money on, 698.

Index.

- Forged stamps, what is an uttering of, 705.
- Forgery at common law, 632; indictment, 635; punishment, 636; trial, 636.
- Forgery, as to records, 691; as to the revenue, 703, 708; as to public offices, 699; court rolls, 693; of memorials, &c. in registry office, 693; of name, &c. of accountant-general, 694; registrar of admiralty, 694.
- Forgery, punishment, 698.
- Forgery, relating to customs, 707.
- Forgery, as to stamps for gold or silver plate, 705; certificates for issue of Exchequer bills to carry on public works and fisheries, 709; public pensions and salaries, 709; life annuities, 709; navy pay and prize money, 709; army prize money, 710; certificate of West India relief commissioners, 711; abolition of slavery receipts, 712; officers at Chelsea concerned in paying prize money, 712; half-pay officers' widows' pensions, 712; soldiers' and sailors' pensions, 712; savings banks, 712.
- Forgery, principal and accessory in, 701.
- Forging and uttering bank notes, &c., 645; foreign notes, 653; search for paper and forged instruments, 644; forging a will, 656; forging a bill of exchange, 659; forging an undertaking, warrant, or order for the payment of money, 670.
- Forging and uttering Exchequer bills, &c., 643.
- Forging by bank clerks of warrants for more or less than is due, 640; indictment, 641.
- Forging deeds, bonds, &c., 654. Indictment for forging a bond, 655; forging a receipt, 670; forging a warrant, order, or request, for the delivery of goods, &c., 670.
- Forging false entries of stock, &c., 639; making a transfer of stock in the name of another, not the owner, 639.
- Forging the great seal, &c., 637; indictment, 639; seal of county court, 932.
- Forging registers of births, marriages, deaths, &c., 696.
- Forging East India bonds, 642.
- Forging handwriting of paymaster-general, 707; of receiver-general of excise, 707; permits, 707; land tax, 708.
- Forging instruments purporting to be payable out of England or Ireland, 700.
- Forging instruments relating to the excise, 706.
- Forging legal documents, 699; as to Acts purporting to be printed by the Queen's printers, 699.
- Forging Mediterranean passes, 708; certificates of quarantine, 708.
- Forging orders of justices, 694.
- Forging scrip receipts, 709.
- Forging signatures of officers or seals of bankruptcy court, 699.
- Forging wrappers of dice, 705; playing cards, 705.
- Forging, trial for, 701; offences formerly capital, 702; fine and sureties, 702; hard labour and solitary confinement, 703.
- Forging, national debt, 713; savings bank for seamen, 713; public works, woods, and forests, 713; wrappers of playing cards, 714; ship's registry, 714; Petty Bag Office, 764; post office, 714; oaths and notarial Acts abroad, 716; wills of petty officers and seamen, 716; seal, &c. of British ambassador or consul, 716; insurance companies, 717; Dutch Bay Hall Company, 717.

Index.

- Formâ pauperis*, defence in, 124.
Frauds against administration of justice, 934.
Frauds by agents, bankers, or factors, 509.
Frauds by bankrupts, 623.
Frauds by directors and other officers of corporate bodies and public companies, 514.
Frauds by public officers, 610.
Fraudulent assignment of pensions, 622 ; conveyances, 622.
Fraudulent process of county court, 932.
Freedom in boroughs, refusing to grant, 1212.
Freeholders' oath, 990.
Freemasons' lodges, exemption of from statutes relating to unlawful oaths, 1210.
Friendly societies, property of, justices orders as to, 937.
Fruit or vegetable production growing in a garden, orchard, nursery ground, hot-house, green-house, or conservatory or elsewhere, stealing, destroying, or damaging, with intent to steal, 428 ; second offence, 428 ; destroying or damaging with intent to destroy, 579.
Furious driving, 811 ; indictment, 811 ; punishment, 811.
Furze, growing, setting fire to, 577.

G.

- Gambling houses, 1187.
Game, offences relating to, 903.
Game, taking in the night-time, or entering land armed for that purpose, 903 ; second offence, 903 ; third offence, 903. Three or more entering land in the night to take game, armed, 905. What shall be deemed night, 905.
Gamekeeper, power of, to apprehend poachers, 904.
Gamekeepers, or the owner or occupier, or person having a right, or reputed right, of free warren, &c., or the lord of the manor, or any gamekeeper, &c., assaulting or offering violence towards, 904.
Games and wagers, cheating at, 618.
Gaming, 1187 ; winning money at cards, &c., by fraud, 530 ; punishment, 530.
Gaming-house, punishment for keeping, 283.
Gaol, non-repair of, 927.
Gas, stealing, 390.
Gate, stealing, cutting, breaking, or throwing down, or being in possession of, 425, 427.
Gazette, in what cases evidence, 218.
Gelding, stealing, 407.
General warrants, 3.
Gentoo, how sworn as a witness, 179.
Girl, carnally knowing, 838, 841.
Gleaners, larceny by, 383.
Gold plate, forging stamps for, 705.
Good behaviour, recognizance for, 605.
Good behaviour, surety for, not now in use, 901.
Goods found, larceny of, 364.
Goods in process of manufacture, stealing, 479.
Goods, jury on trial for treason or felony not to inquire as to, 242.
Gorse, setting fire to, 577.
Government, forgeries relating to, 703.

Index.

Government, libels on, 1089.
Grain, assaults to prevent sales of, 816.
Granary, setting fire to, 556.
Grand jurors, who may be, 42; proceedings before, 42, 47; their duties, 43; their finding, 45.
Grand jurors, when verdict in civil action equivalent to finding by, 46; prevention of vexatious indictments before, 46.
Grand jury, libel on, 930.
Grass growing, stealing, 389.
Great seal, counterfeiting, 637.
Great seal, forging, &c., 637.
Guardians and overseers, prosecution by, 876.
Gunpowder, causing bodily injury by, 807; attempting to injure buildings or persons therein by explosion of, or other explosive substance, 569; indictment, 569; attempting to blow up buildings, &c. with, 788; ships, 594.
Gunpowder, keeping in an improper place, 1239.
Gunpowder, making, to commit offences, 601, 874; searching for same, 874.

H.

Habeas corpus, 28; return to writ, 36; when amendable, 38; costs, 38.
Habeas corpus ad respondendum, 38; motion for must be made by counsel, 39; error, 39; waiver, 39; quarter sessions, 39.
Half-pay officers, forging certificates as to, 712.
Handwriting, how proved, 239, 679. Comparison of handwriting, 239, 679.
Hares, stealing, 389; unlawfully killing, &c., 413.
Hay, setting fire to, &c., 577.
Hearing of a complaint, what is, 829.
Hearsay evidence, 233.
Heath, growing, setting fire to, 577.
Heifer, stealing, 407.
Heiress, abduction of, 842.
Hens, stealing, 390.
High seas, arrest for offences committed on, 16.
High seas, what, within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, 1192.
High treason, 307.
Highway, obstructing, 124; plea to indictment for, 132; dedication, 1250. Indictment for not repairing a highway, 1251, 1261; repair ratione tenuræ, 1254; fences, 1259.
Highway, loiterers on, apprehension of, 602.
Highways, apprehension of persons loitering on, 875.
Homicide, 743; excusable, 773; justifiable, 775.
Hop-binds, cutting or destroying, 578.
Hop-oast, setting fire to, 556. Riotously demolishing, &c., or beginning so to do, 570; indictment, 573.
Horse-racing, stakes on, 1189.
Horse-stealing, 368, 390, 407.
Hostile witnesses, rule as to, 170.
House, setting fire to, 556.
House of Commons, perjury before, 976; libels on, 1089.
Housebreaking, being found by night armed, with intent to break into any dwelling house or other building, statute, 473; indictment, 473. Second offence, 470. Breaking out of a dwelling house in the night, 450; indictment, 451; punishment, 450; entering dwelling

Index.

- house in the night, with intent to commit felony, 450. Definition of night, 452.
- Houses, injuries to, by tenant, 574.
- Hovel, setting fire to, 556.
- Hue and cry, 15.
- Husband, coercion of, in what case it excuses wife, 72, 76. He cannot be a witness for his wife, 184; in what cases he may be a witness against her, 185.

I.

- Identity of voters at elections, 1318.
- Idiot, what, 13; how when called upon to plead, 117. Cannot be a witness, 177.
- Ignorance, what, an excuse for crime, 247; of a statute, 247.
- Illegal brokerage, 1313.
- Illegal dealings with false coin, 732.
- Illegal distress, 948.
- Illness of juryman during trial, 164.
- Illegal possession of coin, 725.
- Illegal warrant, arrest under, 4.
- Illegal witness, 948.
- Illegitimate children, consent to marriage of, when minors, 857.
- Immaterial averments, 236.
- Imparlance, 116.
- Impeaching judgment, 267.
- Implements for coining, making without lawful authority, 734.
- Importing false coins, 733.
- Impounding documents, 221.
- Impressment, how, when malicious, 948.
- Imprisonment, sentence of, 605.
- India, venue as to, 63.
- Indictment, 53; venue, 53, 64.
- Indictment before grand jury, prevention of when vexatious, 46.
- Indictment, amendment of, 65; defects in, 71. Baron and feme, 72; time, how to be stated in, 84; statement of offence in, 86; of property, 91; addition of count, 97; finding of, 97; how, when there are several felonies charged, 98; superfluous counts in, 98, 122; joinder of parties, 98, 533; traverse of, 116; how in default of pleading to, 116; quashing, 120; demurrer to, 123; reading over indictment, 124; prisoner entitled to copy of, on being acquitted, 277; what it shall be sufficient to allege in, 605.
- Indictment found, warrant in such case, 2.
- Indictment, where there may be two against the same person, for felony, 244.
- Indictments for murder or manslaughter, 778.
- Infamous crime: accusing or threatening to accuse of infamous crime, with the intent to extort money from him, 442; indictment, 443.
- Infamy of witnesses, 179.
- Infant, in what cases incapable of crime, 251; may be a witness, 177.
- Infants, murder of, 757.
- Infectious disease, exposure of person labouring under, 759.
- Inferior courts, proceeding in, how proved, 218.
- In formâ pauperis, defence, 124.
- Information upon penal statutes, 146; how, 146; by common informer, 146; limitation of time, 147; venue, 148.

Index.

Information previous to a summons need not be on oath nor in writing, 2; how previous to a warrant, 3.
Informations (criminal) generally, 134; for what offences, 134; mode of proceeding, 138; cannot be moved for by a private person, 138; where filed, 140; when to be moved for, 140; affidavit and jurat, 141; filing, 142; defendant's answer, 143, 149; pleading, 144. Punishment by infliction of costs, 146; venue, 148; other matters, 149; compounding, 151; entry of record, 151; issue, 151; discretion of judge as to trying indictment, 151.
Informer, action by, 146; evidence, 224.
Injuries to houses, buildings, &c., by tenants, 574.
Injuries not specially provided for, 600.
Injuring the Queen, 346.
Innkeeper refusing to admit guest, 1306.
Inn of court, setting fire to buildings belonging to, 556; riotously demolishing, 570.
Inquest of office, perjury before, 978.
Inquisition, 884.
Insane persons, commitment of, 27.
Insanity, acquittal on the ground of, 118, 250.
Instruments, possession of, for purposes of felony, 601, 874.
Instruments, using, to procure miscarriage, 867.
Instruments unstamped, when evidence, 221; when not, 220.
Insurance companies, forgeries as to, 717.
Interested witness, 179.
Interpretation of terms, 96.
Interpreter, counsel acting as, must be sworn, 172.
Invalid marriages, 858.
Ireland, records of courts in, when evidence, 218.
Ireland, embezzlement by officers of bank of, 504.
Ireland, forging instruments purporting to be payable out of, 700.
Issue joined, 151.

J.

Jesuits, penal statutes as to, 1170.
Jew, how sworn as a witness, 179.
Joinder of parties in indictments, 98.
Joinder of several offences in different counts in one indictment, 96.
Joint-stock companies, altering or falsifying books of, 623.
Joint tenants, larceny by, 388.
Judge's warrant, 2.
Judgment, 281; time and place of, 287; alteration of, 289; execution of, 302.
Judgment of death, recording, 303.
Judgment for treason, 336.
Judgment in trial for larceny, 399.
Judgment, when evidence, 218.
Judicial proceedings, perjury in, 984.
Juries in trials for treason, 334.
Jurisdiction for trial, of offences within jurisdiction of the admiralty, 398.
Jurisdiction, plea to, 125; in what cases, 126.
Jurors, assignment of perjury by, 971.
Jurors, how described in indictments, 69; affirmation of, 86.
Jury, coroner's, 881.

Index.

Jury de medietate linguæ, 160.
Jury of matrons, in what case, 284.
Jury pannel, prisoner not entitled to copy of, 161.
Jury, petty, 152; challenges, 152; trial of it, 157; their qualification, 159.
Jury process, 160.
Jury, special, 162.
Jury, view by, when permitted, 258.
Juryman, illness of, 164; evidence, 187.
Juryman, personating, 947.
Justice acting without qualification, 946.
Justices, assaults on, 812.
Justices, obstructing in holding court, 928.
Justices, perjury before, 982.
Justices, powers of, with regard to preservation of the peace, 1086.
Justifiable homicide, 775.

K.

Keeping the peace, &c., recognizance for, 605, 893.
Kidnapping grown persons, 847.
Killing cattle maliciously, 590.
Killing cattle, &c., with intent to steal, 407.
Killing the Queen's officers, 317.
King's evidence, 181; execution of, 227; depositions of, 246.
Kirk session book not evidence, 219.

L.

Lace in the loom, &c., or in other process of manufacture. cutting, breaking, or destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy or render useless, 479.
Lamb, stealing, 407.
Land tax, forging certificate for redemption or sale of, 708.
Lands, jury on trial for treason not to inquire as to, 242.
Larceny, 561; definition of, 362; must be against the will of the owner or possessor, 372; in what character, 384. Larceny by clerks or servants, 382, 384, 482, 485. Stealing or embezzling post letters, 1226. Stealing money, &c., out of letters, 1230. Stealing letters sent by the mail, or by a post-office packet, 1230. Stealing votes, newspapers, &c., 1232. Stealing from a building within the curtilage, breaking into the same, 468. Stealing in a shop, warehouse, or counting-house, by breaking into the same, 470. Stealing silk, woollen, or cotton goods in any stage of manufacture, in any building, field, &c., 479. Stealing from a ship or vessel in distress, wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, statute, 480. Stealing from a vessel, barge, or boat, in any port of entry or discharge, or upon any navigable river, canal, &c., 480.
Larceny by tenants or lodgers, 508.
Larceny by a bailee, 381.
Larceny, property found, 364; pledged, 371; by gleaners, 383; by sheriff's officers, 387; by the owner of the goods, 387; by joint tenant, 388. Baron and feme, 388; of chattels, real and personal, 389; indictment, 390; trial, 396; jurisdiction of admiralty, 398; judgment, 399. Costs in misdemeanors, 400. Restitution, 400; by bailees, 402; of cattle, &c., 407; indictment, 408; sheep, 409; trial, 410; of pigs, 408. Deer, 411. Animals feræ naturæ, 414.

Index.

- Dogs, 411. Hares and conies, 413. Fish, 415; oysters, 417. Dogs, 417. Bonds, bills, &c., 419. Deeds relating to real estate, 422; wills, &c., 422; records, &c., 423. Metal, glass, wood, &c., 425. Trees in pleasure grounds, 427. Fences, gates, &c., 427; unlawful possession of, 428. Fruit, vegetables, &c., 428; in mines, 430. "Last mentioned," use of, in indictments, 93.
- Laudanum, administering with intent to commit any indictable offence, 805.
- Lead, stealing from roofs, 389.
- Leases, ecclesiastical, false recitals in, 1169.
- Legal documents, forging of, 699.
- Legal officers, misconduct of, 931.
- Letters sent by the post, stealing, 1226.
- Letters, servants of the post office embezzling, 1230; destroying, 1233.
- Letters, opening or delaying, 1232.
- Letters, threatening, 442, 599, 802.
- Letters, when not evidence, 214; when they are, 215.
- Lewdness, open and notorious, 1184.
- Liability for death caused by wrongful act or default, 883.
- Liability to repair gaol, 927.
- Libel, criminal information for, 135; mode of proceeding, 139; evidence, 248; when treasonable, 339.
- Libel on officers of justice, 928.
- Libel, seditious, 1088; punishment, 1092.
- Libel, what, 1130; against an individual, 1131; public persons, 1132; foreigners of distinction, 1139; mode of publication, 1140; the offence, 1140; defence, 1144; proceedings, 1149; evidence, 1154; trial, 1159; verdict, 1161; cost, 1162; judgment, 1162.
- Libels, obscene, 1185.
- Licence, marriage by, 852; special licence, 853.
- Licence to Queen's counsel to appear on behalf of prisoner, 169.
- Life annuities, forgery as to, 709.
- Light coin, when to be cut or defaced, 739.
- Lights, showing false, to ships at sea, 594.
- Limitation of prosecutions, 147; under game laws, 904.
- Linen goods in any stage of manufacture, stealing, 479; indictment, 479; punishment, 479. Linen goods in the loom, &c., or other process of manufacture, cutting, breaking, or destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy or render useless, 479.
- Lodgers, larceny by, 508.
- Loiterers at night, apprehension of, 602.
- Loom used in weaving silk, woollen, linen, or cotton articles, or framework-knitted piece, stockings, hose, or lace, cutting, breaking, or destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy or render useless, 479.
- Lotteries, 1190.
- Lucri causa*, 382, 383.
- Lunacy, forging signature of registrar in, 699.
- Lunacy Acts, offences under, in regard to the insane, 1315.
- Lunatic, in what cases incompetent as a witness, 177.
- Lunatics, commitment of, 27.

M.

- Machine, being in possession of for the purpose of committing offences, 601, 874.
- Machinery—cutting, breaking, or destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy or render useless, any loom, frame, machine, &c., em-

Index.

- ployed in carding, spinning, &c., silk, woollen, linen, or cotton articles, or framework-knitted piece, stocking, hose, or lace, 574 ; indictment, 576. Cutting, &c., or damaging, &c. any machine or engine, employed in other manufactures, or a threshing machine, 575 ; indictment, 576. Riotously demolishing, pulling down, or destroying, or beginning to do so, 570 ; indictment, 573.
- Magistrate, information against, in what cases granted, 136 ; not obeying the order of, 935 ; assaulting, 812.
- Magistrates, powers of, with regard to the preservation of the peace, 1086.
- Magnetic telegraph, injuries to, 587.
- Mahometan, how sworn, 179.
- Mail, stealing letters sent by, 1226.
- Maiming cattle, 590.
- Maintenance, 920.
- Mala praxis*, 1302.
- Male children, aggravated assaults on, 828.
- Malice prepense : act done wilfully may be presumed to have been done maliciously, 602.
- Malicious impressment, 948.
- Malt-house, setting fire to, 556. Riotously demolishing, pulling down, or destroying, or beginning to do so, 570 ; indictment, 573.
- Mandamus*, false return to, 946.
- Manslaughter, what, 761 ; punishment, 772.
- Man-traps, setting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, 808.
- Manufacture, cutting, breaking, or destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy or render useless, any silk, woollen, or cotton goods, or framework-knitted piece, stocking, hose, or lace, being in the loom or other process of manufacture, 479, 574 ; indictment, 479, 576.
- Map, when not evidence, 221.
- Mare, stealing, 407.
- Marines, obtaining pay by means of false certificates, 620.
- Marriage Acts, false declarations under, 992.
- Marriage by licence, 852 ; special licence, 853 ; registrar's certificate, 853 ; in dissenting chapels, 854 ; of minors, 857 ; when illegitimate, 857.
- Marriage licence, taking false oath to obtain, 975.
- Marriage, indictable offences in relation to, 1179.
- Marriage, how proved, 849 ; how proved in cases of bigamy, 861.
- Marriage register, forging or making any false entry in, 696.
- Marriages : indictment for refusal of clergyman to perform ceremony, 1305.
- Marriages, when invalid, 858.
- Married woman cannot enter into recognizance, 255.
- Marsh, bank or wall of, breaking or cutting down, whereby lands are overflowed or damaged, 585.
- Master in chancery, forging signature or seal of, 700.
- Matrons, jury of, 284.
- Mayor of borough or corporate town, hindering election of, 1316.
- Medical evidence as to insanity of prisoner, 119.
- Medical men, opinions of, in evidence, 242.
- Medical witnesses at coroner's inquisition, 885.
- Mediterranean passes, forgery of, 708.
- Meeting-house, breaking, entering, and stealing in, 450.
- Menaces, demanding money, &c., by, with intent to steal, 442 ; indictment, 443.

Index.

- Merchant, applying to his own use money, or securities for money, intrusted to him for a specific purpose, 509; indictment, 510. Converting to his own use any chattel, money, or valuable security, or power of attorney to sell or transfer shares in public funds intrusted to him for safe keeping, or for a specific purpose, 509.
- Metal, stealing, when attached to buildings, 425.
- Metropolis police district, powers of police constables in, in certain cases, 621.
- Millbank Penitentiary, convicts breaking out, punishment, 961.
- Military exercises, unlawfully training to, 354.
- Milk, stealing, 390.
- Mill, setting fire to, 556. Riotously demolishing or pulling down, or destroying, or beginning to do so, 570; indictment, 570.
- Mine, stealing the ore of any metal, lapis calaminaris, manganese, mundick, wad, black cawke, black lead, coal, or cannel coal, or removing it with intent to steal it from mines, beds, or veins thereof, 430; indictment for, 430. Conveying water into a mine with intent to damage it, 582. Setting fire to mines of coal or cannel coal, 582. Pulling down, filling up, or obstructing airways, waterways, drains, pits, levels, or shafts, or engines, &c., belonging to mines, 583. Doing so, or beginning to do so, riotously, 570; indictment, 573.
- Ministers, disturbing, at public worship, 1165.
- Minor, cannot enter into a recognizance, 255.
- Minors, consent to marriage of, 857.
- Mint, illegal removal of coining instruments out of, 735.
- Mint offences, rescue for, 962.
- Misconduct of officers of justice, 931, 943.
- Misconduct on railroads, 1307.
- Misdemeanor, costs of prosecution for, under Larceny Act, 400; compounding, 915.
- Misdemeanors committed against legal officers, 949.
- Misdemeanors, costs of prosecutions for, 702.
- Misdemeanors, where tried, 162.
- Misprision of felony, 82, 916.
- Misprision of treason, 341; trial for, 342; judgment, 342.
- Mistrial, 161, 163.
- Mitigation, affidavits in, 286.
- Mohair, stealing, in process of manufacture, 479.
- Money found on prisoner, application of, 26.
- Monopolies, 1207.
- Moravian, evidence of, 178.
- Murder, attempts to, 787. Administering poison, wounding, &c., with intent to murder, 788. Indictment for wounding with intent to murder, 788; punishment, 797. Attempting to poison, shoot, drown, &c., with intent to murder, 789, 797. Attempting to murder by the explosion of gunpowder, &c., 788. Destroying ships with intent, &c., 788. Other attempts to murder, 789.
- Murder, sending letters threatening to, 802.
- Murder, statutes, 530; what, 743, et seq.; judgment, 760. Form of indictment for murder, 534; venue, 778; evidence, 780; evidence for the defendant, 536.
- Murderers, rescue of, going to execution, punishment, 963.
- Museums, &c., destroying or damaging works of art in, 589.
- Mute, standing, of malice, proceeding upon, 117.
- Mutiny Act, 1321.
- Mutiny Acts, embezzlement under, 506.

Index.

N.

- Name of the defendant, how stated, 70; idem sonans, 70; how, when unknown, 70.
Name of the prosecutor, how stated, 84, 87.
Name of person injured, how stated in indictment, 87.
National debts, forgeries as to, 713.
Nature of evidence, 233.
Nature of verdict, 260.
Naval stores, embezzlement of, 506, 1218.
Navigable river, lock, sluice, floodgate, or other work, throwing down, levelling, or destroying, 585; breaking or cutting down the bank or wall of, 585. Cutting up, drawing up, removing piles, chalk, &c., for securing the bank or wall of a navigable river, with intent to obstruct the navigation thereof, indictment, 585.
Navigable river, stealing from a ship, barge, or boat on, statutes, 480; indictment, 480.
Navigation of public river, obstructing, 1293.
Navy, government of, 1322.
Navy, pay and prize money, forgeries as to, 709.
Negligence, where death occasioned by, 766.
Newspapers, declaration as to, 1318.
Newspapers, officers of post office embezzling, &c., 507.
New trial, 268; time for moving for, 271.
Night, what, 362, 452, 471. What, in offences relating to game, 905.
Noisome smells, 1303.
Non compos mentis: proceedings upon the trial of persons non compotes, 118. Custody of, 118.
Non-repair of gaol, 927.
Note for money or payment of money, stealing, 419; indictment, 421; forging, 659.
Notes of a judge, when not evidence, 220.
Notice to produce documents, 216.
Nuisance, 1240; carrying on an offensive trade, 1238. Procedure, in order to abate, 1243; to public health, 1300. Nuisances to highways, 1246; obstructing a common highway, 1246. Indictment against a parish for not repairing a highway, 1261. Indictment for not repairing a bridge, 1273; what is a public bridge, 1274.
Number of witnesses necessary, 230.

O.

- Oath, before what authority taken in perjury, 973.
Oath of jury, allegation of indispensable, 1007.
Oaths, unlawful administering, 347, 933, 1084, 1200, 1205, 1209.
Objecting to competency of witness, 187.
Obscene libels, 1185.
Obscene prints, &c., punishment for selling, 283.
Obstructing burials, 1306.
Obstructing any engine or carriage using any railway, 809.
Obstructing justices in holding court, 928; officers generally, 949.
Obstructing return of a woman child who has been abducted, 846.
Obstructing navigation of public river, docks, &c., 1293.
Obtaining money, &c., by false pretences, 516.
Offences against the person, procedure, 875.

Index.

Offences, how punishable, 1; statement of in indictment, 86; how offenders are to be prosecuted, 605.
Offensive trades and occupations, 1237.
Office, setting fire to, 556. Riotously demolishing, pulling down, or destroying, or beginning to do so, 570; indictment, 573.
Offices, purchase and sale of, 1197.
Officers of justice and others, killing, 756, 771. Assaulting in the execution of their duties, 813; indictment, 816.
Officers of justice, misconduct of, 931, 943; libel on, 928.
Officers and others lawfully authorized, assaulting, striking, or wounding, on account of the exercise of their duty, in preserving wreck, statute, 812; indictment, 812.
Officers of justices, assignment of perjury by, 971.
Officers of public revenues furnishing false statements as to collectors, 618; of excise, 619.
Officers refusing office, 1307.
Onus of proof, 236.
Opinions of medical men, &c., in evidence, 242.
Order of judges, &c., disobedience of, 934.
Orders, forging, 670.
Orders of justices, forging, 694.
Ore, stealing, 430.
Original instruments, production of, in evidence, 239.
Outhouse, setting fire to, 556; demolishing, 570.
Outlawry, 48; reversing, 292.
Overseer of the poor, prosecutions by, 876.
Overseers refusing to account, 611; fraudulent conduct by, 611.
Overseers refusing office, 1307; breach of duty by, 1312.
Overseers, when they may be indicted, 947.
Owners of goods, larceny by, 387.
Ownership of goods, how laid in indictment, 392.
Ownership of property, how stated in indictments, 91.
Ox, stealing, 407.
Oyster fishery, using dredge, net, instrument, or engine, within the limits of, 417; indictment, 417. Dredging on the ground or soil of the oyster fishery of another, 415.

P.

Papal bulls, purchase of, 343.
Paper books, 298.
Papers, when evidence, 215.
Pardon, plea of, 126; in what cases, 127; where to be pleaded, 127, 149, 267. The effect of pardon in restoring competency as a witness, 224.
Parish officers, prosecutions by, 876.
Parish officers not to induce persons to contract marriage, 1181.
Parkhurst prison, convicts breaking out of or rescue from, 962.
Parliament, entries in the journals of, when evidence, 218; reversing judgment, act of, 292.
Parliament, printing Acts of, purporting to be printed by the Queen's printers, and uttering the same, 699.
Parliament, publication of proceedings of, when libellous, 1138.
Particulars of charge, right of prisoner to, 133.
Patents, making false entries in registers of, 622.
Pawnbroker's duplicate, larceny of, 390.
Paymaster-general, forging handwriting of, 707.

Index.

- Payment of wages in other than current coin, 1211.
Parol evidence of confession of prisoner, 200.
Peers and peeresses, how named in an indictment, 90 ; privilege of, 281.
Peers, trial by, in cases of treason, 335.
Penal servitude, instead of transportation, statutes relating to, 304.
Penal servitude, being at large during a sentence of, 951.
Penal statutes, information upon, 146.
Penalties, application of, 604.
Pensions and salaries, forgeries as to, 709, 712.
Pensions, obtaining by false certificates, 620 ; fraudulent assignments of, 622.
Pentonville prison, convicts breaking out of or rescued from, punishment, 962.
Peremptory challenge of petty jury, 153. None in misdemeanors, 154.
Perjury, 965 ; what is, 965. Prosecution by direction of judge, 1000 ; by bail, 971 ; subornation of perjury, 971. Action for imputing, 972 ; at common law, 973 ; wilful, 973 ; before what authority, 973 ; before what courts, 974 ; Doctors' Commons, 975 ; before House of Commons, 976 ; courts of chancery, 976 ; superior courts of law, 976 ; court baron, 976 ; county court, 977 ; court of sewers, 977 ; sheriff's court, 978 ; Council of the Marches, 978 ; inquest of office, 978 ; commissioners of bankruptcy, 978 ; before arbitrators, 979 ; by affidavit, 980 ; in bastardy, 981 ; legal officers, 981 ; justices, 982 ; in judicial proceedings, 984 ; need not be material to issue, 984 ; the matter sworn must be material to the issue, 1012 ; averments, 1014 ; innuendoes, 1019 ; assignments of perjury, 1018 ; evidence, 1024 ; perjury upon a trial at assizes, 1000 ; perjury upon a complaint before a magistrate, 1000 ; evidence, 994 ; false affirmation of a Quaker, Moravian, or Separatist, 994 ; jurors and officers of justice, 971.
Perjury, by statute, 987 ; by witnesses for prisoners, 990 ; freeholders, 990 ; courts-martial, 990 ; municipal corporations, 990 ; bankrupts, 990 ; excise and customs, 991 ; naval and military departments, 991 ; West Indies, 992 ; privy council, 992 ; slavery, 992 ; poor laws, 992 ; charities, 992 ; sale of bread, 992 ; tithe commutation, 992 ; Marriage Act, 992. Registration of births, 993 ; election petitions, 993 ; affirmations, 994 ; declarations, 995 ; two oaths, 1006.
Perjury, proceedings in, 998 ; information, 999 ; certiorari, 1001 ; action, 1002 ; pleadings, 1004 ; joinder of parties, 1005 ; venue, 1006 ; time and place, 1006 ; oath of jury, 1007 ; indictment for subornation of perjury, 1022 ; for perjury before committee of House of Commons, 1023 ; before a magistrate, 1023 ; before commissioners of assessed taxes, 1024 ; trial, 1039 ; verdict, 1039 ; judgment, 1040 ; new trial, 1040 ; costs, 1041 ; arrest of judgment, 1042 ; punishment, 1043 ; pardon, 1045.
Permits, delivering false, 619.
Permits, forgery of, 707.
Personation of voters, 1320 ; of corporate officers, 1320.
Persons in the public service, larceny or embezzlement by, 502.
Petit treason to be deemed murder, 743.
Petty Bag Office, forgery as to, 714.
Petty jury, swearing of, 152 ; challenges, 152 ; trial of, 157.
Petitioning, tumultuously, 352.
Pharmaceutical chemists, false certificates as to, 622.
Pigs, stealing, 408.
Pilots endangering ships, 1220.
Piracy at common law, 548 ; trial, 550 ; punishment, 552.

Index.

- Piracy by statute, 548; trial, 550; punishment, 552.
Place of judgment, 287.
Place of trial, 53; changing, 64; of prisoner in court on trial, 176.
Placing wood on rails with intent, &c., 587.
Plague, exposure of person labouring under, 759.
Plan, when not evidence, 221.
Plant, stealing, &c., 428; destroying, &c., 579.
Playing cards, forging, 705, 714.
Plea in abatement, 67.
Pleader, misconduct of, 946.
Pleading to indictment, 117; to criminal information, 144.
Pleading to indictment, 116; pleading over in felony, 123.
Pleadings, how proved, 220.
Pleas, 125; must not be repugnant, 125; withdrawal, 125; to the jurisdiction, 125; in abatement, 67, 126; pardon, 126; autrefois acquit, 128; autrefois convict, 132; as to highways and bridges, 132; puis darrein continuance, 133.
Pleasure grounds, stealing or destroying trees in, 427.
Pledging goods, 371.
Poachers, apprehension of, 904.
Poison, killing by, 540. Administering, with intent to murder, 788; Administering, with intent to endanger life, or inflict grievous bodily harm, 805. Administering, with intent to injure or annoy, 806.
Police constables in the metropolis, powers of in certain cases, 621.
Poll-books of an election, when evidence, 219.
Polygamy, 848.
Poor law board, &c., giving false evidence before, 992; refusing, &c., 1316.
Poor law union, buildings, setting fire to, 556; riotously demolishing, 570.
Postage stamps, forgery as to, 715.
Post office, forgery as to, 714.
Post office, officers of, embezzling, &c. printed papers, 507.
Post office, servants of, opening or delaying, or stealing or embezzling letters, 1226, 1230, 1232; indictment, 1229; trial, 1229; receivers, 1233; destroying letters, 1233.
Postponement of trial, 50, 117.
Power of attorney, fraud by broker, &c., intrusted with, 511.
Præmunire, 343.
Precedency of council, 169.
Pregnancy of female prisoner, under sentence of death, 284.
Presumptive evidence, 240.
Principal and accessory, 76, 84; evidence, 251; principals in the second degree, punishment of, 602; accessories before the fact, 77, 82; accessories after the fact, 77, 83.
Principal and accessory, 76; who are, 76; principals in the second degree, 79; how, when more than one, 84.
Principals and accessories, punishment of, 875.
Principals and accessories in forgery, 701.
Principals and accessories in rape, 837.
Printed papers, officers of post office embezzling, &c., 507.
Prior conviction, 242.
Prison breach, 956; Millbank Penitentiary, 961.
Prisoner, right of to copy depositions, 17; right of to have professional assistance, 19, 166; remand of, 24; commitment, 24; to what

Index.

- gaol, 25 ; application of money found on, 26 ; proceedings before trial, 50 ; costs and expenses, 52 ; name and description of, 70 ; refusing to disclose name, 70 ; arraignment of, 117 ; reading over indictment to, 124 ; confession, 124 ; right to particulars of charge, 133, 167 ; where to be placed in court when tried, 176 ; how brought up as a witness when under sentence, 183 ; character of, 236 ; evidence for defence, 245 ; may address the court, 247 ; entitled to copy of indictment on acquittal, 277 ; discharge of by proclamation, 278.
- Prisoners of war, aiding escape of, 359.
- Private cheats and frauds, 613.
- Private documents, production of in evidence, 220.
- Private frauds, conspiring to commit, 1053.
- Private persons, arrest by, 12.
- Privilege of peerage, 281.
- Privileged communication, 234.
- Privileged publications, 1136.
- Privy council, warrant of, 2 ; may commit for treason, 25.
- Privy seal, forging, &c., 637.
- Prize money, forgery as to, 709, 710, 712.
- Probate, court of, forging signatures of officers of, 2 ; seals, 700.
- Proceedings in indictments for perjury, 998.
- Procedure in coinage offences, 740.
- Procedure in forgery, 700.
- Procedure relating to offences against the person, 875.
- Process, forging, 691.
- Proclamation, the Queen's, when evidence, 218 ; how proved, 220.
- Proclamation, discharge of prisoners by, 278.
- Procuring abortion, 867.
- Production of documents in evidence, notice as to, 216.
- Proof of depositions given in evidence, 211.
- Property, how stated in indictments, 91 ; defined, 362.
- Property, what is the subject of larceny, 389.
- Prosecution of offence at common law, 147.
- Prosecution of offenders, 605.
- Prosecutions by guardians and overseers, 876.
- Prosecutor, name of, 87.
- Prosecutor, threatening, 927.
- Provisions, sale of unwholesome, 1302.
- Provoking a man to send a challenge, 1102.
- Public bathing, 1187.
- Public buildings, setting fire to, 556.
- Public decency, offences against, 1182.
- Public documents, production of, in evidence, 217 ; how proved, 220.
- Public fishery, obstructing, 1299.
- Public frauds, conspiring to commit, 1047.
- Public health, nuisances to, 1300.
- Public officers, frauds by, 610.
- Public peace, indictable offences against, 1083.
- Public revenues, furnishing false statements as to collection of, 618.
- Public service, larceny or embezzlement by persons employed in, 502.
- Public stores, embezzlement of, 506.
- Public writs and policies, forgeries as to, 709.
- Publication of libels, how, 1140.
- Puis darrein* plea, 133.

Index.

Punishment of abettors, 603.
Punishment of females, in lieu of whipping, 284.
Punishments, power of court to award, 876.
Purchase and sale of offices, 1197.

Q. .

Quaker, cannot be a juryman, 160 ; evidence of, 178.
Qualification of jurors, 159.
Quarantine, 1300.
Quarantine, forging certificates of, 708.
Quashing coroner's inquisition, 891.
Quashing indictments, in what cases, 120.
Queen, assaulting or alarming her, 346.
Queen, discharging or aiming, &c., fire-arms, &c., at the person of, 346.
Queen's counsel, licence to appear on behalf of prisoner, 169.
Queen's evidence, 181, 183.
Queen's printers, printing Acts of parliament purporting to be printed by, or uttering the same, 699.
Questions of law, reservation of, 272.
Quick with child, what is, 758.
Qui tam actions, 147.

R.

Rabbit, unlawfully killing, &c., 413.
Railroads, misconduct on, 1307.
Railway stations, engine-house, warehouse, or other building appertaining to any railway, setting fire to, 556.
Railways, maliciously putting, placing, casting, or throwing upon or across any railway, wood, stone, &c., turning, moving, or diverting any points of machinery, or making, showing, hiding, or removing, any signal or light, with intent to obstruct, or upset, or injure, or destroy, any engine, tender, carriage, or truck, 587 ; with intent to endanger the safety of any person travelling thereon, 587. Throwing, or causing to fall into or upon any engine, carriage, &c., any wood, stone, &c., with intent, &c., 809.
Ram, stealing, 407.
Rape, 830 ; punishment, 830. Procuring the defilement of a woman or girl under twenty-one years of age, 830 ; indictment, 838. Carnally abusing a girl under ten years, 838 ; indictment, 838. Carnally abusing a girl under twelve and above ten years, 841. Abduction of women, 842. Principals and accessories in, 837.
Reading over indictment to prisoner, 124.
Receipts, forging, 670.
Receiver-general of excise, forging handwriting of, 707 ; of customs, 707.
Receiving stolen goods, &c., 537 ; summary conviction, 538 ; who a receiver, 538 ; principals and accessories, 541 ; witness, 545 ; trial, 546 ; verdict, 547.
Receiving goods stolen from the river Thames, 481, 1224, 1225 ; indictment, 481.
Recognizance to appear and give evidence, 22. Estreats, 23 ; discharge of, 24.

Index.

- Recognizance on certiorari, 103, 113.
Recognizance for good behaviour, 605.
Recognizances, forging, 694; acknowledgment of false, 933.
Recognizances in felonies and misdemeanor, 255.
Recorder is a justice of the peace, 275; trial of prisoners by, 290.
Recording judgment of death, 282.
Records, forgery of, 691; production of in evidence, 217.
Records, &c., stealing or destroying, 423; indictment, 424.
Records of the Queen's courts, entry of, 151.
Records, stealing, 389.
Re-examination of witnesses, 229, 257.
Refusal of bail, law in such cases, 27.
Regency, treason relating to, 340.
Register of births, marriages, deaths, forging, defacing, &c., 696; offences relating to, 1169, 1305.
Register of burials, injuring or destroying, 697.
Register, parish, how proved, and in what cases evidence, 223.
Registers of births, &c., forgery of, and Savings Bank Acts, 712.
Registers of deeds, forgery of, 693.
Registrar of admiralty, forgery as to, 694.
Registrar in lunacy, forging signature or seal of, 699.
Registrar's certificate, marriage by, 853.
Registration of births, &c., false declarations as to, 993.
Regrating, 1206.
Religious belief, want of it in witness, 178.
Remand of prisoner, 24.
Removal of coroner from his office, 880.
Reply, right of counsel for prosecution generally, 168, 170.
Reprieve, 304.
Repugnant, statement in indictment must not be, 84.
Rescue, 955; Millbank Penitentiary, 961; of a traitor, 338.
Rescue for mint offences, 962.
Rescue of prisoners a misdemeanor, 950.
Rescue of smugglers, 1216.
Rescuing murderers going to execution, punishment, 963.
Reserving points for consideration of judges, 271, 272.
Restitution of stolen property, 266, 536.
Restitution of stolen property, to owner prosecuting to conviction, 400.
Return to writ of habeas corpus, 36; when amendable, 38.
Returning from transportation, 951; indictment, 953.
Revenue, duty of officers of, as to cutting, &c. counterfeit or light coin tendered, 739.
Revenue forgeries, relating to, 703.
Revenue laws, witness in prosecution under, 189.
Reversing judgment, 290; Act of parliament, 292.
Reward, in what cases granted to witnesses, 264.
Reward, taking, under pretence of helping to stolen property, statute,
 405; indictment, 405.
Riot, 1092. Indictment for a riot and assault, 1095; punishment, 283, 1097. Routs, 1098. Rioters remaining together one hour after proclamation, 1098; indictment, 1099. Riotously pulling down or destroying any church, chapel, house, stable, coach-house, outhouse, warehouse, office, shop, mill, malt-house, hop-oast, barn, granaries, or manufactory, or machinery, or steam-engines used in mines, 570; indictment, 573.
River bank, or wall, breaking or cutting down, whereby lands are over-

Index.

- flowed, &c., 585. Cutting off, drawing up, or removing piles, chalk, &c., fixed for the security of, 585; opening floodgates, &c., 585.
- Robbery, 431; on trial for, jury may convict of assault with intent to rob, 431; indictment for, 435. By a person armed, or by two or more, or accompanied by wounding, 439; indictment, 439; trial, 441; verdict, 441; indictment for stealing from the person, 358; punishment, 358; evidence, 358. Assault with intent to rob, 436; indictment, 438. Demanding property with menaces, or by force, with intent to steal, 442; indictment, 443.
- Roman Catholics, offences by, in the nature of treason, 343.
- Rooting up trees, 427.
- Roots or plants growing in a garden, orchard, nursery ground, hot-house, green-house, or conservatory, or elsewhere, stealing, or destroying, or damaging with intent to steal, 428; second offence, 428. Destroying or damaging, 579.
- Rouge et noir*, 1189.
- Rout, what, 1098.
- Rule as to evidence, 188.
- Russian stocks, 1315.

S.

- Sabbath-breaking, 1176.
- Sacrilege, 451.
- Sailors' pensions, forgeries as to, 712.
- Sale of grain, assaults to prevent, 816.
- Sale of offices, 1197.
- Salaries, forgery as to public, 709.
- Sapling, destroying, &c., 578.
- Savings banks, forgeries as to, 709, 713.
- Schoolhouse, breaking and entering, to commit felony, 470.
- Scrip receipts, forgery of, 708.
- Sea bank or sea wall, breaking or cutting down, whereby lands are overflowed or damaged, 585. Cutting off, drawing up, or removing piles, chalk, &c., fixed for securing, 585.
- Seal of justices to warrant to arrest, 62.
- Seals, forging Her Majesty's, 637.
- Seaman's wages, forgery as to, 714.
- Seamens' savings banks, forgeries as to, 713.
- Searching China passenger ships, 1212.
- Searching for gunpowder, &c., 601, 874.
- Searching for paper, &c., to be used for forged instruments, 646.
- Secretary of state, warrant of, 2; may commit for treason, 25; warrant to bring up convict prisoner as a witness, 183.
- Security, valuable, what, 419.
- Security for money, or payment of money, &c., stealing, 419; indictment, 421; obtaining by false pretences, 516.
- Sedition, 347; seditious libel, 1088; punishment, 1092.
- Seditious meetings, 1085.
- Seduction, what is, 1180.
- Seizure of base coin, 735.
- Seizure of stolen stamps, 704.
- Selling adulterated food, &c., 609.
- Selling false coin, 733.
- Selling goods, &c., stolen from wreck, 480.
- Sentence of death, execution of, 114.

Index.

- Serjeant, misconduct of, 946.
Servants, embezzlement by, 485 ; indictment for, 497. Larceny by, 482.
Servants, or apprentices, not providing with necessary food, clothing, or lodging, 806 ; cruelty to, 1195.
Servants, giving false characters to, 619.
Servants, negligent burning by, 1307.
Setting aside writ of error, 297.
Severance of, verdict in the case of husband and wife, 263.
Several felonies charged in same indictment, 98.
Shed, setting fire to, 556.
Sheep-stealing, 407 ; indictment, 409.
Sheriff, duty of, to execute judgment, 303.
Sheriffs' court, perjury before, 978.
Sheriffs' officers, larceny by, 387.
Sheriffs refusing office, 1310.
Ships, pilots endangering, 1220.
Ships' registry, offences in relation to, 1317.
Ships' registering, forgery as to, 714.
Ships, setting fire to, 593 ; the like with intent to prejudice the owner of the ship or goods, or underwriter, 593. Attempting to set fire to ships, 594. Damaging a ship otherwise than by fire, 594. Attempting to damage ships with gunpowder, 594. Exhibiting false lights or signals to bring a ship into danger, 594. Setting fire to, with intent to commit murder, 788. Destroying any part of a ship in distress or wrecked, 595. Cutting away, &c., buoys, &c., or doing any act with intent to cut away, &c., buoys, &c., for the purpose of navigation, 595 ; stealing from, in port or in a river or canal, 480 ; indictment, 481. Plundering or stealing from a ship in distress, wrecked, stranded, or cast on shore, statute, 480 ; indictment, 481. Impeding a person endeavouring to save his life from a ship in distress, or wrecked, 803 ; indictment, 803.
Ships' stores, receiving from seamen illegally, 481.
Shipwrecked goods, being in possession of, 480.
Shooting, murder by. See "Murder." Shooting at a person with intent to murder, 789. Attempting, by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner, to shoot at a person with intent to murder, 789. Shooting at a person with intent to maim, disfigure, disable, to do some grievous bodily harm, or to prevent or resist a lawful apprehension or detainer, 803.
Shop, breaking and entering, and stealing in, 470 ; indictment, 471 ; what is a shop, 472 ; setting fire to, 556 ; riotously demolishing, 570.
Shrub, destroying, &c., 578.
Signal, false, to ships, 594.
Signature of judge, does not require proof of, 215.
Silk goods in any stage of manufacture, stealing, 479 ; indictment, 479 ; punishment, 479.
Silver plate, forging stamps for, 705.
Similiter, 133, 268.
Simple larceny, 361 ; indictment for, 390.
Simple robbery, 431.
Slander, 1088 ; indictment for slanderous words to a magistrate, 930 ; treasonable, 339.
Slander and libel as respects foreign governments, and individuals, 1131.
Slaughtering cattle, &c., in unlicensed place, 1237.
Slave dealing, 1191.

Index.

Slavery, forging receipts as, to abolition of, 712.

Smuggling, 1213. Making signals to smuggling vessels, 1213. Being armed and assembled for the purpose of assisting in running uncustomed goods, &c., 1214. Assisting in running uncustomed goods, 1214. Shooting at a ship belonging to the navy or revenue, 1214. Shooting at officers of the army or navy, &c., or officers of the customs employed for the prevention of smuggling, 1214. Being found in company with more than four others, with goods liable to forfeiture, 1214. Being found armed near a navigable river, 1214. Rescue of smugglers, 1216.

Sodomy, 872; assault with intent to commit, 872.

Soldiers' pensions, forgeries as to, 712.

Soldiers, suppression of riots by, 14.

Solemnization of marriages, 849.

Solicitors not to act unless admitted and enrolled, 942.

Solitary confinement, extent of, 400, 605, 876.

Sorcery, pretending to exercise, 618.

Speaker's warrant, 2.

Special jury, 162; in misdemeanors only, 162; certificate for does not apply in criminal cases, 266.

Special licence, marriage by, 853.

Spring guns, setting, with intent to do grievous bodily harm, 808.

Stables, setting fire to, 556. Riotously demolishing, 570.

Staith, destroying, &c., 570.

Stamp duties, forgeries as to, 703, 708; seizure of, when stolen, 704.

Starving, when murder, or manslaughter, 762.

Statement of accused before magistrates, 199.

Statement of offence in indictment, 86.

Stations, setting fire to, 556.

Stating case, how, 273.

Statute, perjury by, 987.

Stealing dead bodies, 1195.

Stealing from the person, 431, 435; indictment, 436.

Stealing goods in process of manufacture, 479.

Stealing in a dwelling house to the amount of 5*l.*, 474; with menaces and threats, 474, 477.

Stealing from ships, &c., 480.

Stock, forging transfers of, 639.

Stocking frames, receivers of, 1219.

Stolen property, restitution of, 266, 400, 536; receivers of, 537.

Stores: embezzling or stealing the Queen's stores, 506, 1218; ships' stores, &c., 481; setting fire to them, 556.

Stores, public, having in possession, 1219; defacing marks on, 1219.

Strangle, attempting to, 789, 805.

Striking out superfluous counts in indictment, 122.

Subornation of perjury, 965, 971; action for imputing, 972.

Subsequent offence, 282.

Substantive felony, accessories may be indicted for, 9, 821.

Succession to the crown, treason relating to, 340.

Suffocate, attempt to, 789, 805.

Suicide, where two mutually agree to commit, and one only die, the survivor is guilty of murder, 758.

Summons, how usually employed, 1; how served, 1; information need not be on oath, 2; what it should contain, 2; for offence punishable on summary conviction, 603.

Index.

Sunday, exercising trades on, 1176.
Superfluous counts in an indictment, 98, 122.
Sureties in giving bail, 21 ; for keeping the peace, &c., 605, 876.
Surety of the peace, what is, 893 ; in what cases taken, 893 ; for good behaviour, 901.
Surplusage, what may be rejected as, 95, 190.
Swearing, 1178.
Swearing jurymen, form of, 160.

T.

Taking reward for restoring stolen property, 405.
Taking up dead bodies, 1195.
Tales, award of, 145, 158.
Tampering with witnesses, 927.
Telegraph, destroying or injuring, 587 ; attempts, 588.
Telling fortunes, 618.
Tenant, larceny by, 508 ; injuries to buildings by, 574.
Tenements, jury on trial for treason or felony, not to inquire as to, 242.
Testamentary papers, stealing, 422 ; forging, 656.
Thames, receiving stores, &c. of ships on river, 1224.
"The said," use of in indictments, 93.
"Then and there," use of in indictments, 93.
Threatening letter, sending, delivering, or uttering, a letter threatening to burn or destroy houses, &c., 599. Sending a letter threatening to murder, 782 ; indictment, 782 ; containing demands for money, &c., with menaces, 442 ; indictment, 443. Sending a letter threatening to accuse another of a crime, with intent to extort money, &c., 443 ; indictment, 443 ; trial, 449.
Threatening prosecution, 927.
Threshing machine, cutting, breaking, or destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy or render useless, 575 ; indictment, 576.
Time, how stated, 84 ; limitation of, in prosecutions, 147 ; in respect of burglary, 452, 471.
Time of arrest, 5.
Time for moving for new trial, 271 ; of judgment, 287.
Titles, buying or selling doubtful, 925.
Toll bar, destroying, &c., 586.
Tools for coining, making without lawful authority, 734.
Training to arms, when unlawful, 353.
Transfers of stock, forging, 639.
Transportation abolished, 304 ; returning from, 951.
Traverse of an indictment not allowed, 116. Power of courts to order postponement of trial, 116.
Treason, 307 ; statutes, 622 ; punishment, 624. Indictment for compassing the Queen's death, 318 ; evidence, 319. Count for levying war, 318 ; evidence, 323 ; adhering to the Queen's enemies, 315 ; time and place, 319 ; witnesses, 321 ; limitation of time, 323 ; jurisdiction, 323 ; accomplices, 327 ; trial, 328, 329 ; judgment, 336 ; misprision of treason, 341 ; constructive treason, 310, 344.
Treason relating to the succession to the crown and regency, 340.
Treasonable libels and slander, 339.
Treaties, how proved, 220.
Tree, sapling, shrub, or underwood, growing in parks, pleasure grounds, gardens, orchards, or avenues, or grounds adjoining to or belonging

Index.

- to a dwelling house, stealing, &c., or otherwise destroying, &c., with intent to steal, 427; indictment, 429. Stealing or cutting trees after two previous convictions, 429; stealing or cutting, &c., with intent to steal, statute, 427. Setting fire to, 577; cutting, breaking, barking, &c., 578. Destroying wheresoever growing, value 1s., first and second offence, 578.
- Trespassers in search of game, arrest of, 15.
- Trespassers, it is murder to kill, 758; when manslaughter, 762.
- Trial, when, 116, 162; adjournment of, 258.
- Trial for larceny, 306.
- Trial for murder or manslaughter, 778, 782.
- Trial for treason, 328, 339; by peers, 335.
- Trial, proceedings before, 50; postponement of, 50; of challenge of jurors, 157.
- Trial, what it shall be necessary to prove on, 603.
- Truck Act, 1211.
- Trustees defined, 361.
- Trustees, fraudulent appropriation of property, 514.
- Tumultuous petitioning, 352.
- Turnpike gate, wall, chain, rail, post, bar, or other fence belonging to a turnpike gate, or house, building, or weighing engine, throwing down, levelling, or destroying, 586.
- Turnpike road, property belonging to, how described, 92.

U.

- Under sheriff, practising as an attorney, 946.
- Undertakings, forgery of, 670.
- Underwood, destroying, &c., 578.
- Underwriter, forging name, &c. of, 717.
- Undue solemnization of marriage, 1179.
- University buildings, setting fire to, 556; riotously demolishing, 570.
- Unlawful assemblies, 1083.
- Unlawful assembly, 349.
- Unlawful oaths, 347, 933, 1084, 1200, 1205, 1209.
- Unlawful societies, 1209.
- Unlawful training to arms, 353.
- Unnatural crimes, 872.
- Unstamped instruments, when evidence, 220; when not, 220.
- Unwholesome provisions, sale of, 1302.
- Usury, 1313.
- Uttering forged instruments, 679.
- Uttering forged stamps, what is, 705; counterfeit gold or silver coin, 725, 731.

V.

- Valuable security, what, 361, 419; indictment for stealing, 421. Obtaining signature to, by false pretences, 517.
- Variance between the pleading and proof, 237.
- Vegetables in fields, stealing, 428; destroying, &c., 579.
- Venue, 53; boundary, 56; in county of a city or town corporate, 57; how, in the case of a journey, &c., 59; in regard to parishes, 61; India, 63; defective venue, 63; changing, 64; in criminal informations, 148; for forgery, 701; for offences against the stamp duties, 21; for coining, 740; for offences committed out of the

Index.

- realm, 783; for offences within the jurisdiction of the admiralty, 702; for murder or manslaughter, 778, 782; for offences committed during a journey or voyage, 783; attempts to murder, 799.
- Verdict, 259; nature of it, 260; improper or repugnant verdict, 262; special verdict, 259; discharge of jury, where the jurors do not agree, 259.
- Verdict of coroner's jury, 884.
- Vessels of war fitting out for foreign states, 357.
- Vestry books, when evidence, 218.
- Vestry meeting, refusing to call, 1320.
- Vexatious indictments before grand jury, prevention of, 46.
- Viaducts, pulling down or otherwise destroying, 586.
- "Videlicet," use of in indictments, 96.
- View by jury, when permitted, 258.
- Voluntary confessions, 193, 200.
- Votes of House of Commons, officers of post office embezzling, &c., 507.
- Voters, identity of at elections, 1318; personation of, 1320.

W.

- Wagers, cheating at, 618.
- Wages, assaults in connection with combination to raise rate of, 817.
- Wales, venue in indictment for offences committed in, 782.
- Want of religious belief in witness, 178.
- Warehouse, breaking and entering, and stealing in, 470; indictment, 471; setting fire to, 556; riotously demolishing, 570.
- Warehoused goods of customs or excise, officers of, embezzling or wasting, 507.
- Warrant for the payment of money, forging and uttering, 670.
- Warrant for the delivery of goods, stealing, 423; forging and uttering, 670.
- Warrant, how in the case of felony, 1; arrest under, 2; blank warrant, 2; of secretary of state, 2; general warrants, 3; what it must contain, 3; how executed, 4, 6; how directed, 4; when to be executed, 5; where, 5; backing warrant, 5.
- Warrant to apprehend, when not necessary, 603.
- Weak intellect, how, when witnesses are of, 178.
- Weighing engine, injuring or destroying, 586.
- West India relief commissioners, forgeries as to, 711.
- Whipping, limitation of sentence of, 605, 876; sentence to specify number of strokes, 605, 876.
- Wife, in what cases excused by the coercion of her husband, 72, 76; cannot be a witness for her husband, 184. In what cases she may be a witness against him, 185, 186. She cannot be guilty of larceny by taking the goods of her husband, 388; cannot enter into recognizance, 255.
- Wilful perjury, 973.
- Will, forging, 656.
- Will, codicil, or other testamentary instrument, stealing, destroying, or concealing, 422; indictment, 423.
- Will, how proved, 218; copy of a probate of a will, when evidence, 218.
- Wills of petty officers and seamen, forgery of, 716.
- Witchcraft, pretending to exercise, 618.
- Withdrawal of plea, 125.

Index.

Witness, attendance of, 254; expenses of, 254; cross-examination of, 224; discrediting, 224; when not compellable to answer, 224; number required, 230; absence of from court, 231.
Witness to character, 229.
Witnesses before grand jury, 44.
Witnesses for defence, answering, 252.
Witnesses, rule as to hostile, 170.
Witnesses present in court, 257.
Witnesses, rewards to, 264.
Witnesses, tampering with, 927.
Witnesses, procuring them to commit perjury, 988.
Witnesses for prisoners, how sworn, and perjury by them, 990.
Woods and forests, certificates as to documents in office of, 622.
Wool, stealing from sheep's back, 390.
Woollen goods in the loom, &c., or other process of manufacture, cutting, breaking, or destroying, or damaging with intent to destroy or render useless, 479; indictment, 479; punishment, 479.
Works of art in museums, &c., destroying or damaging, 589.
Wounding with intent to murder, 789.
Wounding with intent to maim, &c., 803; unlawfully wounding, 804.
Wrappers of playing cards, forging of, 714.
Wreck, stealing from, 480; destroying, 595.
Writ of certiorari, 99.
Writ of error, 272, 275, 290.
Written instruments, larceny of, 423.

Y.

Yarn, stealing woollen, linen, hempen, or cotton, in process of manufacture, 479.
Youth of offenders in cases of murder, 760.

THE END.

Woolrych, Humphry Will.

The criminal law, as amended by the statutes of 1861, with pleading, evidence, forms of indictment, cases, and index

London 1862

Crim. 280 I

urn:nbn:de:bvb:12-bsb10395892-7